Defect to be Made Good—Laches—Rescission.]—When a purchaser discovers that a representation made to him by a vendor is untrue, if the vendor suggests that if time be given him, the representation may be cured, and the purchaser put in as good a position as if the representation had been true ; the purchaser, by giving the vendor time, does not lose his right to rely on the misrepresentation and determine the contract, if, at the end of the time, the vendor fails to make good his suggestion. Tibbatts v. Boulter, 73 L. T. 534.

Inquiry by Plaintiff.]—In a case where some delay arose in completing a purchase of mines from difficulties connected with the title, it was agreed that, if the vendor could verify certain statements he had made as to the capabilities and value of the property, the purchaser would complete the contract. The purchasers, after inquiries instituted by themselves, being satisfied of the correctness of those statements, completed the contract ; but after six months' possession, having discovered that they were not in fact correct, filed a bill to rescind the contract for fraud :—Held, that the contract could not be rescinded, because the purchasers did not rely on the vendor's statements but tested their accuracy, and, after having knowledge, or the means of knowledge, declared that they were satisfied of their correctness. Attwood v. Small, 6 Cl. & F. 232 ; 2 Jur. 200.

If, on the treaty for the sale of property, the vendor makes representations which he knows to be false, the falsehood of which the purchaser had no means of knowing, but he relies on them, a court of equity will rescind a contract so entered into, although it may not contain the representations ; but it will not rescind without the clearest proof of fraudulent misrepresentations, and that they were made under such circumstances as show that the contract was based on them. Ib.

If a purchaser, choosing to judge for himself, does not avail himself of the knowledge or means of knowledge open to him or to his agents, he cannot be heard to say he was deceived by the vendor's representations, the rule being caveat emptor ; and the knowledge of his agents being as binding on him as his own knowledge. Ib.

Where representations are made of the nature and character of property offered for sale affecting its value, and those representations turn out to be false to the knowledge of the party making them, a foundation is laid for an action at law for damages for the deceit, and for a suit in equity to set aside the contract. S. C., 6 Cl. & F. 395.

It is no defence to an action for rescission of a contract on the ground of fraud, that the plaintiff inquired to a certain extent whether the representation made to him was true, but did it so carelessly and inefficiently as not to observe the fraud. Redgrave v. Hurd, 51 L. J., Ch. 113 ; 20 Ch. D. 1 ; 45 L. T. 485 ; 30 W. R. 251—C. A.

If a defendant has made a material misrepresentation to induce a person to enter into a contract, and the plaintiff has entered into the contract, it is not sufficient, in order to uphold the contract against the plaintiff in an action for rescission, that he does not prove that he entered into it relying on the representation, but the defendant must show that the plaintiff abandoned such reliance, either by having knowledge contrary to the representation, or by his explicit statement that he did not rely on such representation. In the absence of such evidence the inference remains that the plaintiff did rely on the representation. Attwood v. Small (supra) explained. Ib.

Knowledge of Falsity of Representation at Time of Making.]—Misrepresentations, to constitute sufficient grounds for setting aside a purchase, must be material, as being of such a nature as, if true, to add to the value, must not be evidently merely conjectural statements, and must be made without a belief in their truth or without reasonable grounds for such a belief. Jennings v. Broughton, 5 De G. M. & G. 126 ; 23 L. J., Ch. 999.

Where advertisements for the sale of shares in a mine had been issued containing unfounded statements, but the purchaser had not relied upon them, and had had opportunities of judging of their accuracy :—Held, that he was not entitled by reason of them to have the contract rescinded. Ib.

In suits to rescind contracts for fraud, particularly where the subject is of variable value, it is the duty of the plaintiff to put forward his complaint at the earliest possible period. Ib.

It is not now necessary, in order to set aside a contract, to prove that the person who obtained it by material false representation knew at the time the representation was made, that it was false, or even made it recklessly and without care.—Judgment of Lord Cairns, L.J., in Reese River Silver Mining Co., In re (L. R. 2 Ch. 604) approved. Redgrave v. Hurd, supra.

Contradictory Evidence.]—On a bill to set aside a sale, the parties having contradicted each other, the evidence of the one was to be taken as neutralising that of the other, and the court decided according as the case set up by either was more consistent with and was corroborated by admitted facts and documents connected with the transaction. Wentworth v. Lloyd, 10 H. L. Cas. 589; 33 L. J., Ch. 688; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 961; 10 L. T. 767.

Admission of Evidence.]—T. agreed to sell to C. certain freehold houses, and to make a good marketable title. On investigation of the title it appeared that the houses were subject to stringent restrictive covenants, admitted to make the title not a marketable one. T. adduced evidence that C. knew of the restrictions at the time of the contract, and the jury found that he did:—Held, that this evidence could not be admitted to modify the terms of the express contract, and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover. Farebrother v. Gibson (1 De G. & J. 602) and Leyland v. Illingworth (2 De G., F. & J. 248) distinguished. Cato v. Thompson, 9 Q. B. D. 616; 47 L. T. 491—C. A.

Defect in Title Concealed.]—The purchaser of an estate cannot recover back his purchase-money on the ground of a concealment of a defect in the title by the vendor, without proving that such concealment was fraudulent; and the question of fraud is properly one for the jury. Early v. Garrett, 4 Man. & Ry. 687; 9 B. & C. 928; 8 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 76.

—— Assertion of Good Title.]—The mere assertion by a vendor that he has a good title, on the faith of which the purchaser relies without investigating the title, is not necessarily such a misrepresentation as will preclude the vendor from enforcing the contract. Hume v. Pocock, 35 L. J., Ch. 731; L. R. 1 Ch. 379; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 445; 14 L. T. 386; 14 W. R. 681.

—— Misrepresentation by Agent.]—To set aside a purchase, perfected by conveyance and payment of the purchase-money, for fraudulent concealment by the vendor of a defect in the title, where there was no warranty or statement that there was no defect, proof of concealment by the vendor's agent is not sufficient; there must be proof of a direct personal knowledge and concealment by the principal. Wilde v. Gibson, 1 H. L. Cas. 605; 12 Jur. 527.

A purchaser of an estate, having made no inquiry respecting the title from an agent for the sale, is not entitled to any relief for non-communication of any defect by him. Ib.

Constructive knowledge of an agent, or knowledge acquired by him otherwise than as an agent for the sale, of a fact, the non-communication of which is made the ground of relief against the purchase, does not at all affect the contract. Ib.

Representations which a purchaser has chosen to accept from the vendor's agent on the subject of the vendor's title, and which turn out, in fact, but not when made, to have been known by the agent to be untrue, do not amount to such fraud as absolves a purchaser from his contract. Ib.

—— Title Subject to Approval of Solicitor.]—A sale of a leasehold house was subject to approval of the purchaser's solicitor. The house and another were included in one lease, at one rent, and subject to restrictive covenants as to the whole:—Held, that (the vendor not having proved that he could obtain an apportionment of the rent and covenants) the purchaser could rescind. Hudson v. Buck, 47 L. J., Ch. 247; 7 Ch. D. 683; 38 L. T. 56; 26 W. R. 190.

Leasehold Nearly Equal to Freehold.]—Effect or an indefinite representation by a vendor; as that a leasehold estate was nearly equal to freehold, being renewable upon a small fine; putting the purchaser upon inquiry; though, connected with certain circumstances, such representation may be fraudulent, and form a ground for rescinding the contract. Fenton v. Browne, 14 Ves. 144; 9 R. R. 255.

Rent Overstated.]—In an action upon a contract to purchase leasehold premises sold by auction on the terms of a prospectus overstating the rental, such false statement will vitiate the contract, either under a plea of fraud or a traverse of readiness and willingness, and the latter plea, if necessary, will be allowed at the trial. Wood v. Keep, 1 F. & F. 331.

Copyhold for Freehold.]—A vendor sold land as freehold, received the purchase-money, and conveyed the land as freehold. Afterwards the purchaser discovered that the property was really copyhold:—Held, that, assuming that he had made the representation bonâ fide, the vendor had committed a legal fraud; that the sale must be set aside and the purchase-money repaid with interest; and that the vendor must pay all the expenses which the purchaser had incurred in consequence of the purchase. Hart v. Swaine, 47 L. J., Ch. 5; 7 Ch. D. 42; 37 L. T. 376; 26 W. R. 30.

The purchaser in this case is not entitled to damages in respect of expenses to which he had gone with the view of selling the property again. Ib.

And see cases, supra, col. 1192.

As to Occupation.]—The plaintiffs advertised for sale by auction an hotel, stated in the particulars to be held by a "most desirable tenant." The defendants sent their secretary down to inspect the property and report thereon. The secretary reported very unfavourably, stating that the tenant could scarcely pay the rent (400*l.*), rates and taxes. It appeared subsequently that the quarter's rent previous to the sale had not been paid; the previous quarter had been paid by instalments, and six weeks after the sale the tenant filed his petition. The plaintiffs brought an action for specific performance, relying on the fact that the defendants had made their own inquiries:—Held, that the statement that the property was held by a "most desirable tenant," could not be treated as "simplex commendatio," and that the defendants, having relied thereon, were entitled to rescission of the contract, on the authority of Redgrave v. Hurd (supra). Smith v. Land and House Property Corporation, 28 Ch. D. 7 ; 51 L. T. 718 ; 49 J. P. 182—C. A.

And see cases, supra, col. 1190.

Action at Law—Injunction.] — Where misrepresentations had been made in a contract for sale, and the vendor accepted an I. O. U. for the purchase money, and the purchaser filed a bill to set aside the contract, and the vendor brought an action on the I. O. U. The court granted an ex parte injunction, and subsequently continued an injunction to restrain such action, and ordered the contract to be cancelled. Bartlett v. Salmon, 1 Jur. (N.S.) 277.

Sale of Agreement for Lease Voidable at Will of Third Party.]—A vendor contracted to sell and a purchaser to purchase an agreement for a lease. The purchaser afterwards repudiated the contract. At the date of the agreement and of the repudiation, the agreement to lease was voidable at the will of the third party, but the third party took no steps to avoid the agreement, but was willing to confirm it on certain conditions : — Held, that the purchaser was entitled to repudiate the contract. Brewer v. Broadwood, 52 L. J., Ch. 136 ; 22 Ch. D. 105 ; 47 L. T. 508 ; 31 W. R. 115.

Purchase Money Obtained by Fraud.] — A vendor and his solicitor fraudulently, and in the absence of the purchasers' solicitor, obtained from a purchaser (who had entered into possession) the purchase money and covenants for the production of title deeds, while the title as to part was still under investigation. On a bill filed by the purchaser :—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to have the contract rescinded, and his purchase money, together with all costs, charges, and expenses, repaid to him, and to have the deeds of covenant executed by him delivered up to be cancelled. Berry v. Armistead, 2 Keen, 221.

Concealment.]—A firm had become insolvent. One of the members was separately insolvent and non compos ; another was separately adjudicated bankrupt. In order to procure a title to the separate interest of the non compos partner (whose separate creditors would not enter into an arrangement for releasing it), one of the creditors, who was also a separate creditor of the bankrupt partner, obtained an execution against the non compos partner, and sold by the sheriff at auction, expecting and intending to purchase himself, and sent a clerk to bid up to 150*l*. A. purchased at 151*l*., the property being quite worthless :—Held, such a concealment of circumstances as to justify the sale being set aside, with costs on A.'s application. Smith v. Harrison, 26 L. J., Ch. 412 ; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 287 ; 5 W. R. 508.

—— Of Vendor's Interest.]—A., having two parcels, and B. one parcel of land, supposed to contain petroleum, it was agreed between them and C. that C. should pay them 10,000 dollars for the land if he succeeded in forming a company for the purpose of working the oil springs, and in inducing such company to pay him 13,750 dollars, out of which he was to keep for himself 3,750 dollars. B. accordingly, assuming the character of owner, gave to C. a conditional promise to sell all the land to him for 13,750 dollars. A. wrote a letter, meant to be shown to, and which was shown to, persons intending to become members of the new company, and was proved to have influenced them, in which letter he recommended the purchase, not disclosing that he had any interest therein. A. and B. actively co-operated with C. throughout the whole transaction. The company, in ignorance of the combination, accepted the proposal, but having discovered the fraud, sued for a rescission of the contract :—Held, that the contract must be wholly rescinded, the price repaid, and the land reconveyed. Lindsay Petroleum Co. v. Hurd, L. R. 5 P. C. 221 ; 22 W. R. 492.

—— Purchase by the Solicitors.]—Purchase of a reversionary interest by the solicitors for sale, set aside on the ground of concealment. Bloye's Trust, In re, 1 Mac. & G. 488 ; 2 Hall & Tw. 140 ; 19 L. J., Ch. 89 ; 14 Jur. 49.

Consideration inadequate.] — A party who, under a misapprehension of his legal rights, parts with his property for a bonâ fide and valuable, but not an adequate, consideration, cannot have the transaction set aside on the mere ground of mistake. Marshall v. Collett, 1 Y. & C. 232.

Inadequacy of value is not in itself sufficient to set aside a contract. Griffith v. Spratley, 1 Cox, 383.

—— Reversionary Interest.]—A purchase of a contingent reversionary interest was set aside chiefly on the ground of inadequacy of value, the consideration being an annuity for the life of vendor, whose life was a bad life, and was better known to the purchaser than to the vendor to be such. Davies v. Cooper, 5 Myl. & Cr. 270.

A sale of a reversionary interest by a young man of full age for a substantial purpose stands on the same footing as other contracts, and cannot be set aside on the ground of mere inadequacy of consideration. Judd v. Green, 45 L. J., Ch. 108 ; 33 L. T. 597.

The plaintiff was entitled on the death of his father, who was sixty-one years old, to 500*l*., to be raised by a charge upon an estate which had been purchased by the defendant. The plaintiff, who was without any funds, assigned his reversion to the defendant about three weeks after attaining his majority. The price was, considering the father's state of health, inadequate, and the plaintiff had no independent advice :—Held, by Lords Blackburn and Gordon, that, in the absence of evidence of fraud, and having regard to the circumstances of the case, the transaction could not be impeached ; by Lord Hatherley (dissentiente), that, although there was no evidence of fraud, the plaintiff ought to have had an independent adviser, and therefore was entitled to relief in equity. O'Rorke v. Bolingbroke, 2 App. Cas. 814 ; 26 W. R. 239—H. L.

—— Resale—Action for Difference of Price.] —By a contract, E. agreed to purchase freehold farms from N. for 33,000*l*., subject to the title being accepted by his solicitor. The purchase money was to be paid on the 29th of September, on which day it was presumed that the contract would be completed and possession given. When the title was produced, it appeared that

N. was not the legal owner of the land, but had agreed to purchase the same from the trustees of a settlement for 21,000*l.*, by a contract which was not completed till after the 29th of September. E. took the objection that it appeared on the face of the title that the trustees had sold the estate to N. for a grossly inadequate price. N. proved that the trustees had had a fair valuation made of the land before offering it to him, but, notwithstanding, on the 29th of September, E. wrote to N., rescinding the contract. N. then obtained a conveyance from the trustees, and resold the estate for 25,000*l.*, and brought an action against E. to recover the difference of price by way of damages for breach of the contract. E. filed a bill against N. to restrain the action, and to obtain a declaration that the contract was rescinded:—Held, first, that the bill to obtain a declaration of the rescission of the contract could not be maintained, and that E.'s bill must therefore be dismissed. Noble v. Edwardes, 5 Ch. D. 378; 37 L. T. 7—C. A.

Held, secondly, that the apparently inadequate price was not a fatal objection to the title, and, therefore, that E. had no right to rescind the contract. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that N. had a right to resell the estate and claim the difference by way of damages against E. Ib.

B. RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES ARISING FROM CONTRACT.

1. OF VENDOR AND PURCHASER.

a. General Rights.

Property in the Estate.]—From the execution of the contract, the estate is in equity the property of the vendee, will descend, and is devisable as such. Seton v. Slade, 7 Ves. 274; 6 R. R. 124.

Equitable Title.]—Where the equitable title is complete, a legal conveyance will be decreed, though the property may have been much enhanced or depreciated in value. Subsequent events will not in equity vary a contract fairly entered into. Revell v. Hussey, 2 Ball & B. 287; 12 R. R. 87.

Purchaser with Paramount Title.]—The purchaser, being in possession of part of the property under the arrangement, and being advised to rescind and assert his paramount title, was not bound to give up possession before he could assert such paramount title, by making a formal entry on the property. Southcomb v. Exeter (Bishop), 6 Hare, 213; 16 L. J., Ch. 378; 11 Jur. 725.

Vendor Trustee.]—If a purchaser for a valuable consideration has not the legal estate properly conveyed to him, though the consideration cannot create a use by way of covenant to stand seised, yet the vendor will be considered a trustee for the purchaser. Pollexfen v. Griffith, 3 Atk. 273.

When Title First Shown.]—In the absence of express contract on the subject a person is to be treated as purchaser from the time at which, acting prudently, he could have taken possession, that is (usually though not universally) the time at which a good title was first shown. Up to the time at which the purchaser is to be treated as purchaser expenses and outgoings must be borne by the vendor, from that time by the purchaser. Carrodus v. Sharp, 20 Beav. 56.

Notice of Sub-Contract.]—A vendor of land may receive the balance of the purchase money, and convey the estate to the purchaser, without regard to the receipt of a notice that the purchaser had agreed to assign the contract. Shaw v. Foster, 42 L. J., Ch. 9; L. R. 5 H. L. 321; 27 L. T. 281; 20 W. R. 907—C. A.

Charge of Debts — Sale under Power.]—Unless twenty years have elapsed since the death of a testator who has charged his real estate with the payment of his debts, the vendor selling under the power given by the charge is not bound to answer the purchaser's inquiry whether any of the debts of the testator still remain unpaid, and the purchaser ought not to make the inquiry, as he will get a good title, even if there are no debts. Tunqueray-Willaume and Landau, In re, 51 L. J., Ch. 434; 20 Ch. D. 465; 46 L. T. 452; 30 W. R. 801—C. A.

And see cases, supra, col. 1106.

Disclosure by Purchaser.]—It is not generally the duty of a purchaser to inform a vendor of any of the circumstances which may make it desirable for him to purchase. Dolman v. Nokes, 22 Beav. 402.

Conveyance by Two out of Six Liquidators.]—Property mortgaged to the trustees of a building society who on default were to sell when required by the directors. The society was ordered to be wound up, and an order was made appointing six of the directors of the society official liquidators, and declaring that all the acts required or authorised by the Companies Act, 1862, to be done by the official liquidators might be done by any two of them. By a subsequent order all the real and personal property was vested in the official liquidators. The order followed in terms s. 203 of the Companies Act, 1862. Two of the liquidators then sold and purported to convey the property comprised in the mortgage:—Held (Lord Esher, M.R., dissentiente), that the two official liquidators had no power to convey the legal estate which was vested in the six. Graham v. Edge (20 Q. B. D. 683) approved. Ebsworth and Tidy, In re, 58 L. J., Ch. 665; 42 Ch. D. 23; 60 L. T. 841; 37 W. R. 657—C. A.

Mortgage by Deposit by Vendor before Completion but after Sale—Priority.]—P. entered into an agreement in writing with W. G. for the sale to him of a copyhold hotel and premises for 3,000*l.*, subject to a lease to the occupier. On the same day W. G. bought up the leasehold interest, and entered into possession. The completion of the purchase was fixed for the 1st May, but on that day P. had not completed his own title to the property. On the 4th August P. was admitted tenant of the property on the court rolls. On the 25th August P. deposited the deeds of the property with Messrs. F., bankers, to secure his current account. The abstract of title was delivered to W. G., on the 13th August, and he accepted the title. Two years later Messrs. F.

transferred their equitable mortgage to J. F. J. F. took out a summons, to which P. and W. G. were made defendants, asking that his equitable mortgage might be enforced by foreclosure or sale as against both defendants. There was evidence that W. G. had been ready to complete the purchase :—Held, that W. G. had originally a right to have the property conveyed to him on payment of 3,000*l.*, which was paramount to J. F.'s right under the equitable mortgage ; that W. G. had been guilty of no default by which such right could be forfeited ; that J. F. not having acquired the legal estate, the question whether he had notice of W. G.'s contract did not arise ; that J. F.'s position was not improved by the possession of the title deeds, for W. G. had never any control over the deeds and had been guilty of no negligence in respect thereof. Flinn v. Fountain, 58 L. J., Ch. 389 ; 60 L. T. 484 ; 37 W. R. 443.

Sale Pendente Lite.]—A person who acquires the legal estate pendente lite, is a necessary party in the cause. L'Estrange v. Robinson, 1 Hog. 202.

If land is aliened pendente lite, though not prejudicial to plaintiff, yet alienee ought to be brought before the court. Daly v. Kelly, 4 Dow, 435.

Unless some act is required to be done by them it is not necessary to bring purchasers pendente lite before the court. Higgins v. Shaw, 2 Dr. & War. 356 ; 1 Con. & L. 400.

Personal Judgment against Mortgagor transferred to Third Person on Redemption.]—In a foreclosure action personal judgment for the mortgage debt being given against the mortgagor, and a foreclosure judgment against the mortgagor and a purchaser from him :—Held, that the purchaser, in the event of his redeeming the mortgage, would be entitled to have transferred to him the personal judgment against the mortgagor, as being one of the securities held by the mortgagee for the debt. Greenough v. Littler, 15 Ch. D. 93 ; 42 L. T. 144 ; 28 W. R. 318.

Discharge of Incumbrance.]—A vendor who contracts to sell only such right or interest, if any, as he has, is bound to convey such right or interest free from an existing incumbrance. Goold v. Birmingham, Dudley and District Bank, 58 L. T. 560.

—— Conveyancing Act, 1881, s. 5.]—Where, in a chancery suit, lands charged with legacies were ordered to be sold in court, and it was impracticable to procure a release from the persons entitled to the legacies, and the purchase-money exceeded by a large amount all the incumbrances on the lands, the court made an order, under s. 5 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, declaring that, on payment of the purchase-money in court, the said lands should be freed from such charge. Archdale v. Anderson, 21 L. R. Ir. 527.

The court has jurisdiction, under s. 5 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, to discharge an incumbrance on land sold notwithstanding that in doing so it may be deciding as to future interests in such incumbrance. Freme's Estate, In re, Freme v. Hall, 64 L. J., Ch. 862 ; [1895] 2 Ch. 778 ; 13 R. 474, n. ; 73 L. T. 366 ; 44 W. R. 164 —C. A.

The court will not, under the power given to it by s. 5 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, compel a vendor to pay money into court for the purpose of discharging an incumbrance upon the land, when the result of so doing would be to inflict a great hardship on him, as, for instance, if the incumbrance is a perpetual rent-charge, and the sum necessary to procure the discharge would far exceed the amount of the purchase money payable to the vendor. G. N. Ry. and Sanderson, In re, 53 L. J., Ch. 445 ; 25 Ch. D. 788 ; 50 L. T. 87 ; 32 W. R. 519.

Enlargement of Long Term into Fee—"Rent having no Money Value."]—Land was demised for a term of 500 years from 1646, at the yearly rent of "one silver penny, if lawfully demanded" : —Held, that this rent was a "rent having no money value," within the meaning of s. 65 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, and that the owner of the term in 1884 had power under that section to enlarge the term into a fee. Chapman to Hobbs, In re, 54 L. J., Ch. 810 ; 29 Ch. D. 1007 ; 52 L. T. 805 ; 33 W. R. 703. S. P., Smith and Stott, In re, 29 Ch. D. 1009, n. ; 48 L. T. 512 ; 31 W. R. 411.

Renewal of Lease.]—The vendor of leaseholds held under an ecclesiastical corporation, previously to his contract for sale, was in treaty with the lessors for a renewal of the lease, and continued such treaty after the contract :—Held, that this did not throw upon him the obligation of procuring such renewal for the benefit of the purchaser. Monro v. Taylor, 3 Mac. & G. 713 ; 21 L. J., Ch. 525. Affirming 8 Hare, 51.

Purchase from Agent.]—A party who takes an assignment of a lease from the agent of the lessor, with notice of the assignor's character as agent, has the same liability of sustaining the lease cast upon him that the agent has, and if the lease cannot be upheld by the agent neither can it be supported by the purchaser from the agent. Molony v. Kernan, 2 Dr. & War. 31.

Copyholds—Injunction against Surrender.]—Injunction to restrain the vendor of copyhold premises, after delivery of possession and receipt of part of the purchase money, from surrendering them to persons other than the purchasers. Spiller v. Spiller, 3 Swanst. 556 ; 19 R. R. 276.

Licence to Assign.]—Premises held under a demise, containing a proviso, that lessees shall not assign without the licence of landlord in writing, are sold under a decree to a purchaser, who pays his purchase money into court, and is let into possession ; the landlord having refused to concur in the assignment, the representatives of the lessee filed a bill against him, alleging that his conduct with respect to the sale had been such as to deprive him in equity of any right to act on the legal construction of the proviso, and praying that he might be decreed to give his licence in writing. The purchasers are necessary parties to such a bill. Maule v. Beaufort (Duke), 1 Russ. 349.

Tenant after Purchase.]—After a purchase, the tenant holds of the purchaser on the same terms as he previously held of the vendor, and the holding continues until the tenancy has been regularly determined, either by the landlord or tenant. Greenwood v. Bairstow, 5 L. J., Ch. 179.

b. Possession and Receipt of Rents and Profits.

Right to Possession on Deposit of Purchase Money.]—A contract for sale of a house provided that the purchaser should be entitled to immediate possession upon depositing the purchase money, but the purchaser was not to be considered as accepting the vendor's title:—Held, that this clause had the same operation as s. 85 of the Lands Clauses Act (8 & 9 Vict. c. 18), and the purchaser was entitled, upon depositing the purchase money, not only to take possession, but to pull down the house, that being the object for which the purchase was effected. Bolton v. London School Board, 47 L. J., Ch. 461; 7 Ch. D. 766; 26 W. R. 549.

Under Condition.]—Condition that the purchaser should be entitled "to the possession or the receipt of the rents and profits" of the land from a specified date:—Held, that the vendor was bound to give possession to the purchaser on the date specified, and that no effect could be given to the words referring in the alternative to the receipt of the rents and profits. Anker v. Franklin, 53 L. T. 317; 44 J. P. 830.

By conditions of sale, the purchase money was to be paid in May, and, if not paid, from any cause whatever, interest was to be paid till the purchase was completed, and the purchaser to be let into possession from the quarter-day next preceding the day of payment. Payment was made in December:—Held, that the purchaser, paying interest from May, was entitled to the rents from the 25th March. Nicholson v. Nicholson, 5 L. J., Ch. 51.

Fines.]—A vendor of a manor is entitled to the fines paid for the admission of any new tenants in the room of the tenants described in the particulars of sale who may happen to die after the contract, but before the day fixed for the completion of the purchase, although the fines are not in fact paid till after that date. Cuddon v. Tite, 1 Giff. 395; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 579; 6 W. R. 606.

A manor was sold under the decree of the court, and an order was made on the 13th March that the purchaser should, on or before the 17th May, pay his purchase money into court, and be let into possession of the profits from lady day; several deaths and admissions took place prior to Lady day, but the fines had not been paid until after that time; these fines belong to the vendors. Garrick v. Camden (Earl), 2 Cox, 231; 2 R. R. 37.

Mortgagee.]—A mortgagee purchased part of the mortgaged estate. His principal and interest, calculated up to the 24th March, exceeded the purchase money. He was let into possession from the preceding Christmas. Bates v. Bonnor, 7 Sim. 427.

Receipt of Rents.]—A statement in conditions of sale that a purchaser is to be let into the receipt of the rents and profits from a certain day, must be construed to mean ordinary rents and profits, and not rents reserved on leases for lives. Hughes v. Jones, 31 L. J., Ch. 83; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 399; 5 L. T. 408; 10 W. R. 139.

A purchaser is entitled to the rents of tenancies terminable at the date of the conveyance from the gale day previous to the purchase, and the Apportionment Act does not apply to such rents. Dawson's Estate, In re, 21 L. R. Ir. 441.

—— Sale of Colliery.]—The rule that a purchaser shall have possession as from the quarter day preceding the sale, does not apply to a colliery, which is an article of trade, the profits accruing daily; the proper period is the month or week in which the purchase takes place, according to the usual course of taking the account. Wren v. Kirton, 8 Ves. 502: 8 R. R. 174.

Agreement that purchase be completed by a certain date, and if not completed on that date, the vendor should receive the "rents and profits" of the premises until completion in lieu of interest on the balance of the purchase money. There was a stone quarry on the land which had been worked under a lease. Part of the purchase money was paid, but the remainder was not paid on the date fixed:—Held, that "rents and profits" included whatever was payable under the lease of the quarry, and that the vendor was entitled to such amounts from the date of the agreement to the date of the completion. Leppington v. Freeman, 66 L. T. 357; 40 W. R. 348—C. A.

—— Deposit and Interest.] — Purchaser is entitled to interest on his deposit, and to costs at law and in equity until the vendor has made his title good; but vendor is entitled to subsequent costs. The rents belong to the vendor till his title is made good, and afterwards the purchaser must take to the rents, and pay interest on his purchase-money till the principal is discharged. Pincke v. Curteis, 4 Bro. C. C. 329. And see Id. 333, n.

Where, in consideration of sale, there is no stipulation as to interest, and purchaser completes his part, he pays 4 per cent. interest, and takes rents and profits; but if rents and profits value under that rate, he pays no interest, and vendor takes them. Esdaile v. Stephenson, 1 Sim. & S. 122; 24 R. R. 151.

On motion by vendor against purchaser in possession for reference to set occupation rent, title not being completed, order was accordingly made, and that interest at 5 per cent. on deposit should, under circumstances, be deducted from rent. Smith v. Jackson, 1 Madd. 618; 16 R. R. 279. And see cases, infra, col. 1295.

—— Rent Paid in Advance.] — Purchasers bought a lessee's interest in a term of years, the rent for the last year of the term having been paid at the commencement of the letting:—Held, that the vendor was not entitled to the year's rent which had been paid in advance in addition to the purchase-money. Dublin Corporation v. Barry, [1897] 1 Ir. R. 65.

Account of Rents—By Purchaser.] — Where a party had contracted to purchase, and had been eight years in possession of premises to which the vendor was unable to make a good title, and refused either to abandon the agreement or accept such title as the vendor could give, having paid no part of the purchase money and no rent; the court, upon a bill by the vendor, directed the agreement to be delivered up to be cancelled, and the rents and profits received by the purchaser to be accounted for, and ordered the purchaser to pay the costs of the suit. King v. King, 1 Myl. & K. 442.

On a bill by a vendor for specific performance, where the purchaser had entered into possession under the agreement, and, pending the suit, continued in possession, the plaintiff failing in his attempt to compel the performance of the contract, the court refused to decree an account of rents and profits against the purchaser, though he had stated, by his answer, that he was willing to pay a fair rent. Williams v. Shaw, 3 Russ. 178; 3 L. J. (o.s.), Ch. 157.

An admission by a defendant, in his answer, that he alone has been in the possession or receipt of the rents and profits of an estate since a time therein specified, will not, under a decree directing him to account for the rents received by him since that time, preclude him from showing, in the master's office, that a part of such rents was not received by him, but was paid by the tenants to other parties. Howell v. Howell, 2 Myl. & Cr. 478; 1 Jur. 492.

The account of rents given against a purchaser for value, who, after being in possession, is evicted by a party having better title, ought not to extend to such rents as, without his default or neglect, might have been received, if no special case of fraud is made against him. Ib.

The decree for such an account ought to contain a direction for just allowance. Ib.

—— By Vendor.]—The title not being satisfactory, and the purchaser, for that reason, not having taken possession, the vendor to account for the rents received, or which, without his wilful default, might have been received. Wilson v. Clapham, 1 J. & W. 36; 20 R. R. 213.

An agreement provided that the purchaser should be entitled to the possession or rents from the 25th March, and in the event of the purchase not being completed on that day, the purchaser should pay interest on the unpaid balance till completion. Disputes having arisen the purchase was not completed for several years, and the vendor refused to allow the purchaser to take possession, but suffered the estate to fall into decay:—Held, that the purchaser was entitled to charge the vendor with rents and profits which, without wilful default, he might have received, and also with deterioration, and to set off what might be found due against his purchase money and interest. Phillips v. Silvester, 42 L. J., Ch. 225; L. R. 8 Ch. 173; 27 L. T. 840; 21 W. R. 179.

An agreement for the purchase of land provided a certain day for completion, and that the purchasers were to receive the rents and profits and pay interest on the purchase money if unpaid after that date. The vendors demurred to a statement of claim alleging a delay in completing the purchase, and claiming rents and profits from the vendors, who had remained in possession at the rate of 150*l.* per annum:—Held, that the demurrer must be overruled, and that the defendants by demurring had admitted 150*l.* to be the fair annual value of the rents and profits. Metropolitan Ry. v. Defries, 2 Q. B. D. 387; 36 L. T. 494; 25 W. R. 841—C. A.

When the purchase is completed, the purchaser is entitled to the rents and profits till possession given, and vendor to purchase money with interest; and if by neglect of vendor no rents, &c., have been received, he will be liable for what he might have received while purchaser was out of possession. Ackland v. Cuming, 2 Madd. 28; 17 R. R. 177.

On a bill by a purchaser for specific performance of a contract, a vendor, who, during fifteen years, had retained possession of the whole estate and of one-third of the purchase money was, under the circumstances, charged with interest on one-third of the rents and profits. Burton v. Todd, 1 Swanst. 255.

In a decree for specific performance directing an account of rents against a vendor who has remained in possession, and directing an occupation rent to be fixed, it is irregular to insert, as a matter of course, a direction that he shall be allowed for the expenses of needful repairs, or for income tax, in fixing the occupation rent. Sherwin v. Shakspear, 5 De G. M. & G. 517; 2 Eq. R. 957; 23 L. J., Ch. 893; 18 Jur. 843; 2 W. R. 668.

—— Occupation Rent.]—By an agreement with executors for the purchase of a leasehold public-house, the stock in trade, and other effects upon the premises, were to be taken by the purchaser at a valuation, and possession was to be delivered up to him on the 29th September. The valuation was made, but on the 29th September the purchaser, alleging that there was a defect in the title, refused to perform his contract; the executors filed a bill for specific performance, but in the meantime remained in possession of the house, and carried on the business:—Held, that the purchaser could not be made answerable for the trade which had been carried on since September: that he could not be compelled to take that portion of the stock in trade on the premises at the time of the decree, which was not there at the time of the agreement; that the purchaser ought to be charged with rent and taxes, and other outgoings paid by the executors since September, and with interest on the same so paid by them: and that the purchaser was not entitled to any occupation rent, or other allowance, for the use of the house by the executors. Dakin v. Cope, 2 Russ. 170; 26 R. R. 37.

In 1867, L. sold to a company a house in which he was carrying on the business of a victualler, the purchase money to be paid on the 25th March, 1869, or at such earlier time as the company should choose, possession to be given on payment, they paying 5 per cent. interest in the meantime; and he was to be their tenant at a given rent, the tenancy to be determinable on the 25th March, 1869, by a week's notice. The interest and rent were paid up to the 25th March, 1869. L. gave due notice to determine the tenancy on that day; but the company not having the purchase money ready, he refused to give up possession, and in April filed a bill for specific performance. In November, 1869, a decree for specific performance, with an order for payment of the purchase money, with interest from March 25th, 1869, was made:—Held, that the company was not entitled to any allowance by way of occupation rent. Leggott v. Metropolitan Ry., L. R. 5 Ch. 716; 18 W. R. 1060.

Agreement to let Plaintiff into a Trade.]—Though the court decreed specific performance of an agreement to let the plaintiff into a trade (contrà 9 Ves. 357), it refused to direct an account of the profits from the time the plaintiff ought to have been admitted; his remedy for that having been at law. Anon., 2 Ves. sen. 630.

Agreement to Sell Business.]—The vendor of a share of a co-partnership business filed a bill against the purchaser, who had taken possession, charging that he had grossly mismanaged the property, and destroyed its value. The court was of opinion that the title had not been accepted; and as a good title was not shown, a specific performance could not be decreed:—Held, that, upon a record so framed, no accounts or inquiries could be directed as to the defendant's possession and management of the property. Stevens v. Guppy, 3 Russ. 171; 6 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 164; 27 R. R. 59.

Possession under Agreement by Lunatic.]—A bill to set aside, on the ground of lunacy and fraud, a conveyance of an estate by a party claiming the fee simple. The lunacy was established, but it appeared that the plaintiff was only entitled to a life estate:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to an account of the rents and profits during the life of the plaintiff, as against the parties in possession under the conveyance. Price v. Berrington, 7 Hare, 394.

Receiver and Manager.]—A., who was the owner of leasehold premises (on which the business of a private hotel was carried on) and furniture, entered into a contract for sale to B. A portion of the purchase money remained unpaid, and a draft assignment of the lease and mortgage to secure the unpaid purchase money were prepared, but never executed. In an action for specific performance of the contract:—Held, that a receiver and manager might be appointed with power to take possession and carry on the business, but not to include any chattels other than those which would pass by an assignment of the lease. Poole v. Downes, 76 L. T. 110.

—— Purchaser in Possession—Payment or Delivery of Possession.]—A vendor who claims rescission of a contract for sale of land against a purchaser in possession under that contract cannot obtain on motion an immediate order for delivery of possession in default of payment by the purchaser of sums due under the contract sought to be rescinded. Where, however, the subject-matter of the contract is imperilled by the acts of the purchaser, a receiver will be appointed. Cook v. Andrews, 66 L. J., Ch. 137; [1897] 1 Ch. 266; 76 L. T. 16.

Sale of Crops.]—In May a person agreed to purchase an estate, including hay and growing crops. The purchase was to be completed in June. By a subsequent agreement, November was substituted for June. The contract was not completed until the following February, and in the meantime the vendors sold the hay and used the garden produce:—Held, that under the altered contract, the purchaser was not entitled to this hay or produce. Webster v. Donaldson, 34 Beav. 451; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 404; 12 L. T. 69; 13 W. R. 515.

Held, also, that if he was entitled to the produce of the crops, his remedy was by action. Ib.

Laches.]—Sale in 1808. The present suit was instituted in 1822, and in 1823 the principal defendant answered the bill. No further proceedings in the cause were had until 1839, when the suit was revived:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to relief, notwithstanding the lapse of time. But costs were refused to both parties in consequence of the great delay; and an account of the rent was directed only from 1839. Thornhill v. Glover, 3 Dr. & War. 195.

Repairs.]—There is no consideration between the purchaser and the vendor's creditor to entitle the latter to recover from the former the amount of the repairs done to the subject matter of the purchase. Rattenbury v. Fenton, 3 Myl. & K. 505; 3 L. J., Ch. 203.

Sale of Reversion.]—A. agreed to purchase a reversionary estate. B., the vendor, agreed to make out a good title by the 1st May next, from which time A. was to be entitled to the rents and profits. A. further agreeing to pay all such further sums as should be awarded by indifferent persons in respect of any increase in the value of the estate, by deaths. The purchase was not completed for a considerable period:—Held, that the vendor was not entitled to the benefit of any increase in the value of the estate from the wearing of lives. Brooke v. Champernowne, 4 Cl. & F. 589; 9 Bligh. (N.S.) 199.

Quære, on what principle the increased value of an estate arising from the dropping of lives, between the commencement and completion of the contract, is to be calculated. Townsend v. Champernowne, 3 Y. & C. 505.

Sale of Public-house—Transfer of Licence—Licence "affected."]—A stipulation in an agreement for a sale of a public-house that the agreement is to be void at the purchaser's option if the licence shall be indorsed or otherwise affected prior to completion, merely imposes on the vendor the obligation of having at the date fixed a valid and existing licence upon which the purchaser can apply at once to the magistrates for interim protection and transfer, and of joining with the purchaser or authorising him to use the vendor's name upon such applications. Tadcaster Brewery Co. v. Wilson, 66 L. J., Ch. 402; [1897] 1 Ch. 705; 76 L. T. 459; 45 W. R. 428; 61 J. P. 360.

If the magistrate should refuse such applications on any ground other than that the licence is not clean or valid, the vendor is still entitled to specific performance. Ib.

Improvements.]—A purchaser who has laid out money in bonâ fide improvements on lands purchased by him upon a sale which was invalid but not fraudulent, is entitled to an allowance for sums so expended by him. Stepney v. Biddulph, 12 L. T. 176; 13 W. R. 576.

There may be a degree of unfairness in obtaining articles for the purchase of an estate, for which this court will not set them aside, but will refuse its aid to carry them into execution; and if the party who obtained such articles had been in possession, and made lasting improvements, he shall be allowed for them on consenting to deliver up the articles, and account for the profits. Savage v. Taylor, Cas. t. Talb. 234.

Where the title is fraudulent, equity, in giving relief, will reimburse the party in possession for permanent improvements. Shine v. Gough, 1 Ball & B. 444.

In an action against an agent for reconveyance of an estate purchased of his principal, a decree was made, and on a supplemental bill against the purchasers a decree was made for repayment to them of the purchase-money by the agent and for an allowance to them for substantial repairs and improvements. Trevelyan v. White, 1 Beav. 588.

If an assignee purchase part of the bankrupt's estate, and improve, the estate must be resold, and put up at the price given by the assignee, adding the sum laid out in improvements. Hewitt, Ex parte, Johnston, In re, 2 Mont. & Ayr. 477.

—— How Valued.]—In estimating lasting improvements, old buildings pulled down, if incapable of repair, to be valued as old materials only. Robinson v. Ridley, 6 Madd. 2.

Delay—Right of Way.]—The purchaser of a piece of land agreed, as part of the consideration, to grant within a given time to the vendor a right of way, and to make a road with sewers leading to other land belonging to the vendor. The purchaser was unable to grant the right of way or to make the road and sewers until long after the time fixed, and the vendor brought an action for specific performance and for damages as the other land had remained unproductive until the road was made:—Held, that judgment for specific performance with costs must be given but no damages, as the contract was for a sale of real estate; there being no distinction between a contract to grant a right of way and make a road and sewers, and a contract to sell real estate. The principle on which in such a case damages would be assessed, discussed. Rowe v. London School Board, 57 L. J., Ch. 179; 36 Ch. D. 619; 57 L. T. 182.

c. Expenses and Deterioration.

Lease for Lives.]—Distinction between a purchase and a lease for lives; as time is not essential in a purchase, any delay may be compensated, either by receipt of the rents and profits, or, in case a title cannot be made out, by interest on the deposit; but in a lease depending on lives, where time is most essential, delay does not admit of any compensation. Ormond v. Anderson, 2 Ball & B. 370; 12 R. R. 103.

Purchase of Life Estate.]—The case of the purchase of a fee-simple is distinguishable from that of a life estate with respect to compensation for casualties. Vesey v. Elwood, 2 Con. & L. 47; 3 Dr. & War. 74; Fl. & K. 667; 5 Ir. Eq. R. 184.

Purchase Money in Court.]—The amount of deterioration of an estate, pending a suit for specific performance, having been ascertained by an issue, the purchaser was allowed it out of his purchase money which he had paid into court, under an order, with interest from the time when he paid in his money. Ferguson v. Tadman, 1 Sim. 530; 27 R. R. 236.

Delay in Completion.]—In August the plaintiff agreed to sell a property to the defendant. The contract was to be completed on the 9th October following, and the purchaser was to be entitled to possession up to that time; and if the purchase should not then be completed, the purchaser was to pay interest at 5 per cent. from that day until full payment. In November the time for completion was enlarged to the 21st February, when the purchase money was to be paid without interest, and the defendant let into possession. The defendant had not taken possession, and great dilapidation had occurred:—Held, that as a good title had been shown in August, and that the defendant should sustain the loss by dilapidation, and pay interest at 4 per cent. on his purchase money from the time of filing the bill. Minchin v. Nance, 4 Beav. 332.

Completion of contract being delayed for three years by difficulties in title, vendor is accountable for deterioration of the land during that period. Foster v. Deacon, 3 Madd. 394; 18 R. R. 251.

When the completion of a purchase is delayed through the default of the vendor in possession, and the property has diminished in value, or has been deteriorated by permissive waste, the purchaser is entitled to compensation. Regent's Canal Co. v. Ware, 23 Beav. 575. S. P., Phillips v. Silvester (supra, col. 1257); Gedye v. Montrose (Duke), 26 Beav. 45.

Deterioration of the estate, arising from delay in completing the purchase, is not a ground for rescinding the contract, but may be the subject of an allowance to the purchaser. Lord v. Stephens, 1 Y. & C. 222.

—— Extraordinary Expense.]—Where, between the date of the contract and conveyance, any deterioration to the property occurs from accident, without the fault of either party, the loss falls on the purchaser. But where, without any improper neglect or delay, a purchase could not be completed for three years, and the death of a trustee for sale occasioned the expense of a fine on a new admittance, although by the contract the conveyance was to be at the expense of the purchaser:—Held, that the extraordinary expense of the fine should be borne by the trust estate. Paramore v. Greenslade, 1 Sm. & G. 541; 23 L. J., Ch. 34; 17 Jur. 1064.

Mistake by Third Party.]—Deterioration arising from the agreement between intended purchaser and tenant of vendor being misunderstood by tenant, purchaser held liable to the loss. Harford v. Purrier, 1 Madd. 532; 16 R. R. 260.

Loss by Fire.]—It is against natural justice that any one should pay for a bargain which he cannot have; as if A. articles to buy a house, and the house is burnt down before the day of payment, A. is not bound to pay the money. Stent v. Bailis, 2 P. Wms. 220.

Contract for sale of houses, which from defects in title, could not be completed on the day fixed; the treaty was proceeded in on proposal to waive objections on certain terms; the houses being burnt before conveyance, the purchaser is bound if he accepted title. Paine v. Meller, 6 Ves. 347; 5 R. R. 327.

A vendor agreed with a purchaser for the sale of a house which had been insured against fire. The contract contained no reference to the insurance. After the date of the contract but before the day fixed for completion, the house was damaged by fire and the vendor received the insurance money. The purchase was afterwards completed, and the purchase-money, without any abatement, was paid over to the vendor:—Held, that the insurance company was entitled to recover back a sum equal to the insurance money from the vendor. Castellain v. Preston, 11 Q. B. D. 380.

A house insured by the vendor was after the date of the contract for sale, but before completion, partly burnt down, and the vendor received the insurance moneys. There was no provision in the contract as to insurance :—Held, that the purchaser as against the vendor could not recover the insurance moneys either as an abatement of his purchase money or for the reinstatement of the premises. Rayner v. Preston, 50 L. J., Ch. 472 ; 18 Ch. D. 1 ; 44 L. T. 787 ; 29 W. R. 546 ; 45 J. P. 829—C. A.

Vendor allowing Premises to fall into Disrepair.]—An agreement for purchase of real estate provided that the purchaser should be entitled to the possession of rents, from a date, and in the event of the purchase not being completed on that day, the purchaser should pay interest on the unpaid balance till completion. Disputes having arisen, the purchase was not completed for several years, and the vendor refused to allow the purchaser to take possession in the meantime, but suffered the estate to remain unoccupied, and to fall into decay :—Held, that the purchaser was entitled to charge the vendor with rents and profits which, without wilful default, he might have received, and also with deterioration, and to set off what might be found due against his purchase money and interest. Phillips v. Silvester, supra, col. 1257.

Vendor's Duty to Preserve Land.]—Upon a contract of sale of real estate, the vendor remaining in possession is bound until completion to use reasonable care to keep the premises in the same condition as at the date of the contract of sale. Clarke v. Ramuz, 60 L. J., Q. B. 679 ; [1891] 2 Q. B. 456 ; 56 J. P. 5—C. A.

Dilapidations.] — Sale on 2nd March of a house "with possession," the purchaser to take the late tenant's fixtures at a valuation if he desired. B. purchased the house at the auction. It appeared from the abstract delivered to the purchaser that the house had been let upon a lease, determined by notice on the 25th March, and which contained covenants by the lessee to keep and deliver up the premises in good repair. The tenant was bankrupt in January, and the vendor carried in a proof for damages for breach of the covenant to repair :—Held, that the purchaser had contracted for the purchase of the possession of the house as it stood, and could not be entitled to the claim for damages for breach of the covenant to repair, because that claim was incident to the reversion of the lease, which he had not purchased. Edie and Brown, In re, 58 L. T. 307.

Vendor's Duty to Let Premises.]—When the vendor of a farm, subject to a yearly tenancy, finds that, without default on the part either of himself or the purchaser, the purchase cannot be completed on the appointed day, and that the tenancy will determine before actual completion, it is his duty as trustee for the purchaser, to relet the farm on a yearly tenancy, so as to prevent it going out of cultivation, unless he obtains an indemnity from the purchaser against all risk arising from its remaining unlet. Egmont (Earl) v. Smith, 46 L. J., Ch. 356 ; 6 Ch. D. 469.

Unpaid vendors of a property, consisting of houses let in rooms to weekly tenants, who are in a position of qualified trusteeship for a purchaser, are bound, so far as they reasonably can, to keep the premises properly tenanted, so long as they remain in their possession. When they know that the purchaser is confiding in them for the management of the property purchased, and cannot sue the tenants directly, if they employ a proper agent, they must see that he does his duty with reasonable efficiency. Malone v. Henshaw, 29 L. R. Ir. 352.

Outgoing Tenant—Distress.] — A farm was sold under the direction of the court, subject to such tenant right as the outgoing tenant should possess. The day for completion was the 29th Sept. The purchase money was paid, and the purchaser let into possession on the 13th Oct., but no conveyance had been executed. The term of the tenant in occupation expired on 29th Sept. By his tenant right he left in the barns and yards hay and straw, and as the rent had not been paid, the receiver threatened to distrain on this :—Held, that the persons who had the legal estate had a right at law to distrain, but that in equity they must be regarded as trustees for the purchaser, and could not be allowed to exercise their legal right in such a way as to prejudice the purchaser. Powers, In re, Manisty v. Archdale, 63 L. T. 626 ; 39 W. R. 185.

Continuing Old Tenancies.]—Houses described in the particulars as in the respective occupations of specified under tenants, and as let to Messrs. J., "at the very low rent of 50*l.* per annum, who have received notice to quit," at a day past, but with a subsequent written permission to occupy on the same terms as before, until the tenements are sold, were contracted to be sold, subject to a condition, that the purchaser should be entitled to the rents from a specified day :—Held, that the purchaser not having required the vendors to turn the tenant out, they were not guilty of wilful default in allowing him to remain at the lesser rent ; and specific performance was decreed, the plaintiffs accounting only for the lesser rent. Crosse v. Beaufort (Duke), 5 De G. & Sm. 7.

Agreement to Purchase at a Valuation—Interest—Damages.]—A landlord and tenant agreed that at the expiration of the tenancy, the former should purchase certain machinery on the demised premises at a valuation. On the expiration of the tenancy the landlord refused to purchase, and an action for specific performance by the tenant, who made no claim for interest or damages, was dismissed. On appeal, the question as to interest was not raised ; but the court ordered specific performance, directed a reference to ascertain the value of the fixtures, and ordered the defendant to pay the amount :—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to interest at 4 per cent. by way of damages from the time when the landlord took possession. Marsh v. Jones, 40 Ch. D. 563 ; 60 L. T. 610—C. A.

Purchaser in Possession—Purchase Money—Payment into Court.]—Where a purchaser is in possession, even under his contract to purchase, and has made no objection to the vendor's title, the court will not order him to pay the balance of his purchase money into court without giving him the option to retire from possession unless he has done something which has interfered with the value of the property as a security for the balance of purchase money. Greenwood v. Turner, 60 L. J., Ch. 351; [1891] 2 Ch. 144; 64 L. T. 261; 39 W. R. 315.

B. agreed to purchase a manor from A., and to complete on or before the 24th July, 1843. It was also agreed that, on the completion of the purchase, the purchaser should be entitled to the rents and profits of such parts of the estate as were let. The day of completing the purchase was, for the convenience of the purchaser, altered from the 24th June to the 24th July. A tenant of copyhold premises, parcel of the manor, having died in 1836, the admittance of the parties entitled was postponed from time to time, at their request, and did not take place till the 1st July, 1843; and in December of the same year the fine was paid to the vendor. The conveyance to the purchaser was executed by the vendor in August, 1843, and the purchase money was paid in the following September:—Held, that the purchaser was not entitled to the fine. Hardwicke (Earl) v. Sandys (Lord), 14 M. & W. 761; 13 L. J., Ex. 233.

Reimbursement of Expense by Drainage Commissioners.]—A local drainage act provided, that the owners and proprietors of lands, their respective heirs and assigns, should be reimbursed such expenses or such share thereof as should be ascertained by certain commissioners appointed under the act; a subsequent act, imposing an additional tax on those lands, provided that such tax should not be payable until the repayment of such of the above expenses as the owners and proprietors of the lands for the time being should make appear to the satisfaction of the commissioners to have been necessarily expended in making banks. A third person, who had expended a large sum of money in making banks, afterwards sold his lands, without reserving, or noticing in the conveyance, the reimbursement above mentioned; and the commissioners having subsequently determined the amount of the reimbursement:—Held, that the purchaser, and not such third person, was entitled to receive it. King v. Witham Navigation Co., 3 B. & Ald. 454.

Succession Duty—Sale of Expectancy.]—The heir-presumptive of an estate in fee agreed to sell his interest free from incumbrances:—Held, that as between him and the purchaser the succession duty ought to be borne by the purchaser. Cooper v. Trewby (28 Beav. 194) followed and approved. Langham Hotel Co., In re, 60 L. J., Ch. 110; 39 W. R. 156—C. A.

—— Duty payable in respect of Increased Value on Determination of Leases.]—Lands subject to leases at ground-rents were sold subject to leases, but free from incumbrances, the contract making no provision as to the payment of succession duty:—Held, that the succession duty payable in respect of the increased value of the property on the determination of the leases, payment of which had been postponed in accordance with s. 20 of the Succession Duty Act, 1853, must be borne by the vendors. Kidd and Gibbons' Contract, In re, 62 L. J., Ch. 436; [1893] 1 Ch. 695; 3 R. 268; 68 L. T. 647; 41 W. R. 507.

"Outgoings."]—Conditions of sale of leasehold property provided that the vendors should pay all outgoings up to the half-quarter day, when the purchase was to be completed:—Held, that under the term "outgoings," the half-quarter's rent was payable by the vendors. Lawes v. Gibson, 35 L. J., Ch. 148; L. R. 1 Eq. 135; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 873; 13 L. T. 316; 14 W. R. 25. And see Midgley v. Coppock, 48 L. J., Ex. 674; 4 Ex. D. 309; 40 L. T. 870—C. A. Supra, col. 1107.

—— Order to Pull Down Dangerous Structures on Land.]—By a contract for the sale of land by the defendant to the plaintiff, the defendant agreed to clear all "outgoings" up to the date fixed for completion of the purchase. Prior to that date, notices were served upon the defendant by the L. council requiring him to pull down certain buildings upon the land as being dangerous structures. The defendant failed to comply with the notices, and, a magistrate having made orders to enforce them, the buildings were, after the date fixed for completion, pulled down by the council, and the plaintiff paid them the expenses incurred in executing the work. In an action by the plaintiff to recover the amount from the defendant:—Held, that the expenses were "outgoings" within the meaning of the contract, and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover, although the work was not executed until after the date fixed for completion. Tubbs v. Wynne, 66 L. J., Q. B. 116; [1897] 1 Q. B. 74.

Fines and Heriots.]—A copyholder contracted with a company for the sale of his tenement, which was subject to a heriot and to quit-rent and fines. The heriot was supplied by severance of the copyhold:—Held, that the vendor was not entitled to have the remaining part of his copyhold discharged from the heriot; and that he could not refuse to execute the conveyance on the ground that the company had not apportioned the rents and fines, but must proceed himself under the railway consolidation act. Parker v. S. E. R., 1 W. R. 316.

Copyholds ordered to be sold by the court were put up for sale in lots, and purchased by different purchasers. After the sale, and before the completion of the conveyance by surrender, the tenant on the court rolls, who was the surviving trustee, died, thereupon it became necessary for his heir to be admitted, and a fine and fees paid:—Held, that the fine and fees must be paid out of the fund belonging to the cestuis que trustent. Paramore v. Greenslade, 1 Sm. & Giff. 541; 23 L. J., Ch. 34; 17 Jur. 1064.

A condition of sale, which stated that "the purchasers should have proper surrender, conveyances, and assignments of the premises at their own expense, did not bind them to bear the expense of procuring the concurrence of all proper parties. Ib.

The purchaser of a copyhold estate (devised, subject to payment of debts, in trust for sale, and sold during the infancy of the heir, under the usual decree) is not entitled to have a portion of the purchase money retained in court, as a provision for defraying the expenses of the fine, which would become payable on the death of the heir before a conveyance. Morris v. Clarkson, 3 Swanst. 558; 19 R. R. 277.

Sale of Reversion—Timber Cut.]—A tenant in fee simple having contracted to sell the reversion of his own life, cut down ornamental timber. After his death, in a suit for the administration of his estate, the purchaser of the reversion brought in a claim for damages. In the opinion of the court the evidence did not show that any injury had been done to the reversion :—Held, that as the purchaser had not applied for an injunction to restrain the cutting, he could not claim damages. But, semble, that if he had applied for an injunction, any timber, the loss of which would, in his opinion, have been injurious to the ornamental effect, would have been protected. Bubb v. Yelverton, Hastings, Ex parte, 40 L. J., Ch. 38 ; L. R. 10 Eq. 465 ; 18 W. R. 1127, 1146.

d. Purchase Money and Deposit.

a. Payment and Forfeiture of.

Relief against Forfeiture.] — Relief against forfeiture of the deposit, upon putting the other party in the same situation as if the contract had been performed at the time agreed. Moss v. Matthews, 3 Ves. 279.

Contract not Completed.]—When a purchaser by a decree in a suit for specific performance was decreed to pay the purchase money within a specified time, and failed to do so, the court, on the application of the vendor, ordered the contract to be rescinded, and stayed all proceedings in the suit, with costs to be paid by the purchaser, and refused to make an order for the return of the deposit to him. Dunn v. Vere, 23 L. T. 432 ; 19 W. R. 151.

Condition to make good Loss on Resale.]—Conditions of sale stipulated, "that if the purchaser shall fail to comply with these conditions, the deposit money shall be actually forfeited to the vendor, who shall be at full liberty to resell ; and any deficiency that may arise upon such resale, together with all expenses attending the same, shall immediately after such second sale be made good by such defaulter, and on nonpayment thereof, such amount shall be recoverable by the vendor as and for liquidated damages." The defendant did not pay the deposit, or complete. The plaintiff resold at a price below that for which the defendant had purchased, and the deficiency, with the expenses of sale, exceeded the amount of the deposit :—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover from the defendant the amount of the deficiency and expenses only, and not, in addition to this, the amount of the deposit. Ockenden v. Henley, El. Bl. & El. 485 ; 27 L. J., Q. B. 361 ; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 999.

Had the deposit been paid, and the bargain completed, the deposit would have gone in part payment of the purchase money, and in case of the non-completion of the bargain, if the deficiency and expenses had together been less than the deposit, the purchaser would have been entitled to the whole deposit, but nothing more. Ib.

Right of Vendor to Retain.]—By the conditions of sale it was provided as follows :—"Should the purchaser neglect or fail to comply with any of the conditions, his deposit money shall be absolutely forfeited to the vendor, who shall be at liberty to resell the property." The purchaser paid a deposit, but failed to complete. There was no resale : — Held, that the vendor was entitled to retain the deposit and also to recover the auctioneers' charges for the abortive sale, and the costs incurred by him in preparing to complete the sale. Essex v. Daniell, L. R. 10 C. P. 538 ; 32 L. T. 476.

When a contract for sale goes off by default of the purchaser, the vendor is entitled to retain the deposit. Barrell, Ex parte, Parnell, In re, 44 L. J., Bk. 138 ; L. R. 10 Ch. 512 ; 33 L. T. 115 ; 23 W. R. 846.

By a contract for sale of real estate it was stipulated that a portion of the purchase money should be paid immediately and the residue on the completion of the contract. There was no stipulation as to the forfeiture of the deposit in case the purchase went off through the purchaser's default. After the title had been accepted the purchaser became bankrupt, and the trustee disclaimed :—Held, that the vendor was entitled to retain the deposit. Ib.

Where a purchaser became bankrupt after signing an agreement for the purchase of certain property sold by auction by order of the court, and his assignees refused to complete the purchase :—Held, that the assignees were not entitled to the deposit which had been paid by the bankrupt on signing the agreement, though the conditions of sale did not stipulate for the forfeiture of the deposit in the event of the purchaser making default. Depree v. Bedborough, 3 N. R. 187 ; 4 Giff. 479 ; 33 L. J., Ch. 134 ; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1317 ; 9 L. T. 533 ; 12 W. R. 191.

Semble, where a purchaser makes default, no express stipulation is necessary to entitle the vendor to the deposit. Ib. And see next Case.

Bankruptcy.]—The lord chancellor's jurisdiction as to acts done in the bankruptcy is not determined by the superseding of the commission ; so, after the commission is superseded, a petition will lie on behalf of a purchaser of the estates put up to sale by the assignees, for the repayment of the deposit. Fector, Ex parte, Buck, 428.

—— Supersession.]—A bankrupt's assignees contracted for the sale of his copyhold lands, and received a deposit. The commission was afterwards superseded. Another commission issued, upon the petition of another creditor, and the same assignees were chosen :—Held, that the plaintiff, having abandoned his contract pending the old commission, might recover back his deposit. Bartlett v. Tuchin, 1 Marshall, 583 ; 6 Taunt. 259. And see Roper v. Coombes, 6 B. & C. 534 ; 9 D. & R. 562 ; 5 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 200 ; 30 R. R. 417.

——Disclaimer.]—N. contracted to purchase an estate, and a bill was filed against him for specific performance. He then became bankrupt on his own petition, having brought an action to recover his deposit, which was restrained on the terms of the deposit being brought into court. The assignees were then made parties to the suit, and disclaimed in respect of the contract. On inquiry a good title was certified :—Held, the assignees and bankrupt appearing, that all proceedings must be stayed, and the deposit paid out to the party paying it in, without prejudice to any proceeding under the Bankrupt Act, 1849, s. 146. Kell v. Nokes, 14 L. T. 697 ; 14 W. R. 908. And see Barrell, Ex parte, supra.

b. Return of.

Forfeiture for Non-Completion.]—A bankrupt having disposed of his goods in fraud of his creditors, opened an account in a bank with the proceeds, and having entered into a contract for the purchase of land in an assumed name, paid a deposit to the defendant, the auctioneer, by a cheque upon the bank. The vendor and the defendant acted bonâ fide and without notice of the bankruptcy or of the fraud:—Held, that the bankrupt's trustee was not entitled to recover the deposit so as to prevent it from being forfeited to the vendor upon the non-completion of the contract. Collins v. Stimson, 52 L. J., Q. B. 440; 11 Q. B. D. 142; 48 L. T. 828; 31 W. R. 920; 47 J. P. 439.

Agreement to make "Good Marketable Title"—Purchaser's Knowledge of Defect.]—T. agreed to sell to C. certain freehold houses, and to make a good marketable title. On investigation of the title it appeared that the houses were subject to stringent restrictive covenants which were admitted to make the title not a marketable one. C. brought an action to recover back his deposit. T. adduced evidence that C. knew of the restrictions at the time of the contract, and the jury found that he did:—Held, that this evidence could not be admitted to modify the terms of the express contract, and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover. Cato v. Thompson, 9 Q. B. D. 616; 47 L. T. 491—C. A.

Defective Title.]—An intended purchaser, who by the conditions of sale is to have a good title made out, may, upon an insufficient title being offered to him, recover his deposit money and expenses, in an action against the intended vendor. Simmons v. Heseltine, 5 C. B. (N.S.) 554; 28 L. J., C. P. 129; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 270; 7 W. R. 133. And see General Meat Supply Association v. Bouffler, 41 L. T. 719, infra, col. 1341.

—— Under Unwritten Contract.]—Upon the abandonment of an unwritten contract for the sale of land, on defect of title, the deposit money paid to the auctioneer may be recovered. Gosbell v. Archer, 4 N. & M. 485; 2 A. & E. 500; 1 H. & W. 31: 4 L. J., K. B. 78.

But the expenses of investigating the title cannot be recovered without proof of a contract binding on the vendor, nor interest upon the deposit. Ib.

—— Specific Performance Impossible.]—Where the word "assigns" was omitted in the description of the donees of a power of sale contained in a will, the title of the devisees of the surviving donee was held to be too doubtful for a court of equity to compel specific performance of a contract of sale entered into between the plaintiff and such devisees, and he was held to be entitled to recover his deposit. Stevens v. Austen, 3 El. & El. 685; 30 L. J., Q. B. 212; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 873; 3 L. T. 810.

—— Defect subsequently Discovered—Common Mistake.]—The conditions provided that the purchaser should pay a deposit, and that if he failed to comply with the conditions the deposit should be forfeited and the vendors should be at liberty to resell. The purchaser paid the deposit, and accepted the title, but when the time for completion arrived he could not provide the residue of the purchase money. The vendors therefore rescinded the contract. Three years after, on a sale to another purchaser, it was decided that the title was bad, owing to a defect which appeared upon the face of the abstract delivered to the first purchaser. The first purchaser thereupon brought an action to recover his deposit on the ground of mutual mistake and failure of consideration:—Held, that the title having been accepted, and the deposit having been forfeited solely in consequence of the purchaser's default, he was not entitled to recover the deposit. Soper v. Arnold, 59 L. J., Ch. 214; 14 App. Cas. 429; 61 L. T. 702; 38 W. R. 449—H. L. (E.) Affirming 52 J. P. 374.

Delay in Sending in Objections.]—The defendant purchased from a railway company land, which, not being "superfluous," the company had no power to sell, as freehold building land. One of the conditions of sale was that the purchaser should send his objection, if any, to the title within seven days from the delivery of the abstract. The plaintiff declined to complete after the expiration of the seven days, and sued for the deposit:—Held, that the deposit could not be recovered. Rosenberg v. Cook, 51 L. J., Q. B. 170; 8 Q. B. D. 162; 30 W. R. 344—C. A.

Objections, when Made.]—In an action to recover the deposit on the purchase of an estate, on the ground of a defect in the vendor's title, specified on rescinding the contract, no objection can be insisted on at the trial which was not stated as a reason for refusing to complete the contract, if it is of such a nature that it might if then stated be removed. Todd v. Hoggart, M. & M. 128.

Non-performance — Contract under Seal.]—If A. agrees to sell an estate to B., and is afterwards disabled from doing so, B. may recover back the money deposited, although the contract for the sale is under seal. Greville v. Da Costa, Peake's Ad. Cas. 113.

—— Copyhold.]—A. agrees with B., lord of the manor, to purchase a copyhold for two lives, such as A. shall name. A pays 200*l.*, part of the purchase money, and was to pay the rest in three months; a court is held; three months pass; B. died suddenly, and the manor came to one who was not bound by the contract. The executor of B. to refund 200*l.* Awbry v. Keen, 1 Vern. 472.

Tenant for life of a copyhold sold his estate, and surrendered it that the lord might admit A., the purchaser; the copyholder in reversion entered and recovered at law; A. was relieved in equity. Anon, 2 Free. C. C. 118.

—— Assignment of Public-house Licence.]—Upon a contract for the sale of a public-house, the vendor agreed to make a proper assignment of the licences on the day fixed for the completion of the contract, or as soon thereafter as might be. The house had been carried on under a licence granted under 9 Geo. 4, c. 61, in the name of the vendor's son A., as servant to his father. A. went abroad, and the business had been continued under the management of B.:—Held, that the vendor, not being able to obtain the indorsement of the licence by A., was not in a condition to perform his contract, and consequently that the purchaser might recover back his deposit and the expenses which he had incurred in and about the purchase. Claydon v. Green, 37 L. J., C. P. 226; L. R. 3 C. P. 511; 18 L. T. 607; 16 W. R. 1126.

—— Intention.]—By an agreement for the purchase of a public-house, 300*l.* was paid by the purchaser by way of deposit, and in part of the purchase money. The purchase was to be completed on a certain day; and it was agreed that, if either party should refuse to perform the agreement, he should pay the other 1,000*l.* liquidated damages:—Held, that on this agreement it was not intended that the 300*l.* should be forfeited on the failure of the purchaser to complete the contract. Palmer v. Temple, 1 P. & D. 379; 9 A. & E. 508; 8 L. J., Q. B. 179.

—— When Second Action Allowed.]—On the day for completing the purchase the purchaser threw up the contract, on the ground that the vendor was not ready to complete, and sued him for 1,000*l.* liquidated damages, and for 300*l.* The jury found for the vendor, on the ground that he was ready to complete. After the writ was sued out against the vendor, he disposed of the public-house to another party, and the purchaser again sued him for 300*l.*:—Held, that as the former action failed on the sole ground that it was prematurely brought, the judgment in it was no bar; and that, as the parties did not intend the 300*l.* to be forfeited as a deposit, the purchaser was entitled to recover it back. Ib.

—— Re-sale.]—On a sale of real estate the purchaser paid 500*l.*, "as a deposit, and in part payment of the purchase money." The contract provided that the purchase should be completed on a day named, and that if the purchaser should fail to comply with the agreement, the vendor should be at liberty to re-sell and to recover any deficiency in price as liquidated damages. The purchaser was not ready with his purchase money, and the vendor re-sold the property for the same price:—Held, that the deposit, although to be taken as part payment if the contract was completed, was also a guarantee for the performance of the contract, and that the plaintiff, having failed to perform his contract within a reasonable time, had no right to a return of the deposit. Palmer v. Temple (supra) distinguished. Howe v. Smith, 53 L. J., Ch. 1055; 27 Ch. D. 89; 50 L. T. 573; 32 W. R. 802; 48 J. P. 773—C. A.

—— Liquidated Damages.]—An agreement for sale contained the two following provisions:—(9) As an earnest hereof the purchaser has this day paid into the hands of S. the sum of 500*l.* as a deposit, the deposit to form part of the purchase money to be paid on the day of possession; and (10) should either vendor or purchaser refuse or neglect to carry out the above arrangement on her or his part, the one so refusing or neglecting shall pay to the other the sum of 500*l.* as or in the nature of liquidated damages. The purchaser was unable to carry out his part of the agreement:—Held, that the meaning of the agreement was that the 500*l.* should be recoverable, if, owing to the fault of either party, the agreement were not carried out at all, and that that sum could be recovered in this case as liquidated damages:—and further, that it could also be recovered if the action were looked upon as an action to enforce the forfeiture of the deposit. Catton v. Bennett, 51 L. T. 70.

Condition to Admit Title.]—A contract for sale of superfluous land of a railway company which had been conveyed by the company to the vendor contained a stipulation that the purchaser should assume and admit that everything was done by the company to enable them to sell the land as surplus land, and a further stipulation that if the purchasers should fail to comply with the terms of the agreement the deposit should be forfeited. In the investigation of the title the purchaser discovered that the prior owners had not waived their right of pre-emption. The vendor then sold the land to one of the prior owners:—Held, that the purchaser was bound by the stipulations to admit the title of the company to sell to the vendor; and could not claim a return of his deposit. Best v. Hamand, 48 L. J., Ch. 503; 12 Ch. D. 1; 27 W. R. 742. And see Rosenberg v. Cook, supra, col. 1270.

Solicitor of Vendor—Stakeholder.]—A. was employed as solicitor for the vendor of real estate. By the conditions of sale the deposit was to be paid into his hands "as agent for the vendor," and he signed the contract of sale and receipt for the deposit as such agent:—Held, that he was not a stakeholder, and was liable to pay over the deposit to the vendor on demand, and in default to pay interest from the time of such demand. Edgell v. Day, 1 H. & R. 8; 35 L. J., C. P. 7; L. R. 1 C. P. 80; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 27; 13 L. T. 328; 14 W. R. 87.

Payment by Agent.]—Where A. became the purchaser of an estate, and signed a memorandum of agreement, as the agent of S., who afterwards repudiated the contract, of which notice was given to the agent of the vendor before the payment of the deposit, which A. afterwards paid:—Held, on the title proving defective, that A. was entitled to the deposit in his own name. Langstroth v. Toulmin, 3 Stark. 145.

Payment to Agent.]—A., as agent to B., the owner of the land, entered into an agreement for sale with C., the agent of D., but who appeared to act on his account, and C. paid A. part of the purchase-money as a deposit:—Held, that D. might sue B. to recover back the deposit on a breach of the agreement. Norfolk (Duke) v. Worthy, 1 Camp. 337; 10 R. R. 749.

Where Specific Performance Refused.]—If a bill by a purchaser for specific performance be dismissed, the court cannot order the deposit to be returned; but, secus, if the bill be filed by the vendor. Aylett v. Ashton, 5 L. J., Ch. 71. See Bennett College v. Cary, 3 Bro. C. C. 390.

A bill by a vendor for specific performance being dismissed, and the purchaser not wishing for a return of the deposit unless it was ordered to be returned with interest:—Held, that the court ought not to order a return of the deposit, but to leave the purchaser to his remedy at law. Rede v. Oakes, 2 De G. J. & S. 518; 5 N. R. 391; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 229; 13 W. R. 420.

Where the vendor's bill for specific performance is dismissed, on the ground of his laches in instituting the suit, and without any decision on the question of title, the court will not order the deposit to be returned to the purchaser, but will leave both parties to their legal remedies. Southcomb v. Exeter (Bishop), 6 Hare, 225; 16 L. J., Ch. 378; 12 Jur. 744.

Power of the court to order the return of the deposit where the vendor's bill is dismissed, he having given an undertaking. Royou v. Paul, 28 L. J., Ch. 555. S. P., Turquand v. Rhodes, 37 L. J., Ch. 830; 18 L. T. 844; 16 W. R. 1074. S. P., Anson v. Hodges, 5 Sim. 227.

Interest on.]—If a purchaser pays a deposit and the vendor is not able to make a good title, the purchaser is entitled to interest on the deposit from the time the purchase should have been completed, and may recover it from the vendor on alleging the special damage in his declaration. Farquhar v. Farley, 1 Moore, 322; 7 Taunt. 592; 18 R. R. 599.

A party recovering back a deposit paid on the purchase of real property is not entitled to interest. Bradshaw v. Bennet, 5 Car. & P. 48; 1 M. & Rob. 143.

When a vendor fails to make a good title to an estate the vendee is entitled to be paid at the rate of 5 per cent. for interest on his deposit money, though the court of chancery had ordered payment of 4 per cent. Hodges v. Lichfield (Earl), 1 Scott, 443; 1 Bing. (N.C.) 492; 1 Hodges, 40.

Where, in a suit by a vendor for specific performance, it was certified that a good title was not deduced, the court ordered a return to defendant of his deposit money, with interest at 4 per cent., and declared the defendant entitled to a lien on the estate of the same, and also for his costs. Turner v. Marriott, L. R. 3 Eq. 744; 15 L. T. 607; 15 W. R. 420.

Agreement for sale of residue of a term of which twelve-and-a-half years were unexpired, and deposit paid. The abstract showed that the lessor had right to determine lease at the end of five years:—Held, that the purchaser was entitled to rescind and to repayment of the deposit-money with interest. Weston v. Savage, 48 L. J., Ch. 239; 10 Ch. D. 736; 27 W. R. 654.

—— Misdescription of Vendors.]—In the particulars of sale of leaseholds, the premises were stated to be sold "by order of the executors;" they were in fact sold by the administrator de bonis non of the testator durante absentiâ of his next of kin:—Held, that the title was not such as a purchaser was bound to accept, and the deposit with interest was ordered to be refunded. Webb v. Kirby, 7 De G. M. & G. 376; 26 L. J., Ch. 145; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 73; 5 W. R. 189.

—— Condition as to Rescission.]—A condition, that if any objection or requisition should be made which the vendor should be unable or unwilling to remove, it should be lawful for him to rescind the contract, and that in that case the purchaser should be entitled to a return of his deposit without interest, but should not be entitled to any costs or damages, does not entitle the vendor, after making numerous fruitless attempts to remove an objection made by a purchaser desirous of being discharged, to return him his deposit only, but the vendor must then pay interest upon the deposit and the costs of the purchaser. M'Culloch v. Gregory, 1 K. & J. 286; 3 Eq. R. 495; 24 L. J., Ch. 246; 3 W. R. 231. And see cases, infra, col. 1493.

A sale in chambers under a decree having been declared invalid:—Held, that the vendors could not avail themselves of a condition enabling them, if unwilling, or unable for any reasonable cause to remove or comply with any objection or requisition by the purchaser, to rescind on payment of the deposit without interest and without costs on either side; and that the discharged purchaser was entitled to the stock arising from his deposit, which had been paid into court and invested, with the dividends thereon, or the actual amount of deposit and the produce, with costs, charges, and expenses. Powell v. Powell, 44 L. J., Ch. 311; L. R. 19 Eq. 422; 32 L. T. 148; 23 W. R. 482.

—— Misdescription.]—A person purchased at a sale by auction, for 2,500*l.*, property which was described in the particulars of sale as an "immediate reversion in fee simple." Shortly after he discovered that by the conditions of sale, which were produced for the first time and read aloud by the vendor's agent at the sale, but which the purchaser was prevented by deafness from hearing distinctly, the purchaser was to take the property, subject to mortgages for 2,500*l.*, the real value of the reversion being considerably under 5,000*l.*:—Held, that the purchaser was entitled to have the contract rescinded, and that he was also entitled to have the deposit returned, with interest at 4 per cent., and, until payment, to a lien for the amount on the vendor's interest in the property. Torrance v. Bolton, 42 L. J., Ch. 177; L. R. 8 Ch. 118; 27 L. T. 738; 21 W. R. 134.

Payment into Court.]—The court will not compel vendor to pay deposit money into court, though he retains possession of the estate, if delay in completion of contract is caused by purchaser. Wynne v. Griffith, 1 Sim. & S. 147; 1 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 110.

Payment by Cheque.]—The custom of auctioneers to accept, on sales of large properties, a cheque in lieu of cash for the deposit, is reasonable, and a mortgagee vendor was held to be justified in acting on it, and not to be guilty of negligence in the conduct of the sale, though the cheque was dishonoured. Farrer v. Lacey, 53 L. J., Ch. 569; 25 Ch. D. 636; 50 L. T. 121; 32 W. R. 196.

On an agreement to transfer a public house and assign the licences, a cheque upon a brewer's house is not sufficient if tendered in payment, though it is proved to be the constant practice to use cheques instead of money, in order to prevent robbery, on account of the lateness of the hour at which settlements take place in the transfer of public-houses. Clarke v. King, 2 Car. & P. 286; Ry. & M. 394.

Payment by I O U.]—A. agreed to sell and B. to buy a public house with this clause: "As earnest of this agreement, the purchaser has paid into the hands of the vendor 50*l.*, which is to be allowed in part of payment at the completion of this agreement; and if the purchaser should fail to fulfil his part of the agreement, then the deposit-money shall become forfeited." Instead of the deposit B. gave an I O U, which he never paid, and he afterwards refused to fulfil the agreement: — Held, that A. was entitled to recover 50*l.* as a forfeited deposit. Hinton v. Sparks, 37 L. J., C. P. 81; L. R. 3 C. P. 161; 17 L. T. 600; 16 W. R. 360.

Payment by Bill.]—If a party has given a bill of exchange or a cheque for the amount of a deposit on a sale by auction, any ground on which the party could recover back his deposit, if paid in money, will be a good ground of defence in an action upon the bill or cheque. Mills v. Oddy, 6 Car. & P. 728; 2 C. M. & R. 103; 5 Tyrw. 571; 1 Gale, 92; 4 L. J., Ex. 168.

Parties to Action—Auctioneers as Co-Defendants.]—Auctioneers (as well as the vendors) held to be proper defendants to an action for rescission and costs brought by the purchaser of a property, which he alleged that he was induced to purchase by the fraudulent mock-bidding of such auctioneers.—Semble, that it would not have been open to him to make them parties for the mere purpose of discovery. Heatly v. Newton, 45 L. T. 455; 30 W. R. 72—C. A.

Auctioneer, on motion of vendor, ordered to pay deposit into court, minus his charges and expenses; and purchaser restrained by injunction from proceeding in his action against the auctioneer for the deposit, in which action he had obtained a judgment to the whole amount of the deposit. Annesley v. Muggridge, 1 Madd. 593; 16 R. R. 273.

Injunction granted to stay action against the auctioneer for the deposit, although the estate sold was represented as freehold, with leasehold adjoining, and turned out to be almost all leasehold; and although there had been great delay in making out the plaintiff's title. Fordyce v. Ford, 4 Bro. C. C. 494.

Motion for an injunction to restrain an action against the auctioneer for the deposit, refused where there had been a great delay on the part of the vendor. Lloyd v. Collett, 4 Bro. C. C. 469; and see Stevens v. Adamson, supra, col. 1174.

Set Off.]—One of the terms of an agreement was, that the contract should be void if the purchaser's counsel should be of opinion that a marketable title could not be made by a certain time. The counsel being of that opinion, a bill by the purchaser for a specific performance with a compensation was dismissed with costs, and an application afterwards made by the plaintiff that his deposit might be set off against the defendant's costs, and the surplus (if any) paid to him, was refused with costs. Williams v. Edwards, 2 Sim. 78; 29 R. R. 61.

Loss of Deposit.]—Vendor, resisting an application by the purchaser for payment into court of the deposit in the hands of the vendor's agent, charged with a loss by the agent's failure. Fenton v. Browne, 14 Ves. 144; 9 R. R. 255.

A mortgagor contracted to sell the estate, and one of the conditions was, that the purchaser should pay a deposit to the auctioneer. The mortgagee afterwards concurred and adopted the contract. A loss having occurred by the insolvency of the auctioneer:—Held, that, as between the purchaser and mortgagee, the latter stood in the shoes of the vendor, and must bear the loss. Rowe v. May, 18 Beav. 613.

Purchase money deposited in a bank (which failed) until comp'etion:—Held, that the loss must be borne by the vendor. St. Paul v. Birmingham Ry., infra, col. 1282.

—— Bond.]—On the sale of a freehold estate it was agreed that the purchase-money should be paid in railway bonds, and the purchaser deposited with and assigned to A., who alleged himself to be the solicitor of the vendor, one of such bonds. The contract turned out to be a fraud and went off, and on purchaser applying to A. for the return of the deposited bond, he was informed that A. had placed it in the hands of B. to secure a debt due from himself to B. B. had no notice of the terms upon which A. held the bond:—Held, in a suit by the purchaser against B. to restrain him from dealing with the bond, that the deposit and assignment of the bond by the purchaser to A. for the purpose mentioned did not make A., in the events which happened, a constructive trustee for the purchase, and that as B. was a bonâ fide purchaser of the bond for value without notice, he could not be restrained from dealing with it. Ashwin v. Burton, 32 L. J., Ch. 196; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 319; 7 L. T., 589; 11 W. R. 103.

—— Liability of Solicitor.]—On a contract for purchase, a part of the purchase-money was paid as "deposit" to the vendor's solicitor, who paid it away at the desire of the vendor, without the concurrence of the purchaser. This created a difficulty in completing the purchase, as a mortgagee of the estate would not join in the conveyance without payment to him of the deposit. In a suit by the purchaser for specific performance, the solicitors were declared liable to make good the money. Wiggins v. Lord, 4 Beav. 30; 2 Jur. 786.

Injunction against Suit for.]—There is no general rule of practice to the effect that the court will not, in a suit for specific performance by a vendor, restrain an action by the purchaser to recover the deposit. Kell v. Nokes, 32 L. J., Ch. 785; 8 L. T. 824; 11 W. R. 978.

Purchaser entering into possession, knowing of objections to abstract, but continuing to negotiate, cannot break off contract; an injunction will lie against his proceeding at law to recover back purchase-money; but otherwise if he had declared off, on delivery of abstract. Warde v. Jeffery, 4 Price, 294; 18 R. R. 716.

Injunction to stay proceedings in an action brought by a purchaser to recover the amount of his deposit, refused, the description in the printed particular of sale being calculated grossly to deceive as to the real nature and value of the estate sold. Stewart v. Alliston, 1 Mer. 26; 15 R. R. 81.

Vendor proceeding beyond the time for completing the contract, and having brought an action and withdrawn his record on finding he could not support it, and the purchaser having brought an action for his deposit and obtained a verdict; an injunction to restrain his proceeding was refused. Wood v. Bernal, 19 Ves. 220; 12 R. R. 173.

—— Order nisi.]—Court will not make absolute the common order nisi to dissolve injunction (granted to restrain purchaser from proceeding to recover part of the purchase-money on the ground of want of title and outstanding incumbrances) without master's report as to sufficiency of title, although objections are fully stated in defendant's answer. Church v. Legeyt, 1 Price, 301.

ii. Purchase Money.

a. Payment in General.

Possession Given.]—Though, generally, a purchaser cannot be called upon for purchase money until title made, yet where he is let into possession upon mutual confidence of speedy title, and the difficulty is a mutual surprise, he cannot, without express contract, retain possession, withholding purchase money. Gibson v. Clarke, 1 V. & B. 500; 12 R. R. 282.

Receipt Given Though no Payment Made.]—Where conveyance is executed to purchaser, which expresses purchase money to have been paid, estate does not pass by the conveyance in equity till money actually paid, although receipt for same is indorsed on conveyance. Winter v. Anson (Lord), 1 Sim. & S. 434; 3 Russ. 488; 27 R. R. 117.

Where upon the sale of a ship to A. and B., in which A. was to be interested in one-third and B. in two thirds, and upon the execution of the bill of sale, although expressing that B. had paid two-thirds of the purchase money, only one-third was actually paid, and A.'s acceptances given for the remainder, which were, from A. becoming bankrupt, dishonoured:—Held, that B. remained liable for the payment of the unpaid purchase money, notwithstanding the form of the bills given for the amount. Lynn v. Chaters, 2 Keen, 521.

On Covenant to Pay by Notes.]—A covenant to pay D. 213*l.* 15*s*, as and for the purchase money for certain seams and beds of coal and minerals, in manner and at the times following, viz.: "21*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.* on the day of the date thereof, and the remaining 192*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.* by four several promissory notes, under the hand of the defendant, bearing date with the deed, payable to D. or order on the 1st of July in every year, until the whole of the purchase money should be paid, with interest thereon after the rate of 5 per cent. per annum until the promissory notes should be paid," is a covenant to pay the purchase money when the notes become due, and the covenant is not performed by the mere delivery of the promissory notes. Dixon v. Holroyd, 7 El. & Bl. 903; 27 L. J., Q. B. 43; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 1147; 5 W. R. 688.

Condition as to Title.]—In an action for non-payment of the residue of the purchase money, the declaration stated, that in consideration of 90*l.* paid to the plaintiff by the defendant, and of the further sum of 820*l.* to be paid to the plaintiff on the 1st November, the plaintiff agreed to sell and the defendant agreed to buy, a messuage, and to pay the plaintiff the residue of the purchase money on the 1st November; and that thereupon a conveyance of the premises, and the freehold and inheritance thereof, should be made to the defendant by all proper parties, at the expense of the plaintiff, and the plaintiff agreed to produce a good marketable title to the premises:—Held, that the defendant was not bound to pay the residue of the purchase money until a good title to the premises was made out by the plaintiff, and he was ready to convey to the defendant. Manly v. Cremonini, 6 Ex. 808; 2 L. M. & P. 550; 21 L. J., Ex. 288.

In an agreement for the purchase of an estate, the purchaser stipulated to pay the residue of the purchase money on a day specified, "upon the vendors making a good title or otherwise; if such title should not then be completed, upon his executing a bond to complete such title, and to convey the estate as soon as the estate could be completed"; till a good title is shown, the purchaser, though he had entered into possession, is not bound to pay the purchase money. Clarke v. Vaux, 3 Russ. 320; 6 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 17.

Eviction of Purchaser.]—A. sold to B., and covenanted against himself and all claiming under him; B. secured the purchase money, and was evicted by a title paramount to A.'s title; B. was relieved from the payment of the purchase money. Anon., 2 Ch. Cas. 19.

When eviction entitles a purchaser to relief. Magnard v. Moseley, 3 Swanst. 651.

Different consequence of eviction before and after payment of purchase money. Ib.

Payment by Instalments.]—In an action by a vendor whose purchase money was to be paid by instalments, some of which were not yet due, for specific performance of his contract and a declaration of his lien, liberty was given to apply in respect of future instalments as they accrued due. Nives v. Nives, 49 L. J., Ch. 674; 15 Ch. D. 649; 42 L. T. 832; 29 W. R. 302.

Security for.]—On sale of estate, part of the consideration was to be an annuity, but it was not settled how it should be secured; the court ordered it to be secured on the estate as well as by bond and judgment, which latter was the mode proposed by purchaser. Remington v. Deverall, 2 Anstr. 550.

Time for.]—A company agreed with a landowner to purchase a piece of land for 4,000*l.*, of which the sum of 2,000*l.* was to be paid at once, and the remaining 2,000*l.* on a day named, with a provision that if the whole of the 2,000*l.* and interest were not paid off by that day, in which respect time was to be of the essence of the contract, the vendors might repossess the land as of their former estate, without any obligation to repay any part of the purchase money:—Held, that this stipulation was in the nature of a penalty, from which the company was entitled to be relieved on payment of the balance of the purchase money, with interest. Dagenham Thames Dock Co., In re, Hulse, Ex parte, 43 L. J., Ch. 261; L. R. 8 Ch. 1022; 21 W. R. 898.

Proof of Payment.]—After twenty years' possession, a purchaser shall not be put to prove the payment of his bond for the purchase money. Anon., Moseley, 37.

Receipt for purchase money indorsed not conclusive evidence in favour of the purchaser; and upon other evidence:—Held, that the payment was disproved. Hawkins v. Gardner, 2 Sm. & G. 441. And see Lynn v. Chaters, supra.

—— Agreement for Work and Labour instead of Price.]—A. assigned and sold an unexpired lease of premises, and the fee simple of a messuage, to B.; and in each instrument recited that he had received the purchase-money, and on the back of each wrote a receipt for the purchase-money in full; after which a memorandum of agreement, not signed or stamped, was drawn up between the parties, reciting that B. had lately purchased of A. the premises in question; and that A. being indebted to B. in 100*l.* had agreed that the same should be considered as in part payment of the purchase money; but, it being understood, that, in case the dividend about to be paid by A. to his creditors should not amount to 20*s.* in the pound, then that A. was to do work for B. to the amount of such deficiency; and that B. was to retain in his hands 60*l.*, to be also considered as in part payment of the purchase money; and for which sum B. was to do and perform work for A. Indebitatus assumpsit being brought by A. to recover the money actually due to him, as the purchase money of the premises:—Held, that neither the agreement, nor parol evidence of the contents, was admissible to show that the consideration money had not been paid. Baker v. Dewey, 3 D. & R. 99; 1 B. & C. 704; 1 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 193.

Amount of.]—On the purchase, at a specified price per acre, of land, described in the particulars as grass land, "containing by estimation twenty-three acres or thereabouts, but to be surveyed," the land when measured contained 23a. 0r. 26p., of which 1a. 0r. 3?p. was comprised within a drain:—Held, that if the land comprised within the drain was included in the conveyance, the purchaser was bound to pay for it at the specified rate. Popple and Barrett, In re, 25 W. R. 248—C. A.

—— Title to Moiety of Property Sold.]—When vendors having agreed to sell the entirety of property could make a title to one moiety only:—Held, that the purchaser was entitled to have such moiety conveyed to him on payment of one moiety of the purchase money. Bailey v. Piper, 43 L. J., Ch. 704; L. R. 18 Eq. 683; 31 L. T. 86; 22 W. R. 943.

Abatement not allowed on Purchase with Notice.]—A purchaser buying with notice of tenants in possession is bound to inquire into the nature of their interests, and is not entitled to an abatement of the purchase-money because their interet proves to be larger than he supposed when he entered into the contract. James v. Lichfield, 39 L. J., Ch. 248; L. R. 9 Eq. 51; 21 L. T. 521; 18 W. R. 158.

Priority of Purchaser's Costs over Mortgage after Contract.]—A vendor brought an action claiming a declaration that his contract for sale was at an end. The purchaser made a counter-claim for a specific performance of the contract. Judgment was given for the defendant, with costs, on both claim and counter-claim:—Held, that the defendant was entitled to deduct his costs from his purchase money in priority to a mortgage of the plaintiff, whose mortgage had been created after the contract for sale, but before the commencement of the action. Green v. Seven, 13 Ch. D. 589.

b. To Whom Payable.

To Vendor in Person.]—Although the purchaser has not the right in every case to insist upon the vendor being present to receive his purchase-money, yet should the requisition be made under circumstances which justify it, the vendor should comply with the request. Viney v. Chaplin, 2 De G. & J. 468; 27 L. J., Ch. 434; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 619; 6 W. R. 563.

In any case where a vendor does not attend personally to receive his money, a purchaser has the right to insist upon a written authority to pay to the solicitor. Ib.

A vendor's solicitor has no authority by virtue of his office to receive the purchase-money, although he may have possession of the deed of conveyance, with the receipt indorsed upon it or signed by his client. Ib.

Sale by Trustees.]—S. 56 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, does not authorize vendors who are trustees with a power of sale to require the purchaser to pay the purchase-money to their solicitor on production of the deed of conveyance duly executed in cases where, before the act, they could not have required the purchaser to pay the purchase-money to their solicitor under a special authority. Trustees of real estate, with a power to sell and give receipts, sold the estate. The purchasers required that the vendors should attend in person to receive the purchase-money, or should authorize the purchasers to pay it into a bank to the joint account of the vendors:—Held, that s. 56 had no application, and that the purchasers had a right to insist on their requisition. Bellamy and Metropolitan Board of Works, In re, 52 L. J., Ch. 870; 24 Ch. D. 387; 48 L. T. 801; 31 W. R. 900; 47 J. P. 550—C. A.

—— Authority to Co-trustee.]—Where trustees are vendors a purchaser from them has, as a general rule, a right to insist upon paying the purchase-money in the presence of all the trustees, or into a bank to their joint account, and is not bound to pay the money to one of their number on a written authority from his co-trustees. On the sale by three trustees of a will the purchaser made a requisition that the trustees should attend personally, on completion of the purchase, to receive the purchase-moneys, or that they should give a written direction, signed by the trustees, for payment of the same purchase-moneys to the joint account at some bank. The trustees desired that the moneys should be paid to one of their number, to whom they proposed to give their written authority to receive it:—Held, that the principle in Bellamy and Metropolitan Board of Works, In re (supra), applied to the case, and that the requisition must be complied with. Flower v. Metropolitan Board of Works, In re, 53 L. J., Ch. 955; 27 Ch. D. 592; 51 L. T. 257; 32 W. R. 1011.

To Solicitor.]—It is well settled that it is not within the ordinary business of a solicitor to receive purchase-money belonging to his client, or money due to him on mortgage, nor to receive money from him for the purpose of investment generally, and one partner is not liable for the misapplication of money so received by another without his privity. Bourdillon v. Roche, 27 L. J., Ch. 681; 6 W. R. 618.

Secus, where the money is received for the purpose of being invested on a particular security. Ib.

—— Sale of Ship.]—On a sale by auction of shares in a ship, part of a bankrupt's estate, one of the conditions was that the purchase-money should be paid to the solicitor of the assignees on or before a certain day, when the purchase was to be completed, and the purchaser to have possession and a bill of sale; the purchaser paid part of the purchase-money to the solicitor before the day appointed for the completion of the purchase, and had possession, but not a bill of sale:—Held, that the payment and the execution of the bill of sale ought, in pursuance of the condition, to have been contemporaneous; that the assignees, not having received the money from the solicitor, or executed the bill of sale, would not be restrained from taking proceedings to recover possession of the ship; and that the purchaser was not entitled to the execution of the bill of sale by the assignees, upon payment to them of the balance of the purchase-money. Hughes v. Morris, 9 Hare, 636; 21 L. J., Ch. 761; 16 Jur. 603.

—— Agent for Both Parties.]—A. purchased an estate from B., and on the completion one solicitor acted for both parties, and the purchase-money was paid into his hands. Afterwards the purchaser was defeated by C., who had a paramount mortgage. The purchaser presented a petition against the solicitor, asking payment by the solicitor out of the purchase-money of the losses occasioned:—Held, that the money having come to the hands of the solicitor as agent of the vendor, and not of the petitioner, the court could not interfere. Tylee v. Webb, 14 Beav. 14; 15 Jur. 1023.

Agent for Sale.]—An agent employed to sell an estate has not, as such, authority to receive payment. Mynn v. Joliffe, 1 M. & Rob. 326.

The owner of an estate, residing abroad, gave a power of attorney to his agent in this country to sell the estate and give a discharge for the purchase-money. The agent sold the estate, and the conveyance sent abroad and executed was by the principal. Semble, the agent in England cannot give an immediate good discharge for the purchase-money, by reason of the uncertainty whether the principal may be alive at the time of the payment. Bailey v. Collett, 18 Beav. 179; 23 L. J., Ch. 230; 2 W. R. 216.

Payment to Vendor when Bankrupt.]—A trader had, before adjudication (the purchaser having had no notice of any act of bankruptcy), contracted to sell a property, and had received a deposit. After the adjudication had been made, but before it had been advertised, the purchaser, having no notice, paid the remainder of the purchase money to the bankrupt:—Held, that the trustee in the bankruptcy could not be compelled to assign the lease to the purchaser except upon the terms of his paying the purchase money. Rabbidge, Ex parte, Pooley, In re, 8 Ch. D. 367; 38 L. T. 663; 26 W. R. 646—C. A.

—— Notice of Adjudication.]—Purchasers paid part of the purchase money by a post-dated cheque. Before the date of payment they had notice that the vendor was adjudicated a bankrupt, but they did not stop the cheque, which was honoured in due course:—Held, that they must pay the money over again to the trustee. Armstead, Ex parte, Palmer, In re, 45 L. T. 557; 30 W. R. 124.

To Debtor after Filing Petition.]—When a debtor has filed a petition for liquidation, and resolutions accepting a composition are afterwards passed as provided by the act, such debtor remains absolute master of his property until the creditors take action under s. 126 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, and a purchaser from him is not entitled to any evidence whether or not the instalments under the composition have been duly paid. Kearley and Clayton's Contract, In re, 47 L. J., Ch. 474; 7 Ch. D. 615; 38 L. T. 92; 26 W. R. 324.

Heir at Law.]—A person contracted to purchase real estate, subject to a condition that if he made any requisition which the vendor was unable or unwilling to comply with, the vendor should be at liberty to rescind the contract. He made several requisitions and died intestate without completing the contract, and after his death the vendor rescinded:—Held, that the heir at law of the purchaser was entitled to have the amount of the purchase money paid to him out of the intestate's personal estate. Hudson v. Cooke, 41 L. J., Ch. 306; L. R. 13 Eq. 417; 26 L. T. 180; 20 W. R. 407.

The vendor's heir at law, who has obtained a decree setting aside the sale on repayment of the purchase money to the purchaser, has no equity to resort to the personal estate to recoup him; not even to a portion of it identified as part of the purchase money. Ryder v. Ryder, Ir. R. 8 Eq. 86.

Payment into Court on Objection to Conveyance.]—When the purchaser of property under an administration decree declined to complete his purchase upon the ground of non-concurrence on a previous sale of persons interested in the purchase money:—Held, that he must nevertheless bring the purchase money into court, the objection being one of conveyance and not of title. Matson v. Deanes, 4 De G. J. & S. 345; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 461; 10 L. T. 391; 12 W. R. 926.

Loss of Deposit.]—The plaintiff contracted to sell land to the defendant for 4,069*l.* The parties subsequently agreed that 4,000*l.* should be deposited in a bank in their joint names pending the completion of the purchase:—Held, that the loss sustained in consequence of the failure of the bank subsequent to the deposit must be borne by the plaintiff. St. Paul v. Birmingham, Wolverhampton & Stour Valley Ry., 11 Hare, 305; 1 Eq. R. 274; 17 Jur. 1176; 1 W. R. 494. And see Fenton v. Browne, supra, col. 1275.

c. Payment into Court.

To Solicitor.]—Payment to the solicitor for all parties in the suit is equivalent to payment into court. Price v. North, 2 Y. & C. 620; 7 L. J., Ex. Eq. 9.

Belongs to Vendor.]—Purchase money paid into court is the property of vendor. Gell v. Watson, 2 Sim. & S. 402; 3 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 199.

Order For.]—Purchase money ordered to be paid into court till the hearing. Grundy v. Masters, 4 Jur. 669.

Without Prejudice.]—Purchaser under circumstances allowed to pay his purchase money into court, and to be let into the possession and receipt of the rents and profits without prejudice to any subsequent objection which he might be advised to make to the title. Marfell v. Rudge, 2 Y. & C. 566; 2 Jur. 78.

Offer by Purchaser.]—Offer of a purchaser before conveyance to pay into court instalments due, and interest, according to the contract, the subject being a coal mine, and the purchaser in possession and working it. Buck v. Lodge, 18 Ves. 450.

Practice.]—Purchaser taking possession without consent or privity of vendor, ordered, on motion, before answer to pay purchase money into court. Blackburn v. Stace, 6 Madd. 69.

—— Committal.]—A purchaser may be committed for disobeying an order to pay in his money. Lansdown v. Elderton, 14 Ves. 512.

—— Affidavits after Answer.]—Affidavits admitted, after answer, to be read in support of a motion to pay purchase money into court. Bradshaw v. Bradshaw, 2 Mer. 492.

Purchaser (a trustee acting on behalf of himself, his co-trustees, and the cestui que trust) ordered to pay purchase money into court, the agreement having been entered into in the name of himself alone, upon affidavit after answer that the plaintiffs (the vendors) had no notice of his acting for others, and of acts of ownership committed since possession. Crutchley v. Jerningham, 2 Mer. 502.

Death of Vendor.]—Conditions of sale provided that the purchase should be completed on a given day, and that "if from any cause whatever the purchase should not be then completed," the purchaser should pay interest from that time till the day of completion. Two days before that time the vendor died, having devised her estates to an infant, which rendered a suit necessary to obtain completion, and delay was occasioned. After filing the bill, the purchaser paid his money into court, to the general credit of the cause:—Held, that the death of the vendor was an event within the contemplation of the parties, and the purchaser was liable to pay interest, and that, there being no fault in either party, the decree must be without costs. Bannerman v. Clarke, 3 Drew. 632; 26 L. J., Ch. 77; 5 W. R. 37.

The vendor dying intestate, and having an infant heir, the purchase money, being paid into court in a suit for a specific performance instituted after his death, will be retained till the heir attains twenty-one, and conveys. Bullock v. Bullock, 1 J. & W. 603.

Demurrer.]—Where, pending a demurrer to bill, the vendor is ordered to place proper conveyance into hands of court, purchaser is ordered to place purchase money there also; the purchaser will not be permitted to take out conveyance, though he consents to vendor taking out the money. Cutler v. Broughton, 3 Madd. 95.

Accepting Title.]—A purchaser is not conclusively bound by the acceptance of the title by his counsel, but if he pays his purchase money into court he is bound. This rule does not apply to a case where the counsel it misled by the abstract of title. M'Culloch v. Gregory, 1 K. & J. 286; 3 Eq. R. 495; 24 L. J., Ch. 246; 3 W. R. 231.

Title not Accepted.]—A purchaser who is not in possession, and has not accepted the title, will not be ordered to pay his purchase money into court. Anon., 1 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 177.

Payment or Giving up Possession.]—Generally a purchaser shall not be allowed both to retain possession of the estate, and to keep his purchase money; but in a case where he was willing to give up possession, and it was a question whether there was a subsisting contract, the lord chancellor refused to order payment of the purchase money into court. Morgan v. Shaw, 2 Mer. 138; 16 R. R. 161.

C. contracted with a railway company to sell land, with a stipulation that they should have possession and pay the purchase money in two years, with interest. They took possession, but only paid one-third of the purchase money, and a bill was filed for specific performance. Before answer the plaintiff moved for payment of the balance of the purchase money into court, or delivery up of the land. Order made for payment or delivery up within a month. Cooper v. L. C. & D. Ry., 14 W. R. 985.

Possession by a purchaser given or permitted by the vendor, without receipt of rents and profits by the purchaser, does not render the purchaser liable to pay the purchase money into court, but he will be ordered to give up possession, or to pay the purchase money into court. Curling v. Austin, 2 Dr. & Sm. 129; 10 W. R. 682.

Delay—Of Purchaser.]—Court will not compel vendor to pay deposit money into court, though he retains possession of the estate, if the delay in the completion of the contract is occasioned by purchaser. Wynne v. Griffith, 1 Sim. & S. 147; 1 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 110.

—— Of Vendor.]—Motion for a purchaser in possession to pay money into court, refused, under the circumstances of possession given independently of the agreement to purchase, and laches on the part of the vendor in completing his title. Foæ v. Birch, 1 Mer. 105; 15 R. R. 37.

Tenants in Common.]—Motion by one tenant in common, who had agreed to sell to the other, that the latter should pay his purchase money into court, refused, where such purchaser had been before and at the time of the purchase in possession of the whole, with the approbation of the other tenant in common. Freebody v. Perry, G. Cooper, 91; 14 R. R. 219.

Different Agreements in Bill and Answer.]—A motion by vendor that a purchaser who had taken possession should pay the purchase money into court, refused; the agreement admitted by the answer differing from that stated by the bill. Benson v. Glastonbury Navigation Co., C. P. Cooper 42; 1 Coop. t. Cott. 350.

The bill stated a parol agreement for sale, and possession given of five acres. The answer admitted an agreement to purchase three acres only. Motion, that the purchase money for the five acres, or for the three acres, might be brought into court, refused. Ib.

Rents.]—Where purchasers were entitled under the contract to possession and receipt of the rents from a certain day, and obtained possession previously thereto from the tenants, the court refused to order payment in of the purchase money, though the corpus of the estate was being dealt with, but directed the rents to be paid into court. Robertshaw v. Bray, 35 L. J., Ch. 844; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 224; 14 L. T. 101.

Account.] — Bill for specific performance against vendor, the vendee being in possession, and an account being necessary of the vendee's personal estate, referred to the master to fix a short day for the payment of the purchase money; otherwise the bill to be dismissed, as against those defendants, with costs. Lowther v. Andover, 1 Bro. C. C. 396.

Vendor permitting Purchaser.]—Vendor permitting purchaser to take possession before completion of title, without stipulation as to purchase money, cannot, on motion, have purchase money paid into court. Clarke v. Elliot, 1 Madd. 606.

Objection to Title.]—Parties interested in an estate which was sold for a large sum of money asked that the purchaser might pay a part of the purchase money into court without prejudice to objections to the title:—Held, that such an order would be contrary to the rule of the court; and the court refused to make the order even with the consent of the purchaser. Ouseley v. Anstruther, 11 Beav. 399; 18 L. J., Ch. 157.

Where a purchaser was allowed to enter into possession by consent before the time fixed for completion, and, when that time arrived, delayed payment of the purchase money, alleging that the title had not yet been sufficiently shown, the court ordered payment of the purchase money into court. Lilley v. Allen, 12 Jur (N.S.) 181; 14 L. T. 52.

Purchaser in possession not ordered to pay money into court where he objects to title. Gell v. Watson, 3 Madd. 225; 18 R. R. 219.

Purchaser having taken possession, but objecting to the title, required to pay in the purchase money, or deliver up possession. Clarke v. Wilson, 15 Ves. 317; 10 R. R. 82. S. P., Boothby v. Walker, 1 Madd. 197; Burroughs v. Oakley, 1 Mer. 52; 15 R. R. 85; Tindal v. Cobham, 2 Myl. & K. 385; 4 L. J., Ch. 98.

—— Dower.]—Purchaser in possession, and objecting to title on the ground of a claim to dower, ordered to pay the purchase money into court, on the objection being removed by the widow consenting to accept an equivalent from the vendor. Mole v. Smith, 1 J. & W. 665.

—— Purchase Money to be Secured on Mortgage of Estate.]—By an agreement for the sale of an estate, the purchaser was to pay part of his purchase money on the 24th December then next, when the conveyance was to be executed, and the residue was to be secured by a mortgage of the estate, payable at not less than twelve months from the date of the conveyance. The purchaser entered into possession immediately, but on some objections to the title refused to pay his purchase money:—Held, that the defendant must pay the purchase money into court. Younge v. Duncombe, Younge, 275.

Acts of Ownership.]—Purchaser having taken possession, and exercised ownership, although good title was to be made before purchase money paid, which was not done, must nevertheless pay purchase money into court. Wickham v. Evered, 4 Madd. 53.

A purchaser, who entered into possession, without prejudice to any question of title, took objections to the title, and, in consequence of the minority of a party necessary to the conveyance, the conveyance was postponed. The purchaser remained in possession, doing various acts of ownership:—Held, that under the circumstances, the defendant should pay the purchase money into court, with interest. Adams v. Heathcote, 10 Jur. 301.

Where a purchaser is let into possession of the estate under contract, his dealing with the property may be ground for ordering him to pay the purchase money into court, or for the appointment of a receiver, but will not authorise a decree against him, to compel him to accept the title on the ground of waiver of objections. Osborne v. Harvey, 1 Y. & C. C. C. 116; 12 L. J., Ch. 66; 7 Jur. 229.

Possession by a purchaser, according to the contract, not a ground for payment of the money into court, on objections to the title; acts of alteration or destruction against the nature of the contract, are. Dixon v. Astley, 19 Ves. 564; 1 Mer. 133; 13 R. R. 258.

Acts of ownership amounting to waste, by alteration and conversion of property, sufficient to induce the court to order payment of purchase money into court, upon the ground that a vendor has a lien on the estate for the amount, and might have filed his bill to restrain the purchaser in possession from committing such acts of ownership. Cutler v. Symons, 2 Mer. 103; 16 R. R. 151.

On bill by vendor for a specific performance, the court will not, before answer, make an order for payment of the purchase money, by the defendant in possession, unless under special circumstances, such as unreasonable delay, committing acts of ownership in alteration of the property, &c. Bonner v. Johnston, 1 Mer. 366; 15 R. R. 86, 134.

—— Improvements.]—Purchaser in possession having made alterations and improvements on estate, ordered to pay purchase-money into court. Bramley v. Teal, 3 Madd. 219.

—— Deterioration.]—A company having contracted with the ground landlord for the purchase of property, entered into possession and turned out the weekly tenants. The property was greatly damaged by strangers, who entered forcibly and pulled some of the houses to pieces:—Held, that the damage, to the deterioration of the property, having been occasioned by the act of the railway company, in entering upon the houses and turning the tenants out of possession, they must pay the purchase money into court without being allowed the option of giving up possession. Pope v. G. E. Ry., 36 L. J., Ch. 60; L. R. 3 Eq. 171; 15 W. R. 192.

—— Infant Heir.]—Defendant being in possession, and having exercised acts of ownership, payment of the money ordered, although an infant heir was a necessary party to the conveyance. Bradshaw v. Bradshaw, 2 Mer. 492.

Deduction of Income Tax.]—Upon the question whether when a purchaser pays his purchase-money into court he is entitled to deduct income tax:—Held, that he is not. Semble, there is no difference between the former and modern statutes. Flight v. Comac, 2 Eq. R. 1134; 2 W. R. 437. S. P., Dawson v. Dawson, 11 Jur. 984; Humble v. Humble, 12 Beav. 43; Holroyd v. Wyatt, 1 De G. & Sm. 125; 16 L. J., Ch. 174; 11 Jur. 261.

A purchaser liable to pay interest on his purchase-money may deduct income tax from such interest. It was the practice to deduct the tax from the interest on debts upon promissory notes, and the like, in the offices of the masters in chancery. Bebb v. Bunny, 1 K. & J. 216; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 203.

The tax is not deducted on payment of purchase-money into court, but the purchaser, it seems, may apply to have it deducted when the purchase money is paid out of court; the words "yearly interest" in s. 40 of 16 & 17 Vict. c. 34, mean not only interest accruing de anno in annum, but any interest at a fixed rate per cent. per annum, though accruing de die in diem. Ib.

Where a vendor in the occupation of property is charged with an occupation rent, a direction for the deduction of income tax ought not to be inserted in the decree. Sherwin v. Shakespear, 5 De G. M. & G. 517; 2 Eq. R. 957; 23 L. J., Ch. 898; 18 Jur. 843; 2 W. R. 668.

d. Application and Apportionment.

Sale by Mortgagee.]—Under a will A. was tenant for life, with remainder to B., his eldest son, in fee, of lands in which the legal estate was outstanding. In 1849 A. mortgaged his equitable life estate, and in 1852 B. mortgaged his remainder in fee to the same persons, with powers of sale. Default was made, and in 1864 the mortgagees in exercise of the power of sale conveyed a portion of the lands to C., by a deed, which recited (as the fact was) that the purchase-money had been apportioned between the life estate and the remainder according to the valuation, the propriety of which was not disputed:—Held, that the mortgagee's powers of sale were properly exercised. Cooper, In re, 46 L. J., Ch. 133; 4 Ch. D. 802; 35 L. T. 890; 25 W. R. 301.

—— Separate Receipts.]—Trustees advanced money on mortgage, a deed containing the usual power of sale and a declaration that the receipts of the mortgagees or their assigns should be sufficient discharges to purchasers, and that the power of sale might be exercised by any person who for the time being should be entitled to receive and give a discharge for the moneys for the time being owing upon the security of the mortgage. Subsequently the mortgagees assigned their shares separately to two sets of trustees, who, in exercise of the powers of sale, offered part of the property for sale. The purchaser of one of the lots accepted the title, but required that the purchase money should be apportioned between the two sets of trustees, and that each set of trustees should give a separate receipt, and that this should appear on the conveyance:—Held, that the joint receipt of the vendors was sufficient, and that no apportionment was necessary. Parker and Beech's Contract, In re, 56 L. J., Ch. 358; 56 L. T. 95; 35 W. R. 353—C. A.

Sale of Lease.]—On a bill for specific performance of an agreement, for the sale of a lease, the court cannot apportion the price according to the time already expired. King v. Wightman, 1 Anstr. 80.

When a vendor succeeds in a suit for specific performance, he is entitled to costs, notwithstanding the title was first shown in the master's office, if the suit was occasioned solely by the conduct of the defendant. Interest on arrears of rent and an apportionment, as between landlord and tenant, disallowed. Peers v. Sneyd, 17 Beav. 151.

Term to Pay Debts.]—Where a testator had created a term of 500 years for the payment of his debts and legacies, and, subject thereto, had devised the property in strict settlement; and the fee simple had been sold under a private act of parliament:—Semble, that the difference between the price realised by the sale of the fee, and that which would have been realised by the sale of the term, ought to be apportioned between the reversion and the term. Brook v. Mostyn, 4 N. R. 41.

Legatee of Term.]—If the legatee in remainder of a term of years which was converted into stock, the legatee in remainder not being a party to the conversion, sues for a portion of the purchase money in the lifetime of the tenant for life, whether the court will do more than secure the fund, or whether it will apportion it according to the value of the respective interests, quære. Phillips v. Sarjent, 7 Hare, 33.

Sale of Estate and Judgment.]—The plaintiff by one contract purchased an estate and a judgment for 1,000*l.*:—Held, that he was entitled to apportion the purchase money between the estate and the judgment, and to have separate conveyances of each. Clark v. May, 16 Beav. 273; 22 L. J., Ch. 302; 1 W. R. 69.

A purchaser of property included in one contract may divide the property purchased and apportion the purchase-money, and he may direct its conveyance to be made by the vendors in such a manner as he may deem most expedient, and by one or more deeds. Ib.

Trust Property Sold with Other.]—A trustee for sale may properly sell the trust property, together with other property, for an entire price, where a sale in that manner will be more beneficial for the cestui que trust, provided the purchase money be properly apportioned, and the conditions of sale affecting the other property, are not such as to injure the sale of the trust property. Cooper, In re (supra).

A purchaser under such circumstances ought to see that the purchase-money is properly apportioned before completion. Ib.

A messuage belonged to one who devised his real estate in trust for sale. An adjoining messuage was vested in the trustees of his settlement upon trust for sale and the purchase-money subject to the payment of definite sums, belonged to the testator's estate. Under a decree for administering the estate the two messuages were put up for sale together, and it was provided that the purchase money should be paid into court to the credit of the cause, "the proceeds of the sale of the testator's real estate":—Held, that an objection that the two properties were sold together for one lump sum, without any provision for apportioning it, and that it was to be paid into court in a suit unconnected with the settlement was not sustainable, for that the court, having the money in its custody, would see it properly applied. Cavendish v. Cavendish, L. R. 10 Ch. 319; 33 L. T. 219; 23 W. R. 313.

Trustees Vendors — Investment.]—Where a mortgage was made to secure stock, which was for the purpose sold by trustees who had power to give receipts for moneys and power to vary securities, the mortgage held, as between vendor and purchaser, not to be sufficiently discharged on payment of a sum of money to the trustees, the money not appearing to have been again invested in stock or upon security. Pell v. De Winton, 2 De G. & J. 13; 27 L. J., Ch. 230; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 225; 6 W. R. 179.

Semble, that an innocent vendor of lands, discovering before completion that the purchasers are trustees, is not concerned to see that the investment is authorised by the trust. Mansfield v. Childerhouse, 46 L. J., Ch. 30; 4 Ch. D. 82; 35 L. T. 590; 25 W. R. 68.

A. B. contracted to purchase a mortgaged estate, the mortgagee to be paid off out of the purchase money. The mortgagee held his debt as trustee for a third party, who, while the contract was pending, filed a bill to establish the trust, and gave notice to the purchaser. In the meantime the mortgagee filed a petition in lunacy to carry out the sale, and the purchaser paid the purchase money to the receiver, to be administered under the order in lunacy:—Held, in a suit by the cestui que trust, that the purchaser was bound to see to the application of the purchase money. Norris v. Stuart, 16 Beav. 359; 1 W. R. 94.

On Sale by Executor.]—On a purchase from an executor or other person having power to deal with real estate, if there is no reason to infer that the executor is not selling for payment of debts, the purchaser is discharged from seeing to the application of the purchase moneys. Secus, if the executor is selling for securing his own private debt, or otherwise for his own benefit. Haynes v. Forshaw, 22 L. J., Ch. 1060; 17 Jur. 930; 1 W. R. 346. And see cases, supra, col. 1105.

Debtor.]—Semble, the rule requiring purchasers of property to see to the application of the purchase money, does not apply to the case of debtors, so as to implicate them in trusts created by their creditors. Fernie v. Maguire, 6 Ir. Eq. R. 137.

Discharge of Incumbrances.]—It is not a rule of equity that upon the purchase of property, subject to incumbrances, for its full value, the vendor is bound to apply the purchase money in payment of the incumbrances according to their priorities. Such a duty can only be the result of express agreement, or of a contract to be implied from the circumstances of the case. Att.-Gen. v. Cox, 3 H. L. Cas. 240.

Where a purchaser is in possession of lands under an executed conveyance, and part of the purchase money has been secured by a bond, the purchaser may come into equity to have it employed in the discharge of an arrear of ground-rent due at the date of the conveyance, and is not confined to his remedy at law on the covenants in his conveyance. Woods v. Martin, 11 Ir. Ch. R. 148.

Purchaser not permitted to apply part of his purchase money in discharge of a mortgage on the estate, though some of the parties consented, others being infants. —— v. Stretton, 1 Ves. J. 266.

Purchaser buying up Incumbrances.]—If a purchaser compromises debts charged on purchased premises (the vendor being bound to relieve the incumbrances), he ought not to charge the vendor more than he actually pays. Cane v. Allen (Lord), 2 Dow, 296.

A purchaser is not at liberty to use information derived from the abstract for his own advantage, adversely to the vendor. Murrell v. Goodyear, 2 Giff. 51; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 91. Affirmed, 29 L. J., Ch. 425; 8 W. R. 398.

Where a purchaser having ascertained that the concurrence of the heir was required to complete the title, gave notice to rescind the contract and bought up the interest of the heir, the court allowed him to deduct from the price he had paid the heir. Ib. And see cases, supra, col. 1253.

Failure of Vendor's Title.]—When an interest, either legal or equitable, in any real property has been sold, and the conveyance has been executed by the parties to the same, the purchaser, in the absence of fraud on the vendor's part, cannot maintain an action for money received for his use to recover the price paid by him, if the vendor had no title to the property sold and his conveyance turns out to be worthless. In order to protect himself, a purchaser ought to take care that proper covenants are inserted in the deed of grant to him. Clare v. Lamb, 44 L. J., C. P. 177; L. R. 10 C. P. 334; 32 L. T. 196; 23 W. R. 389.

Upon Bond.]—S. bought an estate of A., who gave him a bond to suffer a recovery within three years, or to return him his money upon a reconveyance. A. tendered a recovery, but before it was suffered, a third person made a title to the land, whereupon S. brought his bill for the purchase money, but the court could not relieve him, for having consented to take the bond, he must resort to A.'s covenant against incumbrances. Maynard's case, 2 Free. C. C. 42.

Solicitor acting for Both Parties.]—A. purchased an estate from B., and on the completion one solicitor acted for both parties, and the purchase money was paid into his hands. Afterwards the purchaser was defeated by C., who had a paramount mortgage. On petition by the purchaser the court held that the money having come to the hands of the solicitor as agent of the vendor, and not of the petitioner, it could not interfere. Tylee v. Webb, 14 Beav. 14; 15 Jur. 1023.

Where Compensation cannot be Ascertained.]—Where a purchaser was not bound to take property agreed to be sold to him without compensation, and the compensation could not be ascertained:—Held, that he was entitled to the return of his purchase money with interest at four per cent., and to a lien on the estate for the amount. Westmacott v. Robins, 4 De G. F. & J. 390.

Death of Vendor.]—A. agrees with B., lord of the manor, to purchase a copyhold for two lives, such as A. shall name; A. pays 200*l.*, part of the purchase money, and was to pay the rest in three months. A court is held; three months pass. B. died suddenly, and the money came to one who was not bound by the contract. The executors of B. to refund the 200*l.* Awbrey v. Keen, 1 Vern. 472.

If an estate be conveyed away in the lifetime of the party to whom it belonged, and he dies within forty days from the execution of the conveyance, his heir may recover it from the purchaser. Under such circumstances, if the heir has received the purchase money, he cannot have the estate restored without refunding the price paid for it. But where the price has been paid to other persons, the purchaser cannot call upon the heir to repay it, but must recover it as he can from those to whom it has been given by the deceased. Marett v. Jennes, 1 Knapp, 103.

Injunction against Action at Law.]—Purchaser entering into possession knowing of objections to abstract, but continuing to negotiate, cannot break off contract, and injunction will lie against his proceeding at law to recover back purchase money. Secus, if he had declared off, on delivery of abstract. Warde v. Jeffery, 4 Price, 294; 18 R. R. 716.

No Title in Vendor.]—The defendant, having sold and conveyed land to the plaintiff, and it afterwards appearing that he was not entitled to part, though no eviction had happened, or was threatened, a bill lies to set aside the conveyance, and for a return of the purchase money and all expenses. Edwards v. M'Leay, G. Cooper, 308; 2 Swanst. 287; 14 R. R. 261.

A. purchases an estate from B., and pays part of the purchase money; it is afterwards discovered that B. has no title to it, or interest, except a share of the proceeds of sale:—Held, that a court of equity cannot give the purchaser any relief beyond directing an account of B.'s share of the proceeds. Williams v. Hignett, 6 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 125.

Over-Payment.]—A. purchases from B. a share in a concern, and gives for it a price which he understands to be four times the amount of the yearly profits, but which turns out to be more than that; the deed of assignment purports to be for an absolute sum:—Held, that a court of equity will not decree the sum, which A. alleges to be overpaid, to be refunded to him. Stewart v. Stuart, 1 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 61.

Fraud.]—A vendor and his solicitor fraudulently, and in the absence of the purchaser's solicitor, obtained from a purchaser the purchase money and covenants for the production of title deeds, while the title as to a part of the purchased premises was still under investigation:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to have the contract rescinded, and his purchase money, together with all costs, charges, and expenses (including auction duty), repaid to him. Berry v. Armitstead, 2 Keen, 221; 5 L. J., Ch. 370.

f. Investment and Appropriation.

Investment — At whose Risk.]—Purchase money invested under order of court, obtained by purchaser without notice to all parties, is at risk of purchaser; is at risk of estate, if order is made, of which all parties had notice. M'Cann v. Forbes, 1 Hog. 13.

—— Proposed by Vendor.]—Pending a dispute respecting the title, and to avoid the question as to the interest of the purchase money, the vendor gave the purchaser the opportunity of investing the purchase money in consols, in the joint names of the vendor and purchaser:—Held, that the vendor, having proposed the investment, could not have charged the purchaser with loss, and was entitled to the benefit accruing from the funds having risen. Burroughes v. Browne, 9 Hare, 609; 22 L. J., Ch. 148.

A purchaser cannot throw upon a vendor the risk of an investment of the purchase money. Ib.

—— Money in Court.]—Money paid in as earnest at a sale of an estate, and ordered to be laid out in the funds, is part payment of the purchase money, and the vendor must abide by the rise or fall of the funds. Poole v. Rudd, 3 Bro. C. C. 49.

—— Purchaser Trustee.]—If a purchaser agrees to pay, on a specified day, for an estate in 3 per cent. consols, but the purchase cannot be completed on that day, and he continues to hold the stock, he holds it as a trustee for the vendor, and, when the purchase is completed, must pay by a transfer of the stock at a value fixed, unless the vendor desired him to convert it into money. Puddicombe v. Bythesea, 1 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 186.

When purchase money is agreed to be paid, and a conveyance made at a given time, and disputes arise as to title, and the purchaser proposes to vendor to lay out the purchase money in exchequer bills till wanted, but vendor returns no answer, and money is so laid out, the purchaser is at the risk, and the vendor is entitled to the money, with 4 per cent. interest. Ackland v. Cuming, 2 Madd. 28; 17 R. R. 117.

—— Deposit.]—A deposit made on opening a bidding having been laid out in the public funds, this deposit is considered as part of the purchase money paid, and therefore the depositor is not entitled to the dividends accruing between the time of the deposit and the completion of the purchase; but only interest on the deposit at 4 per cent. D'Oyley v. Powis (Countess), 1 Cox, 206; 2 Bro. C. C. 33. S. P., Ambrose v. Ambrose, 1 Cox, 194.

Appropriation—Notice to Vendor.]—A contract having been made for sale of an estate, the agreement not being completed within the time specified, the purchaser shall be allowed interest for such time as the purchase money shall appear to have been kept dead for the especial purpose of completing the contract. Howland v. Norris, 1 Cox, 59.

To excuse a purchaser from paying interest during the delay in clearing difficulties as to the title, it is not sufficient that the money was appropriated and unproductive, but the vendor must have notice thereof. Powell v. Martyr, 8 Ves. 146; 7 R. R. 7.

Effect of a deposit by vendee, with notice to vendor to stop or determine the rate of interest, not as a tender and appropriation, transferring the risk as to the principal: therefore, upon an investment in stock by the vendee, the title not being ready, and the vendor having notice, but returning no answer, the advantage by a rise, as the loss by a fall, is the vendee's. Roberts v. Massey, 13 Ves. 561 ; 9 R. R. 227.

Where the Great Western Railway Co. have paid the purchase money of property under settlement into the Bank of England, the vendors (the trustees) cannot apply under the act, by petition, to charge them with interest during the time it has lain idle, on the ground that the company ought to have paid it to the trustees who were authorised by the settlement to receive it. White, Ex parte, G. W. Ry., In re, 9 L. J., Ex. Eq. 9.

By the conditions of sale it was stipulated that the purchaser should pay the remainder of the purchase money into court on or before a date fixed ; but, if he should fail in making such payment, &c., then, and from whatever cause the delay might have arisen, he should pay interest at 5 per cent. per annum from that day until the day of payment. The purchaser deposited the balance with his bankers at 2½ per cent. per annum, and gave notice thereof to the vendors. The title was not completed, but the purchaser, being satisfied with the title, paid the balance and interest at 5 per cent. into court, reserving the question of his right to compensation for loss of the difference between interest at 2½ and 5 per cent. occasioned by the delay of the vendors :—Held, that the purchaser must bear the loss arising from the unproductiveness of the purchase money, it being his own voluntary act to invest it. De Visme v. De Visme, 1 Mac. & G. 336 ; 1 Hall & Tw. 408 ; 19 L. J., Ch. 52 ; 13 Jur. 1037.

The rule that, where a vendor fails to complete at the time agreed upon, the purchaser, by providing himself with the money, and giving notice that it is lying idle, may free himself from payment of subsequent interest, is settled by well-established authorities, and could not have been intended to be rendered doubtful by the dicta in De Visme v. De Visme (supra). Dyson v. Hornby, 4 De G. & Sm. 481.

Vendor held accountable for the rents, but not entitled to any interest on the purchase money, the purchase not having been completed through the default of the vendor, and the purchase money having, after notice to the vendor, been lying idle. Regent's Canal Co. v. Ware, 23 Beav. 575. See Storry v. Walsh, 18 Beav. 559 ; 27 L. J., Ch. 338 ; 18 Jur. 503 ; 2 W. R. 300.

Where interest was to be paid, if delay arose from any cause in payment of the purchase money :—Held, that it was not payable where notice was given that the money was lying unproductive, and the delay arose from the state of the title. Denning v. Henderson, 1 De G. & Sm. 689 ; 17 L. J., Ch. 8 ; 12 Jur. 89. S. P., Golds and Norton, In re, 52 L. T. 321 ; 33 W. R. 333.

Where there is a condition that the purchaser should pay interest from the day fixed for completion in case of delay from any cause "except the wilful neglect or default of the vendor," the purchaser cannot relieve himself from the liability to pay interest by setting apart the unpaid purchase money and giving the vendor notice of such appropriation. Golds and Norton, In re (supra), not followed. Riley to Streatfield, In re, 56 L. J., Ch. 442 ; 34 Ch. D. 386 ; 56 L. T. 48 ; 35 W. R. 470.

A. agreed to advance B. 4,000*l.* on mortgage of freehold and copyhold premises ; and it was stipulated, that, within one week from the date of the agreement, B. should deliver to A. or his solicitor a complete abstract of the title to the premises, and produce the title deeds necessary to verify the same, and deduce and show a good marketable title within one month after the delivery of the abstract. An abstract was delivered, but from September, 1831, to May, 1832, B. could not show a good title, and A. informed B. that the purchase money during all that time was lying idle :—Held, that A. was not entitled to any interest on this purchase money. Sweetland v. Smith, 1 C. & M. 585 ; 3 Tyrw. 491 ; 2 L. J., Ex. 190.

A purchaser agreed that, "if from any cause whatever" the purchase should not be completed by a day named, interest should be payable. After the date for completing the purchaser, on receiving a note from the vendor that he should be charged with interest, paid the money into a banker's, and informed the vendor that it should lie there until the completion, having meanwhile raised some objections of little weight to the title, which were removed after a reasonable time :—Held, that under these circumstances the vendor was entitled to the stipulated interest. Stocks v. Holdsworth, 2 W. R. 450.

A purchaser contracted for the purchase of estate at the price of 38,500*l.*, which was to carry interest at 5 per cent. until payment, and he was let into possession. Afterwards, difficulties having arisen in completing, he paid 38,000*l.* into a bank to a separate account, and gave notice to the vendors that this sum was appropriated for the purposes of the purchase, and that he would refuse to pay interest under the contract :—Held, that the purchaser was not liable for interest subsequently to the time when he paid 38,000*l.* into the bank. Kershaw v. Kershaw, L. R. 9 Eq. 56 ; 21 L. T. 651 ; 18 W. R. 477.

Purchaser paying purchase money into his banker's, where it remained four years with notice to vendor :—Held, not liable for interest on difference between his average balance in banker's hands during a few days, when less than the purchase money was therein, and during the three preceding years. Winter v. Blades, 2 Sim. & S. 393 ; 4 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 81 ; 25 R. R. 236.

The decree in a suit for specific performance established, that a good title had been shown within a few days of the original contract. There had been, however, after that time, a second agreement between some parties qualifying the terms of the original contract, and which was made under the impression that a good title had not then been shown since the date of the original contract, which was more than thirteen years before the decree, but only fifteen months before the bill was filed :—Held, that interest on the purchase money only ran from the filing of the bill, and interest also was given to the purchaser in the terms of the second agreement, between the date of that agreement and the filing of the bill, upon the balance of his purchase money then lying unproductive. Minchin v. Nance, 4 Beav. 332.

See cases under preceding section.

a. In General.

From what Time Payable.]—A purchaser taking possession without a conveyance was compelled to pay interest, though the money was to be paid at a particular day, on the execution of the conveyance. Fludyer v. Cocker, 12 Ves. 25 ; 8 R. R. 275.

—— Title made Good.]—Purchaser is entitled to interest on his deposit, and to costs at law and in equity, until the vendor has made his title good; but vendor is entitled to subsequent costs. The rents belong to the vendor till his title is made good, and afterwards the purchaser must take to the rents and pay interest on his purchase money till the principal is discharged. Pincke v. Curteis, 4 Bro. C. C. 329. And see Ib., 333, n.

—— Delaying Payment.]—Interest against a purchaser for delaying payment. Child v. Abingdon (Lord), 1 Ves. J. 94.

Purchaser, after long possession and vexatious objections to complete:—Held, to have waived his right to an investigation of the title, and decreed to perform the agreement specifically, to pay interest at 4 per cent. on the unpaid purchase money from the time of taking possession and the costs of the suit. Hall v. Laver, 3 Y. & C. 191.

Non-delivery of Abstract.]—The purchaser of a reversion, under a decree, stipulated to pay the purchase money by a certain day. The vendors did not deliver an abstract of their title until after the day named for payment of the purchase money:—Held, that the vendors were entitled to interest from that day. Lewis v. Tucker, 5 Jur. 1105.

Taking Possession.]—A purchaser under a decree having accepted and retained possession, must pay interest on the purchase money from the time at which he might have safely taken possession, and is entitled to an allowance for prior, not for subsequent, deterioration of the estate. Binks v. Rokeby (Lord), 2 Swanst. 222; 19 R. R. 68.

A railway company having agreed to let its line to another, which had taken possession under the agreement, filed a specific performance bill against the other, which thereupon gave notice that it would pay the rent into court. The plaintiffs then gave the defendants notice, that, unless the rent were paid to the plaintiffs, interest would be claimed on it under the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, s. 28. The defendants obtained ex parte an order that they might be at liberty to pay the rent into court, and paid it in accordingly:—Held, that they thereby obstructed the recovery of interest at law, and that the court had jurisdiction to order payment of interest. Hull & Selby Ry. v. N. E. Ry., 5 De G. M. & G. 872; 24 L. J., Ch. 109; 3 W. R. 129.

Where the ordinary relation of vendor and purchaser existed between a railway company and the owner of lands taken by the company; the owner was entitled to interest on the purchase money, from the time the company took possession, up to the time of lodging the money in the bank. Blount v. Great Southern and Western Ry., 2 Ir. Ch. R. 40.

—— Evidence of Possession.]—The putting up of a notice board for the purpose of selling or letting building land by a purchaser:—Held, to render him liable to pay interest on the purchase money. Ballard v. Shutt, 49 L. J., Ch. 618; 15 Ch. D. 122; 43 L. T. 173; 29 W. R. 73.

—— Title depending on Award.]—Where the impropriator of an allotment sold before the award for 700*l.*, to be paid on the 25th March then next, on a good and valid title being made, and the award was not made for several years, and the purchaser continued in possession, the court ordered him to pay 4 per cent. interest on his purchase money from the 25th March next after the date of the agreement, although a good title could not be made until the award was executed. Att.-Gen. v. Christ Church (Dean), Oxford, 13 Sim. 214; 12 L. J., Ch. 28; 5 Jur. 1007.

—— Increase in Value of Estate.]—Though a purchaser has the benefit of the increased value of ornamental timber during the years between his agreement and the time from which he is considered as in possession of the land, he will not, in respect of that benefit, be charged with interest on any part of the purchase money. Boehm v. Wood, 1 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 234; 25 R. R. 280.

Vendor retaining Possession.]—Where vendor has improperly delayed performance of contract, and refused to give possession, he is not entitled to benefit of general rule as to interest on purchase money. Paton v. Rogers, 6 Madd. 257; 12 R. R. 183, n.

On a bill by a purchaser for specific performance, a vendor, who during fifteen years had retained possession and one-third of the purchase money, was charged with interest on one-third of the rents and profits. Burton v. Todd, 1 Swanst. 255.

—— Suit by Purchaser Dismissed.]—A bill by purchaser alleging conveyance of part only of estate, for conveyance of remainder. Part of purchase money was ordered to be paid into court to abide the event of the suit. The bill was dismissed:—Held, that the vendor was entitled to the residue of the purchase money, and the interest upon it, to the time of payment, although the purchase money in court had not been laid out. Humphries v. Horne, 3 Hare, 276.

The plaintiff, having purchased the defendant's interest in two leases, was allowed by the defendant to go into possession without paying the purchase money, and was afterwards dispossessed by force by the defendant:—Held, that, once possession was taken by the defendant, it should be treated as the ordinary possession of a vendor; that the plaintiff should be charged with interest on the purchase money during the time of his possession; and that, from the date when possession was resumed by the defendant, interest on the unpaid purchase money should not be charged against the plaintiff, nor should the rents, profits, or damages be charged against the defendant. Johnston v. Johnston, Ir. R. 3 Eq. 328.

When good Title first shown.]—A purchaser who has not been in possession is bound to pay interest on the purchase money, and take the rents and profits only from the time when a good title was first shown, and not from the time fixed by the agreement for the completion of the purchase. Jones v. Mudd, 4 Russ. 118; 6 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 26; 28 R. R. 22.

A sum not exceeding the interest of the purchase money, or the rents of the estate, paid to the purchaser when the money had been lodged three years, but the title was not yet completed. Piers v. Piers, Sau. & Sc. 414. Affirmed 1 Dr. & Wal. 265; 11 Ir. Eq. R. 358.

—— "Produce" good Title.]—Where in the contract the word "produce" a good title is used, the vendor is only entitled to interest from the day on which he has verified the title. Parr v. Lovegrove, 4 Drew. 170; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 600; 6 W. R. 709.

—— Concurrence of Party having Charge.]—A purchaser is liable to pay interest on his purchase money from the time when he could prudently take possession; but held, that he could not prudently take possession at the time a good title was shown, if he had no assurance that a person having a charge on the property would join in the conveyance. Wells v. Maxwell, 32 Beav. 550.

Completion of Conveyance.]—A purchaser will be charged with interest on his purchase money only from the time when, with reasonable diligence on his part, the conveyance might have been completed. Boehm v. Wood, supra.

From Date of Report.]—In a suit against an executor, the plaintiff, having taken a decree on consent for specific performance, and a reference to take an account of real and personal assets, was held entitled to interest only from the date of the report, the executor having admitted assets by his answer, and the accounts having been unnecessarily taken. Enraght v. Fitzgerald, 2 Dr. & War. 43; 1 Con. & L. 181; Ir. R. 8 Eq. 87.

From Confirmation of Report.]—Sale of an annuity before the master takes effect from the confirmation of the report, and interest was given from the first day on which the report could have been confirmed. Twigg v. Fifield, 13 Ves. 517.

From date fixed in Contract for Completion.]—Where, on a reference as to title, the plaintiff, the vendor, showed a good title in the opinion of the master from the time of producing before him certain evidence, known to the defendant; but it had formed no subject of dispute between him and the vendor:—Held, that interest ought to be allowed from the time fixed by the contract for completion. Monro v. Taylor, 3 Mac. & G. 713; 21 L. J., Ch. 525. Affirming 8 Hare, 51.

Where delay arose from a defect in a power of sale, in a settlement which was afterwards cured by a decree rectifying the settlement:—Held, that interest was payable from the day appointed for completion. Palmerston (Viscount) v. Turner, 33 Beav. 525; 4 N. R. 46; 33 L. J., Ch. 457; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 577; 10 L. T. 364; 12 W. R. 816.

—— Reasonable Inquiry.]—On a sale of real estate by a trustee under a will, open to suspicion, the title was approved; but before completion the heir-at-law gave notice that he intended to dispute the will, and brought an action against the tenant for rent; the purchaser thereupon refused to complete, and a bill for specific performance was filed, but before it came to a hearing the action brought by the heir was tried, and a verdict given against the heir; a reference as to title was then directed, and the master having reported in favour of the title, a decree was made for specific performance. The vendor then instituted a suit against the heir, which resulted in the will being established. The lord chancellor thereupon confirmed the decree for specific performance, and directed the purchaser to pay interest from the time when under the contract the sale ought to have been completed, and also to pay the costs of the suit subsequently to the hearing, when the reference as to title was directed. Grove v. Bastard, 1 De G. M. & G. 69. And see Grove v. Young, 5 De G. & Sm. 38; 21 L. J., Ch. 95; 15 Jur. 1099.

Sale at a Valuation.]—Under a contract to take together with a mill the machinery in it at a valuation, the purchaser was held not liable to pay interest on the amount of the estimate down to the time at which a good title to the mill was first shown. Carrodos v. Sharp, 20 Beav. 56.

Bill and Cross-bill.]—Specific performance prayed both by original and cross-bill, after considerable delay upon the title; the rents to be received, and interest paid, from the time stipulated. Fenton v. Browne, 14 Ves. 144; 9 R. R. 255.

Compensation.]—Specific performance of an agreement decreed, notwithstanding a variance from the description, with compensation for the deficiency in value; the premises consisting of leasehold farm, and three years having expired pending the suit, interest was given to the vendor, and a rent set upon it in respect of his possession. Dyer v. Hargrave, 10 Ves. 505; 8 R. R. 36.

Company—Sale by Official Manager.]—In the course of the winding-up of a company, it was ordered that the real estate of the company should be sold. The hereditaments had been, when purchased, conveyed to each of the shareholders, his heirs and assigns, in so many undivided one-hundredth parts as represented the number of his shares in the company. By one of the conditions it was provided that the vendor should deliver to the purchaser an abstract of the documents affecting the shares into which the company was divided, but that he should nevertheless accept a conveyance of the entire property from the official manager, under the powers contained in the winding-up acts, without requiring the concurrence of any of the shareholders, or of any other person:—Held, that the contract was completed when the conveyance of the equitable interest by the official manager was made; and that the purchaser must pay interest on the remainder of the purchase money from that time. Sheerness Waterworks Co. v. Polson, 3 De G. F. & J. 35; 29 Beav. 70; 30 L. J., Ch. 326; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 12; 4 L. T. 568; 9 W. R. 113.

Instalments.]—In a suit by purchasers to set aside a sale, it was ordered, as a condition of obtaining an injunction to stay proceedings at law, that the plaintiff should pay into court from time to time interest on the balance of purchase money, under which order five instalments were paid in and invested in stock, which, upon judgment being given for the plaintiff, were transferred to him with the accumulations and sold out by him. The payment of interest, however, had been suspended before the hearing in consideration of some indulgence to the defendant. The house of lords reversed the decree, and remitted the cause to the court below, and that court directed the repayment to the defendant, without interest, of the produce of the sale of the stock; also the instalments of interest which became due between the order for suspension and the original decree, but no interest thereon. But as to the interest on balance of purchase money between the decree and judgment of reversal, the court had no jurisdiction. Small v. Attwood, 3 Y. & C. 105.

Sale set Aside.]—Where sale by trustee to purchaser with notice of trust is set aside, neither purchaser nor trustee pays interest on the rents. Macartney v. Blackwood, 1 Ridgw. L. & S. 602.

Deterioration.]—The amount of deterioration of an estate pending a suit for specific performance having been ascertained by an issue, the purchaser was allowed it out of his purchase money, which he had paid into court under an order, with interest from the time when he paid in his money. Furguson v. Tadman, 1 Sim. 530; 27 R. R. 236.

At what Rate.]—Where no stipulation as to interest, and purchaser completes, he pays 5 per cent. interest, and takes rents and profits; but where rents and profits do not value at 5 per cent. he pays no interest, and vendor takes rents and profits. Esdaile v. Stephenson, 1 Sim. & S. 122; 24 R. R. 151.

Purchaser charged with 5*l.* per cent. interest on the purchase money unpaid. Burnell v. Brown, 1 J. & W. 168; 21 R. R. 136.

Compound Interest.]—Agreement for the payment of the purchase money of an estate, by half-yearly instalments, the four last of which are to be retained by the purchaser as an indemnity until a good title shall be made, does not entitle the vendor to compound interest on such instalments, it appearing that he was not prepared to make a good title. Stratton v. Symon, 2 Moore, 125.

Where payments have been made by vendee at different times on account of purchase, all exceeding the interest due at the time of such payments, and the decree in suit by vendor for specific performance directs accounts to be taken of what is due to the plaintiff for principal and interest in respect of purchase, rests are always made therein. Griffith v. Eaton, 1 Sim. & S. 271; 1 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 197. S. P., Rowe v. Dodson, 1 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 183.

On Deposit.]—On motion by vendor against purchaser in possession for reference to set occupation rent, title not being completed, order was accordingly made, and that interest at 5 per cent. on deposit should, under circumstances, be deducted from rent. Smith v. Jackson, 1 Madd. 618; 16 R. R. 279.

Sale of Reversion.]—Upon the sale of a reversion, interest is payable from the time appointed for completion. Bailey v. Collett, 18 Beav. 179; 23 L. J., Ch. 230; 2 W. R. 216. S. P., Williams v. Glenton, 34 Beav. 528. Affirmed, 35 L. J., Ch. 284; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 175; 13 L. T. 727; 14 W. R. 294.

A purchaser of a reversion must pay interest on his purchase money from the time of his purchase. Trefusis v. Clinton (Lord), 2 Sim. 359.

The purchaser of a reversion, expectant on a lease for lives, must pay interest on the purchase money from the day on which the master reports that a good title could have been made to the time of payment. Enraght v. Fitzgerald, supra, col. 1297.

—— At what Rate.]—The purchaser of a reversionary interest under the decree of the court is bound to pay interest at the rate of 3*l.* 10*s.* per cent. on the three-fourths of his purchase money from the date of the report of good title, he not having been guilty of any laches up to that period, to the date of the lodgment. Hutchinson v. Catheart, Jon. & C. 260; 1 Ir. Eq. R. 452.

The rule is the same if the property be in its nature reversionary, though there be a small present profit arising from it. Ib.

—— Lives Dropping.]—The advantage a purchaser receives from the extinction of lives has never been considered in equity as a reason for his paying interest on his purchase money. Where lives drop in after a man is reported the best bidder, the court will direct the purchaser to make some compensation in respect to the estates being bettered. Blount v. Blount, 3 Atk. 636.

Where purchaser has an advantage by dropping in of lives, the court will direct an inquiry what interest he should pay on that account. Davy v. Barber, 2 Atk. 489. Sed quære. And see White v. Nutt, 1 P. Wms. 61.

A purchaser of a future interest, after a term, shall not pay interest or an increased price for a part of the term elapsing before the purchase is completed unless the delay be his fault. Growsock v. Smith, 3 Anstr. 877.

A reversion expectant on an estate for life is decreed to be sold; B. is confirmed the best purchaser, and the order made absolute 1724; in 1726, B. is ordered to bring his money into the bank; the life drops; if the life had dropped the next day after the report made absolute the purchase must have stood, and as for that time the life was wearing, so from that time the purchaser ought to pay interest. Manning, Ex parte, 2 P. Wms. 410.

b. Under Express Stipulation.

Delay by Vendor.]—Where conditions of sale provide that interest shall be paid from a certain day, if purchase not then completed, purchaser cannot relieve himself therefrom, though vendor caused delay. Esdaile v. Stephenson, 1 Sim. & S. 122; 24 R. R. 151. But see Monck v. Huskisson, 4 Russ. 121, n.

Otherwise in case of no stipulation. Ib. S. P., Portman v. Mill, 8 L. J., Ch. 161.

Higher rate of Interest.]—Where a purchaser enters into a contract to pay interest on his purchase money, and in certain events a higher rate of interest, and those events occur, it is not open to him to complain of the contract into which he has so entered. Herbert (Lady) v. Salisbury & Yeovil Ry., 14 L. T. 507.

A purchaser covenants with his vendor to pay interest at 5 per cent. upon the unpaid portion of his purchase money; but the vendor covenanted that, if interest at the rate of 4 per cent. was regularly paid, he would accept that in lieu of the larger rate. The purchaser did not pay the 4*l.* per cent., but alleged an agreement between him and the vendor for the payment of 2*l.* per cent. only. The vendor being dead, and the purchaser not having paid even the 2*l.* per cent., an action was brought on the covenant against the purchaser :—Held, that the agreement as to the 2*l.* per cent. not having been satisfactorily proved, there was in that respect no equity for an injunction ; but as the non-payment of the 2*l.* per cent. had been, to a certain extent, condoned, execution in the action would be restrained upon terms. Houghton v. Crawford, 23 L. T. 340.

Deposit.]—By conditions of sale the purchase money was to carry interest ; a deposit of 20*l.* per cent. was to be paid, and the auction duty was to be borne equally by the purchaser and the vendor : the purchaser paid only the amount of the deposit, and out of it the auctioneer paid the whole of the auction duty :—Held, that the portion of the deposit applied in discharge of the purchaser's moiety of the auction duty was to be considered as an unpaid part of the purchase money, and that the vendor was entitled to interest on it. Townshend v. Townshend, 2 Russ. 363.

Condition as to Non-completion.]—Where a purchaser agrees, that if, "from any cause whatever," the purchase shall not be completed on the day fixed, he will pay interest,—he must pay such interest, unless the delay has been occasioned by any misconduct on the part of the vendor. Williams v. Glenton, 34 Beav. 528 ; 35 L. J., Ch. 284 ; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 175 ; 13 L. T. 727 ; 14 W. R. 294.

The mere existence of difficulties in making out the title is not sufficient. Ib. And see Storry v. Walsh, 18 Beav. 559 ; 27 L. J., Ch. 338 ; 18 Jur. 593 ; 2 W. R. 300. S. P., Vickers v. Hand, 26 Beav. 630.

—— Sale of Advowson.]—On the sale of an advowson, the purchase money was to be paid on a fixed day, and the conveyances to be executed ; but, in default of payment, the purchaser was to pay interest. The purchase was not completed, through the default of the vendor :—Held, that no interest was payable Weddall v. Nixon, 17 Beav. 160 ; 22 L. J., Ch. 939 ; 17 Jur. 642 ; 1 W. R. 250.

—— Defective Title.]—Where conditions of sale provide that interest shall be paid by the purchaser from a fixed time, if the completion should be delayed by any cause whatever, delay merely occasioned by the state of the title, and not wilful on the part of the vendor, falls within the provision. Sherwin v. Shakspear, 5 De G. M. & G. 517 ; 2 Eq. R. 957 ; 23 L. J., Ch. 898 ; 18 Jur. 843 ; 2 W. R. 668.

Where, in addition to such a provision, there were stipulations that the vendor might rescind on the title being objected to, and that if a good title should not be made to a definite proportion of the property, compensation should be allowed :—Held, that the non-delivery of a complete abstract, at a time fixed by the conditions, would not of itself exempt the purchaser from payment of interest. Ib.

Where the execution of an agreement fixing a time for completion, and requiring payment of interest in case of delay, was intercepted by negotiations, ending in an alteration of the agreement, but not of the time of completion :—Held, that in fixing the period for the payment of interest this circumstance ought to be regarded. Ib.

In conditions of sale, it was stipulated, "that if, from any cause whatever, the purchase should not be completed" on a day named, the purchaser should pay interest from that day to the completion. There was delay due only to defect in title :—Held, that the purchaser was bound to pay interest, and was entitled to the corresponding rents. Palmerston (Viscount) v. Turner, 32 Beav. 524 ; 4 N. R. 46 ; 33 L. J., Ch. 457 ; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 577 ; 10 L. T. 364 ; 12 W. R. 816.

The principle of Sherwin v. Shakspear (supra) applies as well to an actual defect of title as to imperfections in the abstracts delivered. Ib.

—— Money lying Idle.]—A condition that if from any cause whatever the purchase money shall not be paid by a particular day, the purchaser making default shall pay interest from that day, does not render the purchaser liable to pay interest where he has given notice that his money is lying unproductive, and the delay arises from the state of the title. Denning v. Henderson, 1 De G. & Sm. 689 ; 17 L. J., Ch. 8 ; 12 Jur. 89. And see cases, supra, col. 1292.

—— Non-delivery of Abstract.]—In conditions of sale, a time was fixed for the delivery of the abstract, and also for the payment of the purchase money, or for interest to run if the money was not paid at that time, "from whatever cause the delay might have arisen." The vendor did not deliver the abstract at the time stipulated :—Held, that the purchaser was only liable to pay interest from the time a good title was shown. De Visme v. De Visme, 1 Mac. & G. 336 ; 1 Hall & Tw. 408 ; 19 L. J., Ch. 52 ; 13 Jur. 1037. S. P., Robertson v. Skelton, 12 Beav. 363 ; 19 L. J., Ch. 140 ; Monck v. Huskisson, 4 Russ. 121, n. ; 5 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 163.

The case of De Visme v. De Visme (supra) must be acted on with some caution ; and it is not in every case of delay in the delivering of a sufficient abstract that a vendor is to lose the interest which he has stipulated for. Rowley v. Adams, 12 Beav. 476.

Upon a sale under the court, there was a condition that the purchaser should confirm the report, and before the 10th November pay his purchase money and interest from the 29th September, and "under no circumstances" was he to be excused paying interest from that time. The purchaser was unable to serve the order of confirmation until the 29th November. The abstract was delivered on the 6th December, and the requisition finally answered on the 17th January :—Held, that there was no such delay on the part of the vendor as to release the purchaser from payment of interest. Ib.

Under a similar condition delay of six months from default of vendor in not furnishing proper abstracts :—Held, the purchaser must pay interest. Coupe v. Bakewell, 13 Beav. 421.

On a sale under the court in June, 1839, condition that the abstract should be delivered in twenty-one days ; that the purchaser should be entitled to the rents from October, and pay his purchase money in November ; and if, "from any cause whatever," it should not be paid, he should pay interest at 5 per cent. The vendors were unable to deliver the abstract within the time, and the title was not made out till 1845 :—Held, that the purchaser would not be relieved from payment of interest, but the order to pay was made without prejudice to any application for compensation. Greenwood v. Churchill, 8 Beav. 413 ; 14 L. J., Ch. 143 ; 9 Jur. 196.

—— Neither Party at Fault.]—Where the condition is that interest on the purchase money is to be paid from a certain day, "if from any cause whatever" the purchase money be not then paid, the vendor will be entitled to interest where the delay in perfecting the title has arisen from circumstances under which no blame could attach to him, though the purchaser also was not to blame. Durham (Dean and Chapter), Ex parte, Tewart v. Lawson, 2 Jur. (N.S.) 345; 4 W. R. 419. S. P., Stewart v. Lawson, 3 Sm. & G. 307.

—— Completion prevented by the Court.]—Condition on sale by trustees that on payment of purchase money on date fixed purchaser should be entitled to the rents up to which time all outgoings, including interest to the mortgagees, were to be borne by the vendors; if, from any circumstances, the money should not be paid, the purchaser should pay interest at 5 per cent. until payment. The purchaser was ready with his money on the day appointed, and also to pay off the mortgagees, to whom he had given notices; but the contract could not be carried into effect, in consequence of an order of the court made subsequently to the contract, subjecting all contracts by the trustees to the approbation of the court:—Held, that the purchaser was bound to pay interest on his purchase money at 5 per cent. from the date fixed; and also to the mortgagees, at 5 per cent., the rate payable on their mortgages. Matson v. Swift, 5 Jur. 645.

—— Irrelevant Objections.]—By a contract for purchase, interest was to be paid on the purchase money from the 26th December, 1852, if the purchase was not then completed. The purchaser made objections which the court considered not relevant to the title, and decreed specific performance, with costs, and interest from the 26th December, 1852. Litchfield v. Brown, 23 L. J., Ch. 176.

—— Reversion.]—On a sale by the court of a reversion in fee, subject to a term of ninety-nine years, determinable on the death of the survivor of two lives at a small chief rent, it was provided by one of the conditions that the vendors should procure and confirm the master's report, and obtain an order for the purchaser to pay his purchase money into court on a date fixed, when the purchaser was to pay his purchase money, and be entitled to the receipt of the rents; "but if from any cause whatever the purchase money should not be so paid in" on that day, the purchaser should pay interest at the rate of 5 per cent. to the time of payment. The vendors did not make out agreed title for three years:—Held, that the condition did not apply, but that, as the purchaser had had the benefit of the wearing out of the lives, he must pay interest at the rate of 4*l.* per cent. Wallis v. Sarel, 5 De G. & Sm. 429; 21 L. J., Ch. 717. And see cases, supra, col. 1300.

—— Death of Vendor.]—A contract stipulated that the purchase was to be completed on the 11th October, and the purchaser was to be entitled to the rents from that day; and if, from any cause whatsoever, the purchase should not then be completed, the purchaser was to pay interest at the rate of 5*l.* per cent. per annum until completion. The vendor died before the date for completion, leaving an infant devisee. The purchaser paid the purchase money into court:—Held, that interest must be paid by the purchaser from the time fixed for completing; held, also, that payment into court was not a payment to the purchaser. Bannerman v. Clarke, 3 Drew. 632; 26 L. J., Ch. 77; 5 W. R. 37.

—— "Wilful Default."]—Conditions of sale provided that the purchase was to be completed by the 8th of September, and that "if from any cause whatever other than wilful default on the part of the vendor" completion of the purchase was delayed beyond that day, the purchase money was to bear interest to the day of actual payment:—Held, that by his going abroad, two days before the time known by him to have been fixed for completion, there had been so far "wilful default on the part of the vendor," that the purchasers were entitled to recover out of the interest paid by them a sum proportionate to the day. Young and Harston, In re, 31 Ch. D. 168; 53 L. T. 837; 34 W. R. 84; 50 J. P. 245—C. A.

Delay in completing a purchase arising from the vendor insisting that a certain mode of releasing incumbrances is effectual, is delay arising from the "wilful default" of the vendor, and exonerates the purchaser from the payment of interest on his purchase money under the usual condition. Strafford (Lord) to Maples, 65 L. J., Ch. 124; [1896] 1 Ch. 235; 73 L. T. 440.

Condition that if from any cause whatever other than the wilful default of the vendors, the purchase should not be completed by a certain date, interest should be paid upon the purchase money. The particulars and conditions of sale stated that the whole of the property had been acquired under a certain act of parliament, and was being sold under the powers of such act, but the sale plan showed that portions of the property had been acquired under a later act. The misdescription arose through the inadvertence of the vendors to examine the title before the particulars and conditions of sale were framed. The title to the whole was not made out or accepted by the purchaser until after the date fixed for completion. The real cause of the delay was the difficulty of the purchaser in obtaining the purchase money:—Held, by Lindley and Lopes, L.JJ. (Kay, L.J., dissenting), that the omission to verify the statement as to the title did not amount to wilful default on the part of the vendors within the condition, and that they were entitled to interest on the purchase money until completion. London Corporation and Tubbs, In re, 63 L. J., Ch. 580; [1894] 2 Ch. 524; 7 R. 265; 70 L. T. 719—C. A.

—— Copyholds — Neglect by Vendors to obtain Admittance.]—Deliberate neglect by a vendor of copyholds to which he has not been admitted to perfect his title by admission until after the date fixed for the completion of purchase amounts to wilful default. Wilson & Stevens' Contract, In re, 63 L. J., Ch. 863; [1894] 3 Ch. 546; 8 R. 641; 71 L. T. 388; 43 W. R. 23.

—— Willingness to Complete.]—A purchaser agreed that, if the completion of the purchase "shall be delayed on his part" beyond the 27th June, he would pay interest. The vendor and his trustee were willing to complete on that day, but the purchaser was not prepared; and on the 28th November, when the purchaser was ready, the vendor's trustee would not join:—Held, that the purchaser was liable to interest only from the 27th June to the 28th November. Perry v. Smith, Car. & M. 554.

—— Sale by Court—Deduction of Rents and Profits.]—The conditions of sale by the court provided that each purchaser should pay the balance of his purchase money into court to the credit of the action, on or before 21st July, 1885, or in default, should be charged interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum until payment of the purchase money; and that upon such payment the purchaser should be entitled to possession, or to the rents and profits, as from 21st July, 1885. A purchaser not complying with this condition, an order was made that on or before a date fixed, the purchaser should lodge in court the balance of his purchase money, with interest thereon, from the 21st July, 1885. The purchaser asked that, after the direction for the payment of the money, there should be inserted the words, "Less the rents and profits of the said premises from the 21st July, 1885": —Held, that the purchaser's application must be refused. Smith, In re, Day v. Bonaini, 55 L. T. 329—C. A.

Sale of a Brewery and Utensils—Interest on Part of Purchase Money.]—Part of a letter was to the effect that if a brewhouse and utensils should not fetch 900*l.*, and if the brewhouse should not be sold within six months, S. agreed to pay interest at 4*l.* per cent on the 550*l.*, being the value of that property without the utensils. On a bill for specific performance, the court declared that, according to the true construction of the letter, the defendant was the purchaser of the brewhouse and utensils at the price of 900*l.*; that she, upon 550*l.*, part thereof, must pay interest at 4*l.* per cent.; and that she must account for and pay 350*l.* for the utensils, without interest, to the date of the decree; and ordered a general account to be taken. Deller v. Simonds, 5 Jur. (N.S.) 997.

Instalments—Part left on Mortgage.]—An estate was contracted to be sold at a sum to be paid by six instalments, with additions in the form of interest, at 5 per cent., until the day of payment thereof. By a subsequent contract it was agreed, that the last instalment, instead of being paid at the appointed day, should remain on mortgage, at 4½ per cent. for fourteen years, but that the stipulations of the first contract as to the previous instalment should continue in force. The reduction from 5 to 4½ per cent. is dependent upon the fulfilment of the terms of the first contract with respect to the previous instalments; and these being suffered to remain unpaid long after the appointed periods, and no mortgage having been executed, the vendor is entitled to recover 5 per cent. upon the last instalment, as well as upon the others. Attwood v. Taylor, 1 Man. & G. 279; 1 Scott (N.R.) 611.

—— Terms of Contract varied.]—It is a general rule of equity, that if a purchaser is in possession of an estate, receiving the rents, he is liable to pay the purchase money, and that the purchase money, being retained by him, will carry interest, to be paid by him to the seller. An agreement, which appears to prevent the application of this rule, will be examined in a court of equity by its aid, and will or will not be enforced, according to circumstances. Birch v. Joy, 3 H. L. Cas. 565.

B. agreed to purchase from C. an incumbered estate, C. to make a title free from all incumbrances except one mortgage. B., on being put into possession of part, was to pay an instalment of the purchase money, and further instalments on being put into possession of the whole, free from incumbrances. The first instalment was not paid, nor any after incumbrances cleared off by C., and a fresh agreement was entered into by which B. was forthwith to advance 10,000*l.* to pay off certain incumbrances, and he was to be let into immediate possession, and to be entitled to the rents and profits. It was further agreed that "the interest of the remainder of the purchase money shall not commence till lady-day next, in case the title shall be perfected." B. was let into possession, but the business was not completed:—Held, first, that under the clause in the second agreement, exempting "the remainder of the purchase money" from the payment of interest, the sum remaining unpaid of the instalments came under that description; secondly, that the exemption of a purchaser in possession of the estate from liability to interest on the purchase money, though permissible if the agreement had been speedily executed, would not be enforced by any court of equity where that state of things continued for many years; and, thirdly, that the second contract must be taken to have failed by circumstances, and that the first contract must be decreed to be executed so far as it had remained unexecuted. Ib.

Parties to Sue—Joint Interest in Lands.]—A., B., and C., being interested in lands, but having no common legal interest in any portion of them, agreed together to put them up for sale, according to their interests. Each lot was described in a separate paper containing the conditions of sale, which stipulated that the vendors should deliver an abstract of title; that the conveyances should be executed, and the purchase money paid on a certain day, from which time the purchaser should have possession; and that if the purchaser should be let in before payment of the purchase money, he should be considered tenant at will to the vendors, and pay interest at the rate of 4 per cent. on the amount of purchase money, as and for rent. The defendant bought some of the lots. No abstract of title was delivered; but he was let into possession and held for several years, not paying the purchase money. He knew of the arrangement entered into between A., B., and C:—Held, that A., B., and C. could not jointly sue upon an implied contract by the defendant, to waive the delivery of an abstract, and perform the condition for payment of 4 per cent. interest as rent. Seaton v. Booth, 4 A. & E. 529; 1 H. & W. 742; 5 L. J., K. B. 97.

Covenant for Delivery of Abstract.]—By articles of agreement, the defendant agreed to purchase land of the plaintiff, and the plaintiff agreed that he would within one month from the date thereof, or from being required so to do, deliver to the defendant an abstract of title; and the defendant agreed that he would pay a portion of the purchase money on signing the agreement, and the residue on or before a given day (four years from the date of the agreement), with interest thereon, payable half-yearly, between the date of the agreement and the day fixed for the payment of the residue:—Held, that the delivery of the abstract was not a condition precedent to the plaintiff's right to enforce payment of the half-yearly interest. Dicker v. Jackson, 6 C. B. 103; 17 L. J., C. P. 234; 12 Jur. 541.

Meaning of "Completion."]—Agreement that purchase money of property taken by a company should remain in their hands until completion of the purchase, and should then, with interest at 5 per cent. per annum, be handed over to vendor:—Held, under the circumstances, that the words "completion of the purchase" meant completion on the part of a purchaser by payment of the purchase money to the vendor. Lewis v. South Wales Ry., 10 Hare, 113; 22 L. J., Ch. 209; 16 Jur. 1149; 1 W. R. 45.

Set-off—Purchase by Mortgagee.]—An estate was mortgaged at 5*l.* per cent. The mortgagor died, and the devisees of the equity of redemption sold the mortgaged premises, together with other lands of the mortgagors, to the mortgagee. By the conditions of sale 4*l.* per cent. was payable on the balance of the purchase money. The mortgagee entered into possession, and remained in possession until her death, when her devisees entered into possession. Upon a claim by the devisees of the mortgagor for specific performance of the contract, eleven years after the sale, no demand having been made during that period either for the payment of the residue of the purchase money into court, or for interest on the mortgage:—Held, under the circumstances, that a set-off pro tanto was to be inferred at the date when possession was taken by the mortgagee, and that, from that period, interest at 4*l.* per cent. only was payable upon the balance of the purchase money. Wallace v. Bastard, 4 De G. M. & G. 251; 17 Jur. 1107.

i. In General.

Inquiry as to—Payment Recited in Conveyance.]—In a suit by a vendor, to establish a lien upon the estate for the amount of the unpaid purchase money, the court decreed that the plaintiff, notwithstanding the recital in the deed of conveyance of the payment of the consideration money, and the receipt indorsed on it, was entitled to an inquiry whether the full amount of the consideration money was paid; and to a lien as unpaid vendor, on the lands, for so much of the consideration money as should, upon the inquiry, appear to be unpaid, with interest from the date of the conveyance. Croly v. Callaghan, 5 Ir. Eq. R. 25.

Held, that the onus of proving the payment of the consideration money lay upon the defendant (the assignee of the vendee); and that neither the recital nor the receipt was any evidence of the fact. Ib.

Absence of Receipt Clause or Receipt Endorsed.]—Where a purchase deed does not contain a receipt clause for the purchase money in the body or deed, or a receipt endorsed, the purchaser must pay the expense of proving that there is no vendor's lien for unpaid purchase money should he insist upon such proof. Scott v. Alvarez, Scott and Alvarez's Contract, In re, 64 L. J., Ch. 376; [1895] 1 Ch. 596; 12 R. 474; 72 L. T. 455—C. A.

Mortgagee.]—An unpaid vendor is entitled to proceed as a mortgagee. Hope v. Booth, 1 B. & Ad. 498; 9 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 21.

Bankruptcy of Purchaser.]—Upon the bankruptcy of the purchaser of timber felled, quære, whether the vendor has a lien, and can prove for the deficiency. Gwynne, Ex parte, 12 Ves. 379.

A. sells lands to B., who afterwards becomes bankrupt, part of the purchase money not being paid. A. shall not be bound to come in as a creditor under the statute; but the lands shall stand charged with the money unpaid, though no agreement for that purpose. Chapman v. Tanner, 1 Vern. 268.

A trustee for the sale of a brewhouse and plant, contracts to sell them, and lets the purchaser into possession:—Held, that the purchaser was in possession within the statute 21 Jac. 1, c. 19, and therefore the plant, upon his becoming bankrupt, passed to his assignees without being subject to the lien for the purchase money. Dale, Ex parte, Buck, 365.

Testator had, according to his usual course of dealing with the bankrupts, sold them land, allowing the purchase money to remain as a charge, and made them advances for the purpose of building, such advances, as well as the purchase money, being stated in a written memorandum to be a charge upon the land. The executors of the testator, being authorised by the will to continue the same course of dealing, did so:—Held, these latter advances, as well as those made by the testator, and the purchase money in each case, were a charge upon the lands. Linden, Ex parte, Baker, In re, 1 Mont. D. & D. 428; 10 L. J., Bk. 22; 5 Jur. 57.

Payment to Vendors' Agent.]—The agent of vendors who had authority to receive the purchase money had in his hands a sum belonging to the purchaser, and was directed by him to apply it in payment. The agent accordingly debited the purchaser's account, and credited the vendors' account with the amount, and he rendered to the vendors an account charging himself with that sum as received from the purchaser:—Held, that this was not a valid payment to the vendors, and that they had still a lien on the estate. Wrout v. Dawes, 25 Beav. 369; 27 L. J., Ch. 635; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 396.

Trustee retaining Purchase Money.]—If a vendor who knows that the purchase money is trust money suffers one of the trustees to retain part of it, without the knowledge of the co-trustees, or the cestui que trust, he has no lien on the estate for the part so retained. White v. Wakefield, 7 Sim. 491; 4 L. J., Ch. 195.

A trustee sold property for 300*l.* Before completion the house was burnt down and the trustee received 100*l.* insurance money. On conveyance the purchaser paid 200*l.* to a mortgagee of the property, knowing the mortgage to be fraudulent. The trustee absconded:—Held, that the cestuis que trustent had a lien on the property for the whole amount of the purchase money. Poole v. Adams, 4 N. R. 9; 33 L. J., Ch. 639; 10 L. T. 287; 12 W. R. 683.

Secret Trust.]—A son conveys an estate to his father nominally as purchaser, but really as a trustee; the father died, having, by a will, subsequent to the conveyance, made a general devise of all his real estate. The son has a lien on the estate as vendor for the apparent consideration, no part of which was paid. Leman v. Whitley, 4 Russ. 423; 6 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 152.

Rights against Heir of Intestate.]—The heir of an intestate, who had contracted to purchase land, was held entitled to the lands freed from the vendor's lien as against the estate of the intestate. Harding v. Harding, 41 L. J., Ch. 523; L. R. 13 Eq. 493; 26 L. T. 656.

On Title Deeds.]—An unpaid vendor of a real estate conveyed to a purchaser has not at law any lien on the title deeds for his purchase money. Goode v. Burton, 1 Ex. 189; 16 L. J., Ex. 309; 11 Jur. 851.

Interest in Land.]—A lease is a sale pro tanto, and a premium reserved on a lease is in the nature of purchase money, for which, if unpaid, there is a lien on the land; and, consequently, unpaid premium is an interest in land within 9 Geo. 2, c. 36, s. 3. Shepheard v. Bretham, 46 L. J., Ch. 763; 6 Ch. D. 597; 36 L. T. 909; 25 W. R. 764.

Assignment of Leaseholds.]—In consideration of parental love and affection, a father assigned certain leasehold premises to his son, subject to a peppercorn rent, and to the lessee's covenants: —Held, that the son was a purchaser for value under the deed, and not a volunteer, and that the vendor's lien would not hold as against him. Harris v. Pubb, 58 L. J., Ch. 434; 42 Ch. D. 79; 60 L. T. 699; 38 W. R. 75.

Mistake.]—Particulars stated that the property was an absolute reversion in a freehold estate, and at the auction conditions were read stating that the property was subject to two mortgages. On a bill by the purchaser, who stated that he was deaf and had read the particulars, but did not understand that he was buying only an equity of redemption:—Held, that, he was entitled to a rescission of the contract, and to a return of the deposit with interest and a declaration of lien. Torrance v. Bolton, 42 L. J., Ch. 177; L. R. 8 Ch. 118; 27 L. T. 738; 21 W. R. 134.

Payment by Instalments.]—Under a contract for the purchase of an estate, where the money is to be paid in portions, every payment is a part performance of the contract by the vendee, and in equity transfers to him a corresponding portion of the estate. Rose v. Watson, 10 H. L. Cas. 672; 3 N. R. 673; 33 L. J., Ch. 385; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 297; 10 L. T. 106; 12 W. R. 585.

Where Specific Performance Impossible.]—Extent of lien on a fund, where the grantor of an annuity agreed to sell to the grantee the fund on which the annuity was secured, and to repurchase the annuity, but, in consequence of a mutual mistake, the contract for the sale of the fund could not be specifically performed. Colyer v. Clay, 7 Beav. 188.

Equitable Lien of Creditors.]—Where part of the price of an estate is set apart in the hands of trustees, as a security to the purchaser against the claims of judgment creditors of the vendor, who have a general equitable lien on the estate sold, the judgment creditors must be parties to a bill which seeks to have this money disposed of. Anon., 1 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 16.

Assignment of Lien.]—The benefit of the vendor's lien for purchase money unpaid may be assigned by parol to a third party, semble. Dryden v. Frost, 3 Myl. & Cr. 670; 8 L. J., Ch. 235; 2 Jur. 1030.

J. S. being indebted, sold his lands, and took the purchaser's bond, which he assigned to one of his creditors. This assignment is good in equity. Munn v. East India Co., Finch, 299.

ii. Discharge of.

Sale for Annuity.]—Whether a vendor who takes an annuity as the consideration has or has not a lien on the estate for his annuity must depend upon the particular circumstances of each case. Dixon v. Gayfere, 1 De G. & J. 655; 27 L. J., Ch. 148; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 1157; 6 W. R. 52.

Where there was an agreement for the sale of an equitable estate in land, in consideration of the grant of an annuity for three lives and the life of the survivor, to be secured by bond, but neither the bond was given nor the estate conveyed in the lifetime of the purchaser; upon the annuity falling into arrear:—Held, that the principle of vendor's lien did not apply, the agreement evidencing a contrary intention. Ib.

A. agreed to sell an estate to B. for an annuity, and B. was to pay off a mortgage to which the estate was subject. Accordingly, B. executed a deed, by which he granted the annuity to A., and covenanted to pay it; and by a conveyance of even date but executed after the annuity deed, A. and the mortgagee, in consideration of the annuity having been so granted, and of the payment of the mortgage money, conveyed the estate to B.:—Held, that A. had no lien on the estate for the annuity. Buckland v. Pocknell, 13 Sim. 406.

A. conveys an estate to B., in consideration of B.'s entering into the covenant contained in the deed, for paying an annuity to A., and 3,000*l.* to certain persons, in the event of his (B.'s) marrying:—Held, that the covenants did not create a lien on the estate. Clarke v. Royle, 3 Sim. 499; 30 R. R. 193.

A. conveyed her life estate in lands to her son, in consideration of his paying the rent of a house for her, and supplying her with sufficient hay and corn, and he covenanted to pay the rent and supply the hay and corn:—Held, that A. had a security on the estate in the nature of a vendor's lien for the performance of the son's contract. Richardson v. M'Causland, Beat. 457.

An agreement to purchase land for an annuity for the life of the vendor, to be a charge on the land, and to be paid quarterly, entitles the vendor, not only to the security of the charge, but to the covenant of the purchaser for the payment of the annuity. Bower v. Cooper, 2 Hare, 408; 11 L. J., Ch. 287; 6 Jur. 681.

Sale and assignment of a life interest in leaseholds in consideration of a weekly sum to be paid to the vendor during her life, with a covenant by the purchaser to make the weekly payment to the vendor, and to perform the covenants in the lease:—Held, that the vendor was entitled to a lien on the life interest in the leaseholds. Matthews v. Bowler, 6 Hare, 110; 16 L. J., Ch. 239; 11 Jur. 297.

A vendor, in lieu of the price of 3,000*l.*, agreed to accept an annuity of 100*l.* a year for the joint lives of her intended husband and herself. This is not a security, but a substitution for the price; and the lien of the vendor on the land is discharged. Parrot v. Sweetland, Myl. & K. 655.

Obtaining Judgment.]—Judgment against the purchaser of a leasehold house and furniture for damages and costs does not destroy lien of the vendor upon the house and furniture. Seaforth (Lord), Ex parte, 19 Ves. 235; 1 Rose, 306.

Relief in Equity.]—If the vendor parts with his estate, and takes a security for the consideration money, there is no reason for a court of equity to assist him against the creditors of the purchaser. Fawell v. Heelis, Amb. 726.

Proof of.]—Purchase money unpaid is primâ facie a lien on the lands sold; and if a security is taken for that money, it lies on the vendee to show that the vendor agreed to rest on that security, and to discharge the lands. Hughes v. Kearney, 1 Sch. & Lef. 132; 9 R. R. 30.

Vendor's lien, unless clearly relinquished, of which another security taken and relied on, may be evidence; the proof being upon the purchaser, and, failing in part, another security being relied on, may prevail as to the residue. Mackreth v. Symmons, 15 Ves. 329; 10 R. R. 85.

Bond Taken.]—The rule of equity, in the case of an implied lien, is that the vendor's lien is not gone by accepting a bond or note from the purchaser, nor will a receipt for the purchase money discharge the lien till the money be paid; this rule is strengthened when applied to the case of an express charge. Saunders v. Leslie, 2 Ball & B. 514; 12 R. R. 114.

A vendor accepting a mortgage on another estate is not conclusive evidence against the existence of his lien on the estate sold. Ib.

A vendor who has taken, as security for part of the purchase money, the bond of the vendee and a mortgage of part of the property sold, has not, on the bankruptcy of the vendee, a lien on the whole estate. Capper v. Spottiswoode, Tam. 21; 31 R. R. 60.

An agreement by a vendor to take a bond for the payment of the consideration for land sold exonerates the land from all claim for the purchase money in the hands of a subsequent bonâ fide purchaser. Dixon v. Gayfere, supra. S. P., Blackburne v. Gregson, 1 Cox, 90; 1 Bro. C. C. 420.

Upon a sale of a debt proved in an administration suit the purchaser gave a bond for the purchase money, payable by instalments:—Held, that the vendor had not lost his lien on the debt for payment of the unpaid purchase money. Collins v. Collins, 31 Beav. 346.

On purchase by a trustee the conveyance contained a receipt for the whole purchase money. In fact, only part was paid, and the trustee gave his bond, and a memorandum reciting that the vendor had lent the trustee the sum to enable him to complete:—Held, that the vendor had no lien on the title deeds in his possession. Muir v. Jolly, 26 Beav. 143. And see Goode v. Burton, supra, col. 1309.

By an agreement for the sale of an estate, the purchase money, with interest, was to be secured by the bond of the purchaser. The conveyance expressed that the purchase money had been paid, and the vendor's receipt was indorsed upon it; but, in fact, only a part of the price had been paid, and the residue was secured by the purchaser's bond. The vendor was held to have a lien on the estate for the amount of the bond. Winter v. Anson, 3 Russ. 488; 6 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 7; 27 R. R. 117.

Promissory Note.—A. purchases lands of B., and mortgages back those lands for part of the purchase money, and gives a note to B., for 200*l.*, the other part thereof; A. devises those lands to be sold for payment of his debts: this 200*l.* note shall not be preferred to other debts, nor be a charge on the land in equity. Bond v. Kent, 2 Vern. 281.

Bills of Exchange.]—The vendor's lien on the estate for the purchase money is not discharged by taking bills of exchange; which are to be considered, not as a security, but as a mode of payment. Grant v. Mills, 2 V. & B. 307; 13 R. R. 101. S. P., Loaring, Ex parte, 2 Rose, 79.

Vendor has a lien on estate sold for purchase money, though he has received bills from purchaser in payment of same, and though purchaser becomes bankrupt. Peake, Ex parte, 1 Madd. 346; 16 R. R. 233.

The vendor takes, in payment of the purchase money, certain bills of exchange, and also a mortgage to secure the due payment of the bills. The bills are returned under protest:—Held, that the vendor has a preferential right to payment out of the proceeds of the estate, not only for the amount of the bills, but also in respect of interest, costs, and damages, although, at the time of the purchase, another creditor had a judgment against the purchaser, the court being of opinion, that the damages, in fact, formed part of the purchase money. Cameron v. Gillard, 6 Jur. 113.

—— Pawnees.] — Where the purchaser accepted bills for the purchase money, and the original lease was deposited with a third person to be delivered up to the purchaser on payment of the bills; and the seller got possession of the lease and pledged it with persons who bonâ fide advanced money upon it, and to whom he indorsed the outstanding bills:—Held, that the pawnees had no lien on the lease beyond the amount of these bills. Hooper v. Ramsbottom, 4 Camp. 121; 6 Taunt. 12; 1 Marshall, 414.

Pledge of Stock.] — Vendor's equitable lien upon the estate for purchase money is lost by taking special security by way of pledge of stock. Nairn v. Prowse, 6 Ves. 752; 6 R. R. 37.

Contract in Substitution.]—A contract for the payment of purchase money must be explicit to deprive a vendor of his lien upon the estate sold; and, though a contract is stated in the conveyance, evidence may be given to show the real nature of the transaction, and a subsequent purchaser is bound to inquire whether it was accepted in substitution of the lien. Frail v. Ellis, 16 Beav. 350; 22 L. J., Ch. 467; 1 W. R. 72.

Sale to Company for Cash and Shares.]—A vendor agreed with a trustee for a company about to be formed for the sale of his business for 6,000*l.* in cash and 2,000*l.* in paid-up shares. The company was wound up, and the only assets consisted of the proceeds of sale of the property which had been resold:—Held, that the vendor had no lien on those proceeds, his lien being excluded by the nature of the contract. Brentwood Brick and Coal Co., In re, Rowe's Claim, 46 L. J., Ch. 554; 4 Ch. D. 562; 36 L. T. 343; 25 W. R. 481—C. A.

Second Sale.]—Case in which vendor of an estate loses his lien, by a contract between all parties for a second sale, the first vendor being unable to complete his contract. Cood v. Pollard, 10 Price, 109; 23 R. R. 713.

Express Stipulation.]—Agreement for sale of paper mills, the purchase money being payable by instalments. There was a clause that if the purchaser should cease to carry on business the vendors should have a right to re-enter and take possession of the premises, and of everything which should have been built or placed thereon, and to hold the same for their own use and benefit absolutely, without prejudice to the liability of the purchaser for unpaid purchase money. The vendors (a bank) entered under the clause and claimed against the official liquidator of the purchaser, the fixtures and the trade machinery under their vendor's lien:—Held, that the bank had no vendor's lien for unpaid purchase money, as an express stipulation had been substituted for such lien. London and Lancashire Paper Mills Co., In re, 58 L. T. 798.

—— Covenant to Repay.]—Covenant between vendor and purchaser, that purchase money should be repaid within two years after resale, discharges the vendor's lien. Parkes, Ex parte, 1 Glyn & J. 228.

Waiver—Vendor Retaining Title Deeds.]—Semble, that a vendor by retaining, under a special agreement, possession of the title deeds of the estate, does not waive or exclude his lien. Wreforde v. Lethern, 2 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 173.

iii. Enforcement of.

Statute of Limitations.]—An agreement was entered into for the purchase of freehold land for 6,300*l.*, to be paid on the 13th May, 1811, and the purchaser was immediately put into possession. In 1827 the purchaser, before any conveyance was made to him, and before he had paid any part of the purchase money, died, having devised the lands to trustees. In 1834 the attorney of these trustees wrote to the assignees of the vendor, stating that the purchase money was ready to be paid on the purchase being completed. On a bill filed by the assignees in 1844, to enforce the lien:—Held, on evidence not before the court below, that the trustees were persons by whom the purchase money was payable, within the meaning of the Statute of Limitations, 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27. Tuft v. Stephenson, 1 De G. M. & G. 28; 21 L. J., Ch. 129; 15 Jur. 1187.

In 1849 the assignees of the vendor filed a bill, seeking to enforce the vendor's lien on the estate for the purchase money:—Held, that s. 42 of the statute did not apply to the arrears of interest, but that the whole was recoverable from the 13th May, 1811. S. C., 5 De G. M. & G. 735.

Death of Purchaser.]—Decree obtained by vendor for specific performance with a declaration that if the purchase money was not paid by fixed date, estate should be sold and the purchaser personally liable for any deficiency. Before the day the purchaser died insolvent. The estate was afterwards sold, but the proceeds were insufficient to pay the whole amount due to the vendor:—Held, that by the decree the vendor was entitled to prove for the balance only of his debt, but semble that independently of the decree he would have been entitled to prove for the balance only. Rome v. Young, 4 Y. & C. 204; 9 L. J., Ex. Eq. 41; 2 Jur. 963.

Where an estate has been sold to a person who has since died, the court will direct an account to be taken of the personal estate, and decree that the vendor shall have a lien on the land for so much as the personal estate will not extend to pay. Topham v. Constantine, Tam. 135.

Insolvency of Purchaser.]—The purchaser of a real estate became insolvent after part of the purchase money was paid. The vendor died, having devised the estate to the plaintiffs and appointed one of them his executor. The bill was filed against the provisional assignee of the insolvent and an equitable mortgagee by deposit of the agreement for purchase. The plaintiffs did not prove their title as devisees; the defendants disclaimed:—Held, that the court could not make the decree sought without evidence of the devise, but that, upon payment of the costs of the defendants, the court might (the defendants not opposing) declare the plaintiffs absolutely entitled to the estate. Gabriel v. Sturgis, 5 Hare, 97; 15 L. J., Ch. 201; 10 Jur. 215.

Application by vendor who has not conveyed for a sale of the premises in discharge of his lien for the unpaid purchase money, and to prove for any deficiency, granted. Gude, Ex parte, 1 Glyn & J. 323.

Decree for Sale.]—The vendor's title and the contract being admitted, decree will be made for sale, and satisfaction to the vendor out of the moneys, and for payment of the deficiency, if any, by the purchaser, notwithstanding an act of parliament has dealt with the lands in question since the date of the contract. Nash v. Worcester Improvement Commissioners, 1 Jur. (N.S.) 973.

Bill to enforce Agreement.]—A vendor of some mines, who by express agreement had a lien for his unpaid purchase money, filed a bill to enforce that lien, and to recover from the purchasers the value of the minerals they had got, and by getting which they had made the premises an inadequate security; a demurrer for want of equity was overruled. Attwood v. Small, 6 Cl. & F. 523, n.; 8 L. J., Ch. 145.

Petition.]—In a suit by an unpaid vendor, the court decreed a specific performance, and the payment of the purchase money and damages. The purchasers were unable to pay, and the property was in the possession of a receiver in another suit. A petition by the vendor to enforce his lien was dismissed with costs, the proper remedy being by bill. Att.-Gen. v. Sit- tingbourne Ry., 35 Beav. 268 ; 35 L. J., Ch. 318 ; L. R. 1 Eq. 636 ; 14 L. T. 92 ; 14 W. R. 414.

Purchase Money payable by Instalments.]—In an action by a vendor whose purchase money was to be paid by instalments, some of which were not yet due, for specific performance of his contract and a declaration of his lien, liberty was given to apply in respect of future instalments as they accrued due. Nives v. Nives, 49 L. J., Ch. 674 ; 15 Ch. D. 649 ; 42 L. T. 832 ; 29 W. R. 302.

Lien on One of Several Estates.]—Where the court had declared that certain devised estates were subject to incumbrances, and a vendor had a lien for unpaid purchase money on one of such estates :—Held, that the vendor's lien stood precisely in the same position as any other incumbrance, and that it must be paid out of the particular estate on which it attached. Barnewall v. Iremonger, 1 Dr. & Sm. 255 ; 3 L. T. 462 ; 9 W. R. 88.

Fund in Court.]—Vendor may acquire a lien on fund in court, under contract for sale, and, if vendee refuses to complete contract, may prevent him by injunction from drawing out of court fund which was appropriated by the contract to be applied in part discharge of purchase money. Doyne v. Harvey, 1 Hog. 3.

Against Railway Company.]—When a landowner seeks to enforce his lien for unpaid purchase money against a railway company, the court will order a sale of the land, but will not grant an injunction to restrain the company from running trains over the land. Lycett v. Stafford and Uttoxeter Ry., 41 L. J., Ch. 474 ; L. R. 13 Eq. 261 ; 25 L. T. 870.

An unpaid vendor of land taken by a railway company is entitled to the usual relief of unpaid vendors ; therefore in an action by him for the enforcement of his lien on the land, the court will, without requiring the land to be offered for sale, grant an injunction against the company from using the land, and make an order for delivery up of possession. Allgood v. Merrybent and Darlington Ry., 55 L. J., Ch. 743 ; 53 Ch. D. 571 ; 55 L. T. 835 ; 35 W. R. 180.

iv. Priorities.

In General.]—Vendor's lien for purchase money unpaid against the vendee, volunteers, and purchasers with notice, or having equitable interests only claiming under him, unless clearly relinquished. Mackreth v. Symmons, 15 Ves. 329 ; 10 R. R. 85.

Subsequent transactions, even under authority of a special act of parliament, cannot affect a vendor's lien for unpaid purchase money. Nash v. Worcester Improvement Commissioners, 1 Jur. (N.S.) 973.

Recital as to Payment.]—When a purchase deed contained a recital that the purchase money had been paid or accounted for, but there was no receipt for the purchase money on the back of the deed :—Held, that the vendor, in respect of his lien for unpaid purchase money, was entitled to priority over a mortgagee of the purchaser. Bacon v. Cobb, 19 W. R. 614—L.JJ.

Receipt Indorsed.]—Vendor conveyed without receiving his purchase money ; the receipt of it was indorsed on the deed, and the title deeds delivered to the purchaser. The purchaser then made a mortgage by deposit, and absconded :—Held, as between the vendor's lien and the right of the mortgagee, that the possession of the title deeds and the fact of the indorsement of the receipt gave the mortgagee the better equity. Rice v. Rice, 2 Drew. 73 ; 2 Eq. R. 341 ; 23 L. J., Ch. 289 ; 2 W. R. 139.

Principles of the rule as to the effect of priority in point of time. Ib.

Where a vendor signs a receipt for the whole purchase money, but suffers the purchaser to retain part of it, and remains in possession of the estate as tenant to the purchaser, his possession is no notice, to a subsequent purchaser or incumbrancer, of his lien on the estate for the sum retained. White v. Wakefield, 7 Sim. 401 ; 4 L. J., Ch. 195.

Vendor retaining Title Deeds.]—The plaintiffs conveyed an estate, but retained the conveyance and title deeds, as security for unpaid purchase money. The purchaser mortgaged the estate :—Held, that the plaintiffs had a lien upon the estate prior to that of the mortgagee. Worthington v. Morgan, 16 Sim. 547 ; 18 L. J., Ch. 233 ; 13 Jur. 316.

Equitable Mortgagee.]—An equitable mortgagee from vendee who has not paid purchase money can sell only bankrupt's interest, unless vendor consents ; and the court will not act till he is served. Wright, Ex parte, Watts, In re, 3 Mont. & Ayr. 49.

Settlement—Notice.]—An estate was devised to trustees, upon trust, to discharge a specific debt, and to apply the residue for the benefit of the testator's children. A. purchased, but left the purchase money, except what was required to satisfy the debt, unpaid, giving his bond as a collateral security for the payment of it. A. made a marriage settlement which referred to the conveyance, and the conveyance referred to the will :—Held, that the settlement conveyed notice to the will, and that such notice was binding on the beneficiaries under the settlement, and that the testator's children were entitled, as against the beneficiaries, to a lien on the estate to the amount of the purchase money left unpaid. Davies v. Thomas, 2 Y. & C. 234 ; 7 L. J., Ex. Eq. 21.

In 1811 B., in partnership with A. and C., agreed to sell his share, they paying interest on his money remaining in their hands. In August, 1812, C., by his marriage settlement, conveyed his one-third to A. and D., as trustees for himself for life, with remainder for plaintiffs as tenants in common ; this deed was registered in 1814. In 1819 the amount due by A. and C. to B. was 24,000*l.*, including purchase money and interest and advances made by B. A mortgage of the mills was then executed by A. and C. to B., to secure this 24,000*l.*, and was registered. C. died in 1820, and A. in 1823. In 1826 B. procured, from the representatives of A., an assignment of the equity of redemption, and entered into possession of the mills :—Held, that B. had no claim of lien against the plaintiffs, as an unpaid vendor. Stuart v. Ferguson, Hayes, 452.

Judgment Creditors.]—M. obtained a decree against H. for specific performance of an agreement for payment of the residue of the purchase money, and in default, for a sale of the hereditaments. S., a judgment creditor of H., prior to the decree, refused to release and disclaim, but as to S.'s interest, the court declared that the hereditaments were freed and absolutely discharged, and ordered him to pay all the costs of the suit. Moscrop v. Sandeman, 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1146; 9 L. T. 352.

Notice of Incumbrances before Completion.]—A purchaser of property subject to a mortgage gave a cheque for the purchase money, but stopped the payment of the cheque. The existence of second and third incumbrances was disclosed to him, and he subsequently withdrew his countermand, and the cheque was cashed. On a bill by the third incumbrancer claiming priority over the purchaser, the court held that the purchase was not completed by the delivery of the cheque, considering the circumstances that took place afterwards, and a decree was made in conformity with the prayer of the bill. Tildesley v. Lodge, 3 Jur. (N.S.) 1000.

Notice to Solicitor.]—A. conveyed an estate to B., and, according to the conveyance, an acceptance was given in full satisfaction for the absolute purchase; but in reality it was agreed that the vendor should have a mortgage for the money. Before the acceptance became due, B. mortgaged to C., who employed the same solicitor as had been engaged in the purchase, and C. had notice that the bill had not been paid, and of the form of the conveyance:—Held, first, that C. was affected by the notice to his solicitor; and, secondly, that, under the circumstances, he was bound to inquire into the true nature of the transaction between A. and B., and consequently that his security ought to be postponed to A.'s. Frail v. Ellis, 16 Beav. 350; 22 L. J., Ch. 467; 1 W. R. 72.

Vendor acting Malâ fide.]—A plaintiff agreed with H. to grant him a building lease of some land. The plaintiff advanced H. 970*l.* to enable him to build. Afterwards E. and P. jointly made further advances to H. for the same purpose. Subsequently E. (who was the solicitor both of the plaintiff and of P.) induced the plaintiff to execute a conveyance to H. without receiving the consideration, in order that H. might then execute a mortgage to E. and P. to secure their advances:—Held, that the plaintiff had lost his lien for his purchase money and his priority for it, and his advances over the mortgage. Smith v. Evans, 28 Beav. 59; 29 L. J., Ch. 531; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 388; 2 L. T. 227.

Equitable Mortgage.]—In 1845 P. became purchaser from A. of a piece of land. A. retained the title deeds of the land, and in 1851 deposited them with the plaintiff to secure the payment of a sum then advanced. P. and A. had various transactions, but there was no appropriation of the balance due to P. in satisfaction of the purchase money due to A. A. in 1855 was adjudicated bankrupt:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree against P. to the extent of the equitable interest which A. had in the land. Rayne v. Baker, 1 Giff. 241; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 366.

A solicitor purchased through a third party property belonging to his clients; the solicitor paid no purchase money to his clients, but their trustee, acting under his direction, indorsed on a conveyance to a third party, whom the client treated as the real purchaser, a receipt for the purchase money payable to the third party; the solicitor afterwards deposited the title deeds by way of equitable mortgage, became bankrupt, and left the country:—Held, that the claim of the equitable mortgagee had priority over the clients' lien for unpaid purchase money. Worthington v. German, 16 W. R. 187.

A person through his son, as solicitor, lent money on mortgage of property. The son did not inquire whether the purchase money had been paid by the mortgagor, and there was no receipt for it on the mortgagor's purchase deed. The money so lent was applied in paying off a mortgage held by a third person on the property, and the deeds were handed to the son by such third person, not as mortgagee, but as solicitor of the mortgagor:—Held, that, under the circumstances, the representative of the vendor was entitled to his lien for unpaid purchase money in priority to the mortgagee. Bowen v. Cobb, 19 W. R. 614.

Land in Register County—Purchasers without Notice.]—Trustees of a charity conveyed land in Yorkshire to R. and W., part of the purchase money remaining unpaid, and allowed R. and W. to register the conveyance, knowing that they wanted to do so in order to resell the land in lots:—Held, that the trustees had, by their conduct, precluded themselves from asserting their lien for unpaid purchase money against bonâ fide sub-purchasers from R. and W. without actual notice, though the sub-purchasers had not examined, as it was their duty to have done, the conveyance to R. and W., a memorial of which was registered, and though the estate of one of the sub-purchasers was equitable only. Kettlewell v. Watson, 53 L. J., Ch. 717; 26 Ch. D. 501; 51 L. T. 135; 32 W. R. 865—C. A.

Registration.]—A vendor's lien for unpaid purchase money need not be registered under 2 & 3 Anne, c. 4. Ib.

Notice.]—The mortgagee of a sub-purchaser's lot left it to R. and W. "to manage the business":—Semble, he was not affected with constructive notice of the lien. Ib.

v. Purchaser's Lien.

Character of.]—Lien of vendee, having paid prematurely, is analogous to that of vendor. Mackreth v. Simmons, 15 Ves. 345; 10 R. R. 85.

Contract at an End.]—On a conveyance executed by some but not all the parties, where the contract has gone off by the vendor's default, if there is any lien it is vested in the purchaser as a security for his deposit. Oxenham v. Esdaile, 3 Y. & J. 262.

Incumbrance.]—A purchaser, who has accepted a conveyance with knowledge of an incumbrance, has no lien on the fund in court in respect of the incumbrance. Miller v. Pridden, 26 L. J., Ch. 183; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 78; 5 W. R. 171.

Although the vendor of an estate has fraudulently concealed an incumbrance, yet the purchaser has no lien on the purchase money after it has been paid over. Cator v. Bolingbroke, 1 Bro. C. C. 301.

A purchaser from a remainderman who advances money to pay off a pressing incumbrance, the remainderman representing that he can sell with the concurrence of the tenant for life, has such an equitable title to the purchase as to establish a lien on the property, which equity will protect by enjoining the tenant for life from proceeding by ejectment to obtain possession, until the cause shall be finally determined on the hearing. Ludlow v. Grayall, 11 Price, 58; 25 R. R. 703.

Defect in Title.]—Where, in a suit by a vendor for specific performance, it was certified that a good title was not deduced, the court ordered a return to the defendant of his deposit money, with interest at 4 per cent., and declared the defendant entitled to a lien on the estate of the same, and also for his costs. Turner v. Marriott, L. R. 3 Eq. 744; 15 L. T. 607; 15 W. R. 420.

Resale.]—L. having contracted in writing to sell estates for 350,000*l.* to H., by a defeasance and subsequent agreement, on the same stipulations, resells to W. for 380,000*l.*, not subject to defeasance. W., having paid 38,000*l.* deposit of 10*l.* per cent. on the purchase money, files a bill for the return of such deposit, costs, interest, and expenses; and for a declaration that he has a lien on the estates for such sums. A general demurrer for want of equity, overruled without costs, on the ground that primâ facie a purchaser who has paid his deposit, where the contract goes off for defect of title, ought to have a lien upon the estate for such deposit, on the dicta and opinions of Sir Thomas Clarke, in Burgess v. Wheate (1 Eden), and Lord St. Leonards, in his Treatise on Vendors and Purchasers. Wythes v. Lee, 3 Drew. 396; 26 L. T. 192. S. C., on appeal, 25 L. J., Ch. 389; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 130; 4 W. R. 316.

Payment by Instalments.]—Under a contract for the purchase of an estate, where the money is to be paid in portions, every payment is a part performance of the contract by the vendee, and in equity transfers to him a corresponding portion of the estate. Rose v. Watson, 10 H. L. Cas. 672; 33 L. J., Ch. 385; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 297; 10 L. T. 106; 12 W. R. 585.

The purchaser of an estate was bound to pay certain sums at stated intervals, with interest on what remained unpaid. He paid several sums, and then declined to complete on the ground of misrepresentation:—Held, that he was entitled, so far as the payments extended, to claim a lien on the estate for that amount, and to enforce that claim against the assignees of the vendor. Ib.

Interest was allowed the purchaser on the sums paid by him at the rate of 4*l.* per cent. per annum, simple interest. S. C., 3 N. R. 673.

Feme Covert—Sale by Husband.]—The wife, being entitled in equity to real estate under a contract of sale entered into before her marriage, the husband, after their marriage, completed the purchase, and took the conveyance to himself. Afterwards, acting upon the supposition that the estate was his own, the husband laid out money in improvements upon it, and in the lifetime of the wife sold the estate, and the purchasers took a conveyance from him. The husband survived the wife. After the death of the husband, the heir-at-law of the wife recovered the estate from the purchasers by a suit in equity:—Held, that the husband, and the purchasers from him, were entitled in that suit to a lien on the estate in respect of the purchase money paid by the husband; and semble, also, in respect of the money expended on lasting improvements. Neesom v. Clarkson, 4 Hare, 97; 9 Jur. 82.

Purchaser abandoning Contract.]—Agreement to buy an hotel. The owner continued to carry on the business, the purchaser being unable to find the purchase money, and eventually the purchaser wrote to the owner, "You must mortgage or sell the premises":—Held, that although the purchaser would have been entitled to a lien, if the contract had failed through the vendor's default, as the purchaser had himself abandoned the contract, the purchaser was not entitled to any lien. Dinn v. Grant, 5 De G. & S. 451.

Lien for Compensation.]—R. agreed to sell W. lands free from incumbrances, and the greater part of the purchase money was paid. The land was subject to reservations and conditions. W. was declared entitled to compensation, but the amount on inquiry could not be ascertained:—Held, that as W. was not bound to take the property without compensation, and as the compensation could not be ascertained, he was entitled to the return of his purchase money, with interest at 4*l.* per cent., and to a lien on the estate for the amount. Westmacott v. Robins, 4 De G. F. & J. 390.

—— Refusal of Party to Concur.]—A husband agreed to sell property which was settled as he and his wife should jointly appoint, and in default of appointment to the use of trustees during the life of the wife for her separate use, with remainder to the husband in fee. The purchase money was paid to the trustees of the settlement. On the death of the husband before completion, the wife refused to convey her life interest:—Held, that the purchaser was entitled to a conveyance of the property subject to the widow's life interest, with compensation in respect of such interest out of the husband's personal estate; and that he was entitled to a lien on the consols in the hands of the trustees for such compensation. Barker v. Cox, 46 L. J., Ch. 62; 4 Ch. D. 464; 35 L. T. 662; 25 W. R. 138.

f. Abatement and Compensation.

And see cases under Conditions of Sale, When Misleading, supra, col. 1171.

Rule in Equity.]—If an agreement be in part unperformed, the principle of a court of equity is in compensation, not forfeiture. Page v. Broom, 4 Russ. 6. Affirmed, 2 Russ. & M. 214.

Where a bill for specific performance is dismissed on the ground of inadequacy of consideration, the court will not aid a party in recovering his deposit, or giving him compensation for his loss, by decreeing an account. Kendall v. Beckett, 9 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 24.

If a purchaser cannot have what was his strong inducement to the contract, a specific performance, with compensation, not to be enforced. Stapylton v. Scott, 13 Ves. 426.

Specific performance upon the principle of compensation and indemnity: not if the effect is the substantial deviation from the contract.

Halsey v. Grant, 13 Ves. 73. S. P., Horniblow v. Shirley, id. 81.

General rule of specific performance that the purchaser shall have what the vendor can give, with an abatement out of the purchase money, for so much as the quantity falls short of the representation, enforced against trustees for infants, upon the mere mistake of their agent without fraud, &c., but the relief adapted to the justice of the case. Hill v. Buckley, 17 Ves. 394 ; 11 R. R. 109.

The principle of equity with respect to specific performance is, that if substantially the purchaser can have the thing contracted for, a slight variation in the qualifications of it will not disable the vendor from having a decree for specific performance, when the difference is such as can be compensated in money. Magennis v. Fallon, 2 Moll. 588.

The jurisdiction of equity is never exercised to decree compensation singly without other relief. As to the jurisdiction in cases of compensation generally. Newham v. May, 13 Price, 749 ; M'Cle. 511.

Semble, that in a case of misdescription, a court of equity would not enforce against trustees specific performance with compensation, as being prejudicial to the cestui que trust, and incapable of being ascertained. White v. Cuddon, 8 Cl. & F. 766 ; 6 Jur. 47.

Contract by trustees under power of sale, though by subsequent events it cannot be executed under the power, shall be made good in equity by the effect of the interest acquired on the estate bound by the contract. Mortlock v. Buller, 10 Ves. 315. Affirmed 2 Dow. 518.

Though generally, it is not universally, true that a purchaser may take what he can get, with compensation for what he cannot have. Whether that is ever done without express undertaking on his part to do what court shall order, quære. Paton v. Rogers, 1 V. & B. 351 ; 12 R. R. 183, n.

Extent of Doctrine.]—The doctrine of compensation ought not to be extended. Jurisdiction has been exercised in giving compensation founded on the minuteness of the object, compared with the estate sold, and not upon any jurisdiction to find and adjust pecuniary equivalents, where essential parts of the contract cannot be performed. Pendergast v. Eyre, 2 Hog. 81.

After Decree.]—At the hearing, a decree was drawn up, simply for specific performance, although without prejudice to the question of compensation :—Held, that the plaintiff was not thereby precluded from compensation. Wilson v. Williams, 3 Jur. (N.S.) 810.

Title not Proved.]—Where a bill by a vendor for specific performance does not set up a right to compensation, but avers that the vendor was and is able to make a good title, the court will not, upon the failure of the averment, entertain the question of compensation. Ashton v. Wood, 3 Sm. & G. 436 ; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 1164.

Rescission.]—Though the conduct of a purchaser, after the discovery of circumstances entitling him to rescind, may preclude him from so doing, it does not necessarily follow that he is entitled to compensation. Hughes v. Jones, 3 De G. F. & J. 307 ; 31 L. J., Ch. 83 ; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 399 ; 5 L. T. 408 ; 10 W. R. 139.

Reference—Damage.]—Upon a reference to the master to inquire as the title to compensation for damage done to lands, the master ought regularly to inquire whether the damage was temporary or permanent. Ctor v. Croydon Canal Co., 4 Y. & C. 405 ; 13 L. J., Ch. 89.

No Estimable Loss.]—Quære, per Turner, L.J., whether the principle of compensation is applicable where there is no estimable loss to a purchaser unless he happen to sell. Edwards-Wood v. Marjoribanks, 1 Giff. 384 ; 3 De G. & J. 329 ; 7 H. L. Cas. 806 ; 30 L. J., Ch. 176 ; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1167 ; 3 L. T. 222.

A. contracted with B. and C., trustees, for the purchase of an advowson and rectory, and parish church. A loan by the Governors of Queen Anne's Bounty had not been paid off and was not disclosed by the abstract. A. filed a bill for specific performance, with compensation. Specific performance was decreed, but :—Held, that A. was not entitled to compensation. Ib.

Annuity.]—Mode of determination of amount of compensation to purchaser in respect of an annuity charged upon the land purchased together with the other land of the vendor, and of exonerating the purchased land therefrom. Powell v. South Wales Co., 1 Jur. (N.S.) 773.

Joint Purchase.]—Where two purchase in equal moieties between them and one has abatement in price, &c., made to him, he shall account to other as to it. Carter v. Horne, 1 Eq. Ca. Abr. 7.

Intentional Misrepresentation.] — Purchaser not bound to take with compensation in a case of great intentional misrepresentation, although so provided by the conditions of sale in case of "any error or misstatement" in the particulars. Stewart v. Alliston, 1 Mer. 26 ; 15 R. R. 81.

Failure of Title.]—One of the terms of an agreement was, that the contract should be void if the purchaser's counsel should be of opinion that the marketable title could not be made by a certain time. The counsel being of that opinion, a bill by the purchaser for specific performance with a compensation was dismissed with costs. Williams v. Edwards, 2 Sim. 71 ; 29 R. R. 61.

—— Condition that Purchaser shall Assume certain State of Things.]—In an agreement for the sale of seventeen undivided shares of a coal mine there was an article stating two conveyances by which six undivided shares of the land, beneath which the coal lay, had been conveyed to the vendor's predecessor in title, but stating that there was no express mention in the conveyances of the minerals under the land, and requiring that the purchasers should assume that six undivided shares of the minerals passed by the conveyances of the land, and thereby became absolutely vested in the vendor's predecessor in title. In the abstract of the vendor's title sent to the purchasers mention was made of a certain indenture, but nothing further was said about it. Subsequently the deed was found, and showed that the six undivided shares had never belonged to the vendors :—Held, that as the purchasers had notice, there was a doubt as to the title before entering into the agreement, specific performance ought to be decreed with a deduction as compensation for the loss of the six shares. English v. Murray, 49 L. T. 35 ; 32 W. R. 84.

Practice.]—Course of proceeding where purchaser seeking specific performance asks also compensation for a misdescription. Hoy v. Smythies, 2 Jur. (N.S.) 1011.

Minute Defects.]—Specific performance decreed, notwithstanding a variance from the description, with compensation for the deficiency in value, though a minute examination might have discovered the defects, as in the state of the house, &c., but not for a variance from the description, as lying within a ring fence. Dyer v. Hargrave, 10 Ves. 505 ; 8 R. R. 36.

Leaseholds—Tenant from Year to Year.]—Part of the lands sold under the decree was stated in the rental to be held from year to year by C.; but the purchaser found, after he lodged his one-fourth of the purchase money, that it was held for a term. The tenure by which other parts were held was not stated in the rental, but the purchaser on going into possession found they were held for lives still subsisting :—Held, that the purchaser was entitled to compensation. Held also, that he was not entitled to compensation in respect of the premises whose tenure was not stated, as he should have ascertained how they were held. Martin v. Cotter, 8 Ir. Eq. R. 147.

—— Custom to Renew.]—Premises sold at auction were described in the particulars as being customary leaseholds, renewable every twenty-one years, at the customary rent of 10*s.*, on payment of the customary fine. The sixth condition stipulated that errors of description, or any errors inserted in the particular, should not vacate the sale, but should be subject to abatement or compensation. It turned out that there was no custom to renew, but that the premises were held for an absolute term of twenty-one years :—Held, first, that the property being sold as leaseholds renewable by custom, when there was no such custom, was an error of description, not a defect of title. Secondly, that the purchaser was, under the sixth condition, entitled to specific performance, with a deduction from the price. Newby v. Paynter, 11 Hare, 26 ; 1 Eq. R. 173 ; 22 L. J., Ch. 871 ; 17 Jur. 483.

—— Underlease.]—Although according to the decided cases, a vendor who contracts for the sale of property described as held under a lease, cannot, if nothing further is said, make a good title unless it is held under an original lease, in a case where the particulars and conditions of property so described contained enough to give notice to a purchaser that the property was held under a derivative lease :—Held, that the purchaser could not on that account claim compensation on the ground of misdescription. Madeley v. Booth (2 De G. & Sm. 718) commented on. Camberwell & South London Building Society v. Holloway, 49 L. J., Ch. 361 ; 13 Ch. D. 754 ; 41 L. T. 752 ; 28 W. R. 222. And see cases, supra, col. 1195.

Occupation.]—Purchaser not entitled to compensation where the misdescription consisted in stating that the premises sold were in the joint occupation of A. and B. as lessees, the fact being that the premises had been demised to C., and by C. assigned to A., who was, together with B., in the occupation of them at the time of sale. Ridgway v. Gray, 1 Mac. & G. 109 ; 1 Hall & Tw. 196.

Possession.]—In July, 1867, L. sold to a railway company a house, the terms being that the purchase-money was to be paid on the 25th of March, 1869, or at such earlier time as the company should choose, possession to be given on payment, they paying 5 per cent. interest in the meantime ; and he was to be their tenant, the tenancy not to be determined before the 25th of March, 1869, but to be determinable on the 25th of March, 1869, by a week's notice. The interest and rent were paid up to the 25th of March, 1869. L. gave due notice to determine the tenancy on that day ; but the company not having the purchase money ready, he refused to give up possession, and filed a bill for specific performance. A decree for specific performance was made, with an order for payment of the purchase money, with interest from the 25th of March, 1869 :—Held, that the company was not entitled to any allowance by way of occupation rent. Leggott v. Metropolitan Ry., L. R. 5 Ch. 716 ; 18 W. R. 1060.

Agreement for the sale of a lease, "with possession on the 1st December, the rent to commence at Christmas." Possession was not given until the 31st January, through the default of the vendor :—Held, that the purchaser was entitled to compensation, and an inquiry was directed. Gedye v. Montrose (Duke), 26 Beav. 45.

—— Loss of Tenant and Deterioration.] — Two houses, stated in the particulars to have been "recently in the possession of F.," were put up by mortgagees from F. for sale, and were bought by the defendant. A day was fixed for completion, when the rents or possession were to belong to the purchaser. At that day F. was still in possession, and remained so until more than a month after. The purchaser had agreed to let the houses to a tenant as from a day five days later than the day fixed for completion, but the tenant, finding that he could not have immediate possession, had refused to take the houses, which had remained unoccupied, and had also been damaged by the removal of some fixtures :—Held, that the purchaser was entitled to damages in the nature of compensation for loss of a tenant, and that the damages would be the amount of rent lost, and that the purchaser was entitled to damages for the deterioration of the property. Bain v. Fothergill (infra, col. 1340) distinguished. Phillips v. Silvester (supra, col. 1257) followed and discussed. Royal Bristol Permanent Building Society v. Bomash, 56 L. J., Ch. 840 ; 35 Ch. D. 390 ; 57 L. T. 179.

How Assessed.]—R. agreed to sell to W. lands free from incumbrances. On an investigation of the title it appeared that these lands were held, with other lands, under a crown grant, containing various reservations and conditions, with a proviso for re-entry on breach of condition. W. filed a bill for specific performance. An order was made on appeal, declaring him entitled to compensation, and directing a reference as to the amount. In answer to this inquiry, it was found that the amount of compensation could not be ascertained :—Held, on supplemental bill by W., that as the compensation could not be ascertained, he was entitled to the return of his purchase money, with interest at 4*l.* per cent., and to a lien on the estate for the amount. Westmacott v. Robins, 4 De G. F. & J. 390. And see Powell v. South Wales Co., supra, col. 1322.

—— Reversion.]—A condition that any error in the particulars shall not vitiate the sale, but a compensation shall be made, only applies to cases where the circumstances afford a principle by which this compensation can be estimated. Sherwood v. Robins, M. & M. 194; 3 Car. & P. 339.

Therefore, on the sale of a reversion, expectant on the death of A. without children, an error in the statement of A.'s age does not come within the condition, and the purchaser is entitled to rescind the contract. Ib.

A reversion depending on the contingency of a tenant for life dying without issue, the tenant for life being fifty-six years of age, and married, and his wife being in her fifty-fourth year, and the only issue of the marriage having been a still-born child, eleven years previously, is the subject of estimate and calculation. Boothby v. Boothby, 1 Mac. & G. 604; 2 Hall & Tw. 214.

A reversion depending upon the contingency of the tenant for life, who was sixty-three years of age, and a bachelor, dying without issue, is not the subject of estimate or calculation; but the purchaser of this reversion having proposed to deduct one-half of the reversion in respect of such contingency, and the treaty having been concluded upon that basis, the court, as between the vendor and purchaser, will value the contingency accordingly. Baker v. Bent, 1 Russ. & M. 224; Tam. 368.

Forfeiture—Making a Road.]—One stipulation in a contract for purchase was that the vendor should make a certain road, which it turned out he could not make without incurring a forfeiture: —Held, that the purchaser was entitled to a decree for a specific performance with a compensation for the road. Peacock v. Penson, 11 Beav. 355; 18 L. J., Ch. 57; 14 Jur. 518.

ii. After Conveyance Executed.

General Rule.]—After the purchaser of real estate has taken a conveyance, and the purchase-money has been paid, no action can be maintained for damages or compensation on account of errors as to the quantity or quality of the subject matter, unless such errors amount to breach of some contract or warranty in the conveyance, or unless fraud or deceit has been practised upon the purchaser. Jolliffe v. Baker, 52 L. J., Q. B. 609; 11 Q. B. D. 255; 48 L. T. 966; 32 W. R. 59; 47 J. P. 678.

Notice — Mistake.] — After conveyance the omission of certain parcels, of which omission the purchaser had notice by the abstract:—Held, not a ground for rescinding the contract. The purchaser having by his mistake allowed the vendor to convey the omitted parcels to another purchaser:—Held, that a decree for compensation cannot be made after conveyance. Leuty v. Hillas, 2 De G. & J. 110; 27 L. J., Ch. 534; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 1166; 6 W. R. 217.

Misrepresentation.]—A purchaser cannot, in the absence of fraud, obtain compensation after conveyance for a misrepresentation, even though such misrepresentation related to the subject matter of the conveyance. Manson v. Thacker, 47 L. J., Ch. 312; 7 Ch. D. 620; 38 L. T. 209; 26 W. R. 604.

Condition that any errors should be the subject of compensation. After completion of conveyance a defect discovered:—Held, that the purchase having been completed the condition did not apply. Ib.

Where the conditions provided that if any error or misstatement should be found it should not annul the sale, but that compensation should be made in respect thereof, and an error in the quantity of the land was discovered after the conveyance had been executed:—Held, that the purchaser was entitled to compensation. Manson v. Thacker (supra) not followed. Turner and Skelton, In re, 49 L. J., Ch. 114; 13 Ch. D. 130; 41 L. T. 668; 28 W. R. 312. But see next case.

Mutual Mistake.]—Sale of term for fifty years of a beerhouse, subject to a covenant against Sunday trading. It was stated at the sale that the freeholder had offered to release the covenant on having 25*l.* additional rent. The purchaser received an abstract which showed that the vendor was an under-lessee. A release was obtained from the freeholder, and the purchaser paid the purchase-money partly by an order on his brewers. On the day after completion he became aware that the release from the freeholder was not effectual without a release from the original lessee, and stopped payment of the order on the brewers until this should be obtained. The required release could not be obtained:—Held, that compensation could not be given for an error discovered after completion. Turner and Skelton, In re (supra), dissented from. Allen v. Richardson, 49 L. J., Ch. 137; 13 Ch. D. 524; 41 L. T. 614; 28 W. R. 313.

Reference.]—A condition of sale provided that mistake or error should not annul the sale but be the subject of compensation, such compensation to be settled by two referees with an umpire. A purchaser of a house, after the execution of the conveyance, discovered an error in the rental:—Held, that the condition was not limited to errors discovered before the conveyance was executed, and that he was entitled to compensation. Boss v. Helsham, 4 H. & C. 642; 36 L. J., Ex. 20; L. R. 2 Ex. 72; 15 L. T. 481; 15 W. R. 259.

Error in Rental.]—The contract provided, that any material error in the rental furnished, should not annul the sale, but that compensation should be made in respect thereof. The rental so furnished, represented that by a fee-farm grant the timber (which was of the value of 800*l.* or thereabouts) was reserved to the vendor. The timber was not reserved by the fee-farm grant, and the vendor had no title to it. This fact was not known to the purchaser or his solicitor until after the purchase-money was paid, the conveyance executed, and possession taken by the purchaser:—Held, that the purchaser was entitled to compensation for the value of the timber. Manson v. Thacker (supra) and Allen v. Richardson (supra) considered; and Boss v. Helsham (supra) and Turner and Skelton, In re (supra), approved of. Phelps v. White, 7 L. R. Ir. 160—C. A.

Error in Income.]—Specific performance of contract to purchase colliery works was decreed, but with compensation in respect of misrepresentation as to the amount of stores consumed. It was found that there was a large excess in the statement of income:—Held, that the purchasers were entitled to a deduction from their purchase money bearing the same proportion to the whole purchase-money as the excess bore to the income stated. Powell v. Elliott, L. R. 10 Ch. 424; 33 L. T. 110; 23 W. R. 777.

Length of Lessor's Term.]—The defendant, believing his term had thirty years to run, agreed to grant an underlease for twenty-one years to the plaintiff, nothing being said about compensation for misdescription. The plaintiff did not investigate the defendant's title, and a year after the lease was granted it was discovered that the defendant's term had only fourteen years to run:—Held, that, as there was no contract as to compensation, and the plaintiff claimed for a defect which he might have discovered before he took the lease, he was not entitled to any compensation. Clayton v. Leech, 41 Ch. D. 103; 61 L. T. 69; 37 W. R. 663—C. A.

iii. Charges and Outgoings.

Charge.]—A tenant for life of a real estate, the trustees of which were empowered to sell it at his request and by his direction, entered into a contract to sell it. The estate was subject to a charge. The tenant for life died without issue, and the fee of the estate passed under his will:—Held, that the purchaser, on waiving the objection as to the charge, was entitled to a specific performance against the representatives of the vendor, but he was not entitled either to an indemnity against the charge or to compensation. Bainbridge v. Kinnaird, 32 Beav. 346; 2 N. R. 5; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 862; 8 L. T. 447; 11 W. R. 608.

Outgoings.]—A contract having been made for sale of an estate, it afterwards appeared that there were some outgoings from the estate which were not disclosed at the time of the contract, yet, these being matters which are in compensation, the contract, shall be carried into execution, with an allowance only to the purchaser for those particulars which diminish the value. Howland v. Norris, 1 Cox, 59.

Quit Rent and Tithe Rent Charge.]—Quit rents, being incidents of tenure, are subjects of compensation. Esdaile v. Stephenson, 1 Sim. & S. 122; 24 R. R. 151.

Quære, if rent charges are. The court, when small, has allowed them so. Ib.

Part of the lands sold under the decree was liable to quit-rent and tithe rent-charge, though not so stated in the rental:—Held, the purchaser was entitled to compensation for the quit-rent but not for the tithe rent-charge. Martin v. Cotter, 8 Ir. Eq. R. 147.

A. agreed to sell an estate, tithe free, to B. Afterwards the vicar of L. filed a bill for tithes against the occupiers of part of the estate. A. agreed that part of the purchase money should be set apart as an indemnity to B. against the claim made, which was accordingly done, and B. paid the remainder of his purchase money, and took a conveyance of the estate. A fresh suit was instituted for the tithes of the same lands, and then it was discovered that the lands were situate in the parish of S., and were tithable to the rector of S., and the latter suit was dismissed:—Held, that B. was entitled to a compensation out of the land for the tithes of the land situate in S. Crompton v. Melbourne, 5 Sim. 353.

—— Injunction.]—In enforcing contracts upon principle of compensation for variance from description, the court has gone so far, to the extent even of totally defeating the object of the purchaser, that where the principal subject of the contract was all the corn and hay tithes of a parish, and of hay tithe half was allotted to vicar, or half commuted for customary payment, the nature of that payment, the extent of meadow, and the possible conversion of arable, not distinctly appearing, the injunction against recovering the deposit was continued after answer. Drewe v. Hanson, 6 Ves. 675; 17 R. R. 46, n.

Where land is sold tithe free a purchaser is not compelled to complete his contract, with a compensation, if a good title cannot be made to the tithe; but this rule admits of exception where the circumstances manifest that the right to the tithe did not form any inducement to the purchaser to enter into the contract. Smith v. Tolcher, 4 Russ. 302; 28 R. R. 103.

The purchaser of an estate, sold as tithe-free, cannot be compelled to take it subject to tithe on terms of compensation; but an estate of 140 acres being sold under a decree, the particulars stating about thirty-two acres to be tithe free, and no evidence of exemption having been produced on the reference of the title, the master was directed to certify the proper amount of compensation. Binks v. Rokeby (Lord), 2 Swanst. 222; 19 R. R. 68.

A purchaser of land part subject to tithes, though represented as tithe-free, has, if he chooses to take the purchase, a right to compensation, but not to compel the vendor to purchase the tithes. Todd v. Gee, 17 Ves. 273; 11 R. R. 76.

Taxes.]—An estate consisting of fen land, and so described in particulars of sale, was charged by a local but public act with draining and embanking taxes, of which purchaser had no express notice:—Held, he was not entitled to compensation. Barraud v. Archer, 2 Sim. 433; 9 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 173; 29 R. R. 129.

—— Eau Brink Tax.]—An estate sold, and eau brink tax stated at a certain amount. It was afterwards discovered that the eau brink tax was less than stated, and the corporation tax more; and on a bill filed by the vendors for a specific performance, the defendant was allowed compensation for the excess in amount of the corporation tax, after deducting the difference in the amount of the eau brink tax. Townshend v. Granger, 9 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 176.

Fines.]—Trustees for sale of a manor stated that the fines were arbitrary, adding that the clear profits on an average of the last eight years had been 150*l.* a year. There was a condition of sale that if there should be any error or misstatement, the vendors or purchaser, as the case might happen, should pay or allow a proportionate value, according to the average of the whole purchase money, as a compensation either way. After the sale it was found that arbitrary fines were payable only on alienation. It was also found that the clear profits exceeded 200*l.* a year :—Held, on appeal, that there was no such misdescription as would entitle the purchaser to compensation, as the annual profits which constituted the substantial value far exceeded the amount stated. White v. Cudden, 8 Cl. & F. 766.

iv. Outstanding Estates and Interests.

Limited Interest of Vendor.]—Principles upon which the court proceeds in determining whether the purchaser is entitled to a partial performance of the contract, with compensation for the deficiency, where the vendor has only a limited interest in the estate contracted to be sold, and is, therefore, incapable of performing the whole contract. Thomas v. Dering, 1 Keen, 729 ; 6 L. J., Ch. 267 ; 1 Jur. 427. And see Paton v. Rogers, supra, col. 1321.

—— Estate pur autre vie.]—A. contracted with B. for the purchase in fee of property in ignorance that B. was only entitled to an estate pur autre vie, and that C. (B.'s wife) was entitled to the remainder in fee on the determination of the particular life. D., with full knowledge of A.'s contract, took a conveyance from B. and C. of the property, acknowledged by C. so as to pass her interest :—Held, that A. was entitled to a conveyance from D. of B.'s interest, with compensation in respect of C.'s interest, which B. was unable to bind or convey. Barnes v. Wood, 38 L. J., Ch. 683 ; L. R. 8 Eq. 424 ; 17 W. R. 1080.

—— Husband and Wife Vendors.]—When a husband and wife agreed to sell her estate in fee simple, the purchaser being aware that the estate belonged to the wife, and she afterwards refused to convey :—Held, that the purchaser could not compel the husband to convey his interest and accept an abated price. Castle v. Wilkinson, 39 L. J., Ch. 843 ; L. R. 5 Ch. 534 ; 18 W. R. 586.

A husband agreed to sell property which was settled as he and his wife should jointly appoint, and in default of appointment to the use of trustees during the life of the wife for her separate use, with remainder to the husband in fee. The purchase money was invested in consols and paid to the trustees of the settlement. On the death of the husband before completion, the wife refused to convey her life interest :—Held, that the purchaser was entitled to a conveyance of the property subject to the widow's life interest, with compensation in respect of such interest out of the husband's personal estate ; and to a lien on the consols in the hands of the trustees for such compensation. Barker v. Cox, 46 L. J., Ch. 62 ; 4 Ch. D. 464 ; 35 L. T. 662 ; 25 W. R. 138.

Dower.]—A. contracted to sell to B. the fee simple, clear of incumbrances. B., aware that on a former occasion an attempted sale had gone off in consequence of A.'s wife refusing to bar her dower, asked as to this, and was informed that she would join. Afterwards she refused to join :—Held, that B. was entitled to compel a specific performance, with a compensation and an indemnity against the right to dower. Wilson v. Williams, 3 Jur. (N.S.) 810.

Semble, a proper indemnity would be to retain in court a third part of the purchase money, the dividends to be paid to A. and his assigns during the joint lives of himself and wife ; and if she survived A., to B. during her life ; and upon her decease, the capital so retained in court to be paid to the husband. Ib.

A vendor contracted to sell an estate in fee, with a stipulation that if counsel should be of opinion that a good title could not be made, the contract should be rescinded. Upon the delivery of the abstract, it appeared that the vendor's mother had a life interest in the premises, and that her interest was known to the vendor at the time of the contract. Upon her refusing to join in the conveyance :—Held, that the vendor was not entitled to rescind under the stipulation, but that the contract must be specifically performed, with compensation in respect of the life interest. Nelthorpe v. Holgate, 1 Coll. C. C. 203 ; 8 Jur. 551.

Lease Outstanding.]—The purchaser, under his contract, is entitled to actual possession where the contrary is not stipulated for, and an outstanding lease is not the subject of compensation. Linehan v. Cotter, 7 Ir. Eq. R. 176. And see cases, supra, col. 1190.

The defendant contracted to sell an inn to the plaintiff, and represented to him that the agreement under which the tenant in possession held was void, and that he would give the plaintiff possession at Michaelmas following. He had given the tenant notice to quit at that time ; the tenant did not quit :—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to be released from the agreement, or that he might at his election perform it and have compensation. He elected to have performance, and it was decreed to him, with compensation and costs. Besant v. Richards, Tam. 509.

—— Surrender.]—A. contracted to purchase a leasehold estate subject to an underlease to B.'s father. A. agreed with B., on having a surrender of this underlease, to grant him a new lease, and B. agreed to procure a surrender of the underlease from his father, and to accept such new lease. B.'s father refused to surrender his underlease :—Held, upon demurrer, that A. could not obtain specific performance of this agreement, the question as to compensation to A. being determinable by action at law for damages. Held, also, that B. could not be compelled to accept a lease in the terms proposed at the expiration of the underlease. Beeston v. Stutely, 27 L. J., Ch. 156 ; 6 W. R. 206.

—— Duration of Term.] —Where the particulars of sale of certain leasehold property contained a misstatement, thereby causing the reversion to appear as if it would fall in eight years earlier than actually was the case, and the conditions of sale provided that any error or misstatement in the particulars should not annul the sale, but compensation should be made to or by the purchaser :—Held, that, even if the purchaser were aware of the misstatement in the particulars, the vendors were not thereby relieved from the liability to make him compensation, in accordance with the terms of the conditions of sale. Lett v. Randall, 49 L. T. 71.

Specific performance decreed, with compensation for a defect of title, if to be ascertained, by reduction of the purchase money ; if not, or the plaintiff would so take it, with an indemnity ; the defect consisting in the representation of a church lease for twenty-one years, the lease being actually for lives, and the covenant limited and contingent. Milligan v. Cooke, 16 Ves. 1.

—— Tenants in Possession.]—A purchaser buying with notice of tenants in possession is bound to inquire into the nature of their interest, and is not entitled to an abatement of the purchase money because their interest proves to be larger than he supposed when he entered into the contract. James v. Lichfield, 39 L. J., Ch. 248; L. R. 9 Eq. 51; 21 L. T. 521; 18 W. R. 158.

An estate was put up for sale by a particular, describing it as "now or late in the several occupations of H. R. and others," and by one of the conditions it was provided that, on completion, the purchaser should be "let into the receipt of the rents and profits." Some parts of the property were subject to leases for lives at a low rent:—Held, that a purchaser who entered into the contract without knowing of the existence of such leases could not be compelled to take the title without compensation. Hughes v. Jones, 3 De G. F. & J. 307; 31 L. J., Ch. 83; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 399; 5 L. T. 408; 10 W. R. 139.

Reservations.] — R. agreed to sell to W. lands in New South Wales free from incumbrances, and the greater part of the purchase money was paid. On an investigation, it appeared that these lands were held under a crown grant, containing various reservations and conditions, with a proviso for re-entry on breach of condition. W. filed a bill for specific performance, with compensation on account of these reservations. An order was made on appeal, declaring him entitled to compensation, and directing a reference as to the amount. In answer to this inquiry, it was found that the amount of compensation could not be ascertained:—Held, that W. was bound to take the property without compensation, and as the compensation could not be ascertained he was entitled to the return of his purchase money, with the interest at 4*l.* per cent., and to a lien on the estate for the amount. Westmacott v. Robins, 4 De G. F. & J. 390.

—— Mines and Minerals.]—In a contract for sale of land containing valuable quarries, was a clause reserving to the vendor power to rescind in case any objection or requisition should be persisted in; in another clause provision was made for compensation in case any error or mistake should appear to have been made in the description of the property, or the vendor's interest therein. The purchaser objected that a reservation of mines and minerals included the quarries, and the objection being persisted in, he rescinded the contract:—Held, that the requisition was one of title, giving the vendor the right to rescind. Mawson v. Fletcher, 40 L. J., Ch. 131; L. R. 6 Ch. 91; 23 L. T. 545; 19 W. R. 141.

A contract was made for the purchase of land, and the purchaser afterwards discovered that another person had a right to dig coal on the land:—Held, that the purchaser was entitled to take the land with compensation for the defect. Ramsden v. Hurst, 27 L. J., Ch. 482; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 200; 6 W. R. 349.

A vendor of an estate had granted to A. the right to work coals under the property, with a proviso that, when the workings of the coal had finally ceased, the pits should be filled up, and the land restored to a proper state of cultivation. A. ceased to work the mines, and filled in the pits. Upon the sale of the estate, A. claimed to be entitled to re-work the coal, and the purchaser therefore claimed compensation. The court considered that there had only been a temporary cessation to work the coals, and that the purchaser was entitled to compensation. Ib.

Reservation of salt works, mines, &c., in 1704, with a right of entry, though no instance of any claim, and the title had been transferred in 1761, without such reservation upon the usual covenants:—Held, an objection, giving a right to compensation, the purchaser not insisting upon it further. Seaman v. Vawdrey, 16 Ves. 390; 10 R. R. 207.

And see Rescission, supra, col. 1245.

a. As to Quantity.

General Rule.]—General rule of specific performance that the purchaser shall have what the vendor can give, with an abatement out of the purchase money for so much as the quantity falls short of the representation, enforced against trustees for infants upon the mere mistake of their agent without fraud, &c.; but the relief adapted to the justice of the case. Hill v. Buckley, 17 Ves. 394; 11 R. R. 109.

Small Deficiency.]—Where a plaintiff failed to show a good title to a small portion of the lands, which was not material to the beneficial enjoyment of the remainder of the lands, the court decreed specific performance of the agreement, with compensation, and directed the costs to follow the event. Carver v. Richards, 6 Jur. (N.S.) 667. S. P., M'Queen v. Farquhar, 11 Ves. 467.

A purchaser of real estate at a sale in the court of bankruptcy, will not be discharged from his purchase on objections to title, where the abstract of title posted in the court contains express notice of the defects objected to:—Held, also that where title cannot be made out to small portions of the estate, the purchaser will not be discharged, but will be entitled to compensation pro tanto only, unless he can show that the deficient portion was essential to the proper enjoyment of the whole, or that it constituted his main object in entering into the contract. Difference in practice between sales of real property in bankruptcy and in courts of equity. Gethin, Ex parte, Smith, In re, Ll. & G. t. Plunk. 429.

Sale by Court.]—In the case of a sale under the order of the court, it being clear that a certain portion of the property was not intended by the vendor to be included in the contract of sale; the court, in the absence of any proof of misconduct in the purchaser or his agent, refused to compel a specific performance by the purchaser, excluding the portion in question. The purchaser, however, electing to take exclusive of the portion of the property in dispute, the court ordered accordingly, and without compensation. Alvanley v. Kinnaird, 2 Mac. & G. 1; 14 Jur. 837.

Cases in which the court will or will not, and how far, interfere, considered. Ib. And see Magawley v. Brady, 7 Ir. Eq. R. 557.

Condition as to Measurement.]—Upon the sale of real estate one of the conditions was as follows:—"The admeasurements are presumed to be correct, but if any error be discovered therein, no allowance shall be made or required either way." It was stated in the particulars that the property contained an area of 7,683 square yards or thereabouts; but upon admeasurements, the area was found to be 4,350 only:—Held, that the purchaser was not entitled to compensation. Cordingley v. Cheesebrough, 4 De G. F. & J. 379; 3 Giff. 496; 31 L. J., Ch. 617; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 755; 6 L. T. 642.

Purchaser is not entitled to abatement for deficiency of quantity, the particulars of sale describing lot as containing "more or less." Winch v. Winchester, 1 V. & B. 375; 12 R. R. 238.

Where it was stated by one of the conditions of sale, that the quantity of a particular lot of the estates sold under a decree was stated from estimation, and that the purchaser should not object to complete this purchase if the quantity should turn out less than that stated:—Held, that the purchaser was not by such condition precluded from his right to compensation in the event of the quantity having turned out deficient. Frost v. Brewer, 3 Jur. 165.

—— Purchase at Specified Rate.]—On the purchase at a specified price per acre, of land, described as grass land, bounded by a public drain, and "containing by estimation twenty-three acres or thereabouts, but to be surveyed," the land when measured usque ad medium filum aquæ contained 23a. 0r. 26p., of which 1a. 0r. 33p. was comprised within the drain:—Held, that, if the land comprised within the drain was included in the conveyance, the purchaser was bound to pay for it at the specified rate. Popple, In re, 25 W. R. 248.

Quantity Excessive.]—Condition of sale that any mistake or error should not annul the sale, but a compensation should be given or taken to be settled by two referees or an umpire. It was found that one of the lots contained about twenty acres more, and another about ten acres less, than the quantity described in the particulars:—Held, that, the excess and the deficiency were both subjects of compensation within the condition, and that the court would, if necessary, refer it to the master to settle the amount of such compensation, notwithstanding that, from the variety in the nature of the different portions of the land, there was no uniform standard for computing such amount. Where the description was inaccurate as to quantity and had been prepared by the vendor's solicitors from former particulars and conditions drawn up on the report of a surveyor, the court will not enforce the contract against the vendor, unless the case should be one for compensation, and the purchaser should submit to make such compensation. Leslie v. Thompson, 9 Hare, 268; 20 L. J., Ch. 561; 15 Jur. 717. And see Orange to Wright, supra, col. 1185.

Notice of Defect.]—On the sale of seventeen undivided shares in a coal mine, there was a condition that the purchasers should assume that six undivided shares of the minerals passed by conveyances of the land, and thereby became absolutely vested in the vendor's predecessor in title. In the abstract of the title, mention was made of a certain indenture, but nothing further was said about it. The purchaser's solicitor was told this deed could not be found, and no abstract of it or information about it could be furnished, but that it was believed not to affect the property sold. Subsequently, the deed was found, and showed that the vendors never had had any title to those shares:—Held, that, as there had been no fraud in the matter, but the vendors had acted under a bonâ fide mistake, and the purchasers had had the fact that there was a doubt as to title brought to their notice, and had thought fit to run the risk of taking the property without having the matter cleared up, specific performance of the agreement ought to be decreed, but that a deduction must be made from the purchase money as compensation to the purchasers for the loss of the six shares. English v. Murray, 49 L. T. 35; 32 W. R. 84.

Extent of Deficiency.]—The rule that where there is a deficiency in the quantity of land contracted to be sold, the purchaser is entitled to specific performance of the contract, with compensation for the deficiency, only applies within certain limits. Estate sold as containing 21,750 acres; it contained only 11,814 acres:—Held, that the purchaser was not entitled to specific performance with a proportionate abatement, but that he could only enforce the contract on payment of the full price or rescind the contract. Durham (Earl) v. Legard, 34 Beav. 611; 34 L. J., Ch. 589; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 706; 13 L. T. 82; 13 W. R. 959.

The plaintiff tendered for a lease of a farm of 214 acres and 35 acres. The defendant accepted the offer, believing it to be for the 214 acres and 27 acres not comprised in the tender. Specific performance of a lease of the 214 acres was decreed with compensation for the loss of 27 acres. M'Kenzie v. Hesketh, 47 L. J., Ch. 231; 7 Ch. D. 675; 38 L. T. 171; 26 W. R. 189.

Vendors who bind themselves to make out a good title to all the lands, but are unable to show a title to $\frac{1}{350}$ part, not necessary to the enjoyment of the other parts, the bill averring that they could make title to all the lands sold, seeking specific performance as to all:—Held, that they could not at the hearing seek performance with compensation. Ashton v. Wood, 3 Sm. & G. 436; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 1164.

Quære, whether the court will in no case decree specific performance with compensation for defects of title in small particulars, the question of compensation being raised by the bill. Ib.

Misdescription of the quantity of land in regard to the acres being statute acres or customary, is not matter of compensation, but a ground for setting aside the sale. Price v. North, 2 Y. & C. 620; 7 L. J., Ex. Eq. 9.

At a sale by auction under a decree the property sold was stated in the particulars to contain 753 square yards or thereabouts, and one of the conditions provided that any error, misstatement, or omission in the particulars should not annul the sale, nor should any compensation be allowed by the vendor or purchaser in respect thereof. The property was found to contain 573 square yards only:—Held, that the condition only applied to small errors, and that the purchaser was entitled to compensation. Whittemore v. Whittemore, L. R. 8 Eq. 603.

A residence, with four acres, was sold. It turned out that there was no title to a slip of ground, of about a quarter of an acre, between the house and the highroad:—Held, that it was not a proper subject for compensation, and that a good title could not be made. Perkins v. Ede, 16 Beav. 193.

A tenant in possession purchased the property, which was represented to be forty-six feet in depth ; it turned out to be thirty-three only :—Held, that he was entitled to an abatement. King v. Wilson, 6 Beav. 124.

Where a vendor can make a title to three-fourths only, the purchaser is not entitled to take the three-fourths with an abatement, but he may take the three-fourths at the price agreed on for the whole. Maw v. Topman, 19 Beav. 576.

A., being entitled to nine-sixteenths only of an estate agrees, by mistake, to sell the entirety to B. Semble, that a specific performance will not be decreed as to the nine-sixteenths, with an abatement out of the purchase money. Wheatley v. Slade, 4 Sim. 126.

An agreement for the sale of two-sixths of certain leasehold property. It turned out that the vendors were only entitled to two twenty-one parts :—Held, that the purchaser was entitled to specific performance to the extent of the vendors' interests with a proportionate abatement. Jones v. Evans, 17 L. J., Ch. 469 ; 12 Jur. 664.

Vendors agreed to sell the entirety of certain freehold property for 6,000*l*., and to make out a good marketable title. It was discovered that the vendors were entitled to only a moiety :—Held, that the purchaser was entitled to specific performance by the vendors of their moiety, with an abatement of one-half of the purchase money. Bailey v. Piper, 43 L. J., Ch. 704 ; L. R. 18 Eq. 683 ; 31 L. T. 86 ; 22 W. R. 943.

When two persons agreed to sell property, of whom one was entitled to a moiety subject to a mortgage for its full value, and the other had no interest :—Held, that a judgment for specific performance with abatement might be made against the former. Horrocks v. Rigby, 47 L. J., Ch. 800 ; 9 Ch. D. 180 ; 38 L. T. 782 ; 26 W. R. 714.

—— Copyhold and Freehold.]—An estate was described in particulars of sale as containing 227 acres, and as being freehold with the exception of 50 acres copyhold of a forest. A clause was inserted in the contract that the estate was sold as being about 50 acres copyhold, but no abatement or compensation was to be made in favour of the purchaser in case the quantity of pure copyhold should exceed 50 acres, and the rest of the estate was sold as being partly of freehold and partly of copyhold tenure. The vendor was not to be required to distinguish which portions were of one tenure and which of the other, nor was any compensation to be allowed. The purchaser afterwards discovered that the 227 acres consisted of about 178 acres of copyhold and 49 of freehold, and that all minerals except stone were reserved to the crown :—Held, that there had been a misdescription of the property, and specific performance was refused. Turquand v. Rhodes, 37 L. J., Ch. 830 ; 18 L. T. 844 ; 16 W. R. 1074. And see cases, supra, col. 1192.

b. As to Nature of Property.

Amount of Rent.]—Purchaser, under a decree, having paid in his entire purchase money, was not entitled to compensation out of the fund, for the difference between the amount of rent received by the receiver before possession given, and the amount which ought to have been received according to the rental, which was erroneous, it appearing that he was aware, when he purchased, of the discrepancy. Campbell v. Hay, 2 Moll. 102.

An estate sold under a decree was described as of a certain annual value, and, by the conditions, compensation was to be made for any error in the particular. After the purchaser took possession he discovered that the rent was over-stated :—Held, that he was entitled to a compensation out of his purchase money. Cann v. Cann, 3 Sim. 447 ; 30 R. R. 184. And see Cases, supra, col. 1176.

Defective State of Premises.]—Compensation for the dry rot in house and premises decreed, upon representation of the vendor to the purchaser as to the state of repairs ; he relying upon such representations, and stating to the plaintiff that he did not employ a surveyor for that reason. Grant v. Munt, G. Cooper, 173 ; 14 R. R. 231.

Specific performance of an agreement for sale decreed, notwithstanding a variance from the description, with compensation for the deficiency in value ; though a minute examination might have discovered the defects, as in the state of the house, &c., the premises consisting of leasehold farm, and three years having expired pending the suit, interest was given to the vendor, and a rent set upon it in respect of his possession. Dyer v. Hargrave, 10 Ves. 505 ; 8 R. R. 36.

Timber Estate.]—There is no instance of a court of equity compelling a purchaser who contracted for the purchase of a demesne with ornamental timber, where ornamental timber has been cut down between the contract and possession given, or title shown, to complete the purchase. Ornamental timber is essentially different from ordinary timber. Magennis v. Fallon, 2 Moll. 590.

Lands of copyhold and freehold tenure, lying intermixed and undistinguishable, were sold with the timber standing on them. The conditions of sale stipulated that the vendor was not to be bound to distinguish the freeholds from the copyholds, and that the timber was to be taken at a valuation made for the purposes of that sale, the value of the timber on each lot being specified. The deposit was paid on the whole price of the land and timber :—Held, first, that the contract was an entire contract for the sale of land with timber on it ; secondly, that the purchaser was not entitled to any abatement, though he could not cut a single tree, not being able to distinguish any one tree as standing on freehold ground ; thirdly, that in the case of one lot sold under the same conditions, which consisted entirely of copyholds, the purchaser was equally bound to pay the stipulated price for the timber, although he could not cut any of it. Crosse v. Lawrence, 9 Hare, 462 ; 21 L. J., Ch. 889 ; 16 Jur. 142.

Particulars of sale described a timber estate as comprising a certain wood with upwards of sixty-five acres of fine oak timber trees, the average size of which approached fifty feet, and the particulars of the lot described it only as sixty-five acres, two roods, and twelve perches of growing timber. The statement as to the size of the trees was incorrect :—Held, that as the representation on the particulars of sale was incorrect the court would not enforce the specific performance of the contract without compensation, and that it was not a case in which the court could ascertain the amount of compensation, and that the bill must therefore be dismissed. Brooke (Lord) v. Rounthwaite, 5 Hare, 298 ; 15 L. J., Ch. 332 ; 10 Jur. 656.

General rule of specific performance, enforced against trustees for infants, upon the mere mistake of their agent, without fraud, &c.; but the purchase being of wood upon a gross valuation, without regard to the quantity of land, an abatement for a deficiency of quantity from erroneously inserting the hedges and fences, not included in the purchase, was directed with reference to land merely, not wood-land. Hill v. Buckley, 17 Ves. 394; 11 R. R. 109.

Water Supply.]—Property was described in particulars of sale as being well supplied with water. It was supplied with water from a neighbouring waterworks at considerable expense; but the evidence showed that other property near to it, and at a higher level, was supplied with water from sources existing on such property:—Held, that there was a misdescription of the property purchased, and that the purchaser was therefore entitled to compensation. Leyland v. Illingworth, Webster, Ex parte, 2 De G. F. & J. 248; 29 L. J., Ch. 611; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 811; 8 W. R. 695.

An estate was set up to sale in lots. In the particulars, the lots were described respectively, as "All that, &c.—comprising lot — in the sale-plan." The sale-plan circulated at the auction represented a well on lot 4, with a drain and pipe conveying the water from the well through lot 2 to lot 1. The purchaser of lot 1 filed his bill for specific performance, with compensation for the loss of the water, the vendor having conveyed away the other two lots, without any reservations to the plaintiff of a right to a flow of water from the well:—Held, that the sale-plan would not carry the case higher than a view of the property by the purchaser. Decree for specific performance, without compensation. Fewster v. Turner, 11 L. J., Ch. 161; 6 Jur. 144.

Indemnity.]—The court will not compel a vendor to give an indemnity unless vendor and purchaser have contracted for it. Aylett v. Ashton, 1 Myl. & Cr. 105; 5 L. J., Ch. 71.

Purchaser not entitled to indemnity where the misdescription consists in stating that the premises sold were in the joint occupation of A. and B. as lessees, the fact being that the premises had been demised to C., and by C. assigned to A., who was, together with B., in the occupation of them at the time of sale. Ridgway v. Gray, 1 Mac. & G. 109; 1 Hall & Tw. 195.

—— Covenants.]—A vendor of freehold property, who, on his own purchase of it, had entered into a covenant to observe the covenants entered into with a former vendor, put it up for sale, pursuant to particulars and conditions, noticing the existence of the covenant, but not stipulating that the purchaser should enter into any covenant on the subject:—Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to a conveyance, unless on the terms of giving or providing for the vendor a sufficient indemnity against any breach of the covenant on the part of the plaintiff, his heirs, appointees, or assigns. Moxhay v. Inderwick, 1 De G. & Sm. 708.

Held, also, that a covenant on the part of the plaintiff, his heirs, executors, administrators, appointees, and assigns, with the defendant, his heirs, executors, and administrators, to the same effect, mutatis mutandis, as the covenant entered into by the vendor on his own purchase, ought to be considered as a sufficient indemnity. Ib.

—— Charge.]—Estates being sold in lots under conditions, one of which expressed that they were subject to the perpetual payment of 12*l.* a year to the curate of N., but that the same and the perpetual annual payment of 20*l.* to the hospital of C. were in future to be charged upon, and paid by, the purchaser of lot 1 only, the purchasers of the other lots are entitled, not to an absolute exoneration, but to an indemnity from the purchaser of lot 1. Nature of the indemnity which they may require. Casamajor v. Strode, 2 Swanst. 347; 1 Wils. 428; Jacob. 630.

A tenant for life of a real estate, the trustees of which were empowered to sell it at his request and by his direction, entered into a contract to sell it. The estate was subject, with others, to a charge for younger children. The tenant for life died without issue, and the fee of the estate passed under his will:—Held, that the purchaser, on waiving the objection as to the charge, was entitled to a specific performance against the representatives of the vendor, but he was not entitled to an indemnity against the charge. Bainbridge v. Kinnaird, 32 Beav. 346; 2 N. R. 5; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 862; 8 L. T. 447; 11 W. R. 608.

—— Quit Rent.]—A. seised in fee of premises subject to quit-rent, sold a portion, then in possession of B., and by the deed of conveyance, which recited that A. was seised of other premises, which, with those conveyed, were subject to a quit-rent, and that B. had agreed to indemnify A. and the other premises therefrom, B. covenanted to pay the quit-rent of all the premises, and indemnify A., &c.:—Held, in a suit by the assignee of the unsold lands against a volunteer claimant under B., that the sold lands were specifically bound to indemnify the unsold lands against the payment of the quit-rent. Hatton v. Waddy, 2 Jones, 541.

Semble, the proper form of indemnity is a grant of a rent-charge in fee, equal in amount to the quit-rent, and to be issuing out of the sold lands. Ib.

—— Title Deeds Lost.]—Vendor, having lost title deeds, agrees to give real security for title:—Held, that personal security is not sufficient, and that he must purchase real estate for that purpose. Walker v. Barnes, 3 Madd. 247; 18 R. R. 226.

—— Dower.]—A. contracted to sell to B. the fee simple, clear of incumbrances. B., aware that on a former occasion an attempted sale had gone off in consequence of A.'s wife refusing to bar her dower, asked as to this, and was informed that she would join. Afterwards she refused to join:—Held, that B. was entitled to compel a specific performance, with a compensation and an indemnity against the right to dower. Wilson v. Williams, 3 Jur. (N.S.) 810.

Semble, a proper indemnity would be to retain in court a third part of the purchase-money, the dividends to be paid to A. and his assigns during the joint lives of himself and wife; and if she survived A., to B., during her life: and upon her decease, the capital so retained in court to be paid to the husband. Ib.

—— Supersedeas.]—Upon supersedeas by consent, a purchaser is entitled to be indemnified against judgments outstanding before the bankruptcy. Latour, Ex parte, Mont. & B. 89; 2 L. J., Bk. 15.

Copyholds Described as Freehold—Bonâ Fide Mistake of both Parties.]—The plaintiff and defendant had been partners in a brewery to which a number of tied houses were attached. In an action between them an order was made for dissolution and sale by tender. By the chief clerk's certificate the defendant was declared the purchaser, as being the highest bidder, of the moiety of the plaintiff. The conditions, which were prepared by the plaintiff's solicitor and approved by the defendant's solicitor and the defendant, provided that the title should be accepted as it stood, the properties being well known to both parties, and nothing was said about compensation. It subsequently transpired that certain of the properties which were to be conveyed as freeholds were copyholds. Negotiations thereupon took place between the parties and their legal advisers, and, as it was feared that there would be delay (the properties being in mortgage), a conveyance was executed by the plaintiff in the form settled by counsel. The defendant, having had to pay a large sum in respect of enfranchisement of the copyholds, took out a summons in the action, in which he asked that the plaintiff might be ordered to pay him one-half of that sum in effect by way of compensation:—Held, that the principle laid down in Mortlock v. Buller (supra, col. 1321), and Castle v. Wilkinson (supra, col. 1329), which allowed the purchaser to insist on having all the vendor could convey, with a compensation for the difference, was confined to the class of cases where the vendor knew the title and the purchaser did not, and had no application to the present case. And that, therefore, it was unnecessary to consider whether compensation could be enforced by a purchaser after the money was paid and the conveyance executed. The summons was accordingly dismissed. Hopcraft v. Hopcraft, 76 L. T. 341.

g. Breach of Contract.

After Completion.]—After the purchaser of real estate has taken a conveyance and the purchase money has been paid, no action can be maintained for errors of description unless such errors amount to breach of contract or warranty, or fraud has been practised upon the purchaser. Jolliffe v. Baker, 52 L. J., Q. B. 609; 11 Q. B. D. 255; 48 L. T. 966; 32 W. R. 59; 47 J. P. 678.

Damages—Measure of.]—The measure of damages for breach of contract is the same in contracts relating to realty as in contracts relating to chattels. Noble v. Edwards, 5 Ch. D. 378; 37 L. T. 7.

In an action for refusing to complete an agreement for the purchase of land, the measure of damage is not the amount of the purchase money, but only such damage as the vendor has actually sustained by the breach of contract. Laird v. Pim, 7 M. & W. 474; 8 D. P. C. 860; 10 L. J., Ex. 259.

In the case of a breach of contract where a vendor is only entitled to compensation for the loss and injury he has sustained by the breach of contract, the measure of the damage is the difference between the price fixed by the contract and the market value at the time of the breach. But when the market value is unascertainable, and a serious loss and injury is proved, the court, acting on the principle that no wrong done is to remain without a redress, awards substantial damages. Lafitte & Co., In re, Lafitte's claim, 23 W. R. 379. S. P. Engel v. Fitch, 10 B. & S. 738; 38 L. J., Q. B. 304; L. R. 4 Q. B. 659; 17 W. R. 894—Ex. Ch.

—— Loss of Bargain.]—A contractor for the purchase of real estate, the title to which proves defective, is entitled to no satisfaction for the loss of his bargain. Flureau v. Thornhill, 2 Wm. Bl. 1078. S. P., Richards v. Barton, 1 Esp. 268. Pownsett v. Fuller, 17 C. B. 660; 25 L. J., C. P. 145; 4 W. R. 323.

But this rule of law does not apply to the case of a lease granted by one who has no title to grant it. Lock v. Furze, 19 C. B. (N.S.) 96; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 726. Affirmed, 1 H. & R. 379; 35 L. J., C. P. 141; L. R. 1 C. P. 441; 15 L. T. 161; 14 W. R. 403—Ex. Ch.

Upon a contract for the sale and purchase of a real estate, if the vendor, without fraud, is incapable of making a good title, the proposing purchaser is not entitled to recover compensation in damages for the loss of his bargain. Bain v. Fothergill, 43 L. J., Ex. 243; L. R. 7 H. L. 158; 31 L. T. 387; 23 W. R. 261.

An auctioneer entered into an agreement, on the behalf of A., to sell certain premises to B., without having communicated to A. that B. was in treaty for them. A. had previously sold the premises to another party, and therefore could not fulfil the contract so made with B., whereupon B. sued A. for non-performance of his contract:—Held, that B. was not entitled to recover damages for the loss of his bargain. Tyrer v. King, 2 Car. & K. 149.

On the sale of real property, if the proposed vendor fails to make out a good title, the intended purchaser can recover as damages only the amount of his deposit, and the cost of investigating the title. He cannot recover damages for the loss of the bargain, where the vendor has not been guilty of at least some culpable want of truth. Sikes v. Wild, 1 B. & S. 587; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 1280. Affirmed, 4 B. & S. 421; 32 L. J., Q. B. 375; 8 L. T. 642; 11 W. R. 954—Ex. Ch.

The expenses attendant on an attempt which is made, after the bargain goes off, to enter into a fresh arrangement, are not recoverable. Ib. S. P., Walker v. Moore, 10 B. & C. 416; 8 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 159.

—— Expenses of Investigating Title.]—Mortgagees with a power of sale sold to the plaintiff by auction the lease of a house, the particulars of sale stating that possession would be given on completion of the purchase. The transaction was, by the conditions of sale, to be completed by the 26th December. The mortgagor being in possession refused to give it up; and the plaintiff, having sold to a purchaser who bought the house for occupation, required possession before completion:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover not only the deposit and expenses of investigating the title, but also damages for the loss of his bargain. Engel v. Fitch, 10 B. & S. 738; 38 L. J., Q. B. 304; L. R. 4 Q. B. 659; 17 W. R. 894.

In an action for damages by a vendee against a vendor, for not making a good title to an estate, he is not entitled to recover for expenses incurred in negotiating the purchase or for having the estate surveyed. Hodges v. Lichfield (Earl), 1 Scott, 443; 1 Hodges, 40; 1 Bing. (N.C.) 492.

But he is entitled to recover charges incurred in investigating the title, including the searching for judgments, but not the costs of drawing and ingrossing a conveyance of the estate, the same having been prematurely prepared. Ib.

Held, also, that the vendee could not recover costs incurred by him in investigating the title to the estate, after the filing the bill in equity. Ib.

—— Up to Date for Completion.]—Agreement that defendant would on or before the 25th of March well and effectually convey the estate to the plaintiff with a good title. The plaintiff alleged damage by expense in investigating title and loss of interest on the purchase money lying idle:—Held, that the plaintiff could not recover for any expenses or loss of interest subsequent to the 25th of March. Metcalfe v. Fowler, 6 M. & W. 830; 10 L. J., Ex. 84.

Breach of Trust—Voluntary Settlement.]—B. executed a voluntary settlement of land. Subsequently B., being about to leave England, executed a power of attorney to E., authorising him to sell all or any of his lands, but in general terms. E., as B.'s attorney, agreed to sell a portion of the land comprised in the settlement to the defendant; and the defendant contracted the next day, the 4th May, 1876, to sell the same piece of land to the plaintiffs. An order had been obtained by consent in an action to administer the trusts of the settlement, confirming the proposed sale by E. to the defendant, and it had also been decided in the action that an order might be made directing a person to convey for B.:—Held, that the power of attorney did not authorise E. to sell to the defendant any portion of the land comprised in the settlement: that the plaintiffs could not be affected by the order in the administration action; and that, the title being defective, the plaintiffs were entitled to recover the deposit, with the costs of the action; the damages, to be ascertained, to be limited to the conveyancing costs. General Meat Supply Association v. Boufflet, 41 L. T. 719—C. A.

Vendor with Equitable Title.]—A vendor contracting to sell to a vendee an estate with a good title, when he has only an equitable title himself, and is not in possession, and failing in his contract by the time stipulated, is liable to more than nominal damages for the breach of the contract, in addition to the expenses incurred by the purchaser. Hopkins v. Grazebrook, 9 D. & R. 22; 6 B. & C. 31; 5 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 65.

Failure as to Part of Agreement.]—Agreement between reversioners and the plaintiff holding under a lease that the plaintiff would surrender part of the premises, and the reversioners would construct a new entrance and re-build, and grant a lease of the new premises, and the entrance to the plaintiff for the same term as he then held for. The plaintiff surrendered part of his premises and new buildings were erected, and an entrance made, but this was stopped up by third parties not claiming under the reversioners:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to such damages as would amount to the difference between the present state of things and what it would have been if the contract had been performed and the plaintiff had got a title to the entrance. Wall v. City of London Real Property Co., 43 L. J., Q. B. 75; L. R. 9 Q. B. 249; 30 L. T. 53.

Resale.]—Where the vendor, after an abortive sale, resells to another person, he cannot sue the first purchaser for lands bargained and sold. James v. Shore, 1 Stark. 426; 18 R. R. 798.

The expenses of a purchaser about his purchase were allowed him by way of damages, but damages in respect of expenses incurred in respect of an attempted resale were refused as being too remote. Hart v. Swaine, 47 L. J., Ch. 5; 7 Ch. D. 42; 37 L. T. 376; 26 W. R. 30.

—— To Solicitor for Company.]—Agreement for sale to the plaintiff, a solicitor and promoter of a company. After the agreement, the company was provisionally registered by the plaintiff as its promoter. In consequence of objections to the title, the company could not proceed with its objects, and was finally dissolved. The purchase money was not paid to the defendant:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover as damages the costs of preparing, stamping, and entering into the agreement, the expenses of investigating the title, and endeavouring to procure a good title, and procure the lease to be granted, but not the expenses of raising the purchase money and loss of interest, nor the expenses of preparing the company's deed of settlement and registering it provisionally, nor the loss of profits from the granting of the lease and the establishment of the company, nor the profits he would have derived from being employed as solicitor by the company. Hanslip v. Padwick, 5 Ex. 615; 19 L. J., Ex. 372.

Agent acting without Authority.] — The defendant professing to be agent for the owners (he being one of them) of an estate, entered into a contract of sale of it to the plaintiff; afterwards he wrote to say that he thought he was authorised to sell, but that it appeared that the parties interested took a different view; the owners refused to complete, and sold the estate for a larger sum than that offered by the plaintiff:—Held, that he was entitled to recover as damages, the costs of investigating title; the difference between the contract price and the market value, of which the price for which the estate sold was primâ facie evidence; but he could not recover loss on cattle, &c., bought in contemplation of the completion of the purchase. Godwin v. Francis, 39 L. J., C. P. 121; L. R. 5 C. P. 295; 22 L. T. 338.

Fraud by Agent and Purchaser.]—When an agent for the sale of an estate colludes with a purchaser, and in consideration of a bribe allows the purchaser to obtain the estate at less than its value, with a view to a sale at a higher price to a sub-purchaser, and the transaction is concealed from the vendor, both agent and purchaser will be held jointly and severally liable to pay to the vendor the increased amount obtained by the sub-sale. Morgan v. Elford, 4 Ch. D. 352.

Money borrowed by Purchaser.]—Interest paid by a purchaser upon money borrowed by him to complete the purchase, and kept idle (pending an endeavour by the vendor to clear up the title), may be recovered as damages against the latter for breach of contract. Sherry v. Oke, 3 D. P. C. 349.

Deeds of Conveyance.]—A purchaser cannot recover from the vendor the expenses of preparing deeds of conveyance of the property, after he has refused to complete the purchase, on account of the non-production of certain title deeds. Jarmain v. Egelstone, 5 Car. & P. 172.

An incumbrancer on land broke his covenant which he had made with the plaintiff, to join in a conveyance to A., by which the plaintiff was to profit:—Held, per Pollock, C.B., and Bramwell, B., that he was only liable in damages for the expenses of preparing the deed of conveyance. Per Martin, B.: He was liable, in addition, for the loss of profit to the plaintiff. Duckworth v. Ewart, 2 H. & C. 129; 33 L. J., Ex. 24; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 214; 12 W. R. 608.

Building Land—Houses Erected.]—A. sold some building land to B., and he covenanted for title. After some houses had been built on the land, the purchaser was evicted:—Held, that he was entitled to recover upon the covenants, not only the value of the land, but also that of the houses subsequently built thereon. Bunny v. Hopkinson, 27 Beav. 565; 29 L. J., Ch. 93; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 187; 1 L. T. 53.

Leasehold—Improvements.]—A. entered into possession under an agreement with B., under which he was to hold as tenant for two years, at the yearly rent of 50*l.*, with liberty to him to make, at his expense, such alterations in and additions to the premises as he might think proper, the same being improvements, and A. to have the option of purchasing the premises at any time during the two years for 600*l.*:—Held, that A. was only entitled to recover the value of the proposed lease, and not the value of the improvements. Worthington v. Warrington, 8 C. B. 134; 18 L. J., C. P. 350.

To Build Railway Station.]—A contract entered into by a railway company with a landowner to build a railway station at a particular spot, nothing being said as to the user of the station, is too vague to be enforced by specific performance; but the court will give damages for the breach of such contract, and in assessing those damages will give the landowner the benefit of all such presumptions as, according to the rules of law, are made against wrongdoers. Wilson v. Northampton and Banbury Junction Ry., 43 L. J., Ch. 503; L. R. 9 Ch. 279; 30 L. T. 147; 22 W. R. 380.

Parties to Sue—Joint or Several Liability.]—By articles of agreement, reciting that the defendant had contracted with J., as the agent of the plaintiff and the other owners of the property, for the purchase of the lands therein mentioned, the defendant covenanted with the plaintiff and the several other parties beneficially interested, to perform such contract by paying the purchase-money on a certain day:—Held, that this covenant was several; and that the plaintiff might sue alone for the non-payment of his share of the purchase-money, without joining the other parties beneficially interested. Poole v. Hill, 6 M. & W. 835; 9 D. P. C. 300; 10 L. J., Ex. 81.

—— Death of Vendee.]—Where the vendor of an estate fails to make out a good title by the time stipulated, and the vendee dies, the personal representative of the vendee, and not his heir, is entitled to maintain an action to recover damages for loss of interest on the deposit, and for expenses incurred by the vendee in endeavouring to procure a title—the injury accruing to the personal estate. Orme v. Broughton, 4 M. & Sc. 417; 10 Bing. 359; 3 L. J., C. P. 208.

Costs in Chancery.]—M. agreed with F. to purchase land from him: M. then filed a bill against F. for specific performance, and master reported that F. had not a good title, whereupon the bill was dismissed without costs on either side:—Held, that M. could not recover from F., as damages for breach of the contract, costs incurred by M. in the chancery suit. Malden v. Fyson, 11 Q. B. 292; 17 L. J., Q. B. 85; 12 Jur. 228.

Mutual Obligations.]—By a memorandum A. agreed to sell to B. certain lands therein described, and all the mines, beds and veins of coal under the same, at a certain price; and B. agreed to purchase from A. all coal that he might from time to time require, at a fair market price:—Held, that these were concurrent acts, and that A. could not sue B. for not taking the coal, without averring performance or a readiness to perform his part of the agreement. Bankart v. Bowers, L. R. 1 C. P. 484.

Pleading.]—In an action by a vendee against a vendor for a return of the deposit, he can only recover the expenses of investigating the title by declaring specially. Flureau v. Thornhill, 2 Wm. Bl. 1078.

—— Bill of Costs.]—Where a declaration for breach of an agreement to assign a lease alleged that the defendant did not make out a good title, "by reason whereof the plaintiff has been necessarily put to great expenses amounting to a large sum of money," in and about investigating the title:—Held, that he might, by way of damage, recover the amount of a bill of costs due to his attorney, for investigating the title, though he had not paid such bill before action. Richardson v. Chasen, 10 Q. B. 756; 16 L. J., Q. B. 341; 11 Jur. 890.

—— Claims.]—Held, that general allegations of title in the plaintiff, and that his title was made good and satisfactory to the defendant, and that the plaintiff was ready and willing and offered to convey to the defendant, were tantamount to a performance of the agreement on his part, so as to entitle him to recover for a breach on the defendant's part in not paying the purchase money. Martin v. Smith, 6 East, 555; 2 Smith, 543.

A declaration alleging that the plaintiff agreed to sell and the defendant to buy land for 120*l.*, which the defendant agreed to pay on or before four years, with 5 per cent. half-yearly, until paid; that the four years had not expired, that the money had not been paid, and that a certain sum was due for interest, is good—without averring title to the land, or that the plaintiff was ready and willing to convey. Wilks v. Smith, 2

Held, in an action by the seller, for the non-performance on the part of the purchaser, that it was not sufficient to state that the seller had been always ready and willing and frequently offered to make a good title to the estate, and to make a proper surrender on payment of the purchase money; but the declaration ought to have averred, that the seller actually made a good title, and surrendered the estate to the purchaser, or a tender and refusal; and also to have shown what title the seller had. Phillips v. Fielding, 2 H. Bl. 123.

A plaintiff declared upon a contract by the defendant then holding land for a term of years, to assign all his interest to the plaintiff, on payment by the plaintiff, within seven years from a day named, of 140*l.* Breach, that, before the seven years expired, the defendant assigned all his interest to a stranger:—Held, that it was not necessary that the declaration should aver a tender of the money, or a request by the plaintiff, or the plaintiff's readiness to accept an assignment. Lovelock v. Franklin, 8 Q. B. 371; 15 L. J., Q. B. 146; 10 Jur. 246. S. P., Giles v. Giles, 9 Q. B. 164; 15 L. J., Q. B. 387; 11 Jur. 83.

—— Consideration—I O U.]—Count stated agreement for sale and 500*l.* to be paid as deposit, that the defendant being unable to pay the 500*l.*, in consideration that the plaintiff dispensed with payment down of the 500*l.*, and would take the defendant's I O U for the same, he promised the plaintiff that he would pay the 500*l.* as soon as he could write to his banker to remit the same. Breach, that the money was not paid:—Held, that the count disclosed a sufficient consideration for the defendant's promise. Davis v. Nisbett, 10 C. B. (N.S.) 752; 31 L. J., C. P. 6; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 211; 9 W. R. 840.

A plea, that before the defendant could procure his banker to remit, and before any demand of payment of the I O U, the defendant was disapproved as a tenant by S., is a good answer to the count. Ib.

—— Defences.]—A declaration stated, that the defendant caused to be put up to sale by auction certain premises, for the residue of a term of years, on the condition, that the defendant should deduce and make a good title thereto, commencing with the lease of the premises under which they were then held; and assigned, as a breach, that he did not deduce a good title commencing with the lease. Plea, that the defendant did deduce a good title to the premises, commencing with the lease, in all respects except this, that the premises were out of repair, of which the plaintiff had full knowledge:—Held, bad on general demurrer. Barnett v. Wheeler, 7 M. & W. 364; 10 L. J., Ex. 102.

The plaintiff agreed to sell to the defendant a share in a mining sett for 250*l.*, and the defendant agreed to purchase at that price:—Held, that the readiness and willingness of the plaintiff to convey, and the payment of the purchase money, were concurrent acts, and that therefore, to an action for non-payment of the money, a plea that the plaintiff was not ready and willing to convey was a good answer. Marsden v. Moore, 4 H. & N. 500; 28 L. J., Ex. 288.

In an action by vendee against vendor, for not delivering a proper abstract of title, the declaration alleged, that the sale was subject to a condition that the vendor should deliver an abstract of title to the purchaser; and assigned a breach in the non-delivery of any abstract showing such a good and sufficient title as the vendee was, according to the condition, entitled to require to be shown. A plea, that at the time of the making of the contract, it was agreed, as part of the contract, that the vendor should deliver an abstract of his title, commencing with a deed of conveyance from A. to B. only, and should not be required to furnish any other abstract, or go into any previous title:—Held, to amount to an augmentative and circuitous denial of the contract stated in the declaration, and to the general issue. Sharland v. Leifchild, 4 C. B. 529; 5 D. & L. 139; 16 L. J., C. P. 217; 11 Jur. 523. S. P., Wheeler v. Wright, 7 M. & W. 359; 9 D. P. C. 729; 10 L. J., Ex. 130.

—— Replication.]—On the sale by auction of property, the conditions provided, that the vendors should, within twenty days after the sale, deliver an abstract of title; and that all objections thereto not taken in writing within ten days afterwards should be considered as waived. In an action by the purchaser against the vendors for breach of the conditions, the latter pleaded that they, within twenty days after the sale, delivered an abstract; but that the purchaser did not, within ten days afterwards, take any objection to the title in writing. The purchaser replied, that, although the vendors did, within twenty days, deliver an abstract, yet that they did not by the abstract disclose a good and sufficient title; and that the purchaser did, within ten days after the delivery of the abstract, take objections to the title in writing:—Held, that the replication did not introduce new matter, but amounted to a traverse of the latter allegation in the plea. Smith v. Tanner, 2 Scott (N. R.) 77; 1 Man. & G. 802; 1 Drink. 21.

Evidence.]—Where there was a misrepresentation as to certain property made bonâ fide, but without authority, by the auctioneer at the time of sale:—Held, that evidence of what passed at the sale was admissible against the vendor. Brett v. Clowser, 5 C. P. D. 376.

A declaration stated, that the defendant agreed to sell a dwelling-house and fixtures for the residue of a term of years, to commence on and from the 1st of January, 1840, for the sum of 60*l.* The evidence adduced was the following agreement: "I agree to sell the house and fixtures, 163, Piccadilly, to commence from the 1st of January next, for 60*l.*":—Held, a variance between the declaration and agreement, as the latter purported to convey the fee-simple. Hughes v. Barker, 1 D. (N. S.) 80; 8 M. & W. 244; 10 L. J., Ex. 297.

Where the plaintiff stated in his declaration, that he was possessed of a lease of certain premises for a certain term of years, which he put up for sale, and which the defendant purchased; in an action for not completing the purchase, the plaintiff in proving his title must prove the execution of the original lease as well as of the mesne assignments to himself. Laythorpe v. Bryant, 1 Scott, 327; 1 Bing. (N.C.) 421; 1 Hodges, 19; 4 L. J., C. P. 108.

In a declaration for not completing a purchase of a copyhold, it was alleged, that on the 27th June the vendor "was ready and willing, at the office of the steward of the manor, to receive the residue of the purchase money, and then and there to surrender." This was denied by the plea:—Held, that this allegation was proved by showing that the vendor was ready and willing to have gone to the steward's office on that day to surrender, but did not do so, because on the 25th the purchaser told the solicitor, who was concerned for all parties, that he was not ready to complete the purchase on the 27th. Perry v. Smith, Car. & M. 554.

In an action against a purchaser of a freehold at an auction for not completing, the declaration averred that the vendor delivered an abstract of title pursuant to the conditions of sale, which averment was traversed:—Held, that the allegation was not sustained by proof that the vendor caused the lease and assignment which composed the whole title to be handed to the purchaser for perusal. Horne v. Wingfield, 3 Scott (N.R.) 340; 3 Man. & G. 33; 10 L. J., C. P. 295.

Upon a sale of houses by auction, the purchaser of two houses paid a deposit, signed an agreement as purchaser, and obtained a receipt from the auctioneer for the money paid as for a deposit on a sale by auction of the premises described in the particulars and conditions of sale. The abstract of title not being delivered, the purchaser brought an action against the auctioneer for the recovery of the deposit:—Held, that the production of the receipt and of the conditions of sale, without producing the written contract signed by the purchaser, was insufficient. Curtis v. Greated, 3 N. & M. 449; 1 A. & E. 167; 3 L. J., K. B. 126.

—— Knowledge of Defect.]—Where a party agrees to grant a good and valid lease, having full knowledge that he has no title, the plaintiff, in an action for breach of such agreement, may recover, beyond his expenses, damages resulting from the loss of his bargain, and the defendant cannot, under a plea of payment of money into court, give evidence that the plaintiff was aware of the defect of title. Robinson v. Harman, 1 Ex. 850; 18 L. J., Ex. 202.

T. agreed to sell to C. certain freehold houses, and to make a good marketable title. On investigation it appeared that the title was not marketable owing to certain restrictive covenants, of which it was alleged C. was aware at the time of the purchase:—Held, that evidence of C.'s knowledge was not admissible to vary the express terms of the contract. Cato v. Thompson, 9 Q. B. D. 616; 47 L. T. 491—C. A.

h. Title Deeds.

And see infra, C. 7.

Right to Production.]—Right of the purchaser to the production and to an abstract of all the documents relating to the property in the vendor's possession, whether a good title is made without them or not. Sparrow v. Hilton, 1 W. R. 87.

—— By Mortgagee.]—A mortgagee, who was a party to the suit, consented to a sale of the mortgaged property:—Held, that he must produce, and leave in the master's office, the title deeds which were necessary in order to complete such sale. Livesey v. Harding, 1 Beav. 343.

—— Covenant for.]—If vendor retains title deeds, and covenants for further assurance only, the purchaser may, under that covenant, compel him to enter into a covenant for production of deeds. Fain v. Ayers, 2 Sim. & S. 533; 4 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 166; 25 R. R. 264.

—— By Agreement.]—An agreement on the sale of an estate, that the title deeds should be delivered to the purchasers on completion; but, as the deeds related also to other property belonging to the vendors, the purchasers should enter into proper and sufficient covenants with the vendors for the production and delivery of copies of such deeds. The purchasers bought as trustees of a will which directed a strict settlement of the lands purchased:—Held, that the agreement to enter into a proper and sufficient covenant for the production of the deeds did not mean that the vendors should be entitled to a covenant which would secure to them their production at all times and under all circumstances. Onslow v. Londesborough (Lord), 10 Hare, 67.

Trustees sell and convey property held on trust for sale in the event of the debts of a partnership in which A. was interested exceeding a certain sum. The conveyance recites that A. had died intestate as to his real estates; and the heir-at-law of A. joins in that deed, and enters into a covenant for the title of the trustees, a covenant against all acts done by him or his father, and a covenant for further assurance. It afterwards appears to be uncertain whether A. had not devised his real estate:—Held, that the purchaser is not entitled to a covenant from any person for the production of the partnership books and papers. Hallett v. Middleton, 1 Russ. 243.

Deeds not Produced.]—Purchaser not bound to complete purchase without the title deeds, unless he has legal covenant to produce them. Barclay v. Raine, 1 Sim. & S. 449; 24 R. R. 206.

—— Security by Vendor.]—Vendor, having lost title deeds, agrees to give real security for title:—Held, personal security not sufficient, and that he must purchase real estates for that purpose. Walker v. Barnes, 3 Madd. 247; 18 R. R. 226.

—— Recital of Lost Deeds.]—Where, in title deed, there is a recital of prior deeds which are lost, and presumption is in favour of the title, purchaser cannot object to title on the ground of the absence of those deeds. Prosser v. Watts, 6 Madd. 59; 22 R. R. 238.

—— Secondary Evidence.]—In an abstract of title was contained a conveyance in 1797, in which were recitals of earlier deeds. Neither the conveyance nor the deeds mentioned in the recitals were produced, but secondary evidence was given, consisting of a draft of the release, which was produced, and proved to have been ingrossed; and extracts of entries in the books of a deceased solicitor of charges for preparing and attesting the execution of the deeds were also furnished:—Held, that as a sixty years' title was shown, the purchaser was not bound to verify the recitals contained in the earlier deeds. Moulton v. Edmonds, 1 De G. F. & J. 246; 29 L. J., Ch. 181; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 305; 8 W. R. 153.

The proper test in such a case, is whether the recited deeds cast reasonable suspicion on the title. Ib.

A purchaser objected to a title for want of a deed which had been inrolled, but could not be found. A copy of it, taken in 1632, attested by five witnesses:—Held, sufficient even without an attestation. Sed secus, if the original deed has been in a private hand. Harvey v. Philips, 2 Atk. 541.

A purchaser objected to complete, alleging a bad title, because three deeds were not produced, and there were covenants for the production of only two. The deeds were collateral only to the title; as to two, the purchaser had had their production, and attested copies; and as to the third, an opportunity of inspecting it, with an undertaking to have an attested copy of it:—Held, that the purchaser must complete his contract. Offen v. Harman, 29 L. J., Ch. 307; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 487; 1 L. T. 315; 8 W. R. 129—L.JJ.

—— Objection Waived.]—By the terms of an auction the title deeds were to be produced by a certain day; they were not then ready; but the purchaser received them afterwards without objection: he cannot afterwards object to the delay. Smith v. Burnam, 2 Anstr. 527; 3 R. R. 620.

If counsel for the purchaser waive the production of a particular document stated in the abstract to be lost, and the purchaser adopt the opinion and deal with the seller upon that view, he will not be permitted to repudiate the opinion of his counsel. Alexander v. Crosby, 1 Jo. & Lat. 666; 7 Ir. Eq. R. 445.

In 1745 I. executed a settlement of lands, reserving power, with the consent of A., to revoke the uses. The abstract of title set forth a will of I., dated in 1761, whereby he, with the consent of A., revoked the uses; and it referred to a copy of the will. P., the son and heir of I., by indenture of 1763, reciting the will of his father, resettled the estates, and possession had since gone accordingly. The will was not forthcoming:—Held, that its non-production was not an objection to the title. Ib.

—— Destruction by Fire.]—If after contract for sale of an estate before the title is accepted the title deeds be destroyed by fire, this court will not compel the specific performance of the contract, unless the vendor can furnish the purchaser with the means of showing what were the contents of the destroyed deeds and of proving that such deeds were duly executed and delivered. Bryant v. Bush, 4 Russ. 1; 28 R. R. 1.

Information not in Vendor's Possession—Expense of Obtaining.]—Where on a sale of property one of the documents of title is not in the possession of the vendor, and he does not know where it is, the expense of procuring information as to the whereabouts of the document must, under sub-s. 6 of s. 3 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, in the absence of special agreement, be borne by the purchaser, even although the document in question should be the root of the vendor's title. Stuart and Olivant and Seadon's Contract, In re, 65 L. J., Ch. 576; [1896] 2 Ch. 328; 74 L. T. 450; 44 W. R. 610—C. A. And see Willett and Argenti, In re, infra, col. 1501.

Sale of Manor.]—Where a manor is sold subject to the existing copyhold tenancies, the vendor must covenant for the production of the court rolls anterior to the time of sale. Poulett v. Hood, 37 L. J., Ch. 224; L. R. 5 Eq. 115; 17 L. T. 486; 16 W. R. 323.

Sale of Copyholds.]—The vendor of a piece of copyhold land enfranchised in 1799 delivered to the purchaser two abstracts commencing in 1736; one of the title to the land, the other of that of the manor. The deed of 1799 was forty years old, and recited that the then lord and the then owner of the land were respectively seised in fee, and several of the deeds relating to the lord's title were bargains, and sales inrolled; and, therefore, copies of them, as well as of the surrenders and admittances, which would be good evidence, might be procured by the purchaser at any time. The vendor was unable to deliver to the purchaser the deed of 1799, or any of the prior instruments, but was willing to covenant to produce that deed:—Held, that he was bound to give the purchaser covenants for production not only of that deed, but of all the prior instruments noticed in the abstracts. Cooper v. Emery, 10 Sim. 609. This was varied on appeal as to the copyholds, but affirmed as to the rest. 1 Ph. 388; 13 L. J., Ch. 275; 8 Jur. 181.

The period for which a good title is required to be shown is sixty years, notwithstanding the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27. Ib.

Right to Inspection.]—Where a title commenced by a general devise and seisin, and only proved by a deed more than sixty years old, reciting the seisin, and there was ground to assume that the vendor had deeds earlier than those on the abstract:—Held, the purchaser was entitled to inspection of those deeds, if in the vendor's possession, but not to have them in the abstract. Parr v. Lovegrove, 4 Drew. 170; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 600; 6 W. R. 709.

Quære, whether a purchaser is generally entitled to inspection of deeds earlier than a sixty years' title. Ib.

It is generally admitted that a purchaser may inspect the earlier deeds in the vendor's possession, but cannot require to have them abstracted. Ib.

A purchaser who agrees not to require an abstract of title has nevertheless a right to inspect the deeds which constitute the vendor's title. Harding v. ——, 4 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 213.

Right to Copies.]—One of the conditions of a sale by public auction stated that the purchaser should not require the production of any title deeds which were not in the possession of the vendors, and all attested copies of or extracts from deeds, which might be required by the purchaser for the purpose of examination with the abstract, should be procured at the expense of the purchaser. A. became the purchaser of two lots:—Held, that the purchaser was not entitled to attested copies of the title deeds at the expense of the vendors. Abbott v. Darnell, 2 Jur. (N.S.) 631; 4 W. R. 314.

A. agreed to sell to B. certain lands, and one of the conditions of sale was "as the title deeds of the property relate to other property of greater value, the vendor shall retain the custody thereof; and a covenant will be entered into for the production of such of them as are not inrolled, and for giving attested or other copies thereof to the respective purchasers at their expense":—Held, that B. could not compel A. to deliver attested copies at the expense of A. Cotton v. Scudamore, 1 K. & J. 321.

mortgagee of freehold land and policies on the life of the mortgagor under one deed, who, during the life of the mortgagor, in exercise of the power of sale contained in the mortgage, sells the land but retains the policies, does not retain "part of an estate" within the meaning of rule 5 of s. 2 of the Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874, and is therefore, in the absence of special condition, not entitled to retain the mortgage-deed, but must deliver it to the purchaser on completion. Fuller and Leathley's Contract, In re, or Williams and Newcastle's Contract, In re, 66 L. J., Ch. 543; [1897] 2 Ch. 144; 76 L. T. 646; 45 W. R. 627; 61 J. P. 454.

Sale in Lots—Purchaser of Largest Lot.]—Conditions of sale stipulated that the vendor of an estate, sold in lots, should deliver an abstract of the title to the purchasers, and deduce a good title; but that as to a part of the estate, acquired under an inclosure act, he should not be bound to show any title thereto prior to the award; and that the vendor should deliver up to the largest purchaser in value all the title deeds and other documents in his custody, but should not be required to produce any original deed or other documents than those in his possession, and set forth in the abstract:—Held, that these conditions did not excuse the vendor from verifying the title shown upon the abstract by producing the deeds, or, if any of them were not in his possession, by other satisfactory evidence. Southby v. Hutt, 2 Myl. & Cr. 207; 1 Jur. 100.

Where an estate is sold under a decree in several lots, and there is no condition of sale as to the title deeds, the purchaser of the largest lot is to have the custody of the title deeds common to all the lots, on the terms of giving to the purchasers of the smaller lots, attested copies, and a covenant for safe custody and production. Cunnyngham v. Hume, 1 Ir. Eq. R. 150.

By conditions of sale, the title deeds were to be delivered to "the purchaser of the largest lot." A. purchased the largest lot, in value and extent, but B. purchased several lots whose aggregate value and extent exceeded those of A.'s lot:—Held, that A. was entitled to the custody of the deeds. Scott v. Jackman, 21 Beav. 110.

The conditions of sale stipulated that the purchaser of "the largest lot" should be entitled to possession of the deeds:—Held, that "largest lot" had reference to quantity and not to price. Griffiths v. Hatchard, 1 K. & J. 17; 23 L. J., Ch. 957; 18 Jur. 649; 2 W. R. 672.

—— Copies.]—In a sale under the order of the court, the purchaser of the largest lot in extent and value is, in the absence of express condition, entitled to the deeds; and in the absence of express condition, the purchaser of a smaller lot is entitled, at the expense of the estate, to attested copies of all such deeds. A condition that all attested copies of deeds, "shall be procured at the expense of the purchaser":—Held, not sufficiently express to vary the rule. Peterson v. Elwes, 6 W. R. 611.

—— Costs.]—Although by the practice of conveyancers, the costs of covenants to produce title deeds which cannot be delivered up fall on the vendors, yet where, by the conditions of sale of property in lots, provision is made for the largest purchaser to have the deeds, and to covenant to produce them to the purchaser of smaller lots, without reference to the costs, each purchaser, and not the vendor, is bound to bear his own costs of such covenants. Strong v. Strong, 4 Jur. (N.S.) 943; 6 W. R. 455.

Purchaser who cannot have the original title deeds, the estate being sold in number of lots, is entitled to attested copies at expense of vendor. Dare v. Tucker, 6 Ves. 460. S. P., Boughton v. Jewell, 15 Ves. 176.

Where title deeds cannot be delivered, assignees must, like any other vendor, give attested copies of them at the expense of the estate; but their covenant, for the production of the deeds, should be confined to the time of their continuance as assignees. Stuart, Ex parte, 2 Rose, 215.

Delivery up of Title Deeds.]—See Heath v. Crealock, infra, col. 1359.

Rights of Third Parties.]—Covenant to produce title deeds remains with lands for benefit of purchasers, but not for benefit of vendors. Barclay v. Raine, 1 Sim. & S. 449; 24 R. R. 206.

A defendant entitled to the benefit of a covenant to produce deeds for the "maintenance, manifestation, or justification" of his own title, is not compellable to inspect and discover the contents of such deeds, or procure their production in a hostile suit to which the covenantor is not a party. Bethell v. Casson, 1 H. & M. 806; 3 N. R. 29; 9 L. T. 321; 12 W. R. 200.

Where a defendant holds a covenant for the production of deeds for the maintenance and manifestation of his title, he is not bound, in answer to interrogatories, to set out such deeds in a suit, the object of which is to show that a disputed piece of land is not comprised in the defendant's title. Ib.

A title deed of the defendant was ordered to be produced where it contained a recital that might affect him with constructive notice of the plaintiff's interest in the estate. Neesom v. Clarkson, 2 Hare, 166, n. C. P. Cooper, 93; 12 L. J., Ch. 99; 6 Jur. 1055.

—— Covenants for Production.]—By conditions of sale, it was stipulated that the vendors should not be required to produce any deeds not in their possession, and that all deeds of covenant for production of any deed or document, whether referred to in an abstract or not, which the purchaser should require for verifying the abstract, or for any other purpose, should "be made, and obtained by and at the expense of the purchaser requiring the same":—Held, that the vendors were not bound to procure covenants for production from parties holding deeds referred to in the abstract. Gabriel v. Smith, 16 Q. B. 847; 20 L. J., Q. B. 386; 15 Jur. 1124.

Possession by Incumbrancer.]—The possession of the title deeds by the equitable incumbrancer, without any default on the part of the person who has contracted to purchase, does not give the former any right to priority over the latter, or to require the latter to redeem him, or be foreclosed. Flinn v. Fountain, 58 L. J., Ch. 389; 60 L. T. 484; 37 W. R. 443.

2. Of Third Parties.

a. Purchaser without Notice.

i. In General.

In General.]—A man who purchases without notice of a prior incumbrance or prior right, shall not have his title impeached in equity, nor shall he be compelled to discover any writings which may weaken his title, neither shall any advantage be taken from him which may defend him at law. Harding v. Hardrett, Rep. t. Finch. 9; Heyman v. Gomeldon, id. 34; Snelling v. Squib, 2 Ch. Ca. 47; Wilkes v. Bodington, 2 Vern. 599; Stephens v. Gaule, id. 701. He must plead himself a purchaser, without notice. Bodmin v. Vandenbendy, 1 Vern. 179. S. P., Anon., 3 Salk. 85; Gordon v. Bank of England, 8 Jur. 1132.

Bill by purchaser without notice of mortgage and assignment for delivery up of deeds, and conveyance of legal estate, upheld. Bennett v. Harrison, 7 Jur. 436.

Plea of purchase for valuable consideration without notice protects defendant from answering to title set up by plaintiff. Fitzgerald v. Fauconberge, Fitz. 207; 2 Madd. 321.

This court will not take the least step against a purchaser for valuable consideration without notice, not even to perpetuate testimony against him. Jerrard v. Saunders, 2 Ves. J. 454.

Devisee shall not examine witnesses in perpetuam rei memoriam, to prove a will against a purchaser without notice, till the will has been established by a verdict at law. Bechinall v. Arnold, 1 Vern. 354.

Where Purchaser's Interest is Equitable.]—Legal interest prevails against a prior equitable interest. Wilson v. Stafford, Amb. 181.

Purchase for valuable consideration without notice, is not available as a defence against a plaintiff who relies upon a legal title. Collins v. Archer, 1 Russ. & M. 284.

Semble, that a purchase for a valuable consideration without notice, is available as a defence against a plaintiff who relies on a legal title. Payne v. Compton, 2 Y. & C. 457.

Purchase for valuable consideration without notice, may be a good defence, although the legal estate is outstanding in a mortgagee. Penny v. Watts, 2 De G. & Sm. 501.

A court of equity does not restrict the protection it will afford a purchaser for valuable consideration without notice, to a case in which he has got the legal estate. Colyer v. Finch, 5 H. L. Cas. 905; 2 Eq. R. 117; 2 W. R. 655.

A purchaser without notice shall not be hurt in equity, not only where he has a prior legal title, but where he has a better right to call for the legal estate than another, who has got an incumbrance prior to his title. Wilkes v. Bodington, 2 Vern. 599. S. P., Medlicott v. O'Donell, 1 Ball & B. 171.

He who would entitle himself to protection of equity as a purchaser, must claim under actual conveyance, but need not have the legal estate. Fitzgerald v. Fauconberge, supra.

He that is a purchaser in law, as by taking estate in right of wife by his marriage, is not a purchaser in notion of equity. Ib.

The court will protect a purchaser for valuable consideration without notice, even though his estate may be merely equitable. Hunter v. Walters, 41 L. J., Ch. 175; L. R. 7 Ch. 75; 25 L. T. 765; 20 W. R. 218. S. P., Ernest v. Vivian, 33 L. J., Ch. 513; 9 L. T. 785; 12 W. R. 295.

A purchase for a valuable consideration without notice, is a defence as well against a legal as an equitable title. Joyce v. De Moleyns, 2 Jo. & Lat. 374; 8 Ir. Eq. R. 215.

—— Charity.]—And also as against a charity. Att.-Gen. v. Wilkins, 17 Beav. 285; 22 L. J., Ch. 830; 17 Jur. 885; 1 W. R. 472.

When Plea is Available.]—The defence that he is a purchaser for value without notice, is only available where the plaintiff is seeking to take something away from the defendant which he already has. Barnard v. Hunter, 2 Jur. (N.S.) 1213; 5 W. R. 92.

The plea of a purchaser for value without notice is not available to the mortgagee of an assignment of a chose in action as against the assignor, even though the assignor seeks to enforce a personal equity against his assignee. Ib.

—— Purchaser failing to make Inquiries.]—A purchaser cannot plead no notice if he abstain from calling for information to which he is entitled by law. Parker v. Whyte, 1 H. & M. 167; 2 N. R. 157; 32 L. J., Ch. 520; 8 L. T. 446; 11 W. R. 683.

Plea of valuable consideration without notice is no protection against adverse claim, of which purchaser might have had notice by using due diligence. Jackson v. Rowe, 2 Sim. & S. 472; 4 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 118; 25 R. R. 250.

A deed of conveyance purported to grant the whole of the demised premises, and the covenants for title corresponded with the granting part; the vendor had previously assigned a portion of the premises to a railway company by a deed not disclosed to the purchaser, but the purchaser knew of the works erected by the railway company:—Held, that the condition of the premises being known to both parties, they should be taken to have contracted as to them in that condition, and that the deed of conveyance should be rectified. Young v. Halahan, Ir. R. 9 Eq. 70.

—— Condition not to Inquire.]—A purchaser of a lease, under a condition not to inquire into the lessor's title, cannot protect himself against a suit to set aside the lease on the ground that he is a purchaser for value without notice. Robson v. Flight, 33 Beav. 268; 34 L. J., Ch. 226; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 147; 11 L. T. 725; 13 W. R. 393.

—— Grounds for not Inquiring.]—The rule with respect to the consequence of a purchaser abstaining from making inquiries does not depend exclusively on a fraudulent motive for such abstinence. Jones v. Williams, 24 Beav. 47; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 1066; 5 W. R. 775.

Sufficiency of Inquiry.]—W., after completing a contract to buy premises, told M. that he had done so. M. was afterwards informed by the vendor that the treaty with W. was off. M. did not make any further inquiry, and bought and took an assignment of the premises himself:—Held, that he must be held to have had notice of W.'s contract. Waldron v. Jacob, Ir. R. 5 Eq. 131.

Fraud.]—Quære, whether purchaser for valuable consideration, under a decree fraudulently obtained, though ignorant of fraud, can protect himself, when fraud appears on face of proceedings. Gore v. Staepoole, 1 Dow, 30; 14 R. R. 1.

The rule that a purchaser for valuable consideration without notice, is protected by the legal estate, extends not only to cases where his title is impeached by reason of some secret act done by the vendor, but to cases also of the falsehood of a fact of title asserted by the vendor, provided the falsehood of the alleged fact could not have been discovered by reasonable diligence. Jones v. Powles, 3 Myl. & K. 581; 3 L. J., Ch. 210.

Equitable Incumbrance.]—There is no general rule that a court of equity will never assist a plaintiff against a defendant who is a purchaser without notice; and an incumbrancer for value of an equitable interest may successfully file a bill against a subsequent incumbrancer for value to have a priority declared and enforced. Phillips v. Phillips, 4 De G. F. & J. 208; 31 L. J., Ch. 321; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 145; 5 L. T. 655; 10 W. R. 236. Affirming 3 Giff. 200. S. P., Stackhouse v. Jersey (Countess), 1 J. & H. 721; 30 L. J., Ch. 421; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 359; 4 L. T. 204; 9 W. R. 453.

—— Priorities.]—A person who has contracted to purchase real estate is entitled to specific performance of the contract as against a person claiming under an equitable incumbrance created by the vendor subsequently to the contract, whether the incumbrancer had or had not notice of the contract when the incumbrance was created. Flinn v. Fountain, 58 L. J., Ch. 389; 60 L. T. 484; 37 W. R. 443.

One seised of an estate, subject to several equitable incumbrances, sells it to a purchaser, and conveys the legal estate to him free from incumbrances, except some of the equitable incumbrances, which were later in date to the others; the purchaser, having no notice of the other incumbrances, was held a trustee for the excepted creditors only, and they were preferred to the other creditors. Ingram v. Pelham, Amb. 153.

Purchase of Chose in Action.]—The purchaser of a chose in action (whether with or without notice) cannot be in a better position than the person from whom he purchased. Brandon v. Brandon, 7 De G. M. & G. 365; 25 L. J., Ch. 896; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 981; 5 W. R. 1.

A purchaser (even for valuable consideration without notice) of a share of a fund in court cannot be in a better position than his vendor. Ib.

Purchaser of an equitable title to a rent-charge, claiming against some purchasers of the land for a valuable consideration without notice, must try his title at law in the name of his vendors. Whitfield v. Fausset, 1 Ves. sen. 387. And see Barnard v. Hunter, supra.

Where Relief Sought.]—Title of purchaser for valuable consideration is a good ground of defence, but not for relief. Patterson v. Slaughter, Amb. 293.

Bankruptcy.]—Equity will not relieve the assignees of a bankrupt against a purchaser of the bankrupt's lands without notice of the act of bankruptcy. Chandos v. Brownlow, 2 Ridgw. 425.

Private Act.]—Purchasers for valuable consideration not bound by private act of parliament. Pomfret (Earl) v. Windsor (Lord), 2 Ves. sen. 480.

Lease after Sequestration.]—Lease of lands in Ireland, made after the lessor's estate had been put under sequestration for contempt of court of exchequer in that kingdom, was held good, the lessee having no notice of sequestration. Vicars v. Colclough, 5 Bro. P. C. 31.

Marriage Settlement.]—A party claiming to be a purchaser for a valuable consideration without notice, under a marriage contract, must show that he had no notice at the time of the settlement. Davies v. Thomas, 2 Y. & C. 234; 7 L. J., Ex. Eq. 21.

Money actually Paid.]—Where a defendant, by his answer, insists that he is a purchaser for valuable consideration, and without notice, proof of payment of the purchase money is essential. Molony v. Kernan, 2 Dr. & War. 31. S. P., Harrison v. Southcote, 1 Atk. 538.

On plea of purchase for valuable consideration, the consideration must be actually paid; if, in fact, it is only secured to be paid, the plea will be overruled. Hardingham v. Nicholls, 3 Atk. 304.

Purchase for a valuable consideration bonâ fide paid:—Held, a good defence, though the consideration was much less than the real value. Bullock v. Sadlier, Amb. 764.

Where purchaser has given a full value for estate, mistake of some party to conveyance of their claim thereto under a marriage settlement shall not turn to the prejudice of the purchaser without notice. Malden v. Menill, 2 Atk. 8.

Dower.]—Plea of purchase for valuable consideration, not good to a bill for dower. Williams v. Lambe, 3 Bro. C. C. 264.

Notice before Completion.]—Sale subject to first and second mortgages. The purchaser paid by cheque, which he stopped, but after notice of a third mortgage withdrew his countermand:—Held, bound to redeem the third mortgage. Tildesley v. Dodge, 3 Sm. & G. 543; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 1000.

A purchaser gives the vendor's bankers an undertaking to give them his acceptance for a sum due to them from the vendor, but before he has given his acceptance, he has notices of incumbrances:—Held, that he is not a purchaser for valuable consideration without notice. Reid v. Tait, 1 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 6.

The plaintiff, previous to his marriage with A.'s daughter, wrote to A., inquiring what fortune his daughter was entitled to. A., in his reply, stated that certain houses were entailed on his daughter after his decease. A. died, leaving his daughter his only child, and having devised all his real estates to his wife. It was then discovered that A. was tenant in tail male of the houses, with reversion to himself in fee. Pending proceedings by the plaintiff and his wife, A.'s widow mortgaged the houses to H., charged them with an annuity to M., and conveyed them, subject to the mortgage and annuity, to W. in fee. H., W., and M. had none of them then any notice of the suit or of the plaintiff's claim. After notice to M. the houses were conveyed to him in fee by H. and W. After a decree taken pro confesso against A.'s widow, the plaintiff had notice of the conveyance to M., and filed a bill against M. M. relied on the want of notice in H. and W., and in himself when he purchased the annuity, but the court, on motion, granted a receiver. Landon v. Morris, 5 Sim. 257; 2 L. J., Ch. 35.

Will—Partnership.]—A trader by his will allowed his executors to leave his capital in the business for three or seven years. A year after the death the partners agreed with the administratrix that the new firm should "take to" the whole stock on paying her 63,000*l.*, and should become purchasers of the testator's share for that sum:—Held, they were purchasers of the share for valuable consideration, and without notice of the trusts of the will. Chambers v. Howell, 11 Beav. 6; 12 Jur. 905.

Lease obtained by Fraud.]—Where A. entered into an agreement with B. respecting lease of lands, which lease B. had obtained from landlord by fraud and circumvention:—Held, that heir of A., and purchasers for valuable consideration claiming under him, were entitled in equity to benefit of agreement between B. and A., and that heir of landlord was entitled to benefit of agreement, so far as B. took an interest. Butler v. Mulvihill, 1 Bligh, 137.

Trustee—Tenants in Common.]—When a person seised in trust for himself and another in common retains the entire rents, the debt arising in favour of the co-tenant will not be charged on the trustee's beneficial interest as against a purchaser without notice from him. British Mutual Investment Co. v. Smart, 44 L. J., Ch. 695; L. R. 10 Ch. 567; 32 L. T. 849; 23 W. R. 800.

—— Breach of Trust.]—If the persons claiming under the breach of trust have notice of it, then they are subject to the same trust; so, if the conveyance be voluntary, or without a valuable consideration; but if for a valuable consideration, and without notice, the purchaser will hold the land discharged, and the trustees must buy and settle other land to the same uses. Mansell v. Mansell, 2 P. Wms. 681.

A cestui que trust of an annuity, secured by a term in an estate, filed a bill against the trustee of the term and the purchaser for value of the estate, praying that the trusts of the term might be administered. The purchaser, who was in possession of the estate, had no notice of the term, and denied the existence of any term in the trustee:—Held, that until the trustee had established his right to the term at law, the cestui que trust could have no such relief as prayed in equity. Clemow v. Geach, 19 W. R. 53.

—— Fraud.]—Trustees of a marriage settlement, whereby a mortgage debt was settled for the benefit of A., cannot set up the defence of purchasers for valuable consideration without notice, independently of A., when the mortgage is attempted to be set aside on the ground of fraud. Spaight v. Cowne, 1 N. R. 550; 2 J. & H. 617.

A purchaser, upon signing the contract, assigned and delivered a negotiable bond as a deposit to T., who alleged himself to be the solicitor for the vendor. T. transferred the bond to the defendant, as a security for his own debt. The vendor of the real estate was a fictitious person, and the contract a fraud:—Held, that the deposit did not make T. a trustee for the plaintiff; and that the defendant, being a purchaser for value without notice, could not be restrained from dealing with the bond. Ashwin v. Burton, 32 L. J., Ch. 196; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 319; 7 L. T. 589; 11 W. R. 103.

Fraud on Power.]—Voluntary settlement of personal property, in trust for such one or more of his children as the settlor shall appoint. Appointment to one child exclusively, upon a secret understanding that the child shall reassign a part of the fund to or in favour of a stranger. This appointment is void, in toto. Bill, by purchaser for valuable consideration, without notice, under this appointment, dismissed as against the person entitled under the settlement, in default of appointment; such person having also the legal estate in the fund. Daubeny v. Cockburn, 1 Mer. 626; 15 R. R. 174.

ii. On Acquiring the Legal Estate.

Mortgage.]—On a mortgage by A., the mortgagee allowed A. to retain the title deeds. A. covenanted with B. and C. to execute a mortgage of the estate as a security for the debt due to them; and the title deeds were at the same time deposited by A. with his own solicitor, but no legal mortgage was ever executed by A. to B. and C. In 1850 A. made a legal mortgage of the estate to D., who had no notice of the prior incumbrances, and the title deeds were delivered to D.:—Held, that as D. acquired the legal estate without notice of the prior incumbrances, he became entitled to priority over B. and C. Lloyd v. Attwood, 3 De G. & J. 614; 29 L. J., Ch. 97; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1322.

Equitable Mortgage.]—Title deeds were deposited as a security for money; the defendant, a creditor of the mortgagor, fearing his immediate insolvency, took a conveyance of the same premises, without notice of the incumbrance: this was held good. Plumb v. Fluitt, 2 Anstr. 432; 3 R. R. 605.

Forged Will.]—Where the purchaser, for valuable consideration, claimed under a party who had obtained possession under a forged will, which no reasonable diligence could have discovered:—Held, that the legal estate acquired from a trustee of a satisfied mortgage protected him as a purchaser for valuable consideration without notice. Jones v. Powles, 3 Myl. & K. 581.

Pendente Lite.]—A person who has bonâ fide paid money without notice of any other title, may afterwards, even pendente lite, get a legal title if he can, and may hold it, though during the interval between the payment and the getting in of the legal title he may have had notice of some prior dealing inconsistent with the good faith of the dealing with himself. Blackwood v. London Chartered Bank of Australia, 43 L. J., P. C. 25; L. R. 5 P. C. 92; 30 L. T. 45; 22 W. R. 419.

Settlement.]—Purchaser for valuable consideration without notice shall not be impeached, especially when a settlement has been since made in his favour. Rochfort v. Nugent, 5 Bro. P. C. 351.

How Acquired.]—A purchaser for valuable consideration without notice of any prior equity having accidentally acquired the legal estate under a deed of which he had no notice at the time of the purchase, is not affected without notice of anything contained in such deed. Pilcher v. Rawlins, 41 L. J., Ch. 485; L. R. 7 Ch. 259; 25 L. T. 921; 20 W. R. 281.

Such a purchaser's plea of a purchase for valuable consideration without notice is an absolute, unqualified, unanswerable defence, and an unanswerable plea to the jurisdiction of the court. Ib.

—— From Trustee.]—A purchaser for valuable consideration, without notice, getting in the legal estate from a trustee, takes it subject to all those trusts upon which the trustee held it, and appearing upon the face of the instrument under which the trustee takes. Carter v. Carter, 3 K. & J. 618; 27 L. J., Ch. 74; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 63.

—— By Fraud.]—When purchasers were purchasers only of an equity of redemption, and where they could not avail themselves of the legal estate, the reconveyance of which had been procured by fraud:—Held, that the reconveyance must be cancelled, and an account taken of what was due on the security, and a decree that the amount found due should be paid, and that upon default of payment and on the purchaser failing to pay such amount, there must be a foreclosure instead of a sale. Heath v. Crealock, 44 L. J., Ch. 157; L. R. 10 Ch. 22; 31 L. T. 650; 23 W. R. 95.

Held, also, that the purchasers could not be ordered to deliver up the title deeds in their possession, the rule being that from a purchaser for value without notice the court takes nothing away which he has honestly acquired. Ib.

Deposit of Title Deeds.]—T., claiming under a fictitious lease, mortgaged to A. M., under another fictitious lease, mortgaged to B. M. (being in possession of the legal estate) then mortgaged to C. by deposit of the title deeds, and C., as equitable mortgagee, entered into possession. In an action by A. to settle the priorities of himself, B. and C. as incumbrancers on the property:—Held, that as purchaser for value without notice by deposit of the genuine title deeds, C., though subsequent in date, was entitled in priority over A. and B. Keate v. Phillips, 50 L. J., Ch. 664; 18 Ch. D. 560; 44 L. T. 731; 29 W. R. 710. And see Plumb v. Fluitt, supra.

Deposit of Agreement for Sale.]—A father in possession of land under an agreement for sale was advanced sums by his sons. The sons surreptitiously obtained possession of the agreement, and deposited it with a bank as a security for a loan, alleging that the father had given up to them all his interest in the land, and would execute a conveyance to the bankers when required. The father had previously to this transaction become surety for the sons to another bank:—Held, that the sons had an equitable charge upon the land, as against the father, for the amount paid by them to the father; that although the deposit was made under false representations, and did not bind the father, yet that the bankers were purchasers for value without notice, and were entitled to a charge on the land to the full extent of the lien on the sons; and that although the father, in respect of his suretyship, had a right to set-off against his sons, yet it could not be enforced against the bankers, whose right accrued without notice of any claim of the father. Unity Joint Stock Banking Association v. King, 27 L. J., Ch. 585; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 470; 6 W. R. 264.

F. contracted to sell to P. leasehold property. P. having paid to F. part of the purchase money, deposited with a bank the contract in order to secure a debt due by him to the bank, and F. received and accepted a formal notice of this charge. Subsequently F. assigned the legal estate in the premises to P. in such manner as to enable P. to defeat the bank's charge, which he did by assigning the premises to a purchaser without notice:—Held, that F. was not liable to make good the loss occasioned to the bank by such his assignment Shaw v. Foster, 42 L. J., Ch. 49; L. R. 5 H. L. 321; 27 L. T. 281; 20 W. R. 907.

Administration taken out.]—R., representing A. to be dead, took out administration and sold a charge to which A. was entitled under a term in reversion after a life estate, to a purchaser for value, who took an assignment of the term from the trustee of the term. A. was not dead, and claimed to set aside the sale:—Held, that the purchaser had no good title to the charge, though he had obtained the legal estate by the assignment of the term. Monckton v. Braddell, Ir. R. 6 Eq. 352.

Purchase by Agent.]—The plaintiffs appointed by parol W. as their agent to purchase land. W. entered into a contract in his own name, and then assigned the benefit of the contract to J. for valuable consideration. In an action by the plaintiffs against W. and J., to establish the agency:—Held, that the plea of purchase for value without notice, raised by J., was of no avail, inasmuch as the prior equitable title vested in the plaintiffs by the force of the contract. Cave v. Mackenzie, 46 L. J., Ch. 564; 37 L. T. 218.

Release from Mortgage.]—S. executed mortgages to B. upon estates in Ireland. The deed contained several covenants that the lands were free from incumbrances, and for further assurance. Before the deeds were registered it was discovered that a portion of the land was subject to a mortgage to E. S., by fraud, procured a release from E. of the land subject to the mortgage. B., in ignorance of the fraud, then registered his deeds:—Held, that E. was the equitable owner of the estate, and could at any time, by bill in equity, have set aside the fraudulent release, and his equitable title ought to be preferred to the claim of B. Eyre v. Burmester, 10 W. R. 587.

Statute.]—A subsequent purchaser protected by getting in an old satisfied statute. Stanton v. Sadler, 2 Vern. 30.

Assignee of a statute purchases the estate, having notice of a second statute. How far he shall make use of the first statute to protect his purchase, quære. Huntingdon v. Greenville, 1 Vern. 49.

Conusee of a statute, having extended the land, assigns it to J. and dies. One that had a second statute gets administration, and acknowledges satisfaction on the first statute. Equity will relieve against this practice, and put the assignee in the same plight as if the statute was still in force. Id. 51.

iii. Practice and Pleading.

Pleading.]—The defence of purchaser for valuable consideration, without notice, must be stated distinctly in the pleadings, else it cannot prevail. Therefore, in an affidavit on a motion it was not allowed. Phillips v. Phillips, 3 Giff. 200. Affirmed, 4 De G. F. &. J. 208; 31 L. J., Ch. 321; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 145; 5 L. T. 655; 10 W. R. 236.

—— Notice.]—Bill by a dowress to remove trust term; defendant pleads himself a purchaser, but does not deny notice; ordered to answer. Bodmin v. Vandenbendy, 1 Vern. 179. S. P., Ireland v. Kidd, Jon. & C. 249; Hardy v. Reeves, 5 Ves. 426.

Notice must be denied positively, not evasively. Cason v. Round, Pre. Ch. 226. S. P., Jerrard v. Saunders, 2 Ves. J. 187; 4 Bro. C. C. 322; Jones v. Thomas, 3 P. Wms. 243.

On plea of purchase for valuable consideration without notice of plaintiff's title, it is not sufficient to deny notice at or before the execution of the conveyance to him; he must aver that he had none at or before payment of the purchase money. Story v. Windsor (Lord), 2 Atk. 630; 1 Ch. Ca. 34. S. P., Fitzgerald v. Burk, 2 Atk. 397.

In plea of purchase for valuable consideration without notice, it is enough to deny notice generally, in plea, unless facts are specially charged in bill, as evidence of notice. Pennington v. Beechy, 2 Sim. & S. 282.

If special notice of title is charged by bill, such notice must be denied specially; a general demurrer is not sufficient. Radford v. Wilson, 3 Atk. 815. S. P., Att.-Gen. v. Marrett, 10 Ir. Eq. R. 167.

A bill against assignee of a lease, charging that defendant knew t at the lease was expired, and that the same did appear by writing in his custody. Defendant pleads that he was a purchaser of the lease, and was then informed that there were fifty-seven years to come in the lease, and therefore gave nineteen years' purchase for it; allowed a good plea. Worcester (Bishop) v. Parker, 2 Vern. 255.

—— Notice not Denied.]—A defendant in a plea of a purchase for valuable consideration, omits to deny notice; if the plaintiff replies to it, all the defendant has to do is to prove his purchase. Harris v. Ingledew, 3 P. Wms. 94.

Where in a plea of purchase for valuable consideration, the purchaser omitted to deny notice, and the plaintiff replied to it instead of setting it down for argument, if the defendant prove what he has pleaded, the bill as against him must be dismissed with costs. Eyre v. Dolphin, 2 Ball & B. 302; 12 R. R. 94.

—— Seisin and Possession.]—In the pleading of a purchase or mortgage, the defendant must plead that the sellor or mortgagor was, or pretended to be, seised in fee. Head v. Egerton, 3 P. Wms. 281. S. P., Strode v. Blackburne, 3 Ves. 222.

A plea of purchase for valuable consideration without notice of plaintiff's title; it is sufficient to aver that the person who conveyed was seised, or pretended to be seised, when he executed the purchase deeds; but where a fine or non-claim is the bar, averment of actual seisin is necessary. Story v. Windsor (Lord), 2 Atk. 630; 1 Ch. Ca. 34.

Plea of purchaser for valuable consideration, stating vendor seised, &c., but not adding in possession, overruled. Lanesborough (Lord) v. Kilmaine (Lady), 2 Moll. 403.

The defendant put in a plea of purchase for valuable consideration without notice, averring that "A., before the execution of the conveyance, alleged that she was seised," and was in possession. The court held that such a plea must aver that the vendor was seised, or pretended to be seised, and in possession when the conveyance was executed. Jackson v. Rowe, 4 Russ. 514; 9 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 32; 28 R. R. 168. S. P., Trevanian v. Mosse, 1 Vern. 246; Daniels v. Davison, 16 Ves. 252; 10 R. R. 171; Att.-Gen. v. Backhouse, 17 Ves. 290; Wallwyn v. Lee, 9 Ves. 24; 7 R. R. 142.

—— Consideration.]—Plea of purchaser for value need not set forth the consideration paid. More v. Mayhow, 1 Ch. Ca. 34; 2 Free. C. C. 175.

—— Reversionary Interest.]—Plea of purchaser from one having a reversionary estate, and consequently not in possession, overruled, because it did not set out how the person from whom the title was deduced became entitled. Hughes v. Garth, 2 Eden, 168; Amb. 421.

Discovery.]—A man who purchases without notice, shall not be compelled to discover any writings which may weaken his title, neither shall any advantage be taken from him, which may defend him at law. Harding v. Hardrett, Rep. t. Finch. 9; Heyman v. Gomeldon, id. 34; Snelling v. Squib, 2 Ch. Ca. 47; Wilkes v. Bodington, 2 Vern. 599; Stephens v. Gaule, id. 701. He must plead himself a purchaser without notice. Bodmin v. Vandenbendy, 1 Vern. 179. S. P., Williams v. Lane, 8 Bro. P. C. 291.

Assignee of a mortgage from persons not having notice of mortgagor's being only tenant for life, not bound to discover whether he himself had notice. Sweet v. Southcote, 2 Bro. C. C. 66; Dick. 670.

A plea of purchaser without notice, is a bar to the discovery as well as the relief. Eyre v. Dolphin, 2 Ball & B. 303; 12 R. R. 94.

Claim for rent charge. The defendant admitted the right to the rent charge, but contended that he represented purchasers for valuable consideration without notice. He admitted he had in his possession title deeds which made out his own title, but did not make out or evidence the title of the claimant:—Held, that the defendant was not bound to produce them. Att.-Gen. v. Strutt, 3 Beav. 396; 10 L. J., Ch. 24.

Bill by tenant in tail in possession, under marriage settlement, for discovery and delivery of title deeds. Plea, mortgage by tenant for life alleging himself to be seised in fee, and in possession of premises and deeds as apparent owner. Wallwyn v. Lee, 9 Ves. 24; 7 R. R. 142.

—— Contents of Deed Stated.]—A. first mortgaged to B., and afterwards sold and conveyed to C., to whom he delivered the title deeds. In a suit by B. against C., insisting on his priority, C., by his answer, professed to state the contents of the deed of conveyance to A. He admitted the possession of this and the other title deeds, but insisted that he was a purchaser for valuable consideration without notice:—Held, that B. was entitled to the production of the conveyance to A., but that the other title deeds were privileged. Hunt v. Elmes, 27 Beav. 62; 28 L. J., Ch. 680; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 645; 7 W. R. 471.

If the defendant in his answer sets out partially the conveyance made to his vendor, he must produce the deed to verify the statement. Ib.

—— Mortgage — Tenants in Common.]—Motion by a plaintiff, for the production of a deed in possession of the defendant as tenant in common with the plaintiff, refused as the defendant had sold his share, and was in possession of the deed only as a mortgagee to the purchaser. A mortgagee has no right to show the title of his mortgagor. Lambert v. Rogers, 2 Mer. 489; 16 R. R. 204.

—— Person not Party to Action.]—Person interested in issue devisavit vel non, refusing to be party to it, is yet allowed to attend trial by counsel, and ordered to produce deeds, &c., except those she held as mortgagee. Pindar v. Smith, 6 Madd. 48.

—— Recital giving notice of Plaintiff's Title.]—A title deed of the defendant was ordered to be produced where it contained a recital that might affect him with constructive notice of the plaintiff's interest in the estate. Neesom v. Clarkson, 2 Hare, 166, n.; C. P. Cooper, 93; 12 L. J., Ch. 99; 6 Jur. 1055.

—— Fraud.]—A deed in the custody of a purchaser for valuable consideration which the bill impeached for fraud, ordered to be produced. Kennedy v. Green, 6 Sim. 6.

Where the purchase was impeached on the ground of fraud and inadequate consideration, the purchaser was bound to produce the deeds by which that transaction was effected, and all subsequent documents relating to it, but not any of the other title deeds. Addis v. Campbell, 1 Beav. 258; 8 L. J., Ch. 305.

A son, heir-at-law to his father and one of the executors and trustees of his father's will, which had been proved by the other executors, and whose christian names and description were identical with those of his father, after his father's death, executed mortgages of property of the father, and applied the mortgage money to his own purposes. He handed over the title deeds to the mortgagees. The transaction took place without the knowledge of the co-trustees and co-executrixes. The will had not been registered in the Middlesex registry, though the property was situate in that county. The mortgage deeds were registered, and the solicitor who acted for both parties searched the Middlesex registry:—Held, that the mortgagees could obtain no title by virtue of the Middlesex Registry Act. Cooper, In re, Cooper v. Vesey, 51 L. J., Ch. 862; 20 Ch. D. 611; 47 L. T. 89; 30 W. R. 648.

Held, also, that the mortgagees must deliver up the title deeds to the plaintiffs. Since the Judicature Act the chancery division has jurisdiction on the application of the legal owner of the title deeds to order them to be delivered up by a purchaser for value without notice. McLeod v. Drummond (17 Ves. 152; 11 R. R. 41) distinguished. Ib.

Mortgage by trustees. The mortgagor subsequently, with the concurrence of one trustee, sold part of the mortgaged property with a recital that the mortgagor was seised or otherwise well and sufficiently entitled in fee simple. The solicitor-trustee received the purchase money, and retained it. Eleven years afterwards both trustees executed a reconveyance of the property so sold, the other trustee believing that the property was then about to be sold by the mortgagor:—Held, that though the purchasers were purchasers for valuable consideration without notice, they could not avail themselves of any legal estate acquired by means of the reconveyance, which, having been obtained by fraud, must be cancelled; and that they had purchased only the equity of redemption. Heath v. Crealock, 44 L. J., Ch. 157; L. R. 10 Ch. 22; 31 L. T. 650; 23 W. R. 95.

Held, that a decree must be made against the purchasers, but for foreclosure and not for sale; and that the purchasers would not be ordered to deliver up the deeds which were in their possession. Ib.

—— Deed held by Executrix.]—A jointress had her own part of the marriage settlement in her custody, and became possessed of her husband's, as his executrix; on motion, she was ordered to produce it to the clerk in court, but not to deliver it up, that being the very end of the bill. Aston v. Aston, 3 Atk. 302.

A jointress or purchaser ought to produce their deeds, to see if the lands they claim are comprised therein. Ib.

—— Bankrupt Vendor.]—Equity will not compel a man to discover what goods he really bought of a bankrupt after the bankruptcy, and before the commission sued out, where the party has no notice of the bankruptcy. Abery v. Williams, 1 Vern. 27.

Under a commission against a bankrupt mortgagor, the commissioners have authority, by the 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, ss. 33, 34, to enforce from a mortgagee of the bankrupt's property the production of his mortgage deed. The rule that a purchaser for valuable consideration, without notice, cannot be compelled to discover his title deeds, does not extend to the mortgage or purchase deed itself. Caldecott, Ex parte, White, In re, Mont. 55.

—— Of Rents and Charges.]—A plaintiff sought to set aside a lease and to obtain mesne profits. The defendant, the assignee, insisted on its validity, and that he was a purchaser for valuable consideration without notice:—Held, that the defendant was bound to answer, as to the amount of rents and profits, the particulars of his underletting and of his receipts, and what charges he had created. Robson v. Flight, 33 Beav. 268; 34 L. J., Ch. 226; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 147; 11 L. T. 725; 13 W. R. 393.

b. Purchaser with Notice.

In General.]—If a man will purchase with notice of another's right, giving a consideration will not avail him. Mead v. Orrery (Lord), 3 Atk. 238.

A purchaser with notice is bound to the same manner as his vendor. Although a purchaser with notice be not a party to the original fraud, yet he is considered an accessory after the fact. Dunbar v. Tredennick, 2 Ball & B. 319.

Equitable Transfer—Subsequent Acquisition of Legal Estate.]—The purchaser of a legal estate having express notice of a prior equitable conveyance by registered deed, and purchasing from a vendor who is out of possession, is not entitled to the property as against the equitable purchaser, and an erroneous recital of the earlier title in the registered deed does not preclude the grantor from showing what interest really passed by the deed. Trinidad Asphalte Co. v. Coryat, 65 L. J., P. C. 100; [1896] A. C. 587; 75 L. T. 108.

Purchase of Reversion — Fraud.] — B. purchased a reversionary interest of A. at a gross undervalue, and under circumstances which rendered the transaction void in equity. C. had notice of the invalidity of the contract, but ten years afterwards he purchased the reversion of B., paying to B. the full value; A. joined in the conveyance and confirmed the sale. The court, being of opinion that C. had not taken proper steps to protect A. in the second transaction, set it aside and decreed a reconveyance, on repayment of the consideration given by B. to A. in the first transaction. Addis v. Campbell, 4 Beav. 401.

Purchaser held Trustee.]—Purchaser, with notice of agreement to settle:—Held, a trustee. Skirme v. Meyrick, 2 Comyn, 700.

A mortgagee with notice of the settlement cannot protect himself as a purchaser, or be distinguished from the tenant for life, the mortgagor. Eyre v. Dolphin, 2 Ball & B. 290; 12 R. R. 94.

A purchaser or mortgagee shall not protect himself by taking a conveyance from a trustee after notice of the trust, for, by taking such conveyance, he becomes the trustee himself. Saunders v. Dehew, 2 Vern. 271.

An executor in trust for an infant renews a lease, in his own name, and having mortgaged it, assigns the equity of redemption to a trustee who sells to one who had notice of the infant's title. Purchase set aside. Walley v. Walley, 1 Vern. 484.

Trustee with Notice.]—By marriage settlement a rent charge was granted to trustees upon trusts; and the lands were granted to other trustees for a term to secure the rent charge. One trustee of the rent charge had notice of a prior incumbrance, no evidence that trustees of term had notice:—Held, that notice to the trustees of the rent charge was sufficient. Wise v. Wise, 2 Jo. & Lat. 403.

—— Inadequacy of Price.]—S., in 1810, bought a messuage in fee for 462*l*. The price paid by C. to the trustees of his will was only 73*l*. 4*s*., and the contract price between C. and the plaintiff in 1859 was 350*l*.:—Held, that the sale to C. was a breach of trust of which the plaintiff had notice and was entitled to refuse to complete the contract. Stevens v. Austen, 3 El. & El. 685; 30 L. J., Q. B. 212; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 873; 3 L. T. 810.

—— Covenant not to Appoint without Consent of Mortgagees.]—A tenant for life, with a power to charge, mortgaged his life estate; he covenanted with some of the mortgagees that he would not execute the power without their consent. He subsequently exercised the power, and created a term. The trustees, and also the appointees, had notice of the mortgages and of the covenant:—Held, that the appointees were not entitled to any priority, and that they must be postponed to the previous mortgage. Hurst v. Hurst, 22 L. J., Ch. 538; 1 W. R. 105.

Contract to Appoint.] — Equity will not relieve against a contract entered into by a child with a parent, for an appointment from him; and the purchaser from the parent, with notice of the fraud, will be affected with it. Palmer v. Wheeler, 2 Ball & B. 30; 12 R. R. 60.

Rights of Third Parties.]—Those who, with notice of his title, deal with a person entitled to a partial interest in the estate, are responsible for any dealing with the property which professes to encumber and embarrass the estate of the other persons claiming under the same instrument. Nixon v. Robinson, 2 Jo. & Lat. 4; 7 Ir. Eq. R. 520.

Notice to Subsequent Husband — Marriage Settlement.]—On the marriage of an infant, her reversionary interest in choses in action was settled for her separate use for life, with remainder to her children. She afterwards married twice, but no further settlement was executed:—Held, that the third husband, who had notice of the settlement previous to his marriage, was bound thereby. Ashton v. M'Dougall, 5 Beav. 56; 11 L. J., Ch. 344; 6 Jur. 447.

—— Purchaser from Husband.]— Notice of ancient articles, by which the estate is agreed to be settled on the husband for life, remainder, subject to a charge by way of jointure, for the wife, and to the heirs male of the husband, by his wife, shall not affect the title of a purchaser claiming under the husband by reason of the modern method of carrying such articles into execution. Senhouse v. Earle, Amb. 285; 2 Ves. sen. 450.

Title by Marriage.]—A. contracted to purchase real estate and died, having made his widow his universal devisee and legatee. The widow married B., who in 1793 took a conveyance of the premises to himself, and a trustee reciting the contract by A., his will, and death,—the marriage of his widow with B., and that "thereupon B. became entitled to the beneficial interest in the purchase." B. sold to C., and C. took a conveyance from B., and his trustee, not reciting the deed of 1793. The bill was brought by the heir-at-law, after the death of B.:—Held, that the recital in the deed must be understood as stating that the widow was devisee of the purchased premises, and that the title of B. accrued by the marriage; that C. must be presumed to have been cognisant of, and to have taken the title of, B. his vendor; and that the heir-at-law was entitled to the decree for conveyance of the estate. Neesom v. Clarkson, 2 Hare, 163; 12 L. J., Ch. 99; 6 Jur. 1055.

Account—Satisfaction.]—Account of arrears of annuity against purchaser with notice, length of time not being sufficient to presume satisfaction. Wynn v. Williams, 5 Ves. 130.

Will Suppressed—Purchase from Heir.]—A devisee obtains a decree to hold and enjoy against the heir, who had suppressed the will. Pending the suit, a third person gets an assignment of a mortgage of the testator, and then purchases the equity of redemption of the heir, with notice of the will. The court would not admit the purchaser to dispute the justice of the decree. Finch v. Newnham, 2 Vern. 216.

Voluntary Agreement.]—A. voluntarily agrees to give certain houses to his niece, after the death of himself and his wife, but no conveyance was executed by A. In the meantime, A. becomes indebted, and by his will devises all his estate to his wife. This agreement is not good against a purchaser for valuable consideration, although a subscribing witness to it. Powell v. Pleydell, 1 Bro. P. C. 124.

Goods Purchased by Consignor.]—A consignor who had purchased goods on account and at the risk of his correspondent, has no right to deliver them to another person; and a party taking from the consignor with notice, is subject to the rights of the correspondent. Green v. Maitland, 4 Beav. 524.

Nature of Interest Sold.]—A person, agreeing to purchase the right and interest of another, under a contract for a lease with full notice of the nature of it, cannot object that such contract is not binding on the other party to it, or for want of title. Baxter v. Conolly, 1 J. & W. 576; 21 R. R. 237.

Lease by Lord of Manor.]—Lord of manor (his tenants refusing to renew) makes a lease of the premises to his daughter for ninety-nine years, and afterwards sells the manor to A., who has notice of the lease, but has security that the daughter when at age should surrender; daughter decreed to have the benefit of the lease. Jennings v. Selleck, 1 Vern. 467.

Sale Subject to Lease.]—A. sold to B. an estate in fee simple expressly subject to a lease which purported to have been granted by A.'s predecessor in title. The lease was, in fact, invalid:—Held, that B. was not bound to give effect to the invalid lease. Smith v. Widlake, 47 L. J., C. P. 282; 3 C. P. D. 10; 26 W. R. 52—C. A.

A. made an equitable mortgage to B., and afterwards agreed to grant a lease to C., who had notice of the mortgage: B. afterwards purchased the equity of redemption, with notice, and took a conveyance:—Held, that B. was bound, out of his interest, to grant the lease to C. Smith v. Phillips, 1 Keen, 694; 6 L. J., Ch. 253.

Purchaser from tenant in tail, with notice of agreement by him, to renew a lease which the father, tenant for life, had covenanted to renew, is bound to renew. Brooke (Earl) v. Bulkeley, 2 Ves. sen. 498.

Purchaser with notice is bound in all respects as the vendor: therefore, where tenant for life granted leases for lives under a power, and bound himself, upon the dropping of a life, to grant a new lease, and afterwards joined in a sale; if a life drops in the life of the lessor, the purchaser, having notice, must grant a new lease with the same provisions. Brydges v. Chandos (Duke), 2 Ves. J. 437.

Knowledge of Invalidity of Title.]—When a husband and wife agreed to sell her estate in fee simple, the purchaser being aware that the estate belonged to the wife, and she afterwards refused to convey:—Held, that the purchaser could not compel the husband to convey his interest and accept an abated price. Wilkinson v. Castle, 39 L. J., Ch. 843; L. R. 5 Ch. 534; 18 W. R. 586.

Purchaser bound to Inquire into Title of Co-Tenants.]—Property held by C. and B., tenants in common in fee, was agreed by them to be partnership property, and B. made a legal mortgage in fee of one moiety, to secure his private debt, to a person who knew that the property was the place of business of the firm. The firm became largely indebted to C.:—Held, that as the mortgagee, when he took his security, knew that the firm was in possession of the property, he had constructive notice of the title of the partnership, and that his claim must be postponed to that of C. Cavander v. Bulteel, 43 L. J., Ch. 370; L. R. 9 Ch. 79; 29 L. T. 710; 22 W. R. 177.

Notice as to Subsisting Tenancy.]—A purchaser buying with notice of tenants in possession is bound to inquire into the nature of their interest, and is not entitled to an abatement of the purchase money because their interest proves to be larger than he supposed when he entered into the contract. James v. Lichfield, 39 L. J., Ch. 248; L. R. 9 Eq. 51; 21 L. T. 521; 18 W. R. 158.

Notice to a purchaser of the occupancy of a portion of the lands by a tenant fixes him with notice of all the rights of the tenant, not only as between the purchaser and the tenant, but also as between the purchaser and the vendor. Carroll v. Keayes, Ir. R. 8 Eq. 97; 22 W. R. 243. See preceding case.

The conditions of sale of a public-house stated that it was in the occupation of a tenant:—Held, that the purchaser was not bound to ascertain from the tenant the terms of his tenancy. Caballero v. Henty, 43 L. J., Ch. 635; L. R. 9 Ch. 447; 30 L. T. 314; 22 W. R. 446.

Clause of Forfeiture—Sale by Sheriff.]—A lease contained a clause of forfeiture, if any writ of execution should issue, by virtue of which it should be liable to be taken in execution or sold; under a writ of fieri facias issued against the lessee, the sheriff sold and conveyed his interest under the lease, "if any," to the plaintiff, who was aware of the clause of forfeiture; the purchaser having got possession and having been evicted:—Held, that he could not afterwards recover the purchase money. Griffin v. Caddell, Ir. R. 9 C. L. 488.

Notice of Title.]—Purchaser of a lease, bound to know from whom the lessor derived his title, not to take notice of all the circumstances under which it is derived. Therefore, understood to have notice, that the lessors were trustees for a charity, not that the lease was bad, that depending on circumstances dehors. Att.-Gen. v. Backhouse, 17 Ves. 293.

The rule, that a purchaser is bound to inquire into the title of his vendor, applies to the case of a lessee who neglects to inquire into his lessor's title. Fielden v. Slater, 38 L. J., Ch. 379; L. R. 7 Eq. 523; 20 L. T. 112; 17 W. R. 485.

The doctrine of purchase for value without notice, does not apply to a purchase of a leasehold interest without notice of the lessor's title, if it turns out that the lessor had no power to grant the lease. Robson v. Flight, 34 L. J., Ch. 101 ; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1228 ; 11 L. T. 558 ; 13 W. R. 195.

Notice of a lease is not notice that the reversion remained vested in the lessor until his death. Pegler v. White, 33 L. J., Ch. 569 ; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 300 ; 10 L. T. 84 ; 12 W. R. 455.

A person contracting to purchase leasehold property, is held to contract with notice of the clauses of the lease. Walter v. Maunde, 1 J. & W. 181 ; 21 R. R. 141.

A party claiming title under a lease or any other instrument is presumed to know the title under which he takes and the circumstances connected with it, unless he can show the contrary. Butler v. Portarlington (Earl), 1 Dr. & War. 20 ; 1 Con. & L. 1 ; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 1.

—— Collateral facts.]—Quære, whether the doctrine, that a purchaser of leaseholds, or of freeholds subject to a lease, has notice of the covenants in the lease, can be extended to fix him with notice of collateral facts stated in such covenant. Darlington v. Hamilton, 1 Kay, 550 ; 2 Eq. R. 906 ; 23 L. J., Ch. 1000.

—— Covenants.]—A purchaser of a leasehold sold under a decree is bound by notice of all clauses and covenants in the lease, whether unusual or not, without their being specially mentioned in the rental or conditions. Vaughan v. Magill, 12 Ir. Eq. R. 207.

During a treaty for an assignment for a lease, the plaintiff produced and the defendant looked at the lease :—Held, that the defendant had notice of a covenant against assignment without licence. Smith v. Capron, 7 Hare, 189 ; 19 L. J., Ch. 322 ; 14 Jur. 686.

—— Unusual Covenants.]—The purchaser of leaseholds has notice of what it is he purports to buy, and that he must be bound by all the covenants in the lease ; but one who contracts for a lease from a party, with knowledge that he holds under a leasehold title, has notice of ordinary but not of unusual covenants in the original lease. Wilbraham v. Livesey, 18 Beav. 206.

Covenants in restraint of trade in a trading locality are not considered usual covenants. Ib.

A purchaser of leasehold property cannot avoid specific performance, on the ground that it contains an unusual covenant, which was not mentioned in the particulars or at the sale. Grosvenor v. Green, 28 L. J., Ch. 173 ; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 117 ; 7 W. R. 140.

Upon the sale of leasehold property, it is the duty of the purchaser to inquire into the contracts and stipulations of the original lease ; leasehold property about to be sold was described in the particulars as being held at a ground-rent of 86*l.* per annum, and it appeared from the lease that the ground-rent was 80*l.*, and one-third of the improved yearly rent or value, and there were other stringent covenants in the lease, not noticed in the particulars :—Held, nevertheless, that the purchaser must be held to his contract. Pope v. Garland, 4 Y. & C. 394 ; 10 L. J., Ex. Eq. 13.

The original conveyance contained a covenant with the vendors, that no building to be erected on the premises should be used for the sale of beer, wine, or spirits. A house was built, and a tenant from year to year, not having actual notice of the covenants, opened a beershop :—Held, that it was the duty of the tenant to have inquired into the title of his lessor. Wilson v. Hart, 35 L. J., Ch. 569 ; L. R. 1 Ch. 463 ; 14 W. R. 748.

The rule, that a purchaser is bound to inquire into the title of his vendor, applies equally to a tenant from year to year in relation to the title of his lessor. Ib.

A purchaser or lessee having notice of a deed forming part of the title of his vendor or lessor, has constructive notice of the contents of such deed, and is not protected from the consequences of not looking at the deed, even by the representation of the vendor or lessor that it contains no restrictive covenants, nor anything in any way affecting the title. The rule that a lessee has constructive notice of his lessor's title has not been altered by s. 2, sub-s. 1 of the Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874, but a lessee is now in the same position with regard to notice as if he had, before the act, stipulated not to inquire into his lessor's title. Wilson v. Hart (supra) observed upon. Patman v. Harland, 50 L. J., Ch. 642 ; 17 Ch. D. 353 ; 44 L. T. 728 ; 29 W. R. 707.

—— Offer to Inspect Leases.]—Particulars of sale described the thing to be sold, and stated the property to be held under a sub-lease of the full term of the ground lease. The conditions of sale provided that no objection should be taken by reason of the sub-lease being in excess of the superior lease, and offered inspection of the lease, and provided that the purchaser should be held to have notice of the leases, and their effect, whether he inspected or not :—Held, that the particulars disclosing the facts, and the conditions referring to the facts, the purchaser was bound, particularly having regard to the circumstances that inspection was offered. Smith v. Watts, 4 Drew. 331 ; 28 L. J., Ch. 220 ; 7 W. R. 126.

—— Underlease.]—Although a vendor who contracts for the sale of leasehold property described as held under a lease cannot, if nothing further is said, make a good title unless it is held under an original lease, yet in a case where the particulars and conditions of sale of property contained enough to give notice that the property was held under a derivative lease :—Held, that the purchaser could not refuse to complete, or claim compensation. Camberwell and South London Building Society v. Holloway, 49 L. J., Ch. 361 ; 13 Ch. D. 754 ; 41 L. T. 752 ; 28 W. R. 222.

A purchaser of a lease who knows at the date of the contract that the vendor's interest is only an underlease, is bound, although the interest is described in the contract as a lease. Flood v. Pritchard, 40 L. T. 873.

It is the duty of a person contracting for an underlease to inform himself of the covenants contained in the original lease, and he will be bound by those covenants. Where the original lease contained unusual covenants, but the defendant's solicitor had an opportunity of inspecting the original lease, it was held that the defendant was bound to accept a lease with the unusual covenants. Cosser v. Collinge, 3 Myl. & K. 283 ; 1 L. J., Ch. 130.

A party who enters into an agreement for an underlease, without inquiring into the covenants of the original lease, has constructive notice of all usual covenants in the original lease. Quære, whether he has such notice of unusual covenants. But where a party agreed to take an underlease and informed lessee of the business he meant to carry on:—Held, that the silence of the lessee was equivalent to representation that there was no prohibiting covenant. Flight v. Barton, 9 Myl. & K. 282.

c. Sub-Purchaser.

Rule as to Notice.]—A person affected by notice, has the benefit of the want of notice by intermediate parties. M'Queen v. Farquhar, 11 Ves. 478; 8 R. R. 202. S. P., Lowther v. Carlton, 2 Atk. 242; Cas. t. Talb. 186.

One affected with notice conveys to another without notice; the assignee having legal estate shall not be affected with the notice to assignor, and so vice versâ. Mertins v. Jolliffe, Amb. 313.

A. sells to B., who has notice of an incumbrance on the estate; B. sells to C., who has no notice; and he to D., who has notice; whether this revives the first notice to B. Harrison v. Forth, Pre. Ch. 51.

Assignee of a mortgage from persons not having notice of mortgagor's being only tenant for life:—Held, not bound to discover whether he himself had notice. Sweet v. Southcote, 2 Bro. C. C. 67; Dick. 670.

—— Fraud.]—A. articles to sell lands to B. for 15,000*l.*, the whole to be paid in money, or so much land returned as would make up what he paid short of 15,000*l.* A. conveys part of the lands to B., and by persuasion values that part at an undervalue: and then B. sells this part to C., and afterwards would have returned so much of the lands as would make up the 15,000*l.* Articles set aside as unreasonable, but the sale to C. to stand. Whorwood v. Simpson, 2 Vern. 183.

—— Land in Register County.]—A vendor of land situate in a register county, part of whose purchase money remains unpaid, is under no obligation to obtain for the unpaid amount any written security which can be registered, but is entitled to rely simply on his equitable lien, which he can enforce against sub-purchasers who have notice of it, actual or constructive; and such a vendor will not, by registering the conveyance to his purchaser, if he retains the deed in his possession, lose his lien as against sub-purchasers from the original purchaser. Kettlewell v. Watson, 51 L. J., Ch. 281; 21 Ch. D. 685; 46 L. T. 83; 30 W. R. 402.

—— No Notice Proved.] — The plaintiffs sought to set aside a conveyance made by a lunatic, under undue influence, and for an inadequate consideration. The defendant, who claimed under a derivative title from the purchaser, insisted that he was a purchaser for valuable consideration without notice. No notice, actual or constructive, having been proved, the court dismissed the bill with costs. Greenslade v. Dare, 20 Beav. 284; 24 L. J., Ch. 490; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 294; 3 W. R. 220.

Exception to Rule—Fraud.]—The only exception to the rule which protects a purchaser with notice taking from a purchaser without notice, is that which prevents a trustee buying back trust property which he has sold, or a fraudulent man who has acquired property by fraud saying he sold it to a bonâ fide purchaser, without notice, and he got it back again. Semble, Barrow's Case, 49 L. J., Ch. 498; 14 Ch. D. 445; 42 L. T. 891.

A purchaser for value, without notice, from one who claimed under a conveyance obtained by fraud, cannot defend himself where the person who so claimed was not in possession as apparent owner at the time of the sale. Ogilvie v. Jeaffreson, 29 L. J., Ch. 905; 8 W. R. 745.

—— Voluntary Deed.]—A purchaser for a valuable consideration, with notice of voluntary settlement from a person who bought without notice, shall shelter himself under the first purchaser, but he cannot defend himself in equity upon articles only. Brandlyn v. Ord, 1 Atk. 571; 1 West, 512.

One purchases, having notice of a settlement, whereby the vendor was but tenant for life, and afterwards sells to one who had no notice. Decreed, the last purchaser shall hold the land, but the first shall account for the purchase money, which he received with interest. Ferrars v. Cherry, 2 Vern. 383.

The purchaser, having notice of the settlement, it was incumbent on him to inquire whether it was voluntary. Ib.

Sale to Different Purchasers.]—A. agrees verbally to sell an estate to B.; he afterwards agrees in writing to sell it to C.; and then conveys it to B., in pursuance of the first contract, B. having notice of the second. Semble, C. cannot call on B. for a conveyance. Dawson v. Ellis, 1 J. & W. 524; 21 R. R. 227.

A parol agreement for the purchase and possession delivered, decreed to be performed against a subsequent purchaser with notice, who had a conveyance, and had paid his money. Butcher v. Stapeley, 1 Vern. 363.

If a vendor contract with two different persons for the sale to each of them of the same estate, the court will primâ facie enforce the contract which was first made; and if the party with whom the second contract was made should, after notice of the first contract, get in the legal estate, the court will compel him to convey to the first purchaser. Potter v. Sanders, 6 Hare, 1.

A. and B. having entered into a verbal treaty for the purchase of premises belonging to A., and not being able to agree as to the purchase money, A. addressed a letter to C., stating that he would take a certain sum from B. for the premises, if C. approved of it. B. subsequently lodged the sum named by A. with C. During the negotiations between A. and B., A. entered into a contract with D., and although notice of the agreement between A. and B. was given to D., conveyed the premises to D.:—Held, that D. having had notice of the agreement, the conveyance to him must be considered as fraudulent, and should be delivered up to be cancelled, and that the costs of B. should in the first place be paid out of the funds lodged by her in the hands of C. Field v. Boland, 1 Dr. & Wal. 37.

W. after completing a contract to buy premises, told M. that he had done so. M. was afterwards informed by the vendor that the treaty with W. was off. M. did not make any further inquiry, but bought and took an assignment of the premises himself:—Held, that he must be held to have had notice of W.'s contract. Waldron v. Jacob, Ir. R. 5 Eq. 131.

d. Assignment of the Contract.

Rights of Assignee.]—An equitable interest under a contract of purchase may be the subject of sale; the sub-contract converts the original vendee into a trustee of his equitable interest for his vendee, who acquires the same rights which he had under the primary contract. Wood v. Griffith, 1 Swanst. 56; 18 R. R. 18.

—— Notice to Vendor.]—Notice to a vendor that his vendee has agreed to make a valid assignment of the contract, if requested, does not put the vendor upon inquiry whether his vendee has been requested to make, or has made, such assignment, nor does it justify the vendor in refusing to convey to the vendee upon payment of the purchase money. Shaw v. Foster, 42 L. J., Ch. 49; L. R. 5 H. L. 321; 27 L. T. 281; 20 W. R. 907.

The persons who claim the benefit of the assignment must give distinct notice to the vendor of their claim, and of their readiness to put themselves in the vendee's position for the completion of the contract. Ib.

—— Two Contracts.]—P. agreed to sell to M. a plot of land, the purchase to be completed in five years or earlier at M.'s option. P. had previously agreed to sell an adjoining plot to M. The plaintiff was employed by M. to build on the first plot, and M. became indebted to him on that account and agreed to sell the first plot to the plaintiff. P. then told the plaintiff that both contracts must be completed together, and P. and M. sold and conveyed both plots to H.:—Held, that the plaintiff had no equity to have his sub-contract performed. Crabtree v. Poole, 40 L. J., Ch. 468; L. R. 12 Eq. 13; 24 L. T. 895.

Assignee substituted for Vendee.]—Bill for specific performance of an agreement against the original vendee and an assignee of his contract dismissed as against the former, the plaintiff being held to have accepted the latter as purchaser. Quære, if the bill had been filed against the original purchaser only. Holden v. Hayn, 1 Mer. 47; 15 R. R. 83.

C. SALE BY THE COURT.

1. In General.

Jurisdiction of Court.] — Devise to trustees upon trusts to pay debts, and subject thereto upon trust as to a house to allow his wife to reside there, and on her death upon trust for sale. In an administration suit:—Held, that during the life of the widow the court had no power to order a sale. Carlyon v. Truscott, 44 L. J., Ch. 186; L. R. 20 Eq. 348; 32 L. T. 50; 23 W. R. 302.

On the sale by the court of a reversionary interest in which infants were interested there was a special condition that the purchaser should make no objection on the ground of want of jurisdiction:—Held, that the condition of sale was fair and reasonable. Nunn v. Hancock, 40 L. J., Ch. 700; L. R. 6 Ch. 850; 25 L. T. 469; 19 W. R. 1041.

Semble, that the court had jurisdiction to make the order for sale, and that the infants and all other parties were bound by it. Ib.

Conveyancing Counsel of the Court.]—The conveyancing counsel of the court, though in a sense an officer of the court, is still counsel for the vendor, who is responsible for any misrepresentations in the conditions of sale settled by such counsel. Broad v. Munton, Bannister, In re, 40 L. T. 319, 828; 27 W. R. 826.

After Decree.]—By the decree, the plaintiff's demand was declared a charge upon the lands, and liberty was given to all parties to apply as occasion might require. The court, subsequently, on motion, directed a sale. Watson v. Pim, Dr. 90.

Before Trial.]—In an action to enforce a charge on real estate, the plaintiff is, under ordinary circumstances, entitled to an order for sale before the trial on showing a case upon which such an order would be made at the trial. Action by creditor for a debt secured on real estate of a company in liquidation. Upon an interlocutory application, under s. 55 of the Chancery Procedure Act, 1852, 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, the court ordered an immediate sale. Davis v. Ashwin, Brynmawr Coal and Iron Co., In re, 47 L. J., Ch. 70; 26 W. R. 139.

Order for Sale Free from Incumbrance.]—Under s. 5 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, an order for the sale of land free from an incumbrance (the incumbrancer not being a party to the action) should follow the words of the act, which are to be interpreted strictly, and after directing payment into court of the purchase money, and setting apart a sufficient amount to meet the claims of the incumbrancer, proceed to declare that thereupon any person interested should be at liberty to apply in chambers for a declaration that the land is free from the incumbrance. Dickin v. Dickin, 30 W. R. 887.

And see cases, supra, col. 1253.

Direction as to Mode of Sale.]—Where a real estate, forming part of an estate which is being administered by the court, is charged with an annuity, upon further consideration the court will not, under the Conveyancing Act, 1881, s. 5, direct the property to be sold free from the annuity, but will direct an application in chambers as to the mode of sale. Patching v. Bull, 46 L. T. 227; 30 W. R. 244.

Real estate ordered to be sold pending inquiries before the master. Martin v. Hadlow, 1 W. R. 101.

On further Consideration.]— Hearing for further directions. Decree for a sale pronounced. Simpson v. O'Sullivan, Dr. 89.

Reference to Master.]—Court refused to make an order under an act of parliament for sale of estate upon opinion of conveyancer merely approving the conveyance, without reference to the master. Newcastle (Duke), Ex parte, 6 Ves. 454.

—— Statement of Title.]—The master will not be ordered to sell an estate until a statement of title is made out and lodged in his office. How to proceed when defendant refuses to give statement of his title. Roberts v. Roberts, 1 Hog. 124.

Collateral Order—Sale of a Term.]—The decree being for sale of a term, the court, on the application of the inheritor, superadded a direction to the master at the same time to sell the fee. This collateral order being for the benefit of one party, and without prejudice to any, may be appended without affecting the enrolment of the decree. Sheppard v. Murdock, 1 Moll. 130.

Equitable Estate.]—Though the court will not, in general, give a decree for a sale of an equitable estate in lands; yet if the plaintiff is not entitled to call for a conveyance of the legal estate, it will make such decree. Tremble v. Simpson, 6 Ir. Eq. R. 98.

Heir out of Jurisdiction.]—Two of four co-heiresses-at-law residing out of the jurisdiction, sale of the inheritance decreed in their absence, at the suit of judgment creditor of ancestor. The heir-at-law being absent from the jurisdiction, real estate may be sold by the court at the suit of creditor. Leahy v. Dancer, 3 Moll. 108.

Duty of Purchaser.]—Purchaser under decree bound to see directions of decree observed. Colclough v. Sterum, 3 Bligh, 181; 22 R. R. 1.

Settled lands directed to be sold subject to charges prior to the settlement. Pending suit, tenant for life creates charges upon the lands, and they are sold subject to those charges:—Held, that the sale, subject to charges not warranted by decree, is void. Ib.

Misrepresentation and Concealment of Facts.]—The proposition laid down by the court of appeal, that "a person desirous of buying property which is being sold under the direction of the court must either abstain from laying any information before the court in order to obtain its approval, or must lay before it all the information he possesses, and which it is material that the court should have to enable it to form a judgment on the subject under its consideration," is too broadly stated. It does not follow that because information on some material point or points is offered, or is given on request, by a purchaser from the court, it must therefore be given on all others as to which it is neither offered nor requested, and concerning which there is no implied representation, positive or negative, direct or indirect, in what is actually stated. Cooks v. Boswell, 55 L. J., Ch. 761; 11 App. Cas. 232; 55 L. T. 32—H. L. (E.)

Dower.]—The decree directed a sale of a competent part of the lands, and the claim of dower subject to which the sale was to be had, overriding the whole lands. All parties consenting a commission was decreed to set out dower without a bill for that purpose. Chambers v. Davenport, 1 Moll. 490.

Rights of Incumbrancers.]—A decree for the sale of an incumbered estate does not, of itself, alter the rights of parties. Wild v. Lockhart, 10 Beav. 320; 16 L. J., Ch. 519.

—— Interest on Purchase Money.]—Purchase money paid in by confirmed purchaser under a decree was invested in stock:—Held, that the purchaser was entitled either to his money with interest or to the stock bought, to the amount of an incumbrance which could not be paid off. Scott v. Rothe, 2 Moll. 548.

—— Annuity.]—Where lands are decreed to be sold subject to an annuity, it is conclusive evidence that the annuity is prior to the claims of all persons claiming under the decree. Sparrow v. Cooper, 1 Jones, 72.

Vacating Biddings.]—Consent of owner of property sold under decree is necessary to a motion to vacate a bidding. Rex v. Brickdale, 8 Price, 630.

Warranty of Title.]—The court of chancery does not warrant the title of an estate, which is purchased under its direction. Toulmin v. Steere, 3 Mer. 223; 17 R. R. 67.

Protection of Purchaser.]—By s. 70 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, the title of the purchaser is protected even where an objection to the order appears on the face of it. Hall Dare's Contract, In re, 51 L. J., Ch. 671; 21 Ch. D. 41; 46 L. T. 755; 30 W. R. 556—C. A.

2. Mode and Conduct of Sale.

a. In General.

In Chambers.]—Sales ought to be ordered to be made at chambers, not by parties with the approbation of the judge at chambers. Nash v. Worcester Improvement Commissioners, 1 Jur. (N.S.) 973.

The court of appeal will not interfere with an order of the judge of the court directing the sale to take place in his own chambers. Macdonald v. Foster, 6 Ch. D. 193; 37 L. T. 296; 25 W. R. 687.

Sale of Shares.]—Shares in joint-stock and other companies, directed to be sold, should be sold out of court. Cobden v. Maynard, 1 N. R. 354.

Sale in One Lot.]—Premises held under distinct leases ordered to be sold in one lot upon the probability that a higher price would be obtained by that mode of sale. Cook v. Collingridge, 3 Russ. 520.

Sale subject to Annuity.]—See Patching v. Bull, supra, col. 1374.

Lease after Decree.]—If lands be leased by the inheritor after a decree to account, they will be set up in the first instance subject to the lease; and if they do not produce sufficient to pay the incumbrances, decreed with costs, they will then be set up discharged of the lease. Barrett v. Bermingham, Sau. & Sc. 678.

Reserve Price Disclosed.]—A property ordered by the court to be sold by auction was bought in. Before the auctioneer had left the rostrum, A. signed a contract to purchase it, at the reserved price, which was divulged contrary to instructions given to the auctioneer:—Held, that there was a valid binding contract. Else v. Barnard, 28 Beav. 228; 29 L. J., Ch. 729; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 621; 2 L. T. 203. S. P., Bousfield v. Hodges, 33 Beav. 90.

Sale by Private Contract.]—Although in pursuance of an order of court directing a sale of real estate by public auction, an attempt has been made to sell by public auction and has failed, the property cannot be sold otherwise than by public auction until a proper order for the purpose has been obtained. Berry v. Gibbons, Lee, Ex parte, 42 L. J., Ch. 231; L. R. 15 Eq. 150.

Where sale before master is directed to take place by decree, a contract for private sale by trustee will not be enforced. Raymond v. Webb, Lofft, 66.

Who may Sell—Master.]—The masters are personally to superintend sales under decrees, and a sale had in the master's office, before his clerk, but in his absence, will be set aside for irregularity. Ellis v. Molloy, 2 Hog. 255.

—— Auctioneer.]—Auctioneer in the country appointed to conduct the sale under a decree, to avoid the expense of sending the master's clerk. Thompson v. Dodgson, 2 Y. & C. 311; 6 L. J., Ex. Eq. 80.

—— Chief Clerk.]—The court, if parties are present and consent, has jurisdiction to direct an estate to be sold by auction by the chief clerk, without the employment of an auctioneer. Pemberton v. Barnes, 41 L. J., Ch. 209; L. R. 13 Eq. 349; 26 L. T. 389.

—— Plaintiffs.]—Where a sale is made by the court, and the purchasers pay their money into court, the plaintiffs are entitled to the conduct of the sale; but where a sale, directed by decree, is made out of court, the trustee or executor is the proper person to conduct it. Cobden v. Maynard, 1 N. R. 354.

The plaintiff in a cause held entitled to the conduct of the sale of partnership property. Dale v. Hamilton, 10 Hare (App.) vii.

—— Plaintiff Bidding.]—Where a plaintiff obtains liberty to bid, the management of the sale will be taken from his solicitor. Drought v. Jones, Fl. & K. 316; Ennis v. Casey, id. 319, n.

—— Defendant.]—Ordinarily, the conduct of a sale directed by the court is committed to the plaintiff; but when it appears for the benefit of the parties, it will be given to a defendant. This right does not, however, depend on the extent of the interest of the parties in the property. Knott v. Cottle, 27 Beav. 33.

—— Trustee.]—When a sale has been decreed in one of two concurrent suits, the fact of the party to whom has been given the conduct of the cause being an entire stranger to the family and to the property is a sufficient reason for taking away from him the conduct of the sale, and giving it to the trustee and testamentary guardian of infant parties. Garmeson, In re, Garmeson v. Sharrod, 21 W. R. 98.

—— Other Parties.]—Under a decree, directing the sale of an estate, but not directing by whom the sale shall be conducted, the master is not bound to give the conduct of the sale to the plaintiff, but may in his discretion, if he considers it more beneficial to the estate, give the conduct of the sale to other parties. Dixon v. Pyner, 7 Hare, 331; 19 L. J., Ch. 402; 14 Jur. 217.

Grounds on which the conduct of a sale, under the decree of the court, may properly be given to parties other than the plaintiff. Ib.

—— Solicitor.]—In a sale under a decree, the solicitor of the plaintiffs having the management of the sale is to be considered, as between the vendors and the purchaser, to be the agent of all the parties to the suit. Dalby v. Pullen, 1 Russ. & M. 296; 8 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 74.

No one except the person having the conduct of the sale may interfere in any way. Thus, where the court gave the conduct to an independent solicitor, both plaintiff and defendant having liberty to bid, the plaintiff was restrained from issuing and circulating advertisements that the sale was about to take place. Dean v. Wilson, 48 L. J., Ch. 148; 10 Ch. D. 136; 27 W. R. 377.

Non-compliance with Formalities.]—After the estate had been sold by auction under a decree, the purchaser's title is not to be attacked merely on the ground that the holder of the decree had not complied with all the statutory formalities for the conduct of such sale. Singh v. Singh, 9 L. T. 129.

Reserved Biddings.]—A direction for a reserved bidding ought not to be inserted in a decree for sale, but ought to be the subject of a separate order. Brooker v. Collier, 3 Russ. 369.

—— Mortgage.]—Although in sales by the court it is usual to fix the reserved price at the amount at which the estate has been valued, an exception will be made where a mortgagee, who, being also a trustee, is incapable of bidding, is desirous of having it fixed at an amount sufficient to cover his debt. Tennant v. Trenchard, 41 L. J., Ch. 779; 20 W. R. 785.

A trustee who had a charge on the estate of greater amount than its value, as fixed by the cestui que trust for the reserved bidding, was allowed to fix the reserve bidding at the amount of his charge. Ib.

—— Resale.]—The conditions of sale fixed a reserve bidding, under which the auctioneer announced a sum, and there being an uncertainty as to who had the bid, the estate was bought in at another sum:—Held, that the auctioneer had no right to fix more than one reserved bidding, nor could a bidder claim a resale if the parties interested did not desire it. Notley v. Salmon, 1 W. R. 240.

—— By whom Fixed.]—At a sale by order of the court, a reserved bidding allowed to be made one of the conditions, the master to fix the amount, and to use his discretion in communicating it to the parties or their solicitors. Jervoise v. Clarke, 1 J. & W. 389.

Conditions.]—The court in proper cases will refer it to the remembrancer to settle conditions of sale. Bennett v. Beamish, Jon. & C. 178. And see Cooke v. Campbell, id. 183, n.; Mackay v. Orr, Barrington v. Blake, id. 184, n.; Johnson v. Auchinleck, id. 185, n.

—— Defect in Title.]—The court will not set up a title knowing it to be bad; therefore, when the court is apprised of a defect of such a nature that it must render the title absolutely bad, it will not, by a condition of sale, preclude objection to such a defect. Bennett v. Wheeler, 1 Ir. Eq. R. 18.

Where there was a decree for the sale of the whole lands, a reference to settle conditions of sale of a moiety refused, as decree was for sale of the whole. The court will not set up lands for sale knowing the title to be bad. Piers v. Piers, Sau. & Sc. 414. Affirmed, 1 Dr. & Wal. 265.

—— Lease.]—The court will not make a condition of sale of an interest under a lease, that no objection be made to the title of the lessor to make the lease; but it will direct that a purchaser shall not require the plaintiff to show that the lessor had such power, leaving the purchaser at liberty to object aliunde. Willes v. Latham, Sau. & Sc. 441.

—— Sale by Lots.]—Where an estate was set up for sale in two lots and one was sold, the court approved of a condition of sale to the remaining lot: that the purchaser should not require original searches for judgments, but should be satisfied with compared and certified copies of searches made by purchaser of the first lot. Fitzgerald v. Lane, 2 Ir. Eq. R. 447.

—— "Grantees."]—On a sale in court, the court refused to alter the conditions under which the property had been sold, so as to substitute the word "grantees" for the word "grantors," though probably there had been a clerical error. Brown v. Paull, 2 Jur. (N.S.) 317.

—— Rescission.]—Conditions of sale, settled by the court, provided that a conveyance on a sale made by B. in 1838, should be the root of title: that no objection or requisition should be made with respect to earlier title, and that recitals in deeds twenty years old should be conclusive. That conveyance purported to recite the will, but stopped short of the final gift over, thus showing a good title to the fee in B.:—Held, that a purchaser was not precluded from showing that B.'s title under the will was defective, and that he was entitled to be freed from his contract, and to costs. Else v. Else, 41 L. J., Ch. 213; L. R. 13 Eq. 196; 25 L. T. 927; 20 W. R. 286.

A sale in chambers under a decree having been declared invalid on the ground that the sale took place before the certificate was made:—Held, that the vendors could not avail themselves of a condition enabling them to rescind on repayment of the deposit without interest and without costs on either side; and that the discharged purchaser was entitled to the stock arising from his deposit, which had been paid into court and invested, with the dividends thereon, with costs, charges, and expenses. Powell v. Powell, 44 L. J., Ch. 311; L. R. 19 Eq. 422; 32 L. T. 148; 23 W. R. 482.

And see Scott v. Rothe, supra, col. 1375.

—— Restrictive Covenant.]—In a sale by the court one of the conditions provided that the conveyances should contain covenants by the purchasers; the form of such covenants, in case of dispute, to be settled by the judge. A dispute having arisen, the judge settled the covenant, adding a proviso that if the purchaser assigned his purchase, and the assignee entered into a similar covenant, the purchaser should be freed from further liability:—Held, that the vendor was entitled to an unqualified covenant, and that the proviso must be struck out. Pollock v. Rabbits, 21 Ch. D. 466; 47 L. T. 637; 31 W. R. 150—C. A.

And see Nunn v. Hancock, supra, col. 1373.

b. Biddings.

i. Who may Bid.

Practice on Application.]—Application that a party in the suit may bid at the sale must be on notice. Clarke v. Dobbin, 8 Ir. Eq. R. 111.

Party in the Cause.]—It is irregular for a party in the cause to bid at the sale of lands, without having previously obtained the permission of the court so to do. And the court will not, in such case, declare him the purchaser, unless special circumstances are shown to excuse this irregularity. Byrne v. Lafferty, 8 Ir. Eq. R. 47.

Whether the defendant who has not the carriage of the decree may bid at the sale in the master's office, without an order permitting him so to do, quære. Munns v. Feris, 11 Ir. Eq. R. 203.

Where the defendant had bid for property sold under a decree without leave of the court, a motion by another defendant that the estate might be again put up, and that he might be held to his biddings, unless a higher sum was offered, and that he should pay the expenses of resale, refused, but without costs. Elworthy v. Billing, 10 Sim. 98; 10 L. J., Ch. 176. And see Wilson v. Greenwood, 10 Sim. 101, n.

—— Plaintiff.]—If the plaintiff, or a person standing in the situation of a plaintiff, purchases under the decree, the transaction is to be examined with the utmost strictness; and if the decree be reversed, the sale cannot be upheld. Talbott v. Minnett, 6 Ir. Eq. R. 83.

Where lands decreed to be sold for payment of the plaintiff's demand were of insufficient value, and no bonâ fide bidders could be procured, the court permitted the plaintiff to bid without taking from him the carriage of the decree. Spaight v. Patterson, 9 Ir. Eq. R. 149.

Solicitor.]—The rule that, at a sale by the court, parties to the suit and their solicitors cannot become purchasers, will not be extended to a purchase by a solicitor in another suit for persons interested in the proceeds of sale, who has obtained an order to attend the proceedings on their behalf, and whose name, without his consent, has been placed in the particulars as that of a person from whom copies and information could be obtained. Guest v. Smythe, 39 L. J., Ch. 536; L. R. 5 Ch. 551; 22 L. T. 563; 18 W. R. 742.

Leave to bid at a sale by the court, granted to a solicitor on the record, relieves him from his fiduciary character, and places him in the same position as an ordinary purchaser. Coaks v. Boswell, supra, col. 1375.

A party to a suit, who was also a solicitor and had the conduct of sale, purchased under a feigned name. The court, after the purchase had been confirmed, ordered the estate to be again offered for sale at the price at which the party had purchased it, and if there should be no higher bidder the party to be held to his purchase. Sidney v. Ranger, 12 Sim. 118.

Executor.]—A testator's estate was directed to be sold by an order of the court. The executor applied for leave to bid, alleging that such bidding would be for the benefit of the estate; but the court refused to grant the application. Geldard v. Randall, 9 Jur. 1085.

Cestui que Trust.]—A term of two hundred years, of which only nine months remained unexpired, was vested in trustees, upon trust to sell. It was not known who was entitled to the reversion. Upon a bill by one of the cestuis que trustent, the court declared a sale, giving all the cestuis que trustent liberty to bid. Edmunds v. Foley (Lord), 30 L. J., Ch. 887; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 1268; 9 W. R. 859.

Trustees.]—The court, when it has directed the sale of a trust estate, will not, in opposition to the wishes of cestuis que trustent, grant leave to the trustee to bid, notwithstanding that he is entitled to a charge on the estate, and that the sale is in order to pay such charge. Tennant v. Trenchard, 38 L. J., Ch. 661.

Residuary Legatee—Reversioner.]—Residuary legatee, tenant for life, or reversioner, may become the purchaser of an estate sold in the master's office. Williams v. Attenborough, Turn. & R. 76; 1 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 138; 23 R. R. 186.

ii. Opening Biddings.

a. In General.

General Rule.]—Biddings are opened for the benefit of the suitor and estate, not of the purchaser, as where he was too late, and the overbidding is small. Anon., 1 Ves. J. 453.

In order to set aside a sale under a decree, there must be an affidavit of a greater sum having been offered. Keogh v. Wood, Vern. & Scriv. 118.

The court has always discretion to open biddings, resting wholly on circumstances of the case. Ryder v. Gower, 6 Bro. P. C. 306. S. P., Mayne v. Macartney, 2 Ir. Eq. R. 324.

Agreement between Bidders.]—On a sale under the court, two persons agreed not to bid against each other, but that one should bid up to 1,500*l.*, and divide the lot between them. They bought it for 650*l.*:—Held, that this agreement furnished no ground for opening the biddings or annulling the sale. Carew's Estate, In re, 26 Beav. 187; 28 L. J., Ch. 218; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 1290; 7 W. R. 81.

Frivolous Applications.]—Where applications to open biddings are frivolous or litigious, and grounded only on application of the owner, and especially where value of estate is but little more than will satisfy incumbrances, court is well justified in refusing such applications. Baillie v. Chaigneau, 6 Bro. P. C. 313.

Who may Apply.]—One party having moved to open biddings, although he has not drawn up the order nor paid his deposit, another person cannot open biddings without notice to the first. Gibbons v. Howell, 4 Madd. 52.

Quære, whether any party, except the plaintiff, in a creditor's suit can apply to open the biddings. Price v. North, 2 Y. & C. 620; 7 L. J., Ex. Eq. 9.

Amount of Advance.]—In opening biddings, the court does not tie itself down to any precise rule as to the amount of the sum to be advanced, but looks substantially to that which is for the benefit of the parties. Power v. Power, 3 Ir. Eq. R. 511.

Sham Bidders.]—Person opening biddings setting up sham bidders, who are reported best bidders, ordered himself to be best bidder at price he opened biddings. Molesworth v. Opie, 2 Eden, 289.

Person Opening Discharged.]—The person who opens the biddings is discharged, if he is outbid at the resale. Williams v. Attenborough, Turn. & R. 76; 1 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 138; 23 R. R. 186.

Offer.]—On opening the biddings in the case of property held for lives, the court imposed the condition that the party opening should be bound by his offer, if no better bidding could be enforced. Walond v. Walond, 8 Beav. 352; 9 Jur. 479.

Reopening.]—Biddings opened upon a second application by the same person, the purchaser not appearing upon notice. Preston v. Barker, 16 Ves. 140.

Where the property was again put up for sale, and there was no bidding:—Held, that the biddings might be opened again, although an order had been made that the person at whose instance they had been opened before should be the purchaser if there should be no bidding higher than his offer. Ewings v. Waite, L. R. 1 Eq. 440; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 117; 13 L. T. 664.

Sale by Private Contract—Tender.]—The rule under which the court permits a stranger to intervene for the purpose of opening biddings on a sale by auction before the master, has no application to a sale before him by private contract. Millican v. Vanderplank, 11 Hare, 136; 1 Eq. R. 429; 17 Jur. 986; 1 W. R. 364.

When there are grounds for refusing to confirm a sale by private contract approved by the master, the fact that the purchaser has, before the confirmation of the report, entered upon the property and expended money thereon, or incurred liabilities with respect to it, will not afford any reason for supporting the sale; but where all the parties interested have approved of the contract, and encouraged such acts of the purchaser, they may then constitute reasons for not disturbing the sale. Ib.

An estate was, by the direction of the court, advertised for sale by sealed tender, the tender expressing that the contract was subject to certain conditions of sale; the condition of sale stated that the certificate of sale would in due course be signed and filed, and become binding, without any further notice or expense to the purchaser:—Held, that the court had the same power of ordering a resale, on an advance of price, as in the case of a sale by auction. Ib.

Where on a sale by sealed tender the condition of sale stated, that "the certificate of sale would be settled, and in due course be signed and filed, and become binding, without further notice or expense to the purchaser," and the certificate was duly signed and approved by the judge and filed, and on the same day B. applied to reopen the biddings and made an offer of an advance price:—Held, that this was a case to which the ordinary rules of a sale by auction would attach, and that the court had the power to order a resale. Barlow v. Osborne, 6 H. L. Cas. 556; 27 L. J., Ch. 308; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 367; 6 W. R. 315. Affirming 8 De G. M. & G. 122.

A sale of an estate upon sealed tenders must be treated as a sale by auction, and the biddings may be opened on application to the judge. Ib.

Where, after an unsuccessful sale by auction, the chief clerk arranged that, in lieu of a second auction, sealed tenders might be sent in :—Held, that this was a sale within the rules as to opening biddings, and the biddings opened accordingly on the offer of a large advance by a person who had not made the highest offer. Waterhouse v. Wilkinson, 1 H. & M. 636 ; 3 N. R. 369 ; 9 L. T. 799 ; 12 W. R. 336.

Death before Confirmation.]—A purchaser under the court died before the confirmation of the report :—Held, that it was not necessary to serve his heir with notice of an application to open the biddings. Templer v. Sweet, 8 Beav. 464 ; 14 L. J., Ch. 424.

Sale subject to Annuity.]—An estate was sold subject to a life annuity equal to the rent. After sale, but before the purchaser was declared by the master, the annuity determined. The court opened the sale on an advance. O'Hara v. Chaine, 8 Ir. Eq. R. 365.

Person present at Sale.]—Person present at sale not allowed to open biddings. Sed quære. M'Culloch v. Cotbatch, 3 Madd. 314.

There is no general rule that a party present at the sale shall not open biddings ; each case must depend on its own circumstances. Thornhill v. Thornhill, 2 J. & W. 347.

Biddings opened by a person who was present at the sales. Rigby v. M'Namara, 6 Ves. 117. S. P., Tait (Lord) v. Northwick, 5 Ves. 655 ; Williams v. Attenborough, Turn. & R. 76 ; 1 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 138 ; 23 R. R. 186.

—— Larger Advance.]—A person present at the sale allowed to open biddings, but a larger advance expected from him. Tyndale v. Warre, Jacob, 525. S. P., Graham v. Gledstanes, 1 Jones, 436.

What Advance sufficient.]—Biddings opened on the application of a person who was present at the sale, though the advance offered was less than 5 per cent. on the price. Lefroy v. Lefroy, 2 Russ. 606.

Biddings were opened at the instance of a party to the cause, who had had liberty given to bid at the former sale, on an advance of 150*l.* on 1,650*l.* Logan v. Dowbinson, 7 L. J., Ch. 130.

The biddings having been opened upon an advance of 150*l.* on 2,500*l.*, the court refused the application of the first purchaser to open the second biddings upon an advance of 150*l.*, it appearing that he had been present at and had bid at the second sale. Jackson v. Granard (Lord), 3 Ir. Eq. R. 513.

Biddings opened on an advance of 250*l.* upon a sum of 8,500*l.*, by a person who was present and had bid at the former sale. Gorman v. Browne, Sau. & Sc. 154, n.

Where an estate had been sold for 5,050*l.*, the sale was opened upon an advance of 300*l.*, on the application of a person who had bid at the sale. Biggs v. Rowe, Sau. & Sc. 152.

Biddings opened on an advance of 400*l.* upon a sum of 6,200*l.* by a person who bid at the former sale. Langford v. Carroll, Sau. & Sc. 155, n.

Biddings opened by a person who had attended the former sale by an agent, he offering an advance of 500*l.* in 8,950*l.* Pearson v. Collett, M'Cle. 82 ; 13 Price, 213.

The court declined to open biddings upon an advance under 10 per cent. Holroyd v. Wyatt, 2 Coll. C. C. 537.

Bidding not opened, even in creditor's suit, upon an advance of 350*l.*, being less than 10 per cent. Garstone v. Edwards, 1 Sim. & S. 20.

Upon advance of 500*l.*, though less than 10 per cent., court will act. Ib.

The rule that an advance of 10 per cent. entitles party to open biddings, not to prevail in future. Andrews v. Emmerson, 7 Ves. 420.

Order made opening the biddings upon an undertaking to abide by the order of the court as to the expenses of the resale, where the advance was only 9*l.* more than the probable expenses of such resale. Bridger v. Penfold, 1 K. & J. 28 ; 3 Eq. R. 141.

On a petition to open the biddings, offering more than twice the amount at which the property had been knocked down, and payment of the former bidder's costs :—Held, a proper case for such an order. Lee, ex parte, 1 De G. 628 ; 18 L. J., Bk. 6 ; 12 Jur. 995.

Biddings not opened whatever the rate per cent. of the advance offered, unless the total of the advance amounts to 40*l.* at least. Leland v. Griffith, 2 Moll. 510. S. P., Farlow v. Weildon, 4 Madd. 460 ; Brookfield v. Bradley, 1 Sim. & S. 23.

The court refused to open the biddings on an advance of 20*l.*, the property having been sold for 430*l.* Gardiner v. Blessinton, 10 Ir. Eq. R. 220.

Bidding opened on advance of 50*l.* on 380*l.*, and paying the expenses ; 10 per cent. not sufficient on a small sum. Upton v. Ferrers (Lord), 4 Ves. 700 ; 5 R. R. 167.

Biddings opened on advance of 60*l.* on 430*l.* Bourn v. Bourn, 13 Sim. 189.

Biddings opened after the report, confirmed simply upon an advance of 61*l.* on 305*l.* ; 35*l.* not sufficient. Chetham v. Grugeon, 5 Ves. 86.

Biddings opened on advance of 80*l.* on 730*l.* Terson v. Hawkins, 18 Jur. 721.

Biddings were ordered to be opened on an advance of 80*l.* on 775*l.* Connel v. Hardie, 3 Y. & C. 677.

Biddings opened on advancing 100*l.* on 800*l.*, and 200*l.* on 1,200*l.* Anon., 2 Ves. J. 487.

Biddings opened on advance of 200*l.* upon 3,200*l.*, but 100*l.* was held too little. Anon., 5 Ves. 148.

Biddings opened on a sale of mortgaged premises on an advance of 190*l.* to 310*l.* Hutchinson, Ex parte, Hunt, In re, 2 Mont. & Ayr. 727.

Biddings opened on an advance of 300*l.* on 5,030*l.* Lawrence v. Halliday, 6 Sim. 296.

Biddings opened on an advance of 300*l.* upon a sum of 5,500*l.* Moloney v. Bernard, Sau. & Sc. 156, n.

The biddings were opened on an advance of 500*l.* upon 13,500*l.* under the circumstances. Cockrane v. Cockrane, 2 Russ. & M. 684.

Biddings opened on an advance of 1,000*l.* upon a sum of 33,000*l.* M'Clintock v. Knox, Sau. & Sc. 155, n.

In a creditor's suit, bidding opened on an advance of 500*l.* upon 10,000*l.*, paying the advance into court, and the expenses of the discharged purchaser. Brooks v. Swaith, 3 V. & B. 144.

The court opened the biddings upon an advance of 75*l.* on 1,650*l.* There is no fixed rule in Ireland for the quantum of advance; the court will always open the biddings where it is for the benefit of the estate. Digby v. Browne, 1 Ir. Eq. R. 277.

Biddings opened on advance of 5*l.* per cent. on 7,300*l.*, on application of a mortgagee, but he was not allowed to conduct the sale. Domville v. Berrington, 2 Y. & C. 723; 7 L. J., Ex. Eq. 58.

—— Sale of Colliery.]—The rules which regulate the practice of opening biddings upon a sale of landed estate, do not apply when a colliery is the subject of sale. Williams v. Attenborough, Turn. & R. 76; 1 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 138; 23 R. R. 186.

Biddings not opened on advance of 1,150*l.* on 8,850*l.* for a colliery. Ib.

Sale in Lots.]—Where a person is purchaser of several lots, if the biddings are opened as to one, he shall have an option to open them as to all, semble. Boyer v. Blackwell, 3 Anstr. 657. S. P., Price v. Price, 1 Sim. & S. 386; 1 L. J., (o.s.) Ch. 184.

Where two lots are purchased together, biddings cannot be opened as to one lot only, unless the first purchaser choose to keep the one remaining lot alone. Tilsley, Ex parte, 4 Madd. 227 n.

Upon an affidavit of the purchaser that he had bid for the lot in consequence of having been declared the best bidder for the prior lot, the bidding was opened. Fielder v. Fielder, cited 1 Sim. & S. 386.

A motion to open biddings for several lots, purchased by different purchasers, on an advance of a certain sum for each lot, is irregular. Goodall v. Pickford, 6 Sim. 379; 3 L. J., Ch. 23.

—— Resale Together.]—Nine lots ordered to be resold in one, where the advance offered on such lot was not sufficient to authorise the opening of the biddings for them separately. Humphries v. Roberts, 6 Jur. 680.

Upon the purchase of several lots by the same party, the court, although it allowed the biddings to be opened, refused to order the resale in one lot. Ward v. Cooke, 9 Sim. 87; 7 L. J., Ch. 150.

—— What Advance Sufficient.]—The biddings allowed to be opened, as to an estate sold in eight lots for 300*l.*, on an advance of 120*l.* Humphreys v. Robinson, 11 L. J., Ch. 399.

—— Re-opening.]—An estate was put up to sale in four lots, and the timber on each lot was to be paid for according to a valuation made. A. purchased lot 1; the other lots were not sold. B. opened the biddings, and, on the resale, purchased lots 1 and 2 for 2,140*l.*, and lot 3 at 380*l.* The court refused to open the biddings for lots 1 and 2 on the application of A., unless he would advance 10*l.* per cent. on the price of the timber as well as the land, and would take lot 3 (in case B. should retire from it), at the price it had been sold for, in case it should not fetch the same price at the re-sale. Bates v. Bonnor, 6 Sim. 380.

b. Deposit.

Deposit on Opening Biddings.]—The court refused to enlarge the time for payment of the deposit by a party applying to open biddings; or to make a second order for opening the biddings, on the application of the same party who had failed in paying the deposit. Colebrook v. Clarke, 9 L. J., Ch. 130.

Upon opening biddings, the court refused to dispense with deposit, or order a trifling one to be taken upon particular circumstances. Anon., 6 Ves. 513.

There is no invariable rule as to the sum to be paid into court on obtaining an order opening biddings; but where a sum of 27,000*l.* was the last bidding, a sum of 3,400*l.* was ordered to be paid into court. Manners v. Furze, 17 L. J., Ch. 485.

—— In Ireland.]—There is no settled rule in Ireland to regulate the sum which a person must lodge to obtain an order to open a sale. Ford v. Head, 1 Hog. 93. And see Digby v. Browne, supra.

—— Interest.]—Interest must be paid by the new purchaser to the old one on the deposit made by him. Banks v. Banks, 16 Beav. 380; 1 W. R. 511.

When biddings are opened, the purchaser is entitled to interest on his deposit at 4 per cent. Ib.

A party opening biddings must deposit the amount of his advance, but he is not required, in the first instance, to pay into court the amount of the original deposit. Ib.

Purchaser who has applied to open the biddings, and upon a resale was outbid, allowed, under the special circumstances, interest on his deposit, as well as the costs of the resale and of his application to the court. Filder v. Bellingham, 1 Coll. C. C. 526; 9 Jur. 8.

Where biddings have been re-opened, and party opening them does not become the purchaser, he cannot have his deposit repaid, till report of resale is confirmed. Rex v. Hilton, M'Cle. 595.

Where a person who has made a deposit is outbid at a subsequent sale, he is entitled to have his deposit back immediately; but for his interest and costs he must wait until completion. Archdall v. Montgomery, Vern. & S. 302.

The depositor is not entitled to the dividends accruing between the time of the deposit and the completion of the purchase; but only interest on the deposit at 4 per cent. D'Oyley v. Powis (Countess), 1 Cox, 206; 2 Bro. C. C. 33. S. P., Ambrose v. Ambrose, 1 Cox, 194.

c. After Report.

After Report or Certificate.]—No order will be made to open biddings until the report of the purchase has been made. Lovegrove v. Cooper, 9 Hare, 279.

Before the certificate is signed the biddings will be opened in favour of a bidder who makes a substantial advance; but after eight days have expired, and the certificate is signed, the court will not disturb the first purchase, unless in an extraordinary case. Jones' Settled Estates, In re, 1 Giff. 284; 29 L. J., Ch. 139; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1243; 1 L. T. 186; 8 W. R. 56.

—— Time.]—In a sale the vice-chancellor had signed the certificate approving the purchase. On a motion to open the biddings, made within eight days after the signing of the certificate, with a substantial advance and an offer to pay the costs of the former purchase:—Held, that the biddings might be opened, the signing of the certificate by the vice-chancellor being only equivalent to the order nisi confirming the master's report and s. 34 of act 15 & 16 Vict. c. 80, and the 51st Ord. of 16th October, 1852, allowing eight days within which the signature and filing of the certificate might be discharged. Bridger v. Penfold, 1 K. & J. 28; 3 Eq. R. 141.

After the expiration of eight days from the filing of the certificate, the court refused to open the biddings on a mere advance of price, though considerable. Ware v. Watson, 7 De G. M. & G. 739: 25 L. J., Ch. 199; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 129; 4 W. R. 233.

In calculating the eight days, the vacations are not excluded. Ib. S. P., Aubrey v. Denny, 2 Moll. 508.

After Confirmation.]—General rule not to open biddings after confirmation of the report, upon negligence, surprise, the circumstances of the estate, &c., without something unconscientious on the part of the purchaser. White v. Wilson, 14 Ves. 151.

Biddings opened after confirmation of a sale, under a decree, the plaintiff in the cause being the purchaser. It will always be a question with reference to the particular circumstances of each case, whether the jurisdiction of the court in opening sales ought to be exercised or not. O'Connor v. Richards, Sau. & Sc. 246.

Biddings will not be opened after confirmation of the report, unless fraud is shown in purchaser, or fraudulent negligence in agent, &c., or other special circumstances. Morice v. Durham (Bishop), 11 Ves. 57.

—— Fraud.]—After a sale regularly confirmed the court cannot open the bidding, without first setting aside the order confirming the sale, and that order ought not to be set aside but on the grounds of fraud. Fergus's Executors v. Gore, 1 Sch. & Lef. 350.

A party to a suit, who was also a solicitor and had the conduct of a sale, purchased at the sale under a feigned name. The court, after the purchase had been confirmed, ordered the estate to be again offered for sale at the price at which the party had purchased it, and, if there should be no higher bidder, the party to be held to his purchase. Sidny v. Ranger, 12 Sim. 118.

—— Increase of Price.]—Increase of price offered is not alone a reason to open biddings after the report confirmed. Boyer v. Blackwell, 3 Anstr. 656. S. P., Vincent v. Thwaites, 5 Ir. Eq. R. 526.

The bidding on a lot sold in this court shall not be opened at all after confirmation. Scott v. Nesbit, 3 Bro. C. C. 475.

—— Mistake.]—Biddings opened after confirmation of the master's report, upon considerable advance, there having been a mistake in a particular of the estate, and one of the parties who confirmed the report knowing more than he communicated. Gower (Countess) v. Gower (Lord), 2 Eden, 340.

—— Confirmation Nisi.]—Purchaser who has confirmed his report nisi cannot, after notice to open biddings, confirm absolutely. Vansittart v. Collier, 2 Sim. & S. 608.

—— On What Terms.]—Biddings opened after confirmation of the report on circumstances, where the owner of the estate was in prison at the time of the confirmation, and a fourth of the original price was offered in advance; but a deposit of the whole advance was required. Watton v. Birch, 2 Ves. J. 51; 4 Bro. C. C. 172.

—— In Bankruptcy.]—In bankruptcy, application to open biddings when deed executed, and purchaser put into possession, too late. Partington, Ex parte, 1 Ball & B. 209.

d. Since 30 & 31 Vict. c. 48.

Sale by Private Contract.]—The principle of the act 30 & 31 Vict. c. 48, applies to a sale by private contract under the sanction of the court. Therefore, in the absence of fraud or improper dealing, an offer to re-open after the delivery of the chief clerk's certificate was refused, and the chief clerk's certificate was confirmed. Bartlett, In re, Newman v. Hook, 50 L. J., Ch. 205; 16 Ch. D. 561; 44 L. T. 17; 29 W. R. 279.

On What Grounds.]—In order to entitle parties to open the biddings after a sale by auction under the court since the passing of the Sales of Land by Auction Act, 1867, there must be either fraud or such misconduct as borders on fraud. Delves v. Delves, L. R. 20 Eq. 77; 23 W. R. 499.

—— "Improper Conduct."]—Neglect on the part of an auctioneer to ascertain the reserved price before the commencement of a sale is not such "improper conduct in the management of the sale" as will authorise the court to open the bidding. Brown v. Oakshott, 38 L. J., Ch. 717.

—— Purchase by Party to Suit.]—If the position of the purchaser comes in any way within the rule that at a sale in a suit by the court, parties to the suit and their solicitors cannot become purchasers, the court would not be precluded from opening the sale by reason of 30 & 31 Vict. c. 48, s. 7. Guest v. Smythe, 39 L. J., Ch. 536; L. R. 5 Ch. 551; 22 L. T. 563; 18 W. R. 742.

General Rule.]—Person opening biddings, though not purchaser, is in no case entitled to costs. Rigby v. M'Namara, 6 Ves. 466. S. P., Macclesfield (Earl) v. Blake, 8 Ves. 214.

Friend of the Family.]—Person who opened biddings, but was not the purchaser, allowed his costs in the special circumstances, having opened them, not on his own account, but for the benefit of the family. Owen v. Foulks, 9 Ves. 348. S. P., Chapman v. Fowler, 3 Hare, 577; 13 L. J., Ch. 444; 8 Jur. 613; West v. Vincent, 12 Ves. 6.

Estate Benefited by Resale.]—A person who opened a sale with the assent of the parties, for the purpose of preventing a sacrifice of the property, but was outbid, allowed the costs on the ground of having benefited the estate. Cuffe v. Young, 9 Ir. Eq. R. 475. S. P., Filder v. Bellingham, 9 Jur. 8; Gravenor v. Miles, 9 Jur. 838.

A resale on opening biddings producing considerable increase of price is no ground for giving party his costs of opening biddings. Trefusis v. Clinton, 1 V. & B. 361.

On opening biddings, the court in the reference of costs of the purchaser will not give a particular direction for the specific expense. Anon., 2 Ves. J. 286.

Of First Bidder.]—Bidding opened on terms of paying the former bidder all costs, charges, and expenses, to be settled by the master. Watts v. Martin, 2 Bro. C. C. 113. S. P., O'Beirne v. Macmahon, 2 Jones, 589; Chester v. Gorges, 2 Moll. 505; Farlow v. Weildon, 4 Madd. 460.

Examining Title.]—Biddings were opened on payment by the applicant of the costs properly incurred of the purchaser:—Held, that the costs of perusing the abstract and of the examination of the title, prior to the first purchase being confirmed, ought not to be allowed on taxation. Raymond v. Lakeman, 34 Beav. 584.

c. Resale.

Default of Purchaser.]—An order for resale made in consequence of purchaser's default in payment of his money, ought not to discharge him from his purchase, the resale being the realisation of a lien, leaving it to the purchaser to make up the deficiency, if any. Harding v. Harding, 4 Myl. & Cr. 514; 9 L. J., Ch. 124; 3 Jur. 1164. And see Saunders v. Gray, and Tanner v. Radford, 4 Myl. & Cr. 515, n.

—— Reversion.]—A purchaser under the court of reversionary interest having made default in completing, a resale was ordered, the purchaser to make good any deficiency. Before resale, it was discovered that the reversionary interest had fallen into possession; the court gave the purchaser four days to complete his purchase. Robertson v. Skelton, 13 Beav. 91; 19 L. J., Ch. 561.

—— Deficiency to be Made Good.]—A resale of property, sold under a decree, ordered, in case the purchaser did not pay his money into court within a given time; and the purchaser ordered, in that case, to make good the deficiency, and to pay the costs of all the proceedings. Gray v. Gray, 1 Beav. 199.

First Purchaser Overbid.]—Where, upon a resale, the former purchaser has been overbid, the court will not pay him his own fourth until after the deposit by the new purchaser. Anon., Hay. & J. 719.

Agent without Authority.]—A. purchased for B., but without authority, an estate sold under a decree; B. died, without adopting the purchase; the order nisi was nevertheless obtained. The court refused to order B.'s executor to pay the purchase money, and, on the heir declining the purchase, discharged the order nisi, and directed a resale. Lord v. Lord, 1 Sim. 503.

Defective Title.]—The master having, on reference, found against the title:—Held, that there must be an order for discharging the purchaser before the court will give effect to resale. Williams v. Wace, C. P. Cooper, 42.

Purchaser Insane.]—Estate sold before the master, and A. reported the best bidder. Before the report was confirmed, it was discovered that A. was insane at the time of the bidding. The court directed the estate to be resold generally. Blackbeard v. Lindigren, 1 Cox, 205.

Where Purchaser Doubtful.] — Where the auctioneer announced a sum as the reserve, and there being an uncertainty as to who had bid, the estate was bought in at another sum:—Held, that the auctioneer had no right to fix more than one reserved bidding, nor could a bidder claim a resale if the parties interested did not desire it. Notley v. Salmon, 1 W. R. 240.

Resale by Purchaser.]—If, at a sale by auction under the order of the court, a purchaser sell his purchase for an additional sum beyond his purchase money, the court will order the property to be resold; and semble, that if upon such resale the property does not produce the improved price agreed to be given by the sub-purchaser, he will be responsible to the court for the difference. Holroyd v. Wyatt, 2 Coll. C. C. 327.

3. Possession, Rents and Profits.

Effect of Possession.]—A purchaser under a decree, who takes possession without the order of the court, accepts the title. Wilden v. Andrews, 4 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 208.

Purchase Money Idle.]—Purchaser under a decree is not entitled, upon an affidavit that he has had his money lying ready some time, to be let into possession of estate, and receipt of rents for all such time so passed. Barker v. Harper, G. Cooper, 32.

Injunction.]—The master in the cause having executed the deed of conveyance for the principal defendant, does not preclude his giving the usual certificate to enable the purchaser to obtain an injunction to be put into possession. Lawlor v. Drew, 7 Ir. Eq. R. 637.

—— Waste.]—Where the purchase deed was approved by the master's counsel, though not signed, the purchaser was put into possession by injunction, in consequence of the defendant having committed waste. Gray v. Stanford, 8 Ir. Eq. R. 678.

An injunction may be obtained to restrain purchaser under decree, who has not paid his purchase money, from committing waste. Casamajor v. Strode, 1 Sim. & S. 381.

—— Writ of Restitution.]—A purchaser under the decree having, under colour of the injunction to put him into possession, dispossessed persons who claimed adversely to the title of the parties in the cause, they were restored by writ of restitution, and the purchaser ordered to pay all damage sustained by them. Anderson v. Barry, 2 Jones, 631.

Rents and Profits—From what Date.]—A purchaser under a decree, having lodged the whole of his purchase money, is entitled to the rents from the preceding gale day. Gowan v. Tighe, Ll. & G. t. Plunk. 168. S. P., Prendergast v. Eyre, Id. 180.

Purchaser under decree is entitled to rents of lands from the gale day next preceding the payment of purchase money, and to have all outgoings cleared off up to that time. Montgomery v. Cosslett, 2 Jones, 174.

Where before a purchaser under decree was in possession rents to which he was entitled became due, and payments were made by the tenants to the receiver in the cause :—Held, that the payments made after the rents to which the purchaser was entitled had become payable should be applied in payment of those rents, and not of the arrears of rent previously due. Hargrave v. Holland, 5 Ir. Eq. R. 169.

Rents received by receiver after the gale day next succeeding the lodgment of three-fourths of the purchase money by a purchaser under a decree are applicable first to the payment of solvent arrears, and then to rent due to purchaser, whether or not he has gone into possession. Lee v. Moorhead (2 Moll. 509) and Hargrave v. Holland, supra, overruled. Doorley v. Power, 11 Ir. Eq. R. 577.

Where the gale days were the 1st May and 1st November, and the purchaser lodged one-fourth of the purchase money on the 28th April, and the remaining three-fourths on the 1st May :—Held, that the purchaser was entitled to the rents due on the 1st May. Scott v. Rothe, 1 Ir. Eq. R. 105.

Where the lands were sold under a decree of the 30th April, one-fourth of the purchase money deposited, a conditional order to confirm the sale made, and the remaining three-fourths lodged in bank, all upon the following day :—Held, that the purchaser was not entitled to the rents from the 1st November, the gale day next preceding the day of sale. Vincent v. Thwaites, 2 Ir. Eq. R. 426.

—— Receiver.]—Purchaser under a decree, having paid in his entire purchase money, was not entitled to compensation for the difference between the amount of rent received by the receiver before possession given, and the amount which ought to have been received according to the rental, which was erroneous, it appearing that he was aware of the error when he purchased : otherwise, if rents had been lost, and the claim had been for compensation for loss accrued after he had paid his purchase money, and before he could get possession. Campbell v. Hay, 2 Moll. 102.

The court does not insure to a purchaser under its decree the rents which accrue due between the lodgment of the purchase money in court and the execution of the injunction to put him into possession, except in cases where they are in the hands of its own receiver. Nunn v. Mahon, 2 Jones, 181. And see Doorley v. Power, supra.

—— Sale of Manor.]—A manor was sold under the decree of the court, and an order was made that the purchaser should, on the 17th May, pay his purchase money into court, and be let into possession of the profits from Lady day ; fines for admissions and deaths due before but paid after Lady day belong to the vendors. Garrick v. Camden (Earl), 2 Cox, 231 ; 2 R. R. 37.

—— Order of Reference.]—Where a reference had been directed whether an offer was beneficial, and the master reported in favour of the purchase :—Held, that the purchasers were entitled to the rents from the date of the order of reference. Cheetham v. Sturtevant, 3 De G. & Sm. 468.

—— Dividend on Stock.]—The purchaser of a life interest in stock sold before a master is entitled to a dividend becoming due on the day following the sale. Anson v. Towgood, 1 J. & W. 637.

Sale of Life Interest.]—Where a life interest was sold under a decree, and the tenant for life died subsequently to the lodgment of the one-fourth of the purchase money, but prior to confirmation of sale :—Held, contract not complete till sale confirmed by order of court, and purchaser not bound to complete. Vincent v. Going, 3 Dr. & War. 75, n.

Estate pur autre vie.]—The purchaser of an estate pur autre vie, sold under a decree of the court :—Held, not entitled to be discharged from his purchase where the sole cestui que vie died subsequently to the bidding, and before the master's report could have been confirmed. Vesey v. Elwood, 3 Dr. & War. 74 ; 2 Con. & L. 47. Affirming Fl. & K. 668 ; 5 Ir. Eq. R. 184.

Reversion.]—B. is confirmed purchaser of a reversion on an estate for life and the order made absolute. Afterwards the life drops :—Held, B. must pay interest from the date of the report being made absolute. Manning, Ex parte, 2 P. Wms. 410.

—— Resale.]—A purchaser under the court of a reversionary interest having made default in completing, a resale was ordered, and the purchaser was to make good any deficiency. Before such resale it was discovered that the reversionary interest had previously fallen into possession. The court gave the purchaser four days to complete his purchase. Robertson v. Skelton, 13 Beav. 91 ; 19 L. J., Ch. 561 ; 14 Jur. 323.

4. Losses and Outgoings.

Misconduct.]—The purchaser, under a decree, must bear any loss which accrued after the sale was confirmed, and before he entered into possession, if it would have fallen on him had he been in possession ; but the funds in the cause must make good to him any loss occasioned by the misconduct of the parties or the receiver. D'Espard v. Head, 1 Hog. 486.

Tithes.]—A purchaser kept out of possession by the plaintiff himself in occupation, is entitled to costs of orders for possession, an occupation rent, compensation for deterioration, and arrears of tithes he had been compelled to pay. Thomas v. Buxton, 38 L. J., Ch. 709 ; L. R. 8 Eq. 120.

A purchaser of an estate sold under a decree confirmed on the 29th April, but whose purchase deed was not executed until the December following, is liable for the tithe composition which accrued due in November, the lands being in the occupation of tenants from year to year. Stewart v. Alexander, 2 Jones, 530.

A purchaser of an estate buys it subsequent to the outgoings incident to it. Ib.

Accidental Loss.]—A purchaser from the court is in equity the owner from the order confirming the report, and any deterioration of the property arising from accident or by fire, without the default of the vendor, falls upon the purchaser. Robertson v. Skelton, 12 Beav. 260 ; 19 L. J., Ch. 140 ; 14 Jur. 323.

If, between the contract and conveyance, a loss arises by accident, which brings with it legal obligation, which must be immediately satisfied, the expense incurred by the vendors is payable by the purchaser. Ib.

Ornamental Timber.—When difficulties arise to delay the completion of a sale under a decree, and during the interval of making out the title ordinary dilapidation takes place, that is a case for compensation; but if a destruction of ornamental timber, that is a ground for the purchaser to apply to be discharged. Mugennis v. Fallon, 2 Moll. 585. And see cases, supra, col. 1327.

5. Purchase Money.

a. Payment into Court.

In General.]—In sales under a decree, it is irregular to pay the purchase money to the party; it ought to be paid into court. Bennett v. Hamill, 2 Sch. & Lef. 581.

Order for.]—The usual order for the payment of purchase money into court is to be obtained at chambers. Davenport v. Davenport, 9 Hare (App.) i.; 22 L. J., Ch. 11; 16 Jur. 988; 1 W. R. 12.

Defendants, part owners of property of which they were in possession, purchased a part on sale under a decree and were required to pay the whole of their purchase money into court notwithstanding the purchasers claimed allowances for improvements. Bulmer v. Allison, 15 L. J., Ch. 11. Affirming 8 Jur. 440.

Where lands decreed to be sold, subject to a charge, application on consent to lodge the sum in court refused. Anon., 8 Ir. Eq. R. 514. And see Dickin v. Dickin, supra, col. 1374.

Nonconcurrence of Parties Interested.]—On a sale by mortgagees, B. was certified to be the purchaser of the estate, but he objected to pay the purchase money into court, on the ground that cestuis que trustent were not sufficiently represented. The court overruled the objection, and directed a conveyance to the purchaser by the trustees, it not being necessary that the cestuis que trustent should be parties to the conveyance. Watters v. Jones, 6 Jur. (N.S.) 530; 2 L. T. 205.

When the purchaser of property under an administration decree declined to complete upon the ground of nonconcurrence in a previous sale of persons interested in the purchase money:—Held, that he must nevertheless bring the purchase money into court, the objection being one of conveyance and not of title. Matson v. Deanes, 4 De G. J. & S. 345.

Joint Purchase.]—Where two purchase one lot jointly, one party will not be permitted to pay into court his moiety of the purchase money. Darkin v. Marye, 1 Anstr. 22.

Before Confirmation.]—In the exchequer the three-fourths of the purchase money cannot be paid in until the sale is confirmed. Secus in Chancery. Vincent v. Thwaites, 2 Ir. Eq. R. 427.

Sale of Copyhold.]—Motion against purchasers in the master's office, to pay in their purchase money, refused; the estate sold being copyhold limited for life, and then in remainder, and the remainderman being abroad, he not having surrendered. Noel v. Weston, G. Cooper, 138. See 19 R. R. 281, n.

Report Confirmed.] — Where the master's report of the purchase was confirmed absolute, and the purchaser was ready with his money, but the abstract not fully delivered, the lord chancellor allowed it to be paid into the bank, to the credit of the cause, and invested, and the accumulating dividend to be invested in like manner: and the accountant-general was to declare the trust thereof, without prejudice to any question as to the rents, &c., and interest on the purchase money; the fund not to be transferred without notice to the purchaser. Hindle v. Dakins, C. P. Cooper, 381.

Without Accepting Title.]—Upon a sale under the court, an order upon the purchaser to pay his purchase money into court cannot be obtained until the title has been accepted, or the master's report obtained in its favour. Applications of purchasers to pay purchase money into court, and to be let into possession, without prejudice to objections to the title, are always refused. Rutter v. Marriott, 10 Beav. 33. S. P., Hutton v. Mansell, 2 Beav. 260.

A purchaser under the decree of the court is never let into possession till he has approved the title. Williams v. Shaw, 3 Russ. 178; 3 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 157.

Purchase money may be paid into court without prejudice to acceptance of title, but purchaser will not be let into possession. Morris v. Bull, 17 L. J., Ch. 9; 12 Jur. 4.

The court may, under special circumstances, permit a purchaser to pay his purchase money into court before he has accepted the title; but express provision must be made against his taking possession until he shall have accepted the title. Dempsey v. Dempsey, 1 De G. & Sm. 691.

Held, that a purchaser under a decree could not be permitted to pay his purchase money into court without accepting the title, although all parties consent. Denning v. Henderson, 1 De G. & Sm. 689; 16 L. J., Ch. 173; 11 Jur. 687.

Condition on sale under a decree that purchase money be paid by fixed date and interest charged from that date. On the purchaser's application after that date the court allowed him to pay in the principal and interest up to that day, without prejudice to any question and without acceptance of title. Rutley v. Gill, 3 De G. & Sm. 640.

Where vendor fails to deliver abstract the purchaser need not pay purchase money until a good title is shown, and he cannot, by giving notice to the vendor, set apart the purchase money. De Visme v. De Visme, 1 Mac. & G. 336; 1 Hall & Tw. 408; 19 L. J., Ch. 52; 13 Jur. 1037.

It is the rule of the court, on a special case being made out, to receive from the purchaser his purchase money, without compelling him to accept the title. Ib.

—— Possession Allowed.]—Purchaser, under circumstances, allowed to pay his purchase money into court, and to be let into possession and receipts of the rents and profits, without prejudice to any subsequent objection which he might make to the title. Marfell v. Rudge, 2 Y. & C. 566; 2 Jur. 78.

Purchaser allowed to pay the whole purchase money in court and let into possession without prejudice to any claim he might have for compensation for tithes. Man v. Ricketts, 5 De G. & Sm. 116.

Sale of Timber—Payment by Instalments.]—Order directing timber to be sold before master and purchase money to be paid by instalments. Purchaser desirous of paying purchase money immediately on allowance of discount, the same ordered on consent of defendant. Sitwell v. Sitwell, 4 Madd. 183.

Forfeiture of Deposit.]—At a sale under a decree the conditions provided that, in case of default, there should be a resale, the deficiency to be made good by the purchaser, but contained no stipulation as to the forfeiture of the deposit. The purchaser paid the deposit, and afterwards became bankrupt, and the assignees having declined to complete:—Held, that the deposit was forfeited. Depree v. Bedborough, 4 Giff. 479; 3 N. R. 187; 33 L. J., Ch. 134; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1317; 9 L. T. 532; 12 W. R. 191.

Semble, that where the purchaser makes default, no express stipulation is necessary to entitle the vendor to the deposit. Ib.

Where a purchaser, having lodged the one-fourth of his purchase money, refused to lodge the three-fourths unless the abstract of title was first delivered to him, and no report of good title had been obtained:—Held, that no report of good title having been had, the one-fourth could not be forfeited. Warren v. Bateman, Fl. & K. 189.

A solicitor who attends a sale and bids for his client, is responsible for the payment of the deposit, and will be attached if it is not paid. A purchaser who refuses to pay the remaining three-fourths of the purchase money on the title being declared good, will be ordered to do so on a certain day, or to forfeit his deposit. Hobhouse v. Hamilton, 1 Hog. 401.

A purchaser under decree is not entitled to have his objections to the title disposed of before he brings in the whole of the purchase money. If he delays to complete he will be ordered to bring in the remaining three-fourths within a limited time, and on default his one-fourth will be forfeited. It is no objection that there has not been any report upon, or reference as to, the title. Newman v. Fitzgerald, 6 Ir. Eq. R. 258.

Duty of Auctioneer to Pay Money into Court.]—It is the duty of an auctioneer nominated to conduct a sale by the court, to pay any money received by him into court, at all events as between himself and the court. After certificate, the ordinary course of business is for the solicitors to receive the money from the auctioneer, and themselves pay it into court. Biggs v. Bree, 51 L. J., Ch. 263; 46 L. T. 8; 30 W. R. 278—C. A.

Payment by Promissory Note.] — Where a creditor to the estate is declared the purchaser at a sum less than his demand, he must lodge his promissory note in lieu of the purchase money, in order that the side-bar rule to confirm the sale may be entered. Edwards v. Backas, 8 Ir. Eq. R. 585.

The court refused to allow a purchaser to lodge his promissory note in lieu of the three-fourths of his purchase money, notice not having been given to all the creditors. Gardiner v. Blevinton, 11 Ir. Eq. R. 357.

—— Interest.]—Where a promissory note payable with interest generally, has been lodged in court, in part payment of purchase money, the word interest signifies legal interest and not the court rate of interest. Gibbons v. Berry, Sau. & Sc. 158.

Where a purchaser moves on consent to lodge a promissory note in part payment of his purchase money, the consent and note should both specify the rate of interest payable on the note. O'Connor v. Richards, Sau. & Sc. 160.

A purchaser's promissory note directed to bear interest at 6 per cent. where there were charges upon the estate at that rate of interest, although 5 per cent. was the rate of interest agreed upon. Ferguson v. Eyre, Sau. & Sc. 160, n.

Promissory note lodged by purchaser for purchase money will bear 6 per cent. interest. Anon., 8 Ir. Eq. R. 158.

Rate of Interest.]—The purchaser who has lodged his purchase money under an order, is entitled, in case the sale does not proceed, to have it back with interest at 6 per cent. The vendor investing it in the funds runs the risk of a fall, whether he does it by order of the court or not. If the investment is at the purchaser's instance, he may, if the sale goes off, be entitled to the stock in specie. Kirwan v. Blake, 2 Moll. 506; 1 Hog. 151.

The purchaser of a reversionary interest under decree, is bound to pay interest at the rate of 3*l.* 10*s.* per cent. on the three-fourths of his purchase-money, from the report of good title to the date of lodgment. Hutchinson v. Cathcart, Jon. & C. 260; 1 Ir. Eq. R. 452.

Upon the report it is the duty of the purchaser to bring in the remainder of his purchase-money; and if he is afterwards discharged on account of defect of title, he will be entitled to interest thereupon; he is therefore properly chargeable with interest from that time. Ib.

A purchaser from the assignees of a bankrupt is entitled to receive interest upon his deposit, whether the purchase be proceeded with or not. Page, In re, 1 Dr. & Wal. 34. S. P., Hill v. Kirwan, 1 Hog. 357.

A purchaser discharged on a report of bad title is entitled to interest on the one-fourth of the purchase-money from the date of the lodgment. Gower v. Hill, Hay. & J. 127. S. P., Lineham v. Cotter, 8 Ir. Eq. R. 104. But see Feely v. Kilkenny, Fl. & K. 456, infra, col. 1401.

The purchaser lodged his promissory note for the amount of the purchase-money, but was afterwards allowed compensation for a rent-charge:—Held, he was chargeable for interest on his note for the difference only. Wilson v. Poe, 8 Ir. Eq. R. 139.

A motion to invest the one-fourth of the purchase-money in 3½ per cent. stock, must be upon notice. Lee v. Poole, 2 Ir. Eq. R. 419.

Payment to Solicitor.]—On a motion that the master might be at liberty to take a deposit on the purchase-money to be paid into the hands of the master's chief clerk, the court, on the applicant's solicitor appearing by counsel, and undertaking to pay what he might receive according to the order of the court, and the applicant himself undertaking to be bound by any order the court might make in respect of any moneys his solicitor might receive, gave liberty to the master to fix a deposit, and to direct the purchaser to pay the same to such solicitor, such solicitor to pay the same into court on or before a time appointed by the present order. Lyon v. Colvill, 6 Jur. 680.

b. Payment Out and Application.

Liability of Purchaser.]—Purchaser under a decree for sale, and payment of creditors, answerable for the application of the money, if not paid into court. Lloyd v. Baldwin, 1 Ves. Sen. 173.

Purchaser, under a decree, bound to see directions of decree observed. Colclough v. Sterum, 3 Bligh, 181; 22 R. R. 1.

A purchaser of lands sold under a decree is not bound to see to the application of the purchase-money. Blake v. Blake, 5 Ir. Eq. R. 596.

A purchaser, under a decree, is not affected by irregularities and defects in the decree by which the application of the money may not have been properly secured. Curtis v. Price, 12 Ves. 89; 8 R. R. 303.

Petition for—Service.]—The purchase-money of an estate sold under decree paid into court to the credit of the cause, becomes the fund of all parties:—Held, that they were properly served with a petition respecting such money. De Visme v De Visme, 1 Mac. & G. 336; 1 Hall & Tw. 408; 19 L. J., Ch. 52; 13 Jur. 1037.

When Conveyance not Executed.]—The plaintiff can draw out the purchase-money only when he has delivered the deed executed by all necessary parties, or in their default by the master, under an order to the purchaser, and an injunction to put him into possession. Farrell v. Irwin, 2 Moll. 511. And see Massey v. Massey, id. 511.

The court will not, under any circumstances, suffer money paid in by a purchaser to be paid out to a mortgagee, until a proper conveyance shall have been executed to purchaser. Rex v. Adam, 9 Price, 660.

This rule holds good even where delay in executing the conveyances arises from the purchaser's own negligence. Beven v. Beven, 1 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 159.

Whilst conditional orders for attachments are depending against plaintiff and defendant for not executing the conveyances to the purchaser, the creditors cannot be paid out of the purchase money, though the purchaser has gone into possession, but the court will give them leave to proceed on their security. Ormsby v. Nicholson, Vern. & S. 115.

Where Estate is Small.]—The court having ordered certain small leaseholds to be sold and the proceeds distributed among numerous parties, upon the certificate of the chief clerk, after summons to the purchasers at chambers to show cause why the proceeds should not be distributed, the proceeds were distributed by the chief clerk. Thorp v. Owen, 2 Sm. & G. (App.) i.

Title Accepted by Purchaser.]—Purchaser entered, accepted title, and conveyances were executed. On application by the creditors, the purchaser alleged claim by a person to whole estate by adverse title had been set up:—Held, that the purchaser, having accepted the title, &c., could not prevent the money being paid out of court. Thomas v. Powell, 2 Cox, 394; 2 R. R. 86.

A purchaser under a decree, who has gone into possession, cannot prevent the purchase money being paid out, by alleging that the landlord claims the premises because of a forfeiture, and threatens to bring an ejectment. Sparrow v. Cooper, 1 Jones, 72.

Leaseholds were sold under the court. The purchaser accepted the title, paid his purchase money into court, and was let into possession. The lessors afterwards instituted a suit to rectify the lease. The court refused to compel the final completion of the purchase, or part with the purchase money, until the result of the suit was known. Bentley v. Craven, 17 Beav. 204.

Where the purchaser discovering an incumbrance executes the conveyance, he cannot interfere with the distribution of the proceeds. Miller v. Pridden, 26 L. J., Ch. 183; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 78; 5 W. R. 171.

Where Conveyance cannot be Executed.]—An estate sold was vested in the heir pur autre vie, with legal remainder to the children of A. (who was living) as tenants in common. The purchase money was in court. The case appeared not to be within the 1 Will. 4, c. 47, so that no effective conveyance could be made until the death of A.:—Held, that the purchase money ought not to be distributed. Heming v. Archer, 9 Beav. 366; 10 Jur. 169.

Creditors—Lien of.]—A judgment creditor not deprived of his lien on the estate in the hands of a purchaser under a decree, by not proving his debt before the master, in pursuance of advertisements. Barrett v. Blake, 2 Ball & B. 354.

The only inconvenience to a judgment creditor not proving before the master is, that he loses the benefit of having his debt discharged out of the produce of the sale under the decree. Id. 357.

A. having a lien on the testator's estate, established his debt under the decree, but his claim for interest was disallowed by the master, whose report stood confirmed. The estate was sold, subject to A.'s lien; and A., having refused to accept from the purchaser his principal without interest, was not allowed to participate as a creditor in the purchase money. Hempstead v. Hempstead, 4 Beav. 423.

Where lands are sold under a decree, the purchaser is entitled to have all judgments paid out of the purchase money satisfied on record; but where a judgment creditor filed a charge under a decree, and the master's report did not find anything due on foot of the judgment, the purchaser was not entitled to have the judgment satisfied, nor lands released, as the filing of the charge made the creditor a quasi-party. Fitzgerald v. Lane, 3 Ir. Eq. R. 339.

—— Outstanding Judgments.]—Parties to the suit, and all persons coming in under the decree, will be enjoined from disturbing the purchaser. If judgment creditors come in, and only a few can be paid, others are restrained. Stackpoole v. Curtis, 2 Moll. 504.

Where there are alleged to be outstanding judgments not proved in the cause the court will refer it to the master to ascertain the sums due under the decree, and to allocate the purchase money without prejudice to the purchasers. Greene v. Elliott, 1 Ir. Eq. R. 207.

Where a deficient fund is produced by a title under a decree, and judgment creditors having a lien upon the legal estate puisne to the reported incumbrances, refuse to prove under the decree, or to release lands; if the purchaser, who relies on those judgments as objections to the title, will not consent to be discharged, the proper course is to apply for a reference as to title. Barrett v. Bermingham, Sau. & Sc. 419.

—— Coming in after Decree.]—Where judgment creditor, after final decree for sale, was allowed to apply to extend sale to cover his demand, a purchaser, although having the legal estate, would be liable, if, having notice of such prior judgment creditor, he allowed the purchase money to be applied to subsequent incumbrances. Leake v. Moore, 2 Moll. 127.

—— Sale by another Court.]—A judgment creditor, having obtained a decree for a sale in chancery, the lands having been sold under a prior decree in the exchequer, was allowed to file a charge under the decree to account in the exchequer, on foot of his demand, as decreed in chancery, and the remembrancer and registrar were directed to amend the report and final decree by inserting his demand, if it should be proved. Pidgeon v. D'Alton, Jon. & C. 276.

Retaining Part—Fine.]—The purchaser of a copyhold estate sold, during the infancy of the heir, under the usual decree, is not entitled to have a portion of the purchase money retained in court for defraying the expense of the fine, payable on the death of the heir before a conveyance. Morris v. Clarkson, 3 Swanst. 558; 19 R. R. 277.

—— Deficiency of Rents.]—Loss or deficiency of rents arising while vendor was in default, by not completing the conveyance, the purchaser not having taken possession or changed the receiver, ordered to be made good out of the purchase money in court. Blennerhassett v. M'Namara, 1 Moll. 81.

Surplus after Payment of Incumbrances.]—Surplus arising from sale of real estate under a decree for payment of all incumbrances (notice to creditors to come in being given by advertisement), after payment of all charges proved thereunder, paid out to the inheritor. The lord chancellor (varying the order of the master of rolls) held that no further advertisement should be issued, as, according to practice, in respect of sales under decrees, bonâ fide purchaser is never liable to answer subsequent creditors. St. Antonio v. Adderley, 2 Moll. 117; varying 2 Hog. 6.

6. Costs and Expenses.

On Discharge of Purchaser.]—Costs to which a purchaser under the court is entitled, on its being found that a good title cannot be made. Perkins v. Ede, 16 Beav. 268.

When, in consequence of a defect in the title to lands sold under a decree, the purchaser is discharged, he is entitled to the full amount of his purchase money, interest, and taxed costs, without deduction. Johnson v. Reardon, 3 Ir. Eq. R. 200.

Where a purchase under a decree goes off on account of defects in the title, a defendant having the conduct of the cause will not be ordered personally to pay the purchaser's costs, though there are no funds in court, and the plaintiff is insolvent. Mullins v. Hussey, 35 L. J., Ch. 348; L. R. 1 Eq. 488.

Under a decree for a sale, a trustee for the inheritor was declared the purchaser. There was a report of bad title:—Held, that the trustee was entitled to his costs out of the fund in court, it appearing that the inheritor was ignorant of his own title, and that he had acted bonâ fide. Kirby v. O'Shee, 1 Jones, 164.

Where there has been great delay, and there is little hope of perfecting the title within a reasonable time, the court will dismiss a purchaser with costs. Fraser v. Wood, 8 Beav. 339; 14 L. J., Ch. 220.

Objections by Purchaser.]—The costs of an unsuccessful application by a purchaser under a decree to be relieved from his purchase, on the ground of defective title, must be paid by the applicant. Osborn v. Osborn, 18 W. R. 421.

A purchaser, under decree, succeeded in some objections only:—Held, that he was entitled to the proper costs of investigating the title, after deducting the costs occasioned by the objections in which he failed. Brown v. Lynch, 4 Ir. Eq. R. 59.

Investigating Title.]—Where an estate was sold under decree, and one of the conditions of sale was, that the purchaser pay the purchase money into court on a given day, at his own expense:—Held, that the purchaser was entitled to the costs of a reference as to the title reported good by the master. Camden v. Benson, 1 Keen, 671.

Where property sold under a decree is bought by a defendant in the suit, he is entitled to his costs of a reference to the master as to title. Holland v. King, 1 W. R. 80.

Where an estate has been sold under decree, and the master reports against the title, the purchaser is entitled to be paid out of the fund in the cause his costs of and consequent upon his becoming purchaser, and of investigating the title. Att.-Gen. v. Newark Corporation, 8 Sim. 71. S. P., Reynolds v. Blake, 2 Sim. & S. 117. S. C., nom. Anon., 3 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 88.

—— No Fund in Court.]—A purchaser under decree is entitled to his costs where master reports against title, though no fund in court. Smith v. Nelson, 2 Sim. & S. 557; 4 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 175; 25 R. R. 266.

Where a sale had been directed under a decree, but there was no reference to the master as to the title, and no available fund in court:—Held, that the purchaser was entitled to be reimbursed by the plaintiff the costs of investigating the title and confirming the purchase. Berry v. Johnson, 2 Y. & C. 564; 1 Jur. 474.

—— Exception to Reports.]—A purchaser under decree, who succeeds on exceptions to the master's report approving the title, cannot then have the costs of the reference on title; but must obtain the report in his favour, and then present a petition to be discharged from his purchase and to have his costs. Hyde v. Hyde, 3 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 130.

—— Interest.]—A purchaser, who having lodged one-fourth only of his purchase money, was discharged upon a report of bad title:—Held, entitled to the costs incurred by him in investigating the title, but not to interest on the one-fourth. Feely v. Kilkenny, Fl. & K. 456. And see cases, supra, col. 1396.

—— Abstract.]—If the title shown by the abstract is not sufficient, the purchaser has a right to have a further abstract, and gets his costs up to the time when the proper abstract is furnished. Goffe v. Mitchell, 2 Moll. 508.

Purchaser under decree is entitled to his costs of investigating the title when there has been a substantial variance from the abstract first furnished. Where the original abstract was not varied from in substance, costs were refused. Leland v. Griffith, 2 Moll. 150.

Fee of Counsel.]—In sales under decree, as in private sales, the plaintiff or vendor is not bound to furnish to the purchaser a fee for counsel, with the abstract of title, unless by special condition. If the purchaser require the opinion of counsel, he must take it at his own expense. Alexander v. Crosbie, 2 Ir. Eq. R. 141.

A purchaser under decree is not entitled, at the cost of the estate, to a further opinion of counsel, besides that which he gets with the abstract under Lord Redesdale's rule. But, if afterwards discharged by reason of defects of title discovered by such further opinion, he will be entitled to be repaid the reasonable costs incurred in obtaining it. Barton v. Downes (Lord) Fl. & K. 633; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 607.

Opening Biddings.]—A discharged purchaser is not entitled, as against a bidder opening the sale, to the costs of investigating the title, where he has proceeded to do so before the order to confirm was made absolute. Digby v. Browne, 1 Ir. Eq. R. 377.

Nor where there was no reference to the master to report as to good title. Sullivan v. Bayly, Fl. & K. 460.

Solicitor of Inheritor.]—If solicitor of inheritor is employed by creditor to make out title to purchase, he will be paid his costs out of fund in court. Thompson v. Cooke, 1 Hog. 28.

Expenses—Receiver's Fees.] — Purchaser of lands under decree, who has obtained an absolute order to confirm the sale, and has paid in his entire purchase money, is not liable to deduction for receiver's fees upon the rents collected in the interim, before he could get into possession. That falls upon the vendor. Duigenan v. Nangle, 2 Moll. 96.

A purchaser who allows the receiver to continue in possession until the title is declared good, is bound to pay receiver's fees, as he might have gone into possession himself on an undertaking to account if the title turned out defective. Brown v. Dowdall, 2 Hog. 198.

—— Claim by Devisee of Vendor.]—Estates purchased, on the death of the purchaser, were sold in an administration suit. In a suit by a party claiming as devisee of the original vendor, the purchaser was directed to pay his own costs. Incorporated Society for Protestant Schools v. Richards, 1 Dr. & War. 258; 1 Con. & L. 58; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 177.

—— Before Conveyance.]—A purchaser, under the court, who had not obtained his conveyance, paid his money into court:—Held, entitled to his costs of appearance on further consideration, he having been served with notice. Noble v. Stow, 30 Beav. 272.

—— Before Report Confirmed.]—A purchaser under a decree has no lien for his costs on the funds in court, arising out of the sales of other property, so as to prevent any distribution of the fund until the report of the title being bad has been confirmed. M'Cann v. O'Farrell, 1 Hog. 137.

Costs of Conveyance.] — Where, under a decree in a creditor's suit, directing the master to settle the conveyances if the parties differ, an application is made to the master respecting the conveyance, the purchaser must pay the costs of his attendances before the master. Hodgson v. Shaw, 16 L. J., Ch. 56; 11 Jur. 95.

When, in consequence of the defendants' refusal to execute the conveyance, it becomes necesary to apply, that the master may execute in their names, the defendants pay the costs of such application. Clarke v. De Burgh, 2 Ir. Eq. R. 19.

—— Party Out of Jurisdiction.]—A plaintiff having charged B.. who was defendant, to be out of the jurisdiction, but omitted to pray process against him on his coming within the jurisdiction:—Held, nevertheless, entitled to the costs of a supplemental suit to compel B. to join in the conveyance. Oldham v. Wilkins, 1 Dr. & Wal. 717.

—— Heir not Concurring.]—Where estates of an intestate were sold under a decree, and the heir-at-law, a feme covert, declined acknowledging the conveyance to the purchaser, semble, that the heir was a trustee within 1 Will. 4, c. 60. Billing v. Webb, 1 De G. & Sm. 716; 12 Jur. 427.

In such a case, where the costs of the suit exceeded the funds in the cause, the court directed the costs, occasioned by the refusal of the married woman, to be first taxed and paid. Ib.

—— Infant Heir.] — Under a decree in a creditors' suit, estates of an intestate, leaving an infant heir, were sold:—Held, that the costs of settling the conveyance from the infant by the master ought to be borne by the intestate's estate. Brown v. Lake, 15 L. J., Ch. 34.

—— Release by Incumbrancers.] — A purchaser under the decree of a court of equity, obtaining a conveyance of the legal estate, is not entitled to have, at the expense of the funds in the cause, a release from equitable incumbrancers, who were parties to be paid under the decree. Keatinge v. Keatinge, 6 Ir. Eq. R. 43.

—— Sale in Lots.]—The costs of covenants to produce title deeds which cannot be delivered, fall, by the practice of conveyancers, on vendors; but where on sale in lots, provision was made for the largest purchaser to have the deeds, and to covenant to produce them, or give copies thereof to the purchasers of smaller lots, without reference to the costs, each purchaser was ordered to bear his own costs. Strong v. Strong, 4 Jur. (N.S.) 943; 6 W. R. 455.

Motion for Payment into Court.]—Where the purchaser has been the cause of delay in the completion of the title, he will be ordered to pay the costs of the motion for payment by him into court of the purchase money. Flower v. Hartopp, 12 L. J., Ch. 39.

A purchaser under a decree, one of the conditions of sale being the payment of the money into court by a certain day:—Held, liable to pay the costs of the order for that purpose. Camden v. Benson, 1 Keen, 671.

—— Substituted Purchaser.]—Where, on the same motion by which the purchaser asks to pay his purchase money into court and be let into possession, it is also asked that one purchaser may be substituted for another upon the affidavit of no underhand bargain, costs are not ordered to be paid by the purchasers. Christian v. Chambers, 4 Hare, 307; 14 L. J., Ch. 340; 9 Jur. 393.

Petition for Payment Out.]—In a sale under the court, after a purchaser has obtained his conveyance, he will not be allowed costs on appearing on a petition for payment out. He should inform the petitioners that he has no claim on the fund. Barton v. Latour, 18 Beav. 526.

Purchasers who were informed that their appearance on a petition for payment out would be objected to were yet allowed the costs of such appearance. Strong v. Strong, supra.

Fees of Court.]—Upon a sale by the master in lots, the proper fee to be paid according to the schedule annexed to the orders in chancery, issued under the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 94, is 5*l.* where the whole produce of the sale does not exceed 2,000*l.*, and 5*s.* on every 100*l.* beyond that sum, without regard to the number of lots or purchasers. Allen's Charities, In re, 2 Myl. & K. 627.

Taxation.]—Charges of a sale to be taxed under the head of just allowances, not of costs. Crump v. Baker, 18 Ves. 285.

Costs, charges, and expenses of, and incidental to, the sale of the estates, were by the decree ordered to be taxed and paid. It appeared that 340*l.* had been paid for surveying and selling the estates, upon which the fee of taxation of 36 per cent. attached. On a motion by all parties the court varied the order by only directing taxing master to add to the taxed costs of the plaintiffs any sums which he should find to have been properly paid by them to any surveyor or other person, for valuing or otherwise, in reference to the sales. Bellas v. Harmer, 3 De G. & Sm. 454.

7. Conveyance.

Order for.]—A peremptory order on the wife to execute a conveyance of estate not settled to her separate use, refused. Jordan v. Jones, 2 Ph. 170.

Where on a sale under a decree a party refuses to convey, the right course for the purchaser is to move that he be ordered to convey. Stilwell v. Mellersh, 4 Myl. & Cr. 581; 10 Sim. 367; 9 L. J., Ch. 39; 4 Jur. 175.

And see cases, infra, col. 1416.

Form of.]—Conveyances made under a decree are to be settled by the like rule as men of judgment among conveyancers would direct. Lloyd v. Griffith, 3 Atk. 279.

Practice as to conveyances on sales in master's office. Smith v. Gibbons, 1 W. R. 74.

—— Settled by Judge.]—In a sale by the court:—Held, that the order of a judge settling the form of a conveyance is subject to appeal. Pollock v. Rabbits, 21 Ch. D. 466; 47 L. T. 637; 31 W. R. 150—C. A.

—— Draft.]—The decree for a sale does not direct the remembrancer to settle the draft of the deed of conveyance to the purchaser, and a special application for that purpose is necessary. Hogg v. Waldron, 6 Ir. Eq. R. 218.

Execution of.]—Upon a sale of lands under a decree in a cause where judgment creditors, prior to the plaintiff, had been made parties by a supplemental bill, the remembrancer ordered to execute the deed of sale. O'Kelly v. Bodkin, 7 Ir. Eq. R. 338.

—— Copyhold.]—Upon sale in court of copyhold, vendor coming for aid is compelled to surrender in person if conveniently it can be done. Noel v. Weston, 6 Madd. 50; 22 R. R. 235.

Where copyhold is under commission, good title is made by bargain and sale from commissioners direct to purchaser. Holland, Ex parte, 4 Madd. 483.

Parties to.]—Purchasers under a decree which is impeached for fraud and error are not necessary parties, if there is a proper undertaking to abide by the sale. Creed v. Creed, 2 Hog. 215.

A trustee named in a will, who has refused the trust, is not a necessary party. Ib.

E. allows his co-trustee K. to sell part of trust funds on his giving a promissory note and deposit of deeds of freeholds. K. is bankrupt, and under an order of a commissioner the freeholds are sold, and the conditions provide that the order in bankruptcy shall be conclusive:—Held, that cestuis que trustent were not necessary parties: the deposit and the memorandum being a personal indemnity only by one trustee to another. Groom v. Booth, 1 W. R. 423.

—— Incumbrancers.]—A. assigned to B. a reversion as a security for money lent, with a power to B. to sell the same, and "give effectual discharges to the purchaser," and afterwards borrowed money of other persons upon the security of the same sum:—Held, that all the incumbrancers must join to discharge a purchaser. Brasier v. Hudson, 9 Sim. 1.

A defendant, who is an incumbrancer on an estate sold under the decree of the court, and who has concurred in settling conditions of sale, describing such estate as to be sold free from incumbrances, will be ordered to concur in carrying the sale into effect, and to execute the conveyance of the estate to the purchaser, free from his incumbrance. Tomlin v. Hatfield, 9 L. J., Ch. 119.

—— Equitable Incumbrancers.]—A purchaser under a decree for a sale for the payment of equitable incumbrances, has not a right to have the estate released therefrom, the effect of the decree being to extinguish them as to the estate sold. He must have a conveyance of the legal estate discharged of all incumbrances, legal and equitable. Webber v. Jones, 6 Ir. Eq. R. 142.

A purchaser under decree of a court, obtaining a conveyance of the legal estate, is not entitled to have, at the expense of the funds in the cause, a release from equitable incumbrancers, who were parties to and paid under the decree. Keatinge v. Keatinge, 6 Ir. Eq. R. 43.

Custody of Deeds.]—The court will not order the bargain and sale from the commissioners to the assignees to be given by them to the purchaser, upon his allegation merely that the bankrupt had no other freehold property than what was conveyed to the purchaser under the commission. Pocock, Ex parte, Chapman, In re, 1 Deac. & C. 104; 1 L. J., Bk. 18.

A purchaser entitled to title deeds having paid his purchase money into court, the court will not order the money to be divided, and the deeds to remain in the hands of the master, until the completion of the sale of another lot. Hobson v. Neale, Tam. 446.

Production of Deeds.]—A purchaser relied on the memorial of a deed as creating an objection to the title:—Held, that he could not afterwards object that the deed itself was not produced. Stewart v. Conyngham (Marquis), 1 Ir. Ch. R. 534.

A plaintiff who has not established his title has a right to the production of documents in the defendant's custody, by which he alleges that his title will be established. Moons v. Bernales, 1 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 185.

Opinion of Counsel.]—The purchaser of lands sold under the decree of the court is not entitled, before the title has been accepted by him, to see the opinion of counsel on the statement of title given pursuant to the 138th General Order. Stack v. Baxter, 10 Ir. Eq. R. 102. S. P., Foster v. Foster, 1 Hog. 224.

Searches.]—In Ireland a plaintiff who has obtained a decree for a sale, and cannot procure the title deeds, must make out a statement of title from searches in the registrar's office and elsewhere. Hamilton v. Royse, 1 Hog. 236.

The court will not entertain an application that further searches should be furnished to a purchaser, being an application to be made to the master. Lalor v. Drew, 7 Ir. Eq. R. 202.

Map of Lands.]—The purchaser of lands sold under a decree:—Held, to be entitled to a map and survey of them, prepared during the progress of and for the purposes of the cause. Jepson v. Minton, Fl. & K. 95.

Account Book.]—A purchaser under the court, not being able to obtain an account book to which he was entitled, brought an action of trover against some parties to the cause. He was restrained by injunction. Stubbs v. Sargon, 4 Beav. 90.

8. Setting Aside Sale.

Want of Jurisdiction.]—A purchaser cannot take an objection that the court has miscarried in exercising its jurisdiction. Waters v. Waters, 36 L. J., Ch. 195; 15 L. T. 406; 15 W. R. 191.

General Principle.]—Principles on which court acts in suits to impeach purchases made under a decree. Thornhill v. Glover, 3 Dr. & War. 195.

Equitable Title.]—Upon a sale under the court, the purchaser will not be compelled to accept an equitable title without the legal estate being got in. Freeland v. Pearson, L. R. 7 Eq. 246.

Title by adverse Possession.]—A purchaser under a decree will be compelled to take a title which depends on adverse possession, under the statute of limitations, although such adverse possession is evidenced merely by affidavit in the master's office, and was not at issue in the suit. Scott v. Nixon, 2 Con. & L. 185; 3 Dr. & War. 388; 6 Ir. Eq. R. 8.

Delay.]—The court is forbearing towards a party selling under a decree, and will not let off the purchaser unless the delay is grievous. Magennis v. Fallon, 2 Moll. 584.

A sale under a decree, all necessary parties being before the court, not set aside after a lapse of time, the sale appearing to be properly conducted. Lightburn v. Swift, 2 Ball & B. 207.

In a creditor's action, the court refused to set aside the sale at the suit of a creditor who had acquiesced for four years on the ground of misdescription in the particulars. Price v. North, 2 Y. & C. 620; 7 L. J., Ex. Eq. 9.

Suit Defective as to Parties.]—Objection that suit was defective for want of parties. Plaintiffs informed purchaser that defect would probably be cured in three weeks. Four days after purchaser presented a petition to be relieved from his purchase, but the court refused to do so. Sherwood v. Beveridge, 3 De G. & Sm. 425; 13 Jur. 1042.

The purchaser under a decree having objected to the title for want of parties, an application of the plaintiff that the purchaser might be discharged refused. Conyers v. Crosbie, 7 Ir. Eq. R. 401.

Deterioration.]—A sale under a decree in a creditors' suit, subject to certain specified defects, deteriorating the value of the estates, but which the creditor had no means of getting rid of by any suit, not set aside. Fisher v. Barry, Beat. 139.

When difficulties delay the completion of a sale under a decree, and during the interval ordinary dilapidation takes place, that is a case for compensation; but a destruction of ornamental timber is a ground for the purchaser to be discharged. Magennis v. Fallon, supra.

Decree nisi.]—On a sale under a decree nisi A. was reported purchaser, and afterwards discharged on the ground of the decree not being absolute. On subsequent proceedings by vendor the decree was made absolute:—Held, that the purchaser having been once discharged, the contract could not be revived by the proceedings subsequently taken by the vendor. Coster v. Turnor, 1 Russ. & M. 311; 8 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 98.

Excessive Price.]—A purchaser, who, in consequence of a direction to his agent to bid one pound more than any other bidder, had been declared tenant at a very high rent, will not be discharged. Mahon v. Hammond, Sau. & Sc. 689.

A solvent person, who had directed his agent to bid 1*l.* more than any other person, will not be discharged from his bidding, although it may be much above the real value. An option was given to the applicant to have the lands set up again, without discharging him from his bidding, and subject to his making compensation for any difference between the two lettings. Coote v. Coote, Sau & Sc. 623 ; 2 Ir. Eq. R. 159.

Inadequate Price.]—On a sale for payment of incumbrances, part of the purchase money was applied in payment of interest accrued due during the possession of a tenant for life, and he also obtained a lease of part of the property. The court refused to set aside the sale, but referred it to the master to inquire if the sale was at an under-value, and if so, that the purchaser's representatives should pay the difference into court, and that the tenant for life should pay into court so much as the master should find had been applied as above stated. Townsend v. Warren, 1 Jo. & Lat. 221, n. ; 6 Ir. Eq. R. 620.

The court refused to discharge the solicitor in the cause from a purchase before the master, with the view of preventing a sale at under-value. Nelthorpe v. Pennyman, 14 Ves. 517.

Insolvency.]—Purchaser discharged on motion upon affidavit of imprisonment for debt and insolvency. Hodder v. Ruffin, 1 V. & B. 544.

Deposit Forfeited.]—Purchaser before a master submitting to forfeit his deposit, not bound to proceed in the purchase. Savile v. Savile, 1 P. Wms. 745. But see id. 747.

Sale to Receiver.]—Sales under a decree in trust as to part for the receiver set aside after confirmation. Alven v. Bond, Fl. & K. 196 ; 3 Ir. Eq. R. 365.

Title Defective—Sale in Lots.]—In general, objection of a purchaser of two lots to completion, on the ground that the title to one is bad, is not to be discussed upon motion. Casamajor v. Strode, Coop. t. Brough. 510.

Where title defective as to certain lots, a purchaser of other lots held under the same title, discharged. Lewis v. Lewis, 9 L. J., Ch. 176.

A purchaser of two lots, as to one of which the biddings were opened, released from his bidding for the other lot, upon his undertaking to pay the costs of the resale. Gregg v. Glover, 1 Ir. Eq. R. 211.

—— Misrepresentation.] —Parties interested in a sale were induced to consent to purchaser being discharged, it being represented that a good title could not be made ; they subsequently discovered they had been deceived. The court discharged the order, giving the purchaser his costs, and referring it to the master to inquire whether a good title could be made. Butter v. Ommaney, 1 Tam. 344.

—— As to Part.]—Where the vendor had no title to a small portion of the land, but such defect was not discovered till after the contract the court refused, with costs, a motion by the purchaser to be discharged, without giving the vendor an opportunity of acquiring a title to the portion. Chamberlain v. Lee, 10 Sim. 444.

After the purchaser under a decree had approved of the title, a deed was discovered, which showed that the plaintiffs could not make a title to more than a moiety of the estate. The court discharged the purchaser. Ward v. Trathen, 14 Sim. 82 ; 8 Jur. 303.

Purchaser under decree of two-sevenths of estate in one lot is not obliged to take one-seventh to which only title can be made. Roffey v. Shallcross, 4 Madd. 227 ; 20 R. R. 293.

—— Defect Cured before Hearing.] — Purchaser compelled to pay money into court after long delay : before conveyance a defect in title discovered, and on reference to the master, he reported against the title ; exceptions carried in and before hearing the defect cured :—Held, that the purchaser had a right to be discharged, and that a further reference ought not to be directed. Dalby v. Pullen, 1 Russ. & M. 296 ; 3 Sim. 29 ; 8 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 74 ; 30 R. R. 123.

—— Compensation.]—The doctrine of compensation ought not to be extended. Jurisdiction has been exercised in giving compensation founded on the minuteness of the object compared with the estate sold. The purchaser of several denominations in one lot will be discharged, if the master reports that a good title cannot be made to one of the denominations. Prendergast v. Eyre, 2 Hog. 81.

A purchaser at a sale in bankruptcy will not be discharged on objections to title, which were expressly noticed in the abstract posted in the court :—Held, that where title cannot be made out to small portions, the purchaser will be entitled to compensation pro tanto only, unless he can show that the deficient portion was essential to the proper enjoyment of the whole, or that it constituted his main object in entering into the contract. Gethin, Ex parte, Smith, In re, Ll. & G. t. Plunk. 429.

Difference in practice between sales in bankruptcy and sales under decrees of courts of equity. Ib.

—— Private Act—Copyholds.]—Trustees of copyholds vested in them by a private act of parliament take a surrender from the tenants for life, and sell under a decree subject to certain leases, and petition for payment of the purchase money into court. The purchaser objects that they had not the legal estate, and the court had therefore no jurisdiction :—Held, that the act vesting the property in the trustees overrules the surrender, that the court therefore had jurisdiction, and no one could object to the sale but the purchaser, who would gain by it. But the costs must come out of the estate. Dixon v. Wilkinson, 1 Eq. R. 566 ; 22 L. J., Ch. 981 ; 1 W. R. 513.

—— Root of Title.]—Conditions of sale, settled by the court, provided that a conveyance on a sale made by B. in 1838 should be the root of title ; that no objection or requisition should be made with respect to earlier title, and that recitals in deeds twenty years old should be conclusive evidence of the instruments recited. That conveyance purported to recite the will, but stopped short of the final gift over, thus showing a good title to the fee in B. :—Held, that a purchaser was not precluded from showing that B.'s title under the will was defective, and that he was entitled to be freed from his contract, and to get all his costs. Else v. Else, 41 L. J., Ch. 213; L. R. 13 Eq. 196; 25 L. T. 927; 20 W. R. 286.

—— Reservation.]—Lands were set up as held in fee-simple, and it appeared that they had been conveyed forty years before, reserving a right to cut turf and quarry limestone, although the right had never been since exercised:—Held, a good objection to the title, and the purchaser discharged. The rental at the sale contained an obscure statement, and the purchaser swore he had been misled:—Held, a sufficient ground for discharging the purchaser. Martin v. Cotter, 3 Jo. & Lat. 496; 9 Ir. Eq. R. 351.

—— Knowledge of Purchaser.]—When the purchaser of an interest under a decree acquires by that means a knowledge of a defect in the title to that interest, and afterwards buys up the estate of the person interested in taking advantage of that defect, the court will not allow him to rely on the doctrine that a purchaser is not obliged to take a doubtful title, in support of an objection to the title founded on that defect. Sheppard v. Doolan, 3 Dr. & War. 1; 5 Ir. Eq. R. 6. And see S. C., Fl. & K. 598.

Quære, whether, if the objection was valid, the court will allow him to rely on it. Ib.

—— Unsatisfied Judgments.]—A purchaser cannot be compelled to accept a title without having judgments against the person in whom the legal estate is vested satisfied. Semble, even where a purchaser can get a clear legal estate, he will not be compelled to accept the title without having judgments entered after the execution of a deed, conveying such legal estate, satisfied: he having notice of such judgments. Piers v. Piers, Sau. & Sc. 379. Affirmed, 1 Dr. & Wal. 265.

To make title under a decree for a sale of lands in a judgment creditor's suit, every incumbrancer whose demand is prior to the last incumbrance provided for by the decree, must be satisfied or be brought before the court. Ponsonby v. Ponsonby, 2 Hog. 201.

This rule has now, by Piers v. Piers (supra), been extended to every judgment creditor puisne to those provided for by the statute. Ib. S. P., Knight v. Pocock, 27 L. J., Ch. 297; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 197.

Purchaser under decree, with notice of judgments intervening between incumbrances ordered to be paid, is bound by them, unless persons in whom they are vested are parties to cause, or come in and prove under decree. Steele v. Philips, 1 Hog. 49.

On sale in creditor's administration suit, the purchaser objected that there were unsatisfied judgments against the heir-at-law of the testator:—Held, that this was a good objection, the judgment creditors of the heir-at-law not being parties to the suit. Parkinson v. Piper, 8 Jur. 1111.

When it is ascertained that there are prior judgment creditors who will not come in and prove their demands under a decree, they ought to be made parties to the suit by supplemental bill, that their rights may be bound by the decree for a sale. Johns v. French, 1 Hog. 450.

Where, on default of payment, the vendor obtained a decree for resale in a suit for specific performance, and a judgment creditor prior to the decree refused to disclaim or release the premises, a decree was made against him that the estate be declared freed and discharged from all claims by him, and he was ordered to pay the costs. Moscrop v. Sandeman, 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1147; 9 L. T. 352.

A. agreed to sell land to B., who accepted the title, paid part of his purchase money, and was let into possession, but took no conveyance. A. subsequently obtained a decree against B. for sale of the property, and payment of the balance of purchase money out of the proceeds:—Held, that a purchaser under the decree could not be compelled to complete without the concurrence of the registered judgment creditors of B., whose judgments were prior to the decree, and who were not parties to the suit. Grey Coat Hospital v. Westminster Improvement Commissioners, 1 De G. & J. 531; 26 L. J., Ch. 843; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 1188; 5 W. R. 855.

A. devised his estate at H. to his second son, who survived him and afterwards died intestate, whereupon the estate descended to N., his elder brother. Pending a suit instituted by A.'s creditors, judgments were entered up against N., which remained unsatisfied when the estate at H., together with the testator's other estates, was sold under the decree in the suit for payment of his debts:—Held, that N.'s judgment creditors were necessary parties to the conveyance of the estate at H., and, as they could not be compelled to join in the conveyance, because they were not parties to the suit, that a good title could not be made to the estate. Craddock v. Piper, 14 Sim. 310.

The purchaser under a decree in a creditor's suit objected to the title, on the ground that there were certain outstanding judgments confessed by the defendant before the filing of the bill, which afterwards, pending the cause, were revived and re-docketed under Moore's Act, and that they were not bound by the decree. Upon exceptions to the report of good title:—Held, that the purchaser's objection to the title should therefore be allowed. Newman v. Fitzgerald, 6 Ir. Eq. R. 260.

Lands held under a lease for lives renewable for ever were, by marriage settlement, conveyed to trustees upon trusts in quasi tail. In 1842 a renewal of the lease was executed to the defendant, the quasi tenant in tail, against whom, pending a suit by children for portions, several judgments had been obtained, of which no notice had been taken. On sale in the suit the purchaser objected to the title because of those judgments:—Held, that the renewal of 1842 ought to have been to the trustees of the settlement, and that the judgments in question did not constitute a valid objection to the title. Leake v. Leake, 5 Ir. Eq. R. 361.

Trust to sell lands to repay loan and to pay the surplus and convey the unsold lands to the borrower. The lands having been sold:—Held, that a good title might be made without the concurrence of the creditors of the borrower by judgment confessed after the execution of the trust deed. Alexander v. Crosby, 1 Jo. & Lat. 666; 7 Ir. Eq. R. 445.

Where a deficient fund has been produced by a sale under a decree, and judgment creditors having a lien on the legal estate, puisne to the reported incumbrances, refuse to prove under the decree, or to release the lands; if the purchaser who relies on those judgments as objections to the title will not consent to be discharged, the proper course is to apply for a reference as to title. Barrett v. Bermingham, Sau. & Sc. 419.

—— Terms to Raise Portions.] — Lands subject to two terms to secure portions were devised to A. for life, remainder to his sons in tail. A. being in possession, a bill was filed to raise the sums, to which a minor tenant in tail was made a party by supplemental bill. The lands were set up and sold for the residue of the two terms:—Held, on exceptions to the master's report of good title, that as the minor was a party, the decree was not erroneous, though it directed a sale for the payment of interest accrued during the possession of A., nor because it omitted to set off the interest which ought to have been paid by A. against his share of the portion, and a sum which was reported to A. charged on other lands directed to be sold by the decree:—Held, also, that, as it was clearly for the benefit of the minor that the terms should be sold together, the title was not objectionable on that ground:—Held, also, that, as the minor's estate was puisne to the terms, the omission to give him a day to show cause would not affect the purchaser. Edgeworth v. Edgeworth, 12 Ir. Eq. R. 81.

Errors and Irregularities.]—It is no objection on the part of a purchaser of land sold by a master, that more land is sold than is necessary for the purpose of the testator's will. Lutwych v. Winford, 2 Bro. C. C. 248.

A purchaser under a decree is not to be relieved from his purchase merely because there are irregularities in the decree, where there is no want of jurisdiction or parties. Baker v. Sowter, 10 Beav. 343; 16 L. J., Ch. 333. S. P., Calvert v. Godfrey, 6 Beav. 97; 12 L. J., Ch. 305.

A purchase under a decree, not impeachable when made, cannot become so from any irregularities in the subsequent conduct of the cause or errors in dealing with the purchase money. Bowen v. Evans, 1 Jo. & Lat. 178; 6 Ir. Eq. R. 569. Affirmed 2 H. L. Cas. 257.

A bill was filed by a remainderman to set aside a sale made under the decree of the court in a creditor's suit, for errors in the proceedings and fraud in the sale, the purchaser, B., having lent himself to acts whereby the estate was sold for payment of interest, properly payable by tenant for life. The tenant for life died in 1837, and the bill was filed in 1843:—Held, that although the sale was the result of a prearrangement, yet, as it was not fraudulent, and the purchase was made at full value, the sale could not be set aside, especially after so long a time. Ib. And see Townsend v. Warren, 2 H. L. Cas. 221, n.

Lands were devised in trust, with power to the trustee to sell, and give a discharge to the purchaser. In 1807 T., who was wrongly supposed to be the trustee, sold, and gave a receipt to the purchaser. The purchase money was paid, with T.'s consent, to the tenant for life, who appropriated it. The interests of the remainderman accrued in 1845, and in 1851 they filed their bill to set aside the sale:—Held, that the sale being bonâ fide and for full value, and the purchaser being discharged from seeing to the application of the purchase money, the court would not grant relief, it appearing that T.'s estate was sufficient to make good any liability that might be established in respect of the sale. Hicks v. Sallitt (3 De G. M. & G. 782) distinguished. Hope v. Liddell, 21 Beav. 183; 25 L. J., Ch. 90; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 105; 4 W. R. 145.

An estate being sold before a master, where the decree did not require it, the sale shall be set aside, although the reports were confirmed; but the purchasers must be fully reimbursed all their expenses out of pocket. Prideaux v. Prideaux, 1 Cox, 34. And see S. C., 1 Bro. C. C. 287, where stated to have been reversed.

Purchaser of estates sold under a decree discharged, on motion, from his purchase, upon error in the decree being shown, though the parties are proceeding to rectify it. Whether he is entitled to his costs, quære. Lechmere v. Brasier, 2 J. & W. 287; 22 R. R. 130.

A purchaser under a decree shall not be affected by error in the decree. Bennett v. Hamill, 2 Sch. & Lef. 566.

A purchaser has a right to presume that the court has taken the steps necessary to investigate the rights of the parties, and that it has properly decreed a sale; but he ought to see that all proper parties to be bound are before the court, and that he does not take a title which can be impeached aliunde. Ib.

The purchaser of the estate of an insolvent debtor from his assignees, at a sale by auction, will not be affected by constructive notice of circumstances of negligence on the part of the assignees in conducting the sale, such circumstances being entirely collateral to any question of title. Borell v. Dann, 2 Hare, 440.

A decree for sale of lands did not direct them to be sold, subject to dower which one of the defendants had recovered at law, but the remembrancer himself set them up to sale so subject:—Held, sale not therefore irregular. Eyre v. Lynch, Hay. & J. 505.

Lands in settlement, with power to grant leases, are by decree directed to be sold subject to charges prior to settlement. Pending the suit, the tenant for life grants leases and charges annuities upon the lands, and they are sold subject to those charges:—Held, that the sale subject to such leases and charges is void. Colclough v. Sterum, 3 Bligh, 181; 22 R. R. 1.

A bidder at a sale under a decree, who is not a party to the cause, or interested in the estate, has no right to apply to set aside a sale to another bidder, on the ground of irregularity. Whether he may apply to be declared the purchaser in the place of the bidder reported to be the best purchaser, quære. Hughes v. Lipscombe, 6 Hare, 142. See also Bass v. Wellsted, 12 Jur. 347.

—— Purchaser Misled.]—A party, the highest bidder for a batch of some lots, and afterwards for the whole, was held to his bidding for the lots, though misled by the mode of selling. O'Grady v. Brady, 11 Ir. Eq. R. 440.

Trust Property.]—Where a purchaser alleged that part of the property was held on trust, which was denied:—Held, that the purchaser was only entitled to a reference to the master as to title. Whitfield v. Lequeutre, 3 De G. & Sm. 464.

And see Hope v. Liddell, supra.

Agreement for Lease.]—A purchaser was discharged on the ground of misrepresentation; lands stated to be held under written agreements for leases being held only on parol agreements. Bessonet v. Robins, Sau. & Sc. 142.

Right to New Lease.]—A purchaser of lands, held under a lease that would expire on the 1st of June then next, discharged, it appearing that the tenant was entitled to a reversionary lease for four lives. Lineham v. Cotter, 7 Ir. Eq. R. 176.

Covenants in Lease broken by Vendor.]—Sale of leaseholds, conditions providing that the receipt of rent up to the time for completing, shall be conclusive evidence of the fulfilment of the covenants by the lessee. The vendors allowed a fire insurance (covenanted by the lease to be kept up) to drop by nonpayment of premiums from the date fixed for completion :—Held, that the purchaser must be discharged. Till completion, the vendor must preserve the title unimpeachable. Palmer v. Goren, 4 W. R. 688.

Occupation.]—The plaintiff put up a lot described as being in the occupation of C. C. was holding as tenant under another party, hostilely to the vendor. The court discharged the purchaser, and directed the plaintiff to pay his costs. Lachlan v. Reynolds, Kay, 52 ; 2 Eq. R. 713 ; 23 L. J., Ch. 8 ; 2 W. R. 49.

Lease—Suit to Alter.]—A purchaser bought a lease and entered into possession and paid the purchase money into court. Afterwards the lessors instituted a suit against the original lessee for altering the lease in a material particular :—Held, that the court would not compel the purchaser to complete the purchase until that suit was decided. Bentley v. Craven, 1 W. R. 401.

Taking Accounts.]—If an account to be taken in a suit to be instituted is necessary to complete the title to lands sold under a decree, the purchaser, if he desire it, must be discharged. He cannot be held until a subsidiary cause is brought, however speedily, to a determination. Magennis v. Fallon, 2 Moll. 561.

Practice—Service.]—Rule as to serving purchaser on the application to set aside a sale made by assignees. Shepley, Ex parte, Wright, In re, Mont. 353.

Defendants in a cause where there has been a sale under a decree ought to be served with the petition of a purchaser to be discharged from his purchase. Sherwood v. Beveridge, 3 De G. & Sm. 425 ; 13 Jur. 1042.

—— Exceptions to Title.]—Where conditions of sale are so obscurely worded that, taken with the particulars of sale, they are likely to mislead an ordinary purchaser, semble, the court will discharge the purchaser from his bargain on the argument of exceptions to the title. Taylor v. Martindale, 1 Y. & C. C. C. 658.

—— Report Confirmed.]—A purchaser at a sale before the master cannot move to be discharged from his purchase until the report has been confirmed. M'Culloch v. Gregory, 2 Eq. R. 1088 ; 23 L. J., Ch. 656 ; 2 W. R. 575.

—— Sale in Lots.]—In general, objection, of a purchaser of two lots, to completion, on the ground that the title to one is bad, ought not to be discussed upon motion. Casamajor v. Strode, Coop. t. Brough. 510.

Interest and Costs.]—Whenever a purchaser is discharged, he must also get interest and his costs. Pleasants v. Roberts, 2 Moll. 507.

A purchaser discharged with his costs, charges, and expenses, including the costs of his petition, to be discharged. Calvert v. Godfrey, 6 Beav. 97 ; 12 L. J., Ch. 305.

A purchaser discharged is entitled to interest on the one-fourth of the purchase money lodged from the date of the lodgment. Gower v. Hill, Hay. & J. 127. But see Feely v. Kilkenny, supra, col. 1401.

Purchaser on discovering misstatement in abstract concealing defect in title was discharged, but as his solicitor had neglected to examine the document :—Held, that he was not entitled to interest, and that he must pay the costs of all parties except the person who had the conduct of the sale. M'Culloch v. Gregory, 1 K. & J. 286 ; 3 Eq. R. 495 ; 24 L. J., Ch. 246 ; 3 W. R. 231.

A purchaser under a decree was discharged, and it was ordered that his deposit be paid back, without prejudice to his applying for the interest thereon, and his costs, when there should be a fund in court. He died before either the costs were taxed, or a fund for their payment was realised :—Held, on a fund being realised, his personal representative was entitled to be paid thereout the interest and costs. Mackay v. Orr, 2 Ir. Eq. R. 499.

A sale made before certificate in answer to inquiries directed by the decree was held invalid :—Held, that the discharged purchaser was entitled to the stock arising from his deposit, which had been paid into court and invested, with the dividends thereon, or the actual amount of deposit and the produce, with costs, charges, and expenses. Powell v. Powell, 44 L. J., Ch. 311 ; L. R. 19 Eq. 422 ; 32 L. T. 148 ; 23 W. R. 482.

And see cases, supra, col. 1399.

9. Substitution of Purchaser.

Motion for.]—One purchaser substituted for another upon motion with consent. Matthews v. Stubbs, 2 Bro. C. C. 391.

—— Affidavit.]—Upon a motion to substitute one purchaser for another, there must be an affidavit that no money has been paid for the substitution. Vincent v. Going, Fl. & K. 428. S. P., Rigby v. M'Namara, 6 Ves. 515. Vale v. Davenport, 6 Ves. 615.

Where Title Defective.]—The court, if the owners and the creditors interested in the produce do not object, will allow a party to apply to stand in the place of a purchaser discharged in consequence of bad title. Piers v. Piers, Sau. & Sc. 414. Affirmed, 1 Dru. & Wal. 265.

Where the purchaser has been discharged upon a report of bad title, it is the right of the inheritor to have the estate again set up to be sold ; and the court will not, against his desire, substitute in the place of the discharged purchaser a person who offers to take the estate at the same price, and not object to the title. O'Connor v. Bernard, 3 Ir. Eq. R. 496.

—— Purchase by Agent.]—A farm was put up for sale under the direction of the court. G. bought the property in his own name, and was certified as purchaser. He in fact bought as agent for B., who was the owner of immediately adjoining property. B. refused to complete on the ground that there was no title to part which faced his other property:—Held, on appeal, that G., having only purchased as agent for B., could take any objection which B., had he been the nominal as well as the real purchaser, could have taken. Arnold, In re. Arnold v. Arnold, 14 Ch. D. 270; 42 L. T. 705; 28 W. R. 635—C. A.

Sub-Purchaser.]—The court will not grant an application by a sub-purchaser to be substituted as the purchaser of an estate sold by auction under an order of the court where neither the original purchaser nor the vendor consents to the application. Goodwin's Settled Estates, In re, 1 N. R. 46; 32 L. J., Ch. 70; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 1170; 7 L. T. 310; 11 W. R. 54.

—— Re-sale at a Profit.]—A purchaser in this court having resold with a profit before his purchase was confirmed, the person to whom he has sold it is to be considered as a substituted purchaser, and must pay the additional purchase-money into court for the benefit of the parties to the suit. Hodder v. Buffin, Tam. 341; 31 R. R. 104. S. P., Pearce v. Pearce, 7 Sim. 138.

Where a purchaser of a bankrupt's estate resells it before a conveyance is executed to him by the assignees, the court will, at his instance, order the assignees to convey the estate direct to the second purchaser if no imputation is thrown on the fairness of the first sale, notwithstanding the estate has been resold at a profit. Anderdon, Ex parte, 1 Deac. 585; 3 Mont. & Ayr. 698.

10. Completion of Sale.

a. Report.

General Rule.]—The court will not recognise a party as a purchaser at a sale made under a decree until the master has made his report. M'Cullock v. Gregory, 2 Eq. R. 1088; 23 L. J., Ch. 656; 2 W. R. 575.

The only proper evidence of a purchase is the master's report, which must be confirmed before a purchaser can apply to the court to be discharged from his contract. Ib.

—— Deterioration.]—A purchase before the master is not complete before confirmation of the report; therefore a loss by a fire after the report, but before confirmation, falls upon the vendor. Minor, Ex parte, 11 Ves. 59; 9 R. R. 247.

Interest.]—Sale of an annuity before the master takes effect from the confirmation of the report; and the sale being on the 11th August, and the report confirmed in Michaelmas term, interest was given upon the purchase money from the first seal before the term. Twigg v. Fifield, 13 Ves. 517.

Purchaser when Owner.]—Purchaser under decree considered only as owner from time he pays the purchase money, and not from confirmation of report by which he is declared the best bidder, he having taken objections to title. Mackrell v. Hunt, cited 2 Madd. 34.

Varying Certificate.]—After the expiration of eight days from the filing of the chief clerk's certificate upon the sale, the court will not entertain an application to discharge or vary the certificate without special circumstances. Howell v. Kightley, 25 L. J., Ch. 341; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 455; 4 W. R. 477.

Resale.]—Lands having been sold under a decree, W. became the purchaser, and his purchase was approved, and the certificate of approval signed by the vice-chancellor. More than eight days after signature of the certificate, but before any conveyance to W., he contracted to sell to M. at an advanced price:—Held, that W. might sell. Dewell v. Tuffnell, 1 K. & J. 324.

Part of Property Omitted.]—E. knowing the value of the timber on a lot purchased that lot, and agreed to take the timber at the price named by the auctioneer. The chief clerk confirmed the sale and filed his certificate. The value of some of the timber was omitted by mistake of the auctioneer:—Held, that the purchaser was entitled to hold the property without a valuation of the timber. Griffiths v. Jones, 42 L. J., Ch. 468; L. R. 15 Eq. 279; 21 W. R. 470.

General Inquiries.]—This court will not refer it to the chief remembrancer to report generally what proceedings should be taken as to certain lands. Cottingham v. Whyte, Hay. & J. 411.

Motion by purchaser under the court for a reference to inquire whether it would benefit the parties that the contract should be rescinded, on the ground that the executor had stated he was unable to comply with the conditions:—Held, irregular. Stubbs v. Sargon, 4 Beav. 90.

Confirmation.]—The master's report approving the contract should be confirmed by a special petition stating all the facts. Bailey v. Todd, 1 Beav. 95.

A plaintiff may obtain the order absolute to confirm a sale under the court though the order nisi has been obtained by the purchaser; but the application was refused, there having been great laches on the part of the plaintiff. Lidbetter v. Smith, 5 Beav. 377.

In a creditor's suit an application to confirm absolute the master's report of last purchaser, made by consent before the expiration of the time limited by the order nisi, refused. Vernon v. Thellusson, 10 Beav. 452.

A purchaser of lands sold under the court, pursuant to a rental, stating a demise for a term, is entitled to confirmation if it should appear that they are demised for a longer term; but he may waive his title thereto. Horner v. Williams, Jon. & C. 274.

One notice of motion to confirm the master's report of best purchaser, and to pay the purchase money into court, is irregular. Duffield v. Elwes, 13 Beav. 85.

Where a sale is had in the country under the 139th Order, the bidders are not entitled to have notice of the confirmation of it by the master. O'Grady v. Brady, 11 Ir. Eq. R. 400.

b. Enforcing Completion.

After Report.]—One reported the highest bidder compelled to complete his purchase. Cunningham v. Williams, 2 Anstr. 344.

Bidding by Agent.]—A person who bids in trust for another will be attached if the bidding is not completed. Studdert's, In re, 1 Hog. 320.

Bankruptcy.]—Purchaser of bankrupt's mortgaged estate sold upon petition in the bankruptcy, ordered to complete. Gould, Ex parte, 1 Glyn & J. 231.

Upon a sale of a bankrupt's mortgaged property, the court of review has jurisdiction to enforce a specific performance of the contract by the purchaser. Sidebotham, Ex parte, 4 Deac. & C. 693; 2 Mont. & Ayr. 146; 4 L. J., Bk. 27.

Before Confirmation.]—Motion that a person reported best purchaser should complete his purchase by a certain day refused, the report not being absolutely confirmed. Anon., 2 Ves. J. 335.

Attachment.]—An application for an attachment against a party for not executing the purchase deed, should be on notice, and the order will be absolute in the first instance. Brennan v. Carroll, 7 Ir. Eq. R. 196.

A purchaser cannot be attached for not completing his purchase, until the master has reported that a good title can be made out. Dick v. Barrett, 1 Hog. 351.

Not having been served with a copy of a decree for a sale is a good cause against an attachment, for not executing the conveyance to a purchaser. Keogh v. Wood, Vern. & S. 118. And see cases, supra, col. 1403.

D. TITLE.

1. In General.

Implied Undertaking for.]—A simple sale of land implies a covenant that the vendor has a good title to the land; but it does not support a count stating a warranty that he had a good title free from all liabilities whatsoever. Ballard v. Way, 1 M. & W. 520; 2 Gale, 61; 1 Tyrw. & G. 851; 5 L. J., Ex. 207.

Duty of Vendor.]—A vendor is bound to use all reasonable diligence to make a good title; nor will the court, without the consent of the purchaser, excuse the vendor from making a good title, on the terms of discharging the purchaser from his contract. Hawkins v. Shewen, 1 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 148.

Waiver by Purchaser.]—The right of a good title does not grow out of the agreement between the parties, but is given by law; but a purchaser may waive his right, by going on with the agreement after he has full notice that he is not to expect a good title. Ogilvie v. Foljambe, 3 Mer. 53; 17 R. R. 13.

If a contract is silent as to the title, the legal implication that the purchaser is entitled to a good title may be rebutted by evidence that, before the execution of the contract, the purchaser had notice of defects in the title. But if the contract provides that a good title shall be shown, the purchaser is entitled to insist on a good title. Gloag and Miller's Contract, In re, 52 L. J., Ch. 654; 23 Ch. D. 320; 48 L. T. 629; 31 W. R. 601.

A contract by purchaser to take such title as vendor has does not relieve vendor from the necessity of showing a bonâ fide title, and producing the best title he can from the materials in his power. Keyse v. Haydon, 9 Hare (App.) lix.; 1 W. R. 112. And see cases, infra, col. 1436.

Vendor not bound to Litigate.]—A vendor is ordinarily bound to take the steps within his power to complete his contract, but he is not bound to enter into litigation with an adverse claimant in order to perfect his title. Williams v. Glenton, 35 L. J., Ch. 284; L. R. 1 Ch. 200; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 175; 13 L. T. 727; 14 W. R. 294.

Meaning of "Good Title."]—When a decree has been made for specific performance, subject to the usual reference, the words "good title" mean not an absolutely good title, but a good title having regard to the terms of the contract. Upperton v. Nicholson, 40 L. J., Ch. 401; L. R. 6 Ch. 436; 25 L. T. 4; 19 W. R. 733—C. A.

Notice.]—The rule that a purchaser who does not inquire into his vendor's title is affected with notice of what appears upon it, applies equally to a yearly tenant as to the purchaser of a greater interest. Wilson v. Hart, 35 L. J., Ch. 569; L. R. 1 Ch. 463; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 460; 14 L. T. 499; 14 W. R. 748. Affirming 2 H. & M. 551.

By s. 3, sub-s. 1 of the Conveyancing Act, 1882, a purchaser shall not be prejudicially affected by notice of any instrument . . . . unless . . . . it would have come to the knowledge of his solicitor . . . . if such inquiries and inspections had been made as ought reasonably to have been made:—Held, that the expression "ought reasonably" means ought as a matter of prudence, having regard to what is usually done by prudent men of business in similar circumstances. Doctrine as to constructive notice in Ware v. Egmont (4 De G. M. & G. 460) approved. Bailey v. Barnes, 63 L. J., Ch. 73; [1894] 1 Ch. 25; 7 R. 9; 69 L. T. 542; 42 W. R. 66—C. A.

Failure to show Title according to Contract.]—Although a vendor who has no title to a property at the date of the contract can enforce the contract against the purchaser, if he is able to show a good title in himself at the time fixed for completion, he cannot impose on the purchaser a different vendor, or compel him to accept a different contract in substitution for that into which he has entered. Bryant and Burningham, In re, 59 L. J., Ch. 636; 44 Ch. D. 218; 63 L. T. 20; 38 W. R. 469—C. A.

—— New Lease instead of Residue of Old Term.]—Under a contract for the purchase of the residue of an old term a purchaser is not bound to accept a similar new lease, the residue of an old term being in many respects more advantageous. Mason v. Corder, 7 Taunt. 9; 2 Marshall, 332; 17 R. R. 427.

—— Power of Sale not Exercisable.]—Trustees and executors contracted to sell under a power of sale not then exercisable. They offered to make a title by obtaining the concurrence of the beneficiaries:—Held, that the purchaser could not be compelled to complete, and that the vendors must repay to him the deposit, with interest, and pay his costs of investigating the title. Head's Trustees and Macdonald, In re, 59 L. J., Ch. 604; 45 Ch. D. 310; 63 L. T. 21; 38 W. R. 657—C. A.

Title by Possession.]—A good title may be made to an estate, although the origin cannot be shown by any deed or will; but it must be shown that there has been such a long uninterrupted possession, enjoyment, and dealing with the property, as affords a reasonable presumption that there is an absolute title in fee simple. Cottrell v. Watkins, 1 Beav. 361.

A twelve years' possessory title can be forced on a purchaser though the vendor had no title at the date of the contract. Such a title can be proved in chambers by less than the strictest evidence if the purchaser does not raise an objection. Games v. Bonnor, 54 L. J., Ch. 517; 33 W. R. 64—C. A.

Where a lessee had been in possession of premises for twelve years, and then bought from the lessors:—Held, that a good possessory title was shown to all the premises, and that the lessee could not rescind on the ground that part did not belong to the lessors. Groves v. Loomes, 55 L. J., Ch. 52; 53 L. T. 593; 34 W. R. 94.

Vendor not able to Complete.]—If a vendor of newly-inclosed lands undertakes to convey them to a vendee, it is an undertaking to convey the legal estate; and the vendor having only an equitable interest previously to the assignment by the commissioners, the vendee is entitled to recover his deposit. Cane v. Baldwin, 1 Stark. 65.

Re-sale by Purchaser.]—A railway company, upon a sale of superfluous lands, arranged for the postponement of the purchase-money until a date, beyond the period prescribed for the sale of superfluous lands. The purchasers having contracted to sell to another person:—Held, on a summons under the Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874, that the court would not compel the person to complete. Whether the sale by the railway was an absolute sale, quære. Thackwray and Young, In re, 58 L. J., Ch. 72; 40 Ch. D. 34; 59 L. T. 815; 37 W. R. 74.

Specific Performance—Ability to Complete.]—Whether the interest contracted for be freehold or leasehold, for a long term of years, or a short lease at rack-rent, the party who comes for a specific performance should be prepared to show that he is able to give what he seeks to compel the other to take. Fildes v. Hooker, 2 Mer. 424.

Acceptance of Title.]—Where a purchaser accepts the title, he is only bound to the extent to which he has been made cognisant of it. Bousfield v. Hodges, 33 Beav. 90.

A defendant admitted by his answer, his belief that at the time of the contract the plaintiff had a title:—Held, that it was not open to the defendant afterwards to show that plaintiff had no title. Phipps v. Child, 3 Drew. 709.

Pleadings.]—By the conditions of a sale the vendor was to deliver an abstract within fourteen days from the sale, and to deduce a good title; and the purchaser was to prepare the deeds of conveyance by the 10th of November:—Held, that no precise time was fixed within which the vendor was to deduce a good title, and therefore a declaration against him for failing to do so ought to aver that he had been allowed a reasonable time. Sansom v. Rhodes, 6 Bing. (N.C.) 261; 8 Scott, 544; 9 L. J., C. P. 132.

Where a vendor covenants to deduce a good title at A., B. or C., on or before a certain day, a plea that he was ready to deduce a good title at that time, without averring notice to the covenantee at which place he would be ready to deduce such title is insufficient. Rippingall v. Lloyd, 2 N. & M. 410; 5 B. & Ad. 742.

So a plea, that, in consideration that the defendant would deduce a good title and convey (after breach), the plaintiff agreed to accept such title and conveyance at a later day. Ib.

Decision of Court on Questions of Title.]—It is the duty of the court to decide doubtful questions of title, and when so decided they can no longer be considered as doubtful. Bell v. Holtby, 42 L. J., Ch. 266; L. R. 15 Eq. 178; 28 L. T. 9; 21 W. R. 321.

When a question of title involves a question of general law applicable to all similar cases, the court of appeal is bound to say one way or another what the law is. Alexander v. Mills, 40 L. J., Ch. 73; L. R. 6 Ch. 124; 24 L. T. 206; 19 W. R. 310. And see cases, infra, col. 1452.

Title, how Shown.]—Observations on clearing a title, by showing the non-existence of rights under a reservation, or onerous covenant not stated, and on the duty of being careful and explicit in preparing for a sale. Martin v. Cotter, 3 Jo. & Lat. 496; 2 Ir. Eq. R. 351.

—— Implied Contract.]—A vendor who contracts to make out a good title to mortgage lands, undertakes to make out such a title as the court would adopt for compelling specific performance, and as would be a good answer to an ejectment. Jeakes v. White, 6 Ex. 873; 21 L. J., Ex. 265.

—— Contents of Abstract.]—A title is first shown, when the abstract states all the matters which, if proved, make a good title. Parr v. Lovegrove, 4 Drew. 170; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 600; 6 W. R. 201, 709.

A title is made when the matters are proved. Ib.

The showing a good title is the delivery of the abstract, where the vendor is in a condition to prove everything necessary to establish his title, appearing on the face of the abstract. Ib.

Whatever a vendor puts upon his abstract he is bound to prove and verify. Ib.

Sale by Mortgagor Subject to Lease.]—A mortgagor, after mortgaging the legal estate, demised it to a lessee for a term of years, and afterwards, with the concurrence of the mortgagees, sold the reversion, describing the property as under lease for a term of years. The purchaser having objected to the title:—Held, that the title was sufficient, as by conveyance by the mortgagees of all their interest to the mortgagor, and by him afterwards to the purchaser, such an interest would be conveyed to the purchaser as would estop the lessee from denying the lease. Webb v. Austin, 8 Scott (N.R.) 419; 7 Man. & G. 701; 13 L. J., C. P. 203.

Purchaser from Mortgagee with Power of Sale.]—When the registered owner of land has granted a first mortgage with the statutory power of sale, and has also granted subsequent mortgages, a purchaser from the first mortgagee is entitled to be registered with an indefeasible title, just as if the subsequent mortgages had not been granted, and he had purchased from the mortgagor and mortgagee together. Richardson's Purchase, In re, 41 L. J., Ch. 221; L. R. 13 Eq. 142; 20 W. R. 163—C. A.

T. mortgaged a plot to S., and by memorandum of same date agreed to deposit the lease of another plot with S. as collateral security. Subsequently T. assigned a moiety of the entire premises to A., and then assigned all his estate and effects for the benefit of his creditors. S. assigned both plots to H. subject to the equity of redemption, and with such power of sale as S. had. H. sold by conditions which stated that he sold as mortgagee, and that, as he had only an equitable interest in the second plot, the purchaser should accept such title as he was able to deduce and convey:—Held, that the assignment of the legal estate, and the memorandum of deposit of the lease, were one and the same transaction, and the lease was subject to the power of sale contained in the assignment, and, consequently, that T. would not be entitled to redeem the second plot. Ashworth v. Mounsey, 9 Ex. 175; 2 C. L. R. 418; 23 L. J., Ex. 73; 2 W. R. 41.

Held, also, that by the express terms of the conditions, the vendor contracted, with reference to that plot, to sell an equitable interest only. Ib.

Presumption as to Incumbrance.]—A purchaser is not compellable to accept a title to premises, formerly subject to an incumbrance, the discharge of which is shown only by presumption. Barnwell v. Harris, 1 Taunt. 430; 10 R. R. 564.

It is no objection to a title that a memorandum appears amongst the title deeds, showing that a former owner had raised money by way of equitable mortgage, and that there is no evidence that such charge has been released, other than the vendor's possession of the deeds and memorandum. Nicholl v. Chambers, 11 C. B. 996; 21 L. J., C. P. 54.

Limited Title.]—S. agreed to purchase from the plaintiff "the mill property, including cottages in Esher village—all the property to be freehold," and verbally agreed to take a limited title. Negotiations were carried on as to the title till the purchaser gave notice that he should require a good marketable title to the whole property, and if that were not shown within five weeks the contract would be rescinded:—Held, that the purchaser having agreed to accept a limited title, and the negotiations having gone on upon that footing, a complete title could not be demanded. M'Murray v. Spicer, 37 L. J., Ch. 505; L. R. 5 Eq. 527; 16 W. R. 332.

Construction—Gift to Unmarried Woman for Life—Remainder to Husband in fee.]—Trust to pay rents to daughters for life for their separate use, and after their decease to convey "unto and equally between the husbands of them, my daughters, to hold to them, and their respective heirs and assigns." Both daughters married. One died in the lifetime of her husband. Then the husband of the other died, having devised his interest in the estate to his wife absolutely:—Held, that the surviving daughter could make a good title to a moiety of the estate; for that a gift to an unmarried woman for life, with remainder in fee to her husband, gives an indefeasible vested remainder in fee to her first husband. And as the question turned on a general rule of construction, the title would be forced on a purchaser. Radford v. Willis, 41 L. J., Ch. 19; L. R. 7 Ch. 7; 25 L. T. 720; 20 W. R. 132.

—— Marriage Settlement.]—By a marriage settlement real estate was limited to the use of A. and B. successively during their respective lives, with remainder to the use of D., his heirs and assigns, upon trust to receive the rents and profits, and to pay the same to C. for her life for her separate use, and after the determination of that estate to stand seised of the said hereditaments upon such trusts as C. should appoint, and in default of appointment, to the use of the heirs and assigns of C. for ever. C. survived her husband, and entered into an agreement to sell the real estate in fee:—Held, that C. could make a good title to the fee. Cooper v. Kynoch, 41 L. J., Ch. 296; L. R. 7 Ch. 398; 26 L. T. 566; 20 W. R. 503.

Sale of Right of Entry—Vendor out of Possession—32 Hen. 8, c. 9, s. 2.]—Although 32 Hen. 8, c. 9, s. 2, cannot be said to have been repealed by 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, s. 6, nevertheless since the passing of the latter statute a grant of lands to which the grantor has a title existing in fact, but of which he has never been in possession, and on which he is entitled only to a right of entry, will be valid, even although at the time of the grant a litigation is pending as to the title to the lands. Jenkins v. Jones, 51 L. J., Q. B. 438; 9 Q. B. D. 128; 46 L. T. 795; 30 W. R. 668—C. A.

—— "Pretenced" Title to Land—Knowledge of Buyer.]—In an action for a forfeiture under 32 Hen. 8, c. 9, s. 2, against the buyer of a right of entry, since 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, s. 6, the onus is upon the plaintiff to prove not only that the title purchased was bad, but also that the buyer knew that it was "pretenced," i.e., fictitious, or bad in fact. The mere fact that the right purchased was barred by the Statute of Limitations at the time of the purchase does not necessarily render the title "pretenced" within the meaning of the 32 Hen. 8, c. 9. Kennedy v. Lyell, 1 Cab. & E. 584; 15 Q. B. D. 491; 53 L. T. 466.

Leasehold—Sale in Lots.]—When leasehold property which is sold in separate lots is held under one lease, it is incumbent on the vendor to state that fact in plain and distinct terms. Sheard v. Venables, 36 L. J., Ch. 922; 17 L. T. 10; 15 W. R. 1166.

—— Lease more than Sixty Years Old.]—In the case of a contract for the sale of leaseholds, where the lease is more than sixty years old; in the absence of a condition that the purchaser shall be satisfied with the recital of the lease, the vendor is bound to produce the lease or a copy of it, or prove its loss and that no complete copy of it exists. Frend v. Buckley, 10 B. & S. 973; 39 L. J., Q. B. 90; L. R. 5 Q. B. 213; 22 L. T. 170; 18 W. R. 680—Ex. Ch.

—— Implied Undertakings.]—A contract for the sale of an agreement for a lease does not imply an undertaking that the proposed lessor has title to grant the lease, and, in the absence of any express stipulation, it is no defence to an action upon such contract that the lessor has no title. Kintrea v. Preston, 1 H. & N. 357; 25 L. J., Ex. 287.

In every contract for the sale of leaseholds, there is, in the absence of an express stipulation to the contrary, an implied undertaking on the vendor's part to make out the lessor's title to demise. Hall v. Betty, 5 Scott (N.R.) 508; 4 Man. & G. 410; 11 L. J., C. P. 256.

——Covenant that Lease for Lives is Subsisting.]—By a deed, after reciting a lease from F. to the defendant, for the lives of A., B. and C., and the survivors or survivor of them, the defendant conveyed the premises to the plaintiff, to hold for the lives of A., B. and C., and the survivors or survivor of them, and covenanted "that the lease is a good, valid, and subsisting lease in the law, for the lives of A., B. and C., and the survivors or survivor of them, and is not forfeited, surrendered, or become void, or voidable":—Held, that the covenant only amounted to a covenant that the lease was still subsisting, and not to an implied covenant that the three lives were still in existence. Coates v. Collins, 41 L. J., Q. B. 90; L. R. 7 Q. B. 144; 26 L. T. 134; 20 W. R. 187—Ex. Ch.

Enfranchised Copyholds.]—Copyholder in fee takes an enfranchisement of his copyhold in the name of a trustee, and devises the lands to his younger son, who sells to A.; the heir-at-law of the copyhold recovers in ejectment, and A. brings his bill, and is decreed to hold and enjoy against the heir. Dancer v. Evett, 1 Vern. 392. S. P., Parker v. Turner. Ib.

Surrender.]—Upon a sale in court of copyhold, vendor coming for aid is compelled to surrender in person if it can be done conveniently. Noel v. Weston, 6 Madd. 50; 22 R. R. 235.

Purchaser of copyhold not obliged to accept of surrender by letter of attorney. Mitchel v. Neal, 2 Ves. Sen. 679.

Assignees in bankruptcy must surrender copyhold to purchaser. Drury v. Man, 1 Atk. 95.

Copyholder contracts, for valuable consideration, to sell to his son, and dies before actual surrender; the son held entitled to performance, and to compel the widow to surrender free bench. Hinton v. Hinton, 2 Ves. Sen. 631; Amb. 277.

Demise of copyholds to wife for life, with remainder to two sons as tenants in common in fee; the eldest son and customary heir was, by an arrangement, admitted to the copyhold in fee, and executed by deed a declaration of trust to the uses of his father's will. The brothers became bankrupts, and their assignees sold their reversion to the plaintiff:—Held, that the plaintiff was not, as against the tenant for life, entitled to compel such a surrender as would give him the legal reversion. White v. Stock, 6 Madd. 327.

Apportionment of Tithe.]—Part of the property comprised in a contract was, together with certain other property of which it had originally formed part, subject to tithe:—Held, that the vendor was not bound to obtain an apportionment of the tithe. Ebsworth and Tidy, In re, 58 L. J., Ch. 665; 42 Ch. D. 23; 60 L. T. 841; 37 W. R. 657; 54 J. P. 199—C. A.

Evidence of Title.]—Vendor of shares seeking specific performance insisted he was not bound to give evidence of title other than attested extracts from the cost books or registers of the mines. Demurrer by the defendant overruled, as the plaintiff was not precluded from giving other evidence, if necessary. Curling v. Flight, 5 Hare, 242. S. C., 2 Ph. 617; 17 L. J., Ch. 359; 12 Jur. 423, infra, col. 1426.

Declaration of Title Act.]—When, upon a petition presented under the Declaration of Title Act, 25 & 26 Vict. c. 67, s. 6, the petitioner proves such possession and states such title as, if established, would entitle him to a declaration, a reference will be ordered to chambers to establish the title. Roberts, In re, 22 L. T. 262.

—— Security — Notice.]—The court, after investigation being satisfied with the title of a petitioner to a house in London, ordered, under the 25 & 26 Vict. c. 67, that the declaration establishing the title should be made at the end of three months, that the security required by s. 9 should be 40*l.*, and that notice of the order should be advertised three times, at three days' interval in three London newspapers. S. C., 39 L. J., Ch. 888; L. R. 10 Eq. 402; 22 L. T. 699.

—— Costs—Lien.]—The costs of proceedings under the 25 & 26 Vict. c. 67, on behalf of an infant, together with the costs of a partition suit and of a suit to obtain a declaration of lien, are costs for which the solicitor has a lien on the fund recovered. Pritchard v. Roberts, 43 L. J., Ch. 129; L. R. 17 Eq. 222; 29 L. T. 883; 22 W. R. 259.

2. Proof of.

a. Sufficiency and Verification of Abstract.

What Abstract should set out.]—An abstract of title ought to set out every part of the documents abstracted which may affect the judgment of the purchaser, and the purchaser is entitled to consider that no part of the documents which is not so set out has any bearing upon the title. Burnaby v. Equitable Reversionary Interest Society, 54 L. J., Ch. 466; 52 L. T. 350; 33 W. R. 639.

Deed not in Vendor's Possession.]—A vendor is bound at his own expense to produce to the purchaser a proper abstract of title, either for the statutory period of forty years, or for such other period as may be agreed upon, and s. 3, sub-s. 6, of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, proceeds on the assumption that the vendor has produced such an abstract. Therefore, on an open contract the vendor must bear the expense of procuring an abstract of any deed forming part of the forty years title not in his possession. The word "abstract" in that sub-s. is to be distinguished from the "abstract" of title to which the purchaser is entitled. Johnson and Tustin, In re, 54 L. J., Ch. 889; 30 Ch. D. 42; 53 L. T. 281; 33 W. R. 737—C. A.

Certificate of Lessor's Surveyor.]—The certificate of the lessor's surveyor that the house has been finished to his satisfaction is not a "certificate" or "evidence" within s. 3, sub-s. 6 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, the expense of obtaining which must be borne by the purchaser, but it is part of the title itself. Moody and Yates, In re, 54 L. J., Ch. 886; 30 Ch. D. 344; 53 L. T. 845; 33 W. R. 785—C. A.

Registry Searches.]—Where freehold or chattel real property is offered for sale under conditions which do not provide for the expense of the registry searches, the vendor is bound, notwithstanding s. 3, sub-s. 6, of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, to furnish such searches at his own expense. Murray and Hegarty, In re, 15 L. R., Ir. 510.

What is sufficient Abstract.]—A perfect abstract of title is one which shows such a title as enables the purchaser to complete his purchase. Blackburn v. Smith, 2 Car. & K. 561.

The delivery of an abstract is the furnishing by a vendor of a document which contains with sufficient fulness the effect of every instrument which constitutes part of his title. Oakden v. Pike, 34 L. J., Ch. 620; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 666; 12 L. T. 527; 13 W. R. 673.

A purchaser is not entitled to be furnished with an abstract of the title beyond the time he has dispensed with the proof of it. Poppleton v. Buchanan, 4 C. B. (N.S.) 20; 27 L. J., C. P. 210; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 414; 6 W. R. 372.

Where an abstract of title shows a good equitable title in the vendor, with power to get in the legal estate under the Trustee Acts or otherwise, it is unnecessary for the abstract to show the devolution of the legal estate. Camberwell and South London Building Society v. Holloway, 49 L. J., Ch. 361; 13 Ch. D. 754; 41 L. T. 752; 28 W. R. 222.

—— Incumbrances.]—Even before 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, s. 24, and 23 & 24 Vict. c. 38, s. 8, a vendor was not justified in suppressing an equitable incumbrance, although it might have been subsequently discharged. Drummond v. Tracy, Johns. 608; 29 L. J., Ch. 304; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 369; 1 L. T. 364; 8 W. R. 207.

Notice of an incumbrance to a conveyancer who peruses a title on behalf of one party, is not notice to another purchaser on whose behalf the same conveyancer afterwards prepares a conveyance. Brine v. Featherstone, 4 Taunt. 869; 14 R. R. 689.

A legatee of a reversionary interest which had been paid into court became bankrupt, and then mortgaged his interest to J. and E. in succession. The plaintiffs purchased the interest of J., and of the trustee in bankruptcy, and contracted to sell to the defendant. The defendant required E.'s mortgage to be abstracted as an incumbrance:—Held, that the question of the priority of E.'s incumbrance was too doubtful to justify the vendor in omitting it from the abstract. Palmer v. Locke, 51 L. J., Ch. 124; 18 Ch. D. 381; 45 L. T. 229; 30 W. R. 419—C. A.

—— Sale by Court—Jurisdiction.]—Wherever there is a sale by the court, it is a necessary part of the title to show that the court has jurisdiction to sell; and the vendor, though he may by his conditions protect himself from producing the pleadings themselves, must set forth in his abstract so much of the proceedings in the suit as is necessary to show that the court had such jurisdiction. Waters v. Waters, 36 L. J., Ch. 195; 15 L. T. 406; 15 W. R. 191.

—— Defect Suppressed.]—A vendor is bound to disclose every fact within his knowledge relating to his title. Where a vendor has knowingly suppressed a defect in title, the court will not allow him to force the title upon the purchaser. Edwards v. Wickwar, Brayne, In re, 35 L. J., Ch. 48; 13 L. T. 428; 14 W. R. 79.

Conditions of sale provided that requisition upon title should be delivered within a certain time, and in default that all objections should be deemed to be waived. Quære, whether the benefit of the condition would not in equity be forfeited by a vendor, who designedly delivered an imperfect abstract of the title. Morley v. Cook, 2 Hare, 106; 12 L. J., Ch. 136.

—— Requisitions.]—Conditions of sale provided that requisitions upon title should be delivered within a certain time; and in default, that all objections should be deemed to be waived. The purchaser did not deliver any requisitions:—Held, that the onus lay upon the purchaser to show that the abstract was imperfect. Ward v. Ghrimes, 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1097; 8 L. T. 782; 11 W. R. 794.

—— Mining Company.]—The purchaser of shares in a mining company is entitled to such evidence of the constitution of the company, and of the nature of the title under which the mines are worked, as will show that the subject matter of the purchase is what it professes to be, and that the proposed form of transfer will give him a valid title. Curling v. Flight, 5 Hare, 242; 2 Ph. 613; 17 L. J., Ch. 359; 12 Jur. 423.

No Title to be Shown.]—The defendant sold and conveyed to the plaintiff some undivided shares in various properties. Disputes arising, they signed a written agreement that the plaintiff should pay the defendant 9,500*l.*, and that the defendant should execute such deeds as the plaintiff should require for the conveyance of the estates:—Held, that the defendant was not bound to deduce any title to the property. Godson v. Turner, 15 Beav. 46.

Partnership Property.]—Sale by the personal representatives of a deceased partner, who died intestate, of his moiety of the real property of the partnership to the surviving partner, with a stipulation that they would furnish him, at their own expense, with an abstract of their title to that moiety:—Held, that they were bound to furnish the usual abstract of title, and not merely the letters of administration. Morris v. Kearsley, 2 Y. & C. 139.

Title when Shown.]—Under the usual reference as to title, a good title is made out when it is proved, but is first shown when the facts necessary to make it out are specifically alleged on the abstract, and are within a vendor's power to prove. Parr v. Lovegrove, 4 Drew. 170; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 600; 6 W. R. 201, 709.

A title is first shown when the abstract states all the matters which, if proved, make a good title. Ib.

Condition as to Concurrence of Beneficiaries.]—Where a condition of sale was that the vendors, being trustees, should not be required to obtain the concurrence of any one interested in the proceeds of the sale, semble, that a true abstract of such title as the vendors had, indicating points calling upon the purchaser to make further requisitions, was an abstract of their title within the meaning of the condition, although the title was not such as the purchaser was bound to accept. Want v. Stallibrass, 42 L. J., Ex. 108; L. R. 9 Ex. 175; 29 L. T. 293; 21 W. R. 685.

Verification—At whose Cost.]—Upon the facts of the case the court held that the vendor entered into the negotiation only upon the footing that she should deliver an abstract of title, and verify it so far as she had the means in her possession at her own expense, but that the purchaser should be at the expense of completing its verification. Thomas v. Blackman, 1 Coll. C. C. 301.

—— Facts stated in Conditions.] — Facts stated in conditions of sale as the ground of the conditions must be proved. Symons v. James, 1 Y. & C. C. C. 487.

—— Joint Purchasers.]—Semble, the acceptance of a title by a joint purchaser is no answer to the right of the other purchaser to have a good title proved. Mackreth v. Dunn, 10 L. J., Ch. 367.

Manor—Statutory Declaration.]—On sale by the lord of a manor of part of the waste, he furnished a statutory declaration that no copyholder or free tenant had exercised any right of common for forty years and upwards, and that no copyholder or free tenant existed, and that no quit-rents had been paid or services rendered or court baron held for forty years and upwards: —Held, that the title could be forced on the purchaser. Bridges and McRae's contract, In re, 30 W. R. 539.

Recitals — Missing Deeds.] — The abstract showed a seisin in fee in B. in 1798, and a devolution of the title both legal and equitable from him to the plaintiff, and uninterrupted enjoyment thereunder. In one of the deeds abstracted, dated in 1815, there was, however, a recital of seisin in A. in 1779, and that by mesne conveyances the premises came to B. The deeds recited were missing, but affidavits were produced verifying extracts from the account books of deceased solicitors who had been concerned in framing the recited deeds, in which charges were made for preparing those deeds, and for attending to witness their execution:—Held, that the recital coupled with the extracts was good secondary evidence of the execution and contents of the missing deeds. Moulton v. Edmonds, 1 De G. F. & J. 246; 29 L. J., Ch. 181; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 305; 8 W. R. 153.

Where a deed, dated sixty years back, contains a recital of the creation of a mortgage term, and a subsequent assignment of it in trust to attend the inheritance, and the term is not subsequently noticed in the title, it will be presumed to have been surrendered; and it is no objection to the title that the vendor cannot produce the deed creating the term, nor the assignment of it. Townsend v. Champernown, 1 Y. & J. 538; 30 R. R. 825.

—— When Conclusive.]—Under the Vendor and Purchaser Act (37 & 38 Vict. c. 78, s. 2), a recital in a conveyance more than twenty years old, that the vendor was seised in fee-simple, is sufficient evidence of that fact, and no prior abstract of title can be demanded except so far as the recital shall be proved to be inaccurate; and in such cases a forty years' title is not required. Bolton v. London School Board, 47 L. J., Ch. 461; 7 Ch. D. 766; 38 L. T. 277; 26 W. R. 549. And see Marsh and Granville (Earl), In re, infra.

b. Identity.

Condition as to Evidence.]—By the conditions of sale, no further evidence of identity was to be required than what was afforded by the abstract and the documents therein abstracted. The descriptions in the documents differed amongst themselves and from the description in the particulars of sale:—Held, that the purchaser was entitled to have further proof of the identity. Flower v. Hartopp, 6 Beav. 476; 12 L. J., Ch. 507; 7 Jur. 613.

General Description.]—Contract for the sale of the borough, lordship, and manor of H., and all the messuages, lands, tenements, and other hereditaments to the said borough, lordship, and manor belonging, as set forth and described in a particular referred to in the contract; the vendors derived title under a conveyance in 1809, by the general description of the borough, lordship, and manor of H., with all and singular the appurtenances thereunto belonging or appertaining, with a reference to preceding deeds, containing the same description, through which the title was traced in the same general manner to 1744; it appeared that some lands had been purchased since 1744, and therefore could not pass under the ancient and general description; the vendors thereupon produced abstracts of the title of such lands, and showed by stewards' books that the lands, ever since they had been purchased, had been annexed to and treated as part of the manor; and to obviate the difficulty they also obtained a confirmation of the conveyance of 1809. Exceptions to the master's report of a good title were overruled. Townsend v. Champernown, supra.

Freehold and Copyhold Lands—Supplemental Agreement.]—A. B. became the purchaser of a mansion-house and park under conditions of sale, which stated that the whole property was freehold except eight acres which were copyhold, but undistinguished except as to not including any of the buildings. Difficulties arising, a supplemental agreement was entered into, detailing what requisitions should be complied with. Among these requisitions was one: "Declaration of identity of lands mentioned in deeds to those now sold":—Held, that the supplemental agreement was a substitution for the original contract, and that A. B. was not entitled to demand that the vendor should distinguish the freehold from the copyhold parts of the premises. Dawson v. Brinckman, 3 Mac. & G. 53. Affirming 3 De G. & Sm. 376.

Freeholds and Leaseholds — Boundaries.] — A purchaser of lands under the description of "partly freehold and partly leasehold" is entitled to have the boundary dividing the freehold from the leasehold defined by reference to the instruments of title, or shown to be capable of being so defined; but the circumstance that the property is described in the agreement as partly freehold and partly leasehold, the boundaries distinguishing the one from the other not being therein, and having not theretofore been clearly defined, is not an objection to a decree for specific performance. Monro v. Taylor, 8 Hare, 51. Affirmed, 3 Mac. & G. 713; 21 L. J., Ch. 525.

Recital—When Conclusive.]—By a deed executed in 1858 (after the death of the settlor), the trustees conveyed the property to a purchaser for value. This deed contained a recital of a deed of 1845, and a recital that the trustees "in pursuance of the trust for sale conferred on them" by that deed had caused the property to be put up for sale:—Held, that by virtue of s. 2 of the Vendor and Purchaser Act 1874, this recital, not being shown to be inaccurate, was conclusive evidence that the deed of 1845 had not been revoked. Marsh and Granville (Earl), In re, 24 Ch. D. 11; 48 L. T. 947; 31 W. R. 845—C. A. Affirming 52 L. J., Ch. 189. And see Bolton v. London School Board, supra.

—— Copyholds — Surrender.]—The presumption is, that a surrender will bar an estate tail in copyholds, until a contrary custom is shown. Goold v. White, Kay, 683; 2 Eq. R. 1100.

Copyholds having been sold, subject to a condition that all statements and recitals in any of the title deeds or muniments of title should be considered as satisfactory evidence of the facts stated or recited, the purchaser objected, that the first surrender on the abstract was by A., and J., his wife, which said J., it was therein stated, "had then lately been admitted there tenant in tail, according to the custom of that manor." Afterwards the purchaser required evidence that the custom of the manor warranted estates tail. The first surrender was dated in 1801, and was conditional only. In 1815 the same parties made an absolute surrender in fee, under which the possession had been enjoyed ever since:—Held, that the recital was conclusive evidence, under the conditions of sale, that J. had been admitted tenant in tail, and that the recital, coupled with the surrenders of 1801 and 1815, and the subsequent possession, consistently with that title, was sufficient evidence that the custom of the manor did warrant estates tail. Ib.

—— Notice of Trust.]—Property was mortgaged to W. in fee, there being nothing to show that he was not the beneficial owner of the mortgage money. He died, having by his will devised and bequeathed his real and personal, and also his trust and mortgaged estates to trustees. The widow alone proved the will, and alone acted as trustee, and obtained a decree absolute foreclosing the mortgage. In 1865 she, by a deed indorsed on the mortgage deed, conveyed the property, without any consideration to K., C. and B., in fee, as joint tenants. The conveyance contained a recital that the testator held the mortgage money on an account under which K., C. and B. were then solely entitled thereto, as was thereby acknowledged, whereby the widow, as trustee under the testator's will, was trustee only of the property for K., C. and B., and they had requested her to convey it to them. On a subsequent sale by persons who had purchased from K., C. and B., the purchasers required evidence of the truth of the recital in the deed of 1865 that K., C. and B. were entitled to the mortgage money:—Held, that it would be contrary to the practice of the court to go behind a recital evidently framed for the purpose of keeping notice of trusts off the conveyance, and that a good title had been shown by the vendors. Harman and Uxbridge and Rickmansworth Ry., In re, 52 L. J., Ch. 808; 24 Ch. D. 720; 49 L. T. 130; 31 W. R. 857.

Where Matter of Title.]—Identity is as much matter of title as devolution. Brown v. Wales, L. R. 15 Eq. 142.

Evidence from Title Deeds.]—A clause in an agreement for purchase that the purchaser is not to require any further proof of identity than that given by the title deeds exempts the vendor from producing further evidence; but he cannot force the title on the purchaser unless the evidence is complete upon the deeds. Curling v. Austin, 2 Dr. & Sm. 129; 10 W. R. 682.

Sale of Timber and Estate.]—Where, upon a contract for the sale of an estate, a separate and distinct contract is made for the sale of the timber upon it, the court will not enforce the latter unless the vendor can give the purchaser such possession and dominion over the timber as will entitle him to fell and remove it; but if an entire contract be made for the sale both of the estate and the timber, the vendor is only bound to make out his title to the land according to the contract, and the title to the land is the title to the timber upon it. Crosse v. Lawrence, 9 Hare, 462; 21 L. J., Ch. 889; 16 Jur. 142.

Sale in Lots—Mistake.]—Lessee granted underlease of a messuage, No. 7, to A., and after lessee's death his trustees sold No. 7. On investigating the title, it appeared that the parcels set out in the underlease were, by a clerical mistake, the parcels of No. 6. The trustees, after the sale, obtained an order to correct this mistake, by authorising an assignment to the tenant of No. 6, and a new underlease, with proper parcels, to the tenant of No. 7; and the court compelled the purchaser to complete the purchase. Grissell v. Peto, 2 Sm. & G. 39; 18 Jur. 591; 2 W. R. 178.

Lands whether included in Devise.]—Where there was a doubt as to whether part of lands agreed to be sold was included in a particular devise, the court would not, under its discretionary jurisdiction, compel the purchaser to accept the title. Ashton v. Wood, 3 Sm. & G. 436; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 1164.

c. Heirship and Descent.

Evidence as to Heirship.]—Evidence as to the heirship of daughters. Hemming v. Spiers, 15 Sim. 550; 11 Jur. 294.

A conveyance to a purchaser in 1793, from persons residing in B., of lands then in their possession, and to which, subject to an outstanding but satisfied mortgage term, they claimed title, under an entail created in 1732, through a descent recited in the deeds. A subsequent assignment of the mortgage term from the mortgagee to the purchaser, and an uninterrupted enjoyment under his conveyance, will not enable him to make a good title, if unsupported by extrinsic evidence of the pedigree recited in the deeds, or of possession prior to 1793, conformably to that pedigree. Fort v. Clarke, 1 Russ. 601.

A vendor taking title as heir is not bound to prove that the ancestor took as purchaser, but may rely on the statutory presumption, until some proof to the contrary is adduced. But he is bound to disclose any matters within his knowledge tending to rebut that presumption. Dorling v. Claydon, 1 H. & M. 402.

B. entered into a contract for the purchase of an estate, which stated that "N., the vendor, in 1848, entered into possession of the receipts of the rents of the estate, claiming as heir-at-law to his cousin, the last owner; that a copy of the pedigree on which such claim was based would be furnished to B., who should admit the right of N. as such heir-at-law." A pedigree was furnished, but it failed to show that N. was the heir-at-law —Held, that the purchaser was bound to admit the title of N. Nash v. Browne, 32 L. J., Ch. 148; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 431; 7 L. T. 667.

Seisin.]—Where a title of more than sixty years commences with a will containing a general devise, and there is a subsequent deed of covenant by the devisee in fee to produce deeds of earlier date, that will and deed, coupled with continuous possession ever since, is sufficient evidence of seisin. Parr v. Lovegrove, 4 Drew. 170; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 600; 6 W. R. 201, 709.

Where a condition of sale provided that the vendors should not be required to commence the title prior to the will of E., but that the purchaser should be satisfied with a declaration of the seisin of E. in fee-simple of the property, free from incumbrances for a certain period:—Held, that the declaration must strictly comply with the terms of the condition. Nott v. Riccard, 22 Beav. 307; 25 L. J., Ch. 618; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 1038; 4 W. R. 269.

—— Mistake as to Ownership.] — A., who was heir in tail of a testator and so entitled to the whole estates, under a mistake as to her rights, sold to the defendant one-fifth of the estate (which was all she thought herself entitled to), and by the conveyance she conveyed to the defendant her one-fifth and all her estates and shares in the land, neither of them being aware of the earlier title. On discovering her rights she filed a bill to have the conveyance set aside and to be declared a tenant in tail of the whole:—Held, that the plaintiff was bound to show that the original testator was seised in fee of the freeholds claimed by her, and that as she had not done so, her bill must be dismissed. The defendant had conveyed his estate to mortgagees, and they, as purchasers for valuable consideration without notice, could not be interfered with. Bulley v. Bulley, 44 L. J., Ch. 79; L. R. 9 Ch. 739; 30 L. T. 848; 22 W. R. 779.

d. Will, Probate or Establishment of.

Where Validity of Will Doubtful.]—A purchaser of real property, the title to which is derived under a will, is not entitled to have the will established, or to have the concurrence of the testator's heir in the conveyance to him, unless some reasonable ground exists for doubting the validity of the will. M'Culloch v. Gregory, 3 K. & J. 12; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 1134.

On a sale by parties claiming under a devisee named in a will, which has been unsuccessfully disputed by parties claiming under a prior will, the purchaser has not in general a right to have the will established as against the heir. Ib.

Such a purchaser (the vendor having bought in the alleged rights, of the heir-at-law, has no right to put such vendor to any proof of the heirship of the party whose assumed rights had been so bought. Ib.

In a suit for specific performance by a vendor whose title was derived under a suspicious will, it appeared that the heir had failed in an action of ejectment, and afterwards, on a motion for a new trial, the master reported in favour of the title, and the vice-chancellor confirmed the report, and decreed specific performance, without requiring the plaintiff to establish the will. But the lord chancellor, on appeal, reversed that decision. Grove v. Bastard, 2 Ph. 619; 17 L. J., Ch. 351; 10 Jur. 385.

Title Derived from Heir.]—Where the title of an estate was derived from a person who entered as heir, under the impression that his ancestor's will was void, a purchaser has a right to production of the will, or evidence of its contents. Stevens v. Guppy, 2 Sim. & S. 439; 6 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 164.

Proof in Equity.]—One articles to buy lands, and the title is under a will, not proved in equity against the heir, yet, in some cases, equity will compel the purchaser to accept the title. Cotton v. Wilson, 3 P. Wms. 190.

Construction of Will by Court of Chancery.]—Where a title depends on the words of a will, this is as properly determinable in equity as by a judge and jury at nisi prius. Tanner v. Wise, 3 P. Wms. 296; Cas. t. Talb. 284.

Decree against Heir Suppressing Will.]—A devisee obtains a decree to hold and enjoy against the heir, who it was supposed had suppressed the will; pending this suit, a third person gets an assignment of mortgage made by the testator, and then purchases the equity of redemption of the heir with notice of the will. The court would not admit the purchaser to dispute the justness of the decree, nor to try at law whether the will was not cancelled by the testator. Finch v. Newnham, 2 Vern. 215.

Misleading Abstract.]—In an abstract of a vendor's title, a will which formed part of it was represented as having been proved, which afterwards appeared not to have been done. The will was directed to be deposited with the master; the vendors were ordered to pay all costs. Harrison v. Coppard, 2 Cox, 318.

Probate in Consistory Court.]—An agreement having been entered into for the sale of certain securities upon tolls within the diocese of Lincoln, it appeared from the abstract of title that the will of one in the series of owners, had been proved only in the consistory court of the Bishop of Lincoln. The court declined either to force the title on the purchaser or to order the vendor to procure probate in the prerogative court of the Archbishop of Canterbury. Williams v. Bland, 2 Coll. C. C. 575; 15 L. J., Ch. 331; 10 Jur. 404.

Proof of Codicil.]—A testator, in 1836, devised all his real estate to his wife, and appointed her executrix. He afterwards purchased an advowson, and died. The widow proved this will, and sold the advowson. An objection being made that the after-purchased property did not pass, a search was made, and another testamentary instrument of 1847 was found, purporting to confirm a will of 1836:—Held, that the purchaser was entitled to the same amount of proof of the codicil of 1847 as would be necessary to establish it against the heir. Weddall v. Nixon, 17 Beav. 160; 22 L. J., Ch. 939; 17 Jur. 642; 1 W. R. 250.

3. PRODUCTION OF TITLE.

Copyholds—Enfranchisement.]—The vendor of a copyhold estate enfranchised under the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 51, is not bound to show the lord's title. Kerr v. Pawson, 25 Beav. 394; 27 L. J., Ch. 594; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 425; 6 W. R. 447.

After the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 51, but before 21 & 22 Vict. c. 94, an agreement was entered into for the sale of a copyhold estate, together with the timber and all appurtenances to the same hereditaments belonging, as soon as the same should become freehold, under an agreement of the vendor to use his best endeavours to enfranchise: an enfranchisement was made under the second act, reserving the minerals to the lord:—Held, that the purchaser must complete. Ib.

—— Copy of Admission.]—An equitable mortgage may be created of copyholds by deposit of the copy of court roll. A purchaser or mortgagee ought to require the vendor or mortgagor to produce an abstract of his title and the copy of his admission to the copyhold premises. Whitbread v. Jordan, 1 Y. & C. 303; 4 L. J., Ex. Eq. 38.

Sale of Freeholds Subject to Leases.]—A lord of a manor selling freehold lands of the manor subject to leases for lives granted by copy of the court roll must covenant to produce the court rolls up to the date of the conveyance. Poulett (Earl) v. Hood, 37 L. J., Ch. 224; L. R. 5 Eq. 115; 17 L. T. 486; 16 W. R. 323.

Sale of Leasehold.]—If the vendor of a leasehold interest means to sell, without producing his lessor's title, he ought to declare it. Ogilvie v. Foljambe, 3 Mer. 53; 17 R. R. 13.

On a suit for specific performance under an agreement, general as to title, the master cannot report a good title in vendor, unless he sets forth a good title in his lessor. Purvis v. Rayer, 9 Price, 488; 23 R. R. 707.

A contract for sale of the lessee's interest in a lease does not exonerate the vendor from the necessity of proving the lessor's title to grant the lease. Fennelly v. Anderson, 1 Ir. Ch. R. 706.

Whether without express stipulation a person under a contract with a lessee for years to purchase the term, can insist upon a production of the lessor's title, and whether the lessee can compel such production, quære. White v. Foljambe, 11 Ves. 337. S. P., Fildes v. Hooker, 2 Mer. 424.

—— Bishop's Lease.] — Objection to title between vendor and purchaser on the ground of non-production of lessor's title, overruled in the case of a bishop's lease. S. C., 2 Mer. 430. S. P., Fane v. Spencer, 2 Madd. 438.

—— Assignment by Indorsement.]—On a contract to take an assignment of a lease the purchaser requested the vendor to prepare the assignment by indorsement totidem verbis with that to himself (the vendor):—Held, that the purchaser could not afterwards require the production of the original lessor's title. Smith v. Capron, 7 Hare, 185; 19 L. J., Ch. 322; 14 Jur. 686.

—— Other Property Comprised in Lease.]—An agreement to let for the term of sixty-one years the premises then occupied by the vendors as held under A., does not absolve the vendors from the duty of proving the title of their lessor, A. And on its appearing that A. was himself only a lessee for three lives with a covenant for perpetual renewal:—Held, that the fact of other premises being comprised in the lease to A. was a fatal objection to the title. Leathem v. Allen, 1 Ir. Ch. R. 683.

Underlease.]—If a lessee for a term of years underlet for a less term, and the under lessee sell by auction the lesser term, describing it as a lease, and one of the conditions of sale is that the lessor's title shall not be inquired into, the vendor's title being good, quære, whether the purchaser can refuse to complete, because there is a term imposed between the vendor's interest and the freehold. Darlington v. Hamilton, Kay, 550; 2 Eq. R. 906; 23 L. J., Ch. 1000.

Surrendered Lease.]—Upon the sale of a leasehold for lives, in consideration of the surrender of a prior lease, the title to the surrendered lease must be shown. Hodgkinson v. Cooper, 9 Beav. 304; 15 L. J., Ch. 160; 10 Jur. 39.

Receipt for Rent.]—Although under ordinary circumstances, upon the sale of leaseholds, the production of the last receipt for ground rent, without proof of the title of the person giving the receipt, is sufficient, yet where such title is bonâ fide in question, the court will not compel specific performance without proof of the reversioner's title. Pegler v. White, 33 L. J., Ch. 569; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 330; 10 L. T. 84; 12 W. R. 455.

—— Underlease.]—On the sale of an underlease the production of the ground landlord's receipt for rent paid by the vendor to the ground landlord under threat of distress for the ground rent, is not the "production of the receipt for the last payment due for rent under the underlease," within the meaning of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, s. 3, sub-s. 5. Higgins and Percival, In re, 57 L. J., Ch. 807; 59 L. T. 213.

—— Peppercorn Rent.]—The Conveyancing Act, 1881, s. 3, sub-s. 4, does not apply to a peppercorn rent so as by the production of a receipt for a peppercorn to relieve the vendors of a building lease from the obligation of showing that the covenants with the lessor have been performed. Moody and Yates, In re, 54 L. J., Ch. 886; 30 Ch. D. 344; 53 L. T. 845; 33 W. R. 785—C. A.

—— Breach of Covenants.]—A sale was made under condition that the last receipt for rent should be taken as conclusive evidence of the due performance of all covenants. Certain breaches of covenant had taken place, but the last receipt for rent was produced. Specific performance of the contract having been decreed, and a reference as to title which was not appealed from:—Held, that the vendor had made a good title in accordance with the contract which the purchaser was bound to accept. Lawrie v. Lees, 51 L. J., Ch. 209; 7 App. Cas. 19; 46 L. T. 210; 30 W. R. 285—H. L. (E.) And see cases, supra, col. 1230.

Waiver by Agreement.]—The vendor of a leasehold interest is bound to show the lessor's title to demise, unless it is otherwise stipulated in the contract of sale. Souter v. Drake, 3 N. & M. 40; 5 B. & Ad. 992; 3 L. J., K. B. 31.

No agreement to dispense with the production of the lessor's title will be implied from the circumstances of the term being nearly expired, the small value of the property, and the absence of any premium. Ib.

A. agreed to sell to B. leases of a public-house and shop adjoining, and B. agreed to accept a proper assignment of the leases and premises without requiring the lessor's title :—Held, that the true meaning of this agreement was that the vendee was to purchase the two leases without inquiring into the title of the lessor. Spratt v. Jeffery, 10 B. & C. 249.

What Amounts to Waiver.]—It is not so universally the custom to call for the lessor's title as for that of the vendor of a fee simple, and therefore smaller circumstances will satisfy the court that the right to call for the lessor's title was waived. Simpson v. Sadd, 4 De G. M. & G. 665 ; 3 Eq. R. 263 ; 24 L. J., Ch. 562 ; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 457 ; 3 W. R. 118.

An objection on the ground of non-production of the lessor's title is not waived by a premature conditional approbation of the title, by the purchaser's counsel ; but the expense incurred in making out the title before this objection was taken, repaid. Deverell v. Bolton (Lord), 18 Ves. 505.

Approbation of counsel not a waiver of all reasonable objections to the title. Id. 514.

—— Objection Discovered after.]—In a suit for specific performance of an agreement to accept a lease, the court, considering the defendant (the intended lessee), by his conduct, to have waived all objections to title, decreed a specific performance, and referred it to the master to settle the lease. In settling the lease, the original lease was produced and found to contain certain covenants unknown to the defendant. On exceptions to the report :—Held, that the court would not enforce a specific performance. The form of the decree in this case was followed in Simpson v. Sadd (supra), Warren v. Richardson, Younge, 1.

—— Purchaser Making Draft.]—Semble that where the purchaser, after transmission to him of the original lease, prepares a draft assignment, and makes various objections, but does not require production of the landlord's title, he will be considered to have waived its production. Clive v. Beaumont, 1 De G. & Sm. 397.

—— Purchase of Adverse Interest.]—When the plaintiff and defendant claim leaseholds under the same instrument, and the defendant purchases the plaintiff's share, he cannot object that the lessor's title is not shown. Phipps v. Child, 3 Drew. 709.

A defendant admitting by his answer that at the date of the contract the plaintiff was entitled, cannot at the hearing object that no abstract was delivered, and no title shown. Ib.

Purchaser of property of an insolvent sold as personalty, on investigation discovered it was realty and repudiated the contract. He then bought up the title of the heir :—Held, that he could not avail himself of this purchase to defeat his contract, but that he had thereby removed the objections to the title, and specific performance was decreed against him, allowing him the expenses of his purchase from the heir. Murrell v. Goodyear, 1 De G. F. & J. 432 ; 29 L. J., Ch. 425 ; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 356 ; 2 L. T. 268 ; 8 W. R. 398.

And see cases under next section.

4. WAIVER OF TITLE.

What is—After Notice of Defect.]—The right of a good title does not grow out of the agreement between the parties, but is given by law ; but a purchaser may waive his right, by going on with the agreement after he has full notice that he is not to expect a good title. Ogilvie v. Foljambe, 3 Mer. 53 ; 17 R. R. 13.

A. and B. agree to grant mutual leases upon terms stated in a letter by A.'s solicitor, and accepted by B.'s solicitor. A.'s solicitor sent B.'s a draft of a formal agreement, which was returned by B.'s unaccepted, as he considered the agreement already definite and binding. Both A. and B. had antecedent knowledge of the title, and B. appeared to have acted on his knowledge :—Held, that there was a waiver of objections to the title on the part of B., and that A. was entitled to specific performance. Herring v. Miles, 3 W. R. 127.

—— Retaining Abstract.]—A purchaser having retained the abstract for five months, made no objections to the title, but simply required the vendor to verify the abstract with the title deeds :—Held, that he must be deemed to have accepted the title. Pegg v. Wisden, 16 Beav. 239 ; 16 Jur. 1105 ; 1 W. R. 42.

B., the purchaser of an advowson, had an abstract delivered to him, and, after the date for completion, sent in requisitions, and received answers thereto, and made no further reply :—Held, that B. must be considered to have accepted the title. Sweet v. Meredith, 31 L. J., Ch. 817 ; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 637 ; 6 L. T. 413 ; 10 W. R. 402.

—— Continuing Negotiations.]—W. contracted to sell a dwelling-house to H., possession to be given on the 26th February ; H. wanted the house for immediate occupation. The purchaser did not enter into possession, but continued to negotiate for some time longer, when he gave a peremptory notice of abandonment of the contract :—Held, that there must be a decree for specific performance of the contract. Webb v. Hughes, 39 L. J., Ch. 606 ; L. R. 10 Eq. 281 ; 18 W. R. 749.

—— Defect Shown on Abstract.]—No objection to a purchaser that the defect of title appeared on the abstract delivered before he filed his bill. Stapylton v. Scott, 16 Ves. 272 ; 10 R. R. 179.

—— When Verbal.]—A purchaser, who in his written contract stipulates for a good title, cannot be required to complete upon a defective title on the ground of a verbal waiver of the stipulation. Goss v. Nugent (Lord), 2 N. & M. 28 ; 5 B. & Ad. 58 ; 2 L. J., K. B. 127.

—— Contesting Variations in Title.]—Purchaser need not wait for a new title, but may call on the vendor to abide by the original abstract ; but if he goes on to contest variations made in the title, he waives the objection grounded on delay. Magennis v. Fallon, 2 Moll. 581.

Where a purchaser goes on contesting the title without a protest against delay, that is a waiver of that ground of objection. But if he protests against the delay, but, not being sure that his protest is valid, goes on to make the best case he can, otherwise to be discharged, that goes only to costs, and does not amount to acquiescence. Ib. 578.

A party to a contract becoming aware of an objection to the validity of the contract, must forthwith state it as an objection; if, after such knowledge, he treats the contract as subsisting, he will be considered to have waived the objection. Flint v. Woodin, 9 Hare, 618; 16 Jur. 719.

Waiver in Part.]—Purchaser, having two distinct grounds, and contesting the right to enforce his contract upon one which failed:—Held, not to have waived the other, although he did not bring it forward for a considerable time after he became aware of it. Magennis v. Fallon, supra.

Delay.]—Circumstances of delay considered not to amount to a waiver of requisitions on title. Cooch v. Walden, 46 L. J., Ch. 639.

A delay of seven months held no waiver of an objection to the title, which turned upon a question of fact. Martin v. Cotter, 3 Jo. & Lat. 496; 9 Ir. Eq. R. 351.

Laches will not be imputed to a vendor on account of delay, however long, in filing his bill for specific performance, where negotiations respecting the title have been going on the whole time. M'Murray v. Spicer, 37 L. J., Ch. 505; L. R. 5 Eq. 527; 16 W. R. 332.

Taking Possession.]—Possession taken generally amounts to a waiver even of objections to title. Fludyer v. Cocker, 12 Ves. 27; 8 R. R. 275.

In a suit to compel the defendant specifically to perform an agreement to take a lease:—Held, that under the circumstances of the case the intended lessee had waived his right to call for the title of the intended lessor. Simpson v. Sadd, 4 De G. M. & G. 665; 3 Eq. R. 263; 24 L. J., Ch. 562; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 457; 3 W. R. 118.

The mere fact of taking possession does not, either in the case of vendor and purchaser, or in that of lessor and lessee, operate as a waiver of the purchaser's or lessee's right to call for the vendor's or lessor's title, though an intention to waive the right is less probable in the former than in the latter instance. Ib.

An agreement to sell the interest of A. in the lands of Whiteacre does not absolve A. the vendor, from the necessity of proving his lessor's title. Nor is there any waiver by the mere fact of the vendee having taken possession of the lands before production of the lessor's title. Wright v. Griffith, 1 Ir. Ch. R. 695.

Primâ facie taking possession after an abstract has been delivered, and not in pursuance of any provision in the contract, is a waiver of the objections appearing on the abstract, and it lies on the purchaser to rebut that presumption. Bown v. Stenson, 24 Beav. 631.

A purchaser had taken possession by his tenant, and not under the contract, after an abstract had been delivered, and he had made no objection to the title till long after, when a suit was threatened:—Held, that he had waived all objections arising upon that abstract; but that he had not waived any objection not arising on the abstract. Ib.

Agreement made for purchase of the equity of redemption in property, with a stipulation for immediate possession, and that the purchasers shall indemnify the vendors in respect of the mortgage money and interest. Possession is taken by the purchasers, and retained for upwards of two years, when the mortgagees take possession and sue the vendors upon the mortgage covenant:—Held, that the purchasers had waived objections to the title. Where immediate possession is stipulated in an agreement, and also delivery of an abstract, the mere act of taking possession does not amount to a waiver of the title. Sibbald v. Lowrie, 2 Eq. R. 485; 23 L. J., Ch. 593; 18 Jur. 141; 2 W. R. 89.

—— On Sale by Court.]—A purchaser under a decree, who takes possession without the order of the court, by an arrangement with the solicitor in the suit, accepts the title. Wilden v. Andrews, 4 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 208.

—— No Objection to Abstract.]—Specific performance decreed against purchaser, without reference as to title, upon possession, and no objection made to abstract. Fleetwood v. Green, 15 Ves. 594. S. P., Anspach (Margravine) v. Noel, 1 Madd. 310; 16 R. R. 227.

—— Title Accepted through Misrepresentation.]—Consent to accept a title given under the influence of representations of the vendor, which turn out to be inaccurate, will not bind the purchaser. If a purchaser, entitled by agreement to possession, enters and exercises ownership, he is not thereby precluded from having a reference as to title, on objections not appearing upon any previous abstract delivered to him. Johnes v. Claughton, 2 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 113.

—— Right to Rescind.]—Taking possession by a purchaser does not, in all cases, amount to a waiver of a requisition which has not been answered, and, therefore, where a purchaser took possession with leave of the vendor pending an answer to a requisition:—Held, that he was not thereby precluded from rescinding. Turquand v. Rhodes, 37 L. J., Ch. 830; 18 L. T. 844; 16 W. R. 1074.

—— Assignment of Purchaser's Interest.]—A party who had contracted for the purchase of the benefit of an agreement for a lease, and who before the lease was granted entered into possession and paid part of the purchase money, and after the lease had been granted assigned his interest in it as a security for money lent:—Held, to have waived all objections on the score of title. Haydon v. Bell, 1 Beav. 337; 2 Jur. 1008.

—— Vexatious Objections.]—Purchaser after long possession and vexatious objections to complete the purchase:—Held, to have waived his right to an investigation of the title. Hall v. Laver, 3 Y. & C. 191.

—— Rents and Profits.]—Where a party had been eight years in possession, and refused either to abandon the agreement or accept such title as the vendor could give, having paid no part of the purchase money and no rent; the court directed the agreement to be delivered up to be cancelled, and the rents and profits received by the purchaser to be accounted for. King v. King, 1 Myl. & K. 442. And see Deller v. Simonds, infra, col. 1440.

—— Acts of Ownership.]—A purchaser was held entitled to an investigation of the vendor's title, notwithstanding possession taken, acts of ownership incident to possession, and preparation of a conveyance. Burroughs v. Oakley, 3 Swanst. 159 ; 19 R. R. 188.

The purchaser entered into possession. While in possession he made improvements, cut down timber, sold timber, also part of the materials of the subject of the contract, built kitchens, &c. : —Held, that these acts did not amount to an acceptance of the title. Fraser v. Bennett, 1 Jur. 473.

Although a purchaser entering into possession, and dealing with the property in a manner contrary to the usage in good husbandry, may be a ground for compelling him to pay the purchase money into court, or for the appointment of a receiver, it will not be a ground to force the title on him. Osborne v. Harvey, 1 Y. & C. C. C. 116 ; 11 L. J., Ch. 42.

A purchaser of a share in a co-partnership does not waive objections to the title by taking possession of the property, and acting as a partner, when the contract stipulates that a good title shall be made by a specified day, and it appears to have been the intention that the purchaser should immediately have possession. Stevens v. Guppy, 3 Russ. 171 ; 6 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 164 ; 27 R. R. 59.

—— Approval of Abstract.]—A purchaser who took possession under agreement, admitted by answer that an abstract of title had been delivered to him, and approved by counsel : —Held, that he had a right to a reference to the master, though he had all along continued in possession without taking any objection to title. Boxhall v. Jackson, 3 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 100.

—— Grant of Lease.]—A purchaser who, in the full knowledge of objections to the title, grants a lease of the property to a third party, must be taken to have waived the objections. Sidebotham, Ex parte, 4 Deac. & C. 693 ; 2 Mont. & Ayr. 146 ; 4 L. J., Bk. 27.

—— Knowledge of Defects.]—If a purchaser, after the delivery of the abstract, on the face of which part of the estate appears to be subject to a right of sporting, not mentioned in the particulars of sale, enters into possession, he waives the objection. Burnell v. Brown, 1 J. & W. 168 ; 21 R. R. 136.

If a contract is silent as to the title which is to be shown, the legal implication that the purchaser is entitled to a good title may be rebutted by evidence that, before the execution of the contract, the purchaser had notice of defects in the vendor's title. But, if the contract expressly provides that a good title shall be shown, the purchaser is entitled to insist on a good title, notwithstanding that before the execution of the contract he had notice of defects in the vendor's title. If the contract contains no stipulation as to possession being taken by the purchaser before completion, and he takes possession with knowledge that there are defects in the title which the vendor cannot remove, the taking possession amounts to a waiver of the purchaser's right to require the removal of those defects, or to repudiate his contract. If, on the other hand, the defects are removable by the vendor, the taking of possession does not amount to such a waiver. Glaag and Miller's Contract, In re, 52 L. J., Ch. 654 ; 23 Ch. D. 320 ; 48 L. T. 629 ; 31 W. R. 601.

—— Under Informal Agreement.]—Possession taken under the terms of an informal letter, by which the plaintiff agreed to give up to S. all the deeds, and to sign and hand over all the necessary leases to enable S. to have and possess the whole and sole contract over the freehold, leasehold, and copyhold property of which the plaintiff was possessed or interested in. After possession, S. carried on the business, and received the rents of other parts of the property :—Held, that specific performance of the agreement must be decreed. Deller v. Simonds, 5 Jur. (N.S.) 997.

Held, also, that the right to an investigation of the title had been waived by the purchaser. Ib. And see King v. King, supra, col. 1438.

5. Reference.

a. In General.

General Rule.]—General rule that court will not decide upon a title without reference to master, unless unequivocally, and without fraud or surprise, waived ; a plaintiff seeking specific performance being entitled to opportunity of making a better title before the master, and the defendant having a right to further inquiry, upon principle that bill seeks relief beyond the law. Jenkins v. Hiles, 6 Ves. 646 ; 6 R. R. 14.

A decree for reference of title, on a bill for specific performance, should contain a declaration that the contract ought to be specifically performed. Mole v. Smith, Jacob, 495.

Court will not make absolute the common order nisi to dissolve injunction without master's report as to sufficiency of title, although objections are fully stated in defendant's answer. Church v. Legeyt, 1 Price, 301.

Suit against Vendor.]—The master's report on reference of title will not be suspended to await the event of a suit commenced against the vendor for recovery of part of the estate ; but the two suits may be heard together. Osbaldiston v. Askew, 2 J. & W. 539 ; 1 Russ. 160 ; 25 R. R. 21.

On a reference of title in a suit, for specific performance, the fact that a suit has been subsequently instituted, in which part of the lands is claimed adversely to the vendor, is not sufficient ground for reporting that a good title cannot be made. Ib.

Validity of Contract.]—Questions as to the validity of the contract, and as to whether it is inequitable to enforce its specific performance, must be determined at the hearing ; questions of title are referred to chambers. Hood v. Oglander, 34 Beav. 513 ; 6 N. R. 57 ; 34 L. J., Ch. 528 ; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 498 ; 12 L. T. 627 ; 13 W. R. 705.

Circumstances under which a question of title may be discussed at the hearing of a suit for specific performance. Ib.

In suits for specific performance where the contract is not disputed, it is the duty of the vendor to obtain an immediate reference for title so as to save unnecessary costs. Phillipson v. Gibbon, 40 L. J., Ch. 406 ; L. R. 6 Ch. 428 ; 24 L. T. 602 ; 19 W. R. 661.

In a suit for specific performance, when the first question is on the contract, and the court declares that the vendor is entitled to specific performance, and the purchaser then insists that no title has been shown, the court may proceed to determine whether the purchaser is entitled to any further abstract; and if the purchaser is entitled, the cause must again stand over, affording him the opportunity of taking any objection that may arise on that abstract. Keyes v. Heydon, 9 Hare (App.) v.; 1 W. R. 112.

Declaration of Title.]—When, upon a petition presented under the Declaration of Title Act (25 & 26 Vict. c. 67), s. 6, the petitioner proves such possession and states such title as, if established, would entitle him to a declaration, a reference will be ordered to chambers to establish the title. Roberts, In re, 22 L. T. 262.

The court being satisfied with the title of a petitioner to a house in London, ordered, that the declaration establishing the title should be made at the end of three months, and the security required by s. 9 should be 40*l.* and that notice of the order should be advertised three times, at three days' interval, in three London newspapers. S. C., 39 L. J., Ch. 888; L. R. 10 Eq. 402; 22 L. T. 699.

Order Dismissing Bill.]—Order to dismiss a bill for want of prosecution, not of course, pending a reference, the title alone being in question. Biscoe v. Brett, 2 V. & B. 377.

Bill for specific performance upon various objections to the title, dismissed in the first instance without a reference. Omerod v. Hardman, 5 Ves. 723. See 6 R. R. 19, n.

Order for Sale.]—Real estate ordered to be sold pending inquiries before the master. Martin v. Hadlow, 1 W. R. 101.

Court refused to make an order under act of parliament for sale of estate upon opinion of conveyancer merely approving the conveyance, without reference. Newcastle (Duke), Ex parte, 6 Ves. 454.

Laches of Vendor.]—Motion by a vendor for a reference as to title refused, because he had been guilty of laches. Dorin v. Harvey, 15 Sim. 49; 9 Jur. 648.

How Obtained.]—Motion for reference of title must be made on notice, if made by any of the parties to cause. M'Cann v. O'Farrell, 1 Hog. 121.

Reference having been made as to title on one motion, party cannot afterwards, by another motion, have reference as to delivery of abstract. Hyde v. Wroughton, 3 Madd. 279.

The court will not, by one order, direct a reference as to the propriety of a proposed reinvestment, and as to title, and for the completion of the purchase and for taxation and payment of costs. After the master has approved of the title and settled the conveyance, the matter must come again to the court for approval and further directions. Duckle, Ex parte, 16 Jur. 511.

—— After Decree.]—Decree made, defendant not appearing, for specific performance, without any reference as to title. Upon motion by the defendant, the court allowed a reference as to title to be inserted in the decree upon his paying the costs. Hughes v. Jones, 26 Beav. 24.

—— After Discharge of Purchaser.]—An estate having been sold, the parties believing that title could not be made consented to order discharging the purchaser; subsequently discovering that a good title could be made, the court discharged the order on paying purchaser's costs and ordered reference as to title. Butter v. Ommanney, Tam. 344.

—— Before Answer.]—Motion after bill filed, and before answer, for reference as to title, refused as there were other matters in question. Mathews v. Dana, 3 Madd. 470.

Reference of title before answer; vendor undertaking to do all such acts, as if the answer was in, and the cause brought to hearing; direction, if the report shall be against the title, for compensation; refused as to indemnity. Balmanno v. Lumley, 1 V. & B. 224; 12 R. R. 215.

—— After Answer.]—The court will not, without consent, on bill for specific performance, make an interlocutory order to refer a title, the validity of which is denied by answer, until the cause is brought to a hearing. Bowyer v. Bright, 3 Price, 300.

After answer submitting to perform contract, if good title can be made, reference was directed, on motion whether good title can be made, and whether it appears on the abstract. Wright v. Bond, 11 Ves. 39.

The practice to direct a reference upon title, on motion after answer, limited to the case where the title only is disputed. Gompertz v. ——, 12 Ves. 17. S. P., Blyth v. Elmhirst, 1 V. &. B. 1; 12 R. R. 182. Morgan v. Shaw, 2 Mer. 138; 16 R. R. 161.

On a reference as to title the court will not allow any inquiry to be added as to matters which have no reference to the title, and which are not admitted by the answer. Bennett v. Rees 1 Keen, 405.

—— Compensation.]—Reference before decree confined to the case of title; where there was a further subject of dispute, under a claim of compensation, it was refused with costs. —— v. Skelton, 1 V. & B. 516; 12 R. R. 183, n. S. P., Lowe v. Manners, 1 Mer. 19.

—— Other Objections set up.]—Reference as to title before decree refused where purchaser, on other grounds, resists performance of contract. Paton v. Rogers, 1 V. & B. 351. See 12 R. R. 183, n.

Defendants, in a vendor's specific performance suit, cannot on motion before the hearing have a reference as to title without prejudice to any question in the cause, where they have, by their answer, set up other defences beyond want of title. Reed v. Don Pedro North Del Rey Gold Mining Co., 3 De G. J. & S. 593; 2 N. R. 473; 32 L. J., Ch. 773; 9 L. T. 132; 11 W. R. 935. Affirming 9 Jur. (N.S.) 865.

Where answer raises other objections beside defect of title, court will not, on motion for reference of title, after the answer, decide whether other objections are frivolous or not. Semble. Withy v. Cottle, 1 Sim. & S. 174; 1 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 117; 23 R. R. 187. S. P., Gordon v. Ball, 1 Sim. & S. 178.

Receiver appointed on the motion of the vendor pending a reference of title. Boehm v. Wood, 2 J. & W. 236; 22 R. R. 109.

Although the court will not order a reference of title, on motion, when a purchaser resists the performance of the contract on another ground, yet it will take care that the latter is substantial. Semble. S. C., 1 J. & W. 419; 21 R. R. 213.

A reference of the title will not be ordered if the purchaser, in his answer, objects on the ground that the premises are subject to a right of foot-path. Anon., 1 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 177.

Reference as to title directed after answer, notwithstanding the purchaser stated that his requisitions on the abstract had not been complied with, although the time for completion had long expired, and he had given notice to rescind. Wood v. Machu, 5 Hare, 158.

—— Construction of Contract.]—Where the question was whether "acres" in the contract meant statutory or customary acres:—Held, that a reference of title would not be directed on motion. Portman v. Mill, 2 Russ. 570; 26 R. R. 175.

—— At the Hearing.]—The bill for specific peformance of an agreement to take an assignment of a lease, stated a covenant in the lease, not to assign without the license of the lessor, but did not aver that the plaintiff had or could obtain such a license:—Held, that the court at the hearing would not on such facts dismiss the bill, but would refer it to inquire whether the vendor could make a good title. Smith v. Capron, 7 Hare, 185; 19 L. J., Ch. 322; 14 Jur. 686.

Although a plaintiff is bound to prove his whole case at the hearing, yet if there be no failure of title, but an omission in the proof of it, the court may in its discretion direct a reference to the master to inquire into it. M'Allister v. Walsh, 8 Ir. Eq. R 250.

b. Extent of.

Meaning of "Good Title."]—When a decree has been made for specific performance, subject to the usual reference as to whether a good title can be made, the words "good title" mean a good title having regard to the terms of the contract, although the latter words are not inserted in the decree. Upperton v. Nicholson, 40 L. J., Ch. 401; L. R. 6 Ch. 436: 25 L. T. 4; 19 W. R. 733.

General Reference.]—Where the defendant expressed himself willing to accept the title, if a particular objection then referred to were removed, the court ruled that the reference to the master as to the title must be in general terms, and not confined to the particular objection. Lesturgeon v. Martin, 3 Myl. & K. 255.

When money in court is subject to a trust for investment in land, and the tenant for life enters into a provisional contract for the purchase of an estate, subject to conditions of sale, the court makes a general reference as to the title. Meyrick v. Laws, 34 Beav. 58.

Where land is purchased for immediate occupation the court will not direct a general inquiry as to title, so as to give the vendor an opportunity of making good defects which existed in the title when possession should have been given. Hyde v. Warden, 47 L. J., Ex. 121; 3 Ex. D. 72; 37 L. T. 567; 26 W. R. 201—C. A.

On reference of title, the reference may extend to all that concerns the title, but not to other matters; it may be extended, therefore, to inquire whether a good title appears on the abstract mentioned in the pleadings. Jennings v. Hopton, 1 Madd. 211. S. P., Bennett v. Re s, 1 Keen, 405, supra, col. 1442.

Tithe.]—No reference of title upon a question whether the estate was tithe-free, having been sold as such. Wallinger v. Hilbert, 1 Mer. 104.

Timber.]—The particulars stated that the timber would be included in the purchase. Title was not made out to the timber on a very small portion of the lands. The court referred it to the master to inquire whether the timber on that portion was material to the possession and enjoyment of the estate. Stewart v. Conyngham (Marquis), 1 Ir. Ch. R. 534.

As to Portion of Estate.]—Where the vendor entitled as to part for life, and as to other part absolutely, and as to the remainder it was doubtful if he had any title at all, contracted to sell the whole, a reference ordered to inquire whether the vendor could make a good title as to that part. Graham v. Oliver, 3 Beav. 124.

The defendant purchased an estate, having agreed with the plaintiff that, if he made the purchase, he would cede part to the plaintiff. The court directed a reference to chambers to ascertain what portion the plaintiff was entitled to, and decreed that the defendant should convey such portion to the plaintiff. Chattock v. Muller, 8 Ch. D. 177.

As to Foundation of Title.]—A reference will not be granted as to the fact on which the foundation of plaintiff's title rests; therefore, where the assignee of an insolvent omitted to prove that a fund which he claimed as having been fraudulently settled had ever been the property of the insolvent, a reference as to the fact was refused. Holden v. Hearn, 1 Beav. 445; 8 L. J., Ch. 260; 3 Jur. 428.

Partial Waiver of Title.]—Where the defendant has been guilty of delay, and other acts amounting to a partial waiver of his right to investigate the title, the court will refuse an inquiry as to the items waived, allowing it to proceed as to the rest. Corless v. Sparling, Ir. R. 8 Eq. 335.

A. contracts with B. to purchase an estate, and, after accepting the title, agrees to sell to C., who refuses to complete, on the ground of having discovered another will, not set forth in the abstract, but supposed to affect the title. Upon a bill by the original vendor against A., who admitted the title, by consent of both parties, a reference was directed to the master to inquire whether a good title could be made, regard being had to the will only. Const v. Barr, 2 Mer. 57.

Trustee—Successive Limitations.]—Semble, a trustee under an old trust creating successive limitations of equitable interests, some of which had failed, is entitled, before he can be required to convey, to have the equitable title of those who call for a conveyance ascertained by inquiry, and to have the deed of conveyance settled in the master's office. Goodson v. Ellison, 3 Russ. 583; 27 R. R. 127.

Title at Time of Contract.]—Where the title to a contract is made out by showing the title to the land which is the subject of the contract, the court will enter into the question of the title to the land at the time of the contract; and if the party insisting on the contract makes out a good title to the land at that time, the court will direct a reference to the master as to the subsequent title. Cator v. Croydon Canal Co., 4 Y. & C. 405; 13 L. J., Ch. 89.

Sale of Shares.]—A vendor, by public auction of shares in a company, incorporated by act of parliament, at the request of the purchaser, executed a transfer to a third party, who did not accept the transfer, or register himself as a shareholder. On a bill filed by the vendor against the purchaser for a specific performance, the court directed the usual reference as to title. Shaw v. Fisher, 2 De G. & Sm. 11; 12 Jur. 162.

Plea denying Title.]—The truth of a plea that the plaintiff is not executrix of her testator, must be tried under a reference, and not a replication. Bourke v. Kelly, 1 Hog. 172.

When Title First Made.]—Inquiry as to time when title could be made is the subject of further directions after report upon title, and is not to be combined with reference as to title. Gibson v. Clark, 2 V. & B. 103. S. P., Lubin v. Lightbody, 8 Price, 606.

Where it is not only a question of title, but other questions are made, the court will not direct an inquiry as to when the title was first shown. Potter v. Crossley, 28 L. T. 137; 5 W. R. 35.

Where the defendant disputed the contract, the court only gave the common inquiry as to title, refusing an inquiry as to when first a good title could be made. Morris v. Wilson, 5 Jur. (N.S.) 168.

On a reference of title, the master having reported that a good title could be made, order referring it back to the master to see whether such title could have been made prior to the filing of the bill. Birch v. Haynes, 2 Mer. 444.

Decree for a reference upon the title; after a report approving the title, the defendant is entitled to have an inquiry at what time a title could have been made. Daly v. Osborne, 1 Mer. 382.

The court will, for the future, add to the reference as to whether a good title can be made, a direction to inquire and report at what time a good title could have been shown, as interest on the purchase money will be payable from that date. Enraght v. Fitzgerald, 2 Dr. & War. 43; 1 Con. & L. 181; 8 Ir. Eq. R. 87.

Motion may be made on bill for specific performance, for reference as to title, and whether title was shown prior to filing bill. Anon., 3 Madd. 495.

The defendant insisted that time was of the essence of the contract, and that the abstract had not been delivered within the time agreed on. A reference without prejudice was made on motion as to the title, and when it was first shown. Foxlowe v. Amcoats, 3 Beav. 496; 4 Jur. 1053.

Where there is a reference as to "whether the vendor can make a good title, and if so, when such title was first shown," the making and showing a good title are distinct matters. Parr v. Lovegrove, 4 Drew. 170; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 600; 6 W. R. 201, 709.

Where the answer stated that a good title could not be made, the court ordered the usual reference, and directed, that if a good title could not be made, the master should state when it was first shown that a good title could not be made, with liberty to state special circumstances as to the time when it was first shown that a good title could or could not be made. Martin v. Jardine, 7 L. J., Ch. 250.

An inquiry was directed as to the title, at what time the abstract was delivered, and whether it was sufficient, but the court would not decide upon any matter of relief. Moss v. Mathews, 3 Ves. 329.

Where specific performance is sought, and there is a reference to the master to look into the title, or to ascertain who the parties to the conveyance are, that reference enables the vendor to make good any defect in his own title, or to procure a conveyance up to the date of the master's report and of the decree; but when the court had come to the conclusion that there was no binding contract, and refused specific performance, the court declined to make any reference to the master. Clay v. Rufford, 5 De G. & Sm. 768.

Practice—Evidence.]—Order for a reference as to title ought to contain directions for production of deeds, &c., and examination of parties upon oath. Winterbottom v. Ingham, 9 Sim. 654.

On reference whether a good title can be made, the master proceeds on the abstract only, unless the purchaser requires the production of the deeds; and if he omits to make such requisition, he cannot except to the report, on the ground of the deeds not having been produced. Poole v. Shergold, 1 Cox, 160; 1 R. R. 37.

If a reference as to title is made on motion, the master has the same power to examine witnesses as if the reference had been made by decree. Woodroffe v. Titterton, 8 Sim. 238.

—— Counsel's Opinion.] — Quære, whether the master on a reference as to title can require the parties to procure the opinion of any conveyancer whom he shall select, upon the abstracts. Flower v. Walker, 1 Russ. 408.

6. Report.

a. Form of.

Counsel's Opinion.] — It is informal for the master to state on his report that he has founded his opinion as to the title upon the opinion of a conveyancer. Collard, In re, 10 Beav. 334.

Defects in Title not Stated.]—Report generally that a good title could not be made out, irregular. The master should state the precise points in which the title is defective. Green v. Monks, 2 Moll. 325.

It is informal to report a good title conditionally on performance of an undertaking to do certain acts. The master ought to give a reasonable time to do the acts, and afterwards make his report. Magennis v. Fallon, 2 Moll. 575.

Upon reference, a report that A., with the concurrence of C., &c., can make a good title, is an excess of his authority, being a report upon the conveyance rather than upon the fact, title or not. Lewis v. Loxam, 1 Mer. 179.

A report that good title cannot be made out to an integral part of an estate sold in one lot, is tantamount to a general report that a good title could not be made out. Prendergast v. Eyre, 2 Hog. 80.

Title reported good by deputy remembrancer in creditors' suit, purchaser not bound to take it if only primâ facie title. Eyton v. Dicken, 4 Price, 303.

b. Exceptions to.

General Rule.]—Where a party objects to a master's report as to title, his proper course is to file exceptions, and set them down for hearing in the cause list. Harwood v. Bland, Fl. & K. 540.

A plaintiff cannot, after proceeding before the master on a reference as to title, rely on previous acts of the purchaser as binding him to his purchase, notwithstanding a report of bad title. Ib.

—— Costs.]—Where the master reported in favour of the title, but the court, on an exception by the purchaser, deemed the title doubtful, an order was made dismissing the bill without costs. Willcox v. Bellaers, Turn. & R. 491. S. P., Robinson v. Milner, 1 Hare, 578, n.

Reviewing Report.]—If, upon a question of title, the master is satisfied with the evidence before him, but, upon an exception to the report, the court thinks the evidence not sufficient, the court will refer it back to the master to review his report. Andrew v. Andrew, 3 Sim. 390; 30 R. R. 176. S. P., Egerton v. Jones, 3 Sim. 392; 1 Russ. & M. 694.

After exceptions allowed to report of good title in a suit for specific performance, the practice is, not to discharge the purchaser, but, at the request of the plaintiff, to refer it back to the master to review his report, and to inquire whether a good title can be made to the lands. Stewart v. Conyngham (Marquis), 1 Ir. Ch. R. 534.

Removing Objections.]—Where the report is in favour of the title, the court, on allowing exceptions to it, will give the vendor a reasonable time within which to remove the objection. Portman v. Mill, 1 Russ. & M. 696; 9 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 193.

And see Clay v. Rufford, supra, col. 1446.

New Abstract.]—If exceptions taken to report of good title are overruled, other objections cannot be made; but if allowed, and new abstract be delivered, other objections may be brought in. Brooke v. ——, 4 Madd. 212; 20 R. R. 293.

New Objections.]—The chief clerk found the title good:—Held, on summons to vary the certificate, that the purchaser could not then raise a valid objection waived before suit. Upperton v. Nicholson, 39 L. J., Ch. 758; L. R. 10 Eq. 228; 23 L. T. 343.

If a vendor wishes to prevent a purchaser raising objections in chambers on the reference for title on the ground that they have been waived before suit, he must guard himself by insisting at the hearing on a special decree based on such waiver. Ib.

If the common decree for specific performance and for inquiry as to title are made, and no special directions, the purchaser may under it raise objections which he had abandoned before suit. Curling v. Austin, 2 Dr. & Sm. 129; 10 W. R. 682.

The court will not add any special inquiry on the subject to the decree, or direct the chief clerk to state special circumstances. Ib.

Exceptions how raised.]—Purchaser dissatisfied with report of title of premises sold under decree, must move for leave to file exceptions thereto; otherwise, the motion to confirm may be made absolute in the first instance, but on moving, if prepared, he may show exceptions instanter. Eyton v. Dicken, 4 Price, 303.

—— Referring to Chambers.]—Objections to chief clerk's finding as to title should be made and at once referred to the judge in chambers before certificate made, as the cheapest mode of deciding the question. Parr v. Lovegrove, 4 Drew. 170; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 600; 6 W. R. 201, 709.

New practice as to the consideration of the vendor's title in suits for specific performance. Pegg v. Wisden, 16 Beav. 239; 16 Jur. 105; 1 W. R. 43.

In a suit for specific performance, plaintiff directed to bring in objections to defendant's title before judge in chambers within one week, and vendor could then either remove them or argue them in open court. Ib.

Reversion in Fee not Disposed of.]—Exception to report in favour of title on ground that reversion in fee might have been disposed of, so as not to have descended to heir from whom the title was derived, overruled. Sperling v. Trevor, 7 Ves. 497.

As to Party to Suit.]—Bill by devisees in trust to sell, objection that the heir of the devisor is not a party to the suit, is not matter of exception to the report in favour of the title. Wakeman v. Rutland (Duke), 3 Ves. 234.

Non-production of Lessor's Title.]—Exceptions to master's report in favour of title of vendor of bishop's lease, on ground of non-production of bishop's title, overruled. Fane v. Spencer, 2 Madd. 438. S. P., Fildes v. Hooker, 2 Mer. 424.

Statement of Facts Disallowed.]—On a reference as to title, the master by his report stated that he had looked into certain documents and states of facts, and that no title had been made. The counsel who were before the master stated that the master had disallowed the state of facts. Exceptions to the report allowed. Wilkinson v. Hartley, 14 Jur. 187.

Ex parte Decision.]—Where the master in a proceeding before him to consider the suit decided against the vendors without hearing them:—Held, that the vendors were not bound by such ex parte decision, but that there ought to be a reference as to the title to the master. Barrow v. Budd, 4 Jur. 41.

When Irregular—Exception to Conveyance.]—Sale by trustees to whom mortgagee had assigned:—Held, on exceptions to title, because scheduled creditors were not parties, that the trustees could make a good conveyance, and that the exceptions ought not to have been made to title but to the conveyance. Binks v. Rokeby (Lord), 2 Madd. 227.

Devise to W. for life, with remainder to such of her children as should be living at her death, in equal shares. On sale in a creditor's suit three of the children being out of the jurisdiction, the highest bidder excepted to the master's report of good title, on the ground that the absent children were not bound and would not join in the conveyance:—Held, that the exceptions were irregular being exceptions not to title, but to conveyance, but that the exceptant would not be compelled to complete as the objection for want of parties was fatal. Oldham v. Wilkins, 1 Ir. Eq. R. 59.

—— Vendor taking Objection.]—A vendor took an exception, which contested the validity of his own title:—Held, that it was irregular. Bradley v. Munton, 15 Beav. 460.

—— Compromise—Infant.]—Where a compromise was entered into affecting the interest of an infant, and in pursuance thereof a report and decree were made and the property sold:—Held, allowing exceptions to the master's report of good title, that the report and decree, being founded on a consent which the court had no jurisdiction to take, were erroneous, and the title under it was bad. Weir v. Chamley, 1 Ir. Ch. R. 295.

Pending an appeal from that decision, a deed of appointment was executed. On referring back the report to the master, he found that by this deed a good title could be made, but that the appointment was not bonâ fide and was void:—Held, that the title was too doubtful to be forced on a purchaser, and the exceptions to the master's further report of good title were also allowed. Ib.

—— Sale before Report.]—Decree directed the master to inquire and state what estates passed by the will, and that all the estates which the master should find to have passed should be sold with his approbation. The master having ascertained what estates passed, proceeded to sell them. The purchaser objected because the master had not made any report in pursuance of the first direction in the decree, but the objection was overruled. Dykes v. Taylor, 16 Sim. 563.

Waiving Objections.]—Where a purchaser moved for a reference to chambers, to inquire whether the vendor could make a good title, and that the reference should be without prejudice to any question in the cause:—Held, that the purchaser had waived a defence that the vendor had not made a good title in time. Reed v. Don Pedro North Del Rey Gold Mining Co., 9 Jur. (N.S.) 865. Affirmed, 3 De G. J. & S. 593; 2 N. R. 473; 32 L. J., Ch. 773; 9 L. T. 132; 11 W. R. 935.

—— Costs.]—An estate, described as a freehold estate for three lives, with covenant for perpetual renewal, was sold under a decree. It was doubtful whether there was a covenant for perpetual renewal, but on appeal from the master's report that the title was not such as the purchaser could be compelled to take, the purchaser agreed to accept the title, being allowed his costs. Sheppard v. Doolan, 3 Dr. & War. 1; 5 Ir. Eq. R. 6.

Objection Concluded by Decree for Specific Performance.]—On a sale by a trustee, he stipulated that his receipt should be an effectual and conclusive discharge, and that the purchaser should not require the concurrence of the cestui que trust. A decree was made for specific performance and reference as to title. The master found in favour of the trustee; and upon exceptions the purchaser contended that the rule as to the concurrence of the cestuis que trustent being one for their protection, it was a breach of trust to stipulate that they should not concur; but the court held the point concluded by the decree. Wilkinson v. Hartley, 15 Beav. 183. And see infra, col. 1453.

7. Doubtful or Defective Title.

a. In General.

Doubtful Title.]—Specific performance will not be decreed where title is doubtful. Collard v. Sampson, 1 Eq. R. 262. S. P., Cooper v. Denne, 4 Bro. C. C. 80; 1 Ves. J. 565; Price v. Strange, 6 Madd. 159; 22 R. R. 266; Roake v. Kidd, 5 Ves. 647; Hartley v. Pehall, Peake, 178; 3 R. R. 668; Wilde v. Fort, 4 Taunt. 334; 13 R. R. 616.

The court will not compel a purchaser to take a title depending upon matter of fact, if the fact does not admit of satisfactory proof, or is not well proved. Smith v. Death, 5 Madd. 371; 21 R. R. 314.

Purchaser is not to be compelled to take a doubtful title, depending on the decision of certain legal questions. Sloper v. Fish, 2 V. & B. 145.

Where the ability of the vendor to make a good title to a portion of the premises sold depends upon a doubtful question of fact or of law, the title will not be deemed a good or sufficient title as between vendor and purchaser. Simmons v. Heseltine, 5 C. B. (N.S.) 554; 28 L. J., C. P. 129; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 270; 7 W. R. 133.

Purchaser not compelled to take a doubtful title even where the defect of title appeared on the abstract delivered before he filed his bill. Stapylton v. Scott, 16 Ves. 272; 10 R. R. 179.

A purchaser is not bound to take a doubtful title. Therefore, where the vendors derived title under an assignment made by a party for the benefit of his creditors, in itself an act of bankruptcy:—Held, that they could not compel the purchaser to accept the title, without proof that there was no creditor in a situation to sue out a commission against the assignor. Pott v. Turner, 4 M. & P. 551; 6 Bing. 702; 8 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 282.

Marketable Title.]—Purchaser must get such a title as he can force down upon a repurchaser from him. Magennis v. Fallon, 2 Moll. 578.

Equity does not compel a purchaser to take such a title as a willing purchaser might be satisfied with. Knatchbull v. Grueber, 3 Mer. 140; 17 R. R. 35.

—— Opinion of Court as to Title.]—On a vendor's bill for specific performance, the opinion of the court was much in favour of the title; but the court, being unable to found that opinion upon any general rule of law, or upon reason so conclusive as to satisfy the court that the purchaser taking the title might not be exposed to substantial litigation, refused to decree a specific performance. Pyrke v. Waddingham, 10 Hare, 1.

The rule rests upon the principle that every purchaser is entitled to require a marketable title. Ib.

It is the duty of the court, on questions of title depending on the possibility of future rights arising, to consider the course which would be taken if the rights had actually arisen, and were in course of litigation. Ib.

A marketable title is a title which at all times and under all circumstances may be forced upon an unwilling purchaser. Ib.

The bare possibility that another judge might think a title open to question is not a sufficient reason for refusing to compel a purchaser to complete, where the court itself entertains a strong opinion in favour of the title; but where there is an actual adverse decision, the court, though thinking the question free from doubt, will not compel a purchaser to take the title. Mullings v. Trinder, 39 L. J., Ch. 833; L. R. 10 Eq. 449; 23 L. T. 580; 18 W. R. 1186.

The principles laid down in Pyrke v. Waddingham (supra) approved of; but the decision disapproved of, and not followed under precisely similar circumstances. Ib.

To force a title on a purchaser, the opinion of the court must be so clear that it does not apprehend that another judge would form a different opinion. Rogers v. Waterhouse, 4 Drew. 329; 6 W. R. 823.

Though the court may entertain a strong opinion in favour of the title of a party, if it were a contest between him and another claiming title, that is not sufficient in a suit for specific performance. Ib.

The court will not enforce specific performance of a contract for sale against a purchaser, where a question of title has to be determined, upon which the court is not clearly in favour of the vendor. Burnell v. Firth, 15 W. R. 546.

In compelling a purchaser to take a title, the court formerly acted upon its own opinion; but now it will not compel him to take it if the point is doubtful. Id. 569.

Where, on a reference as to title the master reports in favour of the title, but the court holds it to be so doubtful that the purchaser should not be compelled to take it, the bill may be dismissed, without allowing the exceptions. Robinson v. Milner, 1 Hare, 578, n.

Where presumption in favour of title is so strong that a judge would feel himself bound to give a clear direction to a jury, the purchaser would be concluded thereby; but if the presumption would be left for a jury to determine, he would not be bound to take it. Emery v. Grocock, 6 Madd. 57; 22 R. R. 236.

Decision of Court.]—Observations on the duty of the court to decide doubtful questions of title as between vendor and purchaser. Osborne v. Rowlett, 49 L. J., Ch. 310; 13 Ch. D. 774; 42 L. T. 650; 28 W. R. 365.

It is the duty of the court to decide doubtful questions of title, and when so decided they can no longer be considered as doubtful, so as to entitle purchasers to resist specific performance. Bell v. Holthy, 42 L. J., Ch. 266; L. R. 15 Eq. 178; 28 L. T. 9; 21 W. R. 321.

Court of Appeal.]—Where the title to an estate is doubtful, and has been held bad by a judge of the court, the court of appeal will not force it on a purchaser. Sykes v. Sheard, 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1262; 9 L. T. 430; 12 W. R. 117.

In a suit for specific performance, a purchaser will be forced to take a title which appears to the court of appeal to be good, although the judge of the court below was of a different opinion. Beioley v. Carter, L. R. 4 Ch. 230; 17 W. R. 300.

Where a bill for specific performance by a vendor has been dismissed in the court below upon a question of title, it requires a very strong case for the court of appeal to force the title upon the purchaser. Collier v. M'Bean, 35 L. J., Ch. 144; L. R. 1 Ch. 81; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 1; 13 L. T. 484; 14 W. R. 156.

When a question of title involves a question of general law applicable to all similar cases, the court of appeal is bound to say one way or another what the law is. Alexander v. Mills, 40 L. J., Ch. 73; L. R. 6 Ch. 124; 24 L. T. 206; 19 W. R. 310.

Primâ facie Title.]—Title reported good by deputy remembrancer in creditors' suit: purchaser not compellable to accept it, if only a primâ facie title. Eyton v. Dicken, 4 Price, 303.

It is difficult to say what ground of defect of title is sufficient to induce the court to refuse a decree for specific performance. Bull v. Hutchens, 32 Beav. 615; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 954; 8 L. T. 716; 11 W. R. 866.

Title at Common Law.]—In a court of law every title which is not bad is marketable. Romilly v. James, 6 Taunt. 263; 1 Marshall, 592.

A court of law will adjudge a title to be either good or bad, having no middle term for it. Maberley v. Robins, 5 Taunt. 625; 1 Marshall, 258.

In an action to recover back the deposit on a purchase, upon the vendor's failure to make a good title, the courts of law will collaterally inquire whether the title is good in equity; for a contract to make a good title means a title good both at law and in equity. Ib.

In an action to recover a deposit on the ground of a defect of title, the party bringing the action must prove the title bad; and it will not be sufficient to show that the title has been deemed insufficient by conveyancers who have been employed to advise upon it. Camfield v. Gilbert, 4 Esp. 221. S. P., Boyman v. Gutch, 7 Bing. 379; 5 M. & P. 222; 9 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 63.

Previous Decision on.]—Specific performance decreed with costs, in a case where the defendant, objecting to title, had been served with notice of a prior decision in a different cause, in favour of the same title, against a similar objection. Biscoe v. Wilks, 3 Mer. 456.

Validity depending on bona fides.]—Where the validity of a deed depends upon the bona fides of the transaction, to be collected from extrinsic circumstances, a court of equity will not compel a purchaser to accept a title under the deed, because neither the purchaser nor the court had adequate means of ascertaining the circumstances. Hartley v. Smith, Buck, 368.

Defective Title.]—Vendor filed a bill for specific performance, but, not being able to make a good title, his bill was dismissed, and he was ordered to return the deposit with interest. Anson (Lord) v. Hodges, 5 Sim. 227.

Acceptance or nonacceptance of title is the criterion of right of specific performance of contracts in equity. Wyrill v. Exeter (Bishop), 1 Price, 296; 16 R. R. 727.

—— Delay.]—Even after great delay and acquiescence, the court will not compel a purchaser to complete, if the title appears to be manifestly bad. Blachford v. Kirkpatrick, 6 Beav. 232; 12 L. J., Ch. 108.

—— Acceptance by Directors.]—Though an individual vendee may consent to accept a defective title, it is doubtful whether the directors of a railway company, acting on behalf of the company, can do so. Semble, Eastern Counties Ry. v. Hawkes, 5 H. L. Cas. 331; 24 L. J., Ch. 601; 3 W. R. 609. And see Devenish v. Brown, 26 L. J., Ch. 23; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 1043; 4 W. R. 783.

Strengthening Defective Title.]—If a purchaser on the completion of his purchase acquires a defective title, that defective title cannot afterwards be strengthened either by his own fraud or the fraud of any other person. Heath v. Crealock, 44 L. J., Ch. 157; L. R. 10 Ch. 22; 31 L. T. 650; 23 W. R. 95.

b. Objections.

And see cases supra, col. 1447.

What are.]—Objections to title mean such objections as can only be properly the subject of adjudication upon the investigation of the title, as where the dispute is as to the application of the conditions of sale, the propriety or validity of the conditions not being questioned. Wood v. Machu, 5 Hare, 158; 16 L. J., Ch. 21.

Mere suspicion, upon opinions in the abstract, &c., will not support an objection by a purchaser. M'Queen v. Farquhar, 11 Ves. 467; 8 R. R. 212.

Uncertain Stipulation.]—As between a vendor and purchaser, a purchaser cannot object to the vendor's title on the ground that he is under a stipulation to do an act, the nature of which is so uncertain that he could not, on bill filed, be compelled to do as stipulated. Taylor v. Gilbertson, 2 Drew. 391.

Vendor agreeing to Remove Objection.]—A vendor, after recognising an objection to the title, and undertaking to remove it, is, by his misconduct, precluded from insisting that the objection is untenable. Ashton v. Wood, 3 Sm. & G. 436; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 1164.

A party who has covenanted to pay off an incumbrance on premises subject to a trust for sale, will not be allowed to raise an objection to the sale of the property on the grouud of the existence of that incumbrance. Roberts v. Bozon, 3 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 113.

Purchase advised by Solicitor—Sale to same Solicitor.]—A. purchased on the advice of his solicitor D. A. died, and his devisee sold the property to D. On a bill for specific performance by the vendor:—Held, that D. could not, on purchasing the property himself, set up an objection which he did not think important when advising his principal. Beevor v. Simpson, Tam. 69; 31 R. R. 67.

Liability to Maintain Fences.]—Lands were sold as fee-simple, but the owner was bound to raise and maintain the fences, and keep the drains and watercourses clear, &c.:—Held, that the purchaser could not be compelled to accept the title. Larkin v. Rosse (Lord), 10 Ir. Eq. R. 70.

Right to Pre-emption.]—A railway company having under their act the usual power to sell surplus lands, contracted to sell and afterwards offered them to the owners of the adjoining land. On this ground the purchaser objected to complete:—Held, that the objection was a question of conveyance and not of title, and that the purchaser must complete the contract. London & Greenwich Ry. v. Goodchild, 3 Railw. Cas. 507; 13 L. J., Ch. 224; 8 Jur. 455.

It is no defence to a suit for specific performance against trustees of a turnpike road, that the land they have contracted to sell is liable to pre-emption by the owner of the adjoining land under the General Turnpike Act, 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, s. 39, the purchaser being content to take such estate as the trustees could convey. Barrett v. Ring, 2 Sm. & G. 43.

Parties — Creditors.] — Mortgage debt and premises were assigned by mortgagee to trustees, with all the same powers as mortgagee had:—Held, on exceptions to title, because scheduled creditors were not parties to the bill, that the trustees could make a good conveyance, and that the exceptions ought not to have been made to title, but to the conveyance. Binks v. Rokely (Lord), 2 Madd. 227. And see Oldham v. Wilkins, supra, col. 1448.

Illegitimacy.]—Objection by a purchaser upon illegitimacy, upon the circumstances that the register of marriage could not be found, an inaccurate statement in a deed, and some particularity of description of a child in a will. Objection overruled upon a release reciting generally that objections were taken which bound the party to inquire into the nature of the objections. Braybroke (Lord) v. Inskip, 8 Ves. 417; 7 R. R. 106.

Conversion—Deed not Executed.]—It seems to be no objection to a title that a person, who sixty years back was the survivor of three trustees for sale, did not execute a conveyance purporting to be made by him and the parties beneficially interested, possession having gone under that conveyance, and the estate in equity being converted into personalty. Townsend v. Champernown, 1 Y. & J. 538; 30 R. R. 825.

Apportionment of Rent — Concurrence of Lessee.]—Case sent to law, whether purchaser of lot 2 would, by a conveyance of vendor alone, without the concurrence of the lessee, acquire the same rights and remedies against lessee, in respect of the apportioned rent of 40*l.* therein to be reserved to him, as he would acquire in case no rent were mentioned in such conveyance from a vendor, by a jury, for that part of the reversion comprised in lot 2. Bliss v. Collins, 4 Madd. 229.

Partnership Debt — Account.] — A. conveys lands on trust to sell, if the unsatisfied debt of a partnership should at a given time exceed 40,000*l.*; the trustees sell and convey by a deed which recites that the debts of the partnership exceeded the specific amount, and that A. had died intestate as to his real estate, and the heir-at-law of A. joins in that deed, and enters into a covenant for the title of the trustees, a covenant against all acts done by him or his father, and a covenant for further assurance. It afterwards appears to be uncertain whether A. had not devised his real estate :—Held, that the purchaser is not entitled to have an account taken of the debts in order to establish the fact of their having exceeded the specified amount. Hallet v. Middleton, 1 Russ. 243.

Counterpart of Lease.]—Sale of reversion subject to a lease with a covenant on the part of the tenant to repair, the counterpart not being in the hands of the vendors, the court thought that such counterpart ought to be deposited for the benefit of all parties before it could compel the purchaser to take. Shore v. Collett, G. Cooper, 234.

Infant Customary Heir.]—A title to land in gavelkind depending on charters of feoffment by an infant customary heir, executed at the age of fifteen, will not be forced on a purchaser. Maskell and Goldfinch's Contract, In re, supra, col. 1104.

Restrictive Covenant.]—Vendor contracted to deduce a good title in fee-simple. A covenant not to use the property for the purpose of gasworks or a public-house :—Held, a fatal objection to the title. Higgins and Hitchman's Contract, In re, 51 L. J., Ch. 772 ; 21 Ch. D. 95 ; 30 W. R. 700.

Purchaser discharged from his agreement upon a doubt whether the land was not bound by a covenant of which he had not notice. Bristow v. Wood, 1 Coll. C. C. 480 ; 14 L. J., Ch. 50 ; 9 Jur. 99. And see cases supra, col. 1219.

—— Condition Limiting Title—Objection to Anterior Title.]—Conditions of sale of freehold property provided that the title should commence with a mortgage dated the 29th of July, 1852, and that the purchaser should, within fourteen days after the delivery of the abstract, deliver all his objections and requisitions as to the title, and that, subject thereto, the title should be deemed to be accepted. An abstract of title, commencing with the mortgage of the 29th of July, 1852, was delivered to the purchaser. More than fourteen days afterwards he issued a summons under the Vendor and Purchaser Act, for a declaration that a good title had not been shown in accordance with the particulars and conditions of sale, and later on filed an affidavit in support of his summons, in which he raised as an objection to the title the existence in a deed of the 3rd of March, 1847, containing a restrictive covenant which applied to part of the property. The purchaser discovered this deed by inquiries made of a third party :—Held, that the purchaser having acquired notice of the restrictive covenant, would be bound by it ; that it formed a valid objection to the title ; that he was not too late in raising the objection ; and that he was entitled to be relieved from his contract. Cox and Neve, In re, [1891] 2 Ch. 109 ; 64 L. T. 733 ; 39 W. R. 412.

Copyholds — Surrender.]—A., the owner of copyhold property, mortgaged it, and covenanted to surrender to the lords of the manor, to the use of the defendant, to sell in the event of default being made in payment of the mortgage money. A. made no surrender, but died, after devising all his real property to trustees. Subsequently to his death, the lords of the manor, at the nomination of the defendant, granted the property to certain persons upon the trusts mentioned in the deed of mortgage. The defendant sold under a condition that he should deduce a good title to the premises for the lives by which they were held under the lord, but that no earlier or other title should be deduced :—Held, that the defendant showed no title in himself, as no surrender had been made to his use by A., and that the vendee was not precluded by the conditions from taking his objection to the title. Sellick v. Trevor, 11 M. & W. 722 ; 12 L. J., Ex. 401.

Non-payment of Purchase Money.]—Proviso on sale of leaseholds that B. should not assign over till the purchase money was paid, the premises having been taken in execution for a debt of B., who had not paid the purchase money, were sold by the sheriff to D., who agreed to complete on having a good title :—Held, that the non-payment of the purchase money by B. was a sufficient objection to the title. Elliott v. Edwards, 3 Bos. & P. 181.

Concurrence of Remaindermen—Sale in Lifetime of Tenant for Life.]—Conditions of sale, after stating that the estate was limited to C. for life, with remainder to trustees in trust to sell for the benefit of her children, proceeded as follows : "And there being three such children only, all of whom have attained the age of twenty-one, such children or their trustees shall, if required, join in the conveyance to the purchaser, but no objection to the title of the vendors shall be made on account of the sale taking place during the life of C." Two of the children were married women, whose shares were settled with trusts for their infant children :—Held, that neither the children of C. nor the trustees could join in a conveyance, and therefore a purchaser was entitled to recover his deposit. Mosley v. Hyde, 17 Q. B. 183 ; 20 L. J., Q. B. 539 ; 15 Jur. 899.

Trust for Sale.]—Specific performance resisted, on the ground that antecedently to the contract a trust for sale had been created in the purchaser, an incumbrancer in possession. Chambers v. Walters, Coop. t. Brough. 91.

Ambiguous Document.]—A court of equity will not, at the end of half a century, fix upon a purchaser a difficult construction of an ambiguous instrument, which it might have done as between the original parties in case there had been no sale. Thompson v. Simpson, 1 Dr. & War. 259.

Settlement—Agreement Contrary to.]—Equity will not decree a specific performance of agreement which is contrary to the powers in a settlement. Stratford v. Aldborough, 1 Ridgw. 281.

—— Sale by Tenant for Life.]—Specific performance refused of agreement to sell in fee, by one who supposed himself absolute owner, being only tenant for life, under a settlement, with proviso empowering him to purchase an estate in fee-simple in possession, of equal or better value, and to settle same to him in lieu of settled estate, which was then to be his own. Howell v. George, 1 Madd. 1 ; 15 R. R. 203.

A tenant for life with an ultimate reversion to himself in fee, enters into an agreement as absolute owner to sell part of the settled land. This agreement the trustees of the settlement, who had a power to sell by the direction of the tenant for life, refused to adopt. The court refused a decree against the tenant for life for such performance as was in his power, as it would be prejudicial to the other parties interested in the settlement. Thomas v. Dering, 1 Keen, 729; 6 L. J., Ch. 267; 1 Jur. 427.

—— Special Occupant.]—Testator devised all his real estate whatsoever, "except what is hereinafter mentioned and devised," in strict settlement, and gave annuities, which he charged upon a rectory held by him under a lease for lives; he gave part of his personal estate specifically, and directed the residue to be laid out in land, to be settled to the same uses as his real estate; the heir contracted to sell the lease of the rectory, and, upon a case, the certificate was, that the lease did not pass by the will, but devolved on the heir as special occupant; but the lord chancellor considered that title too doubtful to be forced on a purchaser; an act of parliament was therefore obtained. Sheffield v. Mulgrave (Lord), 2 Ves. J. 525.

—— Compromise by Infants—Malâ fide Appointment.]—In an action the master found, upon the consent of the trustee of minors, that certain legacies and rent-charges were in equal priority, and that the finding was in the nature of a compromise, and beneficial to the minor. The report was confirmed by a final decree, and the lands were decreed to be sold:—Held, allowing exceptions to the master's report of good title, that the report and decree, being founded on a consent which the court had no jurisdiction to take, were erroneous, and the title under it was bad. Weir v. Chamley, 1 Ir. Ch. R 295.

Pending an appeal from the above decision, which was affirmed, a deed was executed appointing the rent-charge, and the master on review found that a good title could be made by reason of said deed; semble, that the appointment, having been made on an emergency, and not bonâ fide for the end designed by the donor of the power, was void:—Held, that the title was too doubtful to be forced on a purchaser, and the exceptions to the master's further report of good title were also allowed. Ib.

Contingent Remainders Destroyed.]—Specific performance decreed, though vendor's title was founded on destruction of contingent remainders. Hasker v. Sutton, 2 Sim. & S. 513. And see Rake v. Kidd, 5 Ves. 647.

Tenant in Tail—Recovery.]—Title depending on recovery suffered by tenant in tail, the reversion of which had vested in the crown by attainder of reversion:—Held, not such a title as purchaser is bound to accept. Blosse v. Clanmorris, 3 Bligh, 62.

Devise to trustees of a freehold for a term of years, to pay debts and legacies, and, after testator's decease, to his wife for life; then "to T. C., son of the late R. C., all that my estate where I now live, and all that other estate and premises thereto belonging, situate, &c., called or known by the name of W. estate, now in the holding of T., for his own use during his natural life, with remainder to the first son of the body of the said T. C. lawfully begotten, severally and successively in tail male of the name of C. And for want of such lawful issue of that name, either by my said grandson T. C., or my son J. C., then I give and devise the said estate where I now live, and the W. estate, amongst my daughters and their children, share and share alike, to hold unto them, his, her, or their heirs for ever as tenants in common, and not as joint tenants." T. C. suffered a recovery. He had no child:—Held, that the devisee could make a good title in fee. The question of title or no title being matter of opinion for the court, the purchaser is bound thereby, and cannot object to complete the purchase on the ground of the difficulty of the question on which the title depends. Rushton v. Craven, 12 Price, 599.

—— Copyholds.]—Devise of copyhold estates, the legal estate being outstanding, "to my son R., to be entailed upon his male heirs, and, failing such, to pass to his next brother, and so on from brother to brother, allowing 2,500*l.* to be raised upon the estates, for female children each"; whether a trust executed or executory; and, if the latter, whether an estate tail in R., quære. The point too doubtful to compel a purchaser to take the title. Jervoise v. Northumberland, 1 J. & W. 559; 21 R. R. 229.

Residence Clause.]—Devise to A. for life, remainder to trustees to preserve contingent remainders, remainder to sons of A. in tail, remainder over, with a proviso that the person entitled should live and reside on the estate; and for default thereof all the devised estates to go over to the person next in succession:—Held, in a suit by parties making title under a recovery suffered by A. and his eldest son, for specific performance, that it was too uncertain what the testator meant by "live and reside" for the court to determine that there had been a forfeiture, and a specific performance decreed. Fillingham v. Bromley, Turn. & R. 530; 24 R. R. 136.

Statute of Limitations.]—In 1763 B., C. and D. took possession of lands, to one-fourth of which A. was also entitled under marriage articles. In 1783 they levied a fine, and conveyed to a purchaser for value, and covenanted that they were seised in fee. There were several subsequent conveyances for value. In 1847 the lands were contracted to be sold:—Held, that the legal title of A. and her heirs to one-fourth of the lands was barred by the statute of limitations, as a court of law would not notice the executory trusts of the articles, and the several conveyances operated as disseisins. Semble, the equitable title of the heir of A., on failure of issue of B., C. and D., was also barred; but:—Held, that as a fine created no discontinuance in equity, the title was too doubtful to be forced on the purchaser. A conveyance of all her estate, &c., was obtained from the devisee of the heir-at-law of A., and was held to put an end to the objection. Stewart v. Conyngham (Marquis), 1 Ir. Ch. R. 534.

Secret Purchaser—Glebe Land.]—A purchaser of land, formerly glebe, sold for redemption of land tax, not bound to complete when it appears that, upon the prior sale, the rector was the purchaser in the name of his curate. Grover v. Hugell, 3 Russ. 428; 27 R. R. 103.

Lease—Covenants.]—Lessee subject to covenants cannot compel specific performance of agreement to purchase, though he offers to indemnify purchaser against performance of covenants. Fildes v. Hooker, 3 Madd. 193; 18 R. R. 214.

—— Under-lease beyond Term.]—L., having a term of ninety-nine years, with a covenant that he may within twenty years purchase the fee, demised to F. for ninety-nine years and a half, at a ground rent, and then acquired the fee. The ground rent was put up for sale as "a freehold ground rent issuing out of lands on lease, which will expire in December, 1922," being the expiration of the ninety-nine years and a half term:—Held, that the title was too doubtful. Langford v. Selmes, 3 K. & J. 220; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 859.

Under such a description the purchaser has a right to expect a power of entry and distress in case of non-payment. Ib.

—— Covenant for Renewal.]—D., being entitled to an undivided moiety of a lease for lives, containing a covenant for perpetual renewal, devised her interest to A.; the day after a renewal was granted by D. to the defendant, who was entitled to the other moiety, A. having contracted with the defendant to sell his (A.'s) moiety:—Held, on a bill by A. for specific performance, that A.'s was such a title as the court would compel a purchaser to take. Poole v. Coates, 2 Dr. & War. 493; 1 Con. & L. 531; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 497.

—— By Administrator durante absentiâ.]—Although a sale of leaseholds by an administrator durante absentiâ the person entitled to administration will be good if that person is living at the time of the conveyance, it is not such a title as the court will force upon a purchaser. Webb v. Kirby, 7 De G. M. & G. 376; 26 L. J., Ch. 145; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 73; 5 W. R. 189.

—— Judgment in Ejectment — Reasonable Blot.]—Lease to H. B., who deposited it with T. H. as security for an advance. The freeholder conveyed the land to J. S. in fee simple subject to the lease. J. S. recovered in an action for ejectment against H. B., who disappeared, and then J. S. conveyed to W. H. in fee simple, when the production of the judgment in ejectment was considered satisfactory as regarded the deposited lease. W. H. agreed to sell the land to H. in fee simple free from incumbrances. H. required that the lease to H. B. should be surrendered at W. H.'s expense, or at all events given up before completion. W. H. offered to indemnify H. against any claim which might be made under the lease:—Held, that this was not a reasonable blot on the title to which the court ought to give effect, and the vendor having offered to give an indemnity, the purchaser's objection must be declared sufficiently answered. Heaysman's and Tweedy's Contract, In re, 69 L. T. 89—C. A.

Title by Adverse Possession.]—After objections overruled but before the certificate had been signed, the purchaser discovered on a wall of the property a stone stating the title to be in the East India Company:—Held, that the vendor had not a good title when the bill was filed, for that there was no ground for holding a title to have been gained by possession adversely to the East India Company. Phillipson v. Gibbon, 40 L. J., Ch. 406; L. R. 6 Ch. 428; 24 L. T. 602; 19 W. R. 661.

Rule in Shelley's Case.]—Real estate was settled to the use of a trustee, his heirs and assigns, for a married women for life to her separate use, and after the determination of that estate to stand seised to such uses and upon such trusts as she should by will appoint, and in default of appointment to the use of the heirs and assigns of the married woman:—Held, that the legal fee was vested in the trustee; that all the subsequent limitations were merely equitable, and that, therefore, under the rule in Shelley's case (1 Rep. 93), the wife took an equitable estate in fee, and could, with the concurrence of the trustee after her husband's death, make a good title in fee to the property, and one which the court would force on an unwilling purchaser. Cooper v. Kynoch, 41 L. J., Ch. 296; L. R. 7 Ch. 398; 25 L. T. 566; 20 W. R. 503.

Where the question was whether A. B. took the legal or only an equitable interest for life in the property, so as to bring the title within the rule in Shelley's case (1 Rep. 93), the lord chancellor would not compel the defendant to accept the title. Playford v. Hoare, 3 Y. & J. 175.

Will.]—A purchaser not compelled to take a title depending upon the words of a will which were too doubtful to be settled without litigation. Sharp v. Alcock, 4 Russ. 374.

—— Appointment.]—Devise of stock in trust for A. for life, and after her death as to a moiety to her children then living, as to the other moiety between testator's sons; if all the sons predeceased A. then to transfer the whole stock to A. or as she should appoint. A. was alive (married), and there were four sons of testator alive:—Held, that the title was so doubtful as to the right of appointment in A. and when to be exercised, that the purchaser was not bound. Hadley v. Robins, 14 L. T. 100; 14 W. R. 387.

—— Trust to Sell.]—Devise to trustees and the survivor of them, and the heirs and assigns of such survivor, upon trust to sell, the surviving trustee having devised the trust estate to persons who sold. Semble, that the legal estate trust to sell passed by the devise, but the title was too doubtful to be forced on a purchaser. Ashton v. Wood, 3 Sm. & G. 436; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 1164. And see cases supra, col. 1101.

—— Codicil.]—Testator by his will, in his own handwriting, devised an estate to Ann Aspinall and her heirs, if she should be then living; but, if not, then to her issue and their heirs. He afterwards made a codicil: "This is a codicil to the last will and testament of me, S., and which will I some time since made in my own handwriting, and thereby devised to John Aspinall as therein mentioned." At the date of the codicil, Ann Aspinall had a son named John. An objection as to the presumption of a later will was overruled, as the will contained a gift which might take effect in favour of John Aspinall. Howarth v. Smith, 6 Sim. 161.

—— Separate Use.]—A title to real estate, accruing under a devise to trustees for an unmarried woman for her life, for her separate use, and on her death to convey it to her husband, is not too doubtful to be forced on an unwilling

An estate was devised to a feme covert for her separate use. She entered into a contract for sale and died, having devised the estate to her husband. The court declined to compel a specific performance in the absence of the heir. Harris v. Mott, 14 Beav. 169; 15 Jur. 978.

Mistake as to Title.]—J., under the belief that he had the fee-simple in an estate, subject to a life interest in his mother, conveyed all his interest to trustees for the benefit of his creditors; the conveyance contained covenants for title, and for further assurance. The mother had the fee-simple, which, upon her death, descended to J. as heir-at-law:—Held, that J. was, in equity, bound to complete the contract. Smith v. Baker, 1 Y. & C. C. C. 223.

A., supposing he has a right, enters into an agreement to sell to B., who brings a bill for specific execution against A., and also against C., who appears to be the true owner, and so insists in his answer. This bill dismissed, as well against A. as C., and the decree of dismission was affirmed. Cornwall v. Williams, Colles' P. C. 117.

Concurrence of Necessary Party.]—Quære, whether the court, in the absence of express stipulation, or of conduct waiving the objection, will decree specific performance of a contract, where the execution by a necessary party can only be obtained under a power of attorney. Beaufort (Duke) v. Glynn, 3 Sm. & G. 213.

Bill by purchaser for specific performance ordered to be dismissed without costs, a necessary party not choosing to concur in conveying. Lewis v. Loxham, 3 Mer. 429.

Where the purchaser died intestate before completion, and a good title could not be made owing to an outstanding lease:—Held, that the purchaser could not have been compelled to perform the contract, and that the heir was not entitled to have it completed for his benefit. Collier v. Jenkins, Younge, 295.

Voidable Agreement.]—Contract to purchase an agreement for a lease which was voidable at the will of a third party who was, however, willing to confirm on conditions:—Held, that the purchaser was entitled to repudiate the contract. Brewer v. Broadwood, 52 L. J., Ch. 136; 22 Ch. D. 105; 47 L. T. 508; 31 W. R. 115.

Power of Exchange.]—Vendor thinking he can deal with purchase money as he chooses, and it turns out he has only power of exchange, the court will not decree specific performance against him. Hood v. Oglander, 34 Beav. 513; 6 N. R. 57; 34 L. J., Ch. 528; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 498; 12 L. T. 626; 13 W. R. 705.

Partnership—Accounts.]—The vendor of a share in a partnership filed a bill against the purchaser, who had taken possession, praying that he might be declared to have accepted the title, and might be decreed to perform the contract specifically: the court was of opinion that the title had not been accepted, and as a good title was not shown, a specific performance could not be decreed:—Held, that upon a record so framed no accounts nor inquiries could be directed. Stevens v. Guppy, 3 Russ. 171; 6 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 164; 27 R. R. 59.

Bankruptcy — Subsequent Assignments — Priorities.]—A legatee of a reversionary interest which had been paid into court in an administration suit, presented a petition for liquidation in March, 1873, and a trustee was appointed. In July he assigned his interest in the legacy to J., who obtained a stop-order on the fund in court. In November, 1876, he assigned his interest to E., without notice of the liquidation, who also obtained a stop-order on the fund. Afterwards the trustee in liquidation obtained a stop-order. The plaintiffs purchased the interest of the trustee in liquidation and of J., and contracted to sell the legacy to the defendant. The defendant required E.'s mortgage to be abstracted as an incumbrance on the estate:—Held, that the question of the priority of E.'s incumbrance was too doubtful to justify the vendor in omitting it from the abstract. Bright's Settlement, In re (13 Ch. D. 413), considered. Palmer v. Locke, 51 L. J., Ch. 214; 18 Ch. D. 381; 45 L. T. 229; 30 W. R. 419—C. A.

Several Owners—Apportionment.]—Properties held partly by an absolute owner and partly by several sets of trustees under several trusts and for different persons were, by the vendors as a single body, agreed to be sold together in one lot for one undivided sum—which the absolute owner, and the trustees and their several sets of cestuis que trustent, afterwards apportioned by agreement amongst themselves, but not, as it appeared on any sufficient data—and with special conditions limiting the title, without, however, properly defining the portions of the properties affected by the limitations. The purchaser refused to complete the purchase, and the vendors filed a bill for specific performance of the contract:—Held, that the case was too doubtful to entitle them to relief. Rede v. Oakes, 4 De G. J. & S. 505; 34 L. J., Ch. 145; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 229; 11 L. T. 549; 13 W. R. 420.

Delivery up of Contract—Compensation.]—Under a bill to have a contract delivered up on the ground of defective title of defendant, the vendor, and for compensation, decree was made for delivering up the contract without prejudice to an action, instead of an inquiry before the master. Gwillim v. Stone, 14 Ves. 128.

Trustees unable to Transfer a Valid Licence.]—Devise of an inn to trustees for sale. After testator's death trustees took out a new licence in his name and then sold:—Held, that the trustees being unable to transfer a valid licence under which the business could be lawfully carried on, could not enforce the contract against the purchaser. Cowles v. Gale, 41 L. J., Ch. 14; L. R. 7 Ch. 12; 25 L. T. 524; 20 W. R. 70.

ii. Defective as to Part.

General Rule.]—Quære, how far the court will go in compelling a party to complete a purchase, when no title can be made to some part of the property. Poole v. Shergold, 1 Cox, 273; 2 Bro. C. C. 118; 1 R. R. 37.

Defect of title to a considerable part of the estate, though a good objection by the purchaser to a specific performance, is not by the vendor. Western v. Russell, 3 V. & B. 187; 13 R. R. 178.

Material Part.]—Specific performance refused of agreement to purchase, no good title being made to a small part which was essential to enjoyment of the rest. Knatchbull v. Grueber, 1 Madd. 153; 17 R. R. 35. Affirmed, 3 Mer. 124.

An estate was sold, some part of which, material to the enjoyment of the rest, was subject to a defect of title not disclosed by the abstract. The contract was rescinded with costs. Edwards v. M'Leay, 2 Swanst. 287; 14 R. R. 261. Affirming G. Cooper, 308. S. P., Peers v. Lambert, 7 Beav. 546; Stapylton v. Scott, 13 Ves. 425; 10 R. R. 179.

—— Pew.]—The particulars of sale described the property as a family residence, with a right to a pew in the middle aisle of the parish church. The title to the pew being defective:—Held, that it was not essential to the enjoyment of the property. Cooper v. ——, 2 Jur. 29.

—— Exchange for another Part.]—On sale according to a plan and description G. purchased from B. whose property was adjoining. No title could be made to a part which faced B.'s property, and which B considered essential. The vendors then agreed with the owners of this part to give it up on receiving another part of the property in exchange:—Held, that B. was entitled to the whole property, and not bound to accept this arrangement, and that he must therefore be discharged from his purchase. Arnold, In re, Arnold v. Arnold, 14 Ch. D. 270; 42 L. T. 705; 28 W. R. 635—C. A.

And see cases under PARTICULARS AND CONDITIONS, WHEN MISLEADING, supra, col. 1177.

As to One-seventh.]—A purchaser who had contracted for the entirety of an estate will not be compelled to take six undivided seventh parts of it. Dalby v. Pullen, 3 Sim. 29; 1 Russ. & M. 296; 8 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 74; 30 R. R. 123.

Purchaser under decree of two-sevenths of estate in one lot is not obliged to take one-seventh, to which only title can be made. Roffey v. Shallcross, 4 Madd. 227; 20 R. R. 293.

As to Moiety.]—When vendors having agreed to sell the entirety of property could make a title to one moiety only:—Held, that the purchaser was entitled to have such moiety conveyed to him on payment of one moiety of the purchase money. Bailey v. Piper, 43 L. J., Ch. 704; L. R. 18 Eq. 683; 31 L. T. 86; 22 W. R. 943.

Sale in Lots.]—A person who purchases two lots is not justified in refusing to perform his contract for the purchase of one lot, because a good title is not shown to the other lot. Lewin v. Guest, 1 Russ. 325; 25 R. R. 58.

—— Entire Contract.]—Where a party became the purchaser of several lots at an auction, it was an entire contract; and, if the seller failed in making a title to any one, the purchaser might refuse to take the others. Chambers v. Griffiths, 1 Esp. 150.

Held, that where a man purchases at an auction two lots which adjoin, and which would be more conveniently occupied together, he was not obliged to go on with the purchase of either, unless the seller could make a good title to both. Gibson v. Spurrier, Peake's Add. Cas. 49; 4 R. R. 887.

Different Estates.]—By a written agreement the plaintiff agreed to sell, upon the terms stated, the L. estate, and the defendant agreed to sell the H. estate; and it was not expressed that the two contracts were to be dependent on each other. The defendant was unable to make good title to the H. estate:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to a specific performance of the contract as to the L. estate. Croome v. Lediard, 2 Myl. & K. 251; 3 L. J., Ch. 98.

Railway Company—Apportionment.]—A railway company takes land under s. 85 of the Lands Clauses Act, and subsequently enters into an agreement with the owners for the purchase of the lands so taken. To a portion of the land the owners cannot make title by reason of an outstanding legal estate. Upon petition for so much of the purchase money as represented the portion to which the vendors could make a title:—Held, that they were entitled to have the apportioned part of the fund transferred. Although the defect of title was such that in ordinary cases the contract must have failed, the taking and occupation of the land by the company rendered it impossible to annul the contract. Perkes's Estate, In re, 7 Railw. Cas. 605; 2 W. R. 24.

Vendor Acquiring Title.]—If A. agrees to sell an estate, and it is afterwards discovered that a small portion of it is the property of another person, the court will not discharge the purchaser from his contract without giving A. an opportunity of acquiring a title to that portion. Chamberlain v. Lee, 10 Sim. 444.

Right to Compensation.]—See supra, col. 1332.

iii. Voluntary Deeds.

Purchaser with Notice.]—A purchaser must take a title, though depending on the invalidity of a voluntary conveyance, as against a purchaser for valuable consideration with notice. Butterfield v. Heath, 15 Beav. 408; 22 L. J., Ch. 270.

The fact that the title of a vendor (who is himself a purchaser for value) is derived through a voluntary deed, is not of itself sufficient to enable a purchaser from him to repudiate his contract. Noyes v. Paterson, 63 L. J., Ch. 748; [1894] 3 Ch. 267; 8 R. 323; 71 L. T. 228; 43 W. R. 377.

Tenant in Tail—Election.]—Devise in trust for M. and C. for their lives, for their separate use; and in case both M. and C. should die without leaving issue, then over implied estates tail to M. and C., with cross-remainders in tail. M. died unmarried, and then C., before marriage, conveyed her estate, with the concurrence of her intended husband, by lease and release, to trustees in trust for herself for life, and then for her children, &c. There was issue of the marriage:—Held, that the trustees took a base fee, and that the husband was not tenant by the curtesy. Held, also, that after C.'s death, her eldest son, having elected to take against the settlement, and barred the entail, could make a good title to a purchaser. Stanhouse v. Gaskell, 17 Jur. 157; 1 W. R. 77.

Insurance Policy.]—A. insured his life, and afterwards assigned the policy to B. for a nominal consideration. B.'s executors then sold and assigned the policy to D. for valuable consideration, and then D.'s executors sell it to E. :—Held, that they could make a good title to the policy. Ashley v. Ashley, 3 Sim. 149.

Voluntary Settlement.]—The court was of opinion that limitations in a marriage settlement to the brothers of the settlor and their issue were voluntary; but thought, under the circumstances, that a purchaser could not be compelled to take the title depending on the validity of those limitations. Johnson v. Legard, Turn. & R. 281; 18 R. R. 234.

The author of a voluntary settlement cannot file a bill for specific performance of a contract afterwards entered into by him to sell the settled estate. Ib.

—— 27 Eliz. c. 4.]—In a suit for specific performance against a vendor and those claiming under a voluntary settlement made by him previously to the contract for sale, the court refused to declare that the settlement was void under 27 Eliz. c. 4. Fletcher v. Ketteman, 40 L. J., Ch. 624.

Copyholds—Admittance.]—A woman seised of a copyhold executed a surrender jointly with her husband to such uses as her husband should appoint, and in default of appointment to him in fee, but no admittance was entered. The husband then conveyed to a purchaser, but still no admittance was entered. The plaintiff, who claimed under the purchaser, filed a bill to restrain an action of ejectment by the copyhold heir of the wife, and to compel a surrender to complete his title :—Held, that the husband had no power to make perfect that title which he, as a volunteer and without consideration, took imperfectly. Sowerby v. Gutteridge, 18 L. J., Ch. 9.

—— Post-nuptial Settlement.]—A testator devised a copyhold estate in trust for his wife for life, with remainder in trust for such persons as she should appoint by will or deed, with remainder over. The wife married again, and she and her second husband, after marriage, by deed, appointed the estate, and directed the surviving trustee to surrender it to the use of a mortgagee in trust to secure a mortgage and interest, and subject thereto to the use of the husband and wife for their joint lives, with trusts in favour of children of the second marriage. A surrender was made to the mortgagee accordingly. The husband and wife afterwards sold the estate, and the mortgage was paid out of the purchase money; the husband and wife joined with the mortgagee in surrendering to the use of the purchaser, and they all released to him all their interest :—Held, that the purchaser could make a good title, by the assistance of the statute of 27 Eliz. c. 4, without showing there were no children of the second marriage. Currie v. Nind, 1 Myl. & Cr. 17; 5 L. J., Ch. 169.

Voluntary Settlement by Vendor.]—Purchaser objecting to title on the ground of a voluntary settlement made by the vendor, an exception to the master's report, approving the title, allowed. Smith v. Garland, 2 Mer. 123; 16 R. R. 154.

Acceptance of Title.]—When it appears from the abstract of title that the vendor has previously executed a conveyance—on the face of it voluntary—but without evidence of its being void as against a purchaser for value, the purchaser may refuse to accept the title, although he might have made the title good by acceptance. Clarke v. Willott, 41 L. J., Ex. 197; L. R. 7 Ex. 313; 21 W. R. 73.

—— Possession.]—The purchaser set up a voluntary settlement as an objection to the title, but said he was willing to complete on having a good title. He had been let into possession and paid part of his purchase money, and had paid off a mortgage and got a conveyance of the legal estate and possession of the title-deeds :—Held, that the vendor was entitled to a decree for completing the purchase. Peter v. Nicolls, L. R. 11 Eq. 391; 24 L. T. 381; 19 W. R. 618.

Semble, that the principle of Smith v. Garland (supra) does not apply to a defendant who says he is willing to complete on having a good title. Ib.

Sale by Trustees of Voluntary Settlement—Possible Avoidance by Bankruptcy.]—By a voluntary settlement certain freehold lands were conveyed to trustees on trust for sale, and to pay the income of the proceeds to the settlor for life, and, after his death, upon certain trusts for his issue. The trustees entered into a contract for the sale of the property :—Held, on a summons under the Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874, that the purchasers would be "parties claiming under the settlement" within s. 47 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, and, therefore, that the title could not be forced upon them. Briggs and Spicer, In re, 60 L. J., Ch. 514; [1891] 2 Ch. 127; 64 L. T. 187; 39 W. R. 377; 55 J. P. 278.

Semble, that a good title might have been made by the settlor conveying to the purchasers and their paying the purchase money by his direction to the trustees, but held, that such a title could not be forced upon unwilling purchasers, because it could not be proved that the settlement was not, or had not, become a settlement for value. Ib.

And see Fletcher v. Ketteman, supra.

No Commission Issued.]—An act of bankruptcy a sufficient objection to title, without showing a debt upon which a commission could issue. Lowes v. Lush, 14 Ves. 547; 9 R. R. 344. S. P., Foster v. Gould, 3 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 200.

Sale by Devisee subject to Debts.]—Where devisee of real estate, subject to debts, had contracted to sell estate to pay debts, and a bill was filed against her by legatees for administration and purchaser consented to reference as to title in that suit :—Held, he was not thereby bound to take equitable title, and as two commissions of bankruptcy had issued against devisee before contract, he was not bound to accept title. Cann v. Cann, 1 Sim. & S. 284; 1 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 219.

By Assignees of Devisees.]—Residuary devisees and executors were bankrupt. More than forty years after testator's death, their assignees sold their interest. On objection that some of testator's debts might be still unpaid :—Held, that, in the absence of all evidence of any outstanding debts, the assignees had a full right to dispose of this property, and that the bankrupts were bound to join in the conveyance. Bolton, Ex parte, Moxon, In re, 1 Mont. D. & D. 667.

At a meeting of the bankrupts' creditors, a resolution was entered into by the majority then present, that if certain claims of the bankrupts for compensation should prove beneficial to the estate, the creditors would relinquish all right to the above property :—Held, that this was only a conditional arrangement, and did not prevent the assignees from selling. Ib.

Sale after Composition Accepted.]—When a debtor has filed a petition for liquidation, and resolutions accepting a composition are afterwards passed as provided by the act, such debtor remains absolute master of his property until the creditors take action under s. 126 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, and a purchaser from him is not entitled to any evidence whether or not the instalments under the composition have been duly paid. Kearley and Clayton's Contract, In re, 47 L. J., Ch. 474 ; 7 Ch. D. 615 ; 38 L. T. 92 ; 26 W. R. 324.

Assignee not bound by Decree for Sale.]—By marriage articles 1,000*l.* was secured to younger children. Subsequently by deed the husband charged lands at K. with a sum and subject thereto conveyed the lands to his sons in tail. On the husband's death, two bills were filed on behalf of younger children to raise the sum secured by the articles. G., the fourth son, entitled to an estate tail in remainder under the deed, became insolvent. He and his assignee were parties to the latter suit, but not in respect of that estate. A decree for the sale of the fee was pronounced for the sum due under the articles, and a part of the sum due under the deed. The abstract of title stated the insolvency of G., and that the heir of his assignee would join in the conveyance :—Held, on objections to title, that the assignment, though pendente lite, was valid, being made under the authority of a statute, and conveyed a base fee to the assignee, and, the decree not being binding on him, the title was defective ; that the defect could not be cured by the heir of the assignee joining in the conveyance, as he was a trustee for the creditors of G., who did not appear to have been paid, and were not bound by the decree. Keogh v. Keogh, 13 Ir. Eq. R. 284.

Deed of Assignment for Benefit of Creditors —Conveyance by Trustee under Deed of Assignment — Concurrence of Trustee in Bankruptcy.] — A trader unable to pay his debts executed a deed whereby he conveyed and assigned to a trustee for his creditors all his estate and effects, including his freehold dwelling-house and shop where he carried on his business, upon trust to permit him to carry on his business for the purpose of paying off his debts by certain instalments, which he thereby covenanted to pay ; and upon default in the payment of such instalments the trustee was empowered to enter into possession of the whole of the property, and sell the same, and pay the creditors rateably out of the proceeds ; and the trader thereby appointed the trustee his attorney for executing every document necessary or expedient for carrying into effect the trusts and provisions of the deed, which was registered under the Deeds of Arrangement Act, 1877. Five months after the date of the deed the trader made default in payment of the instalments, and the trustee entered into possession of the property comprised therein, and a month after such entry into possession by the trustee the trader was adjudged bankrupt. Two months after the trader's bankruptcy, the trustee under the deed sold the trader's house and shop by auction, and the purchaser required the concurrence of the trustee in bankruptcy in the conveyance of the property to him by the trustee under the deed. It was admitted that all the creditors of the trader did not assent to the deed :—Held, that, although the deed was not void under the statute of the 13 Eliz. c. 5, as there was nothing to show that the trader thereby intended to defeat, hinder, or delay his creditors, yet the purchaser was right in the contention that the concurrence of the trustee in bankruptcy in the conveyance to him was necessary to confer a good title to the property, as otherwise he would be liable to legal proceedings at the instance of such trustee. Poppleton and Jones' Contract, In re, 74 L. T. 582.

v. Charges and Incumbrances.

General Rule.]—When an estate is sold free from incumbrances, and the abstract shows that the estate is subject to a charge or incumbrance, the incumbrance does not afford an objection to the title, but is matter of conveyance only, even if the amount of the incumbrance be greater than the purchase money. Townsend v. Campernown, 1 Y. & J. 449 ; 30 R. R. 825.

Mortgage by Devisee—Accounts.]—Devise of real estate in trust to pay debts and legacies, and subject thereto to one of the devisor's coheirs, who was also residuary legatee : mortgage by her, and (several years after) bill filed against mortgagor and devisee in trust for foreclosure :—Held, on exceptions to title, by purchaser under decree in that cause, that the legatees who proved their legacies charged on the lands were not necessary parties ; that no account of testator's debts and legacies need be specifically directed ; and that the same person being residuary devisee and legatee, the account of the testator's personal estate was immaterial. Magennis v. Fallon, 2 Moll. 569.

Mortgage by Tenant for Life.]—A tenant for life mortgaged the inheritance. After his death B. became entitled to the mortgages. C., the tenant in tail, a minor, covenanted by marriage articles to convey the lands in trust to sell and pay off the debts then affecting them, and subject thereto for herself for life, remainder to her children, and a recovery was suffered on her majority. B. filed a bill and obtained a report, finding that arrears of rent and fines due in the life of A. and after were paid off by loan on mortgage ; and found this sum and the mortgages, with interest on them all before the death of A. to the time of the report, to be due, and a sale was decreed to pay them. B.'s assignee filed a bill, not making the trustee of C.'s settlement a party, and obtained a decree to carry the former decree into execution :—Held, that the first decree was erroneous, declaring the inheritance liable for interest, payable by the life estates of A. and C., and that a purchaser under the second decree, in which the inheritance was not represented, could not be held to his purchase. Magawley v. Brady, 9 Ir. Eq. R. 59.

Estates Specifically Charged.]—A testator devised his estates to his eldest son, and charged some of them with legacies, specifically charging one upon one of the estates, and directed that his residuary property should be sold in payment of his debts, and in ease of his real estates. The estates charged with the payment of debts not being sufficient, the finding of the master, that that legacy was a charge subject to the judgment and bond debts, was confirmed. Bouverie v. Norbury, 3 Cl. & F. 247; 9 Bligh (N.S.) 611.

Annuities.]—A testator devised his real estates in fee, charged with certain annuities or annual rent-charges:—Held, on special case, that the annuitants took the annuities for life; and that a purchaser could not maintain an objection, upon the ground that the annuities were given in fee, and not for lives. Nicholls v. Hawkes, 22 L. J., Ch. 255; 1 W. R. 124.

Merger.]—The legal estate in a term of years was vested in A., B. and C., as trustees for D. and E., mortgagees and joint tenants. By an indenture executed by all parties except E., the term was merged, the mortgage money being expressed to be paid to D. and E., and D. alone signed the receipt:—Held, that the land was not discharged, and specific performance of a contract to purchase the land refused. Matson v. Dennis, 10 Jur. (N.S.) 461; 12 W. R. 926.

Lis Pendens.]—A registered lis pendens does not of itself create an incumbrance upon property, apart from the subject-matter in respect of which the lis pendens is registered. Bull v. Hutchens, 9 Jur. (N.S.) 954; 8 L. T. 716; 11 W. R. 866.

Judgment—Indemnity.]—Purchaser not to be compelled to take an indemnity against a judgment, amounting to half of the purchase money. Wood v. Bernal, 19 Ves. 221; 12 R. R. 173.

Old judgments existing against a former owner of leaseholds, who parted with the property in 1770, and to enforce which no steps have been taken, are no objection to the title. Causton v. Macklew, 2 Sim. 242.

—— Tenant for Life.]—Tenant for life and tenant in tail joined in conveying the estate to trustees, in trust to sell and to pay the purchase money among the two; and it was declared that the trustees' receipts should be sufficient discharges. The trustees contracted to sell, and afterwards judgments were entered up against the tenant for life:—Held, no objection to the title. Lodge v. Lyseley, 4 Sim. 70.

—— Sale by Mortgagee without Notice.]—A mortgagee took, on the execution of his mortgage in 1844, an assignment of a term to a trustee, and forbore to search for judgments. A judgment had been registered in November, 1843. The mortgagee sold in 1846, under a power of sale in his mortgage. During the proceedings the five years from the registration of the judgment expired, and it was not re-registered till 1850:—Held, that the purchaser could not be compelled to complete without the concurrence of the judgment creditor. Freer v. Hesse, 4 De G. M. & G. 495; 23 L. J., Ch. 338; 17 Jur. 703; 1 W. R. 242, 487.

—— Searches made by Purchaser.]—By a contract of sale S. agreed to purchase certain leasehold property, subject to the following condition: No requisition to be made in respect of the title prior to the conveyance of the 12th of May, 1869, being a deed of conveyance to the vendors' testator. S., having discovered through searches made by himself, two judgment mortgages registered in 1858 and 1859 against the property:—Held, that S. was not precluded from objecting to the title, on the ground that these judgment mortgages appeared on the registry searches. A condition so framed does not prevent the purchaser from showing aliunde that the title is in fact defective. Davys and Saurin, In re, 17 L. R., Ir. 334.

—— Claim by the Crown—Compromise.]—It is no objection to the title to an estate that an extent had issued from the crown against the owner, which remained in the hands of the sheriff unexecuted; it appearing that the lords of the treasury had, in fact, compromised the debt, though a writ of amoveas manus had not actually issued. Poole v. Shergold, 1 Cox, 160; 2 Bro. C. C. 118; 1 R. R. 37.

—— Delay.]—In 1842 the defendant contracted to purchase an estate: the vendors claimed under a testator who died in 1809, and subject to his debts: a creditors' suit had been instituted in 1813, and a decree for an account and sale made in 1817, since which nothing had been done, and no report of debts had been confirmed. After so great delay, no further time was given to the vendors to complete their title. Fraser v. Wood, 8 Beav. 339.

vi. Outstanding Estates and Interests.

Equitable Estate.]—Purchaser is not to be compelled to take an equitable estate. Abel v. Heathcote, 2 Ves. J. 100; 4 Bro. C. C. 278; 2 R. R. 171.

A person contracted to sell, and showed only an equitable title, and the purchaser required the vendor to get in the legal estate:—Held, that such requisition was as to a matter of conveyance only, and the vendor could not rescind under a condition empowering him to rescind if any objection to title were made which he was unable or unwilling to remove. Kitchen v. Palmer, 46 L. J., Ch. 611.

Presumption as to Legal Estate.]—Re-conveyance of the legal estate presumed under obscure circumstances after a great lapse of time, though the possession originally not adverse, but under a trust. Hillary v. Waller, 12 Ves. 239.

Outstanding Term.] — Outstanding term to attend the inheritance, the trusts being performed, may be an objection to the conveyance, not to the title. Berkeley v. Dauh, 16 Ves. 380.

Dower.]—Sale of an estate which, by deed, dated in 1841, was limited to the use of the vendor for life, without impeachment of waste, with a trust to bar dower, and after the determination of the trust term, to the use of the vendor, and his heirs and assigns for ever:—Held, that an objection by the defendant that he was entitled to a conveyance of any interest which might have become vested in the dower trustee was frivolous and vexatious. Collard v. Roe, 4 De G. & J. 525; 28 L. J., Ch. 560; 7 W. R. 623.

An attendant term having become vested in the wife of the owner of the inheritance as administratrix of the trustee, and her husband becoming bankrupt, his assignees agree to sell the estate, and the husband dies:—Held, that the widow was not entitled to dower, that she was to assign the term to the purchaser, and that he was bound to accept the title. Mole v. Smith, Jacob, 490.

Whether the purchaser can be compelled to take an assignment of a term as a protection against dower, quære. S. C., 1 J. & W. 665.

Concurrence of Necessary Party.]—When a necessary party to a title is neither in law nor equity under the control of the vendor, the master ought to report against the title, unless there is produced to him a legal or equitable obligation on the part of the stranger to join in the conveyance. Esdaile v. Stephenson, 6 Madd. 366; 23 R. R. 248.

A. agreed to demise certain premises to B.: there was an outstanding equitable interest vested in C.:—Held, that B. was bound to accept a demise from A., in which C. joined. Reeves v. Gill, 1 Beav. 375.

Objection of Conveyance — Title to Legal Estate.]—An abstract showed the equitable fee to be in the vendor and the legal estate to be in A., as a mortgagee for a term, and subject thereto in B. in fee. By a supplemental abstract it appeared that A. had become a trustee of the term for B., and had died, and the descent of the legal estate was traced:—Held, that the first abstract showed a complete title, the tracing of the title to the legal estate being matter of conveyance merely. Ararne v. Browne, 14 Sim. 303; 14 L. J., Ch. 30; 8 Jur. 1037.

—— Fine not Levied.]—By a decree in chancery a married woman was directed to convey a freehold estate to F., a purchaser: she afterwards, together with her husband, executed a conveyance, the husband covenanting with F. that he and his wife would levy a fine. No fine was ever levied. On a bill by a vendor, claiming under F.:—Held, that the objection that no fine had been levied was not one of title, but of conveyance, as the order in chancery was binding on the woman, and rendered her a trustee for the purchaser, and she was, therefore, compellable to complete the legal title. Jumpson v. Pitchers, 1 Coll. C. C. 13; 13 L. J., Ch. 166.

Settlement by Tenant in Tail—Confirmation.]—A tenant in tail on the marriage of his son conveyed the entailed lands as if he were seised in fee to trustees for a term to raise portions, and upon further trusts. No fine or recovery was ever levied or suffered by the father or by the son. A bill was filed to raise the portions, and a decree directed a sale of the term. After the decree, the eldest son of the marriage, his father and grandfather being dead, executed a disentailing deed, and conveyed the lands in fee to C., expressly subject to the term. C. afterwards conveyed the fee to the widow of the father, who was a party to the suit, and had allowed the decree to be made upon sequestration against her:—Held, that the acts of the son operated as a confirmation of the settlement, and that a good title to the term could be made. Massey v. Batwell, 4 Dr. & War. 56; 5 Ir. Eq. R. 382.

Held, also, that the widow, having acquired her title after the decree, was bound by it. Ib.

Held, also, that the judgments entered pending suit, against the son and his vendee, were not an objection to the title. Ib.

Trustee—Escheat.]—T., the executor of S., purchased the equity of redemption of an estate, subject to a mortgage in fee (which contained a power of sale), to A. and D. T. was illegitimate, and died unmarried and intestate. B. purchased the estate, which was conveyed to him in fee by A. and D., the mortgagees, and by the administratrix de bonis non of S. The deed recited that T. had purchased the estate in part with the money of S. B. died, and his estate was sold under the direction of the court. The master reported that a good title could not be made. Upon exceptions to this report:—Held, that the evidence of T., being a mere trustee, was not such that a purchaser could be compelled to take the title; that, assuming T. had a beneficial title, the equity of redemption had not escheated to the crown; that, as the equity of redemption might possibly be assets for the payment of the debts of T., no title could be made in the absence of the legal personal representative of T. The exceptions were therefore overruled. Beale v. Symonds, 22 L. J., Ch. 708; 1 W. R. 137.

Descent to Infant Heir.]—Where a contract is made, and during delay caused by the purchaser, the legal estate descends to an infant heir, the purchaser cannot avail himself of that difficulty in the title to protect himself from specific performance. Gunter v. Halsey, Amb. 586.

Freehold—Rents and Profits.]—Property was put up for sale as: Freehold estate, consisting of two tenements, together with several dwelling-houses and gardens attached, now or late in the occupations of H. R. and others. Also two extensive lime quarries, well situate for shipping. One of the conditions of sale provided that the purchaser should, on completion, be let into the receipt of "the rents and profits" of the premises. Part of the property was, at the time of the sale, out upon leases for lives:—Held, that, under the particulars and conditions of sale, the vendors were bound to show a title to an estate in fee simple in possession. Hughes v. Jones, 31 L. J., Ch. 83; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 399; 5 L. T. 408; 10 W. R. 139.

"Rents and profits" were held to mean ordinary rents and profits. Ib.

Fee Farm Rent—Proviso for Re-entry.]—Charles II. by letters patent granted some property in fee, subject to a fee farm rent, and to a proviso of re-entry in case of non-repair. The crown afterwards granted away the rent:—Held, that the proviso for re-entry formed no objection to the title. Flower v. Hartopp, 6 Beav. 476; 12 L. J., Ch. 507; 7 Jur. 613.

—— Extinguishment.]—It is no objection to title that two fee farm rents, created by letters patent by James I., are not shown to have been extinguished, it being proved that no claim has been made for the rents from 1706, and no proof of any claim previous. Simpson v. Gutteridge, 1 Madd. 609; 16 R. R. 276.

Copyholds—Title by Possession.]—The generality and vagueness of descriptions of copyhold property on the court rolls are so well known, that a vendor is not bound to show how the description on the court roll is to be applied to the present state of the property, if he prove that the property has actually been enjoyed, and passed under that description, for upwards of sixty years. Long v. Collier, 4 Russ. 267; 28 R. R. 79.

Semble, that in copyhold land, although the lord's title may be barred by adverse possession for twenty years, yet the commoner's title could not. And quære, what is a proper case for compensation, and what for avoiding a contract? Perkins v. Ede, 1 W. R. 10.

—— Enfranchisement.]—It is no sufficient objection to the title of a vendor of an enfranchised copyhold, that a mortgagee to whom a surrender had been made had not been admitted before the enfranchisement, the deed of enfranchisement having conveyed to the vendor all the rights of the lord. Minton v. Kirwood, L. R. 1 Eq. 449; 13 L. T. 751. Affirmed, 12 Jur. (N.S.) 970; 15 W. R. 116.

—— Admittance.]—In an agreement for sale of copyholds the vendors contracted to give such title as they possessed at the time of the agreement "to extend over twenty years." The vendors were assignees of an unadmitted devisee, and had a complete equitable title, but refused to get in the legal estate. A second term of the agreement was that "purchaser was to prepare his own conveyance and surrender at his own expense":—Held, that the purchaser was entitled to a surrender of the legal estate, and that vendors must pay all fines. Whiteley v. Taylor, 35 L. T. 187.

—— Trustees for Sale.]—A testator devised copyholds, subject to a power of appointment, to trustees upon certain trusts, and directed his trustees to sell as soon as conveniently might be:—Held, that the trustees could make a good title to a purchaser without being admitted. Glass v. Richardson, 2 De G. M. & G. 658; 9 Hare, 698; 22 L. J., Ch. 105; 17 Jur. 926.

—— Heriot.]—A copyholder contracted with a railway company for the sale of his tenement, which was subject to a heriot and to quit-rents and fines. The heriot was supplied by severance of the copyhold:—Held, that the vendor was not entitled to have the remaining part of his copyhold discharged from the heriot; and that he could not refuse to execute the conveyance on the ground that the company had not apportioned the rents and fines. Parker v. S. E. Ry., 1 W. R. 316.

—— Inclosure.] — Where copyhold is sold under commission, good title is made by bargain and sale from commissioners to the purchaser direct. Holland, Ex parte, 4 Madd. 483.

Objection by purchaser having full notice of all the facts under an inclosure act, that the award of the commissioners was not made, overruled, the act containing a clause enabling a sale, and declaring the conveyance valid before the award. Kingsley v. Young, 18 Ves. 207.

An inclosure act directed certain allotments to be made, and reserved to the lord the seigniory and royalties. The act made no mention of any right of warren existing in the lord; but there was some evidence that S., the lord of the manor, had used part of the waste as a rabbit warren. The award gave an allotment to S. for his right of warren, and also allotments which were declared to be a full compensation for all his right and interest in the lands directed to be inclosed:—Held, that S.'s title of the warren allotment was not such as a purchaser could be compelled to take. Casamajor v. Strode, 2 My. & K. 706; Coop. t. Brough. 248.

—— Reservations.]—The omission in a rental of a reservation of mines, minerals, and of right of entry to search for them, is a valid objection to the title. Barton v. Downes (Lord), Fl. & K. 505.

In 1823, lands were conveyed to J. and his heirs, "saving and excepting out of the conveyance the manorial rights belonging or appertaining to the manor of C., of which manor the lands hereby released are parcel, and the tolls and duties of the fairs and markets thereof, as also any liberty of turbary or limestone heretofore granted therein or thereout by C. (a former owner), or his ancestors, to any of the tenants of the said manor, as expressed in their leases." Pursuant to a decree, the fee and inheritance in the lands was set up to be sold, under a recital, which did not advert to the reservation in the conveyance of 1823. It did not appear that any fairs or markets had ever been held for the manor, or any court, for the last twenty years; and although there was no open limestone quarry, nor anything in the nature of turbary save a surface or top-sod on the lands, yet it did not distinctly appear that there was not either limestone or turf on them:—Held, confirming the report, that the reservation of the liberty of turbary and limestone was a valid objection to the title, but not to the reservation of the manorial rights and tolls of the fairs and markets of the manor. Martin v. Cotter, 3 Jo. & Lat. 496; 9 Ir. Eq. R. 351.

Under an agreement by a copyholder for the enfranchisement and sale of a copyhold estate, and for making out and delivering a good title to the same:—Held, in the absence of any stipulation to the contrary, that the purchaser was bound to accept the title subject to the reservation of minerals and other rights contained in s. 48 of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 51. Kerr v. Pawson, 27 L. J., Ch. 594; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 425; 6 W. R. 447.

Specific performance of a contract for sale of lands held under an inclosure act refused, it appearing that the right of the lord to the minerals had not been affected by the act. Pretty v. Solly, 26 Beav. 606.

Land was described in a contract as freehold, but it was shown by the abstract that it was formerly copyhold, and had not been enfranchised. A decree was made for specific performance, and a general inquiry directed as to title; the purchaser then for the first time objected that the minerals were reserved to the lord of the manor:—Held, that the objection was fatal to the title; but as the purchaser had taken the objection so late, he was not allowed his costs. Upperton v. Nicholson, 40 L. J., Ch. 401; L. R. 6 Ch. 436; 25 L. T. 4; 19 W. R. 733—C. A.

Tithes.]—On the sale of an estate as tithe free, the question whether tithe free is not a question of title. Smith v. Lloyd, 2 Swanst. 224, n.

Upon a decision of the court of exchequer, that a presumption from non-payment of tithes cannot bar even a lay impropriator, the lord chancellor would not compel a purchaser to take such a title. Rose v. Calland, 3 Ves. 186. See 6 R. R. 19, n.

Leaseholds—Sale in Lots—Apportionment.]—On a sale, in lots, of premises, the particulars of which state them to be held under one lease, and that the purchaser of one lot is to be exclusively subject to the rent, the other purchasers cannot object to the title, on the ground of a clause of re-entry on non-payment contained in the lease. Walter v. Maunde, 1 J. & W. 181; 21 R. R. 141.

Landlord contracted to sell part of the demised estate, with an apportionment of part of the rent reserved for the whole estate, can make a good title without the consent of the tenant. Ib.

—— Surrender.]—Leasehold property was underlet to A., for twenty-one years from 1861, and was in 1864 again underlet to B. for twenty-one years, but A. never attorned to B., and subsequently surrendered his interest to the lessee:—Held, as against a purchaser of the original lease subject only to B.'s interest, that the surrender was valid, and a good title shown, Edwards v. Wickwar, 35 L. J., Ch. 309; L. R. 1 Eq. 403; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 158; 14 W. R. 363.

—— Subject to Ground Rent.]—Where leaseholds were sold under particulars and conditions of sale which made no mention of ground rents:—Held, that the purchaser led by the particulars to believe that they were not so subject, was entitled to be discharged. Jones v. Rimmer, 49 L. J., Ch. 775; 14 Ch. D. 588; 43 L. T. 111; 29 W. R. 165—C. A.

—— Public-house—Indemnity.]—A. paid a deposit upon a contract for the purchase of a public-house. The house was comprised with another in an original lease, under which the lessor had a right to re-enter for a breach of covenants in respect of either house:—Held, that A. was not bound to accept the title with an indemnity. Blake v. Phinn, 3 C. B. 976; 16 L. J., C. P. 159.

S., being in occupation of a public-house, contracted with W. to sell to him the residue of the lease, of which twelve and a half years at least were unexpired. The abstract of title showed that S.'s lessors had a right to determine the lease at the end of five years, and W. at once rescinded the contract:—Held, that W. was entitled to repayment of the deposit-money with interest. Weston v. Savage, 48 L. J., Ch. 239; 10 Ch. D. 736; 27 W. R. 654.

—— Objection after Title Accepted.]—Purchasers of the reversion agreed to purchase a leasehold interest granted by the vendor, the freeholder. They investigated and accepted the vendor's title, but afterwards made the discovery of an ancient lease which they alleged to be still outstanding. Specific performance decreed, and reference as to title refused. Corbett v. Works and Public Buildings Commissioners, 18 L. T. 548; 16 W. R. 889.

—— Title Involving Litigation.]—A court of equity will not decree the specific performance of a contract for the purchase of a lease, where, from pending and threatened litigation, it is impossible to ascertain to whom the ground-rent is payable, and the purchaser must be involved in immediate litigation. Pegler v. White, infra, col. 1477.

Under-lease.]—On the purchase of an under-lease it is not a valid objection to the title, that the under-lease may become forfeited by the non-performance of the covenants in the original lease. Hayford v. Criddle, 22 Beav. 477.

This objection may be cured, either by an insurance, for the whole residue of the term created by the sub-lease, or by making the representative of the original lease join in a covenant, that the purchaser shall be at liberty to insure in his name, and to deduct the annual premiums out of the rent. Montresor v. Williams, 1 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 151.

Where upon the sale of a leasehold ground-rent by the mesne lessee, a part of the term assigned being reserved, and by the conditions, no title prior to the assignment was to be produced, and, by recital in the original lease, it appeared that the property out of which the rent issued had been originally demised with other premises at a rent, subject to the covenants, &c., in the original demise:—Held, that a good title could not be made, as upon failure of payment of the original rent it might become a subject to forfeiture. Taylor v. Martindale, 1 Y. & C. C. C. 658.

—— Breach of Trust.]—An under-lessee of premises bequeathed them to P. his lessor (whom he also appointed executor), in trust for L.; P. afterwards executed a deed, purporting to be an assignment of them to L., and by his will bequeathed the premises to his executors on certain trusts; on his death his executors demised the premises to L. for the then residue of the term:—Held, that L. could make no title, the legal estate being merged in the bequest to P., and the assignment by him, therefore, inoperative; and the demise by the executor being a breach of trust. Law v. Urlwin, 16 Sim. 377; 12 Jur. 1012.

—— Sale as Lease.]—Lease containing covenants and underlease of a portion not containing similar covenants. On sale by the under-lessee describing it as a lease, but that the lessor's title shall not be inquired into, the court will not compel a purchaser who has discovered the true state of the title aliunde to complete. Darlington v. Hamilton, 2 Eq. R. 906; Kay, 550; 23 L. J., Ch. 1000. And see cases supra, col. 1185.

vii. Non-Performance of Covenants.

Building Lease.]—Covenant by lessee of building lease to build houses, and at the determination of the term deliver up the same to the lessor or his assigns:—Held, on a sale by the assignees in bankruptcy of the lessee, that, although there had been a waiver by the lessor of the covenant to build, still the covenant to deliver up continued in force, and was a valid objection to the title; and that the purchaser could not be required to accept compensation or indemnity. Nouaille v. Flight, 7 Beav. 521; 13 L. J., Ch. 414; 8 Jur. 838.

Covenant by lessee to build two houses with the approbation of the lessor's surveyor, and to expend in such building 400*l.* With the surveyor's approbation he built five houses, no two of which were worth 400*l.*, though all together were worth much more:—Held, that the covenant was substantially performed, and that there was no objection, under the circumstances, to the lessor's title. Hume v. Bentley, 5 De G. & Sm. 520; 21 L. J., Ch. 760; 16 Jur. 1109.

For Payment of Rent — Assignment for Creditors.]—An owner of leasehold premises covenanted to assign them to trustees, or as they should direct, upon trust to sell, and apply the proceeds for the benefit of his creditor. Upon a sale by the trustees:—Held, that the owner was entitled to a covenant of the purchaser for payment of the rent and performance of the covenants during the continuance of the lease. Morley v. Clavering, 29 Beav. 84; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 904.

—— Indemnity.]—Under a contract for assignment of a term, whether from the original lessee or a mesne assignee, the purchaser must covenant for indemnity against payment of rent and performance of the covenants. Staines v. Morris, 1 V. & B. 8.

Covenant to Indemnify Purchaser.]—Under the usual condition on sales that the largest purchaser shall take an assignment of the lease and execute under-leases to the other purchasers, he is bound to covenant to indemnify the other purchasers against any breach of covenants contained in the original lease. Brown v. Paull, 2 Jur. (N.S.) 317.

Lessee subject to covenants cannot compel specific performance of agreement to purchase the premises of him, though he offers to indemnify purchaser against performance of covenants. Fildes v. Hooker, 3 Madd. 193; 18 R. R. 214.

A., lessee, subject to payment of rent and performance of covenants, mortgages by assignment to B. A. becomes bankrupt, and his assigns agree to convey to B. the equity of redemption. The assignees cannot compel B. to accept an assignment with a covenant for indemnity against the rent and covenants reserved by the original lease. Wilkins v. Fry, 1 Mer. 244; 2 Rose, 371; 15 R. R. 110.

Receipt of last Rent Due.]—The vendors under an agreement for sale of leaseholds produced the last receipt for the ground rent, signed by agents; but it did not clearly appear on whose behalf it was so signed:—Held, that the court would not compel the purchaser to accept the title, although the vendors offered to indemnify him against six years' ground rent. Pegler v. White, 33 Beav. 403; 3 N. R. 557; 33 L. J., Ch. 569; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 330; 10 L. T. 84; 12 W. R. 455.

Upon an open contract for the sale of a lease the vendor produced a receipt for rent down to a year previously, but could not produce the last receipt, the lessor having refused to receive his rent, on the ground of alleged breaches of covenant. The vendor deposed that to the best of his knowlege and belief the whole of the covenants had been duly performed, and proved the execution of various repairs, and the purchaser offered no evidence that anything was wanting to complete the performance of the covenants:—Held, that there was such primâ facie evidence of the performance of the covenants as to constitute a sufficient answer to the requisition. Ringer to Thompson, 51 L. J., Ch. 42; 45 L. T. 580.

The conditions of sale stipulated that the production of the last receipt should be conclusive evidence that all covenants had been performed:—Held, that the production of such a receipt prevented the purchaser from objecting that the lease had been forfeited by reason of the dilapidated state of the premises. Bull v. Hutchens, 32 Beav. 615; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 954; 8 L. T. 716; 11 W. R. 866.

A leasehold public-house was sold subject to a condition that the production of the last receipt for rent paid should be taken as conclusive evidence of the due performance of the lessee's covenants or the waiver of any breaches up to the time of completion. The lease contained a covenant to use the premises for the business of a public-house only, and not to permit any other trade to be carried on on any part of the premises without the lessor's written consent. The particulars on which the contract of purchase was indorsed showed that parts of the premises were underlet to persons who carried on other trades, and it appeared that the lessors had received rent with knowledge of the underlettings, and the last receipt for rent was produced:—Held, that whether the breach of covenant was or was not a continuing breach the vendor had made a good title in accordance with the contract. Laurie v. Lees, 51 L. J., Ch. 209; 7 App. Cas. 19; 46 L. T. 210; 30 W. R. 185—H. L. (E.) And see cases supra, col. 1434.

Insurance.]—Owners of leaseholds holding under a covenant to insure, with forfeiture in default, entered into a contract to sell. The insurance would expire three weeks before the day appointed for completion, and the vendors renewed the insurance for one month, but never mentioned the subject to the purchaser. The insurance had expired before completion:—Held, that the insurance ought to have been continued at the expense of the purchaser, and that it was not the duty of the vendors to inform the purchaser of the expiration of the insurance. Dowson v. Solomon, 29 L. J., Ch. 129; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 33; 1 L. T. 246; 8 W. R. 123.

The vendors of a leasehold, subject to a covenant to insure it against fire, contracted for the sale to a purchaser within a given time. The contract was not completed by the specified time. There was no default on the part of the purchaser, but the vendors did not keep up the insurance after the date fixed for completion:—Held, that the purchaser ought to be discharged from his contract. Palmer v. Goren, 25 L. J., Ch. 841; 4 W. R. 688.

A purchaser of a leasehold may object to a vendor's title, on the ground that he has incurred a forfeiture by omitting for the space of a month to pay the premium of insurance, pursuant to his covenant, although it does not appear that the lessor has taken advantage of the forfeiture. Wilson v. Wilson, 14 C. B. 616; 2 C. L. R. 818; 23 L. J., C. P. 137; 18 Jur. 581; 2 W. R. 421. S. P., Penniall v. Harborne, 11 Q. B. 368; 17 L. J., Q. B. 94; 12 Jur. 159.

Leaseholds were sold under conditions of sale, which provided that possession under the lease should be conclusive evidence of performance or of waiver of any breach of covenant up to completion; there had been a breach of covenant to insure before sale, and the policy existing at the sale was afterwards allowed to drop:—Held, that the conditions covered the first breach of covenant. Howell v. Kightley, 7 Beav. 331; 25 L. J., Ch. 868; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 4

Held, also, that the breach of covenant after the sale was not provided for by the condition, and that a purchaser was not bound to take the title. Ib.

A covenant by the lessee to insure in the names of himself and the lessor, is so substantially performed by an insurance in the lessor's name alone, that the circumstance that the original lessee could not be found, and that no insurance could be effected in his name, is not an objection to the title of an underlessee. Havens v. Middleton, 10 Hare, 641; 22 L. J., Ch. 746; 17 Jur. 271; 1 W. R. 256. And see cases under COVENANTS, BREACH OF, supra, col. 1230.

8. TITLE MADE GOOD.

Before Decree.]—Where a person articles to sell an estate, and brings a bill for the execution of the agreement, though at the time of the agreement he cannot make a title to the purchaser, it is sufficient if he is able to do so when the decree or report is made. Langford v. Pitt, 2 P. Wms. 632. S. P., Thompson v. Miles, 1 Esp. 184.

Semble, that a vendor, who bonâ fide puts up a property for sale, believing himself absolute owner, when he has in fact only a partial interest, is entitled to enforce the contract if he can perfect the title. Murrell v. Goodyear, 1 De G. F. & J. 432; 29 L. J., Ch. 425; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 356; 2 L. T. 268; 8 W. R. 398.

Determined on a re-hearing to be sufficient if a party can make a good title in a bill for specific performance at any time before the final decree. Bennet College v. Carey, 3 Bro. C. C. 390.

Before Hearing.]—Where time is not essence of contract, and there is no unreasonable delay, the vendor, though not having a good title till hearing of cause, is entitled to specific performance. Wynn v. Morgan, 7 Ves. 202. S. P., Hoggart v. Scott, 1 Russ. & M. 293; Tam. 500; 9 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 54; 31 R. R. 112.

If vendor can make a good title at hearing, on further directions, it is sufficient for specific performance, vendor paying costs. Paton v. Rogers, 6 Madd. 256.

Before Filing Bill.]—Vendor not making good title, when bill filed, pays costs up to time title reported good. Harford v. Purrier, 1 Madd. 532; 16 R. R. 260.

A plaintiff may rely on a title acquired in point of form after he had filed the bill, if it be not inconsistent with his original claim, and is capable of having relation back. Doyle v. Callow, 12 Ir. Eq. R. 241.

Additional Evidence of Title.]—The requiring additional evidence of title to be supplied by the vendor is consistent with the rule of not keeping the purchaser too long in the suspense of investigation, and the question always is whether it is the same title as existed at first that is followed up, or whether the vendor has been put to cast about for a new title. Magennis v. Fallon, 2 Moll. 580.

Alien—Grant from Crown.]—A person contracted to sell who at the time of the contract had no title, by reason of the alienage of a party through whom he claimed. The purchaser, with knowledge of the defect, continued negotiations. The vendor filed his bill for specific performance, and, pending the investigation of the title, obtained a grant of the estate from the crown:—Held, that he was entitled to a decree. Eyston v. Simmons, 1 Y. & C. C. C. 608; 11 L. J., Ch. 376; 6 Jur. 817.

Sale by Tenant for Life.]—Specific performance of a contract for sale of an estate in fee-simple decreed where vendor was (as purchaser knew) only tenant for life, but by consent of the remaindermen was able to make a good primâ facie title to the fee-simple at the hearing. Salisbury v. Hatcher, 2 Y. & C. C. C. 54; 12 L. J., Ch. 68; 6 Jur. 1051.

Real Owner willing to Concur.]—Vendor contracting to sell estate in which he has no title, purchaser not bound though real owner offers a title. Tendring v. London, 2 Eq. Ca. Abr. 680.

On a sale under a decree, the abstract stated that the vendor was devisee of A., who took as heir to B., though the vendor's solicitor knew that C. was the heir. The purchaser was discharged, though the vendor had obtained a release from C. Dalby v. Pullen, 3 Sim. 29; 1 Russ. & M. 296; 8 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 74; 30 R. R. 123.

Repudiation—Freehold House—Minerals.]—Where the defendant agreed to purchase a freehold house, and on discovering that the plaintiff was not owner of the minerals, repudiated the contract:—Held, that the defendant was entitled to repudiate before the date for completion, although the plaintiff offered to purchase the minerals before that date. Bellamy v. Debenham, 60 L. J., Ch. 166; [1891] 1 Ch. 412; 64 L. T. 478; 39 W. R. 257—C. A.

—— Lease.]—The defendant having agreed to take part of a house, with right to a lease for twenty-one years, repudiated the contract upon discovering that the plaintiff could not fully perform the contract. After the bill was filed, but before the hearing, the plaintiff was in a position to perform the contract fully:—Held, that the defendant was not bound to wait; and the bill was dismissed with costs. Forrer v. Nash, 6 N. R. 361; 35 Beav. 167; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 789; 14 W. R. 8.

Where a person sells property which he is neither able to convey nor to enforce a conveyance from other proper parties, the purchaser may repudiate the contract, and is not bound to wait to see if the vendor can induce some third person to join in making a good title. Ib.

Purchaser Curing Defect.]—A specific performance of an agreement by a purchaser was decreed in equity, where he agreed with the vendor to buy if a good title could be made, and he afterwards bought up the claim of a stranger in his way. Masters v. Cook, Colles's P. C. 433.

Where the purchaser of an interest sold under the decree of the court acquires by that means a knowledge of a defect in the title to that interest, and afterwards buys up the estate of the person interested, the court will not allow him to rely upon an objection to the title founded upon that defect. Quære, whether, if the objection were valid, the court would allow him to rely on it. Sheppard v. Doolan, 3 Dr. & War. 1; 5 Ir. Eq. R. 6.

Application of Rule.]—The rule of compelling a purchaser to take the estate, where a title is not made till after the contract, not to be extended. Lechmere v. Brasier, 2 J. & W. 289; 22 R. R. 130.

Title when Shown—Costs.]—Upon a bill filed by a vendor for specific performance, it appeared that he could make a good title before the commencement of the suit, but did not show a good title to the purchaser until afterwards:—Held, that though specific performance must be decreed, the purchaser was entitled to the costs of the suit generally. Townsend v. Champernown, 3 Y. & C. 505.

Cause Standing Over.]—In a suit for specific performance, where the vendor cannot make a good title, when the cause comes on to be heard on further directions, the court will not allow the cause to stand over, in order that he may be able to cure the defects in his title. Boswell v. Mendham, 6 Madd. 373; 1 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 160; 23 R. R. 250.

Time Allowed Vendor.]—Where the vendor had no title to a small portion of the land contracted for, but such defect was not discovered till after the contract, the court refused, with costs, a motion by the purchaser to be discharged from his contract, without giving the vendor an opportunity of acquiring a title to the portion. Chamberlain v. Lee, 10 Sim. 444.

Purchaser cannot insist on being discharged upon a report of defective title, if capable of being made good within a reasonable time; as to which, the vendor will be put under terms. Coffin v. Cooper, 14 Ves. 205; 9 R. R. 274.

Recovery Necessary for Title.]—It being necessary, in order to make a title perfect, that a recovery should be suffered, the deed making the tenant to the præcipe, and the warrant for suffering the recovery, were executed before the filing of the bill for specific performance, but the recovery was not completed till a few days afterwards:—Held, that a good title was not shown before the commencement of the suit. Lewin v. Guest, 1 Russ. 325; 25 R. R. 58.

Exchange—Subsequent Consent by Party.]—A tenant for life of a settlement containing a power to trustees to exchange lands, conveys by way of exchange to B. B.'s heir afterwards contracts to sell such lands, and, after objection by the purchaser, procures certain deeds to be executed by the tenant for life and the surviving trustee and himself, which, if executed at the time of the exchange, would have given it validity:—Held, that the court would not compel the purchaser to take the title, but no decision was given as to whether the exchange was validated. Cowgill v. Oxmantown (Lord), 3 Y. & C. 369; 3 Jur. 313.

Trustees' Consent when Obtained.]—Where the trustees of a will, with power to sell with consent of tenant for life, make a contract without having obtained the consent of the tenant for life, semble, that subsequent consent will not cure the defect. Adams v. Broke, 1 Y. & C. C. C. 627.

Where no Binding Contract.]—Where specific performance of a binding contract is sought, a reference to the master enables the vendor to make good any defect in his own title, or to procure a conveyance up to the date of the master's report and of the decree; but when the court had come to the conclusion that there was no binding contract, and that the assent of the proprietors was not proved at the hearing, the court declined to refer it to the master to inquire whether the required consent could be obtained. Clay v. Rufford, 5 De G. & Sm. 768.

Bankruptcy.]—The assignee in bankruptcy having filed, as vendor, a bill for specific performance, but it appearing, on a reference as to title, that the concurrence of the insolvent assignee was required, which was given in the master's office, the court gave specific performance without making plaintiff pay costs. Sidebotham v. Barrington, 5 Beav. 261.

—— Commission Superseded.] — Under a commission an estate is sold. The commission is afterwards superseded, on the ground that there was no good petitioning creditor's debt, and another commission issues, and the same assignees are chosen:—Held, that as the assignees had not a good title to the estate, they could not enforce the contract, nor retain the deposit. Bartlett v. Tuchin, 1 Marshall, 583; 2 Taunt. 259.

9. Conditions as to Title.

And see Particulars and Conditions of Sale, supra, col. 1166.

a. In General.

Usual Conditions.]—Quære, whether a vendor of a doubtful title is justified in selling under the usual conditions; that all objections not sent in within a limited time are waived; for rescinding the contract, and that no one but the vendor is to be required to join; or in not putting in his abstract matter tending to show that doubts had been raised. Warde v. Dixson, 28 L. J., Ch. 315; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 698; 7 W. R. 148.

Under such conditions a purchaser is not prevented from taking an objection which he has discovered aliunde after the time limited for taking objections. Ib.

Excluding Proof of Title.]—Conditions of sale which state certain facts, and represent that certain acts were done in error, and that the vendors could sell an absolute interest, will not preclude a purchaser from requiring proof of the title. Johnson v. Smiley, 17 Beav. 223; 1 Eq. R. 397; 22 L. J., Ch. 826; 1 W. R. 440.

Excluding known Defect.]—A condition of sale which does not fairly state the objection to the title against which it is directed is not binding on a purchaser. Beioley v. Carter, L. R. 4 Ch. 230; 17 W. R. 300.

On a sale where a condition as to the title did not point directly at the objection:—Held, that the purchaser was not precluded from taking the objection. Cruse v. Nowell, 25 L. J., Ch. 709; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 536; 4 W. R. 619.

Conditions of sale must express in distinct terms a difficulty of title, and therefore when a condition set out facts from which the conclusion in law was that the vendors showed no title, but this conclusion was one which would not occur to an ordinary purchaser, and was not stated in the condition:—Held, that the sale could not be enforced. Williams v. Wood, 16 W. R. 1005.

The defendant having sold and conveyed land to the plaintiff, suggesting that he had a title, and it afterwards appearing that he was not entitled to part, being an encroachment from a common, a bill lies to set aside the conveyance, and for a return of the purchase money, and all expenses. Edwards v. M'Leay, G. Cooper, 308. Affirmed, 2 Swanst. 287; 14 R. R. 261.

Conditions provided that a declaration by the tenant should be produced to the purchaser that the farm was taken by him from E. in October, 1835, and had since been held by him of her and those claiming under her in succession. The condition provided that the purchaser should be satisfied with the title so made, without the production of any document previous to the will of E. in 1860, who should be assumed to have been seised of the property in fee simple in possession, free from incumbrances, up to and at her death. The condition expressly stipulated that no other title than as above should be required or inquired into. The purchaser, after an abstract of title had been furnished to him, discovered that E. was a mortgagee in possession, and had no title against the mortgagor except under the statute of limitations by adverse possession commencing in 1844; and that her executor in 1861 had paid legacy duty on the mortgage debt, and not succession duty on the estate. These facts were well known to the vendor:—Held, that the condition of sale was misleading, and that the purchaser was entitled to have a good holding title, or else to rescind his contract. Banister, In re, Broad v. Munton, 48 L. J., Ch. 837; 12 Ch. D. 131; 40 L. T. 828; 27 W. R. 826—C. A.

—— Good Holding Title only.]—Where the conditions on the face of them purport to give only a good holding title, the purchaser on being relieved from them is not entitled to have more than a good holding title. Ib.

—— Leaseholds.]—Particulars of a sale described the subject as a plot of ground held for a term of one hundred and eleven years from April, 1853, subject to the annual rent of 5*l.* One of the conditions of sale was, that the vendor should deliver an abstract of title, and deduce a good title to the premises from April, 1853, to the time of the sale; nor should the title of the lessor be questioned, nor the vendor be bound to go behind the same. The plot of ground was part of two properties, held under two distinct leases, made in 1845 to the vendor's lessor, by which rents of 31*l.* and 9*l.* were respectively reserved. The interest sold was under a lease made to the vendor, of portions of both properties, in July, 1853, subject to a rent of 5*l.*:—Held, first, that the title was bad. Geohegan v. Connolly, 8 Ir. Ch. R. 598.

Held, secondly, that the condition of sale was so ambiguous and uncertain as not to preclude the purchaser from objecting to the title. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that there had been a suppression of facts in the particulars of sale, which amounted to misrepresentation. Ib.

——Voluntary Deed.]—A contract entered into in 1882 for the sale of freehold estate provided that the title should commence "with an indenture dated the 18th of October, 1845," and made between persons whose names were mentioned, and that the earlier title should not be investigated or objected to. From the abstract of title it appeared that the deed of 1845 was a voluntary deed with a power of revocation by a person, who purported to convey freehold and leasehold property upon trusts:—Held, that the vendors ought to have stated in the condition of sale the nature of the deed; that the omission to state this rendered the condition a misleading one; and that the purchaser was not bound to accept a title commencing with that deed. Marsh and Granville (Earl), In re, 53 L. J., Ch. 81; 24 Ch. D. 11; 48 L. T. 947; 31 W. R. 845—C. A.

—— Voidable Sale appearing on Title—Rescission.]—A company purchased a public-house, under circumstances probably rendering the transaction voidable by its shareholders. A charge upon it was subsequently created in favour of debenture-holders. The company contracted to sell the public-house. By one of the conditions of sale the purchaser was precluded from making any requisition or inquiry with reference to a trust deed, as to which a memorandum which was stated to be of a certain character had been endorsed on one of the documents of title. The memorandum was not in fact sufficient, or of the character stated. In the course of the negotiations the company offered to obtain the concurrence of the shareholders and debenture-holders in the conveyance:—Held, that specific performance by the purchaser must be decreed; that, if the condition referred to was not binding on the purchasers, yet as it did not go to the length of title to be shown, or the root of title, this was not a ground for rescission; but the trust deed must be dealt with as if the condition did not exist. Marsh and Granville (Earl), In re, supra, distinguished. Farnham Brewery Co. v. Hunt, 3 R. 381; 68 L. T. 440.

—— Purchase by Trustees.]—Property was sold subject to conditions (inter alia), (6) that all requisitions should be sent within ten days after the delivery of the abstract otherwise waived by the purchaser, and time should be the essence of the contract; (8) that the purchaser shall not object to the sale of the premises to R., by assignment, dated the 29th January, 1870, but should assume that R. acquired under the deed a valid title to the premises; (9) that the purchaser should not object to the title because L., in 1858, as a trustee for B., purchased from the trustees of the then owners, B. being one of the last-mentioned trustees. The title was bad on the ground that R. had purchased the premises sold for X. and others, X. being one of the trustees for sale of the property so bought, and also on the ground that L., the assignee in the deed of 1858, had purchased for B. who was also a trustee for sale:—Held, first, that the eighth condition was so framed as to deceive the purchaser, and entirely throw him off his guard by unwarrantably suppressing and masking a fatal defect in the title. Boyd v. Dickson, Ir. R. 10 Eq. 239.

Held, secondly, that, having regard to the eighth and ninth conditions, the vendor could not avail himself of the sixth condition. Ib.

Opportunity of Inspection—Document affecting Title.]—A condition of sale which refers to a document as affecting the title and offers an opportunity of inspecting it, is not misleading, unless it so states the document as to lead to the belief that all that is material in it is disclosed. Blenkorn v. Penrose, 43 L. T. 668; 29 W. R. 237.

Objections not Precluded.]—Upon the sale of a property the contract provided that the purchaser should assume that A. was at the time of his death seized in fee simple of a certain lot, and should not require the production of or investigate or make any objection in respect of the prior title to the lot. Before completion, the purchaser discovered from documents supplied by the vendor to a sub-purchaser that the lot was the purchaser's own property :—Held, that the purchaser was not precluded by the condition from raising the objection. Jones v. Clifford, 45 L. J., Ch. 809 ; 3 Ch. D. 779 ; 35 L. T. 937 ; 24 W. R. 979.

—— Objection to Prior Title.]—A condition that the title prior to a certain date "shall not be required, investigated or objected to" precludes the purchaser from taking an objection to the prior title, although such objection is based upon information obtained aliunde ; and in such a case the purchaser cannot recover the deposit. The dictum of Wood, V.-C., in Darlington v. Hamilton (infra, col. 1493), dissented from. Marsh and National Provincial Bank of England, In re, 64 L. J., Ch. 255 ; [1895] 1 Ch. 190 ; 13 R. 347 ; 71 L. T. 629 ; 43 W. R. 186.

A sale was made by the court under conditions which precluded the purchaser from objecting to the title prior to the document chosen as the root of the title, and made recitals in deeds more than twenty years old conclusive. A recital covered by this condition was so framed as to conceal a defect of title prior to the date fixed for the commencement of the title :—Held, that the sale being by the court the purchaser was not precluded by the conditions from raising the objection, and ought to be discharged from his purchase. Else v. Else, 41 L. J., Ch. 213 ; L. R. 13 Eq. 196 ; 25 L. T. 527 ; 20 W. R. 286.

—— Time for Objections.]—A contract for sale stipulated that the vendor should deliver an abstract to the purchaser, who should make all his requisitions within seven days, and that the purchaser should take such title as the vendor had :—Held, that, notwithstanding such a condition, if the vendor agrees to deliver an abstract, and stipulates that objections are to be taken within a specified time, that imports that objections may be taken. Keyse v. Haydon, 9 Hare (App.) lviii. ; 1 W. R. 73.

Requisitions on Title.]—A condition limiting the time for requisitions on title does not bind the purchaser where the abstract shows no title at all : Want v. Stallibrass (L. R. 8 Ex. 175). Assuming that the same rule does not apply where the vendor can show a good holding title, though not a title which the court would force upon a purchaser, the vendor cannot take this position after the purchaser has refused the title and demanded back his deposit. Saxby v. Thomas, 63 L. T. 695.

—— When to be Delivered.]—By the conditions of sale it was stipulated that all objections and requisitions in respect of the title should be delivered within fourteen days from the delivery of the abstract. An abstract of title was duly delivered. After the fourteen days had elapsed the purchaser made an objection as to construction :—Held, that the objection did not go to the root of the title, and the requisition being out of time failed. Thompson to Curzon, In re, 52 L. T. 498.

b. Special Conditions.

Limited Title—Accidental Disclosure.]—Freehold property was sold subject to a condition that the title should commence with a deed dated the 30th of December, 1867, and that no earlier or other title should be required or inquired into by the purchaser :—Held, that this did not preclude the purchaser from insisting on an objection to the prior title which was accidentally disclosed by the vendor. Smith v. Robinson, 49 L. J., Ch. 20 ; 13 Ch. D. 148 ; 41 L. T. 405 ; 28 W. R. 37.

But held, that the purchaser was only entitled to an inquiry whether the vendor could make a good holding title to the property. Ib.

Where there is a condition of sale that no title to the property sold shall be shown before a certain date, semble, that s. 24 of 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, does not apply to the concealment of an incumbrance prior to that date. Ib.

—— Notice of Prior Deed.]—Special conditions of sale, limiting the extent of title :—Held, to be no excuse for a purchaser not insisting on the production of a deed beyond those limits of which he had notice. Peto v. Hammond, 30 Beav. 495.

—— Leaseholds.]—A condition of a contract for the sale of leaseholds was that the vendor should produce a good and marketable title commencing from the freeholder, but that no title should be called for prior to the lease. In the investigation of the title, it was stated, that the lease had been granted in pursuance of a prior contract :—Held, first, that the purchaser was entitled to investigate the dealings with the contract prior to the lease being granted ; secondly, that stipulations as to title in a contract between a vendor and a purchaser are to be construed favourably to the latter. Rhodes v. Ibbetson, 4 De G. M. & G. 787 ; 2 Eq. R. 76 ; 23 L. J., Ch. 459.

—— Competency of Party to Deed.]—Though a condition of sale that the title shall commence with a certain indenture leaves it open to the purchaser to show aliunde that the parties purporting to convey were not competent to do so, yet if this is not shown, their competency to convey must be assumed. Osborn v. Osborn, 18 W. R. 421.

—— Sale by Trustees.]—Conditions of sale stipulated that the vendors would deliver an abstract of title, commencing with a conveyance in 1800 from D. ; that the vendors would enter into a qualified covenant to produce the deeds retained by them ; but as the vendors had no beneficial interest they should only covenant that they had not incumbered, and no objection should be taken to the right of the vendors to hold, sell or convey the property now sold. The abstract traced the title from D. through his heirs in gavelkind. Upon an objection that a daughter of D. took a share under his will :—Held, that the vendee was debarred by the condition as to the right of the vendors to hold and sell. Lethbridge v. Kirkman, 25 L. J., Q. B. 89 ; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 372 ; 4 W. R. 90.

—— Disputed Ownership.]—A. agreed to buy B.'s interest in certain lands, in the event of an act of parliament which was to be applied for being obtained. The contract provided, that B. should produce only the title from his vendor (C.) to himself. C. was one only of four claimants of the lands, but A. knew this when he entered into the contract. The act was passed, and A. took possession thereunder, but refused to complete. Upon a bill:—Held, that evidence aliunde to show want of title in C. was not admissible; and specific performance was decreed against B. on the ground that A. had bought such title or interest as B. might have under C. Hume v. Pocock, 35 L. J., Ch. 731; L. R. 1 Ch. 379; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 445; 14 L. T. 386; 14 W. R. 681.

—— Sale of Manor.]—By contract for the sale of a manor it was agreed that the defendant should purchase from the plaintiff all his interest in the property, and that he should "be called upon to produce only the title from B. to himself":—Held, that the defendant was precluded from inquiring into the title of B., but could only call upon the plaintiff to show a title from B. to himself. Ib.

—— Sale by Mortgagee—Equitable Interest.]—Where conditions of sale by a mortgagee stated that he sold as mortgagee, and that as he had only an equitable interest in one plot, the purchaser should accept such title as he was able to deduce and convey:—Held, that a purchaser could not object that the legal estate of this plot was outstanding as by the condition the vendor contracted to sell an equitable interest only. Ashworth v. Mounsey, 9 Ex. 175; 2 C. L. R. 418; 23 L. J., Ex. 73; 2 W. R. 41.

—— Purchase from Railway Company.]—The defendant purchased from a railway company land which, not being "superfluous," the company had no power to sell, and the plaintiff contracted to purchase the land from the defendant. One of the conditions of sale was that the title should commence with the conveyance from the company; another that the purchaser should not require the production of, or investigate or make any objection or requisition in respect of such conveyance. The plaintiff declined to complete and sued for the deposit:—Held, that the deposit could not be recovered. Rosenberg v. Cook, 51 L. J., Q. B. 170; 8 Q. B. D. 162; 30 W. R. 344.

—— Will.]—Upon the sale of an estate, one of the conditions was that the title to the beneficial ownership should commence with the will of C., and the purchaser must assume that C. was at his death beneficially entitled to the property in fee simple free from incumbrances. C. had contracted before his death for the purchase, but it was not till many years after his death that the title was made out, the property conveyed, and the purchase money paid:—Held, that the purchaser was not bound by the condition of sale. Harnett v. Baker, 45 L. J., Ch. 64; L. R. 20 Eq. 50; 32 L. T. 382; 23 W. R. 559.

A condition of sale which provides that the purchaser shall assume that the vendor derived a good title under a will, does not preclude the purchaser from showing that, upon the true construction of the will, a good title did not pass. McVicker's Contract, In re, 25 L. R. Ir. 307.

—— Inclosure Act.]—Where the conditions of sale stated that the premises were acquired under an award of commissioners under an inclosure act, and that the abstract would not contain any earlier title than such award:—Held, that the award made in general terms must be primâ facie evidence of the lands being freehold, and that the purchaser had no right to inquire as to the title to the lands given by vendor in exchange. Cattell v. Corrall, 4 Y. & C. 228; 9 L. J., Ex. Eq. 37.

—— Private Act of Parliament.]—In 1857 in chancery, it had been certified that a good title could be made to certain estates, and the estates were afterwards sold under the court, subject to a condition that the title should not be required prior to a private act of parliament which recited the certificate of good title:—Held, that the title up to the period for which it had been certified might be accepted without examination for registration. Watney, In re, 38 L. J., Ch. 57.

—— Such Title as Vendor has.]—Where condition was for sale of interest "under such title as vendor lately held the same, an abstract of which may be seen," &c.:—Held, that the purchaser could not object to title. Freme v. Wright, 4 Madd. 364; 20 R. R. 313.

Assent of Executor.]—Circumstances under which special conditions of sale precluded a purchaser from requiring evidence of the assent of executors to a bequest. Jackson v. Whitehead, 6 Jur. (N.S.) 133.

Satisfactory Title.]—A stipulation to give such a title as shall be satisfactory to the purchaser does not authorise the purchaser to make any other than the usual objections to the title. Lord v. Stephens, 1 Y. & C. 222.

Opinion of Counsel.]—Where it was agreed that the contract should be void if the purchaser's counsel should be of opinion that a marketable title could not be made by a certain time, and counsel so advised, a bill by the purchaser for a specific performance with compensation was dismissed with costs. Williams v. Edwards, 2 Sim. 78; 29 R. R. 61.

Forged Deed—Verdict of Jury.]—The conditions of sale represented that a deed was a forgery, and that the vendor had made his affidavit to that effect, and, therefore, that the purchaser should not take any objection to the title by reason of that deed. The purchaser brought an action for his deposit, and obtained a verdict, the jury declaring the deed to be genuine:—Held, that in law the purchaser was precluded from rescinding on the ground that the statement of the vendor was untrue, and in equity that the vendor was entitled to specific performance of the contract, with costs. Corrall v. Cattell, 3 Y. & C. 413; 4 M. & W. 734; 8 L. J., Ex. 225.

Prior Voluntary Settlement.]—A purchaser may be precluded by a condition of sale from making any objection to title in respect of a voluntary settlement previously executed by the vendor, but he is entitled to proof that the settlement though voluntary in its inception, has not been set up by an ex post facto consideration. Small v. Torley, 25 L. R. Ir. 388.

Sale by First Mortgagees — Results of Inquiry.]—One of the conditions of sale was, "the sale was made by the first mortgagees under a power of sale contained in a mortgage deed made to them, and no purchaser should be entitled to require any abstract or evidence of the incumbrances subsequent to that deed, although notice of such incumbrances might appear in the title to be shown." The power of sale allowed the mortgagees to sell after giving notice to the mortgagor; the sale was made without any notice having been given to the mortgagor, but he had waived the notice; and before the waiver, had mortgaged to several subsequent mortgagees, who had executed a deed purporting to ratify the sale to the purchaser:—Held, that the contract was, that the title depended only upon the result of an inquiry into the compliance with the stipulations of the mortgage deed; and that as the title offered depended upon the result of an inquiry into the validity of the waiver, and of the ratification by the subsequent mortgagees, the purchaser was entitled to rescind and to recover the deposit. Forster v. Hoggart, 15 Q. B. 155; 19 L. J., Q. B. 340; 14 Jur. 767.

Breach of Trust—Leases by Trustees.]—Trustees having no power of leasing granted leases, and offered the property for sale subject to the leases. The conditions of sale stated that the leases were made by the trustees without authority, and provided that the purchaser should make no objection in respect of them:—Held, that the conditions precluded the purchaser from objecting to the title on the ground of the leases. Nicholls v. Corbett, 3 De G. J. & S. 18.

"Longest Term He could Grant."]—One of the terms of a contract was that "the plaintiff should let to the defendants, or assign if preferred, for the longest term he could grant":—Held, that the defendants were bound to take such title as the plaintiff had at the time of the agreement, and were not entitled to call upon the plaintiff to show his lessor's title. Molloy v. Sterne, 1 Dr. & Wal. 585.

Acceptance "without Dispute."]—Purchaser agreed to accept vendor's title "without dispute"; the purchaser afterwards objected that at the date of the agreement there was a flaw in the vendor's title:—Held, that the purchaser was precluded, by the terms of his contract, from insisting on the objection. Duke v. Barnett, 2 Coll. C. C. 337; 15 L. J., Ch. 173; 10 Jur. 87.

Will — Gift by Implication — Release of Testamentary Power.]—By his will dated May 25, 1875, a testator devised premises to which he was entitled in remainder in fee simple expectant on the determination of a life estate, subject to that life estate, to his four sisters (one of whom was the vendor) as their sole and separate property, and provided that in the event of any of his sisters dying, her share should be divided among the survivors; and by a codicil he directed that each of his said four sisters should have power to leave by will amongst any child or children they might have any property they might derive under his will or codicil, and that in default of issue or such will same should revert to the survivors. One of the sisters predeceased the tenant for life, leaving issue, but intestate. After the death of the tenant for life, by an indenture dated September 25, 1883, two of the surviving sisters and their respective husbands conveyed to the third sister (the vendor) all right, title, &c., of each of them respectively, to hold in fee simple. The vendor put up the premises for sale by auction, describing them in the particulars as being held in fee simple, and stating the facts above mentioned in the conditions of sale. One of the conditions bound the purchaser to admit that after the death of the tenant for life and the deceased sister, the entire interest in the premises became vested in the surviving sisters, and that the conveyance of September 25, 1883, vested in the vendor a good title to the premises for an estate in fee simple. The condition did not state, though the fact was so, that one of the surviving sisters who had conveyed to the vendor had children living, nor did it state that it was the vendor's contention that the conveyance by the sisters operated as a release of the testamentary power of appointment given them by the will and codicil. The purchaser objected that a good title was not shown by the vendor, that under the will and codicil the sisters only took life estates with a power of appointment amongst their children, and that the condition binding the purchaser to admit that the vendor had vested in her an estate in fee simple was bad and misleading, and issued a summons asking for a declaration that title had not been shown by the vendor, and for return of the deposit paid:—Held, that there was no implied gift to the children of the testator's sisters, that on the death intestate of the deceased sister the gift over to the survivors took effect, that the testamentary power of appointment given by the codicil to the survivors was capable of being released, and that it was released or extinguished by the conveyance, and that therefore a good title was shown by the vendor. Per Lord Ashbourne: The condition was not misleading. Per Fitzgibbon, Barry, and Walker, L.JJ.: The condition was not binding. Lyons and Carroll's Contract, In re, [1896] 1 Ir. R. 383—C. A.

Freehold and Copyhold Sold Together.]—On a contract for the sale of lands described as partly freehold and partly copyhold, and the timber thereupon (the latter at a specified valuation), upon a condition that the vendor should not be required to distinguish the freehold land from the copyhold, nor the respective boundaries thereof:—Held, that the purchaser was bound to pay for the timber at a valuation, notwithstanding that it might be wholly upon the copyhold land. Crosse v. Lawrence, 9 Hare, 462; 21 L. J., Ch. 889; 16 Jur. 142.

Jurisdiction.]—Where a condition of sale, under a decree of the court, stipulates that all documents dated more than twenty years ago shall be conclusive evidence of all matters referred to in or implied by them, and that all deeds and proceedings in chancery shall be at the expense of the purchaser, the vendor is only bound to set forth in his abstract so much of the pleadings in the suit as show that the court had jurisdiction. Waters v. Waters, 36 L. J., Ch. 195; 15 L. T. 406; 15 W. R. 191.

A reversionary legacy, in which infants were interested, was sold by an order of the court. There was a special condition that the purchaser should make no objection on the ground of want of jurisdiction :—Held, that the condition of sale was fair and reasonable, and that the purchaser was bound by it. Nunn v. Hancock, 40 L. J., Ch. 700 ; L. R. 6 Ch. 850 ; 25 L. T. 469 ; 19 W. R. 1041.

Defective Title Admitted.]—A contract for sale of superfluous land of a railway company, which had been conveyed by the company to the vendor, contained a stipulation that the purchaser should assume that everything was done by the company to enable them to sell the land as surplus land. The purchaser discovered that the prior owners had not waived their right of pre-emption ; and brought an action for the deposit and damages. The vendor then sold to one of the prior owners :—Held, that the purchaser was bound by the stipulations to admit the title of the company to sell to the vendor, and could not maintain the action. Hamand v. Best, 48 L. J., Ch. 503 ; 12 Ch. D. 1 ; 40 L. T. 769 ; 27 W. R. 742—C. A.

Purchaser, Owner of the Property.]—In an agreement for sale of freehold and leasehold property there was a condition that the purchaser was to assume that "M. was at the time of his death seised in fee simple of the premises," and should "not make any objection in respect of the prior title to the lot, whether such prior title is or is not referred to in any abstracted document." The purchaser discovered that M. was not at the date of his death seised of the hereditaments, but that he, the purchaser, was entitled to the same :—Held, that this condition did not preclude the purchaser from acquiring such knowledge aliunde, and on that ground refusing to carry out the contract. Jones v. Clifford, 45 L. J., Ch. 809 ; 3 Ch. D. 779 ; 35 L. T. 937 ; 24 W. R. 979.

Lease subject to Covenants.]—The subject of sale was described in the conditions "as a leasehold ground-rent of 23*l*.," reserved by a mesne lease in 1812, and assigned apart from the reversion by an indenture of 1817, and one of the conditions was, that no title prior to the assignment, or the title of any ground or mesne landlord, was to be produced. From a recital in the deed of 1817, it appeared that the land out of which the rent issued had been demised, with other lands, to the original lessee at a rent of 10*l*., and subject to certain covenants and conditions :—Held, that the purchaser might take an objection on this ground. Taylor v. Martindale, 1 Y. & C. C. C. 658.

Lease for Lives.]—Under a contract to make out a good title to a lease for lives renewable for ever, a vendor must show who are the lives in existence at the time of the contract. Anderson v. Higgins, 1 Jo. & Lat. 718.

Title of Lessor.]—The court will not make it a condition of sale of an interest under a lease that a purchaser shall not be at liberty to object to the title of the lessor to make the lease. A purchaser shall not require the plaintiff to show that the lessor had power, but may object aliunde. Willes v. Latham, Sau. & Sc. 441.

A condition of sale, that the purchaser shall not be at liberty to investigate the right of the lessor to grant a lease for lives renewable for ever, will not be granted. But the court will refer it to the remembrancer to settle a condition of sale, that the purchaser shall not require the production of the title of the lessor. Lahey v. Bell, 6 Ir. Eq. R. 122.

By the conditions of sale of leasehold premises, the vendors stipulated that they should not produce the lessor's title. The purchaser on investigating the title found it defective, and refused to complete :—Held, that the purchaser was not precluded from inquiring aliunde into the lessor's title. Shepherd v. Keatley, 4 Tyrw. 571 ; 1 C. M. & R. 117 ; 3 L. J., Ex. 288.

—— Covenant to Build.]—A condition, on the sale of leasehold property, that the title of the lessor would not be shown, and should not be inquired into :—Held, to be binding, and the purchaser compelled to perform his contract, although in the investigation before the master a serious defect in the lessor's title was discovered. Hume v. Bentley, 5 De G. & Sm. 520 ; 21 L. J., Ch. 760 ; 16 Jur. 1109.

Covenant in lease to build two houses worth 400*l*. ; five houses built, worth in the aggregate more than 400*l*., but no two being worth that sum :—Held, that the covenant had been substantially performed, and the court decreed specific performance. Ib.

—— Equitable Title.]—On the sale of leasehold premises, one of the conditions stated that the premises "were mortgaged by the late Mr. H. to H. and M., the trustees of his wife's marriage settlement, to secure part of the trust funds ; and the lease was granted to them, subject to such redemption as the said Mr. H. was entitled to under the said mortgage. Upon the death of Mr. H., Mrs. H., his widow, executrix, and universal legatee, became beneficially entitled to both the mortgage money and the premises ; and the vendors, her executors, are also the legal personal representatives of Mr. H. They will, within seven days from the day of sale, deliver to the purchasers an abstract of the said lease and the wills of Mr. and Mrs. H. ; but they are not to be called upon to deduce the lessor's or any earlier title, nor shall the subsistence of the lease be questioned, and the purchaser shall be satisfied with an assignment from them of the beneficial interest" :—Held, that the purchaser was, under this condition, entitled to an assignment of the legal estate which was outstanding in H. and M., and not merely to the assignment of such beneficial interest as the vendors had. Smith v. Ellis, 14 Jur. 682.

—— Agreement for Lease.]—A vendor stipulated that he would show title under an agreement for a lease. The vendor and lessee produced a paper, signed only by the lessee, and alleged that he had taken possession under this agreement :—Held, that the purchaser could not be compelled to take an equitable title, but was entitled to strict evidence that such an agreement had been entered into. Houghton v. Bankart, 5 L. T. 307.

—— Objections to.]—A condition provided that the purchaser shall not require any evidence of the title of lessors ; or object by reason of incumbrances affecting the title ; nor require the production of any title deeds prior to the lease, but shall admit that the lease has been duly executed by all the parties thereto, and be satisfied with same being handed over, and the title deduced therefrom to the owners :—Held, that this condition did not preclude the purchaser rejecting the title on the ground of objections to the lessor's title. Musgrave v. M'Cullagh, 14 Ir. Ch. R. 496.

Lessees for lives renewable for ever granted to L., his heirs and assigns, at a rent. L.'s estate did not answer the description of a lease for ever. Ib.

Leasehold premises were put up for sale on the condition that the title should commence with a deed dated in 1869, being an underlease from W. S.; "and no requisition or inquiry shall be made respecting the title of the lessor or his superior landlord, or his right to grant such underlease." A purchaser discovered that W. S., before 1869, had mortgaged the premises:—Held, that he was not precluded by the condition from taking the objection; and that he was not bound to complete the purchase. Waddell v. Woolfe, 43 L. J., Q. B. 138; L. R. 9 Q. B. 515; 23 W. R. 44.

—— Covenant to Insure.]—Leasehold property was sold, subject to a condition that possession under the lease should be deemed conclusive evidence of the due performance or sufficient waiver of any breach of the covenants in the lease up to the completion of the sale. A covenant to keep the premises insured was broken on two occasions, one before and one subsequently to the sale:—Held, that the condition precluded any objection on the ground of the former breach of covenant, but not of the latter, and that the purchaser was not bound to take the title. Howell v. Kightley, 21 Beav. 331; 25 L. J., Ch. 868.

—— Two Houses in One Lease.]—Two houses, held under one lease, were sold separately to A. and B. The lease was produced, and inspected at the sale by the purchasers' solicitors. The conditions of sale provided for the apportionment of the rent between the two purchasers, but did not notice covenants to insure, &c., and a proviso for re-entry on non-performance contained in the lease:—Held, that though A. might be evicted by the default of B., still he was, under the circumstances, bound to complete. Paterson v. Long, 6 Beav. 590; 13 L. J., Ch. 1; 7 Jur. 1049. And see cases, supra, col. 1478.

—— Underlease.]—Where an under-lessee described his property in the particulars and conditions of sale as held under a lease, and stipulated that the purchaser should not require proof of his, the vendor's, title:—Held, that the purchaser having discovered, aliunde, that the property was with others held under one lease and liable to forfeiture could not be compelled to complete. Darlington v. Hamilton, 1 Kay, 550; 2 Eq. R. 906; 23 L. J., Ch. 1000.

c. Condition as to Rescission.

When Waived.]—A condition of sale provided, that if the purchaser should raise objections to the title which the vendor should not be able or willing to remove, the vendor should be at liberty to rescind the contract, and that all objections which should not be taken in writing within ten days after the delivery of the abstract should be considered as waived:—Held, that the condition referred to the first delivery of objections, and if the vendor expressed his willingness to answer them, he could never afterwards rescind the contract. Tanner v. Smith, 10 Sim. 410; 4 Jur. 310.

Where under a similar condition the vendor had answered objections:—Held, that he had waived the condition:—Held, also, that such a condition ought to be discouraged, and ought not to receive a construction oppressive on the purchaser; and that the vendor's right to rescind the contract under the condition must be co-extensive with the purchaser's right to object to the title under the same condition. Morley v. Cook, 2 Hare, 106; 12 L. J., Ch. 136; 7 Jur. 79.

Costs and Damages.]—A condition, that if any objection or requisition should be made which the vendor should be unable or unwilling to remove, it should be lawful for him to rescind, and that in that case the purchaser should be entitled to a return of his deposit without interest, but should not be entitled to any costs or damages, does not entitle the vendor, after making numerous attempts to remove an objection, to return the deposit only, but the vendor must pay interest upon the deposit and the costs of the purchaser. M'Culloch v. Gregory, 1 K. & J. 286; 3 Eq. R. 495; 24 L. J., Ch. 246; 3 W. R. 231.

Vendor not answering Requisitions.] — A condition that the vendor shall be at liberty to rescind the contract, if the purchaser should "show any objection of title, conveyance, or otherwise, and should insist thereon":—Held, not to authorise the vendor to rescind the contract, without attempting to answer the requisitions, although some of them were untenable. Greaves v. Wilson, 25 Beav. 290; 27 L. J., Ch. 546; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 271; 6 W. R. 482.

Held, also, that he was bound to answer them, and give the purchaser an opportunity of either waiving or insisting upon them. Ib.

Semble, that he might rescind on account of requisitions which would be tenable in the absence of any condition as to rescinding, even though he might be able to satisfy them, if such requisitions should be of an unreasonable character. Ib. S. P., Turpin v. Chambers, 29 Beav. 104; 30 L. J., Ch. 470; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 459; 9 W. R. 363.

Whether Proper Condition.]—Semble, that a condition of sale giving the vendor a right to rescind the contract, in the event of his being unable or unwilling to comply with a purchaser's requisition as to conveyance, is not in general a proper condition. Hardman and Child, In re, 54 L. J., Ch. 695; 28 Ch. D. 712; 52 L. T. 465; 33 W. R. 544.

Notice.]—Where a condition provides that if the purchaser makes any requisition which the vendor is unable or unwilling to comply with, the vendor may, by notice in writing, annul the sale, the vendor may, if the purchaser insists upon a requisition, after being informed that the vendor is unable to comply with it, rescind the sale by notice, and need not give the purchaser a time within which to waive his requisition. Duddell v. Simpson, 36 L. J., Ch. 70; L. R. 2 Ch. 102; 15 L. T. 305; 15 W. R. 115.

Where an agreement was made subject to a condition that if the purchaser should insist on any requisition which the vendor should be unable to remove, the vendor should be at liberty to annul the sale:—Held, that a notice to annul the sale must be served within a reasonable time. Ker v. Crowe, Ir. R. 7 C. L. 181.

Contract to sell under a condition that if the purchaser should "make any objection to or requisition on the title" which the vendors should be "unable or unwilling to remove or comply with" the vendors might by notice in writing annul the contract. Requisitions were sent in, and thereupon the vendors, without attempting to answer them, served a formal notice on the purchaser, annulling the contract:—Held, that the right to rescind arose directly the requisitions were made; that the vendors were not bound to state their reasons for rescinding; that though the word "unwilling" ought to be interpreted "reasonably unwilling," yet on a general statement that the rescission was bonâ fide, and in the absence of any evidence of mala fides, the court ought not to infer that the vendors were acting unreasonably. Starr-Bowkett Building Society and Sibun, In re, 58 L. J., Ch. 651; 42 Ch. D. 375; 61 L. T. 346; 38 W. R. 1—C. A.

Valid Objection.]—By conditions of sale, all objections to the title were to be taken within twenty-eight days from the delivery of the abstract; and if they were not removed within fourteen days, the vendor was to be at liberty to annul the contract, on payment of the deposit, but without costs. The purchaser having made an objection which was not removed, the vendor gave notice to annul the contract. The objection being held valid, the court considered the vendor entitled to avail himself of the condition. Page v. Adam, 4 Beav. 269; 10 L. J., Ch. 407; 5 Jur. 793.

After Action for Specific Performance.]—A vendor put up for sale an absolute reversion, with conditions that any objections to title should be made within ten days after delivery of the abstract, and that the vendor, in case he should be either unable or unwilling to meet any objection, might rescind the contract upon return of the deposit without interest or costs. The vendor filed a bill for specific performance, and the case came on upon motion for decree:—Held, that, notwithstanding the expiration of the time allowed for making objections to title, the purchaser was entitled to raise objections in respect of matters not disclosed upon the face of the abstract, which he had subsequently discovered, and which would render the title bad or doubtful. Warde v. Dixson, 28 L. J., Ch. 315; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 698; 7 W. R. 148.

Held, also, that the vendor could not rescind the contract under the condition without first dismissing his bill with costs, and cannot rescind at all if the cause comes to hearing. Ib. S. P., Gray v. Fowler, 42 L. J., Ex. 161; L. R. 8 Ex. 249; 29 L. T. 297; 21 W. R. 916. And see Gardom v. Lee, infra, col. 1499.

Compensation.]—The particulars of sale (erroneously, but without any fraud) described a part of the property as customary leasehold. This property proved to be holden only for the residue of a lease, without any customary right of renewal. One of the conditions of sale enabled the vendor at any time after the delivery of objections, to vacate the sale. Another condition provided, that the purchaser should accept the existing lease and the assignment to the vendor as a sufficient title, and a further condition stipulated, that any error or mis-statement should not vitiate the sale, but the vendor or purchaser should allow or pay compensation:—Held, that the purchaser was entitled to specific performance of the contract, with compensation within the last-mentioned condition: that the power reserved to the vendor of vacating the sale must be construed to apply only to an objection of title: that the claim of the purchaser for compensation, in respect of the absence of any customary right to renew the lease, was not an objection to the title. Painter v. Newby, 11 Hare, 26; 1 Eq. R. 173; 22 L. J., Ch. 871; 17 Jur. 483; 1 W. R. 284. S. P., Hoy v. Smythes, 22 Beav. 510; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 1011.

In a contract for sale of lands containing valuable quarries, there was a clause reserving to the vendors power to rescind if any objection should be persisted in, and another providing that compensation should be given for any error in the description of the property or of the vendor's interest therein. The purchaser insisting that the quarries were vested in a third party the vendors exercised their power of rescinding:—Held, that the question between the parties was one of title, and that the rescission was therefore justifiable. Mawson v. Fletcher, 40 L. J., Ch. 131; L. R. 6 Ch. 91; 23 L. T. 545; 19 W. R. 141.

Repairs.]—Part of property sold was in the occupation of a tenant under a lease, by which the vendor agreed to repair. The repairs not being done, the tenant instituted a suit against both vendor and purchaser. The purchaser sent in an objection and requisition in respect of the repairs not being done:—Held, that such an objection was not an objection to title in respect of which the vendor was entitled to rescind the contract under a condition applying to objections to the abstract. Sale v. Lambert, 43 L. J., Ch. 470; L. R. 18 Eq. 1; 22 W. R. 478.

Whether Available after Judgment.]—One of the conditions of sale provided that if the purchaser should insist on a requisition which the vendors should be unable or unwilling to comply with, the vendor should, notwithstanding any previous negotiation or litigation, be at liberty, on giving notice in writing, to annul the sale, without interest, costs, or compensation:—Held, that "notwithstanding litigation" meant "notwithstanding pending litigation," and that notice to annul could not be given after an order declaring the title bad. Arbib and Class. In re, 60 L. J., Ch. 263; [1891] 1 Ch. 601; 64 L. T. 217; 39 W. R. 305—C. A.

Vendor Getting in Legal Estate.]—A person contracted to sell property, and showed only an equitable title, and the purchaser required the vendor to get in the legal estate:—Held, that such requisition was as to a matter of conveyance only, and the vendor could not rescind the contract under a condition empowering him to rescind if any objection to title were made which he was unable or unwilling to remove. Kitchen v. Palmer, 46 L. J., Ch. 611.

Incumbrance—Sale by Mortgagee.]—At a sale by a mortgagee under a power, one condition of sale was that for the purpose of requisitions the abstract was to be deemed to be perfect if it supplied the information suggesting the same, and if the purchaser should insist on any requisition which the vendor should be unable or should decline to comply with, he should be at liberty to rescind the contract. An abstract was delivered, but it did not show the real state of the title. The purchaser's solicitors were informed by mortgagees that the property had been mortgaged by deposit of an underlease to them. The vendor was required to pay the amount due to the mortgagee, but refused and rescinded :—Held, that the vendor was not entitled to rescind. Jackson and Oakshott, In re, 49 L. J., Ch. 523 ; 14 Ch. D. 851 ; 41 L. T. 719 ; 28 W. R. 794.

—— Perpetual Rentcharge.]—A railway company contracted to sell some superfluous land, "free from incumbrances," for 868*l*. The contract provided that, if the purchaser should decline to waive any valid objection to the title, the company might at any time rescind the contract, without paying the purchaser any costs or compensation. The abstract of title showed that the land was subject to a perpetual rent-charge of 63*l*. issuing out of it. The purchaser required the company to procure the release of the land from the rent-charge. This they declined to do, but offered to indemnify him against it :—Held, that the company were entitled to rescind under the condition. G. N. Ry. and Sanderson, In re, 53 L. J., Ch. 445 ; 25 Ch. D. 788 ; 50 L. T. 87 ; 32 W. R. 519.

Stamp.]—At a sale one of the conditions was, that an abstract of title should be delivered within ten days ; and another was, that if any requisition should be made with which the vendor should be unwilling to comply, he should be at liberty to rescind the contract. A. purchased two lots of the property, and within ten days an abstract of the title was sent, and subsequently another abstract was sent, on which A. objected that a deed had no ad valorem stamp. The vendors then rescinded the contract :—Held, that the vendors were entitled to rescind ; but that as they failed in giving a full abstract within ten days, A. was entitled to damages, though only of nominal amount. Steer v. Crowley, 14 C. B. (N.S.) 337 ; 32 L. J., C. P. 191 ; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1292 ; 11 W. R. 861.

Refusal of Necessary Parties to Concur.]—A vendor entitled to an underlease for a term of twenty-four years, less three days, put up the property for sale, as held under a lease for twenty-four years, relying on the promise of the persons entitled to the three days to concur. They afterwards refused to concur :—Held, that the vendor could rescind under a condition that if the purchaser makes any requisition that the vendor is unable or unwilling to comply with, the vendor may annul the sale. Duddell v. Simpson, supra.

Previous Contract on Register.]—Conditions of sale provided that in case the purchaser should make any objection to or requisition on title, which the vendor should be unable or unwilling to remove, he might annul the sale. A purchaser objected to an entry on a register of titles of a previous contract for the sale of the same property. The vendor denied this contract, and proceeded to have the entry removed, but was unable to obtain a speedy removal, and annulled the sale :—Held, that the vendor was entitled to annul the sale, provided he acted bonâ fide. Woolcott v. Peggie, 59 L. J., P. C. 44 ; 15 App. Cas. 42 ; 61 L. T. 845 ; 38 W. R. 465—P. C.

Death of Purchaser—Repayment of Purchase Money.]—A person contracted to purchase real estate, subject to a condition that if he made any requisition which the vendor was unable or unwilling to comply with the vendor should be at liberty to rescind the contract. He made several requisitions and died intestate without completing the contract, and after death the vendor rescinded it on account of his alleged inability to comply with one of the requisitions, which if not complied with might have given the purchaser a right to compensation, but would not have entitled him to annul the contract :—Held, that the heir-at-law of the purchaser was entitled to have the amount of the purchase money paid to him out of the intestate's personal estate. Hudson v. Cooke, 41 L. J., Ch. 306 ; L. R. 13 Eq. 417 ; 26 L. T. 180 ; 20 W. R. 407.

Sale before Certificate.]—Condition on sale by the court, that if the purchaser should make any objection the vendor should be unable or unwilling to comply with, the latter should be entitled to rescind, and the deposit should be returned. The sale took place before the chief clerk had made his certificate, and the court decided in a suit between the vendor and the purchaser of another lot, that the purchaser was entitled to be discharged :—Held, that the condition did not apply, and that the purchaser was entitled to the return of his deposit with interest and all his expenses. Powell v. Powell, 44 L. J., Ch. 311 ; L. R. 19 Eq. 422 ; 32 L. T. 148 ; 23 W. R. 482.

Deeds not in Vendor's Possession.]—Condition of sale, that if any purchaser should insist on any requisition which the vendors should consider themselves unable, or unwilling, to comply with, the vendors might by writing annul the sale. Purchaser required a copy of plans, an abstract of certain deeds recited in an abstracted deed, and a copy of the schedule to another deed to be furnished. The deeds were not in the vendor's possession, and as the purchaser insisted on these, the vendors gave notice rescinding the contract :—Held, that the conduct of the vendors was not unreasonable or capricious, that they were not bound to state reasons when answering the requisitions, and that they had the right to rescind. Glenton to Haden, In re, 53 L. T. 434 ; 50 J. P. 118—C. A.

Purchaser Withdrawing Requisitions.] — Land was sold under a condition that "if the purchaser should take any objection or make any requisition" which the vendor was "unable or unwilling to remove or comply with," the vendor might rescind the contract. The purchasers made requisitions, and the vendor declined to comply with them. The purchasers insisted, and the vendor served them with notice that he rescinded the contract. The purchasers in reply withdrew their requisitions, and stated that they were willing to complete :—Held, that the contract had been duly rescinded. Dames and Wood, In re, 54 L. J., Ch. 771 ; 29 Ch. D. 626 ; 53 L. T. 177 ; 33 W. R. 685—C. A.

Unwillingness to answer Requisitions—Unfair Delay in Exercising Right.] — A vendor, who, in an agreement for sale, reserves to himself the right of rescinding the contract on the purchaser's refusing to withdraw a requisition which the vendor is unwilling or unable to answer, must exercise such right fairly and honestly. Where there has been undue delay on the part of the vendor in exercising his power of rescission after it has arisen, and he has acted in the meantime as if he had rescinded, or was about to rescind, the purchaser may treat the contract as rescinded. Smith v. Wallace, 64

No Title to Part.]—Vendors agreed to sell a piece of land, containing about four acres, under conditions that the vendors might rescind if they could not comply with any requisition. They could make out a title only to three and a half acres of land:—Held, that they were entitled to rescind the contract. Heppenstall v. Hose, 51 L. T. 589; 33 W. R. 30; 49 J. P. 100.

Vendor having no Title.]—A condition that, if the purchaser shall make any objection or requisition which the vendor shall be unwilling to comply with, the vendor may annul the sale, does not enable the vendor to rescind where he fails to show any title at all. Bowman v. Hyland, 47 L. J., Ch. 581; 8 Ch. D. 588; 39 L. T. 90; 26 W. R. 876. And see Terry and White, In re, supra, col. 1180.

No Requisition Made.]—A condition that if any objection or requisition should be made and insisted upon which the vendors should be unable or unwilling to comply with, the vendors should be at liberty, by notice in writing, to rescind the sale. The purchaser sent the conveyance to the vendors for approval, they inserted a recital that the property was sold subject to a restrictive covenant in a deed prior to the commencement of title, and which did not appear on the abstract. The purchaser objected and asked for a copy of the deed. The vendors then gave notice that they rescinded:—Held, that there was no requisition made or insisted upon, and that the vendors must specifically perform, the conveyance to be according to the purchaser's draft. Monckton to Gilzean, 54 L. J., Ch. 257; 27 Ch. D. 555; 51 L. T. 320; 32 W. R. 973.

Costs.] — Land sold under conditions. (7.) If any purchaser make any objections or requisitions, the vendors shall be at liberty, at their election, either to answer such objections and comply with such requisitions, or to rescind the contract for sale on repaying the deposit alone and without interest for the same, and without incurring any liability to pay any expenses for investigating the title. (8.) That such right of the vendors to rescind, shall not be waived, or affected by any negotiation as to any objections or requisitions, or attempt to obviate or comply with the same. The purchaser objected that the vendors had no power to sell, but the vendors insisted they had power. The purchaser thereupon incurred expense in investigating the title, and it turned out that the vendors had no power to sell: — Held, that there was no negotiation or attempt to obviate objections within the eighth condition, and the vendors having elected to insist on a specific performance could not rescind, and were liable to pay the expenses of investigating the title. Gardom v. Lee, 3 H. & C. 651; 34 L. J., Ex. 113; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 393; 12 L. T. 430; 13 W. R. 719.

See RESCISSION AND ABANDONMENT, supra, col. 1239.

10. COSTS OF INVESTIGATING TITLE.

Perpetuating Testimony.] — Costs of perpetuating testimony of will allowed to purchaser. Machrell v. Hunt, cited 2 Madd. 37.

Waiving Objections.]—Upon a bill praying a specific performance, "if a good title could be made," the master reported that such title could not be made, and the plaintiff then consented to waive all objections to title:—Held, that he might do so, but, being aware at the hearing of the objections, he must pay the costs of going on to investigate the title. Bennett v. Fowler, 2 Beav. 302.

Verifying Title.]—Bill by a purchaser praying specific performance upon the terms of the vendor deducing a good title, at her own expense, dismissed, the court being of opinion, upon the facts, that the vendor only contracted to deliver an abstract of title and verify it so far as she had the means in her possession at her own expense, but that the purchaser should be at the expense of completing its verification. Thomas v. Blackman, 1 Coll. C. C. 301.

Words construed so as to have some meaning taken rather than rejected: therefore, vendor proposing a price clear of all expenses, construed that the purchaser should bear the expense of making out the title, the law imposing on him the expense of the conveyance. Stratford v. Bosworth, 2 V. & B. 341.

—— Deducted from Purchase Money.]—When plaintiff neglects to make out title to purchaser, the latter will be allowed to make it out himself, and deduct expense from purchase money. Harding v. Middleton, 1 Hog. 80.

—— Sale of Two Estates.]—By the same instrument, the plaintiff agreed to sell an estate to the defendant, and the defendant agreed to sell another estate to the plaintiff. The defendant could not make a good title. On a reference as to the plaintiff's title, the master found that plaintiff could make a good title; but he did not find that he could make such title before the filing of the bill:—Held, that the defendant was liable to the costs of investigating the title in the master's office. Croome v. Lediard, 2 Myl. & K. 293; 3 L. J., Ch. 98.

—— Evidence.]—Construction of a contract that a reference of the expenses was confined to the expense of the conveyance; but the evidence of the attorney was admitted for the defendant to prove the intention of both parties, according to verbal instructions, that the plaintiff should also pay the expenses of making out the defendant's title. Ramsbottom v. Gosden, 1 V. & B. 165; 12 R. R. 207.

Bankrupt's Estate.]—In the case of purchasers from the assignees of a bankrupt, the rule as to the costs of investigating the title is similar to that governing scales under decrees of courts of equity. Page, In re, 1 Dr. & Wal. 31.

Deeds not in Vendor's Possession.]—Where title deeds are in the hands of persons residing in the country, the vendor must bear the expense of the purchaser's solicitor sending a clerk to compare the abstract with the deeds. Hughes v. Wynne, 8 Sim. 85. Affirmed, 1 Jur. 720.

Counsel's Opinion.]—A purchaser, discharged by reason of bad title, is entitled to the cost of counsel's opinion on the title, and of the preparation of the case for counsel. Barton v. Downes, Fl. & K. 633; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 607.

Title not Shown on Abstract.]—Title established before master, not being clear on abstract, vendor pays costs. —— v. Collinge, cited 3 V. & B. 143, n.

Costs to a purchaser; the vendor having established his title before the master after contest, upon a different ground from that in the abstract delivered. Fielder v. Higginson, 3 V. & B. 142; 13 R. R. 167.

Perusal and Execution.]—The conditions of sale requiring purchaser to pay the expenses of all assignments and surrenders of terms, &c.:—Held, that the purchaser must pay the expenses of perusal and execution. Johnson v. George, 2 Jur. 886.

Incomplete Abstract.]—Where a vendor has not furnished a complete abstract until after a general reference as to title, he will have to pay costs of the reference, although no defect of title is discovered upon the inquiry, except such as was already known to the purchaser. Wilson v. Williams, 3 Jur. (N.S.) 810.

Title first Shown after Decree.]—Objection to complete on ground of inadequacy of value. Decree for specific performance and a reference to master, who found that a good title was first shown a year after decree:—Held, that the vendor was entitled to the costs of the reference to the master. Abbott v. Sworder, 22 L. J., Ch. 235.

A decree for specific performance of a contract to purchase with a reference as to title having been made against the purchaser:—Held, that he was bound to pay the costs of having the title investigated in chambers. McNichol v. Kay, 4 W. R. 801.

Mortgage by Vendor—Production of Deeds.]—A vendor agreed to sell a house "and the inheritance thereof in fee simple in possession, free from incumbrances"; and the contract provided that the vendor, and "all other necessary parties if any," should make and execute to the purchaser a proper assurance, and that "such assurance, and every other act and thing required by the purchaser for perfecting or completing the vendor's title or otherwise," should be "prepared, obtained, made, and done at the expense of the purchaser." When the abstract of title was delivered, it appeared that the property was subject to a mortgage effected by the vendor:—Held, that under sub-s. 6 of s. 3 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, the costs of the production and inspection required by the purchaser of the deeds and documents in the abstract referred to, which were in the possession of the vendor's mortgagee, were thrown upon the purchaser, and that there was nothing in the terms of the contract to bring the case within the exception contained in sub-s. 9 of the same section; and that the costs of obtaining the concurrence of the mortgagee were clearly within the terms of the contract. Willett and Argenti, In re, 60 L. T. 735.

And see Stuart & Olivant's Contract, In re, supra, col. 1349.

—— Parties Concurring.]—On a sale by first mortgagees under a power of sale contained in their mortgage deed:—Held, that the costs occasioned by the concurrence of the mortgagor and the second mortgagee must be paid by the vendors. Thompson and Holt, In re, 59 L. J., Ch. 651; 44 Ch. D. 492; 62 L. T. 651; 38 W. R. 524.

11. Covenants for Title.

See supra, col. 1197.

E. Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874.

1. Jurisdiction.

Question of Law or Fact.]—The summary jurisdiction created by s. 9 of the Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874, is not intended to apply to cases where there are questions of controverted fact, but is intended for the settlement of short points of law or construction. Popple, In re, 25 W. R. 248.

On a summons under the Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874, the court has power to direct a covenant to be inserted in a conveyance, and to settle the terms of the covenant. But, semble, the court has no power in such a summons to determine a preliminary question of fact. Gray and Metropolitan Ry., In re, 44 L. T. 567.

Evidence Admissible.]—On a summons under s. 9, the parties are placed in the same position, and the court has exactly the same powers, and can receive the same evidence as in the case of a reference to chambers as to title. Burroughes and Lynn's Contract, In re, 46 L. J., Ch. 528; 5 Ch. D. 601; 36 L. T. 778; 25 W. R. 520.

Evidence, therefore, by affidavit and cross-examination thereon, is admissible as to the vendor's title, and it is open to the purchaser to show that the vendor has no title. Ib.

Specific Performance.] — Where, on a summons under the Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874, objection is taken that the contract, if valid, is not one of which specific performance can be obtained, the court will express an opinion upon the construction of the contract, and will decide any question raised at the hearing of the summons which, if left undecided, could be raised again in an action for damages. Lander and Bagley's Contract, In re, 61 L. J., Ch. 707; [1892] 3 Ch. 41; 67 L. T. 521.

Costs of Investigating Title.]—On making an order under the Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874, declaring that the vendor has not shown a good title, the court has jurisdiction to order the vendor to pay the purchaser's costs of investigating the title, and to charge them upon the vendor's interest in the property. Higgins and Hitchman's Contract, In re (supra, col. 1175), followed. Yeilding and Westbrook, In re, 55 L. J., Ch. 496; 31 Ch. D. 344; 54 L. T. 531; 34 W. R. 397.

And see Davis and Cavey, In re, supra, col. 1175.

Return of Deposit.]—Per Lord Ashbourne and Barry, L.J.: Where as the natural consequence of the order of the court on a summons under the Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874, it would be just to order the return of the deposit to the purchaser, the court has jurisdiction so to order. Lyon's and Carroll's Contract, In re, [1896] 1 Ir. R. 383—C. A.

—— Interest.]—In exercising the summary jurisdiction given by s. 9 of the Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874, the court has power not only to answer the question submitted to it, but to direct such things to be done as are the natural consequence of the decision. Therefore, where the court decided that the vendor had not shown a good title or answered the requisitions, the court ordered the vendor to return the deposit, with interest at 4 per cent. from the day when it was paid, and to pay the purchaser's costs of the investigation of the title. Higgins and Hitchman, In re (supra), and Yeilding and Westbrook, In re (supra), approved. Hargreaves and Thompson, In re, 56 L. J., Ch. 199; 32 Ch. D. 454; 55 L. T. 239; 34 W. R. 708—C. A. S. P., Smith and Stott's Contract, In re, 48 L. T. 512; 31 W. R. 411.

Whether the court has jurisdiction under the Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874, to order interest which has been erroneously paid by a purchaser to be repaid to him—quære. Young and Harston's Contract, In re, 54 L. J., Ch. 1144; 31 Ch. D. 168; 53 L. T. 837; 34 W. R. 84; 50 J. P. 245—C. A.

Damages.]—The purchaser cannot, on a summons under the Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874, recover damages for loss occasioned to him by the delay in completion of the purchase. Wilson and Steven's Contract, In re, 63 L. J., Ch. 863; [1894] 3 Ch. 546; 8 R. 641; 71 L. T. 388; 43 W. R. 23.

Rescission.]—Application under Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874, for rescission of contract by vendor. Jackson and Oakshott, In re, 49 L. J., Ch. 523; 14 Ch. D. 851; 41 L. T. 719; 28 W. R. 794.

—— Validity of Notice.]—Upon a summons under the Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874, the court had jurisdiction to determine the validity of a notice given by a vendor to rescind his contract for sale. Jackson and Woodburn, In re, 57 L. J., Ch. 243; 37 Ch. D. 44; 57 L. T. 753; 36 W. R. 396.

—— Sale by Tenant for Life—Consent of Assignee for Value.]—A tenant for life contracted to sell the settled estates free from incumbrances. His wife, who claimed to be an assignee for value of his life interest, was not a party to the contract, and refused to consent to the sale. The purchaser took out a summons under the Settled Land Acts and the Vendor and Purchaser Act, asking for a declaration whether her consent was necessary, and that, if it was necessary, he was entitled to rescind the contract or to have specific performance, with compensation:—Held, that she had been improperly served with the summons, and must be dismissed from the proceedings. Ailesbury Settled Estates, In re, 62 L. J., Ch. 1012; 3 R. 704; 69 L. T. 493; 42 W. R. 45.

Resale by Purchaser before Completion.]—A railway company agreed to sell superfluous lands in a manner not authorised by the powers of the company. The purchaser from the railway having agreed to sell to B.:—Held, on a summons under the Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874, that the court could not compel B. to complete. Thackwray and Young, In re, 58 L. J., Ch. 72; 40 Ch. D. 34; 59 L. T. 815; 37 W. R. 74.

Married Woman—Payment of Purchase Money to.] — A married woman contracted to sell a leasehold vested in trustees for her under a will. The purchaser objected to the title on the ground that she was by the will restrained from anticipation. On a summons under the Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874:—Held, on appeal, that as the question did not concern the purchaser, the court had no jurisdiction to decide it on a vendor and purchaser summons; but the court gave the vendor leave to amend the summons so as to make it an originating summons, the proper parties being before the court. Tippett and Newbould, In re, 37 Ch. D. 444; 58 L. T. 754; 36 W. R. 597—C. A.

Voluntary Grant.]—The tenant for life of lands, of which the tenant in tail in remainder was an infant, was desirous of making a voluntary grant of part thereof as a site for a church:—Held, that the Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874, did not apply to a voluntary grant, but that this defect might be cured by the admission of a contract for a nominal consideration. Salisbury (Marquis), In re, 45 L. J., Ch. 250; 2 Ch. D. 29; 34 L. T. 5; 23 W. R. 824. And see Briggs and Spicer, In re, supra, col. 1466.

Sale under Power by Legal Personal Representative of Mortgagee.]—Section 4 of the Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874, does not enable the legal personal representative of a deceased mortgagee of real estate to convey upon a sale under a power in the mortgage. White's Mortgage, In re, 51 L. J., Ch. 856; 29 W. R. 820. And see Spradbery's Mortgage, In re, 49 L. J., Ch. 623; 14 Ch. D. 514; 43 L. T. 82; 28 W. R. 822, supra, col. 1105.

Section 2, Sub-s. 1.]—This section does not alter the rule as to notice to a lessee. Ib. And see Thornewell v. Johnson, and Patman v. Harland, supra, col. 1225.

Recitals in Conveyances.]—Under the Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874, s. 2, a recital in a conveyance more than twenty years old, that the vendor was seised in fee simple, is sufficient evidence of that fact, and no prior abstract of title can be demanded except so far as the recital shall be proved to be inaccurate; and in such cases a forty years' title is not required. Bolton v. London School Board, 47 L. J., Ch. 461; 7 Ch. D. 766; 38 L. T. 277; 26 W. R. 549.

A deed of 1858 contained a recital of a deed of 1845, and a recital that the trustees "in pursuance of the trust for sale conferred on them" by that deed had caused the property to be put up for sale:—Held, that by s. 2 of the Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874, this recital, not being shown to be inaccurate, was conclusive evidence that the deed of 1845 had not been revoked. Marsh and Granville (Earl), In re, 53 L. J., Ch. 81; 24 Ch. D. 11; 48 L. T. 947; 31 W. R. 845.

Costs.]—A requisition as to the competency of a married woman to give a discharge for a legacy, on a sale of land charged with the legacy, having been brought under the Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874, the judges ordered each party to pay his own costs. Coward and Adams' Purchase, In re, 44 L. J., Ch. 384; L. R. 20 Eq. 179; 32 L. T. 682; 23 W. R. 605.

The question of costs as between vendor and purchaser where the title is disputed considered. Osborne to Rowlett, 49 L. J., Ch. 310; 13 Ch. D. 774; 42 L. T. 650; 28 W. R. 365.

—— Sale under Power in Mortgage—Evidence of Subsistence of Security.]—Mortgage by conveyance of the fee simple to trustees upon trust, to sell the property, and discharge the debt, &c., out of the proceeds, and to pay the residue to the mortgagor, his executors, administrators, or assigns. The deed contained provisions rendering unnecessary the concurrence of the mortgagor or his heirs in any conveyance. The deed, however, did not contain any provision exonerating a purchaser from inquiring whether default had been made in payment of principal or interest, nor as to whether anything was owing on the security. The vendors sold as mortgagees, in pursuance of the trust contained in the mortgage. On a summons under the Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874, by the vendors asking for a declaration that a good title had been shown :—Held, that, without the concurrence of all the persons at present entitled to the equity of redemption, it was necessary, in order to enable the vendors to make a good title to the property, that they should, by obtaining statutory declarations, furnish evidence of the subsistence of the mortgage from the death of the mortgagor down to the date of the sale :—Held, also, that in the present case the proper order would be that the vendors' expenses in procuring and furnishing the purchasers with the evidence of payment of the interest on the mortgage should be considered as part of the vendors' costs of the summons, and that no costs of the summons should be given to either side. Edwards and Green, In re, 58 L. T. 789.

2. PRACTICE.

Trustee Disclaiming Freeholds of Bankrupt.]—The trustee of a bankrupt owner of freeholds, burdened with onerous covenants, disclaimed them, and subsequently he and the bankrupt purported to convey the lands :—Held, on a summons under the Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874, that after the disclaimer the subsequent conveyance was inoperative. Mercer and Moore, In re, 49 L. J., Ch. 201 ; 14 Ch. D. 287 ; 42 L. T. 311 ; 28 W. R. 485.

Custody of Title Deeds—Retention by Vendor as "Part of an Estate."]—A mortgagee of freehold land and policies on the life of the mortgagor under one deed, who, during the life of the mortgagor, in exercise of the power of sale contained in the mortgage, sells the land, but retains the policies, does not retain "part of an estate" within rule 5 of s. 2 of the Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874, and is therefore not entitled to retain the mortgage deed, but must deliver it to the purchaser on completion. Fuller and Leathley's Contract, In re, 66 L. J., Ch. 543 ; [1897] 2 Ch. 144 ; 76 L. T. 646 ; 45 W. R. 454. And see cases, supra, col. 1347.

Objection to Title.]—Where conditions of sale stipulated that all objections and requisitions should be sent in within ten days from the delivery of the abstract :—Held, that, although the ten days had expired, the purchaser was entitled to raise the objection, by summons under the Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874 ; that the vendors had no power to sell. Tanqueray-Willaume and Landau, In re, 51 L. J., Ch. 434 ; 20 Ch. D. 465 ; 46 L. T. 542 ; 30 W. R. 801. And see Cowe and Neve, In re, supra, col. 1455.

Sale by Devisee of Trustee.]—A testator devised and bequeathed his real and personal estate to his wife for life, and from and after her decease to A. and B., "their heirs, executors, and administrators, upon trust to sell and dispose thereof at such times and in such manner as they my said trustees shall deem expedient." A. and B. both predeceased the tenant for life, B., the surviving trustee, having devised his trust estates. Upon the death of the tenant for life :—Held, upon a summons under the Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874, that B.'s devisees could make a good title, and one which the court would force upon a purchaser. Osborne to Rowlett, 49 L. J., Ch. 310 ; 13 Ch. D. 774 ; 42 L. T. 650 ; 28 W. R. 365.

Legal Estate in Whom Vested.]—A testator, after directing his debts to be paid, devised and bequeathed all his real and personal estate to his four daughters to be divided equally between them, provided as follows—that the share of his wife should be divided after her death between his four daughters or the survivors and their children ; and the testator appointed his wife and T., his executors, to act jointly in carrying out all the intentions of his will :—Held, upon an application under the Vendor and Purchaser Act, that the legal estate in freeholds was vested in the executors who could make a good title to a purchaser. Davies to Jones, 52 L. J., Ch. 720 ; 24 Ch. D. 190 ; 49 L. T. 624.

Requisitions.]—A purchaser made the following requisition :—"Is there to the knowledge of the vendors or their solicitors any settlement, deed, fact, omission, or any incumbrance affecting the property not disclosed by the abstract?"—Held, that neither the vendors nor their solicitors were bound under the Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874, to answer any part of the requisition. Ford and Hill, In re, 48 L. J., Ch. 327 ; 10 Ch. D. 365 ; 40 L. T. 41 ; 27 W. R. 371.

Specific Performance Barred.]—A purchaser who has availed himself of the provisions of the Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874, and has thereby obtained an order on summons which has disposed of every objection which he thought fit to raise, and under which the vendor has been ordered to make compensation, is not entitled to bring an action for specific performance of the contract for sale and damages. If a vendor does not comply with the order made on the vendor and purchaser summons, the purchaser should apply in chambers to get it enforced. Thompson v. Ringer, 44 L. T. 507 ; 29 W. R. 520.

Judgment to be Given in Court.]—On a summons under the Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874, heard in chambers, judgment ought to be given in court if the purchaser desires it. Coleman and Jarrom, In re, 46 L. J., Ch. 33 ; 4 Ch. D. 165 ; 35 L. T. 614 ; 25 W. R. 137.

Appeal.]—The time within which an appeal can be brought from an order under the Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874, s. 9, is twenty-one days. Blyth and Young, In re, 13 Ch. D. 416 ; 41 L. T. 746 ; 28 W. R. 266—C. A.

A. MEANING OF THE WORD "VEST" WHEN USED BY SETTLOR.

1. WHEN CONSTRUED LITERALLY.

In General—To be Vested at Twenty-one.]—Testator, after making a provision for the maintenance of his children, gives "all the rest, residue, and remainder of his real and personal estate" to his son T., "to be a vested interest on his attaining the age of twenty-one," and "if he shall happen to die before" then to his daughter E., with remainders over. The rents and profits are to accumulate until T. attains the age of twenty-one, or dies under that age. Glanvill v. Glanvill, 2 Mer. 38; 16 R. R. 142.

A testator devised certain freehold premises to his wife during widowhood, remainder to his nephew R. B. R. for life, and, after his decease, unto and equally between all and every the children of his said nephew R. B. R., their heirs and assigns, as tenants in common; but in case there should be no child of his nephew R. B. R. living at the time of the decease or marrying again of the testator's wife, then over: and he devised the residue of his real estate to certain other persons in fee; and, by a codicil of even date, he directed as follows, "that neither the said R. B. R., nor any or either of his issue, shall, by virtue of this my will, take or be considered as entitled to, a vested interest or interests, unless and until they shall respectively attain the age of twenty-one years;" with benefit of survivorship in case of the death of any one or more of such children under such age. R. B. R., during the life of the testator's widow, attained the age of twenty-one, and, upon her decease, took possession of the devised premises; and, at his death, left several children, all under the age of twenty-one:—Held, that the devises to the children were contingent, and, therefore, in the event failed; and that the heir-at-law was entitled to the devised estate. Russel v. Buchanan, 7 Sim. 628; 5 L. J., Ch. 122. And see 2 C. & M. 561; 3 L. J., Ex. 194; 4 Tyrw. 384.

—— Vested Interest at Twenty-one or Marriage—No Gift Over.]—W. gave one third of the residue of his personal estate to trustees to invest, and pay so much of the interest as might be necessary for the maintenance of his two granddaughters, and to accumulate the surplus until the younger of them should attain the age of twenty-one; and after that event, upon trust to pay and divide the principal moneys equally between them, share and share alike; and he declared that each of his granddaughters should have a vested interest on her attaining twenty-one or marriage; and if either of his grandchildren should happen to depart this life before she should have attained a vested interest, then he gave her share to the survivor. There was no gift over:—Held, that neither of the grandchildren took a vested interest until they attained twenty-one or married; and that, therefore, in the events which had happened, viz., the death of both of them under twenty-one without being married, the interests of both—i.e., of the grandchild who died first, and of the survivor—formed part of the testator's undisposed-of personal estate. Wakefield v. Dyott, 4 Jur. (N.S.) 1098; 7 W. R. 31.

—— To be Vested at Twenty-five.]—Devise of real estate with the residue of the personal estate upon long limitations in strict settlement, including persons unborn: a subsequent direction, that none of the devisees shall take or come into possession before the age of twenty-five, was held confined to the actual possession, and not to operate by way of revocation; and therefore upon the death of the first tenant for life under twenty-five the accumulation belonged to his personal representative. Montgomerie v. Woodley, 5 Ves. 522.

A testator devised his real estate to trustees in fee for T. for life, with remainder to the trustees to preserve contingent remainders, with remainder to the first and other sons of T. in tail male with other remainders over, with a proviso that the real estate should not vest in any person thereby made tenant for life or in tail until he should have attained twenty-five, and the rents and profits were in the meantime to form part of the personal estate:—Held, that the direction in reference to vesting amounted to a limitation void for remoteness, and that the direction was not modified by a provision for maintenance in the meanwhile. Lushington v. Penrice, 18 L. T. 597; 16 W. R. 836.

Bequest in trust for all the children (then unborn) of A., to be vested at twenty-five for sons, and at that age or marriage for daughters, with a subsequent direction that, if only one child, the whole should be paid to that child at twenty-five, or marriage with consent, if a daughter:—Held, that the vesting, and not the payment only, was postponed till twenty-five or marriage, and that the bequest was void for remoteness. Griffith v. Blunt, 4 Beav. 248; 10 L. J., Ch. 372.

Bequest to a living person for life, and afterwards to his children, followed by a declaration that these interests should be considered a vested interest at the age of twenty-five, and a gift over to the issue of any dying under twenty-five:—Held, too remote. Rowland v. Tawney, 26 Beav. 67.

—— Provision for Maintenance.]—A gift by will, of real and personal estate to trustees, upon trust, to pay half the income to E. for life, and after her death to her child or children equally; the shares of sons to be vested in them on attaining twenty-five, and of daughters on attaining that age or day of marriage, which should first happen, and in the meantime to be applied for their maintenance, with survivorship in case of the death of any child before twenty-five or marriage respectively, with a similar gift to S. and her children of the other moiety, and a gift over in case of the death of either E. or S. without leaving issue, or leaving such and they should all die under twenty-five:—Held, that the limitations to the children of E. and S. were void for remoteness. Pickford v. Brown, 2 K. & J. 426; 25 L. J., Ch. 702; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 781; 4 W. R. 473.

Held, also, that the direction for maintenance was altogether void. Ib.

Bequest to A. for life, and afterwards to her children equally "to be vested" on such as should attain twenty-five, and "to be payable" as soon as might be after that age should be attained, with powers of maintenance and advancement out of their "vested or expectant portions," with a gift over to B. if no child should attain twenty-five:—Held, first, that the gift to the children was too remote; and, secondly, on A.'s death without having been married, that the gift to B. could not take effect, as an alternative limitation to a person in esse at the date of the will. Thatcher's Trust, In re, 26 Beav. 365.

Where a testator, after giving certain sums in certain shares among the six children of A., naming them, to be vested and payable at twenty-five with certain provisions for their maintenance until then, afterwards gives another sum of 6,000*l.* subject to certain life interests, to all the children then born or thereafter to be born, to be vested and payable at twenty-five, and with the like trust for maintenance, and subject to the like provisions and conditions, as the legacies before given to the children then born and named:—Held, that the legacy of 6,000*l.* was void for remoteness as to all the children, both those then born and also the unborn. Comport v. Austen, 12 Sim. 218. And see Edmondson's Estate, In re, post, col. 1516.

—— Portions to be Vested Two Years after Testator's Decease.]—Devise upon trust, by mortgage, or out of the rents and profits, to pay debts, and afterwards to raise portions for the testator's daughters, "such portions to become due, and be considered as vested at the expiration of two years next after my decease, if my debts shall be then paid." This is a condition precedent to the portions becoming vested; and, one of the daughters having died while her portion remained unpaid, upon a question between her representative and the persons who would be entitled in the event of the portion not having become vested in her lifetime, an inquiry was directed as to the time when the debts were, or might have been, paid. Bernard v. Montague, 1 Mer. 422. See 11 Ves. 508, n.

A testator gave his residuary real and personal estate to his daughter for life, and afterwards he directed his trustees to pay, transfer, and divide his residuary estate between his children, and to (by substitution) the issue of such as should have died in his lifetime leaving issue living at his decease. He subsequently authorised his trustees, in their discretion, if they should think fit, to pay the male issue their shares at any time between attaining twenty-one and thirty, with power of maintenance and advancement in the meanwhile; but he directed that the shares of female issue should be vested at twenty-one :—Held, that the shares of the issue vested on the death of the daughter. Barnet v. Barnet, 29 Beav. 239.

A testator devised and bequeathed certain freehold and leasehold property upon trust, inter alia, to pay two annuities to J. A., to whom he also bequeathed a legacy of 1,000*l*., payable out of his personal estate, and by a subsequent clause in his will the testator directed that the bequest by annuity and legacy for J. A. should not become payable or vest in him until he should have attained the age of twenty-one years, nor then, unless he should have conducted himself to the satisfaction of the trustees of the will, who were empowered in the meantime to pay and advance such part of the provision so made for J. A., either out of the annuities or principal of the legacy, for his maintenance, education, and advancement, as they might think fit, and the testator directed that J. A. should be brought up a Protestant; and that, in the event of misconduct on his part, or of his not continuing a Protestant, the annuities and legacy, or such portion thereof as should remain undisposed of and unappropriated, and save such portion thereof as should be necessary for his actual support, should go over upon certain charitable trusts therein mentioned. The testator also directed that J. A. should not have any power to dispose of or incumber the said bequests or legacies until he should have attained twenty-five and have become otherwise entitled to them as aforesaid. J. A. survived the testator, and attained twenty-one, but died under twenty-five years of age :—Held, upon the construction of the will, that the word "vest" must be interpreted in its primary meaning, and could not be construed as referring merely to the time of payment; and that the gifts of the legacy and of the annuities, even so far as they were payable out of personal estate, were contingent on J. A.'s attaining twenty-five. Creeth v. Wilson, 9 L. R. Ir. 216.

—— Share to be Absolutely Vested on Death of Parent.]—A father left to his trustees 6,000*l*., on trust, as to one moiety, for his daughter J., for life, and as to the other, for his daughter A., for life, and after the decease of each of them leaving lawful issue or other lineal descendants her or them surviving, to pay, assign, and transfer the principal trust moneys . . . of her or them so dying unto her or their child or children, or other lineal descendants respectively, to be equally divided between them, if more than one, share and share alike, such child or children or other lineal descendants to take per stirpes and not per capita, such principal trust moneys to be paid to them respectively, when and as they respectively should attain the age of twenty-one, with a provision for maintenance in the meantime, "but nevertheless the shares of the child or children of and in the principal trust moneys shall be absolute vested interests in him, her, or them, immediately on the decease of his, her, or their respective parent or parents, and transmissible to his, her, or their executors or administrators respectively." Then followed a gift over, in case of either J. or A. dying without issue or lineal descendants, of her share to the survivor for life, with remainders to the children or other lineal descendants of such survivor, with various remainders over in the event of both J. and A. dying without leaving issue or other lineal descendants. A. had seven children, three of whom died in her lifetime :—Held, that the interests of the children did not vest till the death of the tenant for life, and that, accordingly, the fund was divisible into fourths, and not into sevenths. Selby v. Whittaker, 47 L. J., Ch. 121; 6 Ch. D. 239; 37 L. T. 514; 26 W. R. 117—C. A.

Settlement Limitations—Gift to a Class.]—Trust funds were settled, subject to life interests in the husband and wife, as portions for the children of the marriage, to be vested interests in them at twenty-five if sons, or at twenty-five or marriage if daughters; and to be payable at the same times if after the death of tenants for life; and if not, then immediately on the death of tenants for life. Survivorship between the children in case of their death before twenty-five, or twenty-five or marriage respectively. Maintenance to be given out of the annual income of shares before they should become payable :—Held, that the shares did not vest till twenty-five, and the gift therefore too remote. Morse's Settlement, In re, 21 Beav. 174; 25 L. J., Ch. 192; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 6; 4 W. R. 148.

An express direction in a settlement that shares should vest in the members of a class at their ages of twenty-four years :—Held, to be not controlled by other expressions, e.g., by a provision for maintenance out of the income of "the expectant or presumptive share" of each. Blakemore's Settlement, In re, 20 Beav. 214.

Limitations of a term to trustees, upon trust to raise portions for the children of A. surviving A. and B., "to vest in and to be paid and payable to" them at their ages of twenty-four, with maintenance, &c., meanwhile, out of the expectant or presumptive shares, and a gift over on the death of all before their share should become vested :—Held, void for remoteness. Ib.

By a marriage settlement funds were settled upon the wife for life, with remainder to the children of the marriage in equal shares, "to be a vested interest at their ages of twenty-one years," with a gift over to the husband in the event of all the children dying under twenty-one, and a reversion to the settlor in the event of there being no child born, but no clause of survivorship and accruer as to shares of children dying under twenty-one. There were five children, of whom four attained twenty-one, and the fifth died an infant :—Held, that the whole fund vested in the four children who attained twenty-one. Colley's Trusts, In re, L. R. 1 Eq. 496; 14 W. R. 528.

—— "Payable" meaning "Vested"—Shares "to be Paid" at Twenty-one—Gift over on Death before Shares "Payable."]—By a marriage settlement lands were conveyed upon trust for husband and wife successively for life, and after the death of the survivor "to levy out of the said lands and premises . . . the sum of 3,000*l*. . . . to be divided among all the children of the said intended marriage, save and except such child and children as under the limitations aforesaid shall succeed to the enjoyment of the lands and premises hereby conveyed . . . in equal shares and proportions as tenants in common and not as joint tenants, the share of such child or children as shall be a son or sons to be paid to him or them upon his or their respectively arriving at the full age of twenty-one years, and the share or shares of such of them as shall be daughters to be paid upon their respectively arriving at their full age of twenty-one years, or day or days of marriage, whichever shall first happen; provided always that such marriage during minority shall be had by and with the consent and approbation of 'the parents,' or the survivor of them; with interest for the same by way of maintenance at the rate of 6*l*. by the hundred: to be computed from the day of the death of the survivor of 'the parents,' with benefit of survivorship to the survivors or survivor of such children if any of such children shall die before his, her, or their share or shares shall become payable, unmarried, and without leaving issue as aforesaid, it being the true intent and meaning of these presents that none of the children of the said intended marriage, who under the limitations herein contained shall become entitled to an estate in possession in any part of the lands and premises hereby conveyed . . . shall be entitled to any part of" the said sum. A son attained twenty-one and died in the lifetime of his father:—Held, that there being no words indicating a clear intention to make the vesting of children's shares contingent on their surviving both parents, the rule laid down in Emperor v. Rolfe (1 Ves. sen. 208) applied, and the son took a vested interest in his share on attaining twenty-one. Wakefield v. Maffet, 55 L. J., Ch. 4; 10 App. Cas. 422; 53 L. T. 169.—H. L. (Ir.)

2. When Construed Indefeasible or Payable.

To be Vested as Sons should Attain Twenty-one respectively.]—Testator gave lands to his four sons as tenants in common in fee, to be vested, as to one moiety, as they should respectively attain twenty-one; and as to the other moiety, when his youngest son for the time being should attain twenty-one; and in case of any son dying before his share should be vested as aforesaid, then he gave the "unvested share" to the other and others of his said sons, to be vested, &c., in the same manner as the original shares. The personal estate was given to the trustees to get in and invest, and hold upon trusts, in terms almost identical, only after "vested," the testator used the expression "payable and transferable":—Held, that the property vested immediately in the four sons as tenants in common, subject to be divested in the events named. Poole v. Bott, 11 Hare, 33; 1 Eq. R. 21; 22 L. J., Ch. 1042; 17 Jur. 688; 1 W. R. 276.

—— Proviso against Marriage or Illegal Cohabitation.]—The will contained a proviso, that in case any of the testator's sons should intermarry or illegally cohabit with any of their cousins, the share of such son was to go over to the persons who would have taken if he had died under twenty-one; and the testator declared that it should not be lawful for his trustees to pay to his sons the amount thereby bequeathed, or to permit them to enter upon the realty until they should respectively execute a bond to the said trustees in 20,000*l*. to observe this direction:—Held, that one of the sons who had arrived at twenty-one could acquire payment of his one-fourth without entering to such a bond. Ib.

A testator gave the residue of his property in trust for his mother for life, with remainder to all the younger children of his two sisters, to be a vested interest on their attaining twenty-one. There was also a clause of survivorship upon any of the children dying under twenty-one:—Held, that those children were alone entitled who were born previously to the death of the tenant for life. Berkeley v. Swinburne, 16 Sim. 275; 17 L. J., Ch. 416; 12 Jur. 571. And see Emmet's Estate, In re, Emmet v. Emmet, 13 Ch. D. 484.

After Decease of Tenant for Life to Pay Children — Shares to be Vested Interests at Thirty.]—M., by her will, in pursuance of a power, appointed 1,000*l*., charged on real estate, to trustees, upon trust to invest the same, and to pay the dividends thereof to her daughter A. for life; and from and after the decease of A. to pay, apply, and dispose of the capital and interest unto, between, or amongst all and every the child or children of A. in equal shares; and if but one, the whole to that one child, to be a vested interest or vested interests on their respectively attaining the age of thirty years; and if any child or children of A. should die under the age of thirty without lawful issue, the share or shares of such child or children, original or accruing, should go to the survivor or survivors of them:—Held, that the word "vested" meant indefeasible, so that the share of each child who attained thirty was no longer to be defeasible by the executory bequest; held, also, that the original bequest to the children gave them a present vested interest; and that the executory bequest, on the death of any under thirty without issue, was void by remoteness. Taylor v. Frobisher, 5 De G. & Sm. 191; 21 L. J., Ch. 605; 16 Jur. 283.

—— Shares of Daughters "to be Vested" at Twenty-one, of Sons at Twenty-five.]—A testator, after giving life interests to R. and her husband, gave the principal fund to their children in equal shares, the shares of daughters "to be considered a vested interest" at twenty-one, the shares of sons at twenty-five, with provisoes of survivorship and accruer, and a gift over in case of the death of all the children without having attained a vested interest:—Held, on an examination of the whole will, that "vested" meant "indefeasible"; and that the shares should be vested in the legatees on the death of the testator, subject to be divested on their not attaining the specified ages, and that, in the case of sons, the gift over was void for remoteness. Baxter's Trusts, In re, 4 N. R. 131; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 845; 10 L. T. 487. And see Edmondson's Estate, In re, infra.

A testatrix bequeathed her residue, consisting wholly of personalty, upon trust, as to one-fifth share, to pay the income to her great-nephew H. for life, and at his decease to pay the share unto and among all and every the children and child of H., if more than one, equally; as to the other four-fifths, upon like trusts for the benefit of the testatrix's great-nieces and nephews, R., P., T., and A., and their children respectively. In the event of the death of any one or more of them, H., R., P., T., and A., without leaving issue, she directed that the share or shares of him, her, or them so dying should be in trust for the survivor or survivors of them, and the income and capital be paid and divided in the same manner as was directed as to the original shares. She then directed that none of the shares should be so paid to or become vested interests in any of the children of H., R., P., T., and A., until he, she, and they attained the age of twenty-five respectively; and that in the meantime it should be lawful for the trustees to pay any part of the income from "such shares respectively towards the maintenance and education of such children respectively." The will then contained a proviso (which was void for remoteness) that if any of the children of H., R., P., T., and A. should die before attaining twenty-five, the shares or share of him, her, or them so dying should accrue to the survivors and survivor. The testatrix then declared that, in case of the death of any other of the children "before such accruing or surviving shares shall become vested as aforesaid," every such accruing or surviving share should again be subject to the same condition of accruer; provided, nevertheless, that, in case any of such child or children should have left issue, such issue should take such share in the trust funds as his, her, or their deceased parent or parents would have had if living; and such share or shares to be paid to such issue at such age or time as thereinbefore was directed with respect to the payment of their parents' original shares:—Held, that the word "vested" must be construed as meaning "indefeasible"; and that the remainders to the children of H., R., P., T., and A., vested in such of the said children as were alive at the death of the testatrix, or were born afterwards. Edmondson's Estate, In re, L. R. 5 Eq. 389; 16 W. R. 899.

A testatrix bequeathed the residue of her personal estate to trustees to invest it and pay the income to her three daughters, and the survivors, so long as they should continue unmarried, with similar directions on their deaths or marriage to go over for the benefit of the other five daughters. She also provided that in case the last survivor of her daughters should die without having been married, then immediately after her decease the residue should be "in trust for all my daughters who should have been married, in equal shares and proportions; but in case any one or more of my last-mentioned daughters shall be then dead," as well the original as any other share or shares of her so dying, should be in trust for the children or child of such daughter or each of such daughters respectively in equal shares, if more than one, to be vested at twenty-one. A child of one of the married daughters attained twenty-one, and died unmarried:—Held, that her share went over for the benefit of the other daughters of the testatrix. Kearsley's Trusts, In re, 21 L. T. 294.

To be Absolutely Vested at Twenty-one or Marriage.]—A testator directed the trustees of his will to hold a fund in trust "for my child (if only one), or for all my children (if more than one), in equal shares, and so that the interest of a son or sons shall be absolutely vested at the age of twenty-one years and of a daughter or daughters at that age or marriage":—Held, that the shares of the children were on the death of the testator vested in interest though subject to be divested. Armytage v. Wilkinson, 47 L. J., P. C. 31; 3 App. Cas. 355; 38 L. T. 185; 26 W. R. 559—P. C.

The word "vest" may, if the context of the will is in favour of that construction, be read as importing only that the interest previously vested is at a specified time to become absolute and indefeasible. Ib.

To be Vested Interests Immediately on Execution of Will.]—A declaration in a will that shares of legatees shall be vested interests immediately upon the execution of the will does not prevent a lapse on death before testator. Browne v. Hope, 41 L. J., Ch. 475; L. R. 14 Eq. 343; 27 L. T. 688; 20 W. R. 667. And see Featherstone's Trusts, In re, 52 L. J., Ch. 75; 22 Ch. D. 111; 47 L. T. 538; 31 W. R. 39.

3. "VEST" AND "PAYABLE" USED INTERCHANGEABLY.

To Vest at Twenty-one or Marriage—Not Payable until Death of Annuitants.]—Upon a devise of lands in trust to pay annuities to testator's widow and eldest son, the surplus to accumulate until the death of the survivor, to form part of his personal estate, and subject thereto in trust for his first and other sons in strict tail, remainder over with like limitations to his daughters, &c., with a direction that no one of the parties to whom the estates were so limited should come into possession so long as any precedent limitations should remain in contingency. His personal estate he directed to be transferred equally between his grandchildren, except an elder son, or as any should become such, their shares to vest at twenty-one, or marriage of daughters, but not to become payable until the death of the surviving annuitants, but in the meantime the interest of such grandchildren's presumptive share to be applied for their maintenance, including the eldest, the surplus to accumulate and be divisible and payable with their respective shares when become vested and transmissible:—Held, first, that the eldest did not take a vested interest in the personal estate, but was entitled to maintenance before and after attaining twenty-one; secondly, that the other grandchildren took vested interests, although liable to be partially divested by the birth of others, and that the latter were also entitled to maintenance. Ellis v. Maxwell, 3 Beav. 587; 10 L. J., Ch. 266. See also S. C. 12 Beav. 104.

A testatrix gave a legacy of 4,000*l.*, payable at the decease of A. to a class of persons, to be equally divided amongst them, share and share alike, the shares to be vested interests on majority or marriage, and the income, in the event of A.'s death in the meantime, to be paid towards the maintenance and education of such persons. There was no gift over. Two of the class survived A., and died under twenty-one:—Held, that the word "vested" meant "vested in possession," and that the shares of the deceased minors passed to their legal personal representatives. Simpson v. Peach, 42 L. J., Ch. 816; L. R. 16 Eq. 208; 28 L. T. 731; 21 W. R. 728. S. P., Thruston's Estate, In re, 17 Sim. 21; 18 L. J., Ch. 437.

A husband gave the residue of a mixed fund (after a life interest to his wife) among the children of his three brothers who should be living at the death of his wife or his own death, which events should happen last, to be paid and vested in them at twenty-one, or if females on marriage. One of the nieces survived the testator and his wife, but died under twenty-one, unmarried:—Held, that she took a vested interest. Parr's Trusts, In re, 41 L. J., Ch. 170. And see Lucas v. Carline, 2 Beav. 367.

—— Payment Postponed until Youngest Child Attained Twenty-one.]—H. gave his residuary real and personal estate to trustees upon trust for conversion, and to invest and accumulate until his youngest grandchild attained twenty-one, or until such time as, if living, he would have attained twenty-one, and then to divide amongst his four grandchildren therein named equally, share and share alike, and their respective executors, administrators, and assigns. And in case any one or more of them should attain twenty-one and afterwards die previously to the time of distribution, his or their share or shares to be vested, but the actual payment to be postponed to the time above mentioned. There was no gift over, nor provision for maintenance out of the shares. One of the grandchildren died a minor:—Held, that his share did not vest, and was undisposed of by the will. Horsfall's Trusts, In re, 25 L. T. 197.

Gifts Over before Receipt or Payment when Construed before Vesting.]—See WILL.

4. GIFTS TO CHILDREN SURVIVING THEIR PARENTS, WITH DIRECTIONS AS TO VESTING.

Vested and Transferable Interests at Twenty-one.]—Bequest to A. for life, with remainder to her children living at her death, and their issue, the issue to take the share of a deceased parent, followed by a declaration that the children should take vested and transferable interests at twenty-one, or leaving lawful issue at the time of his decease before that age. A child attained twenty-one, and died in the life of A. without having had any issue:—Held, that her representatives took no share. Payne, In re, 25 Beav. 556.

—— Not to be Transferred until after Mother's Death.]—A testator gave his residuary personalty to a niece for life, and directed his trustees after her death to pay and divide it unto and amongst all and every the children of his niece who should be living at the time of her decease, if more than one, equally; and if only one, then wholly to such only child, "the same to be a vested interest in him or them respectively on their respectively attaining the age of twenty-one, but not to be transferred until after the death of my niece," with maintenance clauses:—Held, that the representatives of children of the niece who attained twenty-one, but died in her lifetime, took no share, for that the words, "but not to be transferred until after the decease of my niece," were not contradictory to the previous expression confining the class to children who survived the niece, and being in any view of the case surplusage, could not be held to modify the definition of the class. Williams v. Haythorne, Williams v. Williams, L. R. 6 Ch. 782.

Vested Interests at Twenty-one or Marriage.]—A testator bequeathed residuary personal estate for A. for life, with remainder to the children of A. who should be living at her death, and who, being sons, should attain twenty-one, or, being daughters, attain that age or marry. By a subsequent proviso he declared that the children of A. who attained, or should attain, twenty-one, or die before that age, leaving issue, or, if a female, should have married under that age, should be deemed to have attained a vested interest:—Held, that the proviso introduced a new gift, and having regard also to other provisions in the will, that children of A., who attained twenty-one, but predeceased her, were entitled to share. Williams v. Russell, 10 Jur. (N.S.) 168.

A will contained a gift to children and the issue of deceased children in language which clearly did not vest it in any till the youngest should have attained twenty-one. In a subsequent part there was a declaration as to the vesting of the shares, expressed with much obscurity, and partially inconsistent with the language of the gift:—Held, that it must be rejected, and the clear gift must take effect; consequently that the shares did not vest till the period prescribed, and the representatives of a child who died before the youngest attained twenty-one took nothing. Bickford v. Chalker, 2 Drew. 327; 2 W. R. 502.

A testator gave a moiety of residue unto and amongst all the brothers and sisters of his wife that should be living at her death, and he declared that the bequest to them, "who were then nine in number, should be deemed vested interests in them":—Held, that only two of them who survived the testator's wife were entitled. Draycott v. Wood, 5 W. R. 158.

To be Payable and Vested Interests at Twenty-one.]—Bequest of 4,000*l.* to A. for life, and afterwards, if she shall "leave" any children, upon trust to divide it equally amongst all "such children," to be payable and become vested interests at twenty-one, and in case there shall be only one "such child" who shall attain twenty-one, then to pay it unto such only child. There was a power of maintenance during minority, and also of advancement, not exceeding "such presumptive share" and a gift over, if the daughter should "have" no child who should arrive at twenty-one:—Held, that a daughter of A., who attained twenty-one and married, but died in the life of A., took no share. Sheffield v. Kennett, 27 Beav. 207. Affirmed, 4 De G. & J. 593.

Gift by will to "all and every the child and children of the testator's daughter who should be living at the time of her decease," to be paid to and become vested in "such child or children," in the case of sons at twenty-one, and in the case of daughters at twenty-one or marriage; but if such times for payment should happen in the lifetime of the testator's daughter and her husband, or the survivor, then after the decease of such survivor; but nevertheless the shares of "all and every such child or children" to be vested and transmissible on their attaining twenty-one or marriage, although such respective times should happen before the decease of the survivor of his said daughter and her husband:—Held, that a child who attained twenty-one and died in the lifetime of its mother took a vested interest. Dalton v. Hill, 6 L. T. 446; 10 W. R. 396.

Portions for Children.]—The rule that the court will lean to a construction which gives portions to all of a class of children who may live to require them, is not confined to settlements, but extends also to wills. The rule will be applied so as to modify express words of gift, though the instrument contains no necessary implication to that effect. Jackson v. Dover, 2 H. & M. 209 ; 4 N. R. 136 ; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 630 ; 10 L. T. 489 ; 12 W. R. 855.

Gift of residue upon trust for testatrix's adopted daughter A. for life, then upon trust to pay to all the children of A. living at her decease equally, at twenty-one or marriage, unless such day of payment should happen in the lifetime of A., and then the payment to be postponed till the death of A., but to be a vested interest in each of the children at twenty-one or marriage :—Held, that a son who attained twenty-one, and died in A.'s lifetime, was entitled to share. Ib.

1. IN GENERAL.

a. Gift "at," "when," "if," "until," a Person attains a Certain Age.

Lands Vesting subject to Divesting on Death before Twenty-five.]—By his will the testator purported to charge an annuity of 100*l.* per annum on the lands of T., in favour of his wife for her life, and devised other land (C.) to his son Thomas on his attaining the age of twenty-five ; and should he not live to attain that age, to his son Patrick on his attaining the same age. The testator, on the same date, executed a codicil, which was as follows :—"As a codicil to my said will, in case I have not the power to charge the annuity to my wife on the lands of T., then I charge the same on the lands of C. devised to my son Thomas ; and I charge the said lands of T. with an annuity of one hundred pounds for my said son Thomas, to be payable to him during the life of my said wife out of said lands" :—Held, that (the testator having no power to charge the lands of T. in favour of his wife) the words of the codicil showed a clear intention that the lands of C. devised by the will should vest in Thomas instanter, liable to be divested on his dying before the age of twenty-five. L'Estrange v. L'Estrange, 25 L. R. Ir. 399.

The testator directed the residue of his property to be invested in land and given to S., who was not to be of age to receive this until he attained his twenty-fifth year, and to be entailed to him and his heirs male :—Held, that S. took a vested estate tail in the land, subject to be divested if he should not attain twenty-five, and that the rents and profits were applicable to his benefit during his minority. Snow v. Poulden, 1 Keen, 186.

A testator devised his real estate to his executors upon trust to pay the rents for the support of his wife and his present or future grandchildren during the life of his wife, and upon her decease upon trust to convey the property to his present or future grandchildren as they should attain the age of twenty-five, to hold the same unto his said grandchildren, their heirs and assigns, for ever, as tenants in common :—Held, that the devise was void for remoteness. Blagrove v. Hancock, 16 Sim. 371 ; 18 L. J., Ch. 20 ; 12 Jur. 1081.

If a father devise lands to trustees and their heirs till his son attain twenty-five years, a mortgage thereof by the son when of twenty-one years is void. Spencer v. Chase, 9 Mod. 30.

—— Restriction on Alienation.]—The testator gave an estate to A., "to become his property on attaining the age of twenty-five years, with an injunction never to sell it out of the family ; but if sold at all, it must be sold to one of his brothers" :—Held, that the estate was vested subject to be divested in case of A.'s death before he attained twenty-five, and that the restriction on alienation was inoperative. Attwater v. Attwater, 18 Beav. 330 ; 23 L. J., Ch. 692 ; 18 Jur. 50 ; 2 W. R. 81.

Estate to be Conveyed at Twenty-three.]—Devise in trust for A. for life of real estate, with remainder to any of his children, as he should appoint. At the date of the will A. had no child, but at the death of the testator he had a son B., three years old. A., by will, appointed to trustees and their heirs, in trust for B. and his heirs, and to be conveyed to him at twenty-three, with a gift over to other sons if B. died under twenty-one ; and he directed the rents to be accumulated until B., or such other sons, should attain twenty-three, and then to pay them over :—Held, that the gift was not too remote, and that the direction to accumulate was valid, Peard v. Kekewich, 15 Beav. 166 ; 21 L. J., Ch. 456.

A testatrix devised real estate to trustees in trust for J. F. for life, remainder to his first and every other son in tail male, with several remainders over, and she devised the residue of her property to J. F. By a codicil, after reciting that she had, by her will, limited her estates to trustees upon trust for the life use of J. F., with remainder to his issue in tail, and divers remainders over, and that since the making of her will J. F. had died, leaving an only child, A. F., who under the will would, as she believed, take an estate tail on her death, the testatrix declared it to be her will that the said A. F. should not become entitled to or take the estate so limited to him until he should have attained the age of twenty-three years ; and she bequeathed a portion of the accumulations of the rents to J. F.'s sister, and directed that she should succeed to the estates next in remainder after the last remainder in the will :—Held, that A. F. took a vested estate at the death of the testatrix, and was entitled to the rents from that period. Dennis v. Frend, 14 Ir. Ch. R. 271.

Life Estate—Attainment of Twenty-one—Condition Subsequent.]—Devise of real estate to A. for life, and after her decease to B. and C. and D. and E. (an infant), "provided she lives to attain twenty-one" :—Held, that this was a condition subsequent, and the tenant for life having died during the minority of E., that she was entitled to her share of the rents until she attained twenty-one. Simmonds v. Cock, 29 Beav. 455 ; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 718 ; 9 W. R. 517.

A testator devised real estate to trustees, upon trust, after life interests, to receive the rents during the minority of A., and apply them for his maintenance and education, and accumulate the residue, and to convey the property to A., his heirs and assigns, so soon as he should have attained twenty-one ; and he also devised a rent-charge upon trusts for the benefit of B., his heirs and assigns, declared by reference to the trusts in favour of A. The will contained a declaration, that in case the trusts should determine or become incapable of taking effect, the hereditaments should form part of the residue. B. survived the testator, and died under twenty-one :—Held, that he took an absolute estate in fee in the rent-charge. Mottram, In re, 10 Jur. (N.S.) 915 ; 10 L. T. 866.

Devise to trustees, in trust, to lay out the rents and profits for the maintenance of two nephews, and when they attain twenty-one, to be to them and their heirs :—Held, to be an immediate gift vested in the nephews, with a trust to be executed for their benefit during their minority. Goodtitle d. Hayward v. Whitby, 1 Ken. 506 ; 1 Burr. 228. And see Warter v. Hutchinson, 1 B. & C. 721 ; 5 Moore, 143 ; 3 D. & R. 58. See 25 R. R. 551.

—— Vested Estate in Fee Liable to be Divested.]—Devise to T. during his natural life, and from and after his decease unto his eldest son if he should have arrived at the age of twenty-one years, and in default of his having a son, then over. T. died leaving an eldest son a minor :—Held, that on the death of T. the eldest son took an estate in fee liable to be divested on his death under the age of twenty-one with an executory devise over in that event to T. in tail. Andrew v. Andrew, 45 L. J., Ch. 232 ; 1 Ch. D. 440 ; 34 L. T. 82 ; 24 W. R. 329—C. A.

—— Void Life Estate—Remainder—Acceleration.]—Gift to the testator's daughter of real and personal estate "during her lifetime, and after her decease the property to be equally divided between her children on their becoming of age" : —Held, that, as regarded the real estate, the gift to the children was strictly a remainder, and that the construction as to the personalty followed the same rule as the realty ; and, therefore, that, the gift to the daughter being void on account of her having attested the will, the gift to the children was accelerated, and took effect immediately. Jull v. Jacobs, 3 Ch. D. 703 ; 35 L. T. 153 ; 24 W. R. 947.

Held, also, that the remainder to the daughter's children created vested interests. Ib.

Effect of Gift Over — Vested Interest Liable to be Divested.]—A testator gave all his real and personal estate to trustees ; and as to his lands at W., which he held in fee simple, he directed that the trustees should stand seised thereof in trust to convey the same to G. H. A. "when and as soon as he should attain the age of twenty-one years" ; but in case he should die before he attained that age without leaving issue of his body, then that the said lands at W., given and devised to him, should sink into the residue of the testator's real and personal estates ; and he then gave the residue to J. G. At the testator's death G. H. A. was only twelve years of age :—Held, that an equitable estate in fee in the lands at W. vested in G. H. A. immediately on the testator's death, liable to be divested in the event of his dying under twenty-one without leaving issue of his body. Phipps v. Ackers, 9 Cl. & F. 583 ; 6 Jur. 745—H. L. (E.) Affirming 5 Sim. 44 ; 1 L. J., Ch. 96. S. P., Hepworth v. Scale, 1 Jur. (N.S.) 698.

Testator devised all his real estates to trustees in trust to convey his lands in W. to A. when and so soon as he should attain twenty-one ; but in case he should die under that age, and without leaving issue, then over ; and when B. should attain twenty-four, in trust to convey the rest of the real estates to him on his giving security for the annuities given by the testator and executing certain deeds to the satisfaction of the trustees ; but in case B. should die before he attained twenty-four without leaving issue, then over. A. and B. were both infants at the testator's death :—Held, that A. took a vested interest in possession in the lands in W., but that B.'s interest in the rest of the estates was contingent on his attaining twenty-four and doing the acts required, and that B. took a vested estate in the intermediate rents, the direction as to his giving security not being a condition precedent. Ackers v. Phipps, 3 Cl. & F. 665 ; 9 Bligh (N.S.) 430—H. L. (E.)

A gift of residuary real and personal estate upon trust to sell and invest, and pay "the said property and interest arising therefrom to A. on his attaining the age of twenty-four ; but in case of his not attaining that age, or leaving male issue, I give, devise, and bequeath the said properties to other persons" :—Held, that A. took an absolute vested interest in the testator's residuary estate, liable to be divested in the events mentioned in the will. Whitter v. Bremridge, 35 L. J., Ch. 807 ; L. R. 2 Eq. 736 ; 14 W. R. 912.

A testator gave real and personal estate to H., her heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns absolutely, if she should be living at the death of his wife ; but in case H. should die in the lifetime of his wife without leaving issue her surviving, then over :—Held, that H. took an absolute interest, liable to be divested only in the event of her death in the lifetime of the widow without leaving issue. Finch v. Lane, L. R. 10 Eq. 501.

Testator devised his estate at E. to trustees upon trust to apply the rents for the maintenance and support of B. till she should attain the age of twenty-five or marry with consent, and to lay out the surplus of such rents in Government securities, that the same might accumulate for the uses and purposes of his will; and from and after the said B. should attain twenty-five, or marry with consent, then to pay her the whole of the rents for her life; and after her decease, upon trust for her children. The testator then gave his estate at S. to the same trustees upon trust, in case the said B. lived to attain twenty-five, or married with such consent as aforesaid, to let her receive the rents for her life; and after her decease, upon trust for her children in manner before mentioned. Provided that, in case B. should marry without consent, the testator revoked all the devises and bequests in favour of her and her issue. All the residue of his real and personal estate, and likewise his estate and premises thereinbefore devised for the benefit of B., in case she should die under twenty-five unmarried, and without issue, the testator devised and bequeathed to the trustees in trust for X., Y., and Z. B. attained twenty-five, and married with consent. Between the death of the testator and her attaining twenty-five there was an accumulation of the surplus rents of the E. estate, after providing for her maintenance, and an accumulation of the rents of the S. estate :—Held, that she was entitled for her life to the income of the former accumulation, as to which the court did not further declare the right, and absolutely entitled to the latter accumulation. Greene v. Potter, 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 517; 7 Jur. 736.

Devise to trustees and their heirs in trust to receive the rents, &c., until A. shall attain twenty-one; and immediately after he shall attain twenty-one to convey to the use of A. for life, and from and after the determination of that estate by forfeiture or otherwise in his life, to trustees and their heirs during his life upon trust to preserve the contingent uses; and after his decease to the use of his first and other sons in tail male; and for default of such issue, or in case of the death of A. before twenty-one, upon a similar trust for other persons. A. takes a vested remainder for life after an estate in the trustees for so many years as his minority may last. Stanley v. Stanley, 16 Ves. 491.

—— Contingent Remainder subject to be Divested.]—A testator devised real estate to his widow for life, and after her death to the child or children of H., "if he leave any him surviving; but in case he leave no child or children him surviving," to the child or children of W. H. survived the widow :—Held, that the remainders to the children of H. and W. were contingent, and failed. Price v. Hall, 37 L. J., Ch. 191; L. R. 5 Eq. 399; 16 W. R. 642. And see Jackson v. Marjoribanks, 12 Sim. 93; 5 Jur. 885.

b. Gifts to Children who Attain a Certain Age, and to a Class at a Certain Age.

Estate for Life—Children attaining Twenty-one, or Marrying.]—A testator devised real estate unto and to the use of three trustees, their heirs and assigns, upon trust, to pay the rents to a married woman, for her separate use for her life, and, after her death, in trust for all her children, who being sons should attain twenty-one, or being daughters should attain that age or marry, and their heirs and assigns for ever :—Held, that the trustees took the whole legal fee, and that all the children of the tenant for life living at her death, minors and not minors, took vested interests, in equity, in the estate, subject, as to the share of any minor, to be divested in the event of his or her dying under twenty-one. Riley v. Garnett, 3 De G. & Sm. 629; 19 L. J., Ch. 146; 14 Jur. 236. S. P., Doe d. Roake v. Nowell, 1 M. & S. 327. Affirmed, 5 Dow, 202—H. L. (E.) And see Abbiss v. Burney, Finch, In re, 50 L. J., Ch. 348; 17 Ch. D. 211; 44 L. T. 267; 29 W. R. 449—C. A.

A testator directed his trustees to hold and apply the residue of his estate for behoof of his nieces and their children in certain proportions, viz., one-third to A. in life rent, and her children in fee; one-third to B. in life rent, and to her children in fee; and one-third to C., D., E., and F., equally among them in life rent, and to their children equally among them per stirpes in fee. He further provided that in case A. and B. died unmarried, or without issue, or in the event of such issue existing, but afterwards deceasing before attaining the years of majority, or being married, then the two-third shares destined to them and their issue should fall and accrue to C., D., E., and F. and their children respectively in life rent and in fee, and equally among them per stirpes as provided with respect to their own shares of the residue. A. and B. died without issue. C. died leaving one child, married, and of age, but who had died without issue before A. and B. :—Held, that the representatives of the child of C. were entitled to participate in the division of the fee of the two-third shares which were life-rented by A. and B. Taylor v. Graham, 3 App. Cas. 1287—H. L. (Sc.) And see Carlton v. Thompson, L. R. 1 H. L. Sc. 241.

On a devise to the use of A. for life, remainder, in default of appointment, to the use of all and every the children of A. who being sons should live to attain twenty-one, or being daughters should live to attain that age or be married; but in case A. should leave no child, who being a son should live to attain twenty-one; or being a daughter should live to attain that age, or be married, then over. Quære, whether the remainders were vested or contingent. Styan, Ex parte, Johns. 387. And see Rhodes v. Whitehead, 2 Dr. & Sm. 532; 12 L. T. 601; 13 W. R. 800.

Quære, whether the distinction between a remainder to a class if they shall attain twenty-one and one to all of a class who shall attain twenty-one can be sustained. Ib.

Words of contingency in a gift have no stronger or more uncontrollable force when applied to the description of a person than when applied to the description of an event. Browne v. Browne, 3 Sm. & G. 568; 26 L. J., Ch. 635; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 728; 5 W. R. 777.

Devise to trustees upon trust for the testator's grandson S. for life, and after his decease in trust for all and every the child and children of S. who being a son or sons should attain the age of twenty-one, or being a daughter or daughters should live to attain that age or be married, equally to be divided between them, if more than one, and their heirs and assigns; and if there should be only one such child, then in trust for such only child, his heirs and assigns; but in case S. should die without leaving lawful issue, then upon similar trusts for others of his grandchildren and their children successively, with an ultimate trust for the testator's right heirs. The trustees were empowered, immediately after the death of the first tenant for life of the estates, to apply the rents for the maintenance of the person or persons next beneficially entitled thereto. S. died, leaving an only child, an infant, him surviving:—Held, that such child was, under the limitations in the will, devisee of an estate in fee simple, determinable in case of his dying under the age of twenty-one. Festing v. Allen (12 M. & W. 279; 13 L. J., Ex. 74. S. C., 5 Hare, 573, post) commented on. Ib.

But see Holmes v. Prescott, 3 N. R. 559; 33 L. J., Ch. 264; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 507; 12 W. R. 636, post.

The rule laid down in Festing v. Allen (supra) that in a devise to the children of A. "who shall attain the age of twenty-one" the words "who shall attain the age of twenty-one" are part of the description of the devisees, gives way to a contrary intention expressed in the devise. Muskett v. Eaton, 45 L. J., Ch. 22; 1 Ch. D. 435; 33 L. T. 716; 24 W. R. 52.

Therefore, where a testator devised real estate to M. for his life, and in the event of his leaving a lawful son born or to be born in due time after his decease who should live to attain the age of twenty-one, then to such son and his heirs; but in case he should die without leaving a son who should attain the age of twenty-one, then over:—Held, that the words, "or to be born in due time after his decease" showed that the testatrix meant the estate to vest in a son of M. at his birth, and that J., a son of M., who was seven years old at the death of M., took a vested interest in the devised estate, subject to being divested on his death under twenty-one. Ib.

Devise to such Children of Tenant for Life "as either before or after her Decease" attain Twenty-one.]—A father devised to his daughter N. an estate for life, and after her decease to her child or children who, either before or after her death, should attain the age of twenty-one or die under that age leaving issue at his, her, or their death, in fee simple as tenants in common; and in case there should be no child of N. who should attain twenty-one or die under that age leaving issue, he gave the estate to the child or children of his daughter G. who, either before or after her death, should attain twenty-one, or die under that age leaving issue living at his, her, or their death, in fee as tenants in common. N. had no child. At the death of N. two children of G. had attained the age of twenty-one. Other children attained twenty-one subsequently:—Held, that the two children were entitled to the estate. Brackenbury v. Gibbons, 2 Ch. D. 417.

A testatrix devised a freehold estate to her granddaughter E. during her life, and from and after her death to such of her children living at her death "as either before or after her decease" should, being males, attain twenty-one, or, being females, attain that age or marry, in fee simple as tenants in common; and if there should be no such child, then over. E. survived the testatrix, and died leaving seven children, of whom five had attained twenty-one at the time of her death, and two, a son and a daughter, were infants, the daughter being also a spinster:—Held, that the five children took vested interests liable to open to let in the two other children on their fulfilling the conditions of the will. Brackenbury v. Gibbons (supra) not followed. Leehmere and Lloyd, In re, 18 Ch. D. 524; 45 L. T. 551. And see Miles v. Jarvis, 52 L. J., Ch. 796; 24 Ch. D. 633; 49 L. T. 162.

—— Vested Remainder subject to being Divested.]—S. devised hereditaments of which he was seised in fee simple to his son R. S. for the term of his natural life, and "from and immediately after his decease unto and to the use of all and every his children who shall then be living, and of their respective heirs and assigns for ever as tenants in common"; and in case his son R. S. should happen to die without leaving lawful issue, or leaving such, and all of them should happen to die under the age of twenty-one years without issue, then to his son T. S. and to his two daughters and their respective heirs and assigns for ever as tenants in common; and he devised all other his real estate whatsoever and wheresoever to his son R. S., and his heirs and assigns for ever. R. S. survived the testator, and married in July, 1826. In January, 1827, he demised by lease and release all his estate in the devised hereditaments. On the 3rd June, 1827, a son of the marriage was born:—Held, that the son so born, as soon as he was begotten, took a vested remainder liable to open and let in the interests of after-born children, and subject only to be divested in the event of his death under the age of twenty-one, and that the life estate of R. S. and his remainder in fee did not emerge so as to extinguish the intermediate estate of the children. Sulley v. Barber, 59 L. T. 824.

—— Attaining Twenty-three—Remoteness.]—In a devise of real estate upon trust for the daughter of the testator for her life, and from and after her decease to convey such estate unto and equally between and among all and every the child and children of the daughter who should live to attain the age of twenty-three years, and to his, her, and their heirs and assigns for ever; and in case there should be no such child or children, or being such, all of them should die under twenty-three without issue, then over, with power to apply for maintenance the interest of such child's share, notwithstanding such child's share should not then be absolutely vested:—Held, that the limitation to the children of the daughter, and the limitations over, in default of such children, are void for remoteness. Bull v. Pritchard, 5 Hare, 567; 1 Russ. 213; 16 L. J., Ch. 185; 11 Jur. 34. But see Doe d. Dolley v. Ward, 9 A. & E. 582; 1 P. & D. 568; 8 L. J., Q. B. 154.

—— Attaining Twenty-four.]—A devise, after a life estate to testator's son A., in these words, "to all and every my grandchildren, the children of my said son A., and three daughters, B., C. and D., who shall attain the age of twenty-four years":—Held, void for remoteness, although there were no grandchildren not born in the testator's lifetime. Newman v. Newman, 10 Sim. 51; 8 L. J., Ch. 354.

—— Attaining Twenty-five.]—A testator devised property to trustees for the maintenance of his four children until they severally attained twenty-five, at which time he devised "unto such of his said children as should attain that age" one-fifth of the property, to hold to them and their heirs. There was a gift over to the "survivors or survivor" if any died before attaining twenty-five and left no issue, or if they should die after attaining twenty-five and should leave no lawful issue:—Held, first, that their interests did not vest until twenty-five; and, secondly, that the words "survivors or survivor" were not to be read "other or others." Stead v. Platt, 18 Beav. 50.

Unless there is in a will, or some codicil thereto, a clear indication of an intention on the part of the testator, not only that his devisees are not to have the enjoyment of the property he has devised until they attain twenty-five, but that some other person is to have that enjoyment; or unless the property is so clearly taken away from the devisees up to the time of their attaining twenty-five, as to induce the court to hold that, as to the previous rents and profits, there has been an intestacy; the court does not hesitate to strike out of the will any direction that the devisees shall not enjoy it in full until they attain the age of twenty-five. Gosling v. Gosling, Johns. 265; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 910.

—— Accumulations.]—Expressions in a codicil of a testator's devise that real and personal property given by his will should not be enjoyed by any of the successive devisees until twenty-five, and a direction to accumulate in the meantime:—Held, inoperative, there being no gift over. Ib. And see Montgomerie v. Woodley, 5 Ves. 522.

And see post, C. 1. g.

c. Estate to Arise on a Contingency after a Prior Particular Estate or Interest.

Gift of Rents of Estates at Twenty-one—For Life—Period of Vesting.]—A testator, by his will, after giving certain legacies and annuities, gave unto J. the sum of 10*l.* per year for clothes until he attained twenty-one; then he ordered his executors in trust to pay him out of his property the further sum of 30*l.*; and he gave and bequeathed unto the said J. when he attained twenty-one the rents of his estates, called by the names of, &c. (naming them), and the interest of what money was placed in government securities, during his natural life, but subject to the said annuities; and after his death to the child or children of the said J. lawfully to be begotten; if more than one equally to be divided between them, share and share alike; and in case of the death of the said J. without any child or children, then he gave and bequeathed the rents of his estates as aforesaid, and the interest of his money, between his (the testator's) brothers, &c. The estates of the testator mentioned in his will consisted of both freehold and personal estates:—Held, that J. was entitled to the rents and income from the time of the testator's death. Tapscott v. Newcombe, 6 Jur. 755.

A testator by his will made the following devise: "It is my will that the rents and profits of my freehold estate at E. shall be applied, in the first place, towards the maintenance of J. until he shall arrive at the age of twenty-one years, and that the residue thereof shall accumulate until that event, and that, when he shall attain that age, the same be paid to him for his benefit, and that, after the expiration of the leases subsisting, the freehold shall become the absolute property of J., to hold to him, his heirs and assigns, for ever":—Held, first, that the fee of the property at E. vested in J. at the death of the testator; and, secondly, that the rents of the property between J.'s attaining his majority and the expiration of the leases belonged to J. Bird v. Bird, 11 L. J., Ch. 390; 6 Jur. 1030.

Life Estate—Remainder—Lands to be Conveyed at Twenty-one.]—A devise of two farms to the father and mother for their lives, remainder to trustees till A. and B. respectively come of age, and then to convey one farm to A., and the other to B. A. died before the time came for the conveyance. A. being to have had an estate in fee, the conveyance shall be made to his heir. Hook v. Taylor, 2 Vern. 561.

—— Youngest Child Attaining Twenty-one.]—Testator gave in trust to his brother E. the remainder of his property of whatsoever kind, to assist him to bring up, educate, and provide for the children of his late brother J., whom he named. "When my youngest nephew attains his age of twenty-one years, it is my will, that all my property be equally divided amongst my nephews or their lawful issue, share and share alike; the division, however, is not to take place, although my youngest nephew have attained the age of twenty-one years, until the decease of my wife, my sister J., and my brother E.":—Held, that the interests of the nephews were not contingent on their living until the youngest of them should attain twenty-one, but vested on the testator's death; and that the word "or" was to be construed conjunctively, and consequently that the nephews took estates tail in their shares of the testator's real property, and absolute interests in their shares of his personal property. Parkin v. Knight, 15 Sim. 83; 15 L. J., Ch. 209; 10 Jur. 23.

Where a testator devised to trustees his "estate and interest" in farms of which he was seised, for lives renewable for ever, in trust, after paying certain annuities, &c., to permit and suffer his nephew A. to enjoy the same for his life; and from and after his decease, to permit such son of his as should attain twenty-one to enjoy said lands, and on failure of such remainder, to his nephew B. for his life, remainder to his first son as before:—Held, that a son of A.'s who attained the age of twenty-one, and died in the lifetime of his father, took the absolute interest in these premises. Kirby v. O'Hea, 2 Ir. Eq. R. 424.

Where the testator bequeathed the whole of his property in trust to pay the income to his wife for the support of herself and the children until the youngest should attain twenty-one, and then to be divided into five shares, one to the wife and the others to each of his four children, and which were to vest on the youngest attaining twenty-one: and in case of either of his children dying without leaving issue, then to the children of the other daughters:—Held, to apply only to such shares as were vested, and that, as to the share of one dying under twenty-one, there was an intestacy. Bastin v. Watts, 3 Beav. 97; 7 Jur. 791.

—— Estate to be Divided at Twenty-four.]—Residuary devise of real and personal estate to all the issue, child or children, of M. F., as should be alive at the time of the decease of the survivor of two successive tenants for life, equally amongst them, if more than one to be divided, share and share alike, when, and as they should respectively attain the age of twenty-four years, and to their respective heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns for ever, as tenants in common :—Held, the children living at the death of the tenants for life took absolute vested interests in the personal as well as in the real estate. Farmer v. Francis, 2 Sim. & S. 505 ; 4 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 154.

By certain articles of agreement, it was provided that the interest of a fund which was vested in trustees should be paid to Lady C. for her life, and after her death the principal to go amongst the then unmarried children of herself and her husband, as the husband should by deed or will appoint ; and in default of appointment, equally among the children who should be living at the death of the husband. The fund having been invested in lands, pursuant to a trust in the articles, the husband by his will appointed the lands among his sons as follows :—Ballygriffin to John, Gurtaneelig to George, Knuttery to Henry, and Gneeve to Nelson, to go to them immediately from and after the decease of Lady C., with a clause of survivorship among the brothers, if any of them should die before they became respectively entitled thereto. The testator, by two subsequent deeds of appointment, irrevocably appointed Ballygriffin to John, and Knuttery (which he had by his will given to Henry) to George, and by a codicil (in which these two deeds were recited) he revoked the appointment of Knuttery to his son Henry in the will contained, and instead thereof appointed to him Gurtaneelig. Henry died after the testator, but before the death of Lady C. :—Held, that the period at which the estates given by the will were to be considered as vested, was the death of Lady C., and not the death of the testator. Charitable Donations Commissioners v. Cotter, 2 Dr. & Wal. 615 ; 2 Ir. Eq. R. 196.

—— Contingent Remainder, or Absolute Gift subject to Life Interests.]—The testatrix by her will gave certain real estate to trustees upon trust to pay to or otherwise permit E. S. to receive the rents and profits thereof for her life, and after her decease upon trust to pay to or otherwise permit A. B. to receive the rents and profits thereof for her life, if she should be living at the time of the decease of the said E. S., but if she should be then dead, upon trust for two nieces of the testatrix's late husband, whom she named, absolutely as tenants in common ; and the testatrix gave all the residue of her estate to the said A. B. absolutely. E. S. survived the testatrix, and A. B. survived E. S., and consequently her life interest took effect. She was now dead, the two nieces being now living, and the question was raised whether the estate went to the two nieces, or whether, inasmuch as A. B. did not die in the lifetime of E. S., the gift to them failed, and the estate went to A. B.'s representatives, being given to her absolutely by the joint operation of the gift of the life interest and of the residue :—Held, that the property went to the two nieces, the gift to them not being a contingent remainder, but an imperfect expression of the testatrix's intention that, subject to the two life interests, the nieces were to take absolutely. Martin, In re, Smith v. Martin, 54 L. J., Ch. 1071 ; 53 L. T. 34.

Remoteness — Gift on Attaining Twenty-five.] — Freehold and leasehold estates were devised upon trust, after certain trusts that failed, to receive the rents and pay them for the benefit of the testator's daughter's son R., and all other sons she should leave, until he and they should attain the age of twenty-five years ; and on attaining that age, in trust for the heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns of the said R., and all other such sons as the daughter should leave who should attain the age of twenty-five years ; but if the daughter should leave no sons, or they should die without attaining that age, then in trust for other objects :—Held, that the gift to R. and the other sons of the testator's daughter was well vested in them, though liable to be divested in case of death under the age of twenty-five. James v. Wynford (Lord), 1 Sm. & G. 40 ; 22 L. J., Ch. 450 ; 17 Jur. 17 ; 1 W. R. 61. S. C., on another point, 2 Sm. & G. 350 ; 23 L. J., Ch. 767 ; 18 Jur. 868 ; 2 W. R. 607.

Other freehold and leasehold estates were devised upon trust to receive the rents and pay them to the testator's daughter for life, and after her decease to apply the rents, or so much thereof as should be necessary, for the maintenance of the daughter's son R. and all other sons she should leave, until they should attain twenty-five ; and on their attaining that age, in trust for R. and such other sons for life, as tenants in common ; and after their decease for the eldest son of R. and the eldest of all and every of the sons of the testator's daughter and their heirs male in tail as should survive her, with trusts over in default of issue :—Held, that the eldest son of R. and the sons of the daughter other than R. were presently entitled as tenants in tail male in remainder as to the freehold estates, and that, the freehold and leasehold lands being given together, the estate in the freehold being vested in tail, the estate in the leasehold must vest absolutely in the first tenant in tail. Ib.

Semble, a gift by will to an individual named and known to the testator does not fail because there are words superadded which include a class to take with him, as to which class the gift must wholly fail, because as to some of them it might be too remote ; secus, where an individual is named as one of a class. Ib.

Testator gave his real and personal estates to trustees, and directed them to invest his personal estate in the purchase of land, and to pay the rents, subject to certain annuities, to his son for life ; and in case his son should die leaving behind him no legitimate issue, then he directed the trustees to pay the rents to his (the testator's) widow for life ; but in case his son should die leaving behind him legitimate issue, then, at the end of six months after the eldest male child then living of his son should have attained twenty-five, or in default of male issue the eldest female child then living of his son should have attained twenty-one, to convey all the estates to the eldest male child, or in default of male issue to the eldest female child, and to his or her heirs of his or her body lawfully begotten, absolutely for ever. The testator then, in case his son should die during the minority of such eldest male or female child, provided for their maintenance, and then declared that, in case his son should not die during such minority, his estates should continue on the trusts aforesaid until six months after his son's death, and then pass to his son's eldest male or female child in manner before expressed; and in case his son should die leaving no legitimate issue, then after the death of the testator's wife the estates to be conveyed to other persons. The testator's son married, and had a son born after the testator's death. The court, holding the trust for the grandson not to be void for remoteness, and the grandson having survived his father and attained twenty-one (but being under twenty-five), and all the annuitants being dead, ordered the estates to be conveyed to him. Jackson v. Marjoribanks, 12 Sim. 93; 5 Jur. 885.

The doctrine laid down in Leake v. Robinson (2 Mer. 363; 16 R. R. 168) as to the remoteness applies to real as well as to personal estate. Walker v. Mower, 16 Beav. 365.

Devise and bequest of real and personal estate to trustees for A. for life, and afterwards "to convey and assure" equally between all A.'s children on their respectively attaining twenty-one, with a gift over on A.'s death without "leaving any child." There was one child who survived A., and died an infant:—Held, first, that such child did not take a vested interest; and, secondly, that the gift over did not take effect. Ib.

See also Catlin or Cattlin v. Brown, 11 Hare, 372; 1 Eq. R. 550; 1 W. R. 533.

Maintenance—Accumulations until Twenty-one—Gift on Death without Issue.]—A testatrix devised to trustees freehold premises in trust to receive the rents, and after paying thereout all proper outgoings and applying thereout, if they thought fit, any money towards the maintenance of S., to let the residue accumulate until S. should attain twenty-one, and then to pay such accumulations to him; but if he should die under such age without leaving issue living at his decease, then such accumulations should be for the benefit of the person to whom and in like manner and form as the premises were limited in the like event, and when S. should have attained twenty-one, then the trustees were to stand seised of the premises in trust for him in fee; but if he should not leave any issue living at his decease, then the trustees should stand seised of the premises in trust for A. in fee, and if A. should not leave any issue living at her decease, then over. S. attained twenty-one, and died without ever having had issue:—Held, that the premises vested in S. in fee on his attaining twenty-one, subject to be divested in the event of his dying without issue, which event having happened, the limitation over in favour of A. took effect. Smith v. Spencer, 6 De G. M. & G. 631; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 193; 5 W. R. 136. And see Manfield v. Dugard, 1 Eq. Ca. Abr. 194; Gilb. Eq. Rep. 36.

d. Estate to Arise on Determination of a prior Estate by Marriage.

Estate for Life or until Marriage—Gift Over on Marriage only.]—Where a will contains a gift of an estate for life or until marriage, followed by a gift over in terms depending on marriage only, the gift over will be construed to take effect on the determination of the previous estate, whether by death or marriage. And there is no difference in this respect whether the first estate is limited to a widow or to any other persons. Walpole v. Laslett, 1 N. R. 180; 7 L. T. 526. S. P., Luxford v. Cheeke, 3 Lev. 125.

If the gift over be in favour of a class to be ascertained on the determination of the previous estate by marriage, the class will, nevertheless, be ascertained at the time when the previous estate determines either way. Ib.

Bequest to A. during widowhood, and immediately after her death or second marriage, whichever event should first happen, to trustees to sell and divide between several persons named, or such of them as should be living at the death of A. A. married again:—Held, that the property thereupon became immediately distributable. Bainbridge v. Cream, 16 Beav. 25. And see Lancaster v. Varty, 5 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 41.

A. devised his house, &c., to his wife for life, upon this express condition only, that if she should marry again, then his will and meaning was, that his house, &c., was to go forthwith to his eldest son and his issue; and if all his issue male should die, &c., remainder over. Lord Hardwicke held, that it was not a vested remainder in the son, but a contingent limitation, to take effect only if the wife of the testator should marry again. It was contended to be a devise to the wife during her widowhood, in which case the devise over would have been vested to take effect either on the marriage or death. But Lord Hardwicke thought that, upon the whole will, the devise over was contingent, and to take effect only on the widow's marrying again. Sheffield v. Orrery (Lord), 3 Atk. 284.

A testator gave the produce of his real estate to his daughter E. for life so long as she should remain single; but in case she should marry, then he gave one-half of the income to his daughter E. and one half to his daughter M. (a married woman with children); and after the death of M., he gave one-half of the trust moneys to her children and the other half to the children of E.; and if M. should die without leaving children, then the whole for E.'s children; and if E. should die without children, the whole to M.'s children; and if both should die without children, then over. E. never married:—Held, that upon her death the children of M. took the whole corpus and income, subject only to be divested if M. should die without having any children. Eaton v. Hewitt, 2 Dr. & Sm. 184; 1 N. R. 10; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 1120; 7 L. T. 496; 11 W. R. 76.

Under a devise of a copyhold estate to testator's wife, during her life, provided she continued single; but in case she did not, then unto A. B. when he should attain the age of twenty-three years:—Held, that though the widow married before A. B. attained that age, she was entitled to the estate until that event; and that the heir-at-law was not entitled to it. Doe d. Westminster (Dean) v. Freeman, 2 Chit. 498.

Power of appointment in tenant for life subject to condition of her remaining sole and unmarried, which condition was qualified by a proviso that a marriage with consent of A., B. and C. should not determine that power:—Held, a condition subsequent, and becoming impossible by death of A., B. and C.; marriage of tenant for life after their death, without their consent, did not determine the power. Aislabie v. Rice, 3 Madd. 256; 8 Taunt. 459; 18 R. R. 230.

Devise of land to A. in trust for E. for life, with a proviso that if E. should marry, then the testatrix devised the land to W.:—Held, that upon E.'s death without having married the gift to W. took effect. Meeds v. Wood, 19 Beav. 215.

—— Taking Effect on Death.]—Where there is a devise or bequest to a woman for life or until she marries again, followed by a gift over upon her marriage, the gift over takes effect upon the determination of her estate by death. Pile v. Salter (11 Sim. 411) disapproved. Underhill v. Roden, 45 L. J., Ch. 266; 2 Ch. D. 494; 34 L. T. 227; 24 W. R. 574.

A testator directed the rents of his real estate to be paid to his wife for the maintenance of herself and her children until his eldest son attained twenty-five or until she should marry again, whichever should first happen, and when his children attained twenty-five he directed the rents of the residue of his estate (after raising certain sums) to be paid to his wife if she should then be unmarried, but in case she should marry again he directed that the trustee should pay the residue of his estate (subject to an annuity to the wife) to his children. The widow died during the infancy of the children without having married again:— Held, that, apart from other indications in the will leading to the same conclusion, the general rule applied, and the gift over took effect upon the death of the widow. Ib.

A testator bequeathed to his daughter M., so long as she should remain single, 120*l.* a year, and directed that on the day of her marriage the principal should be divided amongst his children, the shares of his daughter M. and of another daughter being given to trustees upon trust for the daughters for life, with certain remainders. The question was, whether the gift over on M.'s marriage took effect on her death:—Held, that the balance of authority being now strongly against Pile v. Salter (5 Sim. 411), the ordinary rule prevailed, and, although the gift over on marriage included a life tenancy in one-third of the original sum, it took effect on death. Scarborough v. Scarborough, 58 L. T. 851.

Gift during Widowhood—Gift Over on Death—Remarriage.] — Gift by will to testator's widow A. during her life provided she remained a widow; and from and after her death or remarriage, to B. absolutely, with provisions for maintenance in case B. should not have attained twenty-one at the death or remarriage of A. In the event (which happened) of B. dying during the lifetime of A., then at the death of A. the property was given over to testator's brothers and sisters who should be living at A.'s death. B. died an infant, and afterwards A. married again:—Held, that upon such remarriage the gift over in favour of testator's brothers and sisters took immediate effect, and was not postponed until A.'s death. Stanford v. Stanford, 56 L. J., Ch. 273; 34 Ch. D. 362; 55 L. T. 765; 35 W. R. 191.

A. for Life or until Marriage—Gift over to Children living at A.'s death—Remarriage.]—A testator bequeathed a fund upon trust for a widow for her life or until she should marry again, and directed his trustees from and immediately after her decease or marrying again to stand possessed of the fund upon trust to pay and divide the same equally between all her children "living at the time of their mother's decease," and the issue of any deceased child, such issue taking the parent's share. The widow married again:—Held, that thereupon her children took immediate vested interests. Bainbridge v. Cream (supra) followed, but doubted. Tucker, In re, Bowchier v. Gordon, 56 L. J., Ch. 449; 56 L. T. 118; 35 W. R. 344.

Life Estate of Widow determinable on Several Events—Gift Over on those Events alone.]—Testator gave to trustees all his real and personal estate, upon trust to suffer his widow to receive the rents and dividends for her life, provided she kept his property in repair and insured the same against loss or damage by fire, and provided further that she remained a widow and did not cohabit with any other man; and in case she made default in repairing or insuring his said property, or married again, or cohabited with any other man, then, in either of the said cases, upon certain trusts in favour of his children or their issue. The woman died without having committed any of the acts or defaults on which her life estate was determinable:—Held, the gift over took effect on the determination of the prior estate by death as well as on the other events. Cane, In re, Ruff v. Sivers, 60 L. J., Ch. 36; 63 L. T. 746.

e. Gifts to Children without Directions as to Vesting.

Period of Vesting—Birth of Children.] — A testator gave freehold and leasehold property in trust for his widow for life, with remainder to his niece for life; and on her decease, for all and every the child and children of the niece, and for their respective heirs, executors, and administrators, as tenants in common, the children to become beneficially interested on the death of their parent:—Held, that the children of the niece took vested interests on their respective births. M'Lachlan v. Tait, 2 De G. F. & J. 449; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1269; 3 L. T. 492; 9 W. R. 152. Affirming 28 Beav. 407.

A. devised all his freehold estates in three several parishes to trustees, to hold to them, their heirs and assigns for ever, upon trust to receive the rents till C., his daughter, came of age, with a provision for her maintenance, and to account for and pay the surplus rents upon her coming of age; from that period "as to his said estates" to the use of the trustees, their heirs and assigns, upon trust during the life of C. to preserve contingent remainders, C. and her assigns to receive the rents nevertheless during her life; after her death to the use of all and every the children of C., share and share alike, as tenants in common; in case C. should die under twenty-one, and without issue, the trustees were to account with and pay the balance of the trust account unto and to the use of such person as should by the will be next in remainder, and entitled to the "aforesaid estates and hereditaments" after the death of C.; in case C. should die before she attained twenty-one, or surviving should die without lawful issue, then as to the aforesaid estates to the use of F. in tail male with remainders over in default of such issue. C. attained twenty-one, married, and had six children. E., one of the children, contracted to sell her undivided sixth share in the estates, expectant upon the death of C.:—Held, that there was a remainder in fee to the children of C., which vested at their birth, and that E. could make a good title to her share, which she had contracted to sell. Hawker v. Saunders, 2 L. T. 132; 8 W. R. 332.

A testator devised an estate to his daughter for life, and after her decease to all and every

the children of the body of his daughter lawfully begotten (in case she should leave more than one child), their heirs and assigns, for ever, as tenants in common; but in case his daughter should have only one child, then he devised the estate to such one child in fee; but in case his daughter should die without leaving any issue of her body, then he devised the estate to all such children of his body as he should leave or have living at the decease of his daughter, in fee. The testator's daughter had two children, both of whom died during her life:—Held, that the two children of the testator's daughter took absolute and devisable estates in remainder under the will, and their devisees were consequently entitled. Tookey's Trust, In re, Bucks Railway Co., In re, 21 L. J., Ch. 402.

—— Death of Survivor of Annuitants.]—A testator being seised in fee of Whiteacre and Blackacre, charged both with an annuity of 500*l.* for his wife for her life, and devised to trustees two annuities of 200*l.*, one to issue out of Whiteacre, the other out of both estates, for the separate use of his daughters respectively, and limited those two annuities to his son F. in remainder for his life, with a condition of forfeiture on alienating them; and devised Blackacre, subject to the annuities charged upon it, to the trustees upon trust to receive the rents until his grandson J. should attain twenty-one, and to invest the same in stock, "for the purposes of the will," and subject thereto, upon trust for J. in tail male. The testator devised Whiteacre to the trustees in trust to permit F. to receive thereout an annuity of 100*l.* for the life of his mother, and after her death an annuity of 200*l.* for his life, with a condition of forfeiture on alienation. The testator next directed that the rents of Whiteacre should be invested in stock for the purposes of his will; and that Whiteacre should be held upon further trust upon the death of his wife and daughters, and subject to the annuities charged thereon, to permit F. to receive the rents during his life, with a condition of forfeiture on alienation; and from and after his death or forfeiture to his first and other sons in tail male, and in default of such issue, then to permit and suffer J. to receive the rents during his life, with remainder over. Out of the funds to be accumulated as above mentioned by the trustees, the testator directed them to pay and assist in paying the annuities given to his wife, daughters, and F., should those annuities be in arrear for four months, and out of the next moneys which should come to their (the trustees') possession to replace the sums so advanced. The testator charged several legacies also upon the accumulated fund. The testator died, F. having died afterwards without issue, and leaving the other annuitants, viz., his mother and sisters, surviving him:—Held, that the estate for life in remainder in Whiteacre limited to J. did not vest in possession upon the death of F., and would not so vest in the lifetime of any of the annuitants, viz., his mother and sisters, surviving him. Fitzpatrick v. Knaresborough, 13 Ir. Eq. R. 338.

2. WORDS OF CONTINGENCY. WHETHER EXTENDING TO A SERIES OF LIMITATIONS.

To Children at Twenty-one.]—A contingency affecting a gift by will to a parent is not to be extended to a gift to his issue, which is an independent bequest; and the court will construe such a gift as vested if the words will at all permit of that construction. Applebee's Trusts, In re, 28 L. T. 102; 21 W. R. 290.

A father gave property to his two daughters in equal moieties for their respective lives, with benefit of survivorship, remainder over to the respective children of such daughters, and the issue of deceased children as the daughters should appoint, and failing appointment among such children and issue equally, or (if only one child of either) the entire moiety to go to that one child "at twenty-one years." Failing issue by either daughter (the event which happened), the whole was given over to the children and issue of the other daughter without mention of twenty-one years, as their mother should appoint, and failing appointment amongst such children and issue equally, or (if only one child of such surviving daughter) the entire moiety to go to that one child "at twenty-one years":—Held, that the variances in the descriptions of the legatees must be read in their strict and natural sense, and that, therefore, the attainment of the age of twenty-one was not to be imported into the second gift where it was not expressed. Ib.

Survivorship.]—Survivorship held to apply not only to the original, but to the substituted class. Atkinson v. Bartrum, 28 Beav. 219.

A., seised in fee, has a son B., and a sister C., &c., and devises his lands to his son in tail general; and if his son B. should die without issue, and his wife should survive him, then the wife to have the premises for life, remainder to C. in fee; B., the son, dies without issue, but testator's wife dies before him: C. is not entitled to the remainder in fee, because the contingency is annexed to all the devises over. Davis v. Norton, 2 P. Wms. 390.

"Likewise."]—A testator devised an estate to his son until he attained twenty-one, and to the testator's widow for life, in case his son died under twenty-one. This was followed by a gift of the produce of the estate to his nephews, which commenced with the word "Likewise":—Held, upon the context, that the gift to the nephews was governed by the same contingency as that to the widow, and the son having attained twenty-one, that the gift to the nephews failed. Paylor v. Pegg, 24 Beav. 105.

Double Contingency—Dying under Twenty-one and without Issue.]—A testator devised two estates at S. and H. to the use of trustees and their heirs upon trust for R. and the heirs of his body; but in case he should die under twenty-one and without issue, H. estate should be in trust for A. and the heirs of her body, but in case she should die under twenty-one and without issue, upon the same trusts as were thereinafter declared of S. estate; and if R. should die under twenty-one and without issue, as to S. estate, for the testator's son and daughter-in-law during their lives; and subject to the trusts thereinbefore thereof declared, in trust for other persons named. Both R. and A. attained twenty-one, and died without issue:—Held, that H. estate was to go over in the double event of R. dying under twenty-one and without issue, which not having happened the limitation over did not take effect; nor were the ultimate trusts of S.

estate applicable to H. estate. Doe d. Usher v. Jessep (12 East, 288; 11 R. R. 380) and Brownsword v. Edwards (2 Ves. 242) discussed. Pearson v. Rutter, 3 De G. M. & G. 398; 1 Eq. R. 352; 1 W. R. 421. Affirmed, nom. Grey v. Pearson, 6 H. L. Cas. 61; 26 L. J., Ch. 473; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 823; 5 W. R. 454. And see Sheffield v. Coventry (Earl), 2 De G. M. & G. 551; 22 L. J., Ch. 498.

By a will, real and personal estate were devised and bequeathed to trustees, upon trust for the testator's wife for her life, and after her decease, in trust for his daughter, M. U., and all his other children who should be living at his decease, their respective heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, as tenants in common, but he declared that no division should be made while any child should be under the age of twenty-two years; and as to M. U.'s share, subject to the proviso thereinafter contained: that proviso was, that in case M. U. should survive his (the testator's) wife, the said trustees should stand possessed of her share, upon trust for her separate use for life, and after her decease, for her children; and in case M. U. should have no children, her share should go to the others of the testator's children, in the same manner as their original shares. The testator then provided for the shares of the other children going over, in the event of their dying under twenty-one without leaving issue. M. U. survived the testator, but died in the lifetime of his widow, and never had a child. All the testator's children attained twenty-one:—Held, that M. U.'s share went over to the testator's other children, and did not belong to her administratrix as part of her estate Doutty v. Laver, 14 Jur. 188.

J. devised all his lands, &c., to his daughter, B., for life, remainder to trustees to preserve, &c., remainder to the use of the first son of B., remainder to the heirs male of the body of said first son, with divers remainders over, and in case of the death of B. without issue of her body living at her decease, then testator devised said lands to his trustees, until his cousin, C., should attain the age of twenty-one; and in case of the death of C., under twenty-one without issue, then to D. for life, remainder to his first, &c., son in tail, remainder to E. for life, remainder to his first, &c., son in tail, remainder over. The court inclined to confine the contingency in the will of J., of B.'s dying without issue of her body living at her death, to the death of C. under twenty-one, and that the subsequent limitations to C. after attaining twenty-one, and to D. and E., are not contingent but vested remainders. Lethieullier v. Tracy, 3 Atk. 775; Amb. 204. And see 2 Ken. 40.

Gift Over on Marriage.]—A testator gave the produce of his real estate to his daughter E. for life, so long as she should remain single; but in case she should marry, then he gave one-half of the income to his daughter E., and one-half to his daughter M. (a married woman with children); and after the death of M., he gave one-half of the trust moneys to her children, and the other half to the children of E.; and if M. should die without leaving children, then the whole for E.'s children; and if E. should die without children, the whole to M.'s children; and if both should die without children, then over. Eliza never married:—Held, that upon her death, the children of M. took the whole corpus and income, subject only to be divested if M. should die without having any children. Eaton v. Hewitt, 2 Dr. & Sm. 184; 1 N. R. 10; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 1120; 7 L. T. 496; 11 W. R. 76.

Testator devised his real estates to trustees upon trust that his daughter M. should, until twenty-one, if sole and unmarried, receive thereout an annuity of 60*l.*, and that she should thereafter and until thirty-one, if sole and unmarried, receive a further annuity of 40*l.*; but in case his said daughter should marry without the consent of his trustees, then she should only receive an annuity of 50*l.*, and the said estates should immediately upon such marriage be in trust for the children of M., as tenants in common in tail; and for default of such issue, in trust for the testator's sister S.: provided, that if M. should marry with the consent of the trustees, it should be lawful for them to settle the estate upon M. and her husband for their joint lives and the life of the survivor, with remainder to the children of the marriage, under the same limitations as before. M. married with the consent of the trustees and died without issue:—Held, that the remainder to S. was conditional, depending on M.'s marriage without consent; consequently, that M. having married with consent, the remainder to S. failed, although M. died without issue. Tolderey v. Colt, 1 Y. & Coll. 621; 5 L. J., Ex. Eq. 25. And see S. C. at law, 1 M. & W. 250; 1 Tyrw. & G. 324.

Testator gave his real and personal property to trustees, their heirs, &c., upon trust to pay and divide the same unto and amongst all and every his children who might be living at his decease, share and share alike, for their lives; "and in case any of my said children, being daughters, shall marry, and shall happen to depart this life in the lifetime of her or their husband or husbands, I direct that the share or shares of her or them so dying shall go to her or their respective husband or husbands for his or their life or lives, and from and after his or their decease then to be equally divided amongst all and every the child and children of my said daughter and daughters then living, and in default of any such child or children then I direct such share or shares shall go and be divided equally to and amongst all and every my said children who shall be then living." The testator left a son and seven daughters; one of the daughters died unmarried:—Held, that the gift over of the shares applied only to the shares of daughters marrying, and that the share of the daughter who died a spinster was undisposed of after her death. Lett v. Randall, 10 Sim. 112.

If Absent Person should Claim.]—A testator bequeathed his leasehold estates to trustees, out of the rents to pay an annuity to his daughter, and he proceeded: "And I direct, that if my son Henry, now absent, shall within five years make his claim to my trustees, he shall be entitled to and receive one moiety of my leasehold estate, subject however, together with the other moiety thereof, in favour of my son William, to the annuity and trust before mentioned":—Held, that William was entitled to a moiety of the leasehold, subject to the annuity, and that the gift to him was not contingent on Henry's claiming. Partridge v. Foster, 35 Beav. 545.

—— In Gifts Substituting Children for their Parents.]—See WILL.

3. ESTATES OR INTERESTS LIMITED IN CLEAR TERMS OF CONTINGENCY. EVENTS DO NOT HAPPEN.

Marriage or Death of Widow after Death of Son without Issue.]—A testator devised one moiety of his property to his wife during widowhood, and the other moiety upon certain limitations for the benefit of his son and his issue, with the like devise to the son and his issue as to the widow's moiety in the event of her death or marriage in her son's lifetime, and directed that if the son should die during the widowhood of his mother without leaving lawful issue, then that his share should go to the widow for life; and, "in case of the marriage or death of his present wife, his said son being dead and leaving no lawful issue," he gave the whole to J. B. The son survived the mother, and then died without issue:—Held, that the contingency was too clearly confined to the marriage or death of the widow, after the death of the son without issue, to allow of the gift over taking effect, and the heir-at-law of the testator was entitled. Dicken v. Clarke, 2 Y. & C. 572.

Portion to be Paid to Son within Six Years after Father's Death.]—A., the father, and B., the eldest son, resettle an estate, to the use of A. for life as to part, then to trustees for two hundred years, to raise 1,100*l.* to be paid to the second son within six years after A.'s death, or as soon after as the same could be raised, and in the meantime interest from A.'s death, for and towards his maintenance, remainder to B., the eldest, &c.; C. died indebted, and two years after him A. died; from whom a good estate came to B. The creditors cannot have this portion raised, the contingency upon which it was payable never happening. Bradley v. Powell, Cas. t. Talb. 193.

Marriage or Twenty-one.]—Devise of houses to executors in trust to receive the rents for the support, clothing, maintenance and education of the testator's children until they should respectively attain twenty-one or marry, and from and after which, to A., B., and C., or such of them as shall be then living:—Held, that the devise to A., B., and C. did not take effect in possession until after all the children attained twenty-one or married. Quære, whether there was an intestacy as to the surplus rents beyond what was necessary for the maintenance and education of the children during their minorities. Farran v. Smith, 11 Ir. Eq. R. 254.

Limitation Over—Condition—If Person should come to the Possession of Estate.]—Where an estate has been plainly given in a will, it is not from the use of subsequent words to be treated as given upon a condition, if those subsequent words are capable of being interpreted, not as a condition imposed, but as a mere description of the event on which the gift is to come into existence. Edgeworth v. Edgeworth, L. R. 4 H. L. 35; 17 W. R. 714.

W. devised to his brother C. for life, and in default of C. having issue at the time of his death to his next brother, F. B., for life, and, in default of F. B. having issue living at the time of his death, to his youngest brother P. in fee. The testator then described how C.'s children should take (namely, in tail male), and went on thus: "And in case F. B. should come to the possession of the said estate hereinbefore limited to him, and should die leaving issue, said issue to take in like manner" as before limited to the issue of C. F. B. died in the lifetime of C., leaving a son. C. died some years afterwards:—Held, that the words "should come to the possession" did not constitute a condition which, not having happened, prevented F. B.'s son from taking under the will, and so created an intestacy, but that he took under the force of the limitation created in favour of his father. Ib.

—— Gift Over in Default of Issue and in Case of Death.]—Testator gave properties to his daughter and her issue, "and in default of such issue, and in case of her death," he gave them over. These are words of double contingency—default of issue and death; and the limitation will accordingly take effect on her dying without children at any time. Gawler v. Cadby, Jacob, 346. And see Maddison v. Chapman, 3 De G. & J. 536; 28 L. J., Ch. 450; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 277; 7 W. R. 214. Affirming 4 K. & J. 709.

—— Death without leaving Issue.]—A testator gave certain property to all his children who should be living at a certain time after his death; and added a proviso that, in case of the death of any child before that time without leaving issue, then the share which such child would have taken if living at that time should go to A. One of the testator's children living at the date of his will predeceased him, leaving issue who survived the testator:—Held, that A. took no interest in the property under the proviso. Groome v. Dell, 3 N. R. 26.

A testator gave real and personal property to trustees for his son John for life, and after his death for his children in equal shares; but if his son John should die under twenty-one without leaving lawful issue living at his decease, he directed the property to be in trust for his other children in equal shares. And after further gifts, he gave the residue of his property for his four sons, Matthew, Thomas, John and Christopher; but in case no child of his should live to attain twenty-one, or if none of them should leave lawful issue at his or her death, or respective deaths, then he gave the residue to other persons. In 1863 he died, leaving one daughter, Jane, and the four sons named in his will surviving. All the testator's children attained twenty-one. John, who attained twenty-one in 1864, died without issue in 1868;—Held, that the property of which trusts were declared in favour of John and his children did not on John's death pass under the gift over to the other children of the testator, but fell into the residue; and that under the residuary gift the three surviving sons and the representative of the deceased son took indefeasible interests. Imray v. Imeson, 26 L. T. 93. And see Brown v. Walker, 2 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 82.

—— Marriage, and Children of Marriage who should attain Twenty-one.]—Testator gave certain fee farm rents and stock in the funds to trustees upon trust to pay the annual produce and dividends to his two nieces, M. and N., for their lives, and the life of the survivor, and after the decease of the survivor of them unmarried, to convey or transfer the rents and the stock to the children of B.; with a proviso, however, that if his nieces, or either of them, should marry, the trustees should have power to settle the share of the party marrying for her benefit, and that of her husband and children; and that in the event of a marriage, and children of the marriage who should attain twenty-one, but not otherwise, the limitations over in favour of B.'s children should be void; and the testator gave the residue of his property to M. and N. absolutely. M. and N. both married, but had no children, and their settlements provided that in the event of their having no children the persons interested under the will should take:—Held, that the children of B. were entitled. Doyne v. Cartwright, 1 Coll. C. C. 482.

—— Death without Issue Male before Life Tenant.]—A testator, after giving various life estates in his real and personal property, directed that if M. H. should, after the death of J. and certain other first tenants for life, die before N. H., the last tenant for life, leaving issue male, then his trustees should convey one moiety of his real estate to trustees, to the use of the first and other sons of M. H. successively, in tail male, with remainder to N. H. for life, with remainder to his sons in tail male; and he directed one moiety of his personal estate to be invested in the purchase of real estate to be settled to the same uses. The testator then gave corresponding directions with regard to the other moiety, in the event of N. H. dying before M. H. And in case M. H. and N. H. should both die without issue male, then the testator directed his trustees to convey his real estate to such persons as would be his right heirs at the death of the survivor of M. H. and N. H., and to transfer his personal estate to such persons as would be his next of kin. M. H. died without issue in the lifetime of J. On J.'s death, N. H. claimed an absolute interest in the personal estate, and suffered a recovery of the real estate, and afterwards died without issue:—Held, that, although M. H. died in the lifetime of J., and although from the circumstance of M. H. dying in the lifetime of N. H., the events in which the estate was limited to the issue of N. H. did not take place; still, under the terms of the will, N. H. became entitled, on the death of J., to both moieties; and that he took the personal estate absolutely, and an estate tail in the real estate. Franks v. Price, 3 Beav. 182; 9 L. J., Ch. 383. And see S. C. at law, 5 Bing. (N.C.) 37; 6 Scott, 710.

—— Gift to Issue, whether Substantive or Substitutive.]—Gift to a niece for life, and afterwards to her children, and in default to the niece's mother for life; and, on such default, and after the death of both, to the children of A. A. (deceased) "then living," and the issue then living of any child of A. A. "dying in the lifetime of the niece," such issue to take the parent's share:—Held, first, that the words "then living" referred to the period of distribution. Secondly, that the issue of the children of A. A. took as objects of the gift, and not by substitution for their parent. Thirdly, that no child of A. A. could take who did not survive both the niece and her mother. Fourthly, that issue of a child who survived the niece did not take, they not fulfilling the condition of being issue of a child "dying in the life of the niece." Fifthly, that the issue of a child of A. A. who was dead at the making of the will would take "if then living." Coulthurst v. Carter, 15 Beav. 421; 21 L. J., Ch. 555; 16 Jur. 532. And see Pride v. Fooks, 3 De G. & J. 252; 28 L. J., Ch. 81; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 158; 7 W. R. 109; and Murthwaite v. Jenkinson, 2 B. & C. 357; 3 D. & R. 765; 26 R. R. 384, 391.

Gift Over on Two different Events.]—Devise of lands to be sold in aid of personal estate, "and after death of my wife, the estates not sold and the personal not applied, to be subject as aftermentioned; the rents and produce to be carried on in accumulation of 3 per cent. as aforesaid, during her life, and also for five years after her death; and to be laid out in land; then if my son M. shall be living, and any lawful issue of his body, and if my son G. shall be living, and any lawful issue of his body, to them for life, as tenants in common, then to their issue in moieties; if only issue of one, to that issue, if but one, to that one"; with power of settlement: "my wife to receive such provision as aforesaid neat and clear, and the residue only to be subject to the devise over to take place after her death; and if both my said sons shall be dead without issue," then to his daughter for life; after her death to her son, his heirs, &c.; and if she should have any other issue, to them, their heirs, &c., on failure of issue of his sons and grandson. The devise over is attached to the single event of both sons being dead with issue at the death of the wife, or five years after at most; and one son being alive at that time, though without issue, it never took effect. But the son is not entitled to the estate absolutely on account of the contingent interest in his issue. Graves v. Bainbrigge, 1 Ves. 562.

A testator gave to his wife a house during her life, and at her death to go to his two children, the rent to be equally divided between the two, and at their death to go to their children; but in case that either one of them should die without children, that share to go to the other. Both the children survived the wife, and died without children:—Held, that on the death of the child who died first, the other became entitled to the entire house. Drennan v. Andrew, 36 L. J., Ch. 1; 15 L. T. 259—L. C.

A testator possessed of real and personal estate, and also devisee of Whiteacre for life, with remainder to his children, gave one-fourth of his residuary real and personal estate to a married daughter for life, with remainder to her children. The testator then directed his said daughter to sell her share of Whiteacre to his eldest son, at a fixed price, and in case she should refuse to do so, he gave her share of his residuary real and personal estate over to his eldest son. The testator further directed his said daughter to settle certain real property, and also the purchase moneys of Whiteacre, upon certain trusts, and in case she should refuse to make such settlement, he gave the property given to her by the will over to his other children. On the death of the testator the daughter not only declined to sell her share of Whiteacre, but also at the same time declined to settle the property above mentioned:—Held, that as the testator had not provided for the simultaneous breach of both conditions, the gift to his daughter and her children took effect as if no clauses of forfeiture had been contained in the will. Ormerod v. Riley, 12 Jur. (N.S.) 112; 13 L. T. 571—L.JJ.

4. Divesting of Vested Interests where Events do not happen or Contingent Clauses Fail.

Share to be Transferred to Survivor in Event of Grandchild Dying in Daughter's Lifetime.]—Devise of real estate to three daughters for life, and after their decease to three grandchildren as tenants in common in fee; and in case of either of the grandchildren dying in the lifetime of the daughters, the share of them so dying to be "transferred" to the "survivors," and if only one should be living, then to him or her so "surviving." The survivor of the daughters outlived the three grandchildren:—Held, that the survivorship had reference to the death of the last tenant for life and not to a survivorship between the grandchildren, that the divesting clause never took effect, and that, on the decease of the survivor of the three daughters, the heirs of the three grandchildren took as tenants in common in fee. Littlejohns v. Household, 21 Beav. 29.

A testator declared trusts of his estate to be for his wife for life, and after her death he gave the same estate to his first cousins by his mother's side and the issue of such of them as might happen to be dead per stirpes, and to their heirs, executors, administrators and assigns for ever as tenants in common:—Held, that the period for ascertaining the class to take was the death of the testator's widow. Baldwin v. Rogers, 3 De G. M. & G. 649; 22 L. J., Ch. 665; 17 Jur. 267.

Held, also, that the first cousins ex parte maternâ, living at the death of the testator, took vested interests, subject to open so as to let in all other first cousins ex parte maternâ born before the period of distribution. Ib.

Gift to Children — Gift Over in Default of Issue.]—The court may supply words in a will, where the context shows, by a necessary implication, what are the words omitted, and unless they are supplied there would be an intestacy. Hope v. Potter, 3 K. & J. 206; 5 W. R. 389.

So where there is a gift by will, and then a gift over, not commensurate with the original gift, the court will curtail the general words of the gift over, by supplying words of reference; as where the first gift is to A.'s children and the gift over is in default of issue A. The court will read the gift over as though it were in default of "such" issue. Ib.

—— Death without leaving Issue.] — But where there was a devise of a particular property to the testator's daughter, A., her heirs and assigns, and if she should die under the age of twenty-five years, "without having left any child or children," over, and subsequently, a devise of other real estate to trustees in fee, in trust for A., for her separate use; and after her death, in trust to convey the same "unto and equally amongst such children of A., as tenants in common, the rents and profits in the meantime to be applied for their maintenance; and in case A. should die without leaving any child or children, or leaving such child or children, all should die under twenty-one," over:—Held, that the court could not, after "such children of A.," supply the words "as should attain twenty-one," but was at liberty, as against the testator's heir, to construe the word "such," as relating to all the children of A., as they had been mentioned in the previous limitation. Ib.

A testator devised all the residue of his real estate in trust for his six younger children, and directed that in case any one or more of his six younger children should happen to die in his lifetime leaving issue living at his decease, and which issue, being issue male, should live to attain the age of twenty-one years, or, dying under that age, should leave issue surviving, or being issue female, should live to attain that age or be previously married; then in such case the share to which such child so dying would, if he or she had survived the testator and had attained the age of twenty-one years, have become absolutely entitled, should be held upon trust for such issue:—Held, that the two infant children of one of the six younger children of the testator who had died in the testator's lifetime took a vested interest in the share of their deceased parent liable to be divested on their death under the age of twenty-one years. James' Settled Estates, In re, 51 L. T. 596; 32 W. R. 898.

Devise to William, and Mary, his wife, and the survivor of them, during their lives; then to M. their daughter, or if more children by Mary, equal between them; and in case they leave no children, then to their heirs and assigns for ever:—Held, that this last remainder became vested when the survivor of William and Mary (namely William), died, leaving no children by their marriage. Doe d. Nesmyth v. Knowls, 1 B. & Ad. 324; 9 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 78.

Testator gave all his real and personal property to his wife for life, and at her death, if he left issue, to the child or children he might leave at his decease; but if he died without leaving issue, then he gave all his property in equal proportions to his brothers and sister, Thomas, Anthony, John, and Jane; and if any of them should die without leaving issue he gave such share or shares to the survivors or survivor of them; but if issue he gave such share to their children. The testator died without issue. John died a bachelor in his lifetime. Jane died in the lifetime of his widow, leaving one child and several grandchildren, the issue of a deceased child. Thomas survived the widow, and died leaving children. Then Anthony died a bachelor:—Held, that the share intended for John belonged absolutely to Thomas, Anthony, and Jane; that Jane's share belonged to her child, Thomas's to his children, and Anthony's to his real and personal representatives. Benn v. Dixon, 16 Sim. 21; 11 Jur. 812.

A testator gave all his real and personal estate to his two sons and daughter in equal shares absolutely, and if his daughter should die without leaving issue, he gave the property bequeathed to her to the survivors or survivor of his said sons:—Held, that the survival of the sons was part of the contingency raising the gift over; and therefore, the sons having predeceased the daughter, the latter's estate became indefeasible, although she died without leaving issue. Jones v. Davies, 28 W. R. 455.

—— To Daughters if no Issue Male Living at Mother's Death.]—A testator provided that if his daughter should have no issue male of her body living at her death, or no such issue male as should be entitled by the true meaning of that his will to his real estates thereby limited, then and in either of those cases he devised his estates to the daughters of his daughter living at her death:—Held, that the daughters of the daughter did not take any estate under the limitations in the will, for that the words "living at her death" applied to both branches of the proviso, and that the contingency on which the daughters were to become entitled determined at the death of their mother. Eden v. Wilson, 4 H. L. Cas. 257; reversing S. C. nom. Wilson v. Eden, 12 Beav. 454. And see S. C. at law, 5 Ex. 752; 20 L. J., Ex. 73; 19 L. J., Q. B. 104; 14 Jur. 616.

—— Child's Share on Death "during Continuance of Trusts" of Will.] — A testator, who died in 1876, by his will gave a freehold house to trustees upon trust, as soon as conveniently might be after his death, to let the same upon certain terms; and until the granting of a lease the trustees were to permit the business at the house to be carried on by the testator's son R. and his daughter M. for the benefit of his estate. Subject thereto the testator gave the house and all his residuary real and personal estate to his trustees upon trust to sell and convert "as soon as conveniently might be after his death," and to hold the proceeds in trust for all his children equally: provided that if any child of his should die in his lifetime, "or during the continuance of the trust hereinbefore declared," leaving issue, such issue should take by substitution the parent's share; and if any son of his should die in his lifetime, "or during the continuance of the trusts hereinbefore declared," leaving a widow and no issue, such widow should take the share of her deceased husband for her life, and after her death the share should form part of the testator's residuary estate. The trustees had full powers as to mode, time, and place of sale, of any of the property directed to be sold. In 1878 the trustees let the freehold house. In 1881 one of the sons died intestate, and without issue, leaving a widow. The question was whether, on the death of the son, his interest in the residuary property was divested:—Held, that the absolute interests given to the testator's children became indefeasible at the latest when the lease of the house was completed, and the business was no longer carried on for the benefit of the estate; and that the share of the deceased son would devolve, subject to his funeral and testamentary expenses and debts, as to one moiety to his widow, and as to the other to his next of kin. Teale, In re, Teale v. Teale, 53 L. T. 936; 34 W. R. 248.

Gift to pay Debts and to convey residue to Son absolutely—Death of Son leaving Children.] —Testatrix gave all her real and personal estate to trustees in trust to pay all her debts, &c., and certain annuities, and then as to the residue of her estate directed them to convey, assign, or otherwise assure the same unto and to the use of her son, his heirs, executors, &c., absolutely. And if her son should marry, and should die leaving children who should live to attain the age of twenty-one years, the trustees were to convey, &c., the residue to such children equally, as tenants in common absolutely, but if her son should die in her lifetime, without leaving children or a child surviving, then the trustees were to convey, &c., the residue to the persons named, for their absolute use and benefit. The son married after the date of the will in the lifetime of the testatrix, survived the testatrix, and had children living:—Held, that death leaving children meant death in the lifetime of the testatrix, and that that not having happened, the son became, subject to the payment of debts and annuities, entitled absolutely to the residue. Luddy, In re, Peard v. Morton, 53 L. J., Ch. 21; 25 Ch. D. 394; 49 L. T. 703; 32 W. R. 272.

5. CROSS REMAINDERS.

a. Implication of in Wills.

Devise to Two or More as Tenants in Common in Tail — Gift Over in Default of such Issue.] —Whether cross remainders are to be implied or not is a question of construction; and wherever there are limitations in tail male, "and in default of such issue," a gift over, the presumption is, that that means in default of all such issue male. Taaffe v. Conmee, 10 H. L. Cas. 64; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 919; 6 L. T. 666.

A testator, by will, in 1823, after bequeathing real estate to his nephew D. for life, with remainder to his first and other sons in tail male, proceeded as follows: "And for default of such issue male in D., then to the use of my nieces, and the survivor of them, for the term of their natural lives, as tenants in common, and not as joint tenants, without impeachment of waste; and from and after their decease to the use of their first and every other son and sons lawfully begotten on their bodies, and the heirs male of their bodies, successively, in equal proportions, the elder of such sons of each of my nieces, and the heirs male of their bodies, being always preferred and to take before the younger and the heirs male of their bodies; and for default of such issue male, then to the daughters of my nieces; and for default of such issue, male or female, to the use of my own right heirs for ever." The nephew died without issue. One niece died leaving a daughter, the others having sons:—Held, that the three nieces were entitled as tenants in common for life, with remainder to the survivors and survivor of them, with remainder to the eldest sons of the three nieces as tenants in common in tail male. The daughter of the niece could take no estate until the prior limitations to the sons of the other nieces were exhausted. Ib.

Where by a very obscure and illiterate will, property was left to devisor's four grandsons, "and to the heirs male of the said grandsons, and then to the grandsons' heirs males that part that belonged to their father, and then to the last liver to the heirs males of the said grandsons, and for want of issues males of the grandsons," over; the court implied cross remainders. Doe d. Southouse v. Jenkins, 5 Bing. 469; 3 M. & P. 59; 7 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 182; 30 R. R. 700. And see Holmes v. Meynel. T. Raym. 452; T. Jones, 172. Brooke v. Turner, 2 Bing. (N.C.) 422; 2 Scott, 611.

In order to raise an implication of cross remainders, there must be a devise to two or more persons as tenants in common in tail. Sharp, In re, 2 N. R. 54. S. C. nom. Tharp's Estate, In re, 2 N. R. 253; 33 L. J., Ch. 59; 8 L. T. 559; 11 W. R. 763. And see Woodhouse v. Herrick, 1 K. & J. 352; 3 Eq. R. 817; 24 L. J., Ch. 649; 3 W. R. 303.

A testator devised to three persons in equal shares, and the heirs of their bodies respectively lawfully begotten, with a gift over in fee in default of such issue "of any of them":—Held, that cross remainders should be implied between the tenants in tail, notwithstanding the words "of any of them" in the devise. Powell v. Howell, 16 W. R. 1116.

Question as to cross remainders in will. Eastland v. Reynolds, Dick. 317.

A. devised lands to his wife for life, and then to his son and daughter, to be equally divided between them and the respective issues of their bodies, and for want of such issue, to his wife in fee. This will not create a cross remainder, which can only be raised by an implication absolutely necessary, which is not here the case, for the words "several of the respective" effectually disjoin the title. Davenport v. Oldis, 1 Atk. 579.

Cross remainders have never been adjudged to arise merely upon these words, "in default of such issue." Ib.

Devise by very general and extensive words, restrained upon the apparent intention. Devise to the first and other sons in tail male, and for want of such issue to the daughter and daughters, her and their heirs, as tenants in common, and for want of such issue to three nieces, and their several and respective heirs for ever as tenants in common, and for want of such issue to the testator's right heirs. As to the estate of the niece, the prior limitations having failed, and the implication of cross remainders, quære. Green v. Stephens, 12 Ves. 419. See further 17 Ves. 64. And see Phipard v. Mansfield, 1 Dougl. 53 n.; Cowp. 797, and Doe d. Gorges v. Webb, 1 Taunt. 234; 9 R. R. 754.

Under a devise in trust to settle on the devisor's children in equal shares and proportions undivided, for and during their respective lives, with remainder to their issue, severally and respectively in tail general, with cross remainders over, there being two daughters, cross remainders implied not only among the several children of each, but also as between the two families. Horne v. Barton, 19 Ves. 298; G. Cooper, 257.

Implication of cross remainders under a direction in default of such issue to go over. Ib.

Devise to first and other sons, and in default to daughters as tenants in common, and in default of such issue over, raises cross remainders between the daughters. Wright v. Englefield, Amb. 468; 2 Eden, 239.

Where estates tail are devised to more than two persons as tenants in common, and it is manifest that the testator did not intend that any part of the estate should go over, unless there were a failure of issue of all the devisees, there the devisees take cross remainders. Where estates tail are given to two persons only as tenants in common, there cross remainders between them will be implied, although there is no expressed intention that no part of the estate should go over until the failure of issue of both, unless the limitation to them be successively, severally, or respectively. Livesey v. Harding, 1 Russ. & M. 636; Tam. 460.

Devise to trustees and their heirs in trust to receive and pay over rents and profits to A., a feme covert, for life for her separate use; and after her decease to convey to her daughters as tenants in common in tail, remainder over. A. takes an equitable estate for life, and may, by lease and release, make a tenant to the præcipe for an equitable recovery; each daughter takes a vested estate when she comes in esse, subject to be divested as the number increases; the conveyance in execution of the trust need not wait the death of A. Personal estate not exempted from the debts, &c., by a charge upon the real. Cross remainders implied. Burnaby v. Griffin, 3 Ves. 266.

Testator devised freehold fee-simple estates in possession to all and every the child and children of his daughter, S., for life; and after the decease of such child and children, to the lawful issue of such child or children, to hold to such issue, his, her, and their heirs as tenants in common, and in default of such issue over. S. had nine children, four in testator's life and five after:—Held, that the nine took under the devise as tenants in tail with cross remainders. Mogg v. Mogg, 1 Mer. 654; 15 R. R. 185.

Devise in trust for the testator's daughters M. and C., for their lives, for their separate use; and in case both M. and C. should die without leaving issue, then over implied estates tail to M. and C., with cross remainders in tail. Stanhouse v. Gaskell, 17 Jur. 157; 1 W. R. 77.

Devise and bequest of freehold and leasehold estates to trustees upon trust, after paying certain annuities, to settle the same, so that, as nearly as the rules of law and equity would permit, the testator's six younger children should receive the rents and profits in equal shares during their lives, with benefit of survivorship if any of them should die without leaving issue, and, if any should die leaving issue, that the child or children of him or her so dying, during the lives of his said other children, and of the survivor, should take the share of him or her so dying of the said rents and profits, and that upon the death of all his said other children, as to the leasehold estates, the same to go and belong to the issue of his said other children for their respective lives in equal shares, with benefit of survivorship, and, as to the freehold estates, the issue of his said children to take the rents, profits, and proceeds thereof for their respective lives in equal shares, with benefit of survivorship in case of the death of any of such issue without leaving issue, and, if any of such issue of his said children should die leaving issue, the child and children of him or her so dying during the lives of such issue of his said children, and of the survivor of them, should take the share of him or her so dying; and after the death of all the issue of his said children, then, as to the said leasehold estates, the same to go and belong to the child and children of such issue absolutely as tenants in common; and as to the said freehold estates, in case the issue of his said children, or any of them, should leave issue living at the decease of the last survivor of the said issue, then that the same should be to the use of the child and children of the bodies of the issue of his said children, and of the heirs of the body and respective bodies of such child and children, and, if more than one, equally to be divided amongst them as tenants in common; and if there should be a failure of issue of the body or bodies of any such child or children, then, as to the original and accrued shares of such child or children, whose children should so fail, to the use of the remaining and other and others of the said children, and the heirs of the body or bodies of such remaining and other children, and, if more than one, equally as tenants in common; and in default of such issue of the issue of his said children, to the use of the right heirs of the testator. The six younger children of the testator survived him. Some of them had children at the time of his death, and some had children born after his death:—Held, that the six younger children of the testator took life interests in both the freehold and leasehold estates, with remainder as to the freeholds to the children of such younger children as tenants in common in tail, with cross remainders between and among them, and the ultimate remainder to the testator's right heirs; and, semble, that the same children of such younger children (after the decease of the last survivor of their respective parents, the tenants for life) take absolute interests in the leaseholds. Williams v. Teale, 6 Hare, 239.

Testator empowered his trustees to purchase freehold land to the amount of 1,500*l.* for the use of T. during his life, and then to be divided among his issue, if any:—Held, that T. was entitled for life, with remainder to his children as tenants in common in tail, with cross remainders between them in tail, and reversion to T. in fee. Hadwen v. Hadwen, 23 Beav. 551.

—— Cy Près.]—The testator by his will gave all his real estate to his daughter, J. K., for life, remainder to trustees to preserve, &c.; and after her decease to the use of all and every the child or children of A., male or female, begotten or to be begotten, and their assigns, for their respective lives, and, after the decease, and respective deceases, of such child or children of A., to all and every the child or children of all and every such child or children of A., male or female, to be begotten, and the heirs of his, her, and their respective body and bodies, as tenants in common; and in case of the death of any of the said children of such child or children of A., and failure of issue of his, her, or their body or bodies respectively, then as well the original as the accrued share of such of them so dying without issue to go to the survivors or survivor, others or other of them, as tenants in common, if more than one; and for default of such issue over. A. had three children born in the lifetime of the testator and living at his decease, and another was born after the testator's death; one of the three born in his lifetime died during the life of A., without issue:—Held, that the children of A. took as tenants in common, and not as joint-tenants; that, inasmuch as the children of the afterborn child of A. could not take as purchasers, the devise would be supported according to the rule of cy près, or approximation by giving an estate tail to the afterborn child of A.; that the rule of cy près, being an arbitrary principle of construction, introduced to effect the intention of a testator in the exigency of a particular case, was not to be applied, except when the necessity of the case required it, and that therefore, although the devise was to the children of A., as a class, the children of A., born in the testator's lifetime, would take estates for life, and the estates devised to the children of the afterborn child would alone be altered; that cross remainders were to be implied between the children of A., and, therefore, that the three children of A. who survived or left issue took according to their respective estates the share of the child of A. who died without issue, and that the inequality among the devisees, some of them being tenants in tail, and others tenants for life with remainder to their issue in tail, was no objection to the implication of cross remainders among them. Vanderplank v. King, 3 Hare, 1; 12 L. J., Ch. 497; 7 Jur. 548.

Testator devised all his manors, messuages, lands, &c., to trustees in trust for A. for his life, with remainders to his first and other sons in tail male, and, for want of such issue, he devised all the same manors, &c., to his daughters and granddaughters respectively during their lives, and after their decease to the heirs male of their bodies, to take as tenants in common, and on failure of such issue he devised the remainder of his whole estate to his own right heirs. The devise will create cross remainders amongst the daughters and granddaughters. Staunton v. Peck, 2 Cox, 8.

Devise to A., B., and C., &c., share and share alike, for their lives, remainder to their respective children for their lives, and so to be continued, from issue to issue, for life; but, if any of them die, leaving no issue, their shares to go to the survivors for their lives, and the issue of such of them as shall be dead, and for default of any issue then over:—Held, that A., B., C., &c., take estate tail with cross remainders. Mortimer v. West, 2 Sim. 274; 29 R. R. 104. And see S. C. on another point, 3 Russ. 370; 5 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 181; 27 R. R. 98.

The case of Humberston v. Humberston (1 P. Wms. 332) is not applicable, as in this case the trust is not executory, but the devisees take by direct devise to themselves. Ib., 282.

—— Gift in Trust for Devisees for their Lives and their Issue for their Lives for ever.]—Devise in trust for A. for life, with remainder in trust for B., C., and D., and the survivor, for their lives and the life of the survivor, and for the issue of them respectively for their lives for ever, as tenants in common, with a gift over on their death without issue, or in case of the death of all their issue; and a direction that the before stated entails to B., C., and D., and their respective issues, were to be equally divided amongst the daughters as well as the sons of them and their issue:—Held, that B., C., and D. took equitable estates in remainder for their lives and the life of the survivor, with cross remainders between them, and that, on the death of the survivor, all the children of B., C., and D. took equitable estates as tenants in common in tail, with cross remainders between them in tail. Parfitt v. Hember, L. R. 4 Eq. 443.

The doctrine of cy près, established by Humberston v. Humberston (1 P. Wms. 332) is applicable to such a devise, and not merely to a will of an executory character. Ib.

Testator devised an estate to A. for life, remainder to trustees to preserve, &c., remainder to all the children of A., as tenants in common, and not as joint tenants, and, for want of such issue, to B. for life, remainder of trustees to preserve, &c., remainder to all the children of B. as tenants in common, and not as joint tenants, and for want of such issue, to C. in fee:—Held, that the children of A. took estates for life, with cross remainders between them, for life, with remainder to B. for life, with remainder to her children, as tenants in common, with cross remainders between them for life, with remainder to C. in fee. Ashley v. Ashley, 6 Sim. 358; 3 L. J., Ch. 61.

Devise of estates to testator's son and four daughters, "and their lawful issue respectively in tail general, with benefit of survivorship to and amongst their issue respectively, as tenants in common;" but such issue, "being sons," not to have vested interests until they attained twenty-one, or "being daughters," until twenty-one or marriage; with power to the trustees, after the death of his son or daughters respectively, to advance such issue during minority, to the extent of one-half the presumptive share of "each child"; and in case his son or daughters or any or either of them should die without leaving lawful issue, or with lawful issue, and such issue being a son or sons, should not attain twenty-one, or being a daughter or daughters, should not attain that age, or be married, then the part or share of him or her so dying to be for the benefit of the survivors and their issue, in same manner as their original shares":—Held, that the testator's children took estates for life, as tenants in common, with remainder to the grandchildren in tail general, in the shares of their respective parents, with cross remainders in tail between such grandchildren respectively, to the survivors or survivor, others or other of the parents, in equal shares for life, with remainder in tail to their children; the shares accruing to such survivors, &c., to be subject to the same limitations and such benefit of survivorship as the original shares. Cursham or Cunham v. Newland, 2 Beav. 145. And see S. C. at law, 2 Bing. (N.C.) 58; 2 Scott, 105; 4 M. & W. 101; 5 L. J., C. P. 137; 7 L. J., Ex. 212.

Cross Remainders expressly Limited in a given Event.]—When cross remainders between persons are expressly limited by a will to take effect in a given event, the court will not imply cross remainders, between the same persons, in a different event. A gift of real and personal estate to trustees, upon trust as to one-fifth for each of the testator's five children for life, and after his or her decease, for his or her children, which he or she should leave at his or her decease; and if he or she should leave none, in trust for the other children for life, and after the death of all the children, in trust, as to the corpus, for all the grandchildren of the testator per capita. One child died leaving a child who died before the last of the testator's children:—Held, such child took an estate for his life only, that that one-fifth was undisposed of until the death of the surviving child, and that cross remainders were not, in the event which had happened, to be implied. Rabbeth v. Squire, 4 De G. & J. 406; 28 L. J., Ch. 565; 7 W. R. 657—L. C.

—— Accrued Shares.]—The court will not imply cross remainders in a devise, for the purpose of passing accrued shares in a certain event, where the testator has expressly stated what shall be done with the original shares in the same event. Dutton v. Crowdy, 33 Beav. 272; 3 N. R. 234; 33 L. J., Ch. 241; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 28; 9 L. T. 630; 12 W. R. 222.

A testator gave a moiety of his estate to the children of R. and the other moiety to the children of B. The will contained a single clause of survivorship and accruer applicable to all the children, and not in terms distributive, with a gift over if there should be no children of A. and B., "or of either of them," or being such, all such children should die without having attained a vested interest:—Held, that there were no cross remainders between the two classes of children, and that on the death of A. without having been married, the children of B. would not take the first moiety. Edwards v. Tuck, 23 Beav. 268. And see Horne v. Barton, supra, col. 1549.

In Default of Issue by Granddaughters.]—A testator devised certain estates to his four granddaughters, by name, for their respective lives, in equal shares, with remainder to trustees to preserve contingent remainders, "with remainder in equal shares to the children of my said four granddaughters, and the heirs of their bodies, such children of my said granddaughters taking their mother's share as tenants in common in tail, remainder to the survivor of such children, and in default of issue by my said granddaughters," then over. There was a devise of residuary real estate in similar terms, except that the remainder next following that to the children of the granddaughters as tenants in common in tail was thus expressed: "To the survivors or survivor of such children and the issue of their, his, or her body in tail":—Held, that under the words, "in default of issue by my said granddaughters," the four granddaughters, and not their children, took by implication, subject to the prior limitations, estates tail in both classes of property, with cross remainders between them in tail. Atkinson v. Holtby, 10 H. L. Cas. 313; 32 L. J., Ch. 735; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 503; 8 L. T. 583; 11 W. R. 544.

Cross Remainders Expressly Given—"Survivors or Survivor" read "Others or Other."]—Lands held in fee-simple were, by settlement made in 1752, conveyed to trustees, to the use of the settlor for life, remainder to the use of his three daughters for their lives, as tenants in common; remainder to the use of trustees to preserve; remainder, as to the share of each daughter, to the use of her first and other sons successively in tail male; remainder, in case of the death of any one or more of the daughters without issue male, to the use of the survivors or survivor, during their or her respective lives or life, as tenants in common; in case of two survivors, with remainder in like manner, as to the original share, to the use of the first and other sons of such surviving daughters or daughter in tail male; remainder, in case all the daughters should die without issue male, as to the share of each, to the use of their daughters, as tenants in common in tail; and in case one or two of the settlor's daughters should die without issue, the share or shares of such daughter or daughters to go to the use of the daughters of the survivors or survivor as tenants in common in tail general; and in case all three should die without issue, then remainder over, with ultimate remainder to the use of the settlor in fee. He died soon after without disposing of the reversion:—Held, that the limitation, in case of the failure of issue generally of any of the daughters, to the daughters of the survivors or survivor, was a good contingent remainder, and, therefore, not void for remoteness; and also, that the words "survivors or survivor" were to be read "others or other," and, consequently, the limitation over to the daughters of one of the settlor's daughters, who had issue, was not defeated by the death of that daughter in the lifetime of another, who subsequently died without issue, but that limitation took effect as a good cross remainder. Cole v. Sewell, 2 H. L. Cas. 186; 12 Jur. 927. And see S. C., 2 Con. & L. 344; 4 Dr. & War. 1; 6 Ir. Eq. R. 66.

—— Gift over on Failure of Issue at Particular Period—"Survivor" not read "Other."]—A testator by will, in 1826, gave real and personal estate to trustees in fee, in trust for his four nieces, M., B., S., and J., for their respective lives, as tenants in common, and on the death of any of them, then in trust as to the share of her so dying, to stand possessed of and interested in such share for the child or children of such of them as should have died, and if any of them should die without issue, then he directed the share or shares of her or them so dying to go to the survivor or survivors of them and their heirs, and to be conveyed to them and their heirs accordingly. B. and J. died leaving children. M. died a spinster. S. was a spinster and over sixty:—Held, first, that the equitable fee was given to the children of the nieces. Maden v. Taylor, 45 L. J., Ch. 569.

Held, secondly, that seeing that S. was past the age of child-bearing, she was entitled to her own one-fourth share in fee, under the gift over to the survivor of the nieces. Ib.

By codicil of the same date, the testator devised freehold estate on trust for M., B., S., & J., for their respective lives, as tenants in common, and on death of all or any of them, then as to the part of her or them so dying, in trust for all and every the child and children of them respectively, and the heirs of their bodies; and if any of them should die without leaving issue living at her death, then in trust for the survivors and survivor of them and the heirs of her and their bodies, and if all except one shall die without leaving lawful issue, then in trust for such only or surviving niece and the heirs of her body, and in case of a total failure of issue of them, then in trust for his heirs. B. died, having had four children, three of whom died infants and unmarried. J. died, having had three children, one of whom died an infant and unmarried. Then M. died, a spinster. S. was a spinster, and over sixty:—Held, first, the cross remainders in tail were to be implied between the children of the tenants for life. Ib.

Held, secondly, that "survivor" was not to be read "other," but that S. took M.'s share. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that S., being past the age of child-bearing, was entitled to her own one-fourth share in tail under the gift over to the survivors and survivor of them. Ib.

Appeal against Decree.]—A decree declared A. and B. to be entitled for their lives as tenants in common, with cross remainders between them. Upon the death of A., which took place more than five years after the decree, one of the parties entitled in remainder applied for leave to appeal against the declaration as to cross remainders:—Held, that as the proper time for deciding whether there were cross remainders had not arrived when the decree was made, leave to appeal ought to be granted. Walmsley v. Foxhall, 1 De G. J. & S. 451, 605; 2 N. R. 252; 8 L. T. 559; 11 W. R. 792.

b. Implication of in other Instruments.

Implication—Marriage Articles.]—Articles on marriage, for settling land to be bought with money, on all the children of the marriage and their respective issues, and for default of such children and their issue, over:—Held, there should be cross remainders by implication. Twisden v. Locke, Amb. 668.

Marriage articles carried into execution, by limiting estates in strict settlement to A. and B. respectively, with cross remainders between B. and the issue of A., with power to A. to appoint both estates among his children. The will of A., referring to the estate, but not to the power, declared a good execution of the power, to the extent of limiting estates tail to the children. The excess reformed to effectuate the general intention of the articles. Dillon v. Dillon, 1 Ball. & B. 77. See 14 R. R. 241 n.

By marriage articles a father covenanted to convey an estate to trustees for the benefit of his son T. during his life, with remainder for the use and benefit of the issue of T. by M., his intended wife, their heirs and assigns for ever. The husband and wife both died, leaving a son and two daughters:—Held, that the settlement ought to be framed so as to give an estate tail to the son, with remainder to the daughters as tenants in common in tail, with cross remainders between them. Phillips v. James, 3 De G. J. & S. 72; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 660; 12 L. T. 685; 13 W. R. 934.

Leaseholds for life were settled by a deed on the parents for life, with remainder to the children of the wife equally and the heirs of their bodies, and if but one child then to such child and the heirs of his body, and in default of such issue to the heirs of the wife:—Held, that there were no cross remainders between the children, and that on the death of a child without issue and without having made any disposition, his share went to the heir of the wife. Bainton v. Bainton, 34 Beav. 563. And see Cole v. Levingston, 1 Vent. 224.

—— Settlement—Accruing Shares.]—Cross remainders cannot be implied in a deed, and are not created as to accruing shares by a limitation of the entire estate to an only surviving child and his issue, or by a gift over of the entire estate in remainder after the failure of all issue, or by an express creation of cross remainders, as to the original shares. Edwards v. Alliston, 4 Russ. 78; 6 L. J. (O.S.), Ch. 30; 28 R. R. 9. But see Doe d. Clift v. Birkhead, 4 Ex. 110; 18 L. J., Ex. 441.

—— Executory Trust.]—Testatrix by her will gave 500*l.* to each of her two nieces to be settled as she should thereinafter describe, and directed that the provision therein made for her nieces should not be subject to the control of any husbands they might marry, but should remain vested in her executors in trust until a proper settlement was made. And by a codicil she directed that if either of her nieces should die without leaving issue, the legacy given to her should devolve to the other niece and her children, with a gift over if both should die without issue:—Held, that this was an executory trust, and that the nieces took life interests with remainder to their children and cross remainders between them. Holloway v. Collier, 1 W. R. 266.

Testator devised his estates to trustees, in trust to settle and convey the same to the use of or in trust for G. R. (who had then no issue) for life, without impeachment of waste, with remainder to his issue in tail male in strict settlement:—Held, that the words "in tail male" were descriptive, not of the issue, but of the interest that they were to have; and that the estates ought to be settled on G. R. for life, without impeachment, &c., with remainders to his sons successively in tail male, with remainder to his daughters as tenants in common in tail male, with cross remainders in tail male. Trevor v. Trevor, 1 H. L. Cas. 239. Affirming 13 Sim. 108; 11 L. J., Ch. 417; 6 Jur. 863.

A testator directed his trustees to purchase lands in certain counties, to be settled, on the death of the eldest son of S. without issue (which happened), to the use of every son of S. then living or who should be born in the testator's lifetime, and the assigns of such son during his life, with remainder to trustees to preserve contingent remainders; but to permit such son and his assigns to receive the rents during his life, and after his death to the use of such son's first and every other son successively in tail male, and on failure of such issue to the use of the testator's right heirs:—Held, that the younger sons of S. took as tenants in common for life, with remainder as to each son's share to his first and other sons in tail male, with cross remainders over. Surtees v. Surtees, L. R., 12 Eq. 400; 25 L. T. 288; 19 W. R. 1043.

Execution of a direction by will to convey lands to be purchased, by raising cross remainders among more than two upon the intention by implication; without regard to the words "several and respective" in the limitation to the heirs. Green v. Stephens, 17 Ves. 64.

Distinction on this subject between devises by a general description to a class of persons, not ascertaining the number, and to individuals named. Ib.

Devise to trustees, as soon as his three daughters attained their respective ages of twenty-one, to convey to them and the heirs of their bodies as joint tenants: this not a joint estate, but to be construed as near as it may be; so that the conveyance must be at twenty-one respectively, with cross remainders. Marryat v. Townly, 1 Ves. sen. 102.

And see post, C. 6.

In Deeds.]—See ESTATE, Vol. VI., col. 355.

6. CONTINGENT REMAINDERS.

a. General Principles.

Contingent or Vested Remainder.]—That a remainder is contingent, when uncertain, whether it would take effect or not, is by no means the true legal definition of it; for if an estate be limited to A. for life, remainder to B., and the heirs of his body, this is a vested remainder, notwithstanding B. may die without heirs of his body, before the death of A., and the remainder may never take effect in possession. Smith v. Packhurst, 3 Atk. 138; 2 Str. 1105.

All contingent remainders may be reduced to two heads: first, where a remainder is limited to a person not in being, and who may never exist: and, secondly, where a remainder depends upon a contingency collateral to the continuance of the particular estate. Ib.

It is a settled rule of the common law, in all cases where it can be done, to construe a remainder as vested, in preference to contingent, in order to prevent the destruction of the estate. Therefore where a devise was to trustees, for the use and benefit of them and the testator's daughter, and "from and after her death, unto the heirs of her body, share and share alike, their heirs and assigns for ever":—Held, that the remainder vested in a son of the devisee, living at the time of the testator's death, immediately on that event, and was subject to open and let in all children subsequently born: that all these children took vested remainders, and that these, unless disposed of by them, at their death descended upon her heir-at-law. Right d. Shortridge v. Creber, 5 B. & C. 866; 8 D. & R. 718; 4 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 324; 29 R. R. 444. And see Doe d. Bills v. Hopkinson, 5 Q. B. 223; 13 L. J., Q. B. 85.

Under a devise to A. for life, remainder to the right heir male of the testator, in fee, the remainder vests upon the death of the testator in the person then answering the description of heir male. Doe d. Pilkington v. Spratt, 5 B. & Ad. 731; 2 N. & M. 524; 3 L. J., K. B. 53. And see Winter v. Perratt, 9 Cl. & F. 606—H. L. (E.), and Chamberlayne v. Chamberlayne, 25 L. J., Q. B. 187; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 258; 4 W. R. 403. Affirmed, 4 W. R. 616.

Henry T. devised real estate to K. and others during the life of the testator's son Henry, in trust for him; and after his decease the testator devised the property to the heirs of the body of Henry, and in default of such issue to the testator's nephew, Henry, for life, and after his decease, to the testator's own right heirs of the name of Henry T., if any such there should then be, for ever:—Held, that the devise to the testator's right heirs of the name of Henry, was a contingent remainder to the testator's heir-at-law if named Henry T., and that the testator's heir-at-law at the death of the second life estate not being named Henry, the contingent remainder failed, and the testator's heir-at-law was entitled to the property in preference to a Henry T., who, although in the line of descent from the testator, was not his heir-at-law. Thorpe v. Thorpe, 32 L. J., Ex. 79. And see Foster v. Hayes, 4 El. & Bl. 717; 3 C. L. R. 576; 24 L. J., Q. B. 161; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 515; 3 W. R. 168—Ex. Ch.

Devise, after limitations in strict settlement, in default of such issue, then to the devisor's next heir-at-law, is a limitation of the reversion, not a contingent remainder to the heir, at the time of failure of issue, as a purchaser. O'Keefe v. Jones, 13 Ves. 413.

Devise of land to A. for sixty years, if he so long live, and, from and after the death of A., to his eldest son B. in tail. Whether this be a vested or contingent remainder, quære. Beverley v. Beverley, 2 Vern. 131.

One devises lands to his executors for and until payment of his debts; this is but a chattel interest. One seised of the manors of A. and B. devises these manors to C. for life, and if C. shall have issue male, then to such issue male and his heirs for ever, and if C. should leave no issue male, then the manor of A. to J. S. in fee, and the manor of B. to J. N. in fee. C. suffers a recovery of these manors; this will bar the contingent estates limited to J. S. and J. N. Carter v. Barnadiston, 3 Bro. P. C. 64; 1 P. Wms. 509; 2 Eq. Cas. Abr. 224, pl. 5, 6. And see Doe d. Herbert v. Selby, 2 B. & C. 926; 4 D. & R. 608; 26 R. R. 585.

Devise of freehold and copyhold surrendered to the use of the will to trustees and the survivor and his heirs in trust to pay debts and legacies, an annuity to the testator's son, and for other purposes; then on the marriage or attaining twenty-one of his granddaughter to convey to her for life, remainder to trustees, &c., remainder to her first and other sons in tail male, remainder to her daughters in tail general, remainder to such persons, for such estates, and subject to such charges and conditions as he should by any deed or instrument, with two or more witnesses, appoint. The next day, by deed-poll, with two witnesses, reciting his will, and that he had reserved a power of disposing of his estate farther, he directed his trustees, immediately after the death of his granddaughter and failure of her issue, to convey all his real estate to the first and other sons of his sons in tail male, then to his daughters in tail general, then to the right heirs of the survivor of his trustees, his heirs and assigns for ever. No conveyance was made. The granddaughter died without issue; then the son died without issue, leaving one trustee surviving. The last limitation is a contingent remainder to the heir of the surviving trustee; and a conveyance was directed, with an insertion of trustees to support that remainder as to the copyhold: the rents and profits of the copyhold, during the life of the trustee, and all the freehold, to go to the heir of the testator. Habergham v. Vincent, 2 Ves. 204; 4 Bro. C. C. 353.

Contingent Remainder after an Executory Devise.]—Contingent remainders may be supported after an executory devise, though there are no trustees inserted. Hopkins v. Hopkins, 1 Atk. 580; 1 Ves. sen. 269; Cas. t. Talb. 44.

Where a remainder in tail is vested, subsequent contingent remainders are not regarded. Winnington v. Foley, 1 P. Wms. 537.

Copyholds.]—To support a contingent remainder in a freehold, there must be a tenant of the freehold against whom a præcipe may be brought; otherwise as to a copyhold, for there no præcipe can be brought, being parcel of the manor only, and the freehold in the lord. Lovell v. Lovell, 3 Atk. 12.

A dormant surrender of a copyhold (that is, a surrender to A., on condition to perform the will of the surrenderor) would vest an estate in the dormant surrenderor, sufficient to support the contingent remainders of the surrenderor's will, without the interposition of trustees for the purpose. Gale v. Gale, 2 Cox, 136.

Contingent Remainder or Springing Use.]—It is a certain rule of law, that if such a construction can be put upon a limitation as that it may take effect by way of remainder, it shall never take place as a springing use, or executory devise. Carwardine v. Carwardine, 1 Eden, 27.

A limitation in a settlement "to trustees to the use of A., the settlor for life, remainder to B., his intended wife, for life, (except as thereafter excepted,) remainder to the heirs of the body of A., begotten on B., remainder to A. and his heirs, with a proviso, that if A. should die, and leave such issue as aforesaid, without making any provision for such child or children in his lifetime, the said trustees should stand seised of one moiety, from and after the decease of A., to the use of such child":—Held, a contingent remainder, and not a springing use, and therefore barred by a fine levied by A. and B. Ib.

No case of a springing use ever introduced in the middle of a limitation, but it always comes in afterwards, and determines the first gift in fee; and whenever it happens to arise, it displaces the first gift, and changes the uses in favour of other persons. Ib.

No instance where equity has considered an estate as not executed at the same time that law would have considered it as executed. Limitation to trustees to stand seised, and receive rents and profits to the use of A. is an estate executed in A. Ib.

Every contingent remainder, even of a real estate, depends upon the event, whether good or void. Gower v. Grosvenor, 5 Madd. 341.

If an estate is given to A., remainder to the right heirs of B., and A. dies before B., it is void by the event. Ib.

Where after an estate tail there is a limitation over, which does not depend on a contingency, the limitation is void, nor can any subsequent event make it better or worse. Ib.

Limitation of personal chattels to go as heirlooms with real estate; the chattels shall follow that estate into a contingent remainder falling in. Ib.

Contingent Remainder or Executory Devise.]—If in a will there are two contingencies, and one good, and that falls out, the devise over will be good though the other contingency be bad; for the bad subsequent contingency, where he makes two, could never have touched the limitation over upon trust. Ib.

Though a gift over may as to one alternative, operate as an executory devise it will not necessarily do so as to another; and if the second is that which in fact occurs, the gift may be treated as a good contingent remainder. Doe d. Evers v. Challis, 7 H. L. Cas. 531; 29 L. J., Q. B. 121; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 825; 7 W. R. 622.

The invalidity of one alternative will not necessarily defeat the other. Ib. And see Watson v. Young, 54 L. J., Ch. 502; 28 Ch. D. 436; 33 W. R. 637.

Devise to E. for life, "and from and after her decease to such child or children as she may have, if a son or sons, who shall live to attain the age of twenty-three, and, if a daughter or daughters, who shall live to attain the age of twenty-one, as tenants in common, &c."; and in case of the death of any son under twenty-three, or daughter under twenty-one, the share to go to the survivors attaining those ages. And in case E. has only one son to attain twenty-three, or a daughter to attain twenty-one, to such son or daughter. "And also, in case E.'s children shall die under" the ages mentioned, "or if she has none," then to J. A. and S. for life, and afterwards to their sons and daughters on attaining the above ages respectively. There were similar devises to J. A. and S., but in the devises to J. and S. nothing was said as to total absence of issue; in that to A., the words used were "and farther, in case A. shall die without issue." E. first and A. afterwards died without ever having had a child:—Held, that on the death of A. the gift over in favour of a daughter of J., who had attained twenty-one, took effect as a contingent remainder, because no prior estate was divested or displaced, and when the particular estate (the life estate of A.) determined the contingency on which the remainder was to take effect had occurred. Ib.

Remoteness.]—Held also, that though the gift over, on the death of E.'s sons under twenty-three, was void for remoteness, the gift over on her death, without having had issue, was not thereby affected. Ib.

A. died without ever having had issue:—Held, that though in the devise to her the not having issue was not expressed, it was necessarily implied in the provision as to her dying without children who should attain twenty-three or twenty-one, and therefore on her death without ever having had issue, the gift over took effect. Ib.

Remoteness does not affect the validity of contingent remainder. Cole v. Sewell, 2 Con. & L. 344; 4 Dr. & War. 1; 6 Ir. Eq. R. 66. Affirmed, 2 H. L. Cas. 186; 12 Jur. 927. See ante, col. 1554.

A. has a contingent remainder in fee, and conveys it to B. as a security. The contingent remainder is afterwards barred by A.'s mother, who acquires the fee, and by her will devises her real estates to trustees, upon trust to sell, and invest the money, and pay two-thirds of the dividends to or for the benefit of A., for his life, with a similar trust as to two-thirds of the rents of the estates not sold:—Held, that the interest of A. is bound by the security given to B. Brown v. Blount, 9 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 74.

Estate for Life.—Contingent Remainder in Fee.]—Where there is a gift to a person for life, with remainder to children not in esse, with a gift in default to the parent, no remainder is vested in the parent until after the contingency is determined. Crofts v. Middleton, 1 K. & J. 1173; 2 K. & J. 194; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 1133. And see S. C., 8 De G. M. & G. 192; 25 L. J. Ch. 513; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 528; 4 W. R. 439.

A testator devised land to A., spinster, for life, and after her decease to her children equally in fee; and in case there should not be any child of A., or if any, and all such children should die under twenty-one, and without leaving issue, then he devised the land to the heirs and assigns of A.:—Held, that this was a limitation of an estate for life, with a contingent remainder in fee. Ib.

Devise of leaseholds to testator's daughter for life, remainder to her two sons for life; and, in case she should not have a son or sons to attain the age of twenty-one, or such sons dying without leaving issue, then to her daughters, their executors, administrators, and assigns, and if such daughters should die without issue, remainders over; all the residue of the testator's estate to the daughter:—Held, that the testator's daughter took an estate for life in the leaseholds, with remainder to her two sons for life, with ultimate remainder on certain contingencies to herself. Bradshaw v. Skilbeck, 2 Bing. (N.C.) 182; 2 Scott, 294—H. L. (E.)

A devise of real estate to the use of A. for life, with remainder to the use of all and every the child or children of A. who shall attain the age of twenty-one years, and for want of such issue, over, creates a tenancy for life in A., with a contingent remainder in fee to such of the children of A. as shall attain twenty-one; and on the death of A., leaving infant children, but having had no child who had then attained twenty-one, the interest of the children of A. was divested, and the limitations over were defeated. Festing v. Allen, 5 Hare, 573. And see 12 M. & W. 279; 13 L. J., Ex. 74.

A testatrix devised to T. for life, and at his death, to his second son on his attaining twenty-one, but in default of there being a second son of T., to the second son of C. on attaining twenty-one. After her death T. had sons, the second of whom, G., died before he attained twenty-one years. T. died intestate:—Held, that G. did not take in fee with an executory devise over, but took a contingent remainder, and that the contingency of G.'s attaining twenty-one years not having happened at the death of T., the limitation over failed, and the heir-at-law was entitled. Confirming Festing v. Allen, supra, and Doe d. Rew v. Lucraft (8 Bing. 386; 1 M. & Sc. 573; 1 L. J., C. P. 109). Alexander v. Alexander, 16 C. B. 59; 24 L. J., C. P. 150.

Where leaseholds are bequeathed "to such persons as shall be entitled to the real estate," the gift will be contingent or vested, according as the devise of the real estate is so; but it will not necessarily fail because the devise of the real estate, creating a contingent remainder, fails from a rule of law not applying to personal estate. The income of leaseholds during the minority of a person entitled contingently on his attaining twenty-one, falls into the residue. The income of residuary personalty, in such case, is accumulated for the benefit of the legatee. A devise of freeholds in remainder to all and every the children "who shall attain twenty-one" in fee, with a gift over, "if there shall be no such child," creates a contingent remainder. Festing v. Allen (12 M. & W. 279) followed; and Browne v. Browne (3 Sm. & G. 568) not followed. Holmes v. Prescott, 3 N. R. 559; 33 L. J., Ch. 264; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 507; 12 W. R. 636.

—— Contingent Remainder to Heir-at-Law.]—Real property was conveyed to A., B., and C. and their heirs, as to one third to the use of B. and C. as A. should by deed appoint, and, subject thereto, to the use of A. for life without impeachment of waste, and after intervening life estates given to B. and C. as tenants in common, and the survivor, to such uses as A. should by will appoint, and, subject thereto, "to the use of such person or persons as at the decease of A. shall be his heir or heirs-at-law, and of the heirs and assigns of such person or persons":—Held, that (subject to the powers of appointment) A. took a life estate only, with a contingent remainder in fee to the person or persons who might be his heir at his death. Evans v. Evans, 61 L. J., Ch. 456; [1892] 2 Ch. 173; 67 L. T. 152; 40 W. R. 465—C. A.

—— Legal Estate in Mortgagees — Remainders preserved.]—A testator devised a freehold estate to the use of his son for life, and after his decease to the use of the children of his son who should attain twenty-one or die under that age leaving issue, and the heirs and assigns of such children, in equal shares. The testator had mortgaged part of the devised estate, and at his death the legal estate was outstanding in the mortgagees. The testator's son died leaving four infant children:—Held, that as to the mortgaged portion of the estate the contingent remainders were preserved from failure by the legal estate outstanding in the mortgagees, but as to the remaining unmortgaged portion, the remainder failed on the death of the testator's son. Festing v. Allen (12 M. & W. 279) commented on. Astley v. Micklethwait, 49 L. J., Ch. 672; 15 Ch. D. 59; 43 L. T. 58; 28 W. R. 811.

—— Equitable Estate — Attaining Twenty-five—Name and Arms Clause—Possession.]—A testator devised and bequeathed real and personal estate to trustees upon trust to pay the income to his wife during her life, and after her decease, if H. was then living, to retain the rents of the realty to their own use during his life, and to pay him the income of the personalty during his life, and after his death upon trust to convey and transfer the real and personal estate to such son of M. as should first attain the age of twenty-five years, upon condition that such son of M. as should become entitled to any property under the will should, within two years after he should so become entitled, take the name and arms of the testator. At the testator's decease M. was living, and had no son who had attained twenty-five, but his eldest son attained that age during the lives of the widow and H. This son died in the lifetime of H. without having taken the name and arms of the testator:—Held, by Malins, V.-C., that although the limitation of the personal estate to the first son of M. who should attain the age of twenty-five was void for remoteness, the direction to convey the real estate to him gave him a contingent remainder which was not void for remoteness, although his estate was only equitable, the doctrine of contingent remainders being applicable to equitable as well as to legal estates; that he was not bound to take the name and arms of the testator until his estate came into possession, and that the real estate devolved upon his heir. But held, on appeal, that the limitation to such son of M. as should first attain the age of twenty-five years could not, as in Riley v. Garnett (3 De G. & Sm. 629), be treated as intended to give an immediately vested interest liable to be divested on death under twenty-five, but was a limitation contingent on the son's attaining the age of twenty-five years. Abbiss v. Burney, Finch, In re, 50 L. J., Ch. 348; 17 Ch. D. 211; 44 L. T. 267; 29 W. R. 449—C. A.

Held, also, that when the legal estate in fee is vested in trustees under the instrument which creates the beneficial limitations, the feudal rule by which a contingent remainder fails if it does not vest before the determination of the particular estate does not apply, and that the limitation to such son of M. as should attain twenty-five years, assuming it to have been an equitable remainder, would still have been void for remoteness. Ib.

Held, also, that the direction to the trustees to convey on the death of H. did not create a contingent equitable remainder, but was an executory devise. Ib.

—— Failure for Want of Particular Estate.]—Testator, by a will dated in 1832, gave and devised all his freehold estates to the use of his daughters (five), whom he named, equally, as tenants in common for their several and respective lives, with remainder to trustees to preserve during the lives of the daughters "respectively," and from and after the decease of either of his said daughters, as to the one-fifth part or share of the daughter so dying, to the use of all and every the children of such daughter, born or to be born, who being a son or sons had attained or should attain twenty-one, or, being a daughter or daughters, should attain that age or be married, in equal shares, and to their several heirs and assigns for ever; but if there should be no such child, who being a son should attain the said age, or being a daughter should attain that age or be married as aforesaid, then to the use of the others of his said four daughters for their respective lives, with remainder as to each share to such daughter's child or children. After making certain specific and pecuniary bequests, the testator, as to "all the rest, residue, and remainder" of his "estate and effects," gave and bequeathed the same to the same trustees, "their heirs," executors, administrators, and assigns, upon trust to lay out and invest the same or the produce thereof, as therein mentioned, as they should think fit, and hold his said residuary estate upon the same trusts as were thereinbefore declared with respect to his real estate, or as near thereto as the rules of law and equity would permit. The testator died in 1834. One of the daughters, who married in 1835, died in 1851, leaving an only child, a son, W., who did not attain twenty-one until 1860. In a suit of Holmes v. Prescott (ante, col. 1562) upon the same will, it had been incidentally decided that the limitation of each daughter's share in the freehold estates to her child and children being contingent, the remainder to W. failed for want of a particular estate to support it:—Held, that the limitation over of the same share, if there should be no such child, being also a contingent remainder, also failed, and that the reversion in such share, after the death of the daughter, passed under the residuary clause in the same will, and did not descend to the heir. Perceval v. Perceval, L. R. 9 Eq. 386.

A testator devised all his freehold mills, and houses, and mines, going gear, engines, &c., to his sons S. and J. for life equally, and after the decease of each of his sons, upon trust in favour of such one or more of their children as they should by deed or will appoint, and so far as no such appointment should extend, to the use of all and every the children of his sons, sons at twenty-one, daughters at twenty-one or marriage, equally, and their, his, or her heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns; and if there should be no child of such of his sons as should die leaving his brother surviving, upon the trusts declared of the original shares; and if no child, the whole to the survivor of his sons absolutely. Then followed a hotchpot clause. S. died leaving children, infants, and J. survived him, and was a bachelor:—Held, that the gift to the grandchildren was a contingent remainder and failed, there being no particular estate to support it. Rhodes v. Whitehead, 2 Dr. & Sm. 532; 12 L. T. 601; 13 W. R. 100.

Estate of Trustees—Legal or Equitable—Provision for Maintenance.]—A testator devised lands to trustees, their heirs and assigns, to the use of A. for life, with remainder to the use of such child or children of A. as should attain twenty-one, as tenants in common in fee, with remainders over; and empowered the trustees to apply the income to which any infant devisee should be presumptively entitled towards his maintenance or for his benefit during his minority. A. died leaving four children, three adult and one an infant:—Held, that the contingent remainder of the infant child of A. was equitable, and did not fail by reason of the death of A. before the remainder vested. Berry v. Berry, 47 L. J., Ch. 182; 7 Ch. D. 657; 38 L. T. 474; 26 W. R. 327.

—— Direction to Pay Debts.]—A testator, by his will made in 1838, directed his debts to be paid; and he devised specific real estate to four persons (whom he afterwards named as his executors), their heirs and assigns, upon trust and for the intents and purposes thereinafter mentioned, viz., upon trust during the minority of his daughter D., to receive the rents and apply the same for her benefit till she should attain twenty-one, and, on her attaining twenty-one, to pay to or permit and suffer her to receive the rents during her life for her separate use, without power of anticipation. And, from and after her death, upon trust for, and the testator thereby gave and devised the property to the issue, children or child, of the daughter who should live to attain twenty-one, in equal shares, if more than one, and to their respective heirs and assigns, with remainders over. And, after making other specific devises and bequests, the testator devised and bequeathed the residue of his estate and effects (subject to and charged with the payment of his debts) to one of his trustees absolutely for his own use and benefit. The daughter D. survived the testator, and she afterwards married and had three children, but she died before any of them had attained twenty-one:—Held, that, by reason of the direction that the testator's debts should be paid, the trustees took the whole legal estate in fee simple in the specifically devised estate, and consequently that the contingent remainder to the children of the daughter had not failed by reason of the determination of her life estate before the happening of the contingency. Festing v. Allen (12 M. & W. 279) distinguished. Creaton v. Creaton (3 Sm. & G. 386; 26 L. J., Ch. 266; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 1223; 5 W. R. 123) followed. Marshall v. Gingell, 51 L. J., Ch. 818; 21 Ch. D. 790; 47 L. T. 859; 31 W. R. 63. And see Brooke, In re, Brooke v. Brooke, 63 L. J., Ch. 159; [1894] 1 Ch. 43; 8 R. 24; 70 L. T. 71; 42 W. R. 186.

Legal Estate Outstanding — Acquisition of Legal Estate.]—Testator, before the Contingent Remainders Act, 1877, devised freeholds, the legal estate being in mortgagees, to J. for life, with remainder to the children of J. attaining twenty-one, and gave his residuary real and personal estate to J. Testator died in 1878. In 1887 the mortgage was paid off, and the legal estate conveyed to J. on the uses of the will. J. died in 1888, leaving three infant sons:—Held, that the acquisition by J. of the legal estate being after the Contingent Remainders Act, had not destroyed the equitable contingent remainder created by the will:—Held, also, that the rents during the suspense of the vesting of the remainders went to J.'s estate under the residuary devise as real estate. Freme, In re, Freme v. Logan, 60 L. J., Ch. 562; [1891] 3 Ch. 167; 65 L. T. 183; 39 W. R. 696

Accumulation of Rents and Profits until Period of Vesting.]—A testator, by his will dated in 1851, after making divers specific devises and bequests, and giving a life interest to his wife in his residuary real estate, devised such residuary real estate, after the death of his wife, to his trustees in trust for his grandson during his life, and from and after his decease in trust for "all and every his child and children who shall attain the age or respective ages of twenty-one years, and his, her, or their heirs and assigns for ever"; but in case there should be no child of his grandson who should attain the age of twenty-one years, then, as to the same residuary real estate, upon trusts over as in the will mentioned. The will contained a gift of the residuary personal estate, but it was distinct from the above devise, and upon different trusts from those declared concerning the real estate, although some of the trusts were the same. The will also contained powers for the trustees to grant leases, and apply the rents and profits of the real estate in making repairs. The testator died in 1853, and his widow died in 1866. The grandson died in October, 1867, leaving an only child, who was born on the 11th February, 1864. The question arose whether the accumulated rents accruing between the date of the death of the testator's grandson and the time when the grandson's only child attained the age of twenty-one years, were undisposed of by the will, or passed to such child:—Held, that the gift to the grandson's child was a contingent remainder, and not a vested remainder, and subject to being divested. Williams, In re, Spencer v. Brighouse, 54 L. T. 831.

Held, also, that the accumulated rents belonged to the testator's heir-at-law. Ib.

Held, further, that the doctrine of attraction as established by Genery v. Fitzgerald (Jacob, 468), and Dumble, In re, Williams v. Murrell (52 L. J., Ch. 631; 23 Ch. D. 360; 48 L. T. 661; 31 W. R. 605), did not apply. Ib.

—— Maintenance — Intermediate Income — Conveyancing Act, 1881, s. 43.]—A testator specifically devised scheduled property "whether real or personal" to trustees, upon trust for his daughter for life, and after her decease for her children—sons at twenty-one, daughters at that age or marriage; he then devised and bequeathed his residuary real and personal estate, after deducting the scheduled property, to his said trustees to be held by them, as to a moiety thereof, upon the trusts thereinbefore declared of and concerning the specifically devised freeholds. The scheduled property, in fact, comprised freeholds only. The daughter died, leaving two infant children:—Held, that the rule in Genery v. Fitzgerald (Jacob, 468) applied under the special terms of this will both to the scheduled and residuary gifts, and that the infants were contingently entitled, on attaining twenty-one, or marriage, to the income, since their mother's death, of the specifically devised freeholds, and of one moiety of the residuary estate; and, consequently, that s. 43 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, applied, and that the trustees had power to resort to the intermediate income for maintenance. Burton's Will, In re, Banks v. Heaven, 61 L. J., Ch. 702; [1892] 2 Ch. 38; 67 L. T. 221.

Vested or Contingent Estate or Interest—"From and after" the Death of the Tenant for Life.]—A testator gave all his real and the residue of his personal estate to a trustee (as to a specified leasehold house), upon trust to permit his daughter, Elizabeth Jobson, to receive the rents thereof for her life, and "from and after her decease the same premises shall be in trust for all the children of the said Elizabeth Jobson, in equal shares as tenants in common, on their respectively attaining the age of twenty-one years." The will contained no direction as to the application of the rents of the leasehold house after the death of Elizabeth Jobson, and during the minority of her children:—Held, that, notwithstanding the words "from and after," the interest of the children in the leasehold house was contingent on their attaining twenty-one. Jobson, In re, Jobson v. Richardson, 59 L. J., Ch. 245; 44 Ch. D. 154; 62 L. T. 148.

Joint Life Estates—Contingent Remainder in Fee to Survivor.]—A testator, the owner of real estate in fee, by his will dated in 1840, devised his freehold estate to his wife for her life, to his brother for life, and then to seven children of his brother by name "as joint tenants and not as tenants in common, and to the survivor or longest liver of them, his or her heirs and assigns":—Held, that the devise to the seven children was a devise of joint life estates, with a contingent remainder over in fee to the survivor. Quarm v. Quarm, 61 L. J., Q. B. 154; [1892] 1 Q. B. 184; 66 L. T. 418; 40 W. R. 302.

Interests arising under Deeds.]—If the time at which a remainder in a deed is to vest is not ascertained by the limitation itself, it vests immediately in consequence of the legal presumption in favour of vesting estates; but that presumption may be rebutted or controlled by intention collected from the recital of any other part of the deed. Cholmondeley (Marquis) v. Clinton, 2 J. & W. 1, 81; 2 Mer. 173; 16 R. R. 167; 22 R. R. 84. Affirmed, 4 Bligh, 1; 22 R. R. 83—H. L. (E.)

A., in a conveyance to uses, reciting that he was desirous that certain estates derived from his mother's family should remain in the family and blood of S. R., his maternal grandfather, in consideration of his natural love and affection to his relations, the heirs of S. R., and to the intent that the said estates might continue in the family and blood of his late mother, on the side of her father, settles them to the use of himself for life, remainder to the heirs of his body; for default for such issue as he should appoint, and for default of appointment to the use of the right heirs of S. R., with a power of revocation and new appointment. The ultimate remainder is contingent, and will vest in the person who happens to be the right heir of S. R., at the expiration of the estates previously limited. Ib.

Feme covenants to stand seised to the use of herself in tail, remainder to such uses as she, by writing under her hand, should appoint, for want of such appointment, to the use of the plaintiff, her kinsman, in fee. Whether this remainder to such uses as she should appoint is not a void remainder, being on a covenant to stand seised. Warwick v. Gerrard, 2 Vern. 7.

b. Trustees to Preserve Contingent Remainders.

Estate of Trustees—In General.]—A. devised real estate to the use of trustees and their heirs in trust for B. for life; remainder to his first and other sons in tail; remainder to the future sons of C., successively for life; remainder over. B. died without issue in the testator's lifetime; the contingent limitations were taken as executory devises, because no child was then born to C.; afterwards a child was born to C., and died; and a subsequent remainderman claimed the estate, upon a supposition that all the preceding intermediate limitations which could not vest at the death of such child were destroyed, as it had been decreed that, upon the vesting of the executory devise in that child, the subsequent limitations became contingent remainders upon that executory devise; but it was held, that the inheritance in the trustees was sufficient to support the intermediate contingent remainders till they should come in esse, although no particular estate to support, &c., was inserted, and that the estate should not vest in possession whilst any of the preceding limitations might come in esse. Hopkins v. Hopkins, 1 Atk. 580; 1 Ves. sen. 268; Cas. t. Talb. 44. And see Habergham v. Vincent, 4 Bro. C. C. 390, where Lord Loughborough has stated this case from a corrected copy. See also Bamfield v. Popham (1 P. Wms. 56; 1 Ves. sen. 26), where Lord Trevor said it had been resolved that a cestui que trust for life could not destroy the contingent remainders to his first and other sons.

The legal estate in trustees will support contingent remainders of a trust declared by a will, where no conveyance is directed. S. C., 1 Atk. 594.

Though contingent remainders by law must vest during, or at the instant the particular estate determines, yet it does not hold in the case of trusts. The ground the law goes upon is, that a freehold cannot be in abeyance, because there must be a tenant of the freehold to perform services, and answer all writs concerning the realty; but this objection is obviated in the case of an equitable estate, because the trustee is the tenant of the freehold to perform services, &c. Where there are ever so many contingent limitations of a trust, it is sufficient to bring the trustees before the court, together with him in whom the first remainder of the inheritance is vested. Ib., 589, 590.

The resulting trust of a freehold, to support contingent remainders of a trust, may connect with the limitation in tail, though not created together with it. Ib., 595.

In a limitation to support contingent remainders, it is not material to restrain it to the life of the tenant for life, provided it be restrained to the life of a person in being. Ib., 596.

Semble, that a limitation to trustees to preserve contingent remainders, not confined to the lifetime of a tenant for life, will not be cut down to that life if there are contingent remainders which may require protection during a longer period. Rochfort or Rochford v. Fitzmaurice, 2 Dr. & War. 1; 1 Con. & L. 158; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 375.

—— Devise to Wife for Life—Daughters for Life—Children of Daughters on Decease of respective Mothers.]—A testator devised an estate to his wife for life, and upon the determination of that estate by forfeiture or otherwise to a trustee to preserve contingent remainders, nevertheless upon trust for his wife for life, and after her death he gave, devised, and bequeathed the rents to his two daughters in equal parts for life; and in case of the death of either without leaving issue, then to the survivor; but if either daughter should leave issue, such issue to be entitled to the mother's share; and on the death of both daughters he devised one moiety to the issue of each daughter or the whole to the issue of one if the other should die without issue:—Held, that the legal estate was in the trustee until the death of both daughters. Saunders v. Eppe, 3 L. T. 291; 9 W. R. 69.

Devise to trustees and their heirs to preserve contingent remainders:—Held, to pass an estate during the life of the tenant for life only, and not in fee. Haddelsey v. Adams, 22 Beav. 266; 25 L. J., Ch. 826; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 724.

Devise to trustees and their heirs, in trust for A. and his wife for their lives, and after the death of the survivor to the testator's four granddaughters, as tenants in common during their respective lives, with benefit of survivorship, remainder to the trustees "and their heirs," upon trust to preserve contingent remainders, remainder to the issue male of the four granddaughters successively, remainder to the testator in fee :—Held, that the granddaughters took for life as tenants in common, with survivorship to the survivors and survivor of them ; and that after the death of the last survivor their issue took several inheritances in tail. Ib.

Held, also, that the limitation to trustees and their heirs to support contingent remainders was not in fee, so as to make the subsequent remainders equitable, and prevent the coalescing of the remainder to the issue with the life estate to the parent, and therefore that the four granddaughters took estates tail. Ib.

—— Shifting Clause—Persons Next Entitled in Remainder.]—T. was the daughter and heiress-at-law of L., and tenant for life in possession of the K. estates under his will. Subject to such life estate, and to limitations which had ceased, the estates stood limited as follows : To E. for life, with remainder to trustees to preserve contingent remainders ; with remainder to the second and younger sons of E. in tail ; with remainder to M. for life ; with remainders over. The will contained a proviso to the effect, that if E. became entitled to the T. estates, the limitation of the K. estates in his favour should cease, determine, and be absolutely void, as if he were dead, and the K. estates should go over to the person next entitled in remainder under the will. In 1857 E. became entitled to the T. estates, having at that time one son only. T., the tenant for life, died in 1858, leaving M. her residuary devisee and legatee. In 1859 E. had a second son born :—Held, that the trustees to preserve contingent remainders were "the persons next entitled in remainder" ; but that M. was entitled to the rents of the K. estates from the death of T. to the birth of E.'s second son, and that such second son was entitled to them from that period. Turton v. Lambarde, Lambarde v. Turton, 1 De G. F. & J. 195 ; 29 L. J., Ch. 361 ; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 233 ; 2 L. T. 38 ; 8 W. R. 355.

—— Estate in Fee Simple in Trustees.]—A testator devised all his manors, &c., "to my son for his natural life, and at his decease" to trustees, "their heirs and assigns, in trust to preserve"—(this devise in trust was repeated whenever necessary)—"for the son or sons, daughter or daughters, the males taking first of my said son till they attain the age of twenty-one years, or the days of their marriage, and no farther ; the elder son to inherit before the younger, but the daughters to take equally and in common as joint heiresses." He empowered his son to give "any part or even the whole of these estates" to any or either of his sons, but not to his daughters, "as my said son may, from their conduct to him, their father, think deserving of preference." But if the eldest grandson should turn out ill, the testator left him an annuity of 200*l.* chargeable on his landed property, "and to the eldest son of such undeserving grandson I leave and bequeath my landed property, estates," &c. "I will, therefore, that the before-mentioned estates should in such instance descend to my son's grandson, but still subject to any entail of the same which my son may make." If the son died without issue, the trustees were to preserve the estates for the testator's four daughters during their lives, free from the control, &c., "the estates being equally divided between them or their heirs ;" and he gave the "estates and property to them through the said trustees," &c., whom he empowered to raise 10,000*l.* for the daughters, chargeable on all his estate :—Held, that the son took only an estate for life ; that the trustees took an estate in fee in remainder expectant on the determination of the life estate of the son, and that on the son's death without issue the estates went over to the daughters as tenants in common in tail. No gift in the will was void for uncertainty or remoteness. Watkins v. Frederick, 11 H. L. Cas. 358. And see Marshall v. Gingell, supra, col. 1565.

—— Settlement.] — Under a settlement and recovery, lands were limited to the use of A. for life, and after his decease to the use of B. and his heirs, during the life of A., to support contingent remainders ; remainder to the use of C. for life ; remainder to the same B. and his heirs, during the life of C., to support contingent remainders ; remainder to the first and other sons of C. in tail male remainder ; to the use of D. for life, and if she should marry, and her husband should survive her, to her husband for his life, and after the determination of those estates, to the said B. and his heirs (without saying, during the life of D.), to support and preserve contingent remainders ; remainder to the first and other sons of D. in tail male ; remainder to the use of E. for her life, and if she should marry, and her husband should survive her, to her husband for his life, and after the determination of those estates, to the said B. and his heirs (without saying, during the life of E.), to support contingent remainders ; remainder to the first and other sons of E. in tail male :—Held, that under the limitations to B. and his heirs, after the limitations of estates for life to D. and E., the trustee took the fee, and that E. took only an equitable estate. Colmore v. Tindall, 2 Y. & J. 605 ; 31 R. R. 637.

It is not a sufficient ground for restraining an estate limited in a deed to a trustee and his heirs, to an estate for life, that the estate given to the trustee seems to be larger than was essential to its purpose, or that the limitation has been unnecessarily repeated. Ib.

—— Estate pur autre Vie in Trustees—Term to Raise Portions.]—Lands were limited to W. B. for life, remainder to trustees and their heirs to preserve, &c., remainder to R. for life, with remainder to the same trustees for 500 years to raise portions :—Held, regard being had to the intention apparent on the face of the whole deed, that, although the estate was limited to the trustees and their heirs, yet they only took an estate pur autre vie so as to give effect to the 500 years' term. Beaumont v. Salisbury (Marquis), 19 Beav. 198 ; 3 Eq. R. 369 ; 24 L. J., Ch. 94 ; 1 Jur. (N.S.), 458.

A remainder in fee by settlement to trustees, limited to the life of the tenant for life, though not so expressed : the object of the trust terminating with that life ; and a remainder following to the same trustees, upon the death of the tenant for life, for a term of years. A subsequent remainder, therefore, to the heirs of the body of the tenant for life, held a legal estate ; uniting with the legal estate for life ; and vesting an estate tail, according to the rule in Shelley's Case ; not an equitable estate, capable of taking effect only as a contingent remainder. Curtis v. Price, 12 Ves. 89 ; 8 R. R. 303.

Under a voluntary settlement lands were limited unto J. and N. and their heirs, to the use of such persons as J. L. and A. should jointly appoint; and in default of appointment to the use of J. L. for life, and after his death to the use of A. for life, remainder to the use of J. and N. and their heirs, to support contingent remainders, and from and after the death of the survivor of J. L. and A. to the use of W. L. during the term of one hundred years for certain purposes, and subject thereto to the use of T. L., son of J. L., for life, remainder to the use of J. and N. and their heirs, to support contingent remainders; and after the death of T. L. to the use of his first and other sons in tail male, with remainders over:—Held that under the limitation to J. and N. and their heirs they took the legal fee, and that this estate could not be cut down to an estate pur autre vie. Lewis v. Rees, 3 K. & J. 132; 26 L. J., Ch. 101; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 12; 5 W. R. 96.

Held, also, that a settlement and a recovery suffered by T. L. in consideration of his marriage and after he came into possession as tenant for life were ineffectual to bar the limitations under the previous voluntary settlement. Ib.

Devise—Succession of Legal Limitations in Strict Settlement.]—Where a will creates a succession of legal limitations of real estate in strict settlement, the court will not hold the legal estate to be in the trustees merely to prevent a contingent remainder from failing for want of an estate of freehold to support it. Cunliffe v. Brancker, 46 L. J., Ch. 128; 3 Ch. D. 393; 35 L. T. 578—C. A.

A testator devised real estate to two trustees, their heirs and assigns, to the uses and upon the trusts thereinafter declared, that is to say, to the use of the trustees, their executors, administrators, and assigns for the term of 120 years after his decease, if his niece should so long live, and subject thereto to the use of the niece's husband for life, with remainder to the use of the trustees and their heirs during the husband's life, upon trust to preserve contingent remainders, with remainder to the use of all the children of his niece who should be living at the decease of the survivor of her husband and herself, and the issue of such of them as should be then dead, and the respective heirs and assigns of such children and issue as tenants in common, with divers remainders over:—Held, that the contingent remainder to the children failed for want of an estate of freehold to support it; for the court could not, in order to preserve the contingent remainder to the children of the niece from destruction, hold that the trustees took a legal estate in fee, the testator having clearly expressed his intention that they should be mere conduit pipes to feed the uses. Ib.

See now the Contingent Remainders Act, 1877 (40 & 41 Vict. c. 33).

c. Destruction of Contingent Remainders.

i. In General.

Old Law—Legal Conveyance obtained by Fraud.]—If a contingent remainder is destroyed by a legal conveyance, and that conveyance is obtained by fraud, equity will relieve against it. Englefield v. Englefield, 1 Vern. 443.

How far it shall not be in the power of trustees to destroy contingent remainders. Mansel v. Mansel, 2 Barnard. K. B. 187.

How far a contingent remainder shall be said to be barred or not. Hooker v. Hooker, 2 Barnard. K. B. 200.

No Trustees—Release by Tenant for Life of Freeholds, Copyholds, and Leaseholds for Lives.]—Freeholds, copyholds, and leaseholds for lives were devised in 1838 to A. for life, with divers contingent remainders over, with an ultimate remainder to the testator's right heirs. There were no trustees to support the contingent remainders. A., who was the heir-at-law of the testator, executed a release, by which he purported to resettle the estates discharged from the contingent limitations created by the testator:—Held, first, that as to the freeholds, there being no trustees to preserve, the contingent remainders therein were destroyed. Pickersgill v. Grey, 30 Beav. 352; 31 L. J., Ch. 394; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 632; 5 L. T. 706; 10 W. R. 207.

Held, secondly, that the contingent remainders in the copyholds were not destroyed, as they were supported by the estate of the lord of the manor. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that the contingent remainders in the leaseholds for lives were not destroyed, as the possible estate, as special occupant, of the heir or executor of the tenant for life, was not large enough to merge the prior life estate of the tenant for life. Ib. And see Allen v. Allen, 2 Dr. & War. 307, 332.

—— Recovery.]—Devise "to testator's son G. for life, and from and after his decease unto all and every the child and children of G., lawfully to be begotten, and their heirs for ever, to hold as tenants in common, and not as joint-tenants; but if my son G. should die without issue, or leaving issue, and such child or children should die before attaining the age of twenty-one years, or without lawful issue, then I give and devise the same estates unto my son T., my daughter A. S., and my son-in-law W. D., and to their heirs for ever, as tenants in common, and not as joint-tenants." After testator's death, G. suffered a recovery, and died unmarried and without issue:—Held, that in that event the devise over must take effect as a contingent remainder, and was therefore defeated by the destruction of the particular estate by the recovery. Doe d. Herbert v. Selby, 2 B. & C. 926; 4 D. & R. 608; 26 R. R. 585.

By Married Woman.]—See Banchs v. Ollerton, 10 Ex. 168; 2 C. L. R. 1090; 23 L. J., Ex. 285.

By Fine and Recovery.]—See FINES AND RECOVERIES.

ii. Liability of Trustees.

Joining with Tenant for Life.]—Trustees in a will, to support contingent remainders, joining with tenant for life in destroying them, are guilty of a breach of trust, and a purchaser, with notice of the trust, is liable to make good the estate. Gorges v. Pye, 7 Bro. P. C. 221; Pre. Ch. 308; 1 P. Wms. 128.

If trustees to preserve contingent remainders join in sale to one without notice, the purchaser will be safe; contra, if he have notice. Willoughby v. Willoughby, Amb. 284.

Trustees for supporting contingent remainders joining to destroy them guilty of a breach of trust; and no diversity, whether the settlement be voluntary, or for a valuable consideration, or by will only. Mansell v. Mansell, 2 P. Wms. 678; Cas. t. Talb. 252.

A settlement was made by a third person to the use of the husband for ninety-nine years; remainder to trustees during his life, &c.; remainder to the wife for life; remainder to the first, &c., sons of the marriage; remainder to the heirs of the body of the husband; remainder to the right heirs of the husband: there was no issue of the marriage, and the trustees joined in cutting off remainders, yet the court refused to punish them at the suit of a remote remainderman. Tipping v. Piggot, Gilb. Ex. Rep. 34.

Waste by Tenant for Life.]—Trustees to preserve, &c., are not to permit the tenant for life or years, by destruction of that estate, to bring forward a remainder to himself or another, for the purpose of cutting timber. Stansfield v. Habergham, 10 Ves. 278; 7 R. R. 409.

Trustees to preserve, &c., may bring title to stay waste by tenant for life. Perrot v. Perrot, 3 Atk. 95.

Tenant for Life also a Trustee.]—Where tenant for life under will, with remainder in tail, is also made trustee to preserve remainders over, he is not guilty of breach of trust by joining with remainderman in tail, to destroy remainders over. Osbrey v. Bury, 1 Ball & B. 58.

Joining in a Recovery to Bar Entail.]—Trustee to preserve contingent remainders, joining in a recovery with the remainderman in tail, having attained twenty-one:—Held, no breach of trust, and no objection to a specific performance. Biscoe v. Perkins, 1 V. & B. 485; 12 R. R. 279.

Trustees to preserve contingent remainders, joining in a recovery:—Held, with reference to the circumstances and occasion, no breach of trust. Moody v. Walters, 16 Ves. 283.

Generally, trustees joining to destroy the contingent remainders, before the tenant in tail is of age, is a breach of trust. Ib.

If a trustee joins with a cestui que trust in any conveyance to bar the entail, it is no breach of trust, for it is no more than what he may be compelled to do, though the trustee himself might have barred such entail without his joining, and that not only by fine or recovery, but also by feoffment, bargain or sale, devise or surrender (if no custom to the contrary in the latter case). See Goodrick v. Brown, 1 Ch. Ca. 49; Washborn v. Downs, 1 Ch. Ca. 213; Digby (Lord) v. Langworth, 1 Ch. Ca. 68; North v. Champernoon, 2 Ch. Ca. 64, 78.

iii. Order on Trustees to Convey.

Trustees ordered to Join—In Sale.]—Trustees to preserve contingent remainders in a voluntary settlement, decreed to join in a sale for payment of debts. Basset v. Clapham, 1 P. Wms. 358; 2 Eq. Cas. Abr. 748, pl. 1.

Trustees in a marriage settlement, for preserving contingent remainders (there being no issue), are decreed to join in a sale, the settlement being only of an equity of redemption, and the wife consenting to the sale. Platt v. Sprigg, 2 Vern, 303.

Whether a trustee for preserving contingent remainders shall be decreed to join in a sale, to pay debts, when there is no probability of issue. Davies v. Weld, 1 Vern. 181.

The court will not compel trustees to join in a sale which will not only destroy contingent remainders, but all the uses in a marriage settlement; for they are guilty of a breach of trust in joining to destroy contingent remainders, whether the settlement be voluntary, for a valuable consideration, or by will. Symance v. Tattam, 1 Atk. 614.

—— In Recovery.]—Where court has at instance of eldest son ordered trustees to join in destroying contingent remainders, it has sometimes imposed conditions on the son as a provision for a sister. Frewin v. Charleton, 1 Eq. Cas. Abr. 386.

In a marriage settlement husband made tenant for ninety-nine years, if he so long lived; remainder to trustees during the life of the husband, &c.; remainder to the first, &c., sons by the marriage in tail male; remainder to the first, &c., sons of any other wife; remainder over. A son is born, and of age, the wife dead, and there are no other sons by the second marriage: the trust for preserving contingent remainders descends to an infant; if for the benefit of the family, equity will decree the infant trustee to join in a recovery. Winnington v. Foley, 1 P. Wms. 536.

On marriage lands are settled to A. for ninety-nine years, if he so long live; remainder to B. and his heirs, during the life of A., to support contingent remainders; remainder to the first, &c., sons of A. A. has two sons, C. and D. A., the father, having mortgaged the premises, he and his son C. covenant to suffer a recovery, and to procure B., the trustee, to join. B., the trustee, by answer, submits to the court; the court will not compel the trustee to join, unless D., the second son of the marriage, will consent. Townsend v. Lawton, 2 P. Wms. 379; Select Ca. Ch. 71.

The court will not compel a trustee for preserving contingent remainders to join in a recovery, unless to continue the estate, or under very particular circumstances. Bernard v. Large, 1 Bro. C. C. 534.

A., tenant (of a settled estate) for ninety-nine years, if he should so long live; remainder to trustees to preserve, &c., remainder to his first and other sons; remainder over to A. and B. His sons, being indebted, assigned this settled estate in trust to their creditors, and agreed to suffer a recovery. The creditors filed a bill against A. and B., and against the trustee to preserve, &c.; to compel him to join in the recovery. Per curiam, the court will effectuate the intention of a testator as far as possible, to preserve the limitations he has made, where the uses are executory; and as there is no similar case, in which the court has decreed the trustees to join, it ought not to be done here. Bill dismissed. Woodhouse v. Hoskins, 3 Atk. 22.

7. Executory Devises.

a. In General.

Nature of Executory Devise.] — Executory devise is in its nature equitable, and becomes legal estate only by application of the statute of uses, which executes every species of interest that a court of equity would before: and that has been extended to cases not in contemplation of the statute. Perry v. Phelips, 1 Ves. 255. And see Glover v. Monckton, 3 Bing. 13; 10 Moore, 453; 3 L. J. (o.s.) C. P. 189; 28 R. R. 559.

Devise of personal estate, and of rents and profits of real, in trust, to accumulate and to be laid out in land to be conveyed with the real to the youngest or only son of the trustee, at twenty-one:—Held, a vested interest by executory devise in an only surviving son, and not to wait till the death of the father, but liable to be divested by birth of another son. The trustee survived his son several years, and received the rents and profits till his death, but never laid them out in land as directed; those accrued after the son made his will:—Held, to be an equitable interest in land, and therefore to pass by it. Ib., 251.

A limitation by way of executory devise, which is not to take effect until after the determination of a life or lives in being, and a term of twenty-one years in gross, and without reference to the infancy of any person, who is to take under such limitation, or of any other person, is a valid limitation. Secus, if to the term in gross of twenty-one years be added the number of months equal to the period of gestation. Cadell v. Palmer, 1 Cl. & F. 372; 7 Bligh (N.S.) 292; 10 Bing. 140; 3 M. & Sc. 57—H. L. (E.) Affirming S. C., nom. Bengough v. Edridge, 1 Sim. 173; 5 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 113.

A devise to A. and B. and their heirs, in default of issue male and female of the testator's own body, is, at the testator's death, a devise in possession, and not an executory devise; the contingency being determined at the instant the will takes place, viz. at the death of the testator without issue. French v. Caddell, 3 Bro. P. C. 257.

Devise to A. and B. and their heirs, to sell and dispose at their discretion of all the testator's rights in S. belonging to the manor of M., and all his right in M., if an act should pass for enclosing the same within twenty years, to pay the proceeds to the several persons therein mentioned. An enclosure act passed within the twenty years, and various allotments were made in respect of the testator's estates:—Held, that the devise was in the nature of an executory devise to take effect on the passing of the act. And the decree declared the parties claiming under the devise to be entitled to one-fourth part of the moneys produced from the sale of allotments in S., in respect of the testator's messuage and lands in S., and to the whole of the moneys produced by the sale of the allotments in respect of the lands in M. Gardner v. Lyddon, 3 Y. & J. 389.

A. devises his freehold, copyhold, and leasehold, and all his real and personal estate not before devised to three trustees, their heirs, &c., in trust to pay his son B. an annuity; and if he should have any child or children, the residue of the rents, during B.'s life, for the education and benefit of such child or children; and after B.'s decease, a moiety of the trust estate to such child or children as he shall leave, their heirs, &c., the other moiety to the child and children of his grandson C., and every other child and children of his daughter S., their heirs, &c. And if B. die without issue, the first moiety to C., and other child and children of S., and their heirs, &c.; and directs an annual payment to such wife as B. shall marry. The testator died; B. married, and had issue a son and daughter, and died; afterwards C. married, and had issue a daughter, and died: the limitation to the daughter of C. is well supported by the estate in the trustees; or, if not, is good as an executory devise; and the profits, &c., shall go to the children of B. Chapman v. Blissett, Cas. t. Talb. 145.

Gift to testator's brother, without any restriction as to his children, to whom he shall leave, before or after his death, such part of the testator's inheritance as their conduct may deserve; but if at the death of his brother there should be no children, then to A.; this is an executory devise, which, if it took place, would defeat the interest of the children of the brother. Lieutand v. Agassiz, 2 Bro. C. C. 615.

It is a certain rule of law, that if such a construction can be put upon a limitation as that it may take effect by way of remainder, it shall never take place as a springing use, or executory devise. Carwardine v. Carwardine, 1 Eden, 28.

No case of a springing use ever introduced in the middle of a limitation, but it always comes in afterwards, and determines the first gift in fee; and whenever it happens to arise, it displaces the first gift, and changes the uses in favour of other persons. Ib., 44.

Conditional Limitation taking Place as an Executory Devise.]—W. H., by will, gave 100*l.* to his daughter Frances, 450*l.* between two other daughters, and then devises his land in trust for a term of ninety-nine years, with a power to raise a less term upon trust, that if his wife should within four years pay off the 550*l.*, then the lands to go to her for life, and after her death to W. H., his son, and his heirs, male and female, and for want of such issue, to him and his heirs for ever. This is a conditional limitation in the wife, taking place as an executory devise, and the freehold descended to the son as heir-at-law to the testator, till the four years elapsed, or his wife had performed the condition, as a part of the inheritance undisposed of, and by this devise the son had a good estate tail in the inheritance, expectant on the determination of the term of ninety-nine years. Hayward v. Stillingfleet, 1 Atk. 422.

Alteration of Devolution of Estate at Moment of Devolution Over—Condition Repugnant to Prior Gift.]—A father devised houses to his four sons, share and share alike, with a proviso against division or alienation without their respective consent, and in case of no such distribution being made certain executory gifts over were made:—Held, that the executory devise was void. Shaw v. Ford, 47 L. J., Ch. 531; 7 Ch. D. 669; 37 L. T. 749; 26 W. R. 235.

An executory devise, which would defeat or abridge an estate in fee, and alter the course of devolution, and can only take effect at the moment of devolution, is void. Ib.

An executory devise, which would defeat an estate, and would take effect on the exercise of a right incident to that estate, is void. Ib.

—— After a Fee Simple.]—T. devised all his real and personal estate to his wife for life; remainder to his son and his heirs for ever; and if he should die without any heir, then to plaintiff. A., by will, devised the whole to plaintiff, but he neither levied a fine nor suffered a recovery. This is a fee mounted upon a fee, and a void devise both at law and equity. Tilbury v. Barbut, 3 Atk. 617.

—— Estate Pur Autre Vie.]—A., having an estate for three lives, settles it to the use of himself in tail, remainder to B.: the remainder is void, or if good, it might be barred by deed, surrender, or other conveyance. Baker v. Bayley, 2 Vern. 225.

—— Power of Tenant for Life to Defeat Executory Devise.]—Leaseholds for lives were devised to A. and his heirs, and in case A. died without issue, to B.:—Held, in analogy to a fee simple, that A. could not by dealing with the property defeat the executory interest of B. Barber's Settled Estates, In re, 50 L. J., Ch. 769; 18 Ch. D. 624; 45 L. T. 433; 29 W. R. 909.

Contingent Remainder or Executory Devise—Gift to Children Living at Death of Tenant for Life as before or after His Death Attain Twenty-one.]—Devise to a son for life, and from and after his decease to the use of such child or children of the son living at his decease, "as either before or after the death" of the son should attain twenty-one:—Held, an executory devise, and that the gift did not fail by reason of the son's children being infants at his decease. Lechmere and Lloyd, In re (18 Ch. D. 524; 45 L. T. 551) followed. Brackenbury v. Gibbons (2 Ch. D. 417; 45 L. T. 551) not followed. Dean v. Dean, 60 L. J., Ch. 553; [1891] 3 Ch. 150; 65 L. T. 65; 39 W. R. 568.

—— Gift to Children Living at Death of Tenant for Life or thereafter to be Born.]—Testator gave an estate to his wife Elizabeth and her assigns for life, and after her decease unto all and every the lawful children of his son William living at the time of the decease of his wife Elizabeth or thereafter to be born, in equal shares as tenants in common:—Held, that this was an executory devise, and the children born after the death of the tenant for life were entitled to share equally with those born before her death. Brackenbury v. Gibbons, supra, and Lechmere and Lloyd, In re, supra, observed upon. Miles v. Jarvis, 52 L. J., Ch. 796; 24 Ch. D. 633; 49 L. T. 162.

—— Equitable Remainder—Attaining Twenty-five—Name and Arms.]—A testator devised and bequeathed real and personal estate to trustees upon trust to pay the income to his wife during her life, and after her decease, if H. was then living, to retain the rents of the realty to their own use during his life, and to pay him the income of the personalty during his life, and after his death upon trust to convey and transfer the real and personal estate to such son of M. as should first attain the age of twenty-five years, upon condition that such son of M. as should become entitled to any property under the will should, within two years after he should so become entitled, take the name and arms of the testator. At the testator's decease M. was living, and had no son who had attained twenty-five, but his eldest son attained that age during the lives of the widow and H. This son died in the lifetime of H. without having taken the name and arms of the testator:—Held, that the direction to the trustees to convey on the death of H. did not create a contingent equitable remainder, but was an executory devise. Abbiss v. Burney, Finch, In re, 50 L. J., Ch. 348; 17 Ch. D. 211; 44 L. T. 267; 29 W. R. 449—C. A.

Limitation Over—Invalidity of One Alternative.]—Though a gift over may, as to one alternative, operate as an executory devise, it will not necessarily do so as to another; and if the second is that which in fact occurs, the gift may be treated as a good contingent remainder. Doe d. Evers v. Challis, 7 H. L. Cas. 531; 29 L. J., Q. B. 121; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 825; 7 W. R. 622.

The invalidity of one alternative will not necessarily defeat the other. Ib.

—— Cesser of Life Interest—Forfeiture.]—A testator, by will dated in 1870, devised real estate to his son for life, and after his death to the son's children then or thereafter to be born, who should live to attain the age of twenty-one, or, being daughters, marry, in equal shares as tenants in common. He declared that in case his son should attempt to dispose of his life interest, or should become bankrupt, or in case the estate devised to him should be taken in execution by any process in law for the benefit of any creditor, the devise should immediately become absolutely void and cease as if he were dead, and the estate should thenceforth absolutely vest in the person or persons who, under the limitations thereinbefore contained, would be next entitled thereto. The testator died and the son entered into possession. An order was made appointing a receiver of the rents and profits of the son's interest under the will in respect of a debt for which judgment had been signed against him. At that time the son had two children, only one of whom had attained twenty-one, or married; subsequently two other children were born:—Held, that the limitation to the son's children in case of his life interest being taken in execution was an executory limitation and not a contingent remainder, and included all such children, whenever born, who should attain twenty-one, or, being daughters, marry. Blackman v. Fysh, [1892] 3 Ch. 209; 2 R. 1; 67 L. T. 802—C. A.

—— Maintenance of Infants.]—Testator, by will executed before the passing of the Contingent Remainders Act, 1877, devised freehold property to the use of E. for life, and after her death to the use of trustees, their heirs and assigns, during the life of S., upon trust for S., and after her death to the child or children of S., who being sons should attain twenty-one, or being daughters should attain that age or marry. The testator then directed that after the death of the survivor of E. and S., his trustees might, during the minority of any child of S. for the time being presumptively entitled, receive the rents of the premises or the share thereof to which any such minor should be actually or presumptively entitled, and apply the same for his or her maintenance, and directed that the unapplied income should follow the destination of the share from which the same should arise. On the death of the survivor of E. and S., there were five children, three of whom were infants and unmarried:—Held, that the children took the legal estate; but, looking to the maintenance clause, there was a sufficient intention expressed on the whole will that infants should share, and that therefore the gift must be construed as an executory devise and not as a contingent remainder. Bourne, In re, Rymer v. Harpley, 56 L. J., Ch. 566; 56 L. T. 388; 35 W. R. 359.

Tenant in Fee Simple—Executory Limitation Over.]—A testator devised realty to trustees on trust to pay the rents and income thereof to his wife for the maintenance, education, and benefit of his infant son until twenty-one, without liability to account for the same, and upon his said son attaining twenty-one, then upon trust for him absolutely; but if he should die under twenty-one without leaving issue, then upon trust for his said wife during life or widowhood, with remainder over:—Held, that the infant son was a tenant in fee simple in possession, with an executory limitation over. Morgan's Estate, In re, 53 L. J., Ch. 85; 24 Ch. D. 114; 48 L. T. 964; 31 W. R. 948.

A. devises his real estate to B., his brother, for life, then to trustees to preserve, &c., remainder to first and other sons in tail, with power to make jointure; and if his said brother had no son, or if he had and such son died without issue male, then to C., and his first, &c., sons in like manner, and willed that his plate, jewels, &c., should go to the heirs male of his family successively, as his real estate is settled, as much as they could by law. B. having no son, limitation to C. held good by way of executory devise. Gower v. Grosvenor, 9 Mod. 249.

A residuary estate was given to three brothers and a nephew, for their lives as tenants in common, and after their decease, then in trust for their heirs and assigns as tenants in common. The will then contained provisions that the shares of any or either of their children, dying under twenty-one without issue, should go to the survivors, and that the share of such child as died under twenty-one, leaving issue, should go to the children of such child; but that in case one child only of the brothers and nephew should attain twenty-one or be married, then in trust for such child, his or her heirs or assigns:—Held, that the brothers and nephew took an absolute vested interest in the residuary estate, with an executory devise over in case of children being born. Spence v. Handford, 27 L. J., Ch. 767; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 987.

b. Failure of Prior Gift. Effect on Executory or Substituted Gift.

Gift of Freehold Property for Hospital—Gift over on Failure of Inhabitants to carry out Scheme.]—Devise of a house to the inhabitants of B. to found a lying-in asylum, the executors to call a meeting of the inhabitants within a mile round to appoint a committee and trustees to carry out the scheme; testator's godson to be one of the said trustees. "But in the event of the said inhabitants not appointing a committee, or not [being] willing to carry out the same scheme," then a devise over to the testator's godson:—Held, upon the principle of Jones v. Westcomb (Prec. Ch. 316; Gilb. Eq. R. 74; 1 Eq. Cas. Abr. 248, pl. 10) and Axelyn v. Ward (1 Ves. Sen. 420), that the devise over was valid, notwithstanding that the prior devise failed to take effect by reason of the statute of mortmain, and not in the manner contemplated by the testator. Hall v. Warren, 9 H. L. Cas. 420; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 1089; 5 L. T. 190; 10 W. R. 66. Affirming 28 L. J., Ch. 70.

Gift over—On Death of Child under Twenty-five—Child stillborn.]—Testator gave his estate to trustees, to apply the profits for the use of the child with which his wife was then pregnant, during infancy, and at twenty-five to the child in fee; but in case the child should die before twenty-five, without issue, remainder over; the child was stillborn. Afterwards testator made a codicil affirming his will, and died without issue. Forty-three weeks after his death, his widow was brought to bed of a son; this son cannot take the estate, though found to be legitimate, but it shall go to the devisees over. Foster v. Cook, 3 Bro. C. C. 347.

—— After Death of Tenants for Life if Children should die under Twenty-one.]—Bequest of pecuniary legacy to A. for life, with remainder to B., his wife, for life, remainder to such children of A. as should be living at the death of the survivors of A. and B., to be paid at twenty-one; with survivorship in case of the death of any such children under twenty-one, with a gift over to C. after the death of A. and B. if all such children should die under that age. A. had two children, who both attained twenty-one, but died in his lifetime, leaving issue:—Held, that the gift over to C. took effect. Wilson v. Mount, 2 Beav. 397; 1 Jur. 262.

—— On Death within certain Time and no Testamentary Disposition.]—A testator, by his will, gave his residuary estate upon trust for his wife for life, providing she should survive him twelve months and remain unmarried, and he gave to his wife power to dispose by will of one half of the estate, and gave the other half after her decease to his sister J., or, in case of her predecease, to other persons; and he directed that, in case of his wife dying within twelve months from his own decease, his whole estate should go to his said sister, with a gift over as before in case of her predecease, and he made a similar provision with respect to one half of the estate in the event of his wife omitting to make a will. The testator's wife died in his lifetime, and his sister J. survived him:—Held, that the contingencies against which the testator guarded, and which the court, in construing the will, was bound to regard, were the event of his wife not being alive at the expiration of twelve months from his own decease, and the event of there being no testamentary disposition by her, and that, in the events which had happened, the gift over in favour of the testator's sister took effect. Davies v. Davies, 47 L. T. 40; 30 W. R. 918.

—— Upon Failure of Heirs of the Body, or making a Particular Disposition.]—A testator devised specific shares in an estate to several persons, nominatim, to hold the same as tenants in common, and not as joint tenants; and in the event of any of them dying before having heirs of their body, "or" making a particular disposition of his or her property, then his other share was to go to the survivors:—Held, that the devisees did not take estates tail, but estates in fee; that the gift over could only take effect on the happening of two events; that the word "or" must be read "and," although in effect it introduced a condition repugnant to the estate previously given, and made the gift over void. Greated v. Greated, 26 Beav. 621; 28 L. J. Ch. 756; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 454; 7 W. R. 367.

—— Afterborn Illegitimate Son.]—So far as limitations of real estate, in a will or settlement, are illegal and void, the estate remains subject to the subsequent limitations, or if not affected by them, it belongs to the settlor or testator, and the insertion of the illegal limitations has no effect on the subsequent limitations in the same settlement; therefore where an estate was limited to A. in fee, but if he die under twenty-one, and without issue, then to an afterborn illegitimate son, in fee; but in case there should be no such, or, being such, he should die under twenty-one, and without issue, then to B. in fee: —Held, that the executory devise to B. is good, and on the death of A., and the happening of the contingency of the death of the afterborn illegitimate child, under twenty-one, and without issue, the estate would vest in B.; but if there should be no such child, or if such child should attain twenty-one, the heir takes the estate as undisposed of. Lomas v. Wright, 2 Myl. & K. 769; 3 L. J., Ch. 68.

Lapse—Gift over on Death under Twenty-one —Death in Lifetime of Testator.]—Devise to A. and her heirs, but, if she dies under twenty-one and unmarried, to B. and her heirs. A. dies in the life of the testator under twenty-one and without issue, but having been married: the heir is entitled. Williams v. Chitty, 3 Ves. 546; 3 R. R. 71.

First a devise to A. at twenty-one, and if she die under twenty-one to her children, or if she die under twenty-one and no children then over. A. survived twenty-one and had children, and then died in the lifetime of the testatrix; decided at law, that A.'s children could not take, the above being a condition precedent, contrary to the opinion of Lord Thurlow, Ch. Doe v. Brabant, 3 Bro. C. C. 393; 4 Term Rep. 706. And see Calthorpe v. Gough, 3 Bro. C. C. 395, n.; 4 Term Rep. 707, n.

A testatrix devised real estate to her trustee and his heirs, in trust out of the rents to maintain her son William until he attained twenty-one, "and when and so soon as" he should attain twenty-one, she devised it to him in fee. But in case he should die before attaining twenty-one, to his children, if any, or if none, then to the defendant. The son did attain twenty-one, and died without issue in the lifetime of the testatrix. There being no heir or next-of-kin of the testatrix:—Held, that the trustee was entitled to hold the real estate beneficially. Cox v. Parker, 22 Beav. 168; 25 L. J., Ch. 873; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 842; 4 W. R. 453.

—— Devise over if Devisee should not Give a Release in a Certain Time.] — Devise on condition that the land should go over to another if devisee did not give a release in three months after testator's death; devisee dying in the testator's lifetime, the devisee over shall take instead of heir-at-law; this being a conditional limitation, and not a strict condition. Avelyn v. Ward, 1 Ves. sen. 420.

—— Death of Child Without Issue over Twenty-one in Testator's Lifetime.]—A testator, by his will, which recited and was intended to carry into effect articles made on the marriage of his daughter, devised real property to trustees to the use of the husband for life, or until bankruptcy or insolvency, and after bankruptcy or insolvency to the use of trustees during the joint lives of husband and wife to pay the rents and profits to the wife for her separate use, with remainder to the wife for life, with remainder to trustees to preserve contingent remainders, with remainder, subject to a power of appointment, to the children of the marriage in fee as tenants in common, with benefit of survivorship, and if only one child, then to that one; and in case every child born or to be born should die under the age of twenty-one, and without leaving lawful issue born or to be born in due time afterwards, then to the use of the heirs and assigns of the wife as if she had continued sole and unmarried. There was one child living at the date of the will. All the children died without issue in the lifetime of the testator, one having attained the age of twenty-one years. The husband became insolvent, and afterwards joined with the wife in a conveyance to such uses as she should by deed or will appoint. She appointed by will to S.:—Held, that a child having attained the age of twenty-one years, the ultimate limitation never took effect, that the case was one of lapse, and that the heir-at-law was therefore entitled to the property. Tarbuck v. Tarbuck (4 L. J., Ch. 129) approved. Brookman v. Smith, 41 L. J., Ex. 114; L. R. 7 Ex. 271; 26 L. T. 974; 20 W. R. 906—Ex. Ch.

c. Failure of Executory Gift Over. Effect on Prior Gift.

Life Interest to A.—Gift Over on Marriage and no Children—Death in Lifetime of A.]—A testator gave real and personal estate to his daughter A., and to two other persons, upon trust, to permit A. to receive the rents and interest for life, for her separate use, and after her decease, in trust to convey to her heirs, executors, &c.; but, in case A. should marry and have no children, then the property to belong to D.; or in case of his decease before A., then to his children:—Held, that A. took an absolute equitable estate, with an executory gift over, to D. and his children; and D. having died in the lifetime of A., leaving no children:—Held, that A. was absolutely entitled to the property. Jackson v. Noble, 2 Keen, 590; 7 L. J., Ch. 133; 2 Jur. 251.

Death under Twenty-one Without Issue — Charitable Gift Over Void.]—A testator devised lands in fee, but declared that if the devisee A. died under twenty-one, and without issue, then the lands should go to a charity. The gift to the charity being void:—Held, on the authority of Doe v. Eyre (5 C. B. 746), that the gift to A. was divested by the charitable gift over, although that gift was for all other purposes void. Robinson v. Wood, 27 L. J., Ch. 726; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 625; 6 W. R. 728.

A testator devised his real estates to trustees, their heirs and assigns, upon trust, to apply the rents for the maintenance of his daughter till twenty-one, and then to convey the estates to his daughter, her heirs and assigns; and in case his daughter should die under twenty-one, then upon trust for the absolute use and benefit of such issue as tenants in common, but if she should die under twenty-one without issue, then upon trust to sell the property and pay the proceeds to a charity. The daughter died under twenty-one without issue, and the gift over being void under the statute of mortmain:—Held, that the original devise to the testator's daughter, assuming that she took an absolute estate in fee simple, was divested by the subsequent gift over, although that gift had failed, and that the trustees of the will became entitled to the estate. Ib.

Forfeiture on Alienation — Acceleration of Subsequent Interests.]—Specified freeholds and leaseholds were given by will to trustees upon trust to permit the rents to be received by H. for life, and after his death to convey to his children on their attaining twenty-one, with a proviso that if H. charged or incumbered the property, the gift to him should be absolutely forfeited, and that in such case the gift in favour of his children should at once take effect, and be acted upon by the trustees as thereinbefore directed. H., by a memorandum in writing, in 1869, charged his life estate in favour of W. W. shortly afterwards, on hearing of the clause of forfeiture, and before he had taken any benefit under the charge, repudiated the security, and obtained another security from H. In 1874 the trustee of the will, by leave of the court in an administration suit, filed a bill against persons who were in possession of the property under a title derived from a lessee of H., to make them account for the rents. H. had no children:—Held, that the memorandum of charge produced a forfeiture of the life interest of H., although W. had never claimed any benefit thereunder, and had afterwards disclaimed it, and although H. had no children, so that there were no persons to take under the gift over. Hurst v. Hurst, 51 L. J., Ch. 729; 21 Ch. D. 278; 46 L. T. 899; 31 W. R. 327—C. A.

Gift to a Class — Substitution.] — A testator directed his trustees, after the death of the longest liver of his son, his daughter, and any widow whom the son might leave, to sell his real estate and to stand possessed of the proceeds and of the rents and profits until sale, upon trust to pay and apply them "unto and equally amongst all and every the child and children of my son W. and daughter M. share and share alike, and the lawful issue of such of them as may be then dead leaving issue, such issue to be entitled to no more than their parent or respective parents would have been if living." He directed that if his daughter's son then living should die without leaving issue, or, leaving issue, all of them should die under age and unmarried, the trustees should pay the share which would have been payable to him under the above trusts to the children of J.; and that if the testator's son died without leaving issue, or all of them died under age and unmarried, the trustees should pay the share which would have been payable to them under the trusts aforesaid, to the children of J. and M. The heir-at-law claimed the corpus as undisposed of, on the ground that the disposition of the proceeds of sale was void for remoteness as being a gift to a class not ascertainable till at or after the death of the son's widow, who might be a person unborn at the testator's death:—Held, that the gift was not a gift to such children of the son and daughter as should be living at the period of distribution and the issue of such of them as should be then dead, but a gift to all the children of the son and daughter, with a gift over by way of substitution of the shares of such of them as might die before the period of distribution leaving issue—that when the gift over of any share was void for remoteness the original gift remained unaffected—and that the heir-at-law had no title. Goodier, In re, Goodier v. Johnson, 51 L. J., Ch. 369; 18 Ch. D. 441; 45 L. T. 515; 30 W. R. 449—C. A.

8. SHIFTING CLAUSES.

a. Construction and Operation.

In General.]—See Micklethwait v. Micklethwait, 29 L. J., C. P. 75; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 437; 7 W. R. 451—Ex. Ch. Affirming 4 C. B. (N.S.) 790; 28 L. J., C. P. 121; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 41; 7 W. R. 117.

Shifting clauses, which take away an estate from the owner, are construed strictly. Wilmesley v. Gerard, 29 Beav. 321; 30 L. J., Ch. 435; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 1041.

A testator devised an estate to his eldest nephew and his issue, subject to a shifting clause, requiring them, under pain of forfeiture, in case they should also become seised, "under any now existing or future will or settlement or other assurance (except actual purchase for money)," to a Lincolnshire estate, to convey it to the younger nephews and their issue male. At the date of the will, and at his death, the eldest nephew was seised in fee of the Lincolnshire estate, which had descended to him as heir of his father:—Held, first, that he was not bound by the shifting clause; but the nephew having, after the testator's death, by deed conveyed the estate to the uses to which it should be conveyed as a compliance with the will. Held, secondly, after his decease, that the deed was as operative as if he had been compellable, under pain of forfeiture, to execute it. Ib.

Devise of an estate (Cansfield) to nephews and their first and other sons, in succession, and afterwards to nieces, with a shifting clause requiring any nephew, seised of the Cansfield estate, becoming also seised of the Lincolnshire estate, to settle the latter on the next in age of the nephews and his heirs male, "under the like limitations and restrictions" as were contained in the will as to the Cansfield estates:—Held, that the nieces were not objects of the shifting clause. Ib.

Possession of Family Estate.]—Proviso in a will that, in case the devisee should come into possession of the family estate, the trustees should stand seised of the devised estate to the use of the next person in remainder, valid; and the oldest son of the tenant in possession is the next person in remainder. Nicolls v. Sheffield, 2 Bro. C. C. 245.

Proviso that if any of the tenants for life, in a devise and executory trust to convey in strict settlement, shall become possessed of the family estate, the devise or limitation directed shall thereupon cease and become void and not take effect; and the person next in remainder, under the said limitations or directions, thereupon become entitled to the possession. The first tenant in tail is entitled under the proviso, notwithstanding the descent of the other estate upon his father for life. Stanley v. Stanley, 16 Ves. 491. And see Lambarde v. Peach, post, col. 1593.

—— Become Entitled—Recovery.]—A testator, devised his Maytham Hall estate to trustees, upon trust for P. M. for life, and after his decease for his first son for life; and after his decease for the first son of such first son in tail male; and in default of such issue, in trust for all and every other the son and sons of P. M., severally and successively, for the like interests and limitations; and in default of issue of the body of P. M., or in case of his not leaving any at his decease, upon trust for T. M. for life, and after his decease for his eldest son T. G. M., for life, and after his decease for his first son in tail male; and in default of issue of the body of T. G. M., upon trust for all and every other the son and sons of T. M., for the like estates and interests. Proviso, that if P. M. or T. M., their or either of their issue, should become entitled to the Jodrell estates, then the devised estates should go to the next person entitled under the testator's will, as if the person succeeding to the Jodrell estates were dead. T. M. died in the lifetime of the testator. P. M. entered into possession of the devised estates and suffered a recovery to the use of himself in fee. T. G. M. succeeded to the Jodrell estates as tenant in tail in possession, and suffered a recovery to the use of himself in fee. Afterwards P. M. died without having had a son, having disposed of the Maytham Hall estate by will. Upon bill by the eldest son of T. G. M., claiming the Maytham Hall estate: Held, inter alia, that the recovery suffered by T. G. M., of the Jodrell estates, to the use of himself in fee, did not prevent the shifting clause as to the Maytham Hall estate taking effect; and that, consequently, the latter estate passed over to his son, the plaintiff. Monypenny v. Deering, 2 De G. M. & G. 145; 22 L. J., Ch. 313; 17 Jur. 467.

—— "Come into Actual Possession."]—W. G., by his will dated in 1775, devised his estates to his nephew for life, with remainders to his first and other sons in tail male. T. G., the nephew's eldest son, after his father's death, suffered a recovery, and limited the estates to himself for life; remainder, subject to a term for securing a jointure, and raising portions for his younger children, to his first and other sons in tail male. S. F., by his will dated in 1804, devised his estates to trustees, in trust for the second and subsequently born sons of T. G. in tail male: provided that if the lands devised by W. G. to T. G. in tail male, should descend to or devolve upon any son of T. G., or any heir male of such son, and the person on whom those lands should descend or devolve, should, under the trusts of his, S. F.'s will, be tenant in tail male of his estates, so as to be then actually in the possession or receipt of the rents and profits thereof; then his estates should be in trust for the person who would be entitled to his estates under his will, if the person on whom W. G.'s estates had so descended or devolved were dead without issue. T. G. had three sons: the eldest died in his lifetime; then T. G. died:—Held, that as W. G.'s estates came to T. G.'s second son incumbered with the term, S. F.'s estates did not go over under the shifting clause. Fazakerly v. Ford, 4 Sim. 390. S. C. at law, 1 A. & E. 897; 1 N. & M. 1; 2 L. J., Q. B. 111.

—— Recovery.—The testator bequeathed his residuary estate upon trust for his son for life, and after his decease for the children of his said son; and he directed, that, in case his said son should at any time thereafter come into the actual possession of an estate entailed upon him (the testator) and his issue by his late uncle, R. D. of B., then and in such case the provision which he had thereinbefore made for his said son, and all and every the trusts thereof, should cease, determine, and be void, and the trustees should thenceforth stand possessed of the said trust moneys for the benefit of his other children, exclusive of his said son. R. D. of B., the late uncle of the testator, had settled three estates to uses, which included, after several estates for life and in tail, a limitation in remainder to his nephew (the testator) for his life, with remainder to trustees upon trust to preserve contingent remainders, with remainder to the first and other son and sons of the body of his said nephew severally and successively in tail male, with divers remainders over. Before the date of the will, a tenant in tail, who had the then first expectant estate tail, joined with the first tenant for life in a recovery, whereby such tenant in tail had acquired the fee as to one of the three estates; but whether that fact was known to the testator, did not appear. After the death of the testator the same tenant in tail came into possession of the property, and suffered recoveries, whereby the entail as to the two remaining estates was barred; and he then devised the three estates to the son of the testator in fee, subject to certain charges, under which devise the said son afterwards entered into possession of the same three estates:—Held, that the possession thus acquired was not an actual possession of the estate entailed upon the testator and his issue within the meaning of the will. Taylor v. Harewood (Earl), 3 Hare, 372; 13 L. J., Ch. 345; 8 Jur. 419.

—— Recovery and Mortgage.]—By indenture of settlement, two estates, A. and B., were limited to the father for life, and subject thereto the estate A. was limited to the first and other sons in tail male, and the estate B. was limited to the second and other sons in like manner; and it was provided that if the second son should become an eldest son and as such should become entitled to the actual possession or to the receipt of the rents and profits of the estate A., the limitations of the estate B. should cease and determine as if such second son were dead without issue. The second son, by the death of his elder brother, became the eldest son, and joined his father in suffering a recovery of the estate A., the uses of which were declared to the joint appointment of the father and son, and subject thereto to the old uses: in exercise of this power, the father and son by a mortgage in fee of the estate A. raised a sum of money which was paid to the father and son:—Held, that on the death of the father, the estate B. shifted from the second son under the terms of the proviso contained in the settlement. Held, also, that the recovery suffered by the father and son did not by itself prevent the operation of the proviso, and that the mortgage had not that effect, but that, notwithstanding both the recovery and the mortgage, the second son came on the death of his father into possession of the estate A. within the meaning of the terms of the settlement. Held, also, that the party entitled to the estate A. might previously to the happening of the event mentioned in the proviso have so exercised his rights over the estate as to have prevented it from ever coming into the possession of the second son within the meaning of the terms of the settlement. Harrison v. Round, 2 De G. M. & G. 190; 22 L. J., Ch. 322; 17 Jur. 563; 1 W. R. 26.

The decisions in the cases of Fazakerley v. Ford, supra, and Taylor v. Harewood (Earl) supra, approved of. Ib.

During the life of the father, a portion of the estate A. was sold, and the proceeds applied to the purchase of the land tax of both estates:—Held, that on the estate B. shifting under the provisions of the settlement, the second son had no claim against that estate for the amount expended in the purchase of the land tax of that estate. Ib.

When an estate is once fairly taken out of the settlement containing a shifting clause, the shifting clause is at an end, and it matters not whether the estate comes back or not. Ib.

—— Dead without Issue.]—A testator, who was at the date of his will entitled in remainder, upon an event which afterwards happened, to the G. estates as tenant for life, with remainder to his first and other sons in tail male, remainder to his brother for life, remainder to that brother's first and other sons in tail male, remainder to the testator's first and other daughters in tail male, with remainders over, devised the C. estates, of which the testator was seised in fee, to his eldest son for life, with remainder to his first and other sons in tail male; with similar limitations in favour of the testator's second and third sons, and their issue male; remainder to the testator's unborn sons successively in tail male; remainder to the first and other sons of the testator's eldest son in tail general; with similar limitations in favour of the first and other sons of the second and third sons of the testator; remainder to the first and other daughters of the testator's first, second, and other sons successively in tail male; with remainder to the first and other daughters of the testator's first, second, and third sons successively in tail general; with remainder to the unborn sons of the testator in tail general; with remainder to the testator's eldest daughter for life; with remainders over. The testator then provided, by a shifting clause, that the C. estates should not be held by any one of his sons or daughters, or his, her, or their issue, after such son or daughter, or such his, her, or their issue, should come into possession of the G. estates; but as often as the G. estates should "come to the possession of any of his said sons or daughters, or any of their issue, that then the person next in remainder, according to the limitations" of his will, "after the person or persons who should so come into the possession" of the G. estates, "should be entitled and come into possession" of the C. estates, "in such manner as if the person or persons so becoming possessed" of the estates "had died, or was then dead, without issue":—Held, that the word "issue" must be limited to such issue as might take or inherit under the limitations of the G. estates; and that the effect of the shifting clause was merely to accelerate the next remainder, leaving the remainders over unaffected; and, consequently, that the respondent, though in possession of the G. estates, was not precluded from taking the C. estates. Jellicoe v. Gardiner, 11 H. L. Cas. 323; 5 N. R. 465; 34 L. J., C. P. 282; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 249; 13 L. T. 127; 13 W. R. 528.

Certain hereditaments were settled to the use of the settlor in tail; remainder to J. L. for life; remainders to the eldest son of J. L. in tail male; remainders to the younger sons of J. L. in tail male; remainder to L. C. for life; remainders over; subject to a proviso, "that in case the said J. L., or any issue male of his body, should become entitled to the possession of the family estates of L., then and in every such case the uses declared of the said hereditaments to or for the benefit of him or them, who should so become entitled to the possession of the family estates of J. L.; and to and for the benefit of the issue male of such person or persons so becoming entitled, should cease, determine, and be absolutely null and void; and then and in every such case, all and singular the said hereditaments and premises should immediately thereupon, from time to time, divest out of the person or persons so becoming entitled, and should go over in such and the same manner, to all intents and purposes, as if such person or persons so becoming entitled were actually dead without issue male." J. L. became possessed of the family estates of L., in the lifetime of the settlor, who afterwards died without issue. At the time of his death, there were living J. L., his eldest son J. H. L. (who afterwards became possessed of the family estate), his second son H. L., and L. C. The court had little doubt about the matter, but sent a case to the court of exchequer, by whom it was held, that L. C. took an estate for life; and it was so decreed. Morrice v. Langham, 11 Sim. 260; 10 L. J., Ch. 38; 6 Jur. 334. And see S. C. at law, 8 M. & W. 196; 10 L. J., Ex. 289. See also S. C., nom. Sandford v. Morrice, 11 Cl. & F. 667.

—— Re-settlement—Continuation of Title.]—A testator settled estates in P. upon T. C. and his issue male, and provided that if T. C. or his issue male should become entitled in possession to the estates settled on the marriage of C. in the county of S., the trust in favour of T. C. and his issue male should cease for the benefit of those next in remainder. C. became under his marriage settlement tenant for life of the S. estates, with remainder to his first and other sons in tail male. After the death of the testator he joined with his eldest son in destroying the entail, and thereupon some portions of the S. estates were sold, and certain charges were imposed upon the residue, which was re-settled. Under the re-settlement, T. C. became substantially entitled to the residue of the S. estates:—Held, first, that the shifting clause must be construed to operate only in the event of T. C. becoming entitled under the marriage settlement of C. Meyrick v. Mathias, 43 L. J., Ch. 521; L. R. 9 Ch. 237; 30 L. T. 77; 22 W. R. 341—C. A.

Held, secondly, that in any event the shifting clause could not operate, as the identity of the S. estates had been destroyed in point of quantity and value. Ib.

—— Estate in Fee Simple or Fee Tail—"Default of Such Issue."]—B., by will, made in 1765, devised his lands to trustees, to the use of his brother C. for life; remainder to the use of his nephew J., the eldest son of C., for life; remainder to the use of the first son of the body of J. lawfully to be begotten, and the heirs male of the body of such first son lawfully issuing; and for default of such issue, to the use of the second, third, fourth, fifth, sixth, seventh, and all and every other son and sons of the body of J. successively, in tail male; and for default of such issue, corresponding series of limitations to C. and T., the second and third sons of his brother C.; and for default of such issue, to the use of all and every the daughter and daughters of his brother C. lawfully to be begotten, her and their heirs for ever, to take as tenants in common, if more than one, and not as joint tenants; and for default of such issue, corresponding limitations to the daughter or daughters of his nephews J., C., and T.; and for default of such issue, to the use of the testator's sister, in fee: "provided, that if at any time thereafter all or any of the daughters of his brother C. or his nephews should enter into religion, and become professed nuns, thereupon the uses before limited to such daughters as should so enter into religion should cease and determine, and that the person next in reversion to take, according to the afore-mentioned limitation, should enter into and enjoy the lands, as if the persons so entering into religion had been then dead without issue":—Held, that by the shifting clause the testator declared that the previous successive estates to the daughters were to be remainders in tail. Biddulph v. Lees, 28 L. J., Q. B. 211; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 818; 7 W. R. 309—Ex. Ch.

A testator provided that in case R., or any son of his body, should succeed to a certain family estate, the trusts declared by his will of his estates at S. and H., for the benefit of R., and such son so succeeding, should cease, and the estates should be in trust for the person and persons next entitled to the same. R. became tenant for life, and his son tenant in tail in remainder, of the family estate, and of the estates at S. and H.:—Held, that the father alone had succeeded, and that, by the effect of the shifting clause, the estate of W., the son, was accelerated, and he was entitled to S. and H., as tenant in tail in possession. Bagot v. Legge, 4 N. R. 492; 34 L. J., Ch. 156; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 994; 10 L. T. 898; 12 W. R. 1097.

—— Stock—Gift over if Legatee should become Entitled to Property of Larger Amount—Settlement on Marriage of Legatee made Prior to Will.]—C., by will, in 1841, bequeathed all his stock in the 3*l.* per cent. consols to trustees in trust to pay the dividends of one-eighth part to every one of his eight nephews and nieces named in his will, for life, and upon other trusts after the death of every one of these eight persons. The dispositions made to females, and for female children, were for their separate benefits; and he declared, that if and when any of such nephews and nieces should be in the receipt of or entitled to a permanent income of 1,000*l.* per annum or upwards, then the interest under his will of such nephew or niece should cease, and the share of such stock he or she would otherwise be entitled to should be held upon other trusts. To prevent any dispute as to any of his nephews or nieces being in the receipt of or becoming entitled to such permanent income of 1,000*l.* per annum, the decision of the trustees of his will was to be final and conclusive, and the nephews and nieces were not to impeach such decision; and he directed that the interest of which any person claiming under his will might be deprived by any such decision should not be revived by any future diminution of their income. C. died in 1846. In 1856, Mrs. L. (one of the eight persons named in the will) became entitled to a share of personal estate, amounting to 51,000*l.* and upwards; but on her marriage with L., in 1827, they covenanted that all the real and personal estate and property which the wife might become interested in or entitled to, by descent, bequest, or in any other manner, in her own right, during the coverture, should be assigned to trustees in trust for the husband and his assigns for his life, with remainder for the wife and her assigns for her life, with remainder for the benefit of their children. The question raised was, whether Mrs. L. had become possessed of or entitled to such a permanent income of 1,000*l.* a year as was within the meaning of the provision in the will:—Held, that she had not incurred any forfeiture of her interest under the will, but was entitled to the receipt of the income of one-eighth of the accruing share out of the testator's estate. Curzon v. Curzon, 1 Giff. 248; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 907.

Scotch Settlement—Shifting Clause in Unrecorded Entail.]—A shifting clause binds the heir, though the entail be not recorded, and it binds his creditors if they have notice of it. Such notice will be sufficient if the shifting clause is set out in the record of seisins. Fleeming v. Howden, L. R. 1 H. L. (Sc.) 372.

An heir of entail in possession in such a case will be deemed a trustee for those entitled under the shifting clause; more especially where the clause requires the heir in possession instantly to denude, and he fails to do so. Ib.

Shifting Clause Divisible.]—A testator directed two estates to be purchased (A and B). The estate A was to be settled on the sons of his daughter (except Lord K. the eldest), and their issue, and in default on K. for life, with remainder to his first and other sons in tail, with remainder to his issue in tail general, with remainders over to daughters of the daughter. Estate B was to be settled on Lord K. for life, with remainder to his first and other sons in tail, and afterwards to the same uses as the estate A. There was a shifting clause determining the estate of Lord K. and his first and other sons in estate B, in case he or his issue male became entitled to estate A. K. having become entitled to estate A:—Held, that his first life estate alone in estate B had ceased, but that his second life estate therein, expectant on the failure of younger sons of the daughter, was still subsisting. Kenlis (Lord) v. Bective (Earl), 34 Beav. 587.

—— Gift of Leaseholds upon Trusts to Correspond with Uses of Freeholds.]—A testator devised his freehold estates in Worcestershire to his third son and his issue male, with remainder to his fourth son and his issue male, in strict settlement; and he devised his freehold estates in Cardiganshire to his fourth son and his issue male, with remainder to his fifth son and his issue male, in strict settlement. By a shifting clause it was provided that if his fourth son, or any issue male of his fourth son, should become actually entitled to the possession of his Worcestershire estates, and if his fifth son or any of his issue male should then be living, the limitations of his Cardiganshire estates in favour of his fourth son, or his issue male, should absolutely cease. He bequeathed his leasehold estates in Cardiganshire to trustees upon such trusts as, regard being had to the difference in the tenure of the premises respectively, would best or most nearly correspond with the uses declared of the Cardiganshire freeholds. The third son died a bachelor in the lifetime of the fourth son, who thereupon entered into possession of the Worcestershire estates:—Held, that the shifting clause was divisible, and in the events which happened was not bad for remoteness. Miles v. Harford, 12 Ch. D. 691; 41 L. T. 378.

Name Clause — Condition Subsequent.] — A testator, by codicil, after appointing two persons trustees, as also their heirs and assigns, to his will and codicil, desired that his sister A. should do what she pleased with his remaining property after payment of certain legacies, excepting a tenement at W. and stock, of which she should only receive the interest and rent during her life, and afterwards to his sister's eldest son, on his taking the name of M.; but should he refuse to take the name of M., or his sister depart this life without a son, then the tenement at W. and the stock should go to P. on his taking the name of M., and so on to his heirs, each taking the name of M., none of them being allowed to touch the principal; and no one should after his sister A. inherit the said property or enjoy the interest who did not take or possess the name of M.:—Held, that the trustees took an estate in fee by virtue of their appointment, and that A. was entitled to an estate for life in the tenement and stock, with a remainder in fee in the tenement, and an absolute interest in the stock, to the first-born of A. vested on his birth and baptism by the name of M. Bennett v. Bennett, 2 Dr. & Sm. 266; 34 L. J., Ch. 34; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1170; 11 L. T. 362; 13 W. R. 66.

Succession to Title—"Possession or Receipt of Rents and Profits."]—The canon of construction laid down in Doe d. Hearle v. Hicks (8 Bing. 475), and Langdale v. Briggs (8 De G. M. & G. 391), that an estate clearly given cannot be divested except by words as clear and unequivocal as those which created it, approved and applied. A testatrix by her will directed that certain hereditaments thereby devised should go over in case the person for the time being "entitled to the possession or to the receipt of the rents and profits" of the said hereditaments should succeed to a certain title. A management clause provided that while and so often as the person who (but for the provision) would have been "entitled to the possession, receipt, or enjoyment of the rents, issues, and profits" of the hereditaments, should be an infant, the trustees should enter and hold "the possession or receipts of the rents, issues, and profits" thereof, and manage the same. The trustees had a power of leasing during the minority of any person who if of full age would have been "entitled at law or in equity to the possession or to the receipt of the rents and profits" of the hereditaments:—Held, on the construction of the whole will (several other parts of which also contained the words "possession or receipt of rents and profits," or similar words), that the shifting clause did not apply to the case of a tenant in tail in possession who while an infant succeeded to the title. Leslie v. Rothes (Earl), 63 L. J., Ch. 617; [1894] 2 Ch. 499; 7 R. 600; 71 L. T. 134—C. A.

—— Shifting Clause in Patent conferring a Title.]—By letters patent the barony of Buckhurst was conferred on Elizabeth for life, with successive remainders to her second and other sons and the heirs male of their respective bodies. The patent contained a proviso that if her second son or any other person taking under the letters patent should succeed to the earldom of Dorset, "the succession to" the dignity of Buckhurst should "devolve upon" the son of Elizabeth or the heir who should be next entitled to succeed to the barony, if the person so succeeding to the earldom was dead without issue male. Lands having been devised by a testatrix to trustees and their heirs, upon trust "to convey, settle, and assure" the same "in a course of entail to correspond as nearly as may be with the limitations of" the barony of Buckhurst, "and the provisoes affecting the same contained in the letters patent—" a settlement was executed in which was inserted a clause providing that, if the second son of Elizabeth (who had then by her death become Baron Buckhurst) or any other person taking under the limitations therein contained should succeed to the earldom, the "succession to" the lands thereby settled should "devolve upon" the son of Elizabeth or the heir who would be next entitled to succeed to the barony, if the person so succeeding to the earldom was dead without issue male. The second son of Elizabeth afterwards succeeded to the earldom. He had issue male:—Held, that upon the second son succeeding to the earldom, the third son became entitled in possession to the settled estates. Cope v. De la Warr (Earl), 42 L. J., Ch. 870; L. R. 8 Ch. 982; 29 L. T. 565; 22 W. R. 8.

The House of Lords after Elizabeth's death declared (Sackville West v. Holmesdale (Viscount), 39 L. J., Ch. 505; L. R. 4 H. L. 543) that the estates ought to be limited in strict settlement, to the second son for life, with remainder to his first and other sons in tail male, with remainder to the third and other younger sons of Elizabeth and the heirs male of their bodies respectively and successively in tail male, and that the settlement should contain a shifting clause similar to that in the letters patent:—Held, that clauses postponing the vesting of portions until the death of the person creating them, and providing for the cesser of jointures and portions charged on the estates upon the person charging them succeeding to the earldom of D., ought not to be inserted in the settlement. Holmesdale (Viscount) v. Sackville West, 40 L. J., Ch. 795; L. R. 12 Eq. 280.

And see CONDITION—YOUNGER CHILDREN.

b. Right to Intermediate Income.

Direction to Resettle other Estates—Exclusion of Heir-at-law.]—A testator devised real estate to trustees, to convey and settle the same to the use of A. for life; remainder to the use of the children of A. in strict settlement; remainder to the use of B. for life, with remainders over. The testator directed that the settlement should contain a name and arms clause; and in case of refusal, the estate of the person refusing was to cease, and was to go over to the person next entitled in remainder under the limitations, as if the person so refusing, being tenant for life, were dead, or tenant in tail were dead without issue, but without prejudice nevertheless to prior contingent estates. The settlement was also to contain a shifting clause, directing, in the events which happened, namely, that if A. should succeed to certain other estates, he should re-settle them; and in default, that the settled estates should go to such uses, as if the limitations in A.'s favour had not been inserted. A. had no children, and made default in re-settling the other estate:—Held, that the trust was executory; that the whole will was inconsistent with the intention of the testator to die intestate as to any portion of his estate; and that B. was entitled to receive the rents for his life, or until A. should have issue, to the exclusion of the heir-at-law. D'Eyncourt v. Gregory, 34 Beav. 36; 3 N. R. 628; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 484; 10 L. T. 317; 12 W. R. 679.

"Next Entitled in Remainder."]—T. was the daughter and heiress-at-law of L., and tenant for life in possession of the K. estates under his will. Subject to such life estate, and to limitations which had ceased, the estates stood limited as follows:—To E. for life, with remainder to trustees to preserve contingent remainders; with remainder to the second and younger sons of E. in tail; with remainder to M. for life; with remainders over. The will contained a proviso to the effect that if E. became entitled to the T. estates, the limitation of the K. estates in his favour should cease, determine, and be absolutely void, as if he were dead, and the K. estates should go over to the person next entitled in remainder under the will. In 1857, E. became entitled to the T. estates, having at that time one son only. T., the tenant for life, died in 1858, leaving M. her residuary devisee and legatee. In 1859, E. had a second son born:—Held, that the trustees to preserve contingent remainders were the "persons next entitled in remainder"; but that M. was entitled to the rents of the K. estates from the death of T. to the birth of E.'s second son, and that such second son was entitled to them from that period. Turton v. Lambarde, 1 De G. F. & J. 495; 29 L. J., Ch. 361; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 233; 2 L. T. 38; 8 W. R. 355.

—— Rents and Profits Undisposed of.]—A testator devised the K. estates to T. for life, with remainder over (which remainders failed), with remainder to E. H. T. for life, with remainder to trustees to preserve; with remainder to the second and younger sons of E. H. T. in tail; with remainder to M. T. L. for life, with remainders over; with a shifting clause, as to the K. estates, in case any tenant for life or in tail thereof should become seised of the T. estates. E. H. T. was the eldest son of T., and became seised of the T. estates on the death of his father. E. H. T. had only one son;—Held, nevertheless, that the shifting clause took effect; that the K. estates vested in trustees to preserve; and that during E. H. T.'s life, until he had a second son, the rents and profits were undisposed of. Lambarde v. Peach, 4 Drew, 553; 28 L. J., Ch. 569; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 480; 7 W. R. 338. And see Stanley v. Stanley, supra, col. 1584; Nicolls v. Sheffield, supra, col. 1584.

9. Assignment of Interests.

Possibility.]—It is now well known that a possibility may be both assigned and released. Jewson v. Moulson, 2 Atk. 417. But see Thomas v. Freeman, 2 Vern. 563.

Possibility assignable in equity for valuable consideration: and love and affection to a child is a consideration in the second degree, and operates by way of agreement, and will be made good, like the case of defective execution of a power, or devise of copyhold without surrender. Wright v. Wright, 1 Ves. Sen. 411.

A. granted an annuity to B., and covenanted to charge it upon all such property as, in the event of C. dying before him, he might become possessed of at C.'s death, either by will or otherwise. A. afterwards became bankrupt, and obtained his certificate; and then C. died, having bequeathed an annuity in trust for A.:—Held, that B. was entitled to a decree specifically charging his annuity upon the annuity bequeathed in trust for A. Lyde v. Mynn, 1 Myl. & K. 683; Coop. t. Brough. 123. Affirming 4 Sim. 505.

An agreement, of which the subject is an expectancy contingent upon the will of a living person, is not illegal, but will be enforced in equity. Ib.

Possibility of a Term.]—A possibility of a term is assignable in equity for a good consideration. Theobalds v. Duffey, 9 Mod. 102.

A remainder of a term is an assignable interest; as if J. G., being possessed of a term of 2,000 years, devised the estate to his wife for fifty, if she should so long live, and after her decease, to his son for fifty years, if, &c., and after her decease, to his two grandchildren for the remainder of the term. One of the grandchildren assigns his interest in the life of the father or grandmother. Per curiam. This is an assignable interest, and a moiety passed by the assignment so decreed. Kingslader v. Courtney, 2 Freem. 238. Semble, S. C., Kimpland v. Courtney, Id. 250.

If a father devise lands to trustees and their heirs till his son attain twenty-five years, a mortgage thereof by the son when twenty-one is void. Spencer v. Chase, 9 Mod. 30.

Expectancy of an heir either presumptive or apparent, not an interest or possibility capable of being made the subject of contract. Carleton v. Leighton, 3 Mer. 667.

Devise of use of personal to A. for life, and afterwards to B., though B. dies first, transmissible. Exel v. Wallace, 2 Ves. 119. Affirmed Id. 318.

Person out of Possession.]—The contract for the present demise, by a person out of possession, not enforced in equity. Bayly v. Tyrrell, 2 Ball & B. 358; 12 R. R. 99.

A person out of possession cannot convey anything to a stranger; he can only give a release to one in possession. Underwood v. Courtown (Lord), 2 Sch. & Lef. 65.

Equitable Interest under Contract of Purchase.]—An equitable interest under a contract of purchase may be the subject of sale; the subcontract converts the original vendee into a trustee of his equitable interest for his vendee.

who acquires the same rights which he had to the benefits to be derived under the primary contract. Such sub-contracts are not within the doctrine of champerty and maintenance. Wood v. Griffith, 1 Swanst. 56; 18 R. R. 18.

Reversion.]—Although it is a rule of law that a reversion will pass by general words, unless a different intention is distinctly shown in other parts of the instrument, yet such an intention may be gathered by implication from the form of the deed. Mullineux v. Ellison, 8 L. T. 226.

Contingent Remainder.]—Quære, whether a transfer by deed of a contingent remainder, before the passing of the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 76 (which made contingent remainders assignable at law), would not, though made without valuable consideration, be held good in equity, as an equitable assignment. Crofts v. Middleton, 8 De G. M. & G. 192; 25 L. J., Ch. 513; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 528. Reversing 2 Kay & J. 194; 4 W. R. 439.

Assuming that between the passing of the Fines and Recoveries Act, 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 76, and of the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 76, a man or feme sole could not by any means effectually dispose at law of a contingent remainder in fee by act inter vivos, except by estoppel by means of a false recital, still, upon the true construction of the former act, a married woman could convey such an estate by deed acknowledged. Ib.

Supposing such a deed could not operate so as to pass the legal estate, still, if made for a valuable consideration, it would be good to confer an equitable title by way of contract; for the fines and recoveries act gives a married woman power, with the concurrence of her husband, to contract by acknowledged deed, so as to bind her real estate, though not herself personally. Ib.

The court will not enforce a deed, although made for valuable consideration, purporting to convey a contingent interest in land which could not be conveyed at law. Ib.

Observations on fraud consisting of suppression, and on positive misrepresentation. Ib.

Contingent Interest in Residue.]—A testatrix gave the interest of the residue to her brother during his life, and after his death she gave the residue to her executors in trust for four persons by name, and the survivors and survivor of them, to be paid to them respectively when they should attain twenty-one, with interest in the meantime; of those four persons two died during the life of the brother:—Held, that they did not take vested interests in any part of the residue, but that the whole of it belonged to the two survivors. During the lifetime of the testatrix's brother, one of the two survivors assigned all other the estate and effects, of or to which she was then possessed or entitled, to trustees upon trust for her creditors; this assignment did not pass her contingent interest in the testatrix's residuary estate. Pope v. Whitcomb, 3 Russ. 124; 6 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 53; 27 R. R. 32.

Assignment of Future Chattels—Possession.]—H. sold to T. all the machinery on T.'s mill and premises. The deed, registered as a bill of sale, after reciting the purchase, witnessed that T. assigned to a trustee all the machinery specified, in a schedule on trust, if T. paid to H. 5,000*l.* on demand for T. absolutely; but, in default of such payment, then to sell and apply the proceeds. The deed also provided that all the machinery which, during the continuance of the security should be fixed or placed on the mill and premises, in addition to or substitution for the present machinery, should be subject to the same trusts. T. remained in possession, working the mill, and from time to time sold part of the machinery, and purchased new, of which he gave notice to H. Afterwards H. demanded payment of the 5,000*l.* which was not paid. An execution creditor of T. issued a fi. fa., and the sheriff seized the added or substituted machinery:—Held, that the added and substituted machinery became, as soon as it was put in the mill, subject to the deed; and H. was equitable owner, and had priority over the execution creditor, without the formality of taking actual possession. Holroyd v. Marshall, 10 H. L. Cas. 191; 33 L. J., Ch. 193; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 213; 7 L. T. 172; 11 W. R. 171.

At law non-existing property to be acquired at a future time is not assignable; in equity it is so. Ib.

At law, although a power is given in a deed of assignment, to take possession of after-acquired property, no interest is transferred, even as between the parties themselves, unless possession is actually taken; in equity, the moment the property comes into existence, the agreement operates upon it. Ib.

1. IN GENERAL.

a. General Principles.

General Rule.]—The courts lean towards vesting, and seek to find the earliest date at which persons interested take a vested interest. Where property is once vested under a will, it must not be divested except upon strong grounds. Wood, In re, Moore v. Bailey, 43 L. T. 730; 29 W. R. 171.

Where there is a doubt the court inclines to the construction that a gift by will vests on the testator's death. King v. Isaacson, 2 Sm. & G. 371; 22 L. J., Ch. 455; 17 Jur. 434; 1 W. R. 209.

A residue to be divided by executors, at an indefinite time, vests at the death of the testator unless an intention is manifest to the contrary upon the face of the instrument. Stapleton v. Palmer, 4 Bro. C. C. 490.

Distinction between Vested and Contingent Legacies.]—The distinction between vested and contingent legacies is, that a vested legacy, immediately on the death of a testator, attaches as a debt upon his real or personal estate, whereas a contingent legacy does not attach upon either till the contingency happens. In the first case, the legacy is debitum in præsenti solvendum in futuro, but where the legacy is merely contingent, non constat whether under the will the fund will ever be charged with it. Keily v. Monck, 3 Ridgw. P. C. 255.

A bequest of 100*l.* to the testator's daughter, and in case she should die under twenty-one, to her mother. The mother married and died, and afterwards the daughter died under twenty-one: —Held, that the 100*l.* should go to the personal representative of the mother. Jones v. Aiken, Wall. Lyn. 328.

Direction postponing Payment.]—The rule, taken from the ecclesiastical court, that a direction postponing the payment of a legacy does not prevent the vesting, prevails in courts of equity as to personal legacies: unless a contrary intention can be inferred; as, where the time of payment forms part of the description of the person to take. The vesting of a residuary bequest is especially favoured, to prevent an intestacy; and a direction, that the interest should accumulate and be paid with the capital, after a deduction for maintenance and preferment, is not sufficient to prevent it. As to real estate the contrary rule prevails, but subject to exceptions. Bolger v. Mackell, 5 Ves. 509.

Provision for Survivorship among Legatees.]—The vesting of a legacy is not prevented by a provision for survivorship among the legatees in case of the death of any under the age of twenty-one. Deane v. Test, 9 Ves. 146; 1 Smith, 112.

Legacy payable on some Event.]—A legacy payable as soon as legal proceedings connected with the fund out of which it is to be paid should be terminated, is neither a reversionary interest nor a contingent legacy. Luff v. Lord, 34 Beav. 220; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1248; 11 L. T. 656. Affirmed, 11 Jur. (N.S.) 50; 11 L. T. 695.

A legacy, not as an independent bequest, with a time for payment, or distribution, appointed afterwards, but the time annexed to the substance of the bequest: the interests do not vest before that period. Sansbury v. Read, 12 Ves. 75.

The intention of a testator that his gift should not vest in the legatee until it should be actually remitted to him, will prevail when clearly expressed, provided the remittance be not delayed by negligence or inevitable accident. Law v. Thompson, 4 Russ. 92; 6 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 56; 28 R. R. 17.

—— Contingent Clause added.]—When a certain time is appointed for the payment of a legacy, and afterwards a contingent clause is added, touching the same legacy, all the words of the will must stand together, which can never be, unless the contingency happen within the period of time appointed for the payment of the legacy. Colhoun v. Thompson, Beat. 248; 2 Moll. 281.

Vested Legacy directed to Accumulate.]—When a legacy is directed to accumulate for a certain period, or where the payment is postponed, the legatee, if he has an absolute indefeasible interest, is not bound to wait until the expiration of that period, but may require payment the moment he is competent to give a valid discharge. Saunders v. Vautier, 4 Beav. 115. Affirmed, Cr. & Ph. 240; 10 L. J., Ch. 354.

Executors' Year.] — The year allowed to executors and administrators is only for convenience, and does not prevent vesting. Garthshore v. Chalie, 10 Ves. 13; 7 R. R. 311.

Contingent Legacy—Security by Person entitled to Fund until Contingency happens.]—Where a legacy is given upon a contingency, and a suit is instituted for the administration of the testator's estate, the court does not direct a sum of stock, belonging to the estate, to be appropriated to pay the legacy when the contingency happens; but directs the whole residue to be paid over to the residuary legatee on his giving security to pay the legacy when due. Webber v. Webber, 1 Sim. & S. 311; 1 L. J., (O.S.) Ch. 219; 24 R. R. 180.

b. Legacy on an Uncertain Event, or at an Indefinite Time.

Marriage.]—Testator gave legacies to his daughters, to be paid on marriage, with interest from his death, until same should be paid; he directed that if any of the daughters married a man who did not settle on her a jointure of a certain amount, the interest only of the legacy should be paid to the husband during his life; and at his death, if the wife survived him, he directed the principal to be paid to her, and if she died in his lifetime, leaving children, the principal to be paid to them; but if she left no children, the principal to be paid to his son and to his surviving daughters equally; the shares of the latter to be paid at the same time, and subject to the same restrictions, as their original shares. The residue of his estate, "after payment of his legacies," he he gave to his said son. Two of the daughters died unmarried:—Held, that the legacies to the daughters were vested and transmissible to their personal representatives. Vize v. Stoney, 1 Dr. & War. 837; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 64.

Residuary bequest to trustees upon trust to pay the dividends, &c., equally between the testator's two great-nieces until their respective marriages, and from and immediately after their respective marriages to assign and transfer their respective moieties or shares thereof unto them respectively:—Held, a vested interest before marriage; being taken out of the general rule from the civil law, that dies incertus in testamento conditionem facit. One of the legatees being dead without having been married, the court directed one moiety to be paid to her executors; but would not permit the other moiety to be paid, but directed the interest and dividends of that moiety to be paid to the other legatee, with liberty to apply in case of her marriage or her death before marriage. Booth v. Booth, 4 Ves. 399; 4 R. R. 235.

Where the whole property is devised with a particular interest given out of it, it operates by way of exception out of the above absolute property. Id.

—— Accumulation — Tenant for Life.]—A testatrix gave specific legacies absolutely to her sister, and directed her executors to pay out of her general estate to her said sister's two daughters, A. and B., 5,000*l* each upon their marriage, with all the accumulations of interest thereon from the time of her death. She gave the income of the residue to H., at whose death the whole was to be equally divided between the grandchildren of the father of the testatrix. The testatrix died in 1825. Twenty-one years from the decease of the testatrix expired in 1846. In 1849 A. died. The tenant for life of the residue died in 1838. On a bill by the grandchildren against the executors and representative of A. and H., and against B., for a declaration by the court of the rights under the will:—Held, that the legacies to A. and B. were contingent, and that the representative of H. was entitled to the income of A.'s legacy till the death of H., but that the capital and subsequent accumulations fell into the residue. Morgan v. Morgan, 4 De G. & Sm. 164; 20 L. J., Ch. 109, 441; 15 Jur. 319.

Marriage with Consent.]—P. devises to J. 200*l*., provided she marries with the consent of her father and mother, or the survivor of them. J., before marriage, and during the lives of her father and mother, brings her bill against the executor to have this legacy paid, the father and mother by their answers consenting. Marriage is here a condition precedent; plaintiff, therefore, too early, and bill dismissed. Garbut v. Hilton, 1 Atk. 381; 1 Ves. sen. 5; 9 Mod. 210.

Although no time is specified for payment of a legacy given as a portion, subject to a contingency, provision to go over if legatee die before twenty-one, raises a necessary implication, that it is payable at twenty-one. Legacies to A. and B., and "in case the said A. and B., or either of them, shall become entitled to the said lands (real estate settled in remainder, on the event of C. dying without issue), my intention is, that she or they so becoming entitled shall not have, possess, or enjoy any part of my property; but in case A. and B. shall not become entitled to the settled estate, I leave each of them 300*l*.," with other provisions in the event of dying before twenty-one or marriage with consent, that the legacies should go over. A. having attained twenty-one and married with consent:—Held, that her legacy became absolutely vested not liable to be divested, notwithstanding the devolution of the settled estate by the subsequent happening of the event. Colhoun v. Thompson, 2 Moll. 281; 2 Beat. 248.

W. bequeathed one-third of his real and personal estate in trust for his son and daughter, to be divided between them in equal proportions as tenants in common, and not as joint tenants; the share of the son to be vested in him at twenty-four, and the share of the daughter to be vested in her on her marriage, with the consent of her guardians. But in case his son should die under twenty-four, and without leaving issue, or his daughter should die without having been married with such such consent, he declared that the share of him or her so dying should go to the survivor, and be vested in him or her at the same age as his or her original share. The son attained twenty-four, and the daughter twenty-one, and was unmarried:—Held, that the daughter took a vested interest on her attaining twenty-one. West v. West, 4 Giff. 198; 1 N. R. 258; 32 L. J., Ch. 240; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 400; 7 L. T. 779.

A testator bequeathed to his daughter E. 200*l*., to be paid her at the time of her marriage, or within three months after, provided she marry with the approbation of his two sons. E. died after twenty-one, but unmarried:—Held, that her representative was not entitled to the legacy. Atkins v. Hiccocks, 1 Atk. 500.

In all cases, where the condition of marrying is annexed, marriage is necessary to vest the legacy. Ib.

Legacy to be paid on marriage with consent, and given over in case of death before twenty-five or such marriage with consent:—Held, that the legacy was only intended to go over in the event of death before twenty-five and such marriage with consent. Malcolm v. O'Callaghan, Coop. t. Brough. 73; 2 Madd. 349.

E., being on bad terms with his eldest son, bequeaths him a trifling annuity, and bequeaths to M., the daughter of his said son, "if unmarried, and if she does not marry without the consent of the trustees, the sum of 400*l*., one moiety to be paid her upon her marriage, with such consent, the other moiety in one year after; but if said M. was then married, or should marry without consent, said sum to sink into his personal fortune." M., being unmarried, is not entitled immediately either to principal or interest. Ellis v. Ellis, 1 Sch. & Lef. 1.

Marriage or Taking the Veil.]—A mother bequeathed to each of her four daughters 500*l*., to be paid by her son to each of them upon the day of her marriage, or on the day of her taking the veil as a professed nun; and directed that her daughters should reside with her son so long as they should agree to do so, and that, during such residence with him, he should provide them with maintenance and clothing; and should any separation take place between her son and any of his sisters, each such sister so disagreeing should be paid by him 25*l.* a-year until she became entitled to be paid the principal sum of 500*l.*, to be paid quarterly and in advance:—Held, that the legacies did not vest until marriage or taking the veil. Corr v. Corr, 7 Ir. Eq. R. 397.

Legacy to a Person if Living.]—Legacy to A., if he be living, and in case of his death before the decease of B., to C., is contingent, viz. if A. survives B. Hodges v. Peacock, 3 Ves. 735.

Legacy in trust to pay out of the interest 60*l.* a year to the testator's wife for life, and the remaining interest during her life to R., Duke of M., and in case of his death to his eldest or only son; and for want of issue male to his eldest or only daughter; for want of such issue female to sink into the residue; and after the death of his wife, the testator gave the principal to the said duke, if then living; but if then dead, to his eldest or only issue male then living; and for want of such issue male, to his eldest or only daughter, for want of such issue female, to sink into the residue. R., Duke of M., died, leaving two sons and a daughter: both the sons died: the eldest left a son, Duke of M., who filed the bill. The plaintiff is entitled to the surplus interest, but the principal is contingent till the death of the testator's widow. Manchester (Duke) v. Bonham, 3 Ves. 61.

c. Gift with Direction to Pay at a Fixed Time.

In General.]—Legacy to be paid at at a particular time is debitum in præsenti solvendum in futuro and vested. Crickett v. Dolby, 3 Ves. 13.

Legacy payable at twenty-one; before which time the legatee dies: a person claiming by limitation over takes immediately: but the administrator of the infant must wait till the time at which the legacy is payable, unless the whole interest is given. Id. 15.

Vesting of legacies, where, by the bequest thereof, they were given to be paid on a day certain "and in case any of the legatees should die before that day, that their legacies should be given to whomsoever of his or her children to whom he or she should bequeath it." Tolner v. Marriott, 9 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 14.

Legacy to be paid at a future day is vested, but not where the sum is not certain. Maddison v. Andrew, 1 Ves. sen. 59.

Distinction between a legacy, given at a future time, and a legacy, given, to be paid at a future time: the latter vested; the payment only postponed: the time being annexed, not to the legacy, but to the payment only. Hixon v. Oliver, 13 Ves. 113; 9 R. R. 148.

Legacy of 1,000*l.* which devisor had on mortgage on college lease to be paid when devisee came of age:—Held, that it was vested. Chambers v. Jeoffery, 2 Eq. Cas. Abr. 541.

Bequest of 400*l.* to R., to be paid in a year, and of a further sum of 100*l.* at the death of his mother; the latter held also a vested legacy. Jackson v. Jackson, 1 Ves. Sen. 217.

Legacy when apprenticeship is served:—Held, on construction of will to be only directory as to time of taking, and not a condition. Sidney v. Vaughan, 2 Bro. P. C. 254. And see Humberstone v. Stanton, 1 V. & B. 385; 12 R. R. 243.

F. by will gave to R. legacy of 1,000*l.* to be put out at interest till twenty-one, and in case of death before, then to go to M., his daughter; but if R. lived to attain twenty-one then 500*l.*, part of 1,000*l.*, to go to M., and be paid her when R. should arrive at that age. M. died before that time:—Held, that M. took a vested interest. Wingfield v. Newton, 9 Mod. 428.

A portion given to one, payable at a certain age, and if he dies, to another, without mentioning any age; if the first dies before the time of payment it vests in the second immediately. Boycot v. Cotton, 1 Atk. 555.

Where there was first a distinct gift of a legacy, and then a direction that it should be paid within six months, and a general declaration that all legacies should be vested only when payable, and the legatee died within six months:—Held, that the legacy had vested. Lucas v. Carline, 2 Beav. 367.

P. gives by will "to his three daughters 500*l.* each, to be paid them severally within five years after his decease, if then alive, or any issue of their several bodies, to be paid by son, the residuary devisee, the interest from his death at 4 per cent. for so many of the five years as the son should keep it in his hands; but if there should be no issue living of any of the daughters at the end of five years, then annuity for life of 20*l.* each, and the several sums of 500*l.* to be paid to them so dying without issue, should be equally divided between the survivors and their issue." One of the daughters dies within five years, leaving issue: having previously assigned her interest, the assignee held entitled to the 500*l.* Oseland v. Oseland, 3 Anst. 628.

If legacy be given to B. payable at two years after death of testator, B. takes a vested interest, though he dies before that time. Sheldon v. Sheldon, 9 Mod. 211.

A legacy to daughters equally to be divided between them, when they arrive at twenty-four years of age, is vested immediately, and only the time of payment postponed. May v. Wood, 3 Bro. C. C. 471.

Legacy in trust for testator's mother and sister for life, and after the death of the survivor, for all and every the child and children of his sister living at her death, share and share alike, each receiving his or her share of the principal at twenty-one; and if but one child should be so surviving, in trust to pay the whole to such surviving child at twenty-one: the payment only is postponed, not the vesting. Wadley v. North, 3 Ves. 364; 4 R. R. 16. S. P., Chaffers v. Abell, 3 Jur. 578; Anon., 2 Vern. 199; 2 Vent. 344.

Where there is a gift to trustees within three months after the testator's decease, in case any child or children of his son should be then living, to invest a sum of money, in trust for such children, equally, who should attain twenty-one, the dividends to be payable to and become vested in the meantime, with absolute discretion in the trustees as to maintenance, it is not a condition precedent; the limitation is not too remote, and there must be an investment and accumulation for the benefit of the children of the son, the dividends going with the capital. Edmunds v. Waugh, 4 Drew. 275 ; 6 W. R. 589.

Legacy to be paid "when or if" Legatee attained Twenty-one.]—A legacy to be paid to the legatee "when or if" he attained twenty-one :—Held, to be vested at the death of the testator, and not to be contingent upon the legatee attaining twenty-one. Lister v. Bradley, 1 Hare, 10 ; 11 L. J., Ch. 49 ; 5 Jur. 1034.

Residuary bequest to James, John, David, and Frances, equally, to be paid, assigned, &c., at their respective ages of twenty-one ; and if Frances should marry, the executors should settle at least one-third of her income on her for life, with remainder to her children. Frances attained twenty-one unmarried :—Held, that she took a vested interest in the whole share absolutely at twenty-one, she not having married before that time. Lumsden v. Shaw, 1 L. J., Ch. 115.

"Pay and Divide"—"As and When"—Maintenance.]—A bequest to pay and divide among children "as and when" they shall attain twenty-one, is not to be treated as equivalent to a gift to such of the children as shall attain twenty-one. There is a tendency in the decisions to construe such a gift as vested. A gift "to pay and divide among children as and when they should attain twenty-one," with a maintenance clause during the minority :—Held, to be vested. Pearman v. Pearman, 33 Beav. 394.

Gift to Children after a Life Interest.]—Under a pecuniary bequest in trust for a niece for life, with remainder in trust for all her children, equally, the shares of sons to be paid at twenty-one, and of daughters at twenty-one or marriage, with executory trusts over in case any of the children should die before they should become entitled, without lawful issue :—Held, that the children were entitled to the income of their shares before attaining twenty-one. Williams v. Clark, 4 De G. & Sm. 472.

Absolute Gift — Condition Subsequent — Repugnancy.]—A testator gave all his property real and personal to trustees for division among his children, their shares to be paid when they respectively attained twenty-eight. The will further contained a clause cutting down the children's share to 1,000*l.* each, in the case of sons, and to 500*l.*, in the case of daughters, if any of them should embrace a religious life :—Held (following Saunders v. Vautier, Cr. & Ph. 240), that there was an absolute gift to the children vesting on the testator's death, and the provision as to payment at twenty-eight was nugatory ; and that the clause as to embracing a religious life was a condition repugnant to the former gift, and must be disregarded. Thompson, In re, Griffith v. Thompson, 44 W. R. 582.

—— Maintenance.]—The testator devised his real and personal estate to trustees to convert and invest, and pay the income to his daughter for life, and after her decease to divide the fund among "all her children then living," provided all such children may then have attained twenty-one ; if not, he directed the fund to be placed out at interest, and the interest, &c., to be applied for the maintenance and bringing up of all such children, until the youngest should attain twenty-one, when the fund was to be divided amongst such children as should be then living and the issue of such of them as should be dead, the issue to take their parents' share :—Held, that a child who survived the mother and attained twenty-one, but died before the youngest attained twenty-one, took an absolute vested interest. Brocklebank v. Johnson, 20 Beav. 205 ; 24 L. J., Ch. 505 ; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 318 ; 3 W. R. 341,

A testator appoints a fund, after the death of his wife, to his son, to be paid to him at her decease, if he shall then have attained twenty-one ; and in case his son dies under twenty-one, and after the wife, he gives the fund to his brother ; and in case the wife should outlive both the son and the brother, he gives it to the brother's daughters then living. The son attained twenty-one, and died in the lifetime of the wife, who survived both the son and the brother ; there were daughters of the brother then living :—Held, that the representatives of the son, and not the daughters of the brother, are entitled to the fund. Clutterbuck v. Edwards, 2 Russ. & M. 577.

Upon a special case as to the construction of a will, legacies thereby bequeathed were held to be vested in the legatees, as the words of the bequest, importing a contingency, referred only to the time of payment of the legacies ; and as the legatees were entitled to maintenance out of the legacies, they were directed to be invested, and the interest applied accordingly. Moore v. Moore, 5 L. T. 198 ; 9 W. R. 916.

A testator having grandchildren, procured their father to give up his profession and reside near him, and supported them. By will he left them 5,000*l.* each, to be invested and set apart, and payable as they attained twenty-five, with a proviso that if they intermarried with particular families their legacies should be void ; and if they did not do so before actual payment, they should covenant by deed to refund if they did so. The estate was deficient, and the father was unable to maintain the legatees without borrowing money and selling his own property. On a petition by one of the legatees for past maintenance :—Held, that the testator put himself in loco parentis ; that the legacies were vested subject to be divested (the condition being subsequent), and the father entitled to past maintenance to the extent of money borrowed and due, and property sold for the special purpose. Parsons v. Peters, 13 W. R. 214.

Contingency — Death Unmarried and without Issue.]—A testator gives all his property to trustees in trust to sell, and out of the proceeds to pay legacies, and as to the residue directs that they shall divide the income equally between his two daughters, until one should marry ; and then upon trust to pay the interest of 3,000*l.* to such as should first marry for her separate use, without power of anticipation, with a gift over to the husband and children, and a like gift to the other daughter's husband and children. There was then a proviso that if either daughter should die in the lifetime fo the other unmarried and without issue, the interest of an additional sum of 2,000*l.* should be paid to the survivor for life, and, subject to the sums aforesaid, in trust to pay 500*l.* to J., and 500*l.* to E. J. and E. both died in the lifetime of the two daughters, one of whom then also died unmarried, leaving all her property to her sister, who was still unmarried also. On the question what interest the surviving daughter took, and whether the legacies of 500*l.* and 500*l.* to J. and

E. were vested or contingent:—Held, that the surviving daughter took one moiety of the residue only, and that the legacies were vested legacies. Hill v. Hill, 8 W. R. 536.

—— Death before Tenant for Life.]—A testator devised his real and personal estate in trust for his wife for life, and after her decease, he devised a real estate to his brother for life, with remainder to his children. He proceeded thus: "And as the residue of my estate and effects not hereinbefore disposed of, or which may remain after satisfying the trusts of this my will, I give the same to my brother (if then living), his heirs, &c. But in case my brother shall then be dead, then in such case I give the residue of my estate and effects to his children." The brother died in the lifetime of the widow:—Held, that the residue vested in him at the testator's death. Birds v. Askey, 24 Beav. 615.

—— Survivorship.]—A testator bequeathed a legacy of 300*l.* to A. to be paid to him, his executors, &c., within twelve months after the death of B., "in case B. shall happen to survive my wife":—Held, that the latter words were to be construed with reference only to the time of payment, and that they did not make void the legacy, B. having died in the lifetime of the testator's wife. Massey v. Hudson, 2 Mer. 130; 16 R. R. 158.

Condition Precedent—Attainment of Twenty-five.]—Testator bequeathed his residuary estate to trustees, in trust to pay the income of one-third part to his daughter Sarah, for life, and upon her death, to stand possessed of that third in trust for her child or children, and to be transferred to them on their attaining twenty-five; but in case his daughter should have but one child her surviving, then the whole of the one-third part to go to such only child, on his attaining twenty-five, and be transmissible to his executors, and in case his daughter should leave no child her surviving, or in case she should leave a child who should not attain twenty-five, then over:—Held, that the children were not intended to take vested interests until they attained twenty-five, and that, therefore, the bequest to them was void for remoteness. Judd v. Judd, 3 Sim. 525; 8 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 119; 30 R. R. 203. And see S. C., nom. Hunter v. Judd, 4 Sim. 455, on a further hearing and new bill filed.

—— Attainment of Twenty-one.]—A testator bequeathed his residuary estate to trustees, upon trust to assign the same to and amongst all such children of M. as should be living at his decease; to be equally divided among them, if more than one, when they should attain the age of twenty-one, and if there should be but one child who should attain that age, then the whole to such one:—Held, that the attainment of the age of twenty-one was a condition precedent, and that no child who did not attain that age could take. Merry v. Merry, 17 W. R. 985.

Words of Division preceding Words of Gift.]—A testator, by his will, directed the investment of 2,000*l.*, and the payment of the interest to his daughter for life, and from and after her death declared that the trustees should hold the fund upon trust, to pay the same, or assign the securities whereon the same might be then placed or invested, unto, between and amongst all and every the child and children of his said daughter, as and when they should severally attain the respective age of twenty-one years, in equal shares and proportions, share and share alike, "to whom I give and bequeath the same accordingly":—Held, that these words contained a direct gift, independently of the direction to pay, the words "to whom" referring to all and every the child and children of the testator's daughter; and consequently that a child of the testator's daughter, dying under twenty-one, took a vested interest in the legacy. Bartholomew's Trust, In re, 1 Mac. & G. 354; 1 Hall & Tw. 565; 19 L. J., Ch. 237; 14 Jur. 181. Affirming 16 Sim. 585.

d. Gift at a Future Time Without Direction as to Payment.

In General.]—Distinction between a legacy given at a future time, and a legacy, given, to be paid at a future time: the latter vested; and payment only postponed: the time being annexed, not to the legacy, but to the payment only. Hixon v. Oliver, 13 Ves. 113; 9 R. R. 148.

Vesting of a legacy postponed to the time of payment, and a limitation over in nature of a cross remainder, implied from the general intention, reversing a decree that it vested at twenty-one. Mackell v. Winter, 3 Ves. 536. See 5 R. R. 32, n.

The word "when" in a will, alone and unqualified, is conditional, but it may be controlled by expressions, &c. Hanson v. Graham, 6 Ves. 239; 5 R. R. 277.

Where a time is annexed to legacy, and not to the payment, and legatee dies before that time, it is lapsed. Smell v. Dee, 2 Salk. 415.

Legacy at Twenty-one.]—The distinction between a legacy given at twenty-one and payable at twenty-one is a positive rule of the ecclesiastical court, adopted as to personal legacies, but not as to real estate; and not approved, or to be extended. Mackell v. Winter, supra.

Where a legacy is given generally at twenty-one or marriage, the vesting and time of payment are the same. Heath v. Perry, 3 Atk. 102.

Legacy to A. at twenty-one, and if he die before twenty-one to B. B. dies, then A. dies before twenty-one; the administrator of B. takes. Anon., 2 Vent. 347.

A testator gave the dividends on stock to H. for her life, and after her decease the principal to her children on their attaining twenty-one. H. had one child, who died before attaining twenty-one:—Held, that the child did not take a vested interest in the principal. Wrangham's Trust, In re, 1 Dr. & Sm. 358; 30 L. J., Ch. 258; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 15; 3 L. T. 722; 9 W. R. 156.

A testatrix gave the rents of certain leaseholds to J. R. and C. R. She then gave to T. J. R. 100*l.* bank stock when he attained twenty-one, but in case of his death to J. R. On the question what was the period of division:—Held, that the contingency was T. J. R.'s dying under twenty-one. Bignall or Bignell v. Rose, 24 L. J., Ch. 27; 3 W. R. 77.

Marriage with Consent.]—Devise of 1,500*l.* to a granddaughter to be at her own disposal, if she married with consent of her father and mother or trustees, and not otherwise. She dies at thirteen, intestate and unmarried: it is not vested nor transmissible. Elton v. Elton, 1 Ves. Sen. 4; 3 Atk. 504.

Accumulation of Rents — Legacies Given at Successive Periods.]—Testator directed the rents of his estates to be accumulated for five years: "at the end of which time I leave as follows: to H. G. 200*l.*; and to W. B., W. C., E. M., or as many as are living, 100*l.* each: and to M. N., S. H., S. S., or as many as are then living, 50*l.* each: and the same sum to be given at the expiration of ten years from the time of my death, and ditto at the end of fifteen and twenty years from my death." Two of the legatees died between the end of the tenth and fifteenth years after the testator's death, having received the payments which became due to them at the end of the fifth and tenth years:—Held, that the rights of the legatees named in the will, to receive the payments, were contingent on their surviving the times of payment, and, consequently, that the executors of the then deceased legatees could not claim any payment at the end of the fifteenth year. Bruce v. Charlton, 13 Sim. 65; 6 Jur. 594. Affirmed, 13 L. J., Ch. 97.

Real and personal estate given to trustees, upon trust to pay the income to the testator's wife for her life, and within or at the expiration of ten years from the death of the survivor of himself and his wife, to sell and convert the same into money, and out of the income to pay annuities to several persons and classes of persons for the said term of ten years, with pecuniary legacies to the same persons and classes, and also to other persons, at the expiration of that time, and annuities to other persons for the lives of the annuitants, and specific legacies to others. The residue was then given to all and every the several legatees before named (with exceptions) ratably and in proportion to the amount of their respective legacies. The wife survived the testator:—Held, that "the legatees before named" should be construed to be the legatees taking benefits out of the fund which fell in at the wife's death, and the "legacies" such legacies as remained to be satisfied at the expiration of the ten years; that annuitants for life, not having other legacies, were legatees of shares in the residue; that the specific legatees, including one taking a bequest of a watch, chain, and seals, were entitled to share in the residue according to the value of their respective legacies; that annuitants, who survived the testator and died before the expiration of the ten years, when their pecuniary legacies were payable, took vested interests in such annuities and legacies; that a class described as "the children" of B., but not otherwise named, came within the description of "legatees before named"; that the widow of the testator did not take under the residuary gift; that the annuities which ceased at the expiration of the ten years were not legacies in respect of which the annuitants took any share in the residue. Bromley v. Wright, 7 Hare, 334.

e. No Gift but in the Direction to Pay and Divide.

i. In General.

On attaining Twenty-one.]—There is no absolute rule that in a case where there is no bequest distinct from the direction to pay, the vesting is postponed till the time of payment, but the construction will depend upon the nature of the event or contingency upon which the payment is to be made, as importing or not importing a condition. Accordingly, where a residue of real and personal estate was given to trustees to sell, get in, and divide among the testator's children, so soon as the youngest should attain twenty-one, and in case of the death of any leaving lawful issue, such issue to take the parent's share: it was held that the share of one of the children who attained twenty-one, and then died without issue before the youngest had attained that age, was vested and passed to his representatives. Leeming v. Sherratt, 2 Hare, 14; 11 L. J., Ch. 423; 6 Jur. 663.

Semble, no child, who did not attain twenty-one, was intended to take any interest in the residue. Ib.

Testator bequeathed to his wife the use of his furniture, &c., which he desired might be distributed amongst his children when the youngest attained twenty-one, at her and his executors' discretion; such part to be reserved for her use as might be deemed reasonable, and at her death to be distributed as above directed:—Held, that those children who died before the youngest attained the age of twenty-one did not take vested interests. Ford v. Rawlins, 1 Sim. & S. 328; 1 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 170; 24 R. R. 188.

Testator devised his real estate to trustees, with power to "let," until all his nephews and nieces should attain twenty-one. And after his youngest nephew or niece should be of age, then he directed his estates to be sold, and the produce to go among all his nephews and nieces, except two by name. He charged his rents with an annuity to A., and with payment of bond debts, but did not otherwise dispose of them:—Held, that the interests of the nephews and nieces vested in all who attained twenty-one, whether dying before or surviving the period directed for sale. Parker v. Sowerby, 1 Drew. 488; 1 Eq. R. 217; 22 L. J., Ch. 942; 17 Jur. 752; 1 W. R. 404.

Direction to pay at Twenty-one or Marriage.]—On the particular wording of a will the court thought it doubtful whether personal estate did not vest immediately in a legatee, though the gift was only in the direction to pay at twenty-one or marriage, and there was no disposition of the income during minority. Lang v. Pugh, 1 Y. & C. C. C. 718; 6 Jur. 939.

Bequest to trustees, in trust to pay, assign, and transfer, "unto and between the children of A., when and as they should respectively attain twenty-one, or be married with the lawful consent of parents or guardians," with maintenance in the meantime. A child died under twenty-one, having married without consent:—Held, that her representative took no share in the property. Gardiner v. Slater, 25 Beav. 509.

Testatrix gave a share of residue upon trust for her son for life, and after his death "upon trust to transfer and pay the capital of the said trust funds unto and amongst the child, if only one, or both or all the children, if more than one, of" her said son in manner hereinafter mentioned. Then followed a direction making the gift to the son void if he aliened or encumbered it, and giving over the dividends to the parties entitled in remainder; then followed another direction of some length, and then a declaration that the shares should be payable at twenty-one or marriage :—Held, the context of the will not repelling, but rather supporting, that construction, that this was not a substantive gift, with a simple direction to pay, but one general direction to pay at twenty-one or marriage, and the interests of the son's children were not vested. Shum v. Hobbs, 3 Drew. 93 ; 24 L. J., Ch. 377 ; 3 W. R. 221.

Bequest of leaseholds, upon trust to assign unto all the children of A. B. on their respectively attaining twenty-one, and if one child, to assign to such child (omitting on attaining twenty-one). An only child, who died an infant, was held to take a vested interest. Walker v. Mower, 16 Beav. 365.

On attaining Twenty-five.] — Testator gave certain real and personal property upon trust to pay, apply and transfer the same unto and amongst all and every the brothers and sisters of R., share and share alike, upon his, her, or their attaining twenty-five if a brother or brothers, and if a sister or sisters, at such age or marriage with consent; and the trustees were authorised to apply the rents, profits, and interest, or so much as they should think fit, for their maintenance in the meantime : — Held, that the gift was only to include children who should attain twenty-five. Leake v. Robinson, 2 Mer. 363 ; 16 R. R. 168.

A testator, after devising and bequeathing all his real and personal estates to trustees, on trust from time to time to receive the rents and profits, and therewith to pay various legacies and annuities, directed that they should invest the surplus rents and profits at interest, and suffer the same to accumulate ; and he declared that they should stand seised of his said trust estate and the accumulations, upon trust that, when and as soon as any son of either of his nephews A. and B. should have attained the age of twenty-five years, a valuation of his said trust estate should be made, and that the same should then be divided into as many equal lots as there should be sons of his said nephews then living, and thenceforth separate accounts should be kept of the respective portions ; and that each of his said nephews' sons, when and as they should respectively arrive at the age of twenty-five years, should choose one of such portions as the share to be allotted to him and his children ; and that thenceforth the said portion or share should be held by trustees, upon trust for the person so selecting the same for his life, and after his decease upon trust as to one equal moiety for his eldest son and his heirs, executors, &c. ; and as to the other moiety for the rest of his children and their heirs, executors, &c., in equal proportions, and if but one child both moieties for such child absolutely ; but if any or either of his said nephews' sons should die under their respective ages of twenty-five years, or having attained that age should afterwards die without leaving issue, the share or shares intended for the person or persons so dying should go to the others and other of the said nephews' sons ; and if all but one should die without leaving issue, the trustees should stand seised and possessed of the whole trust estate, in trust for such one surviving nephew's son for his life, and for his children and child as aforesaid ; but if all the testator's said nephews' sons should depart this life without leaving issue, then upon trust for such person as should at that time be the testator's heir. At the time of the testator's death A. and B. had several sons living, and B. had another son born afterwards :—Held, upon the construction of the will, that the trusts for accumulation and division of the property comprised all the sons of the nephews who should be living when the first of them should attain twenty-five ; and as the son who should first attain that age might not be born until after the testator's death, the gifts were too remote, and therefore void ; and the testator's real estates upon his death became vested in his heir. Boughton v. Boughton, 1 H. L. Cas. 406. Affirming with a variation 1 Coll. 26 ; 8 Jur. 329.

Direction that Property should "Devolve."] —A testator directed his property to be settled upon his daughter H., in such manner that, in case of her death, it should devolve upon her children, if she had any, and, if she should not have any, then that she should bequeath it to any person she might think fit : the word "devolve" imports transmission to children living at the death of the mother, and, upon the death of the mother, her husband, as representative of a deceased child, took no interest under the will. Parr v. Parr, 1 Myl. & K. 647 ; 2 L. J., Ch. 167.

ii. Where Gift Preceded by a Life Interest.

Gift not Vested.]—When the only gift to a class consisted of a direction to divide and pay, upon the death of the tenant for life :—Held, upon the context, that those only took who survived such tenant for life. Beck v. Burn, 7 Beav. 492 ; 13 L. J., Ch. 319 ; 8 Jur. 348.

Where the testator made no direct gift to a class of children, but after the death of his wife, the tenant for life, directed his executors to sell and "divide and equally pay" the produce amongst the class of children, and the issue of such children as should die in the lifetime of the wife :—Held, to apply only to such children as were living at the time of the distribution, and that the class to take consisted of such children or issue as were living at the death of the wife, and the issue of any who died in her lifetime leaving issue living at her death. Ib.

—— Attaining Twenty-one.] — Bequest in trust for A. for life, and after his death in trust to transfer the whole to A.'s children on the day of their attaining twenty-one, in such shares as A. should by deed or will appoint, and in default of appointment in the manner therein mentioned ;—Held, that the time of payment was annexed to the gift, and that A. could not, by the exercise of his power, accelerate the vesting. Murray v. Tancred, 10 Sim. 465.

Where there is a gift to A. for life, and after her death the money to be equally divided amongst her children as they attain twenty-one, the gift over to the children is contingent. Allan v. Kelly, 7 W. R. 139.

Testator bequeathed to his daughter Eliza 2,000*l.* for life, the principal to be equally divided amongst her children, should they have attained twenty-one : and, to the two children of his late daughter Jemima 1,000*l.* each, to be paid on their attaining twenty-one :—Held, that the legacies to the children were contingent on their attaining twenty-one, and that they were not entitled to interest in the meantime. Young v. Macintosh, 13 Sim. 445 ; 7 Jur. 383.

—— Twenty-one or Marriage.] — Testator bequeathed his residuary estate to trustees in trust to pay the interest to his niece for life, and directed that, after her death, the trustees should pay, apply, transfer and dispose of the residue amongst her children, equally to be divided between them, share and share alike, to be paid to sons at twenty-one, and to daughters at that age or on their marriage: and he empowered the trustees after his niece's decease or in her lifetime with her consent, to raise, pay, and apply, for the preferment and advancement of any of her children, all or any part of their presumptive portions under the trusts aforesaid:—Held, that there was no gift to the children except in the direction to pay to them, and, therefore, their portions did not vest in them until such of them as were sons, attained twenty-one, and such of them as were daughters, either attained that age or married. Chevaux v. Aislabie, 13 Sim. 71.

L. gave 4,000*l.* bank stock to trustees, in trust, to pay the dividends to his daughter E. for life; and after her death he directed the principal to be divided equally between her children at their ages of twenty-one or marriage; but if they should die before, then to his son L.; the daughter had two children who both attained twenty-one, but one of them died in her lifetime:—Held, that this legacy did not vest absolutely in the children of E. on their attaining twenty-one, but only in such of them as should be living at the time of her death. Randall v. Metcalfe, 3 Bro. P. C. 318.

A testator bequeaths certain capital sums to trustees, upon trust to pay the interest to W. B. for his life, and after his decease, upon trust to pay, transfer, and assign the capital sums, and all arrears of interest, to the children, if more than one, of the body of the said W. B., lawfully to be begotten, share and share alike; and in case of only one child, to pay, transfer, and assign the same to such one child, the share and shares of such of the said children, if more than one, as shall be a son or sons, at his and their age, or respective ages of twenty-one years; and to such of them as shall be a daughter or daughters, at her or their age, or respective ages, of twenty-one years, or day or respective days of marriage, which shall first happen next after the decease of the said W. B.:—Held, that the children of W. B. did not take vested interests till the time when they were entitled respectively to payment arrived. Bentinck v. Portland, 4 L. J. (o.s.), Ch. 13; 27 R. R. 251.

—— Annuity for Son.]—Devise to testator's wife for life, and from and after her decease, to trustee on trust to sell, and, among other bequests to lay out 500*l.* in annuity for life of a son;—Held, a vested interest in son, if surviving the testator. Bayley v. Bishop, 9 Ves. 6; 7 R. R. 132.

Gift Void for Remoteness.]—A testatrix appointed a trust fund to two trustees, in trust to pay the dividends to A. for life, and after his decease she gave the dividends to two others, B. and C., for life; and after the decease of the survivor, she gave, bequeathed, willed, and directed the principal to be divided into two parts, and one of them to be "transferred or paid" to the children of those two persons respectively at the age of twenty-five years;—Held, that the gift to the children was void for remoteness. Chance v. Chance, 16 Beav. 572.

Legacy Vested—In General.]—Devise of personal estate to wife for life, several legacies after her death, residue at her decease to be divided between A., B., C., and D.; B. and C. die in life of wife:—Held, to take vested interests. Corbett v. Palmer, 2 Eq. Cas. Abr. 548.

Testator directed his executors to purchase out of his residuary estate a certain sum of stock, etc., to pay the dividends to his wife for her life, and after her death to divide the capital between such of his three daughters as should be then living. Provided that if any one of them should be then dead, or should afterwards die before her share should become payable or divisible, leaving a child or children, that share should go to such child or children. The testator's wife died in his lifetime; one of the daughters died three months after the testator:—Held, nevertheless, that she had a vested interest in one of the shares. Collins v. Macpherson, 2 Sim. 87; 29 R. R. 65.

Residue of testator's estate directed to be invested in Government securities, and the interest paid to his wife; and after her death to be sold, and the money thereby arising to be divided amongst his daughters and grandchildren:—Held, that the share of a daughter dying in the lifetime of the wife was vested. Hatch v. Mills, 1 Eden, 342.

Bequest of all testator's estate to A., to pay the income to testator's mother for life, and after her decease, I then give to A., etc., the residue to B. with power to dispose of it by will; the legacy to A. vested immediately, and was transmissible. Benyon v. Maddison, 2 Bro. C. C. 75.

Devise of the residue of personal estate to the wife for life, if she die without issue living at her death, to testator's two brothers, or if one of them shall be dead, to the survivor. They both died in the life of the wife. The legacy was vested in both as joint tenants, and therefore goes to the representative of the survivor. Barnes v. Allen, 1 Bro. C. C. 181.

Legacy on death of tenant for life does not lapse by death of legatee before that period. Goodwin v. Munday, Dick. 551.

Testator gave a copyhold estate to trustees for his wife, until the leases to which it was subject expired, and directed that then it should be sold, and the proceeds invested for the benefit of his children; but if his wife should die before the leases expired, that it should be immediately sold, and the proceeds disposed of as before. The wife survived the children, but died before the leases expired. The surviving trustee, who claimed the estate for his own benefit, was decreed to surrender it to the administrator of the children, but without prejudice to the rights of the customary heirs of either the testator or the children, if any such heirs were in existence. Burton v. Hodsoll, 2 Sim. 24.

Testator gave the use of 800*l.* to his wife for life, and, after her decease, made a disposition of parts of the principal; he then gave several other devises, and afterwards to J. 100*l.*; J. died, leaving a widow:—Held, that his legacy was vested and transmissible. Monkhouse v. Holme, 1 Bro. C. C. 298.

Devise of real and personal estate to trustees, to pay, etc., to testator's wife for life, then to pay a legacy to his daughter; this is a vested legacy in the daughter, and transmissible. Molesworth v. Molesworth, 4 Bro. C. C. 408.

Testator "desires" J. "to leave" D. 500*l.* at her death, out of money bequeathed her;—Held, to amount to a legacy from the original testator, and not to lapse by D.'s death in J.'s lifetime, he having survived the testator. Medlicott v. Bowes, 1 Ves. sen. 207.

Legacy at the decease of a person entitled to the fund out of which it is given, vested immediately, and payment only postponed. Blamire v. Geldart, 16 Ves. 314.

Legacy to A. for life, and to her children at her decease, vested in all the children as they come in esse; but upon the circumstances of this case it vested in those living at the death of the mother only. Spencer v. Bullock, 2 Ves. sen. 687.

—— Capital to be Divided.]—Trust to pay the dividends of stock to the testatrix's niece for life, and after her death to divide the capital among the brothers and sisters of the testatrix; and in like manner to the survivor or survivors of them; the shares of those who died in the life of the niece passed to their representatives. Ib. And see Chaffers v. Abell, 3 Jur. 578.

Testator gave annuities to three of his relations, and directed that, if the annuities were paid by the interest of money in the stocks, at the death of the different parties, the principal should be divided between the children of the deceased. One of the annuitants had five children living at the testator's death; but only one of them survived the annuitant:—Held, that the capital of the stock which had been provided to answer the annuity, did not vest in the surviving child, on the annuitant's death; but vested, on the testator's death, in all the children then living, as tenants in common. Watson v. Watson, 11 Sim. 73.

Testatrix, by her will, gave to each of her four nieces (naming them) a legacy of 50*l.*, and, after bequeathing other legacies, gave the residue of her property to her three sisters, and, after their deaths, to be divided between her nieces abovementioned:—Held, that the nieces of the testatrix took a vested interest in the residue immediately upon her death, and that one-fourth of such residue belonged to the husband and personal representative of one of the four nieces, who, after surviving the testatrix, had died in the lifetime of the tenant for life. Cochrane v. Wiltshire, 16 L. J., Ch. 366; 11 Jur. 426.

Testator directed the dividends of his residue to be paid to his three children, A., B., and C., in certain shares, and that, after the decease of any one or two of them until the decease of the survivor, the shares of the deceased parents should go to their respective children; and that, after the decease of his surviving child, the capital of the residue should be divided amongst the children of his said children, per capita. A. died first, B. next, and C. last. Both A. and C. left children, some or whom were living at C.'s death. B. had children, but they all died in her lifetime:—Held, nevertheless, that they took vested transmissible interests in the dividends of B.'s share of the residue, which accrued between B.'s and C.'s deaths. Homer or Horner v. Gould, 1 Sim. (N.S.) 541; 20 L. J., Ch. 657; 15 Jur. 457.

Bequest of residue to A. for life, and after her decease, a gift of 3,000*l.* each to B. and C. (granddaughters), for their absolute use; and if either of them should be dead at the decease of A., her 3,000*l.* was to go to the granddaughter who should then be living; but in case such granddaughter should have left children, they were to take her legacy. B. died first, leaving children; C. then died without issue, leaving A. surviving. On the death of A.:—Held, that C.'s legacy was vested and passed to her representatives, Bright's Trusts, In re, 21 Beav. 67; 3 W. R, 544.

C., in 1854, after directing that the whole of his estate should be converted, and the interest paid to his wife for life, directed that 1,500*l.* should be set apart, and the interest paid to his daughter A. for life, and that after her death the capital should be divided amongst her children; and in case she should have no child or children, then he directed that the same should be applied for the benefit of his son M. and his children in like manner. The testator then directed that a like sum should be set apart for the benefit of M. for life, and that the capital should after his death be divided amongst his children; and in case he should have no child, the same was to be applied for the benefit of A. and her children in the same manner as the bequest to her was then limited; and in case both M. and A. died without leaving issue surviving, he desired that 1,500*l.* should be divided amongst his next of kin, and the other amongst his wife's next of kin. A. married B., by whom she had one child only, who died an infant in her lifetime. A. died, leaving her husband and her brother M. surviving:—Held, that the child of A. took a vested interest in the 1,500*l.*, and that B. was entitled to it as her legal personal representative. Whyte v. Collins, 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1281; 3 L. T. 263.

A testator bequeathed to R. S. 1,000*l.*, to be placed out on real security, and the interest to be paid to her during her life; and he directed that at her death the principal should be called in and distributed equally among her children, and that if any children were living, from son or daughter being dead, such child or children should take the share their parent would have been entitled to if living:—Held, that the representatives of such children of R. S. as survived the testator and died without issue in the lifetime of R. S., were entitled to shares. Strother v. Dutton, 1 De G. & J. 675.

—— Death or Marriage of Tenant for Life.]—Residuary gift upon trust for the testator's wife for life, if she should so long continue his widow; and from and after her death or marriage, upon trust to pay and divide the whole thereof equally amongst all and every the testator's nephews and nieces, share and share alike, within six months after they should become entitled thereto;—Held, that the residuary share of one who died in the lifetime of the widow passed to his representatives. Packham v. Gregory, 4 Hare, 396; 14 L. J., Ch. 191; 9 Jur. 175.

A testator gave the interest of money in the funds to his wife during her life, after which his daughter Maria, if unmarried, was to receive the same until her death or marriage, when the principal was to be divided between his eight sons and daughters, including his daughter Maria, or amongst such of them as should be living at the death of Maria. The testator also gave the children power to take possession of their respective shares, upon giving security for the payment of interest to the widow for her life. Maria married during the testator's life, and died after the widow. One son, Charles, died after the testator, but before the widow:—Held, that the representatives of Charles were entitled to one-eighth part of the property. Baynes v. Prevost, 13 L. J., Ch. 377.

—— "Pay and Transfer."]—A bequest of residue to trustees on the trusts after-mentioned, followed, first, by a trust to provide for annuities, then by a trust to pay interest to the legatees for life, and then a trust to "pay and transfer" the capital to the children of the tenants for life, gives those children an interest which vests immediately on the testator's death. Salmon v. Green, 11 Beav. 453 ; 18 L. J., Ch. 166 ; 13 Jur. 272, 617.

The use of such words as "pay and transfer" as the only words of gift in a deferred bequest, does not make such bequest contingent ; the true criterion is, what was the reason for the postponement. If it was the position of the fund, as in a gift to one for life, and after his death to others, the bequest in remainder vests at once ; but if it was the position of the legatee, as where the gift is by a direction to pay the fund to the legatee when he shall attain twenty-one, it is contingent. Bennett's Trust, In re, 3 K. & J. 286.

A bequest of personalty to trustees upon trust to pay the interest thereof to the testator's daughters A. and B. for their lives and the life of the survivor, and upon the decease of the survivor to pay and transfer the capital equally among all the testator's children, and the issue, if any, of A. and B., and of any other deceased child, in such manner that such issue might be entitled to such share or shares as his or their deceased parent or parents respectively, if living (A. and B. excepted), would have been entitled to. A. and B. died without leaving issue :—Held, first, that the bequest in remainder vested at the testator's death. Ib.

Held, secondly, that the whole fund belonged to the testator's children other than A. and B., and to the children living at the death of such as had died leaving children. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that the shares of such as had died without leaving children belonged to their representatives. Ib.

—— "Convey, Transfer and Assure."]—Bequest of 2,000*l.* in trust for A.'s life, and from and after her decease "to convey, transfer, and assure" it unto all and every the child and children of A. :—Held, that A.'s children took vested interests at their births. M'Lachlan v. Taitt, 28 Beav. 407. Affirmed on another point, 2 De G. F. & J., 449 ; 30 L. J., Ch. 276 ; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1269 ; 3 L. T. 492 ; 9 W. R. 152.

Bequest of residue of personal estate, after a life interest, to the use of all and every the children of testator's daughter, equally to be transferred, delivered, and paid to them severally, when by law able to receive and give discharges :—Held, to be vested in each child on coming into being ; and transmissible, though subject to be varied by the birth of others. Ewel v. Wallace, 2 Ves. sen. 118. Affirmed, Id. 318.

—— Pay and Divide.]—A testator, by his will, gave real property to trustees, upon certain trusts during the lives of his two sons W. and T. and the life of the survivor, and from and after the decease of the survivor upon trust to sell and "to pay and divide the money arising thereupon unto and amongst all and every the child and children of W. and T., and the issue of such of them as should be then dead, share and share alike, such issue taking only the part or share of his, her, or their deceased parent" ;—Held, that two children of W. and T., who were living at the testator's death, but died without issue before the period of distribution, had vested shares in the proceeds of sale, which passed to their representatives. Wood, In re, Moore v. Bailey, 43 L. T. 730 ; 29 W. R. 171.

Bequest in trust for testator's niece for life, with remainder in trust to pay and divide "unto and amongst the children of my said niece in equal shares and proportions" :—Held, that all the children who survived the testator took vested interests in the fund. Wilson's Trusts, In re, 14 Jur. 263.

—— Attainment of Twenty-one.] — Where there is a gift of dividends, to one for life, and after his death the whole principal to be paid and divided between and among his children, in equal shares, on their respectively attaining the age of twenty-one years, those only who attain twenty-one take. Fitzwilliams v. Long, 6 W. R. 819.

Trust by will, subject to an interest for life, to pay and transfer to the testator's nephew and nieces, equally at twenty-one ; with survivorship in case any should die before his or their shares should become payable ; and a limitation over in case all should die, &c. Vested interest at the age of twenty-one, before the death of the tenant for life. Hallifax v. Wilson, 16 Ves. 171 ; 10 R. R. 146.

A testator after directing payment of his debts, etc., gave specific legacies and an annuity to his wife, during the time she should remain his widow, and charged the same on his real and personal estate. He then made specific devises, and gave the residue of his property to his trustees to sell, and pay, and divide the proceeds among his children ; as to the specified devises bringing those into hotch-pot, subject to the annuity to his wife, share and share alike, provided that none of the children should enter into the possession or enjoyment of his property until his wife died or married again, or his youngest son attained twenty-one. The testator had ten children ; four died infants in his lifetime, and one died after the youngest attained twenty-one :—Held, that the shares were vested of all that attained twenty-one, and were payable after providing for the annuity, the income from that time, and the capital when the youngest attained twenty-one. Fawthorpe v. Craven, 3 W. R. 275.

Bequest of a sum of stock to be divided, after the death of an annuitant, between all the children of A. B. as they should attain his or her age of twenty-one years :—Held, that the fund was to go to such of the children of A. B. as were living, when the first attained twenty-one, and who had attained, or who should attain, twenty-one. Locke v. Lamb, L. R. 4 Eq. 372 ; 16 L. T. 616 ; 15 W. R. 1016.

A., by his will, gave personal estate to trustees, on trust for B. for life, and after her death to pay and divide the fund unto and equally between and among all and every the child and children of B., on his or her attaining twenty-one, and he declared that his mind and will was, that if any or either of his grandchildren should die during the life of B., leaving issue them surviving, then that such issue should be entitled to his, her, or their respective deceased parents' share :—Held, that all the children of B. took vested interests, whether they attained twenty-one or not. Allen, In re, 10 L. T. 812.

A testator directed the trustees of his will, upon the decease of A., to whom he had given a life estate, to convey, pay, assign, transfer, and make over the residue of his realty and personalty unto and amongst all and every the child and children of A. as and when they should severally and respectively attain their several and respective age and ages of twenty-one years, to and for their own absolute use and benefit, as tenants in common; if but one child, to such only child, his or her heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns, according to the nature and quality of such estates, and to whom he gave the same accordingly:—Held, that the children of A. on their respective births took an interest vested and not contingent. King v. Isaacson, 2 Sm. & G. 371; 22 L. J., Ch. 455; 17 Jur. 434; 1 W. R. 209.

Where there is a doubt the court inclines to the construction that a gift by will vests on the testator's death. Ib.

S. L. directed that a moiety of the residue of his property should be divided between J. H. and four others in equal shares; but as to the share of J. H., he desired that the same should be retained in the hands of his executors, upon trust to invest the same, and to pay the proceeds to J. H. for life; and from and after his decease, to pay, assign, and transfer the said moneys, or the stocks, etc., upon which the same should be invested, unto all the children of J. H. equally between them, part and share alike, at their respective ages of twenty-one years; and if there should be but one such child, then wholly to such one child at his or her age of twenty-one; and in case any one or more of the children should die under twenty-one leaving lawful issue, then such issue should be entitled to the share or shares to which his, her, or their father or mother would have been entitled:—Held, that the shares of the children of J. H. were vested on their attaining twenty-one, and not contingent on the event of their surviving their father. Marshall v. Bentley, 1 Jur. (N.S.) 786; 3 W. R. 566.

Testator gave all his real and personal estate, after payments of debts and legacies, to his wife for life, and directed that, at the end of twelve months after her death, 1,000*l.* should be laid out in trust for his daughter for life, and, after her decease to divide the capital amongst her children, when they should attain twenty-one. One of the children attained twenty-one and died in the lifetime of testator's widow:—Held, that his representatives were entitled to a share of the 1,000*l.* Cousins v. Schroder, 4 Sim. 23.

A testator bequeathed the residue of his personal estate to trustees, upon trust to pay three annuities; and after the death of the survivor of the three annuitants, upon trust, for the children of his two brothers and sister as tenants in common at twenty-one; but, if any of them died under twenty-one, the shares of them so dying were to go to the survivors;—Held, that one of the children having attained twenty-one, and having died in the lifetime of the annuitants, his personal representatives were entitled to his share. Morgan v. Williams, 14 L. J., Ch. 449.

Testatrix bequeathed a sum of stock to trustees, upon trust to pay the dividends thereof to her granddaughter for life, and after her decease in trust to assign, transfer, and dispose of the capital unto and among the children of her said granddaughter, share and share alike, at their ages of twenty-one, or sooner if the trustees should think proper; and in case the said granddaughter should die without leaving any child or children, or, leaving such, all of them should die before they or any of them should become entitled to the trust moneys, then in trust to assign and transfer the capital to A. The will contained no clause of survivorship among the children:—Held, that the children dying in the lifetime of the granddaughter, but having attained twenty-one, took vested interests in equal shares, Mair v. Quilter, 2 Y. & C. C. C. 465.

—— Proof of Legitimacy.]—A testator bequeathed 10,000*l.* to his brother, to be paid in twenty equal half-yearly payments, but in case his brother should die before all the payments became due, then the remainder should be placed out at interest, to be paid to the children of his brother till they attained twenty-one, and then the principal to be divided amongst them. The brother died after three payments had been made, leaving five children, one of whom was supposed to be dead, not having been heard of for thirty years. Four of the children received their shares, and filed a bill praying that the remaining share might be divided amongst them. There was no evidence of the brother's marriage:—Held, that there was sufficient evidence of the legitimacy of the children, and that each was entitled, upon attaining twenty-one, to a share in the residue, but inquiries were directed as to the death of the child who had not been heard of. Gaches v. Warner, 16 L. J., Ch. 281.

—— Benefit of Survivorship—Trust for Maintenance.]—A. gave his residue to his wife for her life, to be expended by her in and about the maintenance of herself and her children: and after her decease unto and amongst his children, to be paid to them as they should severally attain the age of twenty-one years, with benefit of survivorship;—Held, that each child, on attaining twenty-one, took a vested interest, but that his presumptive share would not be paid to him with the consent of the mother, as there was a trust for maintenance of the others. Part, however, was paid out, the rest being reserved as security for payment of the life income. Berry v. Bryant, 2 Dr. & Sm. 1; 31 L. J., Ch. 327; 8 Jur. (N. S.) 69; 5 L. T. 818; 10 W. R. 242.

—— Attaining Twenty-five.]—The testator gave the residue of his property to his widow during her life, and at her demise to the eldest surviving son of A., upon his attaining twenty-five (the trustees being directed to apply the interest to his use till he attained that age), or failing such male issue, to the daughters of A. living at the demise of the last of such male issue; the only son of A. died under twenty-five in the lifetime of the widow, leaving two daughters of A. him surviving:—Held, that if there had been any son of A. living at the death of the widow, he would have taken a vested interest in the residue, though he had not then attained the age of twenty-five. Murray v. Addenbrooke, 4 Russ. 407; 8 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 79; 28 R. R. 144.

A testator declared that the bequest to one daughter C. should be enjoyed by her for life, and then be put in trust for the benefit of the children she might leave, and to be divided at twenty-five. And he "in like manner" directed the bequest of his second daughter M. should be paid to her for life, and after her death "may be continued in trust and may be divided equally between her children after they have attained the age of twenty-five":—Held, that the bequest to the children of M. was not too remote, and that they took vested interests at their birth. Saumarez v. Saumarez, 31 Beav. 432.

f. Effect of a Gift Over on Vesting.

Conditional Gift Over—Death before Twenty-one.]—A testator gave legacies of 50*l.* each to six grandchildren, when the youngest grandchild should come of age, payable from the produce of a real estate, then to be sold; and if either of those children should not live to come of age, nor have an heir born in wedlock, he directed the 50*l.* to be equally divided among the surviving children. E. M., one of the six grandchildren, married during her minority, but afterwards attained twenty-one, and before the youngest grandchild attained that age, she died, leaving a child:—Held, that her legacy of 50*l.* was a vested interest, and belonged to her personal representatives. Murkin v. Philipson, 3 Myl. & K. 257; 3 L. J., Ch. 143.

Legacy to the children of A., to be equally divided amongst them and if either of them die before twenty-one their share to go to the survivors: a vested interest in the children living at the testator's death, subject to be devested in the event pointed out: after-born children therefore excluded. Davidson v. Dallas, 14 Ves. 576: 9 R. R. 350.

Testator bequeathed 5,000*l.* to A. if he attained twenty-one, but if he should not attain that age, or died without leaving issue male, then over:—Held, that the 5,000*l.* vested, absolutely, in A., on his attaining twenty-one. Mytton v. Boodle, 6 Sim. 457.

The rule that the court leans to a construction that gives a portion to each child that lives to require it applies to wills as well as settlements. Knowles, In re, Nottage v. Buxton, 51 L. J., Ch. 851; 21 Ch. D. 806; 47 L. T. 161; 31 W. R. 182.

A testatrix, after giving a life interest in real estate to her three daughters, directed the share of each daughter to be applied in the maintenance of the children of such daughter who survived her until they attained twenty-one, then the share to be theirs. In case of the death of all the children of a daughter under twenty-one, the testatrix gave the share to the other daughters:—Held, that a child of a daughter, who attained twenty-one and died in his mother's lifetime, took a vested interest. Ib.

A stock legacy, and a share of residuary personalty expectant on the death of a tenant for life, bequeathed to a minor, payable at twenty-one, with a limitation over in the event of his death under twenty-one:—Held, to be interests which, prior to the 4th of July 1870, were forfeitable to the crown on the conviction of the minor for felony. Bateman's Trust, In re, 42 L. J., Ch. 553; L. R. 15 Eq. 355; 28 L. T. 395; 21 W. R. 435.

—— Death without Leaving Issue.]—Testatrix bequeathed 3,000*l.* to trustees upon trust to pay the interest to B. for life and after the decease of B. the testatrix willed that the said 3,000*l.* should be equally divided among such of her children as should be living at the time of her death, as they respectively attained the age of twenty-one; but her will was that if B. should die without leaving issue, then the 3,000*l.* should be paid to C.:—Held, that the children of B. took vested interests in the 3,000*l.* at her death, and, consequently, that the share of one who died after B. under the age of twenty-one devolved to her father as administrator. Bree v. Perfect, 1 Coll. C. C. 128; 8 Jur. 282. S. P. Ingram v. Suckling, 7 W. R. 386.

A testator bequeathed money in trust for A. for life, and after her death for the children of A., when and as they should attain the age of twenty-one years; but if A. should die without lawful issue, then over:—Held, that the gift to the children was contingent upon their attaining the age of twenty-one years. Kidman v. Kidman, 40 L. J., Ch. 359.

A testator gave his property to his daughter for life, and then to her children, who being sons should attain twenty-one, or being daughters attain that age or marry. "And in case my said daughter shall happen to die without leaving any child or children her surviving, or leaving such they shall all die without having obtained a vested interest in the said trust-moneys, and without leaving any issue them, him or her surviving," then over to two cousins. The daughter had children, some of whom attained twenty-one, but all died in her lifetime:—Held, that the gift over took effect, its terms being unambiguous and the event to which it referred having happened. Hamlet, In re, Stephen v. Cunningham, 58 L. J., Ch. 242; 39 Ch. D. 426; 59 L. T. 745; 37 W. R. 245—C. A.

A. gave to his daughter the interest and dividends of all moneys which should be standing in his name in the three per cent. reduced annuities, for her separate use; and after her decease, the principal of the stock to the child or children of his daughter in equal portions, on their attaining twenty-one. In case of the daughter's decease before her husband, the interest of the stock to be enjoyed by him during his life; but should the daughter die without having any issue, then, after the decease of the husband, the principal to revert to the testator's eldest son absolutely. The testator's daughter died before the testator, leaving one daughter, who, after the death of the husband, died under age and without issue:—Held, that the gift to the children of the testator's daughter was contingent, and upon the death of the only daughter under twenty-one the testator's son became entitled to the stock. Wrangham's Trusts, In re, 1 Dr. & Sm. 358; 30 L. J., Ch. 258; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 15; 3 L. T. 722; 9 W. R. 156.

Where a testator directed the annual interest of his residue to be divided into as many shares as there were living children of T. and L., share and share alike, as they should come of age; and in case anyone should die without children, his share to devolve on survivors successively, till the whole interest came into the hands of the grandchildren and great-grandchildren of T. and L.:—Held, that the children of T. living at his death were entitled to the income only, but that there was a gift by implication to these children absolutely, with a gift over of the share of any grandchild who had died without having had issue; not absolutely, but according to the gift of the original share. Wetherell v. Wetherell, 4 Giff. 51; 32 L. J., Ch. 476; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 368; 8 L. T. 39; 11 W. R. 274.

—— Death of all Children before Tenant for Life.]—Gift of residue on trust to pay the dividends to the testatrix's son for life (except what was required for education of her son's children); and should her son die before all or any of his children should attain twenty-one, she wished each child to receive their share on attaining twenty-one; but, should all his children die before himself, at his death then over:—Held, that a child who died an infant in the lifetime of the son had not acquired a transmissible interest. Chadwick v. Greenall, 3 Giff. 221 ; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 959 ; 5 L. T. 232.

—— Death under Twenty-one or before Tenant for Life.]—A testator gave a sum of money in trust for E. for life, and after her death for R., should he survive E. Should he not survive E. nor attain twenty-one, then over. R. attained twenty-one, but did not survive E. :—Held, that the gift vested absolutely in R. on his attaining twenty-one, subject to the life interest of E. Thomson's Trusts, In re, L. R. 11 Eq. 146 : 25 L. T. 693 ; 19 W. R. 196. S. P. Maitland v. Chalie, 6 Madd. 243.

A testator bequeathed his residuary personal estate to trustees, upon trust for his daughter A. for life, and after death of A. the said trust money and income in trust for all and every the children of A., share and share alike, to the son or sons when they should have attained the age of twenty-one, and for the daughter or daughters at that age or marriage ; with a gift over, if A. should die without having a child or, having any, such children should die, being sons, before twenty-one, and daughters before twenty-one or marriage. A. died, leaving an only child B., who died under twenty-one :—Held, that the trust property vested in B., so that the income between the death of A. and the death of B. belonged to B.'s estate. Ridgway v. Ridgway, 4 De G. & Sm. 271 ; 20 L. J., Ch. 256 ; 15 Jur. 960.

—— Under Twenty-one without Issue.] — Testator gives his personal estate to trustees upon trust to pay the interest to his daughter E. S. for her life, and, after her decease, to pay and divide the principal among the children of his said daughter, and the issue of a deceased child, as she should appoint, and in default of appointment to go to and be equally divided among them ; and if but one, then to such only child ; the portions of sons to be paid at their respective ages of twenty-one, and of daughters at their respective ages of twenty-one or marriage. If no issue, or all die before their respective portions become payable, then over. The shares are so given as to vest immediately in the children of E. S., though liable to be devested by all dying under twenty-one, without issue. The share of a child so dying was therefore held to pass to its representative. Shey v. Barnes, 3 Mer. 335 ; 17 R. R. 91.

A devise over upon a contingency does not of itself prevent the shares from vesting in the meantime, provided the words of bequest be in other respects sufficient to pass a present interest, although such a devise over of the entirety may be called in aid of other circumstances to show that no present interest was intended to pass. Id. 340.

—— Before Twenty-one or Day of Marriage.] – Under a devise of the entire residue real and personal to A., B., and C. (children of the testator) "And all their younger children, their heirs, executors, &c., for ever : A., B., and C. to receive the yearly interest, for their respective lives, of such parts thereof as were intended for their respective younger children. And in case of the death of A., B., and C., the share of any of them so dying, to go to his or her younger children : And in case of the death of A., B., and C., or any of them, without leaving younger children, the share of such child so dying to go to the survivors, and their younger children," with powers of appointment amongst their respective younger children. "And in case of the death of any of the younger grandchildren before twenty-one, or days of marriage, the shares of such to go to the brethren of the child so dying." At the time of the will, and of the testator's death, A. had one younger child ; B. several ; C. none : each had several since. On bill by after-born grandchildren :—Held, that a younger grandchild, dying in the lifetime of its parent under twenty-one, and unmarried, had not a vested interest in its share, transmissible to its representatives. Crone v. Odell, 1 Ball & B. 449. Affirmed, 3 Dow, 61 ; 1 Bligh (N.S.) 594 ; 15 R. R. 20—H. L. (Ir.)

—— Under Twenty-three without Issue.]—A testator bequeathed personal property to his trustees and executors, upon trust to pay the dividends to his daughter during her life, to her separate use, and after her decease to pay the principal unto all and every her children, who should live to attain twenty-three years of age, share and share alike, with benefit of survivorship in case any of them died under that age ; with limitations over in case there should be no child or children, or being such, all of them should die under twenty-three years without lawful issue. The daughter had a child who died under age in the daughter's lifetime. The bequests to the children, and the subsequent limitations, were too remote. Bull v. Pritchard, 1 Russ. 213 ; 7 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 41 ; 25 R. R. 27.

—— Under Twenty-four without Leaving Issue.]—A bequest to trustees of the testator's residuary estate, with a direction to apply so much of the interest, dividends, and profits as may be necessary for the maintenance and education of the children of the testator's daughter until they should respectively attain the age of twenty-four, and then to divide the principal equally between them, with a gift over in case any of them should die under twenty-four without leaving any issue, is not void as too remote, but gives a present vested interest with an executory bequest over in case of death under twenty-four without leaving issue. Bland v. Williams, 3 Myl. & K. 411 ; 3 L. J., Ch. 218.

—— Under Twenty-five.] — A gift of personalty to trustees for A. for life, and after his death in trust for the children of A. "as they severally attained twenty-five years," the income to be applied during their respective minorities by their guardian for their maintenance, &c., with a gift over in case no child of A. should live to attain twenty-five :—Held, to be vested, and not too remote. Davies v. Fisher, 5 Beav. 201 ; 11 L. J., Ch. 338 ; 6 Jur. 248.

A testator bequeaths the residue of his property to his nephews and nieces on their respectively attaining twenty-five, with a direction that his trustees shall, in the meantime, apply the profits to their maintenance ; but in case of the death of any of them unmarried and without issue, he gives the shares of those so dying unto the survivors equally, to be paid at the same time with their original shares ; first a nephew and then a niece die, under twenty-five, unmarried and without issue : the whole residue is divisible among the survivors who attain the specified age, and the niece does not, upon the death of the nephew, acquire, under the clause of survivorship, a vested interest in her proportional part of his share. Barker v. Lea, Turn. & R. 413; 24 R. R. 85.

g. Gift to a Class on Attaining a Certain Age.

When all the Children attain Twenty-one.]—A devise of land to trustees in fee, upon trust to pay the rents to the testator's daughter for life, and after her death to apply them in the maintenance of all and every her child and children during their minority, and when and as soon as all such children, if more than one, should have attained twenty-one, upon trust to sell, and pay the proceeds of such sale to and amongst all and every such child or children, share and share alike, if more than one, and if but one, then the whole to such only child:—Held, that one of several children who survived the testator, having died under twenty-one, took no share. Lloyd v. Lloyd, 3 K. & J. 20.

A testatrix bequeathed her residuary estate upon trust for her sister for life, and after the sister's death to pay, divide, and apply the trust fund in manner following: that is to say, one-tenth to or for the use of R. H., and another one-tenth to or for the use of C. R., for their respective lives; and in case either of them should die in the lifetime of the tenant for life, or afterwards, leaving lawful issue, then the testatrix directed that the part of him or her so dying leaving lawful issue should go to and be equally divided among his or her children, as they should attain twenty-one:—Held, that a child of C. R., who survived the tenant for life and attained twenty-one, but died in the lifetime of C. R., took a vested interest. Boulton v. Beard, 3 De G. M. & G. 608. And see Bree v. Perfect, 1 Coll. C. C. 128; 8 Jur. 282.

Attaining a Greater Age than Twenty-one.]—In considering the validity of limitations, the state of the family at the death of the testator (and not at the date of his will) is to be regarded; and, therefore, if a gift be to such of the children of a particular parent as shall attain a greater age than twenty-one years, and the parent die in the lifetime of the testator, and the class be ascertained at the testator's death, the gift is valid. A limitation to the unborn children of the testator's children for their lives was not void for remoteness only, because it was a gift to persons who might be unborn at the death of the testator. Williams v. Teale, 6 Hare, 239.

Gift of residue of real and personal estate to A. for life, and after her decease, in trust for all her sons and daughters who should attain twenty-two equally, with a power to apply the "annual income or fund" for their maintenance or "benefit" during their "minority";—Held, void for remoteness. Thomas v. Wilberforce, 31 Beav. 299.

A testator bequeathed personal property to his trustees and executors upon trust, to pay dividends to his daughter during her life, to her separate use, and after her decease to pay the principal unto all and every her children who should live to attain twenty-three years of age, share and share alike, with benefit of survivorship in case any of them died under that age, with limitations over, in case there should be no such child or children, or, being such, all of them should die under twenty-three years without lawful issue. The daughter had a child who died under age, in the daughter's lifetime. The bequests to the children, and the subsequent limitations, were too remote. Bull v. Pritchard, 1 Russ. 213; 7 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 41; 25 R. R. 27.

Gift to trustees for E. W. for life, and after his decease to assign, &c., to all his children who should be living at his decease, and who should be or live to attain twenty-five, and to apply the income in the meantime for their maintenance. E. W. died in 1837, leaving eleven children; the testator died in 1845. Four only of the children of E. W. survived; the youngest attained twenty-five in 1848;—Held (following Williams v. Teale, supra), that the gift was not void for remoteness. Southern v. Wollaston, 16 Beav. 276; 22 L. J., Ch. 664; 1 W. R. 86.

A gift of residuary estate in trust for such child or children of A., as being a son or sons should live to attain the age of twenty-five years, or being a daughter or daughters should live to attain that age or marry, equally to be divided between them, if more than one; but if but one, then the whole to that one, their, his or her heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns, according to the nature and quality thereof, provided that if any of them should die under such age or time as aforesaid leaving issue him or her surviving, such issue should take the same share as his, her, or their parents, attaining such age as aforesaid would have done; with provision for applying the income of the share of every such child, or his or her issue, or a sufficient part thereof, in their maintenance and education, and for an application of a reasonable part of the expectant share of any such child or their issue, to his, her, or their advancement, notwithstanding their minority:—Held, to be void for remoteness. Boreham v. Bignall, 8 Hare, 131; 19 L. J., Ch. 461; 14 Jur. 265. And see Bull v. Pritchard, supra.

When Youngest attains Twenty-one.]—A testator bequeathed 3,000*l.* to trustees, upon trust to apply the income thereof towards the maintenance of S. S. and C. S. during their minority; and when and so soon as the youngest of his said two children should have been born twenty-one years, then he directed the principal to be divided equally between them, if they should both be living; but if either of them should then be dead, the moiety of such deceased child was to be divided equally between the children of M. B. C. S. died an infant. S. S. attained twenty-one, but died before the period when, if living, C. S. would have been born twenty-one years:—Held, that they took vested interests in the legacies, to be paid to them when they respectively attained twenty-one, but liable to be divested in case of their death before the period of payment; and consequently that the legal personal representative of S. S. was entitled to one moiety of the fund. Smith's Will, In re, 20 Beav. 197; 24 L. J., Ch. 466; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 220; 3 W. R. 277. And see Smith v. Jackson, 1 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 231, and Beckton v. Barton, 5 Jur. (N.S.) 349.

Testator bequeathed to his wife the use of his furniture, &c., which he desired to be distributed among his children when the youngest attained twenty-one, at her or his executors' discretion; such part to be reserved for her use as might be thought reasonable, and at her death to be distributed as above:—Held, that those children who died before the youngest attained twenty-one did not take vested interests. Ford v. Rawlins, 1 Sim. & S. 328; 1 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 170; 24 R. R. 188. And see Hunter's Trusts, In re, L. R. 1 Eq. 295

A testator gave all his real and personal estate to trustees, upon trust to convert and pay the income thereof to his daughter for life; and after her decease to divide the capital equally among all her children then living, provided the youngest should have attained twenty-one; but if he should not then have attained that age, then upon trust to apply the income towards the maintenance and education of all such children until the majority of such youngest child, and when that event should happen, the capital to be divided among all the children then living, and the issue of such of them as should be dead, the issue to take their parent's share. One of her children survived his mother and attained twenty-one, but died without issue before the majority of the youngest:—Held, that he took an absolute vested interest upon his attaining twenty-one, payment to be deferred until the youngest should have attained that age. Brocklebank v. Johnson, 20 Beav. 206; 24 L. J., Ch. 505; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 318; 3 W. R. 341.

Testator directed the proceeds of his estate to be invested and accumulated till the youngest child of his brother should attain twenty-one, and then to be in trust for all the children who should then be living, or their issue. All the children except the second in age died without issue before the youngest if living would have attained twenty-one:—Held, that the second, who had attained twenty-one, was entitled to the fund in possession upon the death of the last of the other survivors who died under twenty-one. Evans v. Pilkington, 10 Sim. 412.

—— Trust for Sale and Division.]—A. devised real estate to trustees, to apply the rents and profits for the maintenance of his children till the youngest should have attained twenty-one, and then to sell the real estate, and divide the proceeds "among my children in the following shares and proportions; that is to say," two-fifths to his eldest son, one-fifth part to each of his other children, naming them:—Held, that the children took vested interests upon his death, and that the share of a daughter dying before twenty-one passed to her representatives. Cooper v. Cooper, 29 Beav. 299; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 178; 3 L. T. 800; 9 W. R. 354. And see Lyman's Trust, In re, 2 L. T. 662.

A devise of real estate to trustees to pay the rents and profits to C. for her life during widowhood; and after her decease or second marriage, "to pay the rents and profits to all and every the child and children of his late sister until the youngest of them should have attained twenty-one; and when and so soon as the youngest should have attained twenty-one, then on trust to sell the real estate, and to divide the moneys equally between and among the said children, share and share alike":—Held, that all the children were tenants in common until the youngest attained twenty-one. Grove's Trust, In re, 3 Giff. 575; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 38; 6 L. T. 376.

Held, also, that the share of each child of T. in both funds became vested at the death of the testator, whether such child lived to attain twenty-one or not. Ib.

Devise to trustees in fee, upon trust to demise until the testator's youngest child attained twenty-one, and during the minority of such youngest child, to pay the rents to the testator's wife, for the maintenance of herself and children, and when and so soon as the youngest surviving child should attain twenty-one, to sell and divide the produce "between and amongst the testator's wife and all his children who should be then living in equal shares." And in case of the death of any child before the estates became saleable, his children were to take his share. The children all died under twenty-one without issue:—Held, that the wife was entitled to the whole estate. Castle v. Eate, 7 Beav. 296; 8 Jur. 280.

When Youngest Attains Twenty-five.]—Devise in trust for A. for life, and, after her decease, to apply the rents for the benefit of her children, until the youngest attained twenty-five; and, as soon as the youngest should have attained twenty-five, to sell and "pay and divide" the produce equally "among such of the children of A. as should be then living, and issue of such, if any, of her children as might be then dead," such issue to take their parents' share only:—Held, that the gift of the income was valid, but that the gift of the corpus was void for remoteness. Read v. Gooding, 21 Beav. 478. Affirmed, 4 De G. M. & G. 510.

A positive direction that the shares of all the testator's children should vest at twenty-five and not before, was followed by a declaration that the funds "shall not become divisible, although vested, until the youngest of my children shall have attained the age of twenty-one years":—Held, that the youngest child's share vested at twenty-five and not at twenty-one. Parker, In re, Parker v. Storer, 26 W. R. 349.

When Youngest Attains Thirty.]—A testator devised Blackacre to trustees, out of the rents and profits to pay an annuity to J. and A. his wife jointly, and a similar annuity to the survivor, and upon trust to accumulate the residue for the benefit of the children of J., and divide the same among such children when the youngest attained thirty; and if any such children should die under thirty leaving issue, such issue was to take their parents' share:—Held that all the children who survived J. took vested interests. Knox v. Wells, 2 H. & M. 674.

There is no absolute rule that in a case where there is no bequest distinct from the direction to pay the vesting is postponed till the time of payment, but the construction will depend upon the nature of the event or contingency upon which the payment is to be made, as importing or not importing a condition. Accordingly, where a residue of real and personal estate was given to trustees to sell, get in, and divide among the testator's children, so soon as the youngest should attain twenty-one, and in case of the death of any leaving lawful issue, such issue to take the parent's share: it was held that the share of one of the children who attained twenty-one, and then died without issue before the youngest had attained that age, was vested and passed to his representatives. Leeming v. Sherratt, 2 Hare, 14; 11 L. J. Ch. 423; 6 Jur. 683.

Semble, no child, who did not attain twenty-one, was intended to take any interest in the residue. Ib.

Testator devised his real estate to trustees, with power to "let," until all his nephews and nieces should attain twenty-one. And after his youngest nephew or niece should be of age, then he directed his estates to be sold, and the produce to go among all his nephews and nieces, except two by name. He charged his rents with an annuity to A., and with payment of bond debts, but did not otherwise dispose of them :—Held, that the interests of the nephews and nieces vested in all who attained twenty-one, whether dying before or surviving the period directed for sale. Parker v. Sowerby, 1 Drew. 488 ; 1 Eq. R. 217 ; 22 L. J., Ch. 942 ; 17 Jur. 752 ; 1 W. R. 404.

h. Gift to Children Surviving their Parents.

Contingent on Surviving Parent—Person in loco parentis.]—Legacies of 1,000*l.* each to the three children then living of A., the testator's daughter, with a proviso for the payment of the interest for their maintenance during minority, and a bequest of 2,000*l.* to trustees, upon trust for A., for her life ; and from and after her decease, for all and every her children living at her decease, equally to be divided, with a proviso that, if any one or more of the children of A. should die under twenty-one, without leaving issue, the original and accrued legacies and shares bequeathed to the child or children so dying should go to the others and other of the said children, equally ; and a declaration that, if all the children of A. should die under twenty-one, and without leaving issue, the legacies of 1,000*l.* a piece should not be raiseable ; but from and after the decease of the last surviving child, the said legacies—and from and after the decease of her daughter the 2,000*l.*—should sink into the residue :—Held, that the rights of the children of A. in the legacy of 2,000*l.* were contingent upon their surviving their mother. Farrer v. Barker, 9 Hare, 737.

Some of the reasons which have influenced the court in decisions in favour of vesting legacies in children, have no application in the case of grandchildren, where there is nothing to show that the testator had placed himself in loco parentis. Ib.

Cases in favour of vesting carried to their full extent. Id. 744.

Bequest upon trust for all and every the daughters and daughter of A. living at the time of his death who should attain twenty-one or marry, in equal shares :—Held, that during A.'s life the interests of the daughters were contingent. Atcherley v. Du Moulin, 2 K. & J. 186.

A testator bequeathed specific articles between his two sons equally ; then he gave certain freeholds to his two sons and their heirs, as joint tenants ; then he gave all his real, leasehold, and other estates and effects, upon trust, that his wife should receive an annuity while unmarried, and his sons to receive the rents and profits while between twenty-one and twenty-five, and afterwards for them as tenants in common ; then he gave the residue upon trust for such of his sons as should be living at the decease or second marriage of his wife, as tenants in common ; but if either died under twenty-one without issue, his share to go to the survivor ; then he gave his partnership property in trade in trust till his sons should attain twenty-one, and afterwards for their individual benefit. One son attained twenty-one, but died in his mother's lifetime, without issue :—Held, that the son so dying took no vested interest in the residue, although the testator may have used a different mode of disposition in all the previous and the subsequent gifts. The partnership property in trade was vested at twenty-one. Woodhouse v. Woodhouse, 5 Jur. 404.

Legacy to Anne, the wife of Peter, for life, remainder to Peter, the husband, for his life, and, after the death of the husband and wife, upon trust to pay the interest for the maintenance of such children of Anne as should be living at her death, until they should respectively attain twenty-one, and when and as they should severally and respectively attain their said ages of twenty-one years, upon trust to pay and transfer the legacy equally unto and amongst all the children of Anne, when and as they should severally and respectively attain their said ages of twenty-one years ; and if any of the said children should die under twenty-one, then unto such as should attain that age, share and share alike ; and, in case all and every of the said children should die under age, then to pay the legacy to the testator's next-of-kin. The children of Anne, who attained twenty-one years of age, acquired vested interests in the legacy, notwithstanding such children died in the lifetime of Anne, the tenant for life. Bradley v. Barlow, 5 Hare, 589.

Bequest of 2,000*l.* in trust, to pay one-half of the interest to Nathaniel for life, and the other to Thomas for life, and afterwards to their wives for life ; and in case, at the death of Nathaniel and wife, there should be issue of Nathaniel, to transfer a moiety to the children at twenty-one ; and in case there should be no such issue, or they should die under twenty-one, then over. "And so, in like manner, upon the decease of Thomas and wife, the other half to be transferred to his lawful issue ;" and in case of no such issue, or they shall all depart this life before they shall attain twenty-one, then over :—Held, that a child of Thomas who attained twenty-one, but died in the life of her mother, took no interest. Wilson v. Mount, 19 Beav. 292 ; 2 W. R. 448.

In construing a will equally with a settlement made by a person in loco parentis, the court leans to the presumption that the intention is to vest the portions in the children when they most require it, whether they survive the tenant for life or not ; and where there is any reasonable ground for supposing such an intention, the benefit of any doubt is to be given in favour of the vesting. Jackson v. Dover, 2 H. & M. 209 ; 4 N. R. 136 ; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 631 ; 10 L. T. 489 ; 12 W. R. 855.

Gift of residue upon trust for testatrix's daughter A. for life, then upon trust to pay to all the children of A. living at her decease equally, at twenty-one or marriage, unless such day of payment should happen in the lifetime of A., and then the payment to be postponed till the death of A., but to be a vested interest in each of the children at twenty-one or marriage :—Held, that a son who attained twenty-one, and died in A.'s lifetime, was entitled to share. Ib.

The rule that the court leans to a construction that gives a portion to each child that lives to require it applies to wills as well as settlements. Jackson v. Dover, supra, followed. Knowles, In re. Nottage v. Buxton, 51 L. J., Ch. 851 ; 21 Ch. D. 806 ; 47 L. T. 161 ; 31 W. R. 182.

—— Share not to be transferred until after Parent's Death.]—A testator gave his residuary personalty to a niece for life, and directed his trustees after her decease to pay and divide it unto and amongst all and every the children of his niece who should be living at the time of her decease, if more than one, equally ; and if only one, then wholly to such only child, "the same to be a vested interest in him or them respectively on their respectively attaining the age of twenty-one, but not to be transferred until after the decease of my niece," with maintenance clauses:—Held, that the representatives of children of the niece who attained twenty-one, but died in her lifetime, took no share, for that the words "but not to be transferred until after the decease of my niece" were not contradictory of the previous expression confining the class to children who survived the niece, and being in any view of the case surplusage, could not be held to modify the definition of the class, Williams v. Haythorne, L. R. 6 Ch. 782.

Semble, that the representatives of children surviving the niece and dying under twenty-one, would have taken. Ib.

A testator gave the interest arising from a sum of stock to V. D., which interest he was to enjoy along with his wife, M. D., during their respective lives, but in the event of either dying and the survivor marrying again, then the capital to be divided, share and share alike, between their children; an arrangement ultimately to take place at the death of their parents, should neither marry again. The testator then directed that the money should not be removed from the English funds during the lifetime of V. D. and M. D., nor until the period arrived "for its distribution (after their death) among their children surviving, share and share alike": —Held, that the interests of the children were not contingent on their surviving their parents, the concluding words not being sufficient to render the previously vested gift contingent. Duke, In re, Hannah v. Duke, 16 Ch. D. 112; 29 W. R. 341—C. A. And see Taylor v. Graham, 3 App. Cas. 1287—H. L. (Sc.); and Carlton v. Thompson, L. R. 1 H. L. (Sc.) 241.

i. Gift to Persons "then Living."

Vesting of Interests—Death of Tenant for Life.]—The clear expression of a bequest after the death of the tenant for life, to the children then living:—Held, not to be controlled by other general expressions in the will, so as to vest any interest in one dying before the tenant for life. La Roche v. Davies, 3 Y. & C. 612. n.; 1 Jur. 574. And see Hunter, Ex parte, 3 Y. & C. 614.

The words "then living," though in one clause of a will they referred to the general period of distribution, were in a subsequent clause of the same held to refer to the immediate antecedent, viz., the death of a tenant for life. Heasman v. Pearse, 41 L. J., Ch. 705; L. R. 7 Ch. 275, 660; 26 L. T. 299; 20 W. R. 271.

Bequest to A for life, and after her decease to become the property of B., "or in case of her decease, to be equally divided between her children living." B. died in the testator's lifetime, and her only child survived her, but died in the life of A.:—Held, that the word "living" referred to the antecedent, viz., the death of B., and that such only child took a vested interest, and that her legal personal representatives were entitled to the legacy. Hodgson v. Smithson, 21 Beav. 354. Affirmed 26 L. J., Ch. 110; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 1199; 5 W. R. 3.

Devise to A for life, and after her decease to B. and her children, or such of them as shall be then living; the children take vested interests, and if any die in the lifetime of A., the whole goes to the survivors. Dansen v. Hawes, Amb. 276.

Testator gave 1,000*l.* to M. and the issue of her body, and in default of such issue he gave the said 1,000*l.* to be equally divided between the daughters then living of J. and E. his wife. This devise takes in daughters of J. and E. born after the testator's death, and therefore the limitation is too remote. Jee v. Audley, 1 Cox, 324; 1 R. R. 46.

A testator bequeathed 1,000*l.* to G. for life with remainder to her issue, and in default of issue to O. absolutely. But if O. should die before the death of G., then he gave the sum to such of her children as should be "then living":—Held, that "then living" meant living at the death of O. Drew v. Drew, 22 W. R. 314.

Bequest to H. S. for life, and after her decease to the testator's four brothers and sister, "or such of them as should be then living," equally. And in case any of them should be then dead, then he bequeathed the deceased child's share to the children, "to be paid at the time before mentioned." The brothers and sister all died in the lifetime of H. S., one (A. B.) having had no children:—Held, that the representatives of A. B. were entitled to his share, and that all the children took, whether living at the death of H. S. or not. Masters v. Scales, 13 Beav. 60.

—— Marriage of Widow.]—A testator having three children gave his property to his wife, so long as she lived unmarried, and if she married, and her children resided with her, an allowance was to be made to her, and "after her decease the testator bequeathed his property equally between his children then living;" he directed his farm to be allotted as part of his son Thomas's share, and "he wished whoever might enjoy his farm, if unfortunately his children should fail of heirs," should take his name; and he directed his daughter's share to be secured for her separate use. The son died in the lifetime of the mother: —Held, that he took no interest in the property. Tawney v. Ward, 1 Beav. 563; 8 L. J., Ch. 319.

"And when my youngest child for the time being shall have attained the age of twenty-one years, then upon trust to pay, assign, and transfer the said residue of my personal estate unto all my children who shall be then living, and the issue of such of them as shall be then dead leaving issue," &c.:—Held, from a former part of the will, to mean, in the event of the testator's widow having married again, or having died before the youngest child attained twenty-one. And that the youngest child, having attained twenty-one, and having died before the widow married again, did not take a vested interest, but her children took as tenants in common. Ruffell v. Norman, 8 Jur. 819.

The testator devised and bequeathed his real and personal estate (subject to certain trusts for the benefit of his wife) to his son absolutely; but if his son should die under twenty-one without issue, the testator gave the same to his wife during her widowhood, with remainder (subject to certain legacies) as she should by will appoint; and in default of appointment, or in case she should marry again after the testator's decease, he directed, that, from and after the second marriage or decease of his wife, which should first happen, a moiety of the trust estate, or so much thereof as the appointment should not extend to, should be held in trust for all and every the daughter and daughters who should be then living of his sister, Mary Miles, and the issue then living of such of them as should be then dead, equally amongst them per stirpes. The testator's son died under twenty-one, without issue, in the testator's lifetime; and the testator's wife also died in his lifetime:—Held, that the time of the testator's death was the period at which the persons entitled to take under the said residuary bequest were to be ascertained; that, notwithstanding a daughter of Mary Miles was dead at the date of the will, the children of such daughter, having survived the testator, were entitled, per stirpes, to a share of the said moiety of the residuary estate; that the children of a daughter of Mary Miles—such daughter being living at the death of the testator's wife, but having died in the lifetime of the testator—were also entitled per stirpes to an equal share of the said moiety of such residuary estate; and that the share of the child of a daughter would not lapse by the death of such child in the lifetime of the testator, but the entire share of the class would be divisible amongst the children belonging to such class who survived the testator. Gaskell v. Holmes, 3 Hare, 438; 8 Jur. 396.

—— Attaining Twenty-one.]—S. gives 20*l.* long annuities for the maintenance of H. H. until twenty-one, and then for her separate use for life; and then to her children, for their maintenance until twenty-one, and then to be assigned and transferred to them; but if she should die without lawful issue, or, leaving such, they should die under twenty-one, then for the maintenance of R. H. and E. H. until twenty-one equally; and then to assign and transfer the same equally to them, if both living; but if either should be then dead, the whole to the survivor. H. H. survived R. H. and E. H., who both attained twenty-one; and upon the question whether the representatives of the survivor or the residuary legatee was entitled:—Held, that the word "then" had reference to the death of H. H. without issue; and that the residuary legatee, and not the representatives of R. H. and E. H. was entitled. Widdicombe v. Miller or Muller, 1 Drew. 443; 22 L. J., Ch. 614; 1 W. R. 223.

Testator bequeathed the residue of his real and personal estate, upon trust for his daughter, absolutely, upon her attaining twenty-one; provided that, in case his said daughter's decease should happen before the said age of twenty-one, and his, the testator's, wife should then be living, then in further trust to pay her the whole interest of the residue of his estate and effects; and on her decease, his said daughter being dead before the age of twenty-one, he devised to his wife the house in S. Street, her heirs and assigns for ever; then in further trust to pay the produce of his residuary estate unto and amongst his nephews and nieces, the children of his sister Ann, and such of them as should be then living. The daughter died without issue in the lifetime of the wife. The sister had five children living at the death of the daughter, and one only, Isaac, living at the death of the wife:—Held, that Isaac was entitled to the whole residue. Hetherington v. Oakman, 2 Y. & C. C. C. 299; 7 Jur. 570. And see Coulthurst v. Carter, 15 Beav. 421; 21 L. J., Ch. 555; 16 Jur. 532.

Testator bequeathed the dividends of 10,000*l.* stock to his wife for her life, and after her decease he gave and bequeathed the principal unto and amongst A., B., C., and D., and all and every the child and children of N., that might be living at the decease of his said wife, to be transferred and paid to them respectively on their attaining the age of twenty-one years, with benefit of survivorship in case any of them should die under that age. N. never had any other children than those named in the will. They all attained twenty-one, and died in the lifetime of the widow:—Held, that they took vested interests in the 10,000*l.* stock. Roberts v. Burder, 2 Coll. C. C. 130.

Legacy to the testator's wife of the dividends of stock for her life, which he directed should be continued in the same stock, and then to be shared equally, share and share alike, to his children that should be then living; he also gave to his wife a leasehold house (of which fifty years were unexpired) for her life, and then to be let during the time of the lease to come, and the neat produce thereof to be equally placed in the stocks for the benefit of his children that should be then living equally; and as to the residue of his estate whatsoever and wheresoever the product he gave, &c., the same to be collected yearly to his wife and children equally, share and share alike, that were then living. In other dispositions the words "then" and "then living" were used with reference to some period expressed, viz., the age of twenty-one, or the death of the person to take for life. The stock and house vested, at the wife's death, in those children, who survived her; the residue vested, at the testator's death, in his wife and all the children equally. Reeves v. Brymer, 4 Ves. 692.

—— Death of Tenant for Life and Youngest Child attaining Twenty-one.]—A. devised an estate to his sons Phineas and John equally, during the life of Phineas, and until his youngest child attained twenty-one, and on the death of Phineas, and on the youngest child attaining twenty-one, to sell it and pay one half of the money to John and his heirs, and the other half among the then living children of Phineas. But in case of John's death without lawful issue before the division takes place, then I give his half share to and amongst my then living grandchildren, share and share alike. John died in 1827, Phineas died in 1858:—Held, that the grandchildren were to be ascertained at the death of Phineas, and that the representatives of a grandchild who died in 1856 took no share. Gill v. Barrett, 29 Beav. 372.

Where the effect of postponing the vesting of the shares of children to the period of division would be to leave the family of a child dying before that period without provision, the court leans strongly in favour of early vesting; but where a testator provides for all his issue living at the period of division, his words will not be strained in order to make the shares vest at an earlier period. Deighton's Settled Estates, In re, 45 L. J., Ch. 825; 2 Ch. D. 783; 34 L. T. 81—C. A.

A testator directed his trustees to pay the income of his real and residuary personal estate to his wife for life, and on her death to apply the income to the maintenance of his children then living and the issue of his children then deceased (such issue taking the share which their parents would have taken if living) until his youngest surviving child attained twenty-one, and when such child attained twenty-one, to sell the real estate and hold the proceeds and the personal estate in trust for his children then living and the issue then living of his child or children dying before that period. The youngest child attained twenty-one twelve years before the widow's death:—Held, that the class was not to be ascertained before the death of the widow, and that the legal personal representatives of a child who had died without issue in her lifetime took nothing. Ib.

—— Death of Annuitants.]—A testatrix gave all her personal estate to a trustee, upon trust to pay two annuities, and directed that the sum of 800*l.* should be raised and invested, and that the same should be held upon trust to pay thereout the two annuities; and she directed her trustees to sell the remainder of her personal estate, and the moneys arising therefrom, and the residue of her estate, except the 800*l.*, after paying certain legacies, to pay, distribute, and divide equally unto and amongst A., B., C. and D., or such of them as should be living at her decease; and in case D. should not be living at her death, her share of and in her said personal estate and the residue of her property should go amongst D.'s children; and after the decease of the two annuitants, the testatrix directed her trustee to pay and distribute the said sum of 800*l.*, and all and singular the rest, residue, and remainder of her said personal estate, unto and amongst A., B., C. and D., or unto or amongst such of them as should be then living; and in case D. should not be then living, the testatrix directed that her share of and in the said residue should go amongst D.'s children. At the death of the surviving annuitant, A., B., C. and D. were dead, but D. had left two children, who claimed the whole of the testatrix's property:—Held, that they were entitled to the 800*l.*, but that the residue did not go exclusively to them. Hammatt v. Ledsam, 9 Jur. 173.

—— Life Interest to Husband after Death of Wife.]—A testator bequeathed a sum of stock to trustees, in trust for the separate use of his sister for life, and after her death for her husband for life, and from and immediately after his decease for the children of his said sister, who should be then living, in equal shares. The husband died in the lifetime of the wife:—Held, that all the children of the testator's sister, who were living at the death of the husband, were entitled to a distributive share of the trust fund; and one of those children having afterwards died in the lifetime of the mother, the representatives of the child so dying were held entitled to her share. Archer v Jegon, 8 Sim. 446; C. P. Cooper, 173; 6 L. J., Ch. 340; 1 Jur. 792.

A testator directed his executors to invest a sum of money, and to pay the interest to his daughter for life, and after her death to her husband if he should survive her, during his life, or until he should become bankrupt or insolvent, and after his death or becoming bankrupt or insolvent, to lay out such interest in the maintenance or education of any child or children of the marriage who should be "then living" until such child or children should attain twenty-five; and on his, her, or their attaining that age, then to pay the principal to such children, if more than one, in equal shares. The husband died in the wife's lifetime, leaving two children, who had since died under twenty-one:—Held, that the children took vested interests, and that their mother, as their representative, was entitled to the fund. Powis v. Matthews, 11 W. R. 662.

Limitation over after a life interest to husband for life, or until bankruptcy, remainder to the wife for life, remainder in case of the wife dying in the husband's lifetime, then after the husband's death, or sooner in case of his becoming bankrupt, to the children "then living":—Held, these words referred to the period of the wife's death, and not of the bankruptcy. Edington's Settlement, In re, 3 Drew. 202.

A fund was bequeathed upon trust for a daughter of the testator for life, and after her death for her husband for life, and after the death of the survivor, for the daughter's children who should be living at her decease equally, and the children of such children as should be dead, such children to have their parent's shares only; and if there should be no such child or grandchild, in trust to transfer the fund to all the testator's children who should be then living equally, and the children of such of them as should be dead, such children to have their parent's share only:—Held, that under the last-mentioned clause only such grandchildren of the testator took as survived the tenant for life. Kirkman's Trusts, In re, 3 De G. & J. 558.

A fund was settled on trust for the wife for life, and in case she should have any issue living at her death, for the husband for life, and after his decease upon trust to divide it amongst the children of the marriage "that should be then living on their attaining twenty-one years." And in case there should be no child, or of their all dying in the wife's life, to pay the fund to such person as the wife should by will appoint, and in default to the executors or administrators of the husband and wife or the survivor of them. And in case the wife should survive her husband without leaving issue then living, to pay the fund to the wife. The wife died leaving children who had attained twenty-one, and the husband was still living:—Held, that the limitation to the children remained contingent until the death of their father. Wollaston's Settlement, In re, 27 Beav. 642.

—— Gift to a Class.]—A testator gave a life interest in his residue to three of his children equally, and after the decease of his three children respectively, he gave one-third part of the residue unto such of their children as should be then living:—Held, that on the decease of each, the gift over as to the third part operated in favour of all the children of the three who were actually living at the time. Brown v. Thompson, 11 Jur. (N.S.) 922; 13 L. T. 395; 14 W. R. 76.

Residuary bequest in trust for A. for life, and after her decease to be distributed "between the testator's brothers and sisters, and such of their children as should be then living, the parents and children to be classed together, and to share in equal proportions":—Held, that those brothers and sisters and children only who survived A. were entitled, and that they took per capita. Turner v. Hudson, 10 Beav. 222; 16 L. J., Ch. 180.

Bequest of personal estate to A. for life, remainder to the children of A. equally, and in default of issue of A., upon trust to sell and divide equally amongst B. and C. and all their children "then" living, share and share alike;—Held, that the gift was not too remote, and that B. and C. and their children living at the death of A. alone took the personal estate as tenants in common absolutely. Cormack v. Capous, 17 Beav. 397.

B. died before A., but, nevertheless, she was held to take a share. Ib.

A testator gave a legacy of 200*l.* to each of his twelve first cousins (naming them); and then, noticing that one was dead, he gave the legacy intended for him to his children. He gave his wife a life interest in his residuary real and personal estate, to be enjoyed in specie; and, from and immediately after his wife's decease, he gave his executors full power to collect all his property together, and sell the houses and other estates, and to convert into money all his funded property, and then to pay first certain legacies, and then the whole of the remainder of his property was to be divided, share and share alike, among his aforesaid twelve first cousins and their children. By a codicil, he took away the legacy given by his will to his cousin, Mrs. B., but expressed his intention not to exclude her children from the benefit she might thereafter possess in the final division of his property after his wife's decease:—Held, that the cousins who survived the testator took vested interests absolutely, subject, as to those who died leaving issue, to be divested for the benefit of their children, by way of substitution. Burrell v. Baskerfield, 11 Beav. 525; 18 L. J., Ch. 422; 13 Jur. 311.

Held, also, that the children of the cousin alluded to by the testator as already dead were entitled to a twelfth share of the residuary estate, as representing such deceased cousin.

A devise and bequest to trustees to pay the income of real and personal estate to A. for life, and after her death to sell, and to pay the residue unto the testator's nephews and nieces (nine in number) then living. One of the persons named died before tenant for life:—Held, that the residue became distributable in eight shares. Ireland v. Trembath, 11 Jur. (N.S.) 479; 12 L. T. 630.

—— Gift to all Testator's Grandchildren as shall be "then Living."]—A gift of residue, after conversion, as soon as conveniently might be after the testator's decease and investment, to all and every the grandchild and grandchildren of the testator "who should be then living," means such grandchildren who should be living at a time thereafter mentioned, that is, upon their respectively attaining the age of twenty-one, and lets in all such grandchildren as were living when the first of the class attained his majority. Hilliard v. Fulford, 42 L. J., Ch. 624; 28 L. T. 892.

The residue of a testator's real and personal estate was given to trustees upon trust to convert and get in as soon as conveniently might be after his death, and to invest the proceeds and assign the same unto all and every the grandchild or grandchildren (except T., or such grandchild as should then be in possession of certain real estates before specifically devised) as should "then be living," to be divided between them when and as such grandchild or grandchildren should respectively attain twenty-one:—Held, that the period of ascertaining the legatees was the time when the eldest of the grandchildren, who were to share in the residue, attained twenty-one. Ib.

—— Death of Survivor of Two Persons.]—A testator who was entitled to a reversion expectant on the deaths of A. and B., without issue living at their death, devised it in trust to sell and divide the produce between his six daughters, or such of them as should be then living, and the children of such of them as should be dead, the children taking their parents' share. But if only one daughter survived A. and B., she was to take the whole, and the heir-at-law was to take if no daughter or child of a daughter should be living at the death of A. and B.:—Held, that the shares of the children of the daughters vested, not at their mother's death, but at the death of the survivor of A. and B. Lewis v. Templer, 33 Beav. 625; 10 L. T. 638; 12 W. R. 128.

"Living" held to mean "Having Issue Living."]—A testator made a series of specific devises upon trust for each of his children for life, with remainder to the children of such tenant for life as tenants in common in tail, with cross remainders between them, and failing such issue of the tenant for life, in trust for the testator's other children equally, and the heirs of their respective bodies, as tenants in common, or if there should be only one of his said children "then living," in trust for that child, and the heirs of his or her body; he afterwards gave a share of his residuary real and personal estate upon such trusts as should correspond with those declared concerning his specifically devised estate, which gift was followed by a provision for the event of any child dying in the testator's lifetime, leaving children:—Held, that the gift over, on failure of the issue of a tenant for life, was in favour of children who, or whose issue, were living at the time when the gift over took effect.—Cooper v. Macdonald, 42 L. J., Ch. 539; L. R. 16 Eq. 258; 28 L. T. 693.

2. EFFECT OF GIFT OF INTERIM INCOME.

a. Gift of Interest.

In General.]—Legacy at twenty-one with interest in meantime is a vested legacy. Harrison v. Buckle, 1 Stra. 238. And see Fonereau v. Fonereau, 3 Atk. 645; 1 Ves. sen. 118.

Gift of a residue to children not to be claimed till twenty-two, but the interest given in the meantime is vested. Dodson v. Hay, 3 Bro. C. C. 404.

Direction for interest is evidence of vesting in legatory cases. Hubert v. Parsons, 2 Ves. Sen. 263.

Trust "to raise" 5,000*l.* portion, "and pay it," to such younger child as the father should appoint; for want of appointment, to the younger children at twenty-one, with interest for their maintenance, &c., in the meantime. &c. The only younger child died at two years old:—Held, not to be vested in him, so as to be claimed by the father as his representative. Id. 261.

A legacy devised to S. when of the age of sixteen, and interest in the meantime. S. dies before sixteen. The legacy vested, and shall go to the executor of S. Stapleton v. Cheele, 2 Vern. 673; Pre. Ch. 318.

Legacy to A. payable at twenty-one or marriage with interest is a vested legacy, and executor having become bankrupt, might have been proved under the commission, his certificate therefore a bar, and the residuary legatee not liable. Walcott v. Hall, 2 Bro. C. C. 305.

Devise of a portion to a child with interest, but not to be paid to the child till twenty-one; the child dies under twenty-one; the portion shall go to the administrator of the child. Collins v. Metcalfe, 1 Vern. 462.

Legacy out of personal estate, payable or given at a certain time, and interest in the meantime, is a vested one: otherwise as to legacies out of real estate, for if legatee dies before the time is come, it sinks into the inheritance. The same construction where a legacy is given out of a mixed fund of real and personal estate at a certain time, or to be paid at a certain time. Van v. Clark, 1 Atk. 510.

By a will, stock was, after the death of a tenant for life, to be divided and paid amongst the children of such tenant for life; if more than one, equally, on attaining twenty-four; and if but one, the whole to be paid to such one child on attaining twenty-four, and in the meantime the interest and dividends to be applied for the use and benefit of such children or child, as the case might be:—Held, that the gift was not void for remoteness, the children taking vested interests as they came in esse. Bell v. Cade, 2 J. & H. 122; 31 L. J., Ch. 383; 5 L. T. 523; 10 W. R. 38.

A testator gave his residuary real and personal estate to his daughter for life, and after her death he directed it to be paid to her surviving children as soon as they should arrive or come to the ages of twenty-two respectively, with a direction that the share of the child or children dying under twenty-two should go to the other child or children who should attain twenty-two; and directed that only the interest of the share of the child or children who died under the age of twenty-two should be paid to them respectively:—Held, that the gift was contingent upon the children attaining twenty-two, and therefore void for remoteness. Bulley's Trust Estate, In re, 11 Jur. (N.S.) 847; 13 L. T. 264—L.JJ.

A gift to a class or an individual on attaining a given age, which standing alone is contingent, is vested if accompanied by a gift of the whole income for the benefit of the class or individual during the interval. Holt's Estate, In re, Bolding v. Strugnell, 45 L. J., Ch. 208; 34 L. T. 120; 24 W. R. 339.

A testatrix directed the trustees of her will, after the death of a tenant for life, to transfer a fund to the children of A. in equal shares upon their respectively attaining twenty-one, the interest of the fund to be applied for their maintenance until they should respectively attain that age:—Held, that the gift of the interest created a vested interest in the capital. Ib.

Residuary bequest to two granddaughters of testator "in trust, till they come of age or marry, the interest to be received in the meantime, and paid to them; but if one of them should die before marriage or twenty-one, then to survivor and her children; but if both should die, leaving no issue, then I give them power to leave it by will as they should think proper." One legatee married, and the other attained twenty-one;—Held, that both acquired vested interests. Thacheray v. Hampson, 2 Sim. & S. 214; 3 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 89; 25 R. R. 186.

b. Mixed Gift of Interest and Principal.

Gift of Interest Contingent — Attaining Twenty-one.]—Legacy to A., as soon as she attains twenty-one, with interest:—Held, to be contingent, and no interest payable till legatee attains twenty-one, and is then to be computed from the end of a year after testator's death. Knight v. Knight, 2 Sim. & S. 490; 25 R. R. 253.

A bequest, by a testator, of one-third of his personal estate to his daughter, and in case of his decease to have the interest therein, and the principal when she attained the age of twenty-five:—Held, to give a vested interest to the daughter, though she died under that age. Breedon v. Tugman, 3 Myl. & K. 289; 3 L. J., Ch. 169.

Bequest of the interest of the residue to the widow for the maintenance of the testator's children; and after her decease, the property "to be shared equally amongst all his children, if they should have attained twenty-one, and if any had not attained that age, then that his executors should act as trustees until the eldest attained that age, and then pay him his share, and each one as he or she attained that age." A child who died under twenty-one, in the lifetime of the widow, held not to have a vested interest. Butcher v. Leach, 5 Beav. 392; 7 Jur. 74.

—— Direction to Accumulate.]—Testatrix directed the trustees of a fund (over which she had a power of appointment) and the survivor of them, his executors, administrators, and assigns, to pay, assign, or transfer the same to R. M., in trust for his daughter, to be vested in her on attaining the age of twenty-one, or day of marriage, which should first happen, and the interest and dividends thereof to accumulate for her benefit, and be paid to her with the principal at the time before mentioned. The daughter died under age and unmarried:—Held, that she did not take a vested interest in the fund. Thruston's Will, In re, 17 Sim. 21; 18 L. J., Ch. 437.

Bequest of 120*l.* per annum, that is to say, the interest of 4,000*l.* stock, to A., with a direction that the interest, as it becomes due, be added to the principal till twenty-one, except 20*l.* per annum for clothes, gives a vested interest. Stretch v. Watkins, 1 Madd. 253.

Testator gave his residuary personal estate to J. J., an infant, and directed his executors to place it out at interest to accumulate, and to pay the principal to the infant on his attaining twenty-four, and in the meantime to allow 60*l.* a year for his maintenance: and the testator gave residue over, on the infant's dying under twenty-one. The court held that the residue was actually given to the infant, and that what followed the gift was merely directory as to the management of it; and, on the infant's attaining twenty-one, allowed the residue and accumulations to be transferred to him. Josselyn v. Josselyn, 9 Sim. 63.

A gift in terms importing a present vested interest with a postponed time of payment, is not made contingent by a direction to accumulate till the time of payment arrives. Blease v. Burgh, 2 Beav. 221; 9 L. J., Ch. 226.

Bequest of residuary estate, to accumulate in trust for all the children of J. B. (except the eldest A.), to be paid at twenty-three, and in the event of the death of all under that age, then over. J. B. had two children, A. and B., born in the lifetime of the testatrix, of whom B. died an infant, and a third, C., born after her death, who being born before the time of distribution, and having attained twenty-three, became the personal representative of B.:—Held, that the legacies were vested, although the payment was postponed; and that the direction to accumulate did not vary the vesting; C. was therefore in his own right and as the representative of his deceased brother B. entitled to the whole fund. Ib.

Bequest of residue to trustees upon trust for testatrix's brother's children and M.'s children, to be equally divided between them; the dividends to be laid out by the trustees as should be most advantageous for them; but no part of the dividends to go for their board or education, but the same to accumulate for them until they come to the age of twenty-one years. M. was herself one of the children of the testatrix's brother :—Held, that the children born at the death of the testatrix took vested interests :—Held, also, that the testatrix did not mean to include M. as one of the children of his brother. Bull v. Johns, Tam. 513.

A bequest of residuary estate to be invested in consols, and to be held by the executors in trust for all and every the grandchildren of the testator, to be divided equally amongst them at the expiration of twenty years after his decease : —Held, to confer immediate vested and transmissible interests to the grandchildren living at the death of the testator, subject to be opened and let in grandchildren who might be born before the expiration of the twenty years. Oppenheim v. Henry, 10 Hare, 441 ; 1 W. R. 126.

—— Maintenance, Education or Accumulation.]—A testatrix gave the interest of her residuary estate to her four sisters during their lives, and directed that, on their deaths, the interest of their respective shares should, at the discretion of her executor, be applied to the maintenance and education, or accumulated for the benefit of the children of each of them so dying, until such children should respectively attain the age of twenty-two years, when they were to be entitled to their mother's share of the principal ; with limitations over, in the event of the death of any of them under that age :—Held, that the children of the sisters were not to take a vested interest till they attained twenty-two, and that all the gifts, subsequent to the life estates given to the sisters, were void, as being too remote. Vawdry v. Geddes, 1 Russ. & M. 203 ; Tam. 361; 8 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 63.

—— Trust to Accumulate—Substitution of Issue.]—Testator gave and devised all the residue of his real and personal estate to trustees, upon trust to pay his wife an annuity during her life or widowhood, and from time to time during the lifetime of his wife, or during the time of twenty-one years after his decease, which should first happen, to invest and accumulate the rest of the annual produce in their names ; and after the decease of his wife, or at the expiration of twenty-one years, whichever should first happen, he directed his trustees to sell his estate and to pay and divide the balance of the moneys arising therefrom, after providing for the annuity, if necessary, amongst all his children in equal shares, "the issue of any deceased child to take his, her, or their deceased parent's share." The testator died in 1877, leaving six children, who all survived him and were now living ; one only of the children had issue :—Held, that the six children took vested and indefeasible interests on the death of the testator. Bragger, In re, Bragger v. Bragger, 56 L. J., Ch. 490 ; 56 L. T. 521.

c. Immediate Severance of Principal.

Vested Interest at Testator's Death.]—Bequest of a particular stock upon trust to accumulate the dividends until A. attained twenty-five, and then to pay him over the whole :—Held, to give to A. an immediate vested interest, on the ground that the subject of the legacy was severed and set apart, although the trustees were also the executors, and on his attaining twenty-one the stock was ordered to be transferred to him. Saunders v. Vautier, Cr. & Ph. 240 ; 10 L. J., Ch. 354. Affirming 4 Beav. 115.

Legacies to be paid to the legatees "when or if" they attained the age of twenty-one, but which were to be severed from the estate and set apart in trust for the legatees immediately on the death of the testator, and the legacy of each invested on a separate deed :—Held, to be vested at the death of the testator. Lister v. Bradley, 1 Hare, 10 ; 11 L. J., Ch. 49 ; 5 Jur. 1034.

A. by will gave all his personal estate to trustees until W. should attain twenty-four, and from thenceforth, in trust for him, his executors, &c. W. lived till twenty-one, but died intestate before twenty-four : - Held, a vested interest in W. at A.'s death, and that the age of twenty-four was only directory as to the time of payment. Love v. L'Estrange, 5 Bro. P. C. 59.

—— Interim Income.] — Where a fund is severed immediately from a testator's death for the benefit of the objects of the gift, the interests are vested and carry the interim income, though the only gift is in a direction to pay at a future time. Dundas v. Wolfe Murray, 1 H. & M. 425 ; 1 N. R. 429 ; 32 L. J., Ch. 151 ; 11 W. R. 359.

Therefore, where, under a power of appointment over a fund, a testatrix directed the trustees, immediately after her death, to raise 5,000*l*., and to pay the same equally between five nephews and nieces, the shares of sons to be payable on their respectively attaining twenty-one, and of daughters at twenty-one or marriage respectively, with benefit of survivorship, and upon trust to apply the residue for the benefit of certain other persons :—Held, that the interests vested immediately on the death of the testatrix, and that the nephews and nieces were entitled to the interim income arising from their respective shares. Ib.

Gift of Interest for Maintenance—Severance from general Personal Estate.]—By a will a testator directed his executors to invest 1,000*l*., and with the interest to pay an annuity of 30*l*. to his wife for life, or until she should marry again, and directed the 1,000*l*. to be distributed, share and share alike, among all his children, to each respectively—if a son on his attaining twenty-four, and if a daughter, upon marriage with consent. The testator directed that a sum of 500*l*. should be invested for the benefit of his younger children in equal shares, to be paid to each, if a son, at the age of twenty-four, and if a daughter, on marriage with consent. The residue of his property, after certain other bequests, he bequeathed, in equal shares, to all his children upon attaining twenty-four respectively, and directed his executors to invest, for the maintenance of his children during their minorities, or if daughters, until their marriage, all the moneys to which they might respectively be entitled under his will :—Held, that the shares of the children in the 1,000*l*., in the 500*l*., and in the residue, vested on the testator's death. Brennan v. Brennan, [1894] 1 Ir. R. 69.

Where there is one gift of corpus and income as parts of a whole, a gift otherwise contingent will be vested : but where there are separate gifts, one of capital and one of income, not necessarily going together, the gift will not be deemed vested. Fox v. Fox (L. R. 19 Eq. 286, post, col. 1751) considered. Ib.

Direction to Accumulate at Death of Tenant for Life.]—Bequest of a residue to A. (who had no children) for life, and at his death 5,000*l.* to be deposited in the hands of trustees to accumulate for the use of A.'s eldest son, at his attaining the age of thirty years: the rest to be equally shared between him and the other children; the general division to take place as each respectively attained the age of twenty-four years:—Held, not void in any part, as the 5,000*l.* vested at the time of the severance and the shares of the residue must be taken to vest at the same time. Greet v. Greet, 5 Beav. 123.

Failure of Direction to Accumulate.] — A testator, by his will, made in 1821, bequeathed the residue of his personal estate and effects to trustees, upon trust to accumulate until the principal with the accumulations should amount to 3,000*l.* or thereabouts; and when and so soon as such principal and accumulations should amount to 3,000*l.*, or thereabouts, then he directed them to invest the same, and distribute the interest among certain persons for life; and after the decease of the survivor, to distribute the principal amongst the issue of such persons:—Held, that the gift of the fund was not void for remoteness, as, although the sum named might not be accumulated within the period allowed by law, there would be no suspension of vesting; the residue and accumulations, whatever the amount might be, would vest immediately on the death of the survivor of the tenants for life. Saunders v. Vautier (Cr. & Ph. 240) distinguished. Oddie v. Brown, 4 De G. & J. 179; 28 L. J., Ch. 542; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 635; 7 W. R. 472—C. A.

Direction to Invest if Tenant for Life Retired from Business or Married.]—A testator left all his real and personal estate to G., his executor, upon trust to raise out of the personal estate 1,500*l.*, and invest that sum, in the events which happened, for the use of his son, to be paid to him with interest on his attaining twenty-one; and in trust to raise 1,000*l.*, and hand it over to his wife in certain amounts therein specified; and he authorised G. to permit his wife to carry on his business, and to dispose of the profits for the maintenance of herself and his children; but if his wife should be desirous to retire from business, or in the event of her marrying, then upon trust to convert all his property not theretofore disposed of in raising the two sums of 1,500*l.* and 1,000*l.*, and invest the same for the use of his son, to be paid to him on attaining twenty-one; and, in the event of his son's death before twenty-one without leaving issue, to the use of his daughter, with provisions for maintenance; and, in the event of the death of both of his children before they attained twenty-one, to pay the wife 500*l.*, in addition to the sum of 1,000*l.*; and upon further trust, upon such events and contingencies, that G. should retain, to his own use and benefit, all the residue of his real and personal estate; and he bequeathed to his son all the residue of his personal estate for his own sole use and benefit. G. proved the will, and assented to all the bequests; the testator's son and daughter died in 1834, both infants, the son being the survivor, and administration to the son was granted to the plaintiff in 1871: the widow died in 1836, having married a second time, and G. died in 1869:—Held, first, that the testator's son took a vested interest in the 1,500*l.* O'Reilly v. Walsh, Ir. R. 6 Eq. 555.

Held, secondly, that G., by assenting to the legacy of 1,500*l.*, was an express trustee of it, so as to save the bar of the statute of limitations. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that G. was entitled to the residue for his own benefit. Ib.

Gift of Income Defeasible followed by Gift of Principal.]—A testatrix gave money, to become due on a policy, to trustees, one of whom she afterwards made her executor, upon trust to invest &c., and so long as her nephew should be solvent to pay him the dividends, until he attained twenty-five, so that his receipts alone might be good discharges, and that he might not deprive himself thereof by anticipation. If he attempted to do so, he was to lose the benefit of the provision, which was to go over to his family, if he had any, if not, to the testatrix's residuary estate. The payment of the dividends was to be half-yearly, and there was to be an apportionment of interest in case of the nephew's death between two days of payment. In case the policy moneys should not be paid immediately after her death, the trustees were to make up the first half-year's income out of her residuary personalty. The principal was to be paid to her nephew at twenty-five. There was a declaration that if the nephew should die under twenty-five, leaving children, the principal and interest should go to such children. There was also a clause for the advancement of the nephew. The nephew died a minor, and without having been married:—Held, that the legacy passed to his personal representative; and immediate payment was ordered, though at the date of the decree the nephew, if alive, would have been between twenty-one and twenty-five. Pearson v. Dolman, 36 L. J., Ch. 258; L. R. 3 Eq. 315; 15 W. R. 120.

d. Gift of Income followed by Gift of Principal.

In General.]—If the interest and dividends of a legacy are alone the subject of the bequest until a particular time, and the principal is not sooner taken out of the residue, but is directed for the first time to be taken out of it and paid to the legatee at the end of that period, the intermediate gift of the interest or dividends will not vest the capital. Cromek v. Lumb, 3 Y. & C. 565.

Gift to two executors and the survivor, of 1,000*l.* four per cents. in trust for A. and B., to pay them the dividends thereof from time to time, and from and after the decease of the executors, the 1,000*l.* to A. and B., their executors, &c., equally:—Held, that they took absolute equitable interest in the stock, as tenants in common, during the life of the executors, and that on their deaths they took absolute legal interests as tenants in common. Gardiner v. But, 3 Madd. 425.

A. gave B., his brother, the interest of 1,500*l.* for life, and the principal, after his decease, among the younger sons and daughters of B.; but if he should leave daughters only, then to be paid to them at twenty-one. B. had two daughters, one of whom married, and died in B.'s lifetime:—Held, that her husband was not entitled to her share as administrator. Billingsley v. Wills, 3 Atk. 219.

Gift of Income—Ultimate Gift at Twenty-one.]—A testatrix by her will devised and bequeathed all her real and personal estate to a trustee absolutely, upon trust to sell and convert into money, and thereout to pay her funeral and testamentary expenses and debts, and stand possessed of the residue upon trust to invest and apply the income "arising therefrom for or towards the maintenance and education of her two children" (naming them) "until they shall respectively attain the age of twenty-one years, and then to divide the trust funds equally between them as tenants in common." There were two children only, both illegitimate: one, a son, died a minor and unmarried, and if his share vested it went to the crown. On summons:—Held, that the gifts were separate, and the ultimate gift was contingent, and did not vest, but lapsed on the death of the son under twenty-one. Morris, In re, Salter v. Att.-Gen., 52 L. T. 840; 33 W. R. 895.

A testator, who had two sons and one daughter, gave the interest, dividends, and annual proceeds of 3,000*l.* stock, standing in his name, to W., one of his children, for life, and, after his decease, he gave the said principal stock or sum of 3,000*l.* unto all and every the child and children of W., to be equally divided between and amongst them, if more than one, share and share alike; and if but one, the whole to such one, to be paid or transferred to him, her, or them, on his, her, or their attaining twenty-one, and the interest to be in the meantime applied for maintenance and education. He gave similar legacies to each of his other two children and their children; "and upon the death of either of my said sons or daughter without issue, then I direct that the interest, dividends, and produce so as aforesaid given and bequeathed to him, her, or them, so dying, shall be paid and payable to the survivors or survivor of them my said sons and daughter in equal shares and proportions." The testator's son W. survived him, and had one child, who predeceased him:—Held, that the limitation over referred to the death of either of the testator's children without leaving issue living at his death; that the child of W. took a vested interest at his birth, but liable to be divested by the death of W., without leaving issue living at his death; and that the gift over therefore took effect. Westwood v. Southey, 2 Sim. (N.S.) 192; 21 L. J., Ch. 473; 16 Jur. 400.

A bequest of residuary estate to trustees to apply the interest to the education and maintenance of A. during her minority, and, when she has attained the age of twenty-one years, to the use of A. absolutely, does not give A. any vested interest till her full age is attained; and, if she dies during her minority, the residue goes to the next of kin of the testator. Russell v. ——, 1 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 69.

A testator gave all his real and personal estate to trustees to convert into money, and out of the proceeds of the conversion to pay various legacies and annuities, and he directed his trustees to hold the residue of his personal estate so converted into money, upon trust to pay the income for the benefit of his four natural children, or such of them as might be living at his decease, until they should attain twenty-one, and when they attained that age upon trust to pay or transfer the residue of his personal estate unto the four children in equal shares as tenants in common:—Held, that the shares of the four children did not vest till twenty-one, and that the share of one child who died under twenty-one was undisposed of, and passed as to the realty to the heir-at-law, and as to the personalty to the next of kin of the testator. Hanson v. Graham, post, col. 1645, distinguished. Leigh v. Leigh (17 Beav. 605) not followed. Spencer v. Wilson, 42 L. J., Ch. 754; L. R. 16 Eq. 501; 29 L. T. 19.

—— Payment of Capital at Twenty-four.]—A testator gave 5,000*l.* to trustees upon trust to invest, and to apply the income to or for the maintenance of a nephew till he should attain his age of twenty-four, and directed that when he attained that age the principal should be paid to him, and he made a gift over in case of the death of the nephew under that age. The legatee was an infant at the testator's death, and died an infant some years afterwards. The trustees raised the fund, and applied part of the income to his maintenance and education, and at his death they had in their hands an accumulation of income unapplied:—Held, that the legacy was vested at the testator's death, subject to be divested in the event which happened of the death of the legatee under the specified age, and that the whole of the income belonged to him during his life, and that his personal representative was entitled to the accumulations. Peek's Trusts, 42 L. J., Ch. 422; L. R. 16 Eq. 221; 21 W. R. 820.

—— Principal to be Transferred at Thirty-two.]—Testatrix gave to A. the dividends of 500*l.* stock, till he should attain the age of thirty-two; at which time she directed her executors to transfer the principal to him: the legacy does not vest till the age of thirty-two. Batsford v. Kebbell, 3 Ves. 363; 4 R. R. 15.

Postponement of Enjoyment of Principal—Interim Gift of Income.]—Property was assigned to trustees in trust for S. for life, and after her death to such of her issue as she should by will appoint. S. by her will appointed two-fifths of the property to two trustees of whom L. was the survivor in trust to pay the income to her son till he should attain the age of forty years, and then in trust for her son, his executors and administrators; provided that in case her son should assign his share in the property, then the appointment for his benefit should be void, and the two-fifths should be held in trust for the other objects of the power. The son died under the age of forty without having assigned his share, leaving a will of which B. was executor. After the death of S., L. and N. were appointed trustees of the original settlement. N. afterwards (with the consent of the son's executor) obtained possession of the son's share. Subsequently N. misappropriated the fund. The persons beneficially interested under the son's will recovered judgment against B. for wilful default in allowing the property to remain in N.'s hands; and B. being dead, his executor brought an action against L. to make him liable for the loss of the fund:—Held, on the construction of the will of S., that the beneficial interest in two-fifths of the property vested absolutely in her son and passed by his will. Scotney v. Lomer, 55 L. J., Ch. 443; 31 Ch. D. 380; 54 L. T. 194; 34 W. R. 407—C. A.

Income until Marriage—Corpus at Time of Marriage.]—A testatrix by her will, after specific bequests of bonds, gave all the rest of her stocks and shares upon trust to pay the income to G. until his marriage, and at the time of his marriage to hand over the stocks and shares to him:—Held, that G. took a vested interest under the gift, and, being of age, was entitled to have the stocks and shares comprised therein transferred to him, although he had not married. Batsford v. Kebbell, supra, distinguished; Bunn, In re, post. col. 1652, and Vize v. Stoney (2 Dr. & Wal. 659; 1 Dr. & War. 337) observed upon. Wrey, In re, Stuart v. Wrey, 54 L. J., Ch. 1098; 30 Ch. D. 507; 53 L. T. 334.

e. Income Expressly Given for Maintenance.

In General.]—Giving the interest of a legacy to the legatee, or for his maintenance, vests the legacy. Hoath v. Hoath, 2 Bro. C. C. 3.

A. devises 4,000*l.* to his son, to be paid at the age of twenty-five, and interest in the meantime, and he to have a maintenance thereout; and directs the 4,000*l.* to be raised out of a trust estate; this is a vested legacy. Cave v. Cave, 2 Vern. 508.

A direction for maintenance has not the same effect in favour of vesting, as giving interest. Hanson v. Graham, 6 Ves. 249; 5 R. R. 277.

Gift to Children on attaining Twenty-one—Intermediate Income for Maintenance.]—A gift to a class or an individual on attaining a given age, which standing alone is contingent, is vested if accompanied by a gift of the whole income for the benefit of the class or individual during the interval. Holt's Estate, In re, Bolding v. Strugnell, 45 L. J., Ch. 208; 34 L. T. 120; 24 W. R. 339.

A testatrix directed the trustees of her will, after the death of a tenant for life, to transfer a fund to the children of A., in equal shares, upon their respectively attaining twenty-one, the interest of the fund to be applied for their maintenance until they should respectively attain that age:—Held, that the gift of the interest created a vested interest in the capital. Ib.

The testator bequeathed to each of the children of his son R., who should be living at his (the testator's) death, and who should live to attain the age of twenty-one years, the sum of 100*l.*, the interest thereof in the meantime to be paid to their said father in aid of their maintenance and education. One of R.'s children, P., survived the testator, but died under twenty-one:—Held, that P.'s legacy vested, by force of the gift of the intermediate interest, and was payable to his personal representative. Byrne, In re, 23 L. R., Ir. 260.

And see Pearman v. Pearman, 33 Beav. 394.

A gift "to be transferred" to the legatee on his attaining twenty-one, with provisions for maintenance out of the income meanwhile, and a gift over on death under twenty-one, such gift being afterwards referred to by the testator as a contingent gift:—Held, to be vested before twenty-one so as to be forfeitable on conviction for felony. Bateman's Trusts, In re, 42 L. J., Ch. 553; L. R. 15 Eq. 355; 28 L. T. 395; 21 W. R. 435.

Gift to one for life, remainder to four persons named, with a proviso that the share of any legatee in remainder, who should die in the lifetime of the tenant for life leaving lawful issue, should be "assigned and transferred to such issue respectively, in equal shares and proportions on their attaining twenty-one; and the dividends and proceeds in the meantime to be applied in or towards their maintenance and education":—Held, that the gift of income, being to an entire class, for maintenance only, was not sufficient to vest the legacy in the issue before twenty-one. Ashmore's Trusts, In re, 39 L. J., Ch. 202; L. R. 9 Eq. 99.

A father assigned certain leasehold premises to a trustee, in trust for his son until he should attain the age of twenty-one years, and in the meantime to stand possessed thereof in trust, to collect and receive the rents and profits thereof, as, and when, the same should become payable, and thereupon to pay, apply, and dispose of the same for and towards the maintenance, education, clothing, and support of the said son during his minority; and upon his attaining the age of twenty-one years, upon trust to assign the said premises, together with the lease and the accumulation of rents, unto the said son, his executors, &c., for the remainder of the term:—Held, that the son took a vested interest in the lease, and on his death that it passed to his personal representatives. Stevens v. Frost, 2 Y. & C. 302; 6 L. J., Ex. Eq. 41.

A testator gave real estate in trust for his daughter E. for life, and on her death to sell and divide the produce among her children, with a direction to pay to the children on their attaining twenty-one, and a gift of the income in the meantime for maintenance; and in case E. should die without leaving any children, he gave the property over. He afterwards gave other real estate to his sons T. and M., and the survivor for life, remainder in trust to sell and divide among their children in the same manner at the same ages, and the interest to be applied in the meantime in a similar manner in every respect, as in the case of the trust for E.'s children:—Held, that children, whether of E., T., or M., took vested interests at birth. Shrimpton v. Shrimpton, 31 Beav. 425; 11 W. R. 61.

Bequest of 1,000*l.* to A., upon trust to lay the same out in consols and pay the interest and dividends to B. for life; and immediately after her decease, upon trust that the said stock should be transferred to B.'s daughter C., in case she should then have attained the age of twenty-one years, for her absolute use and benefit; but in case the said C. should not have attained the age of twenty-one years at the decease of her said mother, then upon trust to pay and apply the said interest and dividends, as the same should become due and payable, for the maintenance and support of the said C., until she should attain the age of twenty-one years, and upon the attainment thereof, upon trust to transfer the said stock or fund to the said C. for her use and benefit. B. and C. survived the testator. Afterwards C. died in the lifetime of B. without having attained the age of twenty-one years:—Held, that C. took a vested interest in the 1,000*l.* Hammond v. Maule, 1 Coll. C. C. 281; 13 L. J., Ch. 386; 8 Jur. 568.

Bequest of a sum to trustees to pay the interest to testator's son's wife, for the benefit of herself and husband and children during his son's life, and after his death for the benefit of the wife and children, and at her death to be equally divided among the latter if they should have attained twenty-one, and if not the interest to be applied for their maintenance; and in case of the wife marrying again, the children were to receive their shares at twenty-one:—Held, that their shares did not vest until they attained twenty-one. Taylor v. Bacon, 8 Sim. 100.

A testator directed that certain funds should be payable to children on their arriving at the age of twenty-one, and that his trustee should in the meantime pay and apply the interest towards the maintenance of such children until their respective shares should become payable; and that it should be lawful to apply the whole or any part of the principal to which any infant might be entitled under the provisions thereinbefore contained, at any earlier period than the same would become vested or payable by virtue of such provision, for the advancement of such infant:—Held, that the representatives of a child who died under the age of twenty-one were not entitled to the interest accrued during his minority. Skaife v. Stewart, 10 Jur. 299.

A testator directed that a residuary fund should be held in trust for the children of his two nieces, M. and E., "to be equally divided amongst the children, or the survivors of them, as they attain their majority; and in the meantime," that the interest of such ultimate residue should be "from time to time paid to my two nieces in proportion to the number of the children each may have at the time such interest becomes due and payable, for the use and education of such children":—Held, that the children took vested interests, defeasible in the event of their not attaining full age. Vining v. Wright, 3 L. T. 287.

—— Twenty-one or Marriage—Accumulation of Residue.]—Legacies were given by a testator "to each of my children, who, being sons, shall attain the age of twenty-one years, and being daughters shall attain that age or marry under that age with the consent of her guardian or guardians," of 1,000*l.*, with power to the trustees of the will if any of the sons should not have attained twenty-one, or any of the daughters should not have attained that age or married, to apply the whole or part of the interest and income of the legacies to which any of the children should be entitled in expectancy during the minority of the sons respectively and the minority and discoverture of the daughters respectively, for his or her maintenance or education as they should think fit. The will contained a direction to accumulate the residue of the interest and income by investing the same for the benefit of those who should be entitled to the principal, and a proviso, if any of the sons or daughters should marry any person not a Protestant, revoking the bequests of the children so offending, and giving them over equally amongst all the others of the children, sons at twenty-one and daughters at twenty-one or marriage with such consent. One of the daughters died under twenty-one and unmarried:—Held, that her legacy did not vest. Wilson v. Knox, 13 L. R. Ir. 349. See Bevan's Trusts, In re, 56 L. J., Ch. 652; 34 Ch. D. 716; 56 L. T. 277; 35 W. R. 400.

—— Gift to Children attaining Twenty-five.]—Gift to A. for life, and after his death to all his children who should be living at his death, and who should attain the age of twenty-five years; with a direction to apply the whole income in maintenance:—Held, that the gift was not void for remoteness, the tenant for life having died in the lifetime of the testator. Southern v. Wollaston, 16 Beav. 166; 22 L. J., Ch. 664; 1 W. R. 86.

Gift by will to daughters for life, and afterwards to "pay and divide" amongst their issue (children) then living, at twenty-five, the whole interest being given in the meantime for their maintenance during minority:—Held, that the age of twenty-five referred to the period of distribution and not of vesting. Tatham v. Vernon, 29 Beav. 604; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 815; 4 L. T. 531; 9 W. R. 822.

A testator gave all his real estate to his mother for life, and after her death to his executors, upon trust to sell, and to stand possessed of the proceeds of such sale upon trust to pay to his natural daughter H. 500*l.* when she should attain twenty-five; and the testator "directed that the legacy should carry interest from the time of his mother's decease, which interest should be paid in and towards the maintenance, education, and support of his natural daughter until she should attain the age of twenty-five." He then gave two other legacies; and, subject as aforesaid, he directed that the trust moneys should be for the benefit of the persons mentioned in his will. He died in 1849, and his mother died in 1850. After the death of his mother the real estate was sold. H. died in 1857, at the age of twenty-three:—Held, that the legacy was vested in H., although she died under twenty-five. Hart's Trusts, In re, 3 De G. & J. 195; 28 L. J., Ch. 7; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 1264; 7 W. R. 28.

Bequest to A. for life, with remainder to her children who should attain twenty-five, with a clause for maintenance during minority and for accumulation of surplus income:—Held, that the gift to the children was not void for remoteness. Bute (Marquis) v. Harman, 9 Beav. 320.

The marginal note of this case is incorrect, the bequest having been held void for remoteness. See Southern v. Wollaston, supra.

A gift of personalty to trustees for A. for life, and after his death in trust for the children of A., "as they severally attained twenty-five years," the income to be applied during their respective minorities by their guardian for their maintenance, &c., with a gift over, in case no child of A. should live to attain twenty-five:—Held, to be vested, and not too remote. Davies v. Fisher, 5 Beav. 201; 11 L. J., Ch. 338; 6 Jur. 248.

Gift of Income for Maintenance and Education—Direction to Pay at Twenty-one.]—A testatrix, who died in 1867, by her will dated in 1865, devised and bequeathed her real estate and the residue of her personal estate to trustees upon trust for sale and conversion, and after payment of her debts and certain legacies, upon trust to divide the residue of the income of her personal estate and the rents of her real estate until sold, into nine equal shares. The testatrix disposed of one of such shares in the following manner: As to one other equal ninth part or share of such dividends, rents and interest, upon trust to pay or apply the same for and towards the maintenance and education of A., B., and C.; and as and when they should respectively attain the ages of twenty-one years, upon trust to pay them in equal shares one equal ninth part or share of such principal moneys and the dividends and interest which might accrue due thereon. A. died in the lifetime of the testatrix. B. survived the testatrix, but died under twenty-one. C. survived the testatrix and attained twenty-one:—Held, that the gift was contingent and not vested, and that therefore B.'s share lapsed. Martin, In re, Tuke v. Gilbert, 57 L. T. 471.

The testator directed his personalty to be invested for the sole use and maintenance of his daughter until she arrived at twenty-one; and when she attained twenty-one the remainder to be paid to the daughter. She died under twenty-one :—Held, a vested interest. Rose v. Sowerby, Tam. 376.

Bequest to A. for his second daughter, that he shall have born, for her education, till she shall attain the age of twenty-one ; and after she shall attain the age of twenty-one, to her and her heirs for ever, she being christened Z. ; and in default of such issue, over. Another bequest to A. till the said second daughter shall attain twenty-one, and after she shall attain twenty-one, to her and her heirs for ever. Both vested in a second daughter, the third child, christened Z., though she died under twenty-one. Lane v. Goudge, 9 Ves. 225 ; 7 R. R. 163.

A husband bequeathed the residue of his personalty to trustees in trust to permit his wife to carry on his business until his son should attain twenty-one, the wife maintaining all his children in the interim, and then after a trust to pay her 100*l.*, in trust for the son for his own use and benefit :—Held, that the son's attaining twenty-one was a condition precedent, and that as he died under that age he took no vested interest in the bequest. Sullivan v. Edgell, 23 W. R. 722.

Testator gave 5,000*l.* to trustees in trust for his daughter E., for life, and after her death, in trust to apply the interest for the maintenance of all her children as should be living at her death, during their minorities, and, on their attaining twenty-one, in trust to transfer the same equally between them. But if E. should die without leaving any such child, or leaving such they should all die under twenty-one, then to transfer the same unto such children of F. as should be living at E.'s death without issue. One of E.'s children attained twenty-one, but died in E.'s lifetime :—Held, that that child did not take a vested interest. Tucker v. Harris, 5 Sim. 538 ; 2 L. J., Ch. 18.

A testator directed his trustees to pay the interest of 2,500*l.* to his daughter for life for her separate use, and after her death for the maintenance of all her children until they should attain twenty-one, and then the principal to be equally divided amongst her said children ; and if his daughter should die without leaving a child, then that the principal should be divided amongst all his own children then living. The daughter had children, but they all died under twenty-one :—Held, nevertheless, that the legacy vested in them. Parker v. Golding, 13 Sim. 418.

A testator directed the interest of his residue to be applied to the maintenance and support of his son, and his son's wife and children, and after the death of the survivor of his son and wife, he directed such interest to be applied by his executors, in the support of and bringing up the child and children of his son during their minority or minorities, and as they severally attained twenty-one he gave and bequeathed the share of each to be paid to her or him, and in case only one of such children should live to attain twenty-one, then he gave the whole to such one child absolutely :—Held, that the gift to the children was contingent on their attaining twenty-one. Tracey v. Butcher, 24 Beav. 438.

—— Benefit of Survivorship.]—A testator gave the residue of his real and personal property to trustees to sell and stand possessed of the proceeds upon trust to pay the dividends and interest thereof to his wife for life, to be by her expended in or about the maintenance of herself and the maintenance and education of his children, and after the decease of his wife he gave the principal of the estate unto and amongst all his children equally, and to be paid to them as they should severally attain twenty-one, with benefit of survivorship amongst them. There were seven children ; and two of them upon attaining twenty-one, while four of the others were yet infants, petitioned jointly with the mother that the amount of their shares might be paid to them for their advancement in the world :—Held, that the shares became vested upon the children attaining twenty-one, and though the court would not usually sanction the payment of the shares, where the whole income was not ample for the maintenance of the children, yet such a course might be adopted here upon the undertaking of the two children to secure to the mother the dividends which would have accrued in respect of those sums. Berry v. Bryant, 2 Dr. & Sm. 1 ; 31 L. J., Ch. 327 ; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 69 ; 5 L. T. 818 ; 10 W. R. 242.

—— Indefinite Gift of Income.] — Testator gave to his daughter A. residue of funded property and his leasehold estates for her life, and in case of A.'s decease, he directed his trustees to receive "the dividends, interest, and produce of his said funds, and also the rents and profits of" his leasehold estates, "to pay a sufficient part thereof for and towards the maintenance, education, support, and bringing up" of A's children until they should attain their ages of twenty-one years, and on their severally attaining that age, "to pay, assign, transfer, and convey all the said residue and remainder of the said dividends, interest, and produce of the said funds, and the rents of his said leasehold messuages, as shall not have been applied for and towards the maintenance and education of the said children as aforesaid equally unto and amongst all the children" of his said daughter A. A. died, leaving B., her only child, her surviving. On bill filed by B. against trustees :—Held, that the indefinite gift of income is tantamount to a gift of the corpus. Fisher v. Mair, 8 W. R. 108.

—— When Youngest attained Twenty-one.]—Bequest to executors in trust, to sell, &c., and apply so much of interest, &c., for maintenance, &c., of testator's five children, and the surplus to accumulate to pay each child at twenty-one 2,500*l.*, and if there should be any surplus after such payments, to pay and divide it amongst the five children, or such of them as should be living when the youngest attained twenty-one ; and in case any of them died under twenty-one having issue, his share should go to the children ; with benefit of survivorship amongst the five children, in case of one dying without issue :—Held, that one dying after twenty-one, and before youngest had attained twenty-one (though with issue), took no vested interest in the surplus. Howes v. Herring, M'Cle. & Y. 295.

A testator bequeathed leaseholds in trust for his wife for life, and, after her decease, to apply the rents for the maintenance and education of all his children living at his decease ; and after all his children should attain twenty-one, upon trust to sell, and pay, and divide amongst all his children ; and if but one, or but one surviving child, the whole to such child :—Held, that all the children who survived the father took vested interests. Boulton v. Pilcher, 29 Beav. 633 ; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 767 ; 4 L. T. 426 ; 9 W. R. 626.

B. by his will gave to his wife certain property for life or during widowhood, with remainder to trustees upon trust to pay the rents to M. C. for life, and after her death for the maintenance of any children she might have until the youngest attained twenty-one, with remainder upon trust to sell, to distribute, and divide the proceeds among such children equally; and if one, the whole to such one. But in case M. C. should die without issue, or such issue should not attain twenty-one, then the testator gave such property to his son W. B. in fee. Then followed gifts of other property charged in various ways, with a general gift of residuary realty and personalty, upon trust to lay out the same and pay the interest to M. C. for life, her receipt to be a good discharge; and after her decease, for the education of her children until the youngest attained twenty-one, when the moneys should be equally divided among them, and if one, the whole to that one; but in case M. C. should die without issue, or if such issue should not attain twenty-one, the whole to go over to testator's son W. B. absolutely. On the question whether M. C.'s children dying under twenty-one, took:—Held, that they did not. Davenhill v. Davenhill, 5 W. R. 18.

—— Twenty-one or Marriage.]—A father devised his property upon trust for his daughter for life, and after her death upon trust to sell and invest, and to pay the income "during the minorities of her children towards their respective maintenance," and declared that as and when his grandchildren should severally attain twenty-one years, or, if females, marry, his trustees should pay, assign, and transfer unto such grandchild so attaining twenty-one, or marrying, an equal share of the trust funds per stirpes according to the number of grandchildren living at the death of his daughter. She had five children, all of whom survived her, and two of whom died in infancy:— Held, that all her children took absolute vested interests, and that the legal personal representative of the two who died was entitled to their shares. Perrott v. Davies, 38 L. T. 52.

—— Children to Receive Principal and Interest at Twenty-two.]—A testator directed the proceeds of his real estate to be invested in stock upon trust to pay the dividends to his two daughters in equal shares during their natural lives, and "from and after their decease to go to their respective children for their support and maintenance until they shall attain the age of twenty-two years severally, they to receive the principal and interest as they attain such age, in equal shares"; should either die before twenty-two, the shares of either of them so dying before the attainment of such age to be equally divided among the survivors or survivor of them:—Held, that the children took vested interests. The divesting clause was held to be void. Hobbs v. Parsons, 2 Sm. & G. 212; 2 W. R. 347. But see Vawdry v. Geddes. 1 Russ. & M. 203; Tam. 361; 8 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 63, post, col. 1656.

—— On Children Attaining Twenty-four.]—A testator gave 3,000*l.* to trustees, upon trust to pay the interest to A. during her life, and, after her decease, to apply the interest to the maintenance of the children she has at the date of the will, and the survivors of them, till they attained twenty-four respectively, and, upon their respectively attaining that age, to transfer their shares to each of them; the share of any one dying to go to the survivors, upon their attaining twenty-four, with a direction, that, if none of the children should be living at A.'s death, or if none of them should attain twenty-four, the 3,000*l.* should go over: of those children only one attained twenty-four, but he died in A.'s lifetime:—Held, that the fund vested in him absolutely. Langslow v. Butts, 5 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 166.

—— Minority till Twenty-five.]—Testator gave his real and residuary personal estate, in trust to pay an annuity to his nephew, and, subject thereto, in trust for his daughter for life, remainder in trust to pay the income for the maintenance of all and every such child or children as she might leave at her decease during his, her, or their minority; and, when the youngest should have attained twenty-five, to pay, assign, and transfer the income, together with the principal, to the children, the same to be divided equally between them, share and share alike; but if any of them should die leaving a child or children who should attain twenty-one, then to pay and assign the share of such child to such his or their child or children: and the testator then expressed his further will to be that his trustees should, immediately after his nephew's decease, convey, release, and assign all his freehold and leasehold estates unto the heir or heirs who should be legally entitled thereto; and in case his daughter should leave no child or children, or they should die under age and unmarried, then in trust to pay and assign the income together with the whole residue, unto and equally between his next of kin. The daughter left five children living at her death, all of whom attained twenty-five:—Held, that the trust for them was not void for remoteness, but that they took vested interests in the trust property on their mother's death. Milroy v. Milroy, 14 Sim. 48; 13 L. J., Ch. 266; 8 Jur. 234.

Bequest of residue upon trust to apply such part as the trustees should think fit for maintenance of A. until twenty-one, then to pay her out of income 500*l.* a-year until twenty-five, and then A. for life, and after her death for all her children, until they should respectively attain twenty-five, then for such children so attaining twenty-five, with a gift over. Similar bequests of leaseholds, except that it concluded with an absolute life interest in A.:—Held, that the children of A. took vested interests at birth, and that the gift over was void for remoteness. Hardcastle v. Hardcastle, 1 H. & M. 405; 1 N. R. 83; 7 L. T. 503.

—— Direction to Pay at Thirty.]—A testator bequeathed his residuary personal estate to trustees in trust for conversion and investment, and to pay the income to B. for his maintenance and until he should attain the age of thirty; and upon his attaining that age to pay or transfer the capital to him absolutely. B. survived the testator and died under thirty:—Held, that B. took a vested interest. Bunn, In re, Isaacson v. Webster, 16 Ch. D. 47; 29 W. R. 348.

f. Fixed Sum Given for Maintenance.

Maintenance till Twenty-one or Marriage—Death before Either Event.]—Direction to executors to apply 25*l.* per annum for the maintenance of testator's natural daughter, till twenty-one or marriage, which should first happen, when his executors were thereby required to pay to her 500*l.* She died under twenty-one, and unmarried:—Held, that the legacy failed. Watson v. Hayes, 5 Myl. & Cr. 125; 9 L. J., Ch. 49; 4 Jur. 186. Reversing on this point, 9 Sim. 500. And see Grimshaw's Trusts, In re, infra.

Maintenance on Attaining Twenty-one.]—A testator gave his property, after the death of his wife, to trustees, on trust to pay the interest and profits to his two daughters, J. and E., to their separate use, with a direction to pay to and apply for the benefit of A., the son of E., 200*l.* annually, when he attained the age of twenty-one years, and before that period, such part of the 200*l.* bequeathed to him as might be judged proper; he then gave his daughters power to dispose of the principal by will to their children or grandchildren respectively, "except that proportion of principal given to E., and from which the interest is to arise to my grandson, viz. 4,000*l.*, which sum shall be my grandson's property"; and, in case either of the daughters died without issue, he limited her share of the fund over to the other daughter, her children or grandchildren. A. having attained twenty-one, and died in his mother's lifetime:—Held, that the annuities ceased upon his death, but that the 4,000*l.* vested in him. Livesey v. Livesey, 3 Russ. 542; 7 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 120—L. C. But see Bass v. Russell, Tam. 18; 7 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 177.

Bequest of "120*l.* per annum, (that is to say) the interest of 4,000*l.* of my 3 per cent. consols" to A., and a direction that the interest, as it becomes due, be added to the principal, till A. attains twenty-one, except 20*l.* per annum for clothes, gives a vested interest. Stretch v. Watkins, 1 Madd. 253.

Legacy payable at twenty-one, with a certain allowance in the meantime. The legatee dies before twenty-one. His administrator not entitled to the legacy till such time as he would have attained twenty-one. Roden v. Smith, Amb. 588.

See also next Subdivision.

g. Part of Income Given for Maintenance.

Outstanding Charges—Debts.]—Devise, charged with debts to trustees and their heirs; in trust to receive, &c., the rents, &c., and thereout to support and educate the devisor's son, till the age of twenty-one; and then to him:—Held, not a use executed in the son before twenty-one. Bailey v. Ekins, 7 Ves. 322.

—— Annuity.]—A testator bequeathed a fund, which was to be produced by the conversion into money of the residue of his real and personal estate, to trustees, upon trust to pay the interest of one moiety to his daughter, for her separate use during her life; and, after her death, to pay 100*l.* a-year to her husband during his life, and to apply the remainder of the dividends to the maintenance and education of all and every her children, until they attained twenty-one respectively, and when they attained their respective ages of twenty-one, upon trust to pay the principal to them in equal shares: the mother survived the testator, and left two children, who died under twenty-one. The moiety of the residue vested in these children. Jones v. Machilwain, 1 Russ. 220; 25 R. R. 32.

A testator gave a portion of his personal property to trustees, to invest the same in the securities therein mentioned, and pay out of the proceeds an annuity of 5*l.* to P., and apply the residue of the interest towards the maintenance and education of C. until twenty-one, and on his attaining that age to transfer the principal of the trust moneys charged with the annuity of 5*l.* unto C. absolutely. But if C. should die before twenty-one, and during the life of P., then the trustees were to pay P. for life an annuity of 10*l.* in lieu of the 5*l.*, and to pay the remainder of the interest during the life of P., as well as the principal after her death, to a third person absolutely. P., the annuitant, died before C., but C. died a minor:—Held, that the gift to C. was an absolute vested interest in him, and notwithstanding he died under twenty-one, the estate was not divested, since the precise contingency of C. dying under twenty-one and during the life of P., never happened; that consequently the representatives of C. were entitled to the property. Potts v. Atherton, 28 L. J., Ch. 486; 7 W. R. 331.

h. Power or Discretion to Apply Whole or Part of Income for Maintenance.

Trust to Assign to Children when they Attain Twenty-one—Maintenance during Minority.]—A testator gave the residue of his property to trustees to assign and transfer the same to and amongst all and every such child or children of M. as should be living at his (testator's) decease, to be equally divided among them if more than one when they should attain the age of twenty-one; and if there should be but one who should attain the age of twenty-one, then the whole to such child absolutely. Power of maintenance during minority was given to the trustees; and during the suspense of absolute vesting the residue of the annual proceeds was to be accumulated for the benefit of the persons who should become entitled to the principal:—Held, that no child of M. who did not attain twenty-one could take a vested interest. Merry v. Hill, L. R. 8 Eq. 619; 17 W. R. 985.

A testator gave the residue of his property to trustees to pay the income of a moiety to one of his daughters for life, and after her death as to such moiety, and the income thenceforth to become due for the same, upon trust for all her children who should be alive at her death, when and as they should attain twenty-one, in equal shares, with powers of maintenance and advancement:—Held, that the shares vested at the testator's death, and accordingly that the share of a child who was alive at his death, but died under twenty-one, was payable to her representative. Downe's Trust, In re, 23 L. T. 588.

A power to the trustees of a will "to apply the whole or such part as they shall think fit of the annual income of the share or presumptive share" of residuary legatees "during minority for or towards their education or maintenance" will not vest legacies or shares of residue that are contingent on the legatees attaining the age of twenty-one years. Fox v. Fox, infra, criticised and not followed. Wintle, In re, Tucker v. Wintle, 65 L. J., Ch. 863; [1896] 2 Ch. 711; 75 L. T. 207; 45 W. R. 91.

Gift of Income for Maintenance—Gift to Children at Twenty-one.]—Testator gave to trustees a sum of money upon trust to pay the income unto A. B. and his wife during their joint lives, and to the survivor for life, and after the decease of the survivor to apply the income thereof, or of so much thereof as they should think proper, in the maintenance, education, and bringing up of their child or children during their minorities, and upon their attainment of the age of twenty-one years to pay and divide the principal sum, with the accumulations thereof, unto and equally amongst such child or children, and in case there should be no child, unto A. B., his executors, &c. Two out of four children, the issue of the marriage, died infants without having been married, and one child attained the age of twenty-one years, and died intestate without having been married :—Held, that the shares of the children did not vest till they attained the age of twenty-one years, and that the surviving child, who attained the age of twenty-one years and married, was entitled to the deceased children's shares. Watson v. Hayes, supra, followed, and Fox v. Fox infra, distinguished. Grimshaw's Trusts, In re, 48 L. J., Ch. 399 ; 11 Ch. D. 406 ; 27 W. R. 544.

A bequest of a legacy, upon trust to apply so much of the interest as the trustees should think proper in the maintenance of the testator's grandson until twenty-one ; and, upon his attaining that age, to pay the whole of the interest of the legacy to the grandson, for his life : and a direction that, after the decease of the grandson, the trustees were to stand possessed of the legacy and interest, and all accumulations, in trust for the grandson's children, with remainder, in default of such issue, over :—Held, that the provision for the maintenance of the grandson during his minority, out of the interest of the legacy, showed that the interest was intended for him ; that the legacy vested in interest (although not in enjoyment,) before the grandson attained twenty-one ; and that the grandson was therefore entitled to the interest which accrued during his minority, and was not applied in his maintenance ; that the unapplied accumulations accruing during the minority of the grandson did not go with the capital of the legacy, because the disposition of the capital after the grandson attained twenty-one was of the interest and certain specific accumulations, not including the accumulations during the minority. Rouse's Estate, In re, 9 Hare, 649.

A testatrix gave her residuary real and personal estate to trustees in trust for sale and conversion and investment of the proceeds, and to hold the investments upon trust to pay the income thereof, "or such part thereof as her said trustees" should "from time to time deem expedient," in or towards the maintenance and education of her children until they should attain their respective ages of twenty-one years ; and from and immediately after their attaining their respective ages of twenty-one years, then upon trust to pay and transfer the capital to her said children in equal shares, and to settle each daughter's "share whether original or accruing" ; and the testatrix empowered her trustees to dispose of any competent part, not exceeding one-half, of "the presumptive share of any of her children," for their advancement in life. The testatrix left three children, of whom two attained twenty-one, and the third died an infant :—Held, that the infant did not take a vested interest in his one-third share of the residuary estate of the testatrix. Fox v. Fox, infra, distinguished. Parker, In re, Barker v. Barker, 16 Ch. D. 44. And see Mervin, In re, Mervin v. Crossman, 60 L. J., Ch. 671 ; [1891] 3 Ch. 197 ; 65 L. T. 186; 39 W. R. 697.

Discretionary Trust for Maintenance till youngest Child attains Twenty-one—Assignable Interest.]—A testator directed his trustees, after the death of his wife, to apply the income of his estate "in and towards the maintenance, education, and advancement of my children in such manner as they shall deem most expedient until the youngest of my said children attains the age of twenty-one years," and on the happening of that event he directed them to divide his estate equally among all his children then living. The testator left four children, two of whom at the death of the widow in 1884 were of age, and the youngest was in his seventh year. After the decease of the widow, the trustees paid each of the adult children one-fourth of the income, and applied the other two-fourths for the benefit of the minors equally till 1886, when J. S. C., the eldest son, made an absolute assignment for value of all his interest under the testator's will to H. The trustees declining to pay one-fourth of the income to H. he took out a summons to have the construction of the will determined :—Held, that no child of the testator was entitled, prior to the attainment of twenty-one by the youngest of the testator's children, to the payment of any part of the income, and that the trustees were entitled to apply the income for the maintenance, education, or advancement of the children, including J. S. C., in their absolute discretion ; that H. was entitled to no interest in the income except such moneys or property, if any, as might be paid or delivered or appropriated for payment or delivery by the trustees to J. S. C. Coleman, In re, Henry v. Strong, 58 L. J., Ch. 226 ; 39 Ch. D. 443 ; 60 L. T. 127—C. A. But see Blackmore v. Snee, 1 De G. & J. 455.

Testator directed his trustees and executors to apply the income of his residuary estate for the maintenance, &c., of all his children, and to accumulate the surplus for their benefit, until the youngest should attain twenty-one, and then to divide the capital into as many equal shares as there should be children then living, one to be allotted to each, and to the issue of such as should be then dead, such issue taking their parents' share, the shares of sons to be paid, to them or their issue, on his youngest child attaining twenty-one, and the shares of daughters to remain in the hands of his trustees, upon trust to pay the interest for their lives for their separate use, and on the decease of each daughter or in case any of them should be dead leaving issue when his youngest child should attain twenty-one, then he directed his trustees to pay the share of each such daughter to her issue. One of the daughters who was living when the youngest child attained twenty-one, died a spinster :—Held, that she took an absolute interest in a share of the residue. Hulme v. Hulme, 9 Sim. 644.

Trust for Children at Twenty-two.]—Gift of residue of real and personal estate to A. for life, and after her decease, in trust for all her sons and daughters who should attain twenty-two equally, with a power to apply the "annual income or fund" for their maintenance or "benefit" during their "minority" :—Held, void for remoteness. Thomas v. Wilberforce, 31 Beav. 299.

A testatrix gave the interest of her residuary estate to her four sisters during their lives, and directed that, on their deaths, the interest of their respective shares should, at the discretion of her executor, be applied to the maintenance and education, or accumulated for the benefit of the children of each of them so dying, until such children should respectively attain the age of twenty-two years, when they were to be entitled to their mother's share of the principal; with limitations over, in the event of the death of any of them under that age:—Held, that the children of the sisters were not to take a vested interest till they attained twenty-two, and that all the gifts, subsequent to the life estates given to the sisters, were void, as being too remote. Vawdry v. Geddes, 1 Russ. & M. 203; Tam. 361; 8 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 63.

Trust for Children Attaining Twenty-three or Marrying Under.]—A testator gave the residue of his property to A. for life, with remainder to her children as she should appoint, and subject thereto, in trust for all the children of A. who should attain twenty-three or marry under; the will contained provisoes giving a discretionary power to the trustees to apply all or any part of the income of any share for maintenance and education during minority, and directing that the surplus income should be accumulated, such accumulation to be added to the principal of the share whence the same should have arisen, with a further discretionary power to apply the accumulated fund or any part thereof also for maintenance and education:—Held, that the gift to the children of A., in default of appointment, was void for remoteness. Bowyer v. West, 24 L. T. 414; 19 W. R. 598.

Trust to Transfer to Children at Twenty-five.]—Gift to trustees upon trust to permit A. to take the rents and profits for life, and after his decease in trust for all and every the children or child of A. who should live to attain twenty-five, but not otherwise: with a direction to the trustees to apply the annual income of the trust estates and premises for the use and benefit of the children of A. until they should severally attain the age of twenty-five:—Held, void for remoteness. Cam v. Salmon, 5 W. R. 31.

Where a testator gave residue to his four children, with a gift over to the survivors or survivor, in the event of any of them dying under twenty-five, and appointed guardians "during their respective minorities," and gave a power to apply accumulations of income of each child's share, "during his minority," in maintenance, &c.:—Held, that the word "minority" was used in its ordinary sense, and that each child was absolutely entitled to the income of his share, between the ages of twenty-one and twenty-five years. Fraser v. Fraser, 1 N. R. 430; 8 L. T. 20.

A testator directed his trustees to raise 15,000*l.*, and after the determination of certain prior life interests given to T. and his widow to divide and transfer one-fifth of the fund to and amongst the children of T. equally as and when they should respectively attain the age of twenty-five, applying from time to time the income of the presumptive share of each child, or so much as the trustees for the time being might think fit, for his and her maintenance and education until such share should become payable as aforesaid; but if T. should leave no children him surviving, or if he should, and they should all die before attaining the age of twenty-one, then to pay and transfer the said fifth part to the other persons therein referred to:—Held, that the children of T. took vested interests, and consequently that the gift to them was not void for remoteness. Pulsford v. Hunter (3 Bro. C. C. 416), and Ashmore's Trusts, In re (L. R. 9 Eq. 99, ante, col. 1645) dissented from, and not followed. Fox v. Fox, L. R. 19 Eq. 286; 23 W. R. 314. And see Brennan v. Brennan, [1894] 1 Ir. R. 69, ante, col. 1640. But see Wintle, In re, supra.

A testator directed his trustees to hold a trust fund upon trust for "all his children or any his child who being sons or a son should attain twenty-five, or being daughters or a daughter should attain twenty-one or marry, and if more than one, in equal shares, and to be divided and paid on the youngest of his said children attaining twenty-one"; and he empowered his trustees to apply "the whole or such part as they should think fit of the annual income to which any child should be entitled in expectancy towards the maintenance or education of such child." The testator had only two children, the elder a son, and the younger a daughter. Upon petition by the son, presented after the daughter had attained twenty-one but before he had himself attained twenty-five:—Held, that his interest under the will was not vested, but contingent on his attaining twenty-five. Fox v. Fox, supra, distinguished. Dewar v. Brooke, 49 L. J., Ch. 374; 14 Ch. D. 529; 28 W. R. 613.

Bequest to trustees, upon trust to pay to each of the testator's children who should be living at his death, as and when they attained twenty-five, the sum of 3,000*l.* absolutely, with a power for the trustees to apply all or any part of the income of the shares of the children for their maintenance or education till twenty-five:—Held, to give the children vested interests at the testator's death. Eccles v. Birkett, 4 De G. & Sm. 105; 19 L. J., Ch. 280; 14 Jur. 800.

Maintenance until Twenty-six—Account of Rents between Twenty-one and Twenty-six.]—Testator devised to trustees, in trust for N. and the heirs of his body, and to pay such sums out of rents for maintenance as B. should appoint: by codicil, he directs trustees, during N.'s minority, to pay rents to plaintiff, so much as she pleases for his maintenance, and the residue to her own use: by another codicil, he directs trustees shall not settle the estate on N. and the heirs of his body, till twenty-six, and till then such maintenance as trustees and plaintiff shall think fit:—Held, that rents vested in N. at twenty-one, and the time of receiving only prolonged till twenty-six; and trustees decreed to account for rents, &c., from N.'s age of twenty-one to twenty-six. Smith v. Newport, 2 Atk. 344.

i. Power to make Advances.

Gift to Children at Twenty-one.]—Held, that a bequest of personal estate, to be equally divided among the children of the testator, as a class, "on their attaining twenty-one," with a power of advancement to them "out of their respective portions," carried an immediate vested interest. Vivian v. Mills, 1 Beav. 315; 8 L. J., Ch. 239.

Bequest of residuary estate upon trust for testator's wife during her widowhood, and after her decease or second marriage in trust for all and every his child and children who should be living at his decease as tenants in common, to become vested in them respectively after the decease or second marriage of his wife when and as they should severally attain twenty-one, with interest on their respective shares for maintenance and education in the meantime, and with equal benefit of survivorship in case of the death of any of them under age and without issue; with gift over, in case of the death of any of the testator's children in his lifetime or during the widowhood of his wife, leaving issue who should survive the decease or second marriage of testator's wife, to such issue of their parent's share. And the testator empowered his wife to advance to all or any of his children such sums as she might think advisable for their advancement in life, and to take their promissory note or receipt for the same; and declared that such advances should be received by his children and accounted for to his executors as part of their share of the estate, to which they would be entitled at the decease or second marriage of his wife, such advances not to exceed one-half of what they would at the time of such advances be considered as likely to be entitled to at the death or second marriage of testator's wife:—Held, that having regard to the proviso for advancement, and to the circumstance that any other decision would have resulted in intestacy as to the share in question, that one of five children of the testator who attained twenty-one, and died, leaving issue, which died during the widowhood of the testator's wife, took a vested interest in one-fifth of the estate, which passed on his death to his personal representatives. Walker v. Simpson, 1 K. & J. 713; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 675.

Gift to Nephew and Nieces at Twenty-one.]—Where a testator directed his trustees to pay all or any part of the residue of the income of his personal estate, so long as his mother should live, as in their discretion, and to the exclusion of any one or more of them, his trustees should think fit and proper, for the maintenance and education, or otherwise for the advancement of "my nephew A. W. and my nieces, the son and daughters of my late sister A.," and after the decease of his mother to pay an annuity, which he had given her, "for the benefit of my nephew and nieces," in the same manner, and for the same purposes as thereinbefore directed, until they should respectively attain twenty-one, and provided that, "in case my said nephew, or any or either of my said nieces," should marry under twenty-one, and die leaving issue, his trustees should make advances out of income for the benefit of such issue "as they may deem expedient or think fit," and directed that, immediately after the decease of his mother, and upon his nephew and nieces respectively attaining twenty-one, his trustees should transfer one equal share of the trust estate to each, and provided that, in the event of his nephew or either of his nieces dying under twenty-one, married and leaving issue, the issue should take their parent's share:—Held, that the gift to the nephew and nieces was made to them nominatim, and not as a class. Barnshaw's Trusts, In re, 15 W. R. 378.

Held, that the nephew and nieces who died under twenty-one, did not take vested interests. Ib.

Gift to Children at Twenty-five.]—Bequest to A. for life, with remainder to such of his children as should live to attain twenty-five, equally, with an imperative direction, that the interest thereof, while any person presumptively entitled should be under twenty-five, should be applied for his maintenance, and a discretionary power of advancement:—Held, void for remoteness. Southern v. Wollaston, 16 Beav. 166; 22 L. J., Ch. 664; 1 W. R. 86. But see Eccles v. Birkett, supra.

Nephews and Nieces "when and as" they attained Twenty-six.]—A testator directed his executors to invest his personal estate, and pay the dividends of one-third part to his daughter for life for the maintenance of herself and what issue she should have; and after her death his executors were to pay, apply, and divide one-third of the principal moneys unto and amongst all and every the children of his said daughter "when and as" they respectively attained the age of twenty-six years, with benefit of survivorship among them; and in case either of such children, at the time of his daughter's decease, should be under twenty-one, then the executors were to invest the principal share of such child, and during minority apply the interest for its maintenance; they were also empowered to apply any part of such child's share for advancement:—Held, that a direction to pay to an indefinite class "when and as" they attained a certain age, did not prevent any from becoming entitled, and that the intention of the testator, to be collected from other parts of the will, was to give the children of his son and daughter immediate vested interests. Harrison v. Grimwood, 12 Beav. 192; 18 L. J., Ch. 485; 13 Jur. 864.

Postponement of Enjoyment until Thirty.]—A. bequeathed his property to his four children in equal proportions, but the capital not to be divided until all his children should have become settled in life, except so much as should be required for their equipment in life or in professions, or until they severally became thirty years old, when the capital was to be placed at their own disposal respectively:—Held, that the children, on their attaining twenty-one, took vested interests, and were entitled to be paid their respective shares. Jacob's Trusts, In re, 7 Jur. (N.S.) 302; 4 L. T. 104; 9 W. R. 474.

3. WORDS OF CONTINGENCY, WHETHER EXTENDING TO A SERIES OF LIMITATIONS.

Death under Twenty-five or Marriage without Consent.]—Construction of gift over in case a daughter should die under twenty-five or marry without consent. Contingency extended to all the trusts of a legacy. Thompson v. Teulon, 9 Hare (App.) xlix.; 22 L. J., Ch. 243; 1 W. R. 97.

Survivorship.] — Bequest of residue equally between A. and B. (the wife of C.); and if C. survive B. for life, and afterwards to their four children:—Held, that the children took only in the event of C. surviving B. Cattley v. Vincent, 15 Beav. 198.

Marriage of Daughter and Settlement Made.]—A testator bequeathed to his daughter an annuity of 100*l.*, while she remained single, but on her marriage, and on some adequate provision made, and which he directed to be made by settlement for her for life and to the use of her issue, he bequeathed to and for her use 2,500*l.*, and in default of such issue, he bequeathed that sum for the benefit of his grandchildren who should be then living. The daughter married, but no settlement was made, and the annuity continued to be paid to her. She had an only child, who died in her lifetime under age:—Held, that the gift over did not take effect, and that her personal representative was entitled to the 2,500*l.* Findon v. Findon, 1 De G. & J. 380; 24 Beav. 83; 26 L. J., Ch. 561; 5 W. R. 485, 791.

Death in Testatrix's Lifetime.]—A testatrix bequeathed the interest of long annuities to her sisters, and in case of one or both of their deaths before hers, gave "the whole of interest in long annuities" to her brother for life. At his death, half of the interest she gave to a daughter of the brother till she attained twenty-one, and "then to receive half the capital." Likewise the testatrix bequeathed to a son of her brother the other half:—Held, on the construction of the whole will, that the bequests to the niece and nephew were not contingent upon the sisters' deaths in the testatrix's lifetime. Boosey v. Gardener, 5 De G. M. & G. 122.

Marrying a First Cousin.]—A testator, by will, made in 1832, bequeathed a moiety of the dividends arising from stock standing in his name in the reduced 3*l.* 10*s.* per cents. to his niece, G., for life, and after her death the principal to her children, as she should appoint; and as to the other moiety, he bequeathed the same upon trust to pay the dividends to his niece O. for life, or until she "shall intermarry with any person who shall be her first cousin in kindred. In the event of her marriage with a first cousin, he gave her, in lieu of such bequest," the dividends of a smaller sum of stock, for life; and subject thereto, he gave the principal to G., "subject to the same trusts as are before expressed concerning her own moiety of the reduced 3*l.* 10*s.* per cents." O. never married her cousin, and died without issue:—Held, that the moiety to which O. was entitled for her life fell into, and formed part of, the residue of the testator's estate. Gray v. Golding, 6 Jur. (N.S.) 474; 8 W. R. 371.

Son Dying or Issue Failing.] — Testator appoints executors in trust to pay the interest of 1,000*l.* to his son for life, then to his son's children, and, if he left none, or they should die unmarried, and under age, bequeaths a moiety of the principal unto G. W. and his wife, or their children, and representatives:—Held, that the estate, which passed on the death of the testator, under the second disposition, was consonant to that limited under the first, not absolute, or vested; but remained in contingency, till the event of the son dying, or his issue failing, &c., determined to whom it belonged; the parents, if then living, being entitled; if not, in the next place, their children; or, finally, their representatives. Fenoulet v. Passavant, 2 Ken. Ch. 109.

Death or Second Marriage of Widow.]—A testator bequeathed the interest of his property in the funds to his wife for life or widowhood, and the capital at her death in equal shares unto and among the children of his brothers J. and E., and of his late brother S., as should be living at the death or second marriage of his wife. By a codicil, he declared it to be his wish, that H. M. M. (a niece) might have her share equally with his brothers' E. and S.'s children:—Held, that H. M. M. took her share absolutely, and not contingently upon her surviving the tenant for life. Biggs v. Gibbs, 5 De G. & Sm. 744.

Becoming Entitled to Real Estate.]—J. devised his real estate to his son M., for life, and after his death, if he leaves any issue male, to other persons, and to one of those other persons he gave the legacy of 500*l.* at twenty-one. M. died without issue. The legatee also died:—Held, that the legacy was not contingent on his becoming entitled to the real estate. Baynes v. Bertie, 5 Bro. P. C. 62.

Estate by Implication at Twenty-one.] — H. gives all his personalty to trustees upon trust as to all the yearly interest arising therefrom to his wife, "for her and my son's support, &c.," until twenty-one, and if he died under twenty-one, then the whole interest in bank stock to his wife for life, and after her death to S. for her separate use. The son died under twenty-one:—Held, that there was an intestacy; that the wife took one-third, the other two-thirds to the son, and that S. took nothing. Fitz-Henry v. Bonner, 2 Drew. 36; 2 Eq. R. 454; 2 W. R. 30.

And see ante, B. 2.

4. Interests Limited in Clear Terms of Contingency.

Failure of Contingent Legacy.]—A contingent legacy failed, the event which happened not being provided for, and no necessary implication in favour of the legatee. Parsons v. Parsons, 5 Ves. 579; 5 R. R. 120.

A legacy upon an express contingency which never happened failed, notwithstanding the apparent intention in favour of the legatee. Holmes v. Cradock, 3 Ves. 317.

A testator gives to his mother an annuity for life, and after her decease to his sister, if she be a widow, but not otherwise, but to revert back to his children after her death. At the death of the testator and of the mother, who survived him, the sister was a married woman:—Held, that the sister, on afterwards becoming a widow, was not entitled to the annuity. Bartleman v. Murchison, 2 Russ. & M. 136; 9 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 60.

Limitations Over.]—Legacy in trust to pay the interest to the separate use of A. for life; and, after her decease, as to the capital for her children; if no child, to pay the interest to her husband during his life; and from and after his decease, in case he shall become entitled to such interest, then to pay the principal to other persons. Though the husband, having died during his wife's life, never became entitled to the interest, the limitation over was established; as distinguished from the case of express condition. Pearsall v. Simpson, 15 Ves. 29; 10 R. R. 1. See Pyle v. Pyle, 6 Ves. 779.

A testator gave his property, subject to a life estate, to his nephews and nieces, with a gift over in the event of the death of any of them leaving issue before the distribution of his estate. One of the nephews died in the testator's lifetime, leaving issue:—Held, that the gift over took effect. Taylor v. Sparrow, 12 Jur. (N.S.) 593; 15 L. T. 150; 14 W. R. 881—L.JJ.

Minority.]—A testator directed that when his youngest child attained twenty-one, his property should be divided into three shares, one for his wife, one for his daughter A., and one for his daughter M.; and that if either of the daughters should die before division, and leaving no surviving issue, her share should be given to her surviving sister; but if either of them should die leaving issue, her share should be divided among her surviving children. He directed the income to be applied to the support of his wife, and the support and education of the children "during their minority, or the minorities of either of them," and that each daughter should have 10*l.* pocket money "during the minority, or until division of the property." By a codicil he made a gift over, "should both children die in their minority and leave no issue." One daughter attained twenty-one, and died unmarried; the other afterwards died a minor, and unmarried:—Held, that the words "in their minority," could not be construed as meaning "before the period of distribution," or "while either of them is a minor," and that the gift over had failed. Maddison v. Chapman, 3 De G. & J. 536; 28 L. J., Ch. 450; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 277; 7 W. R. 214. Affirming 4 K. & J. 709.

Testatrix bequeathed one moiety of the residue of her personal estate to her daughter H., for her separate use, during the joint lives of her and her husband; and if she survived him to her absolutely; if not, to such of her children living at her decease as should attain twenty-one; with a bequest over, if there were no such children, to another daughter, M., and her children; and she bequeathed the other moiety to M., for her separate use, during the joint lives of her and her husband, and, after her decease, to such of her children living at her decease as should attain twenty-one; and if there were no such children of M., to H. and her children, in like manner as the first moiety; with a proviso, that, if H. died in her husband's lifetime, and should not have a child living at her decease who should attain twenty-one, the second moiety was to go over to H.'s executors and administrators; and that, in like manner, the first mentioned moiety, in the event in which it was limited over, should, if M. had not a child living at her death who should attain twenty-one, go over to M.'s executors and administrators: by a codicil, the testatrix gave 1,500*l.*, if M. died without leaving any child who attained twenty-one, to H. and her children, in the same manner as was in the will directed touching the first-mentioned moiety of the residue; and in case both daughters died without leaving any child living who should attain twenty-one, she bequeathed the 1,500*l.*, together with all the residue of her personal estate, to A.: both the daughters died without issue, but H. survived her husband:—Held, nevertheless, that A. was entitled to the residue. Hopkins v. Towle, 3 Russ. 304. Affirming 1 Sim. & S. 337; 1 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 155.

Accumulations.]—A testatrix directed that her trustees should stand possessed of the residue of her estate as to one moiety, and the dividends thereof, to pay the same to her daughter A. for life, and then upon trust as to the said moiety, and the dividends and accumulations thereof, until it should be payable and distributable, to pay the same to the children of A., who should survive her, at twenty-one, with benefit of accruer and survivorship; and she gave the other moiety in similar terms to her daughter B.; and in case, at the decease of either of her said daughters, there should be no children of such daughter who should have lived to attain a vested interest under the trusts of the will, then the moiety of the daughter so dying, and the dividends and accumulations thereof, to be held upon trust for the other daughter for life, and her children afterwards. And if upon the death of the survivor of the two daughters there should be no child or children of either who should have lived to attain a vested interest under the trusts in the two moieties, then the entirety of the said two moieties and the dividends and accumulations thereof to be held in trust for the testatrix's six nephews and nieces on attaining twenty-one. The daughter A. died before the testatrix, and she then made a codicil directing that her moiety should go to B. in the same manner as it would have gone to A. if she had lived; and she gave an annuity for the maintenance of the only daughter of A. until she should attain twenty-one. B. died, leaving six children:—Held, that the interest of the six grandchildren of the testatrix was not vested until they attained twenty-one, and the dividends must be accumulated; and that the nephews and nieces were not entitled under the gifts over, until default in the attainment of twenty-one by the grandchildren. Bull v. Jones, 31 L. J., Ch. 858; 10 W. R. 820.

And see ante, B. 3.

5. DIVESTING OF VESTED INTERESTS.

Contingency—Survivorship.]—Bequest to A. for life, and after her decease to B. and C., in equal moieties, and in case of the decease of either in the life of A., the whole to the survivor of them living at her decease. B. and C. have vested interests as tenants in common, subject to be divested only upon the contingency expressed. Harrison v. Forman, 5 Ves. 207; 5 R. R. 28.

A clear vested interest not divested, the express contingency upon which it was to be divested not having happened. Ib.

Bequest to A. for life, and afterwards to B.; but if he should be then dead, to C. and D. in equal shares, or the whole to the survivor of them. B. died in the life of the tenant for life, as did also C. and D.:—Held, that gift to C. and D. was a vested interest in them as tenants in common, subject to be divested if one only should survive the tenant for life. Browne v. Kenyon (Lord), 3 Madd. 410; 18 R. R. 261.

Bequest of residue to A. for life, and after the death of A. and B. to G. B. and H. B., to be equally divided between them, share and share alike, or to the survivor or survivors of them. G. B. and H. B. both died in the lifetime of the surviving tenant for life:—Held, that their representatives were respectively entitled to a moiety of the residue on the death of the surviving tenant for life. Belk v. Slack, 1 Keen, 238.

A bequeathed a legacy upon trust for his widow for life, and after her death for A. and B., in equal shares, "and in case of the death of either of them in the lifetime of my wife, then upon trust to pay the whole of the trust fund unto the survivor of them, A. and B., his executors, administrators, or assigns." A. died in the lifetime of the widow:—Held, that upon his death B. acquired an indefeasible vested interest in the whole fund. White v. Baker, 2 De G. F. & J. 55; 29 L. J., Ch. 577; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 591; 2 L. T. 583; 8 W. R. 533. And see Clark's Trusts, In re, L. R. 9 Eq. 378; 22 L. T. 151; 18 W. R. 446.

Under a direction, that, after the decease of A., a fund "should be transferred to A. B. and C. D., or the survivor or survivors":—Held, that A. B., who survived C. D., but died in A.'s lifetime, was entitled to the whole. Antrobus v. Hodgson, 16 Sim. 450; 18 L. J., Ch. 93.

Testatrix gave an annuity of 50*l.* to her son-in-law for his life, provided he remained unmarried, but if he should marry the annuity to cease; and, after his death or second marriage, she gave 1,000*l.* to be equally divided between her brother and sisters; and if they should not all be then living, she gave the share of him, her, or them so dying to be equally divided between them her surviving brother and sisters. The testatrix's brother and sisters all died in her son-in-law's lifetime, and he died unmarried:—

Held, that the brother and sisters took a vested interest in the 1,000*l.* as tenants in common. Peters v. Dipple, 12 Sim. 101.

—— Event becoming Impossible.]—When a legacy is given, subject to be defeated by a subsequent event, the legatee has an absolute interest till the event happens; and if the event become impossible, the legacy becomes absolute. Lowther v. Cavendish (Lord), Amb. 358; 3 Bro. P. C. 186.

—— Event not Strictly Happening.]—A legacy given absolutely will not be divested if the event on which it is given over does not strictly happen. Page v. May, 24 Beav. 323; 27 L. J., Ch. 242; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 1047; 5 W. R. 840.

After the cessor of a life estate, "a gift to three persons equally, or in case of the death of each or either of them, to be divided between the survivors or survivor, or their representatives":—Held, on the death of the three before the tenant for life, that their legal personal representatives were entitled to the fund. Ib.

Gift of personal property to trustees, to be settled on the marriages of the testator's daughters for their separate use, and on their deaths upon trust for their children, with a limitation over in the event of either of the daughters dying without having been married, or without leaving any children her surviving. The shares of the children of each daughter are vested, subject to be divested by all dying before their mother; and there being one alive at her death, the representatives of two who died before her were held entitled to their shares. Bromhead v. Hunt, 2 J. & W. 459; 22 R. R. 200. And see Cross v. Cross, 7 Sim. 201; 4 L. J., Ch. 38.

Testatrix bequeathed the residue of her funded property, in trust for her niece for life, and, after her death, to be equally divided amongst all her children, whether sons or daughters, share and share alike: in case it should happen that there was but one child at the niece's death, then to go to that one only child; and in case of failure of issue, to go as the niece should appoint by her will. The niece had eleven children; three of whom died in her lifetime:—Held, that all the children took vested interests, and, as more than one survived their mother, there was no divesting of interests. Templeman v. Warrington, 13 Sim. 267.

A testator gave a fund to trustees upon trust to pay the income to A. during his life, and after the decease of A. leaving issue, upon trust to pay, apply, assign, and transfer both principal and interest to and amongst all and every the child and children of A., equally to be divided between them, and if but one, then to such only child, to be paid to them, if sons, at twenty-one, and if daughters at that age or marriage, with benefit of survivorship; and in case there should be no child or children of A. at the time of his death, or if all and every such child or children should die before attaining twenty-one or marriage, then over. A. had eight children, of whom three died infants in their father's lifetime, two attained twenty-one and died in his lifetime, and three attained twenty-one and survived him:—Held, that the two children who attained twenty-one and died in their father's lifetime took vested interests, and that their representatives were entitled to share in the fund along with the children who survived their father. Corneck v. Wadman, L. R. 7 Eq. 80. And see Skey v. Barnes, 3 Mer. 335; 17 R. R. 91.

A testator directed that a legacy of 1,500*l.* should be set apart for the benefit of his daughter A. for life, and after her death the principal and capital to go and be divided amongst her children; "and in case she should have no child or children," then the same to go to and for the benefit of his son C. and his children in like manner. He made a similar bequest in favour of his son C., and directed that "in case both his son and daughter should die without leaving any issue him or her surviving," then the 1,500*l.* should go and be divided among his next of kin, and the remaining 1,500*l.* amongst the next of kin of his wife. A. married B., by whom she had one child only, who died in her lifetime. A. died, leaving B. and C. surviving her:—Held, that the child of A. took a vested interest in the legacy of 1,500*l.*, which was not cut down by the subsequent bequest over, and that B. was entitled to the capital as the legal personal representative of his daughter. Whyte v. Collins, 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1281; 3 L. T. 263.

Testator gave to his son for life, and if his son should die without leaving lawful issue living at his death, then for "all and every his brothers and sisters, and the issue of such as should be then dead, such issue taking only the share their parents would have been entitled to if living":—Held, that a brother surviving the testator, but predeceasing the tenant for life, took a vested interest, and his representatives were entitled. Etches v. Etches, 3 Drew. 447; 4 W. R. 307.

Held, also, as to a sister who survived the testator, but died before the tenant for life, leaving a child, who also died before the tenant for life, the representatives of that child were entitled. Ib.

Bequest to Illegitimate Children of Person Dead at Date of Will.]—A testator bequeathed trust funds and moneys "in trust for all the children, to be equally divided amongst them, their respective executors, administrators, and assigns, of my brother, H. M. W., of my nephew, A. W. D., of my sister, H. C. D., and of my niece, M. B., of Jamaica, and my nephew, G. D. himself (if he shall be then living, but not otherwise, G. D. taking a share with all such children), and the respective shares of such children to be absolutely vested on my decease." H. M. W. was dead at the date of the will. He left three illegitimate children only, who survived the testator. The evidence of the marriage of H. M. W. with the mother of his children, was defective. There was, however, enough in the case to enable the court to presume that the testator was aware of the state of H. M. W.'s family:—Held, following Herbert's Trusts, In re (1 J. & H. 121; 29 L. J., Ch. 870), that (assuming the children of H. M. W. to be illegitimate) still they could take under the bequest. Milne v. Wood, 42 L. J., Ch. 545.

Death before attaining Twenty-one.] — A legacy was given to testator's son A., when he attained twenty-five, with a proviso that should any of the testator's sons or daughters die before attaining twenty-one, "the legacy hereby bequeathed, or share of the residue" of such sons or daughters should go to the survivors:—Held, that the legacy vested in A. at twenty-one. Gunning's Estate, In re, 13 L. R. Ir. 203.

Recovery of Person of Unsound Mind and Appointment by Him.]—Bequest of 1,000*l.* in trust to apply the income for the maintenance of E., a person of unsound mind, for life, and in case E. should recover sanity, in trust as to the principal as E. should by will appoint; and in default of such appointment, then, after the death of E., to pay the principal of the bequest to J. And the testator directed that in case of the death of any of his legatees before the legacy to such legatee should become vested or payable, the legacy which should so lapse by the death of the legatee should go to P. E. survived J., and died without recovering:—Held, that the 1,000*l.* vested in J. as a reversionary legacy, subject to be divested on an appointment by E., in the event of recovery which did not happen; that it was not subject to the gift over by J.'s death in the lifetime of E.; and that the gift over applied only to legacies lapsing by the legatee predeceasing the testator. Beddy v. Courtnay, 19 L. R. Ir. 245.

Death "Unmarried."]—Gift to A. for life, with remainder in case A. died unmarried (as happened) between B. and C., "or such of them as should be then living," and the lawful children of such of them as should be then dead, "for the share of the father or mother deceased only." B. and C. died in the lifetime of the tenant for life. B. had issue, C. had none:—Held, that C.'s interest was not vested, and that his representatives were not entitled. Willis v. Plaskett, 4 Beav. 208; 5 Jur. 572.

A husband bequeathed 600*l.* (after the death of his wife) to his two daughters, A. and B., in equal shares; and if either of them should die in the lifetime of his wife, to such of her children as should attain twenty-one; "but if there be one such child" then upon the trusts of the other moiety:—Held, that the gift over was good, though A. died in her mother's lifetime unmarried. Moore v. Beagley, 33 L. T. 198. And see Jones v. Davies, 28 W. R. 455.

—— Without Issue.]—Gift of a legacy upon trust for A., a son of the testator, for life, remainder to any wife he might marry, for life, remainder to his children absolutely, with a gift over, "in case he should die unmarried and without issue, to B., C., and D., or such of them as should be living at his decease absolutely." A. died a widower, and without having had any children. B., C., and D. all died in A.'s lifetime:—Held, that the interests of B., C., and D., though depending on a contingency, were transmissible, and that their representatives were entitled to their shares. Sanders' Trusts, In re, L. R. 1 Eq. 675; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 351; 14 W. R. 576.

Legacy on condition to be void, in case the legatee should succeed in the event of the death of A., without issue of her body; payment decreed in the life of A., and without security. Fawkes v. Gray, 18 Ves. 131; 11 R. R. 168.

Bequest of 1,000*l.* to the children of J. W., to be paid to them or the survivors or survivor of them after the decease of the testator's wife (who was to have the interest for her life), share and share alike; and also 1,000*l.* to a trustee after the decease of testator's said wife, in trust to permit R. W. after the decease of testator's said wife, to receive the interest thereof for his life; and if the said R. W. should die, leaving issue, to divide the 1,000*l.* among such issue, &c.; and if the said R. W. should die without such issue, the 1,000*l.* to go to and among the children of the said J. W. in the same manner as the 1,000*l.* so bequeathed to them as aforesaid. R. W. survived testator's widow, and died without issue. Only two of the children of J. W. survived the testator's widow, but all of them died during the lifetime of R. W.:—Held, that the two children of J. W. who survived the testator's widow, took, as to the second legacy, vested interests transmissible to their representatives. Luby v. Hamilton, 1 Ir. Eq. R. 305.

Bequest to A. for life, and, after his decease, to his eldest son; but in case A. should "die under age without issue," over:—Held, that the word "and" was not to be read "or," and that A.'s son, in his father's lifetime, took a vested interest not subject to be divested. Malcolm v. Malcolm, 21 Beav. 225.

Children Living at Death of Tenant for Life.]—Bequest to A. for life, and then to be equally divided between her three children, or such as shall be living at her death. Children took vested interests and transmissible to representatives, subject to be divested only in favour of those who should be living at the prescribed period. Sturgess v. Pearson, 4 Madd. 411; 20 R. R. 316. See 6 Madd. 250.

Marriage over Twenty-one.] — Testator bequeathed a sum of money in terms which by themselves were sufficient to carry the absolute interest to his daughter in the event of her attaining twenty-one, and, in the event of her dying under that age, then over. He then directed that, should his daughter live to marry, her interest in the money was to be enjoyed by her during life, with remainder to her children. She attained twenty-one, and then married:—Held, that she was entitled to the money absolutely, the contingency provided for by the latter clause being a marriage under twenty-one. The statement in a will of the date of a legatee's birth is primâ facie taken to be correct. Vulliamy v. Huskisson, 3 Y. & C. 80; 2 Jur. 656.

Single Child Surviving Father.]—Under a bequest of the interest of a fund to a person for life, "and after his death to divide the said sum, and any interest that may be due thereon at his death, among all his children equally, and if he leave but one child then to give the whole sum to such one child," the children take a vested interest in their respective shares, as tenants in common, liable to be divested as to children dying in the father's lifetime, in favour of a single child surviving him, should such an event happen. Kimberly v. Tew, 2 Con. & L. 366; 4 Dr. & War. 139; 5 Ir. Eq. R. 389.

Granddaughters Marrying a Relation of a Certain Person.]—The testatrix directed her residuary estate "to be divided equally" between her two granddaughters on the youngest attaining twenty-one. She added, "if both marry a relation of J. D. everything belonging to me is to be divided between my nephews and nieces." The granddaughters having attained twenty-one and being still unmarried, the court declined deciding the validity of the gift over, but held that they were entitled to payment, subject to any future question. Hird v. Pinckney, 34 Beav. 273.

Daughter Dying in Lifetime of Husband Leaving Issue.]—Bequest of stock to trustees, to pay the dividends thereof to the testator's daughter M., the wife of G. W., for her separate use, free from the control of her husband; and after the decease of G. W., in case M. should be then living, and without issue, upon trust to transfer the stock, and the interest unto M., to and for her own use and benefit; and in case M. should die in the lifetime of her husband G. W., leaving a child or children, then upon trust to transfer the stock, and the interest and produce thereof, to all and every such child or children equally, and if but one, then the whole to such one. M. died in the lifetime of G. W., without issue:—Held, that G. W., as personal representative of M., was entitled to the stock, and the dividends thereof. Whipple v. Martyn, 14 Jur. 361.

Deaths of Tenants for Life in a Certain Order.]—A testator gave life estates in some personal property to his sisters, Mary and Harriet, in succession, and, after their deaths, equally to his two brothers, Robert and John, to do as they pleased with; but in case his sisters, Mary and Harriet, should survive Robert and John, after their deaths, to go to A. and W. Robert died first, Mary second, John third, and Harriet last:—Held, that the contingency had not happened, and that the representatives of the brothers whose interest had not divested, were absolutely entitled. Terrell v. Cooke, 5 L. J., Ch. 68. And see Minor's Trust, In re, 28 Beav. 50.

Death in Life of Tenant for Life Leaving Children.]—Bequest to the testator's wife for life; and after her death to be divided between his brothers and sisters in equal shares: but in case of the death of any in life of the wife the shares of him, &c., so dying to be divided between his, &c., children:—Held, vested, subject to be divested only by death in the life of the widow, leaving children. Therefore the representative of one, who died in her life, never having had a child, entitled. Smither v. Willock, 9 Ves. 233.

Testator bequeathed 1,500*l.* stock to trustees in trust for his daughter for life, and after her decease for her children, but, if she should have no children, then he directed his executors to stand possessed of the fund in trust to pay or transfer the same equally unto and between his three nephews, A., B., and C., and his niece, and the survivors or survivor of them, share and share alike. The nephews and niece survived the testator and died in the lifetime of the daughter, who died without ever having a child:—Held, that the representatives of the nephews and niece were entitled in equal shares. Wagstaff v. Crosby, 2 Coll. C. C. 746.

Children Dying during Minority.]—A. devised 600*l.* apiece to his two daughters, and the residue of his personal estate to his son, and, if either of his children died during their minority, the survivors to be heirs to the deceased by equal portions; the son died, and one sister brought a bill against the executors and the other sister, to have her own 600*l.* and one-half of her brother's personal estate, which was decreed, upon her giving security to pay back her own 600*l.* in case she died during her minority. Pate v. Hatton, 1 Ch. Ca. 199.

Brothers Surviving Sister and her Husband.]—A testator, by his will, directed his daughters' fortunes thereby bequeathed to be settled, to the intent that, should any of them die without issue, then, on the decease of their respective husbands and themselves, their fortunes should revert to their surviving brothers, share and share alike. A daughter died in the lifetime of three brothers, leaving a husband, who survived the three brothers:—Held, that the husband was entitled to his wife's fortune absolutely. Eaton v. Barker, 2 Coll. C. C. 124; 9 Jur. 822.

And see, ante, B. 4.

6. Cross Executory Limitations in Personal Estate.

Cross Limitations Implied.]—Vesting of a legacy postponed to time of payment, and a limitation over in the nature of a cross remainder implied from the general intention. Mackell v. Winter, 3 Ves. 236, 536. See 5 R. R. 32, n.

—— Twenty-one or Marriage.]—One having a wife and three daughters devises 900*l.* to his three daughters equally, payable at their respective ages of twenty-one or marriage, and, if all die before their legacies were payable, then the whole to the mother. If two of the daughters die before their shares become due, the surviving daughter is entitled to the whole. Scott v. Bargeman, 2 P. Wms. 68; 2 Eq. Cas. Abr. 542, pl. 12.

Bequest to the child or children of the testator's two daughters in terms creating a tenancy in common, viz., equally to be divided, &c., to be paid at twenty-one or marriage of daughters, with survivorship upon the death of any before his or their shares become payable; the accrued share to be equally divided, and to be payable, &c., as the original shares; the issue of any dying in the lifetime of the two daughters to stand in the place of the parent, and a limitation over in case his daughters die without issue, or, having had issue, such issue should die in the lifetime of his daughters. The event of a death of a child above twenty-one not being within the survivorship expressed, his interest vested in his representative, subject to the ultimate contingent limitation. Bayard v. Smith, 14 Ves. 470.

—— Surviving Children of Daughters at Twenty-one.] — Testator gave an annuity, to which he was entitled for the life of E., to his daughter L. for life, and, after her death, to her children; but if she should not have any who should survive E., then to such persons as should then be entitled to the testator's personal estate. He then disposed of all his estate amongst his sons and daughters, giving the shares of his sons to them, absolutely, and the shares of his daughters to trustees for them, for their respective lives, and, after their deaths respectively, to apply the interest of the shares of his daughters respectively, for the maintenance of their respective children until they attained twenty-one, and then to divide the principal amongst such children respectively, as should attain that age. But if all such children of his daughters respectively, or both of them, should die under twenty-one, then upon trust to pay the said trust money to such persons as should then be entitled to his personal estate. A., one of the testator's daughters, died, leaving children who attained twenty-one; then L., the only other daughter, died without issue:—Held, that cross limitations were not to be implied between the children of the daughters, and that the persons who were to take under the gift over were not sufficiently described, and, therefore, that the annuity and L.'s share of the residue must go as in case of an intestacy. Turner v. Frederick, 5 Sim. 466; 2 L. J., Ch. 2.

—— Lapse.]—Bequest of personal estate, after the death of the tenant for life, in trust to pay equally between A. and B. But if "neither" should be then living, to C. A. died in the lifetime of the testatrix. B. survived the tenant for life, and claimed the whole, either as surviving joint tenant or under a gift to her by implication. The court rejected such claim, and held, that the moiety intended for A. had lapsed, and belonged to the next-of-kin of the testatrix. Baxter v. Losh, 14 Beav. 612; 21 L. J., Ch. 55. And see Skey v. Barnes, 3 Mer. 334; 17 R. R. 91.

—— Gift Over on total Failure of Issue.]—A testator devised real and personal estate to A. for life, with a direction to the executors, after A.'s death, to divide it amongst all her children and their lawful issue, share and share alike. There was a gift over of the leaseholds to other persons, on a total failure of issue of the children:—Held, that the children took estates tail in the realty, and absolute interests in the personalty; and that cross remainders were not to be implied in regard to the leaseholds. Beaver v. Nowell, 25 Beav. 551.

A testator gave a moiety of his estate to the children of A., and the other moiety to the children of B. The will contained a single clause of survivorship and accruer applicable to all the children, and not, in terms, distributive, with a gift over if there should be no children of A. and B., "or of either of them," or being such, all such children should die without having attained a vested interest:—Held, that there were no cross remainders between the two classes of children, and that on the death of A. without having been married, the children of B. would not take the first moiety. Edwards v. Tuck, 23 Beav. 268.

Bequest of 500*l.* to A., and in case of her death, either before or after the testator, to devolve to her child or children, or in the event of their being also dead at her decease to B. There were three children, one of whom only survived:—Held, that he was entitled to the whole fund. Currie v. Gould, 4 Beav. 117; 10 L. J., Ch. 304.

Devise of copyholds to A. for life, remainder to the eldest or only son of A. and the legal and customary heirs respectively of such eldest or only son for ever; provided that if A. leave no son or issue of a son living or in ventre sa mere at his death, then the testator gave the land to the daughters or only daughter of A., as tenants in common, and their respective legal and customary heirs for ever; provided that if A. having neither son nor daughter nor issue of a son or daughter living or in ventre sa mere at his death, then over. A. had a son and daughters, but left no son or issue of a son living at his death:—Held, that all the daughters, and not those only who were living at A.'s death, took, as tenants in common in fee, so that those who died in A.'s lifetime had descendible contingent interests. Rider v. Wood, 1 K. & J. 644; 3 Eq. R. 1064; 24 L. J., Ch. 737.

Held, also, that the devise to the daughters was not a gift to a class, to be ascertained at the death of the tenant for life, within the principle of Currie v. Gould, supra. Ib.

Testator directed the dividends of two sums of stock to be equally divided between all his nephews living at his decease, and after the decease of any of them, the capital of his share to be sold and the proceeds to be divided amongst his children; and in default of such issue then to go and be divided amongst the children of A., and in case all A.'s issue should be dead, then to be divided amongst the children of B. A. had four children. Three of them died, and then one of the testator's nephews died without issue:—Held, that the three deceased children, as well as the surviving child of A., took vested and transmissible interests in the deceased nephew's share of the stock. Cohen v. Waley, 15 Sim. 318; 10 Jur. 767. S. P., Templeman v. Warrington, 13 Sim. 267. And see Bromhead v. Hunt, 2 J. & W. 459.

—— Death without Issue or before Twenty-one.]—Although the operation of a bequest of a residue by a father to his two children, to be equally divided between them, and if they should die without issue, or before twenty-one, to go over, would be to give vested legacies to be divested only on the deaths of both children under twenty-one, and without issue; and the representative of one of the children dying under twenty-one, and without issue, would be entitled till the happening of that event; yet the intention that the surviving child should take the whole, sufficiently appearing on the will, controls the effect of the bequest to the deceased child, and the survivor held to be entitled to the residue, subject to the event on which the whole was given over. Beauman v. Stock, 2 Ball & B. 406.

—— Survivor of Life Tenants in Common.]—A testator gave a residue upon trust to pay the produce thereof between his grandchildren A. and B., during their respective lives, in equal shares, and after the death of A. and B. to transfer the capital unto and amongst the children of A. and B. in equal shares, and if there should be no children living at their decease then upon trust for his personal representatives. A. died, leaving children, in the lifetime of B.:—Held, that B. was entitled to the whole for life. Pearce v. Edmeades, 3 Y. & Coll. 246; 8 L. J., Ex. Eq. 61; 3 Jur. 245. And see Cooper v. Macdonald, 42 L. J., Ch. 539; L. R. 16 Eq. 258.

A father gave his residuary personal estate upon trust to pay the income equally between his three daughters F., E., and C. during their lives; and if all or any of them should die leaving issue, to pay one-third of the principal amongst the issue of each daughter so dying, in equal shares; and if only one such daughter should die leaving issue, then to pay and apply the whole residue equally amongst the issue of such one daughter; but if all the daughters should die without leaving issue, then over. C. died leaving issue, and afterwards F. died without leaving issue:—Held, that cross limitations were to be implied between the daughters and their families, and that the issue of each daughter was, for all purposes, to be ascertained at her own death; and that, therefore, one moiety of F.'s share was payable to the issue of C. living at C.'s death, and the other moiety went by way of accretion to E.'s original share. Ridge's Trust, In re, 41 L. J., Ch. 787; L. R. 7 Ch. 665; 27 L. T. 141; 20 W. R. 878.

C. directed that his residuary real and personal estate should be sold and converted, and that his trustees should hold four-sixths of the proceeds for three reputed daughters and a lawful daughter (naming them) of his brother during their lives, and after their deaths for their children respectively, as they should respectively appoint, and in default of appointment, for the children of the four daughters, in equal shares, with cross executory trusts as between the children of the same parent as regards the shares of male children dying under twenty-one and female children dying under twenty-one and unmarried, with an ulterior trust in case the four daughters should all die without leaving any child or children, or, leaving such, if such children should all happen to die under twenty-one, and without having been married. One of the four legatees died without having been married:—Held, that, as to her share, cross limitations must be implied between the other three legatees and their children, corresponding with the limitations contained in the will of the original shares. Clark's Trust, In re, 2 N. R. 386; 32 L. J., Ch. 525; 8 L. T. 571; 11 W. R. 871.

Held, also, that no such cross limitations could be implied as to the share of any daughter after once a child of that daughter had attained a vested interest, even though the daughter might subsequently die without leaving a child, the proper function of the cross limitations being not to divest any estate once vested, but merely to supply the gap left by the testator. Ib.

—— Original and Accruing Shares.]—A will contained a trust of real and personal property during the lives of five children and the survivor to divide the income into five parts, and pay one-fifth to each, if living, or if dead to their respective children or issue, the latter taking equally between themselves in classes the one-fifth share which the parent, if living, would have taken. And if any one of the five children died without leaving children or issue, or if such issue failed during the period, the share of such children or issue to belong to the others of the testator's children and their issue in the same way as original shares. This clause to apply to accruing as well as original shares, and upon the death of the last surviving child the capital to testator's grandchildren in classes, per stirpes. One child died leaving children. One of the grandchildren died, leaving one child, Lucia, who died unmarried before the time had expired:—Held, upon a special case to determine what became of Lucia's share of income—that she took only a life interest, and that on her death her share went equally among her uncles and aunts and their issue, per stirpes, cross limitations being implied to effect this. Hudson, In re, Hudson v. Hudson, 51 L. J., Ch. 455; 20 Ch. D. 406; 46 L. T. 93; 30 W. R. 487. And see Rabbeth v. Squire, 4 De G. & J. 406; 28 L. J. Ch. 565; 7 W. R. 657.

—— Rules Deducible from Authorities.]—Rules deducible from the authorities:—1. Cross executory limitations in the case of personal estate, like cross remainders of real estate, are only implied to fill up a hiatus in the limitations which seems from the context to have been unintentional. 2. They cannot be implied—as cross remainders could not—to divest an interest given by the will. 3. The existence of other cross limitations between different persons does not prevent the implication. 4. But where such express cross limitations are in favour of the persons to whom the implied cross remainders would convey the property, that circumstance is of weight in determining the intention. Ib.

See also ante, B. 5.

Implication of Gift to Survivors.]—See WILL.

7. EXECUTORY BEQUESTS.

a. Failure of Prior Gift. Effect on Executory or Substituted Gift.

General Rule.]—As a general rule, when a bequest is take effect after the failure of a prior gift, the total failure of the latter does not prevent the ulterior gift taking effect. Tennant v. Heathfield, 21 Beav. 255; 25 L. J., Ch. 197; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 33.

Distinction between a series of limitations all dependent on the same contingency and successive limitations, each intended to take effect upon the failure of all those prior to it. Ib.

Gift to A. for life, and after her death to her children, and in case of their death before the vesting of their shares in trust for her next-of-kin; the daughter never had any children:—Held, that her next-of-kin were nevertheless entitled. Ib.

Contingency not happening.]—A. devised a term for years to his wife for life, and after her death to the child she was then enceinte with, but, if such child died before twenty-one, then he devised one-third part of the said term to his wife, whom he made executrix. The wife not being enceinte at the time of the devise:—Held, first, that the devise to her was good, though the contingency never happened; secondly, that she should have the undisposed surplus of the personal estate, and not to go in a course of administration. Jones v. Westcomb, Pre. Ch. 316; 1 Eq. Cas. Abr. 245.

Condition Precedent or Subsequent—Substantial Fulfilment of Condition.]—A testator, after giving a life interest to his wife, bequeathed certain stock to his four sons, A., B., C. and D., provided D. should be of sound mind at the time of the decease of his wife. But in case he should be insane at that period, then he directed that the stock should be divisible between his sons, A., B. and C. D. died insane in the lifetime of the testator's wife:—Held, that D. did not take any vested interest in such stock, and his share was divisible in thirds, and payable to the three other sons. Chappell's Trust, In re, 6 L. T. 643; 10 W. R. 573.

Power of appointment in a tenant for life, subject to the condition of her remaining sole and unmarried, which condition was qualified by a proviso that a marriage with the consent of A., B. and C., should not determine that power:—Held, a condition subsequent, and becoming impossible by the death of A., B., C., the marriage of the tenant for life after their death, without their consent, did not determine the power. Aislabie v. Rice, 3 Madd. 256; 18 R. R. 230.

Limitation over after a limitation, which never took effect, established; not operating as a condition precedent. Meadows v. Parry, 1 V. & B. 124; 12 R. R. 198.

Wife having absolute power of appointment over 5,000*l.*, appointed it in favour of her daughter, but in a certain event directed it to be divided between her son and her daughter, desiring that her husband should have the free use of the interest of the 5,000*l.* till his death:—

Held, that the husband took a life interest in the 5,000*l.* in any event. Darby v. Darby, 18 Beav. 412.

Construction of a residuary clause, after a bequest to the testatrix's younger children, "but in case I shall have but one child living at the time of my decease," or all but one die under twenty-one and unmarried, to another family, not a condition. Residuary bequest is therefore established in the event of the testatrix's death, having never had a child. Murray v. Jones, 2 V. & B. 313; 13 R. R. 104.

Gift in remainder "in case A. B. should die under twenty-one without issue, or leaving issue all of them should die before twenty-one":—Held, not to take effect on A. B. dying unmarried and above twenty-one. Leonard v. Flight, 4 L. J., Ch. 225.

Failure by Lapse.]—Bequest of a contingent interest in personalty void, where the preceding gift never vested, owing to a lapse. Miller v. Faure, 1 Ves. sen. 85.

A testator, after bequeathing a sum of long annuities to his wife for life, gave the capital after her death, to A., if he shall be living at her decease; and if not, to A.'s son; A. outlives the wife, but both he and the wife die in the testator's lifetime:—Held, that the legacy to A. lapsed, and that the gift to his son did not take effect. Williams v. Jones, 1 Russ. 517.

Bequest to a son of the testator on his accomplishing his apprenticeship, with the dividends in the meantime for maintenance; and in case he shall die before he accomplishes his apprenticeship, then, and in such case, to the other children. The legacy lapsed by the death of the legatee, having accomplished his apprenticeship in the testator's life. Humberstone v. Stanton, 1 V. & B. 385; 12 R. R. 243.

Event not in Terms provided for.]—A legacy was given in trust for P., who was then unmarried, and who never married, for life, for her separate use, without power of anticipation, with remainder to her children; and in case there should be no child who should attain a vested interest, in trust for P. absolutely, "if she should survive her husband, but if she should die in his lifetime" as she should by will appoint, and in default in trust for her next-of-kin, as if she had died intestate and unmarried:—Held, that P. was absolutely entitled to the legacy, although the event of her dying unmarried was not in terms provided for. Broch v. Bradley, 33 Beav. 670; 4 N. R. 529; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 815; 11 L. T. 16; 12 W. R. 1136.

By a marriage settlement, property belonging to the intended wife was conveyed to trustees, upon trust (after the death of the husband and wife) for the children of the marriage in the usual way. It was declared, that, if all the children should die, the trustees should convey the property to A., B. and C. There never was any issue of the marriage:—Held, that, although the language of the deed only provided for default of issue, the gift over took effect. Osborn v. Bellman, 2 Giff. 593; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1325; 3 L. T. 265; 9 W. R. 11

A. made a will by which, under a power of appointment reserved to her in her father's will, she bequeathed her property to her husband; "and in case my husband shall die in my lifetime," to W. The husband made a will in the same terms. The husband and wife were by the same wave swept off the deck of the vessel in a storm at sea, and were drowned. No evidence was given to prove that one survived the other:—Held, that W. could not claim under either will, and that the property went over to those who by the father's will were to take in default of appointment by the daughter. Wing v. Angrave, 8 H. L. Cas. 183; 30 L. J., Ch. 65. S. C., nom. Underwood v. Wing, 19 Beav. 459; 4 De G. M. & G. 633; 3 Eq. R. 794; 24 L. J., Ch. 293; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 169; 3 W. R. 228.

The union of the two titles of W. did not affect the case, for he could not succeed in one because he could not succeed under the other, but was bound to establish his claim clearly under one or the other. Ib.

Charge contingent on Eldest Son coming into Possession.]—A father, by will, gave to each of his younger sons 1,000*l.*, "which I charge on my estate at A., hereinafter devised to my eldest son, but I direct that the sum shall not be raisable or paid to them respectively until my eldest son shall come into actual possession of the M. estate." The M. estate was settled on F. for life, remainder to the eldest son of the testator for life, remainder to his issue in tail male. The eldest son died before F., and without coming into possession of the M. estate:—Held, that the legacies to younger sons were wholly contingent upon the eldest son becoming owner of the M. estate; and that as that event had not happened they failed and sank into the residue. Taylor v. Lambert, 45 L. J., Ch. 418; 2 Ch. D. 177; 34 L. T. 567; 24 W. R. 691.

A testator gave one-fifth of the interest of a fund in the following proportions: namely, one-fifth to M., and two-fifths each to C. and J.; if M. should die without issue, which event did happen, her fifth was to go between C. and J. for their lives, if living at M.'s decease, or if only one, to him; if C. should leave issue, they should be entitled to the principal moneys the interest whereof was given to C. for life; but if he should die without issue in the lifetime of J., all benefit of the bequest to C. should go to J.; and if J. should die without having succeeded to, and been in actual possession of, the family estate, for a certain time, leaving issue other than an only son, such issue should be entitled to all the principal moneys the interest whereof J. might be entitled to as aforesaid. Then followed a gift over of all benefit intended for J., in case he should die in the lifetime of C., either without issue, or without issue other than an only son, or having been in possession of the estate for a certain time. If both C. and J. should die without issue, to be entitled as aforesaid to the bequest, the whole property should go as the survivor should think fit. J., having survived M., died in the lifetime of C., leaving a daughter, and without having been in possession of the estate; and then C. died without issue:—Held, that the daughter of J. was entitled to the whole fund. Newburgh (Earl) v. Eyre, 4 Russ. 454; 6 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 153.

Wife Surviving her Husband.]—Bequest in trust for the wife and children of H. during his life; and from and after the decease of H., in trust to pay it to his children then living, reserving one-fifth for his wife for her life, which, immediately on her death, was to be divided amongst H.'s children generally:—Held, that the reservation of the one-fifth for the wife and children was contingent on the wife surviving H., and she having pre-deceased him, that it did not take effect. Patch v. Sparkes, 30 Beav. 515; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 297; 10 W. R. 239.

Death of Son in Mother's Lifetime, a Bachelor.]—Testator bequeathed a sum of stock to his wife, and after her decease to his three sons, to be equally divided amongst them, if they should be all living at the decease of his wife; but if any or either of them should die in her lifetime, leaving a child or children, such child or children who should be living at the time of the wife's death should be substituted in the place of such of his sons who should so happen to die, and take his, her, or their parent's share. All the sons died in the wife's lifetime, two of them leaving children who survived the wife; the third died a bachelor:—Held, that one-third of the stock fell into the residue. Hustler v. Tillbrook, 9 Sim. 368.

Daughter Dying Unmarried.] — Testator bequeathed a sum in trust for his daughter (a single woman) for her separate use, independently of any husband she might have, and after her death in trust for her children, and, if no children then if she should survive any husband she might have, for her absolutely, but if her husband should survive her then as she should appoint, and in default of appointment for her next of kin. The daughter died unmarried:—Held, that she only took a life interest, the apparent intention being to give the corpus only in the event of her marrying. Lenox v. Lenox, 10 Sim. 400; 9 L. J., Ch. 83; 4 Jur. 5.

Bequest of money to trustees on trust to invest in the public funds, and pay the dividends to A. until marriage, and then to transfer the stock to her husband; in case she should die unmarried, then as she should appoint by will, and in default of appointment to her executors and administrators. Semble, she is not entitled to have the fund transferred while unmarried. Wilson v. Mount, 2 Sim. & S. 493.

Death Unmarried, but having Attained Twenty-four.]—Bequest of a moiety of a residue to A. for life, if she shall attain twenty-four, or marry under twenty-four with consent, remainder to her children. Similar bequest of the other moiety in favour of B. and her children. And in case either of them should die under twenty-four, and without having been married with consent, the survivor attaining twenty-four, or marrying with consent, to take the other's moiety, for life, remainder to her children. But if both A. and B. shall die under twenty-four, and without having been married with consent, and shall die without issue, the whole estate to go to the testator's three sisters. It was held, that in the event that had happened of A. attaining twenty-four, and dying unmarried, there was no disposal by the will of the first moiety. Losh v. Towaley, Cooper t. Brough. 372.

Dying Without Issue in Mother's Lifetime.]—A testator bequeathed his residue to trustees, in trust for J. F. for life, and, after her death, for her children: but in case J. F. should survive her mother, and die without having had lawful issue, then in trust for the brothers and sisters of J. C. But in case J. F. should die in the lifetime of her mother without lawful issue, then the testator directed the trustees to retain, out of the residue, sufficient to produce 150*l.* a year, and to pay the annual produce to the mother for life; and, after her decease, he gave the principal so to be retained, to the person or persons who would be entitled thereto in case J. F. had survived her mother and died without lawful issue. J. F. died without issue in her mother's lifetime:—Held, that the whole of the residue, except the fund for paying the annuity, was undisposed of. Clarke v. Butler, 13 Sim. 401.

Death in Lifetime of Mother having Attained Twenty-one.]—Testatrix bequeathed her residue in trust for her daughter Caroline for life, and after her death, for her granddaughter, if she should survive her mother, and attain twenty-one, but in case she should not survive her mother, and attain twenty-one, then in trust for such other child or children of the testatrix's said daughter as should be living at their mother's death, to be paid to them after her death as they attained twenty-one; and if all such other children of the testatrix's said daughter, should die before attaining twenty-one, then in trust for L. M. The granddaughter attained twenty-one, but did not survive her mother. Another child of the testatrix's daughter attained twenty-one, but did not survive his mother; afterwards the daughter died:—Held, that the bequest over to L. M. took effect. Mackinnon v. Sewell, 5 Sim. 78. S. C., 2 Myl. & K. 202; Cooper t. Brough. 224; 3 L. J., Ch. 161. S. P., Wilson v. Mount, 2 Beav. 397.

Testator bequeathed a sum of stock to A. and B., for their lives, and on their deaths to their children then living, who should attain twenty-one, with a gift over to the survivor of A. and B., in case the children of either of them should die under twenty-one. A. died, leaving a child who had attained twenty-one. B. afterwards died without having had a child:—Held, that A.'s personal representatives were entitled to B.'s moiety of the stock. Aiton v. Brooks, 7 Sim. 204.

Bequest of stock in trust for three persons nominatim, in equal shares, to be transferred to them when they shall attain twenty-one. But, if any of them shall depart this life under the age of twenty-one and unmarried, then his share, original and accruing, to go to the survivors. And if all of them shall die under twenty-one and unmarried, then the stock to sink into the residue. One of the three died some months prior to the making of the will:—Held, that the survivors were entitled to the share which the testator intended to bequeath to the deceased. Sheppard's Trusts, In re, 1 K. & J. 269.

b. Failure of Gift over. Effect on Prior Gift.

"Die Unmarried and Without Children."]—A bequest to A., and if she shall die unmarried or without children, to B., is an absolute gift to A., defeasible by an executory gift over in the event of A. dying, at any time unmarried or without children. This construction can only be affected by a context which renders a different meaning necessary. O'Mahoney v. Burdett, L. R. 7 H. L. 388; 31 L. T. 705; 23 W. R. 361.

A gift to X. for life, with remainder to A., and if A. dies unmarried or without children, to B., is an executory gift over, which will defeat the absolute interest of A. in the event of A. dying, at any time, unmarried or without children. Ib.

Held, that the husband took a life interest in the 5,000*l.* in any event. Darby v. Darby, 18 Beav. 412.

Construction of a residuary clause, after a bequest to the testatrix's younger children, "but in case I shall have but one child living at the time of my decease," or all but one die under twenty-one and unmarried, to another family, not a condition. Residuary bequest is therefore established in the event of the testatrix's death, having never had a child. Murray v. Jones, 2 V. & B. 313; 13 R. R. 104.

Gift in remainder "in case A. B. should die under twenty-one without issue, or leaving issue all of them should die before twenty-one":—Held, not to take effect on A. B. dying unmarried and above twenty-one. Leonard v. Flight, 4 L. J., Ch. 225.

Failure by Lapse.]—Bequest of a contingent interest in personalty void, where the preceding gift never vested, owing to a lapse. Miller v. Faure, 1 Ves. sen. 85.

A testator, after bequeathing a sum of long annuities to his wife for life, gave the capital after her death, to A., if he shall be living at her decease; and if not, to A.'s son; A. outlives the wife, but both he and the wife die in the testator's lifetime:—Held, that the legacy to A. lapsed, and that the gift to his son did not take effect. Williams v. Jones, 1 Russ. 517.

Bequest to a son of the testator on his accomplishing his apprenticeship, with the dividends in the meantime for maintenance; and in case he shall die before he accomplishes his apprenticeship, then, and in such case, to the other children. The legacy lapsed by the death of the legatee, having accomplished his apprenticeship in the testator's life. Humberstone v. Stanton, 1 V. & B. 385; 12 R. R. 243.

Event not in Terms provided for.]—A legacy was given in trust for P., who was then unmarried, and who never married, for life, for her separate use, without power of anticipation, with remainder to her children; and in case there should be no child who should attain a vested interest, in trust for P. absolutely, "if she should survive her husband, but if she should die in his lifetime," as she should by will appoint, and in default in trust for her next-of-kin, as if she had died intestate and unmarried:—Held, that P. was absolutely entitled to the legacy, although the event of her dying unmarried was not in terms provided for. Brock v. Bradley, 33 Beav. 670; 4 N. R. 529; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 815; 11 L. T. 16; 12 W. R. 1136.

By a marriage settlement, property belonging to the intended wife was conveyed to trustees, upon trust (after the death of the husband and wife) for the children of the marriage in the usual way. It was declared, that, if all the children should die, the trustees should convey the property to A., B. and C. There never was any issue of the marriage:—Held, that, although the language of the deed only provided for default of issue, the gift over took effect. Osborn v. Bellman, 2 Giff. 593; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1325; 3 L. T. 265; 9 W. R. 11

A. made a will by which, under a power of appointment reserved to her in her father's will, she bequeathed her property to her husband; "and in case my husband shall die in my lifetime," to W. The husband made a will in the same terms. The husband and wife were by the same wave swept off the deck of the vessel in a storm at sea, and were drowned. No evidence was given to prove that one survived the other:—Held, that W. could not claim under either will, and that the property went over to those who by the father's will were to take in default of appointment by the daughter. Wing v. Angrave, 8 H. L. Cas. 183; 30 L. J., Ch. 65. S. C., nom. Underwood v. Wing, 19 Beav. 459; 4 De G. M. & G. 633; 3 Eq. R. 794; 24 L. J., Ch. 293; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 169; 3 W. R. 228.

The union of the two titles of W. did not affect the case, for he could not succeed in one because he could not succeed under the other, but was bound to establish his claim clearly under one or the other. Ib.

Charge contingent on Eldest Son coming into Possession.]—A father, by will, gave to each of his younger sons 1,000*l.*, "which I charge on my estate at A., hereinafter devised to my eldest son, but I direct that the sum shall not be raisable or paid to them respectively until my eldest son shall come into actual possession of the M. estate." The M. estate was settled on F. for life, remainder to the eldest son of the testator for life, remainder to his issue in tail male. The eldest son died before F., and without coming into possession of the M. estate:—Held, that the legacies to younger sons were wholly contingent upon the eldest son becoming owner of the M. estate; and that as that event had not happened they failed and sank into the residue. Taylor v. Lambert, 45 L. J., Ch. 418; 2 Ch. D. 177; 34 L. T. 567; 24 W. R. 691.

A testator gave one-fifth of the interest of a fund in the following proportions: namely, one-fifth to M., and two-fifths each to C. and J.; if M. should die without issue, which event did happen, her fifth was to go between C. and J. for their lives, if living at M.'s decease, or if only one, to him; if C. should leave issue, they should be entitled to the principal moneys the interest whereof was given to C. for life; but if he should die without issue in the lifetime of J., all benefit of the bequest to C. should go to J.; and if J. should die without having succeeded to, and been in actual possession of, the family estate, for a certain time, leaving issue other than an only son, such issue should be entitled to all the principal moneys the interest whereof J. might be entitled to as aforesaid. Then followed a gift over of all benefit intended for J., in case he should die in the lifetime of C., either without issue, or without issue other than an only son, or having been in possession of the estate for a certain time. If both C. and J. should die without issue, to be entitled as aforesaid to the bequest, the whole property should go as the survivor should think fit. J., having survived M., died in the lifetime of C., leaving a daughter, and without having been in possession of the estate; and then C. died without issue:—Held, that the daughter of J. was entitled to the whole fund. Newburgh (Earl) v. Eyre, 4 Russ. 454; 6 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 153.

Wife Surviving her Husband.]—Bequest in trust for the wife and children of H. during his life; and from and after the decease of H., in trust to pay it to his children then living, reserving one-fifth for his wife for her life, which, immediately on her death, was to be divided amongst H.'s children generally:—Held, that the reservation of the one-fifth for the wife and children was contingent on the wife surviving H., and she having pre-deceased him, that it did not take effect. Patch v. Sparkes, 30 Beav. 515; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 297; 10 W. R. 239.

Death of Son in Mother's Lifetime, a Bachelor.]—Testator bequeathed a sum of stock to his wife, and after her decease to his three sons, to be equally divided amongst them, if they should be all living at the decease of his wife; but if any or either of them should die in her lifetime, leaving a child or children, such child or children who should be living at the time of the wife's death should be substituted in the place of such of his sons who should so happen to die, and take his, her, or their parent's share. All the sons died in the wife's lifetime, two of them leaving children who survived the wife; the third died a bachelor:—Held, that one-third of the stock fell into the residue. Hustler v. Tillbrook, 9 Sim. 368.

Daughter Dying Unmarried.] —Testator bequeathed a sum in trust for his daughter (a single woman) for her separate use, independently of any husband she might have, and after her death in trust for her children, and, if no children then if she should survive any husband she might have, for her absolutely, but if her husband should survive her then as she should appoint, and in default of appointment for her next of kin. The daughter died unmarried:—Held, that she only took a life interest, the apparent intention being to give the corpus only in the event of her marrying. Lenox v. Lenox, 10 Sim. 400; 9 L. J., Ch. 83; 4 Jur. 5.

Bequest of money to trustees on trust to invest in the public funds, and pay the dividends to A. until marriage, and then to transfer the stock to her husband; in case she should die unmarried, then as she should appoint by will, and in default of appointment to her executors and administrators. Semble, she is not entitled to have the fund transferred while unmarried. Wilson v. Mount, 2 Sim. & S. 493.

Death Unmarried, but having Attained Twenty-four.]—Bequest of a moiety of a residue to A. for life, if she shall attain twenty-four, or marry under twenty-four with consent, remainder to her children. Similar bequest of the other moiety in favour of B. and her children. And in case either of them should die under twenty-four, and without having been married with consent, the survivor attaining twenty-four, or marrying with consent, to take the other's moiety, for life, remainder to her children. But if both A. and B. shall die under twenty-four, and without having been married with consent, and shall die without issue, the whole estate to go to the testator's three sisters. It was held, that in the event that had happened of A. attaining twenty-four, and dying unmarried, there was no disposal by the will of the first moiety. Losh v. Townley, Cooper t. Brough. 372.

Dying Without Issue in Mother's Lifetime.]—A testator bequeathed his residue to trustees, in trust for J. F. for life, and, after her death, for her children: but in case J. F. should survive her mother, and die without having had lawful issue, then in trust for the brothers and sisters of J. C. But in case J. F. should die in the lifetime of her mother without lawful issue, then the testator directed the trustees to retain, out of the residue, sufficient to produce 150*l.* a year, and to pay the annual produce to the mother for life; and, after her decease, he gave the principal so to be retained, to the person or persons who would be entitled thereto in case J. F. had survived her mother and died without lawful issue. J. F. died without issue in her mother's lifetime:—Held, that the whole of the residue, except the fund for paying the annuity, was undisposed of. Clarke v. Butler, 13 Sim. 401.

Death in Lifetime of Mother having Attained Twenty-one.]—Testatrix bequeathed her residue in trust for her daughter Caroline for life, and after her death, for her granddaughter, if she should survive her mother, and attain twenty-one, but in case she should not survive her mother, and attain twenty-one, then in trust for such other child or children of the testatrix's said daughter as should be living at their mother's death, to be paid to them after her death as they attained twenty-one; and if all such other children of the testatrix's said daughter, should die before attaining twenty-one, then in trust for L. M. The granddaughter attained twenty-one, but did not survive her mother. Another child of the testatrix's daughter attained twenty-one, but did not survive his mother; afterwards the daughter died:—Held, that the bequest over to L. M. took effect. Mackinnon v. Sewell, 5 Sim. 78. S. C., 2 Myl. & K. 202; Cooper t. Brough. 224; 3 L. J., Ch. 161. S. P., Wilson v. Mount, 2 Beav. 397.

Testator bequeathed a sum of stock to A. and B., for their lives, and on their deaths to their children then living, who should attain twenty-one, with a gift over to the survivor of A. and B., in case the children of either of them should die under twenty-one. A. died, leaving a child who had attained twenty-one. B. afterwards died without having had a child:—Held, that A.'s personal representatives were entitled to B.'s moiety of the stock. Aiton v. Brooks, 7 Sim. 204.

Bequest of stock in trust for three persons nominatim, in equal shares, to be transferred to them when they shall attain twenty-one. But, if any of them shall depart this life under the age of twenty-one and unmarried, then his share, original and accruing, to go to the survivors. And if all of them shall die under twenty-one and unmarried, then the stock to sink into the residue. One of the three died some months prior to the making of the will:—Held, that the survivors were entitled to the share which the testator intended to bequeath to the deceased. Sheppard's Trusts, In re, 1 K. & J. 269.

b. Failure of Gift over. Effect on Prior Gift.

"Die Unmarried and Without Children."]—A bequest to A., and if she shall die unmarried or without children, to B., is an absolute gift to A., defeasible by an executory gift over in the event of A. dying, at any time unmarried or without children. This construction can only be affected by a context which renders a different meaning necessary. O'Mahoney v. Burdett, L. R. 7 H. L. 388; 31 L. T. 705; 23 W. R. 361.

A gift to X. for life, with remainder to A., and if A. dies unmarried or without children, to B., is an executory gift over, which will defeat the absolute interest of A. in the event of A. dying, at any time, unmarried or without children. Ib.

There is no rule of construction arising from possible delay in the vesting of a gift, which controls the natural meaning of the terms of the bequest. Ib.

Gift of 1,000*l.* consols to A. for her life, after her death to her daughter B., "if B. should die unmarried or without children the consols I here will to revert to C." The will then appointed D. residuary legatee. Both A. and C. died in the lifetime of the testatrix. On her death B. entered into possession, and married, but after some years died without ever having a child:—Held, that on the death of B. without children the gift over to the residuary legatee took effect, and that it was not affected by the death of C. in the lifetime of the testatrix. The gift to C. failed by lapse, and the residuary legatee became entitled to take all that C., if living at the death of the testatrix, could have taken. Ib.

The words "I here will to revert to C." indicated a benefit intended for C. by means of an executory limitation over, after enjoyment by a previous taker, and not an alternate gift to take effect, if at all, before the period of enjoyment had commenced. Ib.

Absolute Gift or Life Interest.]—When a legacy is given subject to be defeated by a subsequent event, the legatee has an absolute interest till the event happens; and if the event becomes impossible, the legacy becomes absolute. Lowther v. Cavendish (Lord), Amb. 358; 3 Bro. P. C. 186.

Gift by a testator of all the residue of his estate and effects, real and personal, whatsoever and wheresoever, to his wife, and after her death, to be equally divided to the children, should there be any; he also appointed his wife sole executrix. There were no children:—Held, that the wife was absolutely entitled. Crozier v. Crozier, L. R. 15 Eq. 282; 21 W. R. 398.

A testator gave his whole property to his wife, upon condition that she should pay an annuity of 130*l.* to his mother during her life, and after the death of his wife to be equally divided between those of his children who should survive her, share and share alike. All the testator's children died in the lifetime of his widow, who married again, and died leaving her husband surviving her:—Held, upon her death, that in the events which had happened the testator's property was undisposed of, and that the next of kin, and not the second husband in right of his wife, were entitled to it. Joslin v. Hammond, 3 Myl. & K. 110; 3 L. J., Ch. 148.

Testator gave the interest and produce of the residue to his two sisters for their lives; and after their decease, the principal to be paid to their children, share and share alike: but whichever died before the other, then the share so paid to her to be paid to her children, in equal proportions: but if she should leave no children, then the interest and produce to be paid to the survivor as aforesaid. One sister died without leaving children; the survivor is entitled to the interest for life; and the principal is vested in all her children. Taylor v. Langford, 3 Ves. 119.

Bequest of Term of Years.]—Semble the dictum in Forth v. Chapman (1 P. Wms. 666), and the doctrine in Doe v. Cooke (7 East, 269), that when there appears to be an intention on the face of a will to give the whole of a term of years away from an executor, a bequest of it, though only for a day, is a gift of the whole term, in case the limitations over are void, cannot be sustained. Kerr or Ker v. Dungannon (Lord), 1 Dr. & War. 509; 1 Con. & L. 335; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 343.

8. Remainders and Gifts Over of Personal Property.

a. Gift of Chattels by way of Remainder.

In General.]—Personals cannot be limited; and bill to have bonds executed tending thereto, according to directions of will, was dismissed. Williams v. Williams, 1 Eq. Cas. Abr. 307.

Whether a remainder may be limited on a donatio mortis causâ, quære. Hambrooke v. Simmons, 4 Russ. 25.

Devise of chattels for life, with remainder over, good; but if of small value, and the case requires, it may be otherwise. Cooper v. Williams, Pre. Ch. 71.

A. devises household goods to his wife for life and afterwards to his son. The court allowed this a good devise over; and to be the same as if the devise had been only of the use of the goods to the wife for life. Hyde v. Parratt, 1 P. Wms. 1; 2 Vern. 331.

Devise of a personal thing to one for life, remainder to another; the remainder is good; it being the same as if the use of a thing was devised to one for life, the remainder over. Clarges v. Albemarle, 2 Vern. 245; Nel. Ch. Rep. 174.

A., seised in fee by deed and fine, conveys the lands to the use of trustees for seventy years, if A. so long live, remainder to trustees for 3,000 years, and, after the death of A., then to his son B. Whether the remainder to B. is good, quære. Penhay v. Hurrell, 2 Vern. 373; 2 Freem. 258.

Gifts Generally—Gift Over of whatever Remained at Death.]—A testator bequeathed all his "estate and effects, goods, chattels, houses, lands, moneys," to his wife, for her sole, separate use and benefit; and further gave, willed, and directed that at her decease "whatever remains of" his estate and effects should go to other parties, who were enumerated and described. The widow only received and spent a small sum of money, and enjoyed the remainder in specie, and died:—Held, that such of the parties enumerated and described as were living at the death of the widow were entitled to the property. Constable v. Bull, 3 De G. & Sm. 411; 18 L. J., Ch. 302; 13 Jur. 619.

The widow was entitled to an estate for life only in the residuary personal estate of the testator after payment of his debts and funeral and testamentary expenses. S. C., 22 L. J., Ch. 182.

b. Chattels Quæ Usu Consumuntur.

In General.]—A specific bequest, for life, of things quæ ipso usu consumuntur, is a gift of the property; and there can be no limitation over after a life interest in such articles; but if included in a residuary bequest for life, they must be sold, and the interest enjoyed by the tenant for life. Randall v. Russell, 3 Mer. 194; 17 R. R. 56. And see Hardman v. Johnson, 3 Mer. 347; 17 R. R. 95; Bryant v. Easterson, 5 Jur. (N.S.) 166; 7 W. R. 298.

Where the use and the property can have no separate existence, the old rule must prevail, viz. that a gift for life carries the absolute interest. Ib.

In this case where the gift was of a leasehold farm, and the stock and crop thereon, an inquiry was directed to ascertain of what the stock consisted. Ib.

If a testator bequeaths consumable articles to A. for life, with a limitation over by way of remainder to B.; as the gift to A. is absolute, the limitation to B. cannot take effect, even though A. die in the testator's lifetime. Andrew v. Andrew, 1 Coll. C. C. 690.

Testator, after devising his real estate to his natural son, T. A., bequeathed as follows: "I give and bequeath unto my sister E., to be paid out of the rents and profits of the aforesaid lands, the sum of 250*l.* per annum, and to live free from rent in the house I now occupy in H., with the land and buildings I now occupy, containing about nine Lancashire acres, with the use of my household furniture, plate, linen, books, wines, spirits, carriages and horses, cows, hay and farming utensils and stock, for her sole use during her natural life, or so long as she shall remain unmarried; in either event, then to go to T. A.; but should she marry, then my will and mind is, that my executors shall pay her 100*l.* per annum for her own use during her natural life, out of the rents and profits of my said estate." The sister married in the testator's lifetime:—Held, that the consumable articles did not go to T. A., but fell into the residue. Ib.

Farming Stock and Implements of Husbandry.]—Farming stock and implements of husbandry are not things quæ ipso usu consumuntur, and therefore a gift of them for life does not confer on the legatee for life the absolute interest in them. Graves v. Wright, 2 K. & J. 347; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 277.

—— "Not Accountable for Depreciation."]—A husband gave to his widow his personal estate, including his farming implements and stock, live and dead, for her life, and declared that she should not be liable to account for any diminution or depreciation in the farming implements and stock; and after her decease he gave the residue of his personal estate to his children:—Held, that the widow took an absolute interest in the farming implements and stock. Breton v. Mockett, 47 L. J., Ch. 754; 9 Ch. D. 95; 26 W. R. 850.

Man's Wearing Apparel.]—Man's wearing apparel given, with other articles, to wife for life, remainder over:—Held, that the wearing apparel did not vest absolutely in her as things quæ ipso usu consumuntur. Hall's Will, In re, 1 Jur. (N.S.) 974.

Business and Stock-in-Trade.]—A gift for life of a business and stock-in-trade confers only a life interest in such part of the stock-in-trade as consists of consumable articles. Cockayne v. Harrison, L. R. 13 Eq. 432; 26 L. T. 385; 20 W. R. 504.

Secus, when the gift is of consumable articles, without any reference to trade or business. Ib.

—— Book Debts or Capital.]—A. bequeathed his stock-in-trade, &c., to his wife and son to be used by them in his trade and business, which he directed to be carried on by them, in partnership, during the widowhood of his wife; "and for that purpose they were to have the use of the book-debts or capital which he at his death might have employed therein";—Held, that the widow and son were entitled to the book-debts or capital absolutely. Terry v. Terry, 33 Beav. 232; 9 L. T. 469; 12 W. R. 66.

Wines.]—A wine merchant, possessed of a large stock of wine, by his will gave all his household goods, and everything he died possessed of, to his wife for life; and he bequeathed the whole of his effects that might be remaining after her death to his daughter:—Held, that the wife took absolutely the wine which the testator had for his private use, but a life interest only in the rest. Phillips v. Beal, 32 Beav. 25.

Devise upon trusts to permit M. to have the use and enjoyment of house and premises free of ground rent, and also all household furniture, carriages, horses, goods, wines, linen, &c., in or about the house for life or widowhood:—Held, that M. was confined to the personal use and enjoyment of the house and furniture and effects, but that he was entitled to the wines and other consumable articles absolutely. Clive v. Clive, Kay, 600; 2 Eq. R. 913; 23 L. J., Ch. 951.

Limitation of Terms.]—See MERGER—SETTLEMENT.

Gift over of Undisposed of Interest.]—See WILL.

c. Interests Given to Persons in Succession.

Absolute Interest or Interest for Life.]—A testator left all his personal estate, subject to legacies, and all his houses, gardens, parks, and woods, and all his landed estates, to his wife for her life, and afterwards all his personal and landed estates to his sister for her life, and then to the eldest son G. B., afterwards to G. B.'s second, third, or any later sons he might have by the testator's niece, A., and then to the eldest son and other sons successively of the Earl of B., by the testator's niece C.; but all these to be subject to outpayments and legacies by the will given; and if they and the conditions of his will were not complied with exactly, he left all the advantages of it to the next person in succession, subject to the legacies and so on, unless they were discharged. The testator, by codicils to the will, gave numerous legacies and annuities, upon the non-payment of which he declared repeatedly, and in various forms of expression, that the persons taking his personal estate should be subject to the penalties in the will. G. B. had several sons, all living at the death of the testator:—Held, that the eldest son of G. B. took the personal estate absolutely, subject to the prior life estates and to the legacies and annuities given by the will and codicils. Hoare v. Byng, 10 Cl. & F. 508; 8 Jur. 563—H. L. (E.) Affirming 5 Beav. 558; 12 L. J., Ch. 169.

Under a gift by A. to his wife of 10,000*l.*, "afterwards to go to the understated residuary legatee E.":—Held, that the legacy of 10,000*l.*, was given to the wife absolutely, but that interest upon such legacy did not begin to run until after one year from the testator's death. Percy, In re, Percy v. Percy, 24 Ch. D. 616; 49 L. T. 554.

Heirlooms — Contingent future Interest — Tenant in Tail—Personal Estate.]—A testator by his will directed that his books and plate should be considered as heirlooms and should pass with his real estate in the same manner as if they were an estate of inheritance at common law, and should so continue annexed to his said real estate as long as the law would permit, to be inherited by the several persons who should succeed thereto; and he devised and bequeathed all his real and residuary personal estate to trustees upon trust for R. C., for life, and after the decease of R. C. for his first and other sons successively in tail male, and in default of such issue upon trust for Henry C., the eldest son of J. C., for life, and after his decease for his first and other sons successively in tail male, and in default of such issue upon trust for "the next eldest son of the said J. C. who shall survive the said Henry C." for life, and after his decease upon trust for "the first and other sons of the body of the said next eldest son of the said J. C. who shall survive the said Henry C." successively in tail male, and in default of such issue upon trust for his, the testator's, own right heirs. R. C. and Henry C. died without having married. J. C. died in testator's lifetime. George was the next eldest son of J. C., who survived Henry. F. J. C. was the eldest son of George, and the first tenant in tail under the settlement, and he died an infant in the lifetime of R. C. and of Henry C.:—Held, that notwithstanding the death of F. J. C., before it could be known whether his father would survive Henry C., or whether there would be any issue male either of R. C. or Henry C., the heirlooms and residuary personalty vested absolutely in the legal personal representative of F. J. C. Hogg v. Jones (32 Beav. 45; 1 N. R. 222; 32 L. J., Ch. 361; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 507; 8 L. T. 816) distinguished. Cresswell, In re, Parkin v. Cresswell, 52 L. J., Ch. 798; 24 Ch. D. 102: 49 L. T. 590.

D. LEGACIES CHARGED ON REAL ESTATE.

1. In General. Not Vested, 1683.
2. Contrary Intention, 1685.
3. Legacies Charged on a Mixed Fund, 1689.

1. IN GENERAL.

General Rule.]—Charge upon land payable at a future day, not vested till the time of payment. Phipps v. Mulgrave (Lord), 3 Ves. 614; 2 R. R. 607.

Legacy charged on real estate and payable at a future day sinks as to the real estate by the death of the legatee before the time of payment, and the assets cannot be marshalled. Pearce v. Loman, 3 Ves. 135.

A legacy payable out of land at a future day, although given with interest in the meantime, shall not be raised if the legatee die before the time of payment. Gawler v. Standerwick, 2 Cox, 15.

Whether a portion charged on land be given with or without interest, by deed or by will, if the person die before it becomes payable, it shall sink in the estate. Boycot v. Cotton, 1 Atk. 555.

Testator, being entitled to the reversion of an estate after the death of his wife, devised it to A. in fee on condition that he paid to E. 100*l.* within six months after the reversion came into his possession. E. died before the reversion came into possession:—Held, that her representative was not entitled. Hall v. Terry, 1 Atk. 502.

Where money is given to be paid out of real estate at a future time, if the person die before the time, it shall sink into the estate; the same as to personal estate, where the time of payment is annexed to the legacy. Ib.

Whether a sum of money be given as a portion, or as a legacy, if charged upon land, and the party die before the time, it cannot be raised. Ib.

A trust upon land for raising and paying a sum of money, within six years after the testator's death, to his second son, who died within the time, construed to be for maintenance only and not transmissible. Ib.

A testator directed a sum of 5,000*l.* to be raised for each of his children, and the rest of his estate to accumulate till 1848, when he directed 3,000*l.* to be raised and paid to each of his children then living, or to their issue if dead, &c. And he declared that if any child should die, &c., before his share became payable, his share should be equally divided among the survivors:—Held, on the construction of the whole will, that no sum of 3,000*l.* was to be raised in respect of the share of a deceased child. Little v. Daniel, 12 Jur. 167. And see Remnant v. Hood, infra.

A legacy charged on land to be purchased with the residue of a personal estate will lapse by the death of the legatee before the day of payment, as if charged upon lands actually purchased. Harrison v. Naylor, 2 Cox, 248; 3 Bro. C. C. 108.

Portion Payable at Twenty-one.]—One devises 100*l.* to his daughter for her portion, charged upon a real estate, and payable at twenty-one. Daughter dies before twenty-one. The portion shall sink in the land; otherwise if no time had been limited for the payment of the portion, for in that case it goes to the executor of the daughter. No difference where the portion is secured by a settlement or a will, if secured out of a real estate, and the party dies before it is payable. In either case it sinks into the lands. Smith v. Smith, 2 Vern. 92.

—— Twenty-one or Marriage.]—A., having entailed his land on his son, subject to a mortgage, by will devises his leasehold and personal estate to pay his debts and legacies, and directs, if his personal estate is applied to pay the mortgage, it should be kept on foot to make good his daughter's portion, and gives her 3,000*l.* to be paid at twenty-one or marriage, if married with consent, if not but 1,000*l.* She died at six years of age; the portion shall not be raised for the benefit of her administrator. Yates v. Phettiplace, 2 Vern. 416; Pre. Ch. 140.

—— Marriage and Death under Twenty-one.]—A. devises lands to B., his son and his heir, and declared that out of the lands he shall pay 200*l.* to his daughter at her age of twenty-one. She marries and dies under age; legacy not vested. Carter v. Bletsoe, 2 Vern. 617; Pre. Ch. 267; Gilb. Eq. R. 11.

If lands are devised in fee, in trust to raise 300*l.* as a portion to be paid at twenty-one or marriage, and the legatee dies before twenty-one or marriage, it sinks into the real estate. Langley v. Oates, 2 Eq. Cas. Abr. 541, fol. 7.

Legacy Payable at Twenty-one—Interest till Twenty-one — Charge on Real and Personal Estate.]—A. gave a legacy of 400*l.* charged upon his real and personal estate, to be divided, upon the death of his granddaughter, equally between her children, if more than one, or if but one, then the whole to that child, the same to be paid to such children at the age of twenty-one; and if any child died before attaining twenty-one, then his share to go to the survivors and to the executor or administrator of such as should have lived to attain twenty-one; and the testator declared that the shares of such of the children as, upon the death of his granddaughter, should be under twenty-one, should bear interest at the rate of 5*l.* per cent. per annum from her decease, such interest to be paid towards their maintenance until their respective shares should become payable. No child lived to attain twenty-one, and the personalty was insufficient:—Held, that the legacy could not be raised out of the real estate, which had become freed from the charge. Parker v. Hodgson, 1 Dr. & Sm. 568; 30 L. J., Ch. 590; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 750; 4 L. T. 762; 9 W. R. 607.

Condition—Eldest Son coming into Possession.]—The testator by will, gave to each of his younger sons 1,000*l.*, "which I charge on my estate at A. hereinafter devised to my eldest son, but I direct that the sum shall not be raisable or paid to them respectively until my eldest son shall come into actual possession of the M. estate." The M. estate was settled on F. for life, remainder to the eldest son of the testator for life, remainder to his issue in tail male. The eldest son died before F., and without coming into possession of the M. estate:—Held, that the legacies to the younger sons were wholly contingent upon the eldest son becoming the owner of the M. estate: and that as that event had not happened they failed and sank into the residue. Taylor v. Lambert, 45 L. J., Ch. 418; 2 Ch. D. 177; 34 L. T. 567; 24 W. R. 691.

Legacy to Grandchildren Payable Twelve Months after Mother's Death.]—A testator gave his daughter a life annuity of 50*l.*, and from and immediately after her death he bequeathed 1,000*l.* unto her children, share and share alike, payable twelve months after the daughter's death. This was payable exclusively out of the testator's real estate:—Held, that those children alone of the daughter who survived her participated in the 1,000*l.* Cartledge, In re, 29 Beav. 583.

Legacy Payable Six Months after Death of Annuitant.]—A testator devised real estate to A. in fee, charged with an annuity to B. for life, and directed that after the death of B. the estate should be charged with the payment of 100*l.* apiece to X., Y. and Z., and that the same should be paid to them respectively within six calendar months after the death of B., or such of them as should be then living. X. died in the lifetime of B.:—Held, that the legacy to X. had not vested, and was not payable to his representatives. Goodwin v. Drury, 21 L. J., Ch. 680.

2. Contrary Intention.

General Rule.]—The rule, that future legacies payable out of real estate do not vest till the time of payment, will be made to give way when an opposite intention can be clearly implied from the will. Brown v. Woolar, 2 Y. & C. C. C. 134.

Bequest to two daughters of 1,000*l.* each, to be raised and paid to them immediately after decease of testator's wife, out of rents, &c., of his manors, &c., or by sale or mortgage, with interest after the rate of 6 per cent. from the decease of his wife until the sums should be duly paid to his daughters or their respective executors, administrators, or assigns, and in case either of his said daughters died before him, then the survivor, her executors, &c., were to receive all the sums before devised out of his said lands, to be raised in a manner thereinbefore appointed, and the part of the daughter so dying should not cease or sink into the estate for the benefit of his heir, but should remain and be raised for the benefit of his surviving daughter. Both daughters survived the testator, and one of them died before her mother, and the representative, after the mother's death, applied to have her legacy raised:—Held, that it should be raised. Lowther v. Condon, 2 Atk. 127; Barnard. 327.

Where a legacy upon lands depends on two contingencies, though one of them does not happen, the legacy shall be raised. Ib.

Where the postponing the time of payment of a legacy has been owing to the circumstances of the testator's estate, and not to the circumstances of the legatees, that is not so strong a case for a legacy's sinking into the estate, as where the postponing the payment of it has appeared to have arisen from circumstances on the part of the legatee. Ib.

An inference may be drawn in the plaintiff's favour from the direction that the legacy shall be paid to the daughters, or their respective executors, administrators, and assigns. Ib.

The clause on which Lord Hardwicke principally founded his opinion was, the direction that, if one daughter died before him her part should not sink into the estate. Ib.

Legacies or portions charged on real estate, and payable at a future time, do not vest until the time appointed for payment, but, upon the death of the legatee or portioner before that time, lapse or sink into the inheritance. Remnant v. Hood, 2 De G. F. & J. 396: 30 L. J., Ch. 71; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1173; 3 L. T. 458.

Payment Postponed for Convenience of Estate.]—But if the payment of the legacy or portion is postponed, not from any consideration personal to the legatee or portioner, but for the convenience of the estate, the legacy or portion will vest, notwithstanding the legatee or portioner dies before the time of payment. Ib.

Where, therefore, a devised estate was charged under a settlement with portions for younger children, to be raised and levied within three months after the death of the tenant for life, and to be forthwith paid and payable:—Held, that a younger child of the settlor, who attained twenty-one and died in his lifetime, took a vested interest in her portion. Ib.

A legacy was charged on real estate, and payable when the brother and sister of the legatee had attained twenty-one, and the rents of the estate were up to that time given for their maintenance:—Held, that the legacy did not lapse by the death of the legatee before the time of payment, being postponed for the convenience of the estate only. Goulburn v. Brooks, 2 Y. & C. 539; 7 L. J., Ex. Eq. 33; 1 Jur. 354.

Death before Time of Payment.]—By a will made in 1857, R., after giving all his lands, stock and cattle to his son M., bequeathed his farm at F. to his (the testator's) daughter G., "and also the sum of 1,000*l.* to be charged on my estate, and to lie out at 4*l.* per cent. for ten years. In the event of her decease, the said sum to go to her children, share and share alike." G. died in 1867, within ten years after R.:—Held, that the legacy of 1,000*l.* was indefeasibly vested in G., the time of payment only being postponed in ease of the estate, and that the words of contingency pointed to her death in the testator's lifetime. Neary's Estate, In re, 7 L. R. Ir. 311.

Testator devised real estates to A. for life, remainder to B. in fee. And he gave a legacy to C. to be paid to her by B. within twelve months after A.'s death; and he charged his estate with the legacy, and appointed A. his executrix; C. died in A.'s lifetime:—Held, that the legacy did not lapse. Pool v. Terry, 4 Sim. 294.

A. devised lands to his son B., but if he should die without issue male of his body then living, or which might be afterwards born, that then his daughter M. should receive at her age of twenty-one, or day of marriage, which should first happen, 3,500*l.* over and above 2,500*l.* before given her, and in case the contingency of his said son's dying without issue male should not happen before his daughter's said age, or day of marriage, that she should receive the said 3,500*l.* whenever such contingency might happen; and the testator charged this legacy or portion on his real estate. M., having attained twenty-one, married, and died in the lifetime of her brother B., who afterwards died without issue male:—Held, that the husband and administrator of M. was entitled to this legacy, for it was vested in her at the time of the marriage, and that it was a subsisting charge on the testator's estate. Wither v. King, 3 Bro. P. C. 135. Affirmed, nom. King v. Withers, 4 Bro. P. C. 228; Pre. Ch. 348; Gilb. Eq. R. 26; 3 P. Wms. 414; Cas. t. Talb. 117; 2 Eq. Cas. Abr. 656, pl. 10.

Devise of freehold houses to A. for life, remainder to B., he paying thereout to C. and D., legacies three months after the death of his wife. C. and D. died, living the wife:—Held, raisable for their representatives. Jeale v. Titchener, Amb. 703; Dick. 444; 1 Bro. C. C. 120, n.

As to administration of interests absolutely vested in a deceased party, see Hutchins v. Foy, 2 Comyns, 716.

Devise of lands to trustees in fee in trust, within six years after the testator's death, to raise and pay 1,500*l.* to his daughter A. A. dies within the six years; the 1,500*l.* shall go to her administrator, there being no certain time limited when, but only the ultimate time within which, it shall be raised. Cowper v. Scott, 3 P. Wms. 119.

One having two sons, G. and C., and a daughter, devises several estates to his two sons and their issue, with cross remainders, and declared, that if either of them should die without issue living at his death, so that his estate should come to his brother, the surviving brother should pay 2,000*l.* to his daughter within one year after his brother's death, and charged the estate with it; G. died leaving two sons; afterwards C. died without issue:—Held, that the 2,000*l.* should be raised. Tollett v. Tollett, Amb. 177.

A. devises a college lease for twenty years to his wife for life, remainder to his son, she paying 10*l.* per annum to his son during her life; the son dies in the lifetime of his mother; the rent continues during the life of the wife, and shall go to the executor of the son, and the wife is compellable to pay her proportion for a renewal of the lease. Lock v. Lock, 2 Vern. 666.

Devise of estate to second son, J., after the decease or marriage of the wife, charged with 100*l.* to testator's daughter M. M. died, living the wife; but held the legacy vested in M. and transmissible. Godwin v. Munday, 1 Bro. C. C. 191; Dick. 551.

Devise of lands to wife for life, and after her death to the son, he paying out of such lands 600*l.* to testator's daughters within six months after death of wife, with power of entry in case of nonpayment. The daughters died in the life of testator's wife:—Held, their legacies vested, and on his death to be raised for their representatives. Manning v. Herbert, Amb. 575.

A legacy out of real estate, to be paid within twelve months after the death of A. The legatee survives A. but one month; it does not lapse, but goes to the representative. Hodgson v. Rawson, 1 Ves. sen. 44.

Legacy given charged on real estate, to vest immediately on testator's death, but to be paid at twenty-one, vests, though legatee dies before twenty-one. Watkins v. Cheek, 2 Sim. & S. 199; 25 R. R. 181.

Testator devised land to wife for life, remainder to S., till his grandson attained twenty-three, and when he attained twenty-three, testator devised to him in fee, on condition that he paid H. 60*l.* within two years after he attained twenty-three, and testator gave H. power of entry. H. lived till the grandson attained twenty-three, but died within the two years after he attained that age:—Held, that the 60*l.* should be raised and paid to the representative of H. Emes v. Hancock, 2 Atk. 507.

R., by will, gave an estate to his wife for life, and if there should be no issue between them, to defendant, charged with two sums to be paid to M. and W. Afterwards M. being dead, by codicil he ordered the legacy to be paid to W., and R. died, living the wife; the charge was vested, and transmissible to his representatives. Dawson v. Killet, 1 Bro. C. C. 119.

Devise of lands to his sister, paying 100*l.* a year to his wife for life, and several legacies within twelve months after the death of his wife; several of the legatees died in the lifetime of the wife, and held, their representatives were entitled. Tunstall v. Brachen, Amb. 167; 1 Bro. C. C. 124, n.

A testator gave legacies of 50*l.* each to six grandchildren, when the youngest grandchild should come of age, payable from the produce of a real estate, then to be sold; and if either of those children should not live to come of age, nor have an heir born in wedlock, he directed the 50*l.* to be equally divided among the surviving children. E. M., one of the six grandchildren, married during her minority, but afterwards attained twenty-one, and before the youngest grandchild attained that age she died, leaving a child:—Held, that her legacy of 50*l.* was a vested interest, and belonged to her personal representatives. Markin v. Phillipson, 3 Myl. & K. 257; 3 L. J., Ch. 148.

Lands devised to be sold for payment of portions; one of the children dies after the portion becomes due, and before the land sold; the administrator is entitled to the moiety. Bartholomew v. Meredith. 1 Vern. 276.

A testator, by his will, gives 2,000*l*. to a daughter to be secured on land until paid as thereinafter mentioned, and charges certain estates with the payment. In a subsequent passage he directs the daughter to let her legacy remain in the hands of the executors at interest till she should happen to marry, and then, and in such case, the legacy should be paid by certain instalments by the executors, they contributing to the payment equally. He then devises the property charged, subject to the payment of the legacy, to three of his sons, whom he appoints his residuary legatees and executors, they paying his debts, funeral expenses, the legacy above mentioned, and certain annuities:—Held, that the bequest was a vested legacy of 2,000*l*., and not merely a gift of the interest, while the daughter remained single, with a contingent gift of the principal in the event of marriage. Hudson v. Forster, Forster, In re, 2 Mont. D. & D. 177; 10 L. J., Ch. 340. Affirming 5 Jur. 176.

Charge for Child of which Wife Enceinte.]—A testator gave an annuity, charged on land, to A. for her life, and directed the annuity, at her decease, "to go to the child of which she was then pregnant if it be alive, to it and its heirs for ever if it attaineth the age of twenty-one, if not, the money to be divided" amongst a class. The child was born alive, and attained the age of twenty-one, but died before A.:—Held, that the annuity vested absolutely in the child at twenty-one. Baines v. Ibbotson, 15 W. R. 56.

One charges his lands with 6,000*l*. for the child of which his wife was privement enceinte, if it proved a daughter, with a clause of entry for nonpayment. A daughter is born and dies; the 6,000*l*. shall go to her administrator. Norfolk v. Gifford, 2 Vern. 208.

3. Legacies Charged on a Mixed Fund.

Real and Personal Estate — Death before Day of Payment.]—A. devised all his lands to B. and C., and their heirs, in trust to sell part of his lands, and pay his debts, as far as the produce would go; and as to the rest in trust to receive the rents and make leases for ninety-nine years, determinable on three lives, and therewith to pay his debts and legacies, then to the use of D.'s wife for life, remainder to her issue; and he made the trustees executors; he likewise gave 500*l*. to his nephew E., to be paid at twenty-one or marriage, who died under twenty-one. The lands directed to be sold were insufficient to pay the debts, and testator's personal estate was only 700*l*.:—Held, the nephew's legacy being charged on real as well as personal estate, cannot be raised, as he did not live to attain twenty-one. Prowse v. Abingdon, 1 Atk. 482.

The resolutions that there is no difference between a charge on the real estate only, and a charge on the real and personal estate too, are so strong that they are not to be shaken. Id. 415.

Whether charge on land be created by deed or will, whether given by way of portion for a child, or merely as a legacy by collateral relations or others, if the party die before the day of payment, it cannot be raised. The reason is, that the court of equity governs itself by the rules of the common law, for then if A. covenant to pay money to B. at a future day, and B. die before the day, the money is not due to his representative. Ib.

A., by will, devised all her real and personal estate to B., to pay her legacies thereout, and then she gave to C. 2,000*l*., in trust for his daughter D., to be paid within eighteen months after her decease, which he should place out at interest, and pay the same, with the produce thereof, to his daughter, for her own use at eighteen or marriage. C. died in the lifetime of testatrix, and his daughter died six months after. This legacy is a charge on both funds, and as the court always goes as far as possible to hinder the raising of portions out of land for the benefit of representatives, it was decreed that this portion should not be raised, though if D. had survived the eighteen months, her representative would have been entitled, notwithstanding C. was dead. So, if she had died under eighteen or unmarried, provided she outlived the eighteen months. If a legacy is payable or given at a certain time out of a personal estate with interest in the meantime, it is a vested legacy, but if out of a real estate, and the party dies before the time, it sinks into the inheritance; and the construction is the same if charged on a mixed fund, where it is given or payable at a certain time. Van v. Clark. 1 Atk. 510.

Where testator gave 300*l*. to trustees in trust, to be paid within three years after his decease to W., for her separate use, and after her decease, 200*l*. thereof to her son T., and the other 100*l*. to her son C., and W. and T. die within the three years:—Decreed, that the money should be paid, though charged on both funds. Id. 511.

Where residue was directed by testator to be divided among six persons, at the death of his wife, and two died before her:—Held, that the interest of the two was vested and transmissible, and depended not on surviving the wife. Ib.

A testator devised lands to A. for life, remainder to his sons successively in tail, remainder to B. for life, remainder to his sons successively in tail, remainder to his testator's nieces, C. and D., and the survivor, for their respective lives as tenants in common; he also bequeathed to D. a sum of 1,000*l*., charged upon his real and personal estate, to be by her distributed among her younger children, in such shares as she should think proper, provided always that if D. should, under the foregoing limitations in the will get into possession of the lands, then the said sum of 1,000*l*. should not be paid unto her for the purpose aforesaid. D. survived the testator, but died, her life estate in the lands never having taken effect in possession:—Held, that she took a vested interest in the legacy of 1,000*l*., at the death of the testatrix, subject to be divested on the happening of the contingency; and, accordingly, that interest was payable upon the legacy from the testator's decease. Finucane v. Studdert, 1 Ir. Ch. R. 140.

Deficiency to be raised out of Real Estate.]—A testator bequeathed to his four daughters a legacy of 500*l*., to be paid to them respectively on the days of their respective marriages, with the consent of his wife and executors, with power to each of them to dispose thereof by will or deed as they might think proper; such four legacies to be charged on his personal estate, and the deficiency to be raised out of his real estate, which he empowered his trustees to do by demise, sale, or mortgage; and he directed his executors to pay not less than 30*l.* or more than 40*l.* a year for his daughters' maintenance until their respective marriages, out of his personal estate, and on a deficiency, out of his real estate. By a codicil to his will, he devised four additional legacies of 500*l.*, to be paid to each of them at the time and in the manner in his will mentioned. One of the daughters died unmarried, having bequeathed her legacies to the survivors:—Held, first, that the legacies of the daughter who died could not be raised out of the testator's real estate. Bolton v. Bolton, 12 Ir. Ch. R. 233.

Held, secondly, that the legacies to the surviving daughters were not raisable out of the real estate, before their marriage with consent. Ib.

One by his will devises, that all his debts and legacies shall be paid by his executor out of his personal estate, if that shall be sufficient; but if not, then that his executor, within twelve months after his death, shall sell or mortgage so much of his real estate as shall be sufficient for that purpose, and (inter alia) gives a legacy of 1,000*l.* to S., who dies within a year, and the personal estate is not sufficient; this is a vested legacy, and shall be paid to the executor of the legatee, though charged upon land; for the words "within twelve months" denote the ultimate time; but the executors may pay the legacy sooner. Wilson v. Spencer, 3 P. Wms. 172; 2 Eq. Cas. Abr. 547, pl. 25.

—— Personal Estate and Rents of Real Estate.]—A., by will, gives 500*l.* to his daughter, to be paid by his executors at her age of twenty-one, out of his personal estate, and rents of his real; and if not raised by that time, the executors to stand seised, and take the rents till the 500*l.* was raised, and after payment gives the land to his son; the daughter marries at eighteen, and dies under twenty-one; the husband takes administration:—Decreed, the portion to be raised, and that by a sale, though the land, by reason of the incumbrances, would produce little more than the 500*l.* Jackson v. Farrand, 2 Vern. 424; Pre. Ch. 109.

Term of Years and Sum of Money.]—A testator, in pursuance of a power, appointed by his will the sum of 5,000*l.* amongst his five daughters, in equal shares; and reciting that he was possessed of certain lands for a term of twenty-one years, with a toties quoties covenant for renewal, bequeathed the same, together with the sum of 1,000*l.*, to trustees, in trust to pay the interest, proceeds, rents, and profits to his wife for life, and from and after her death, or in her lifetime, if she should so direct, to raise by sale, mortgage, or otherwise, such a sum of money as, together with the provision thereby made for them, should make up to each of his five daughters on marriage, if in the lifetime of his wife, with her consent, and if unmarried at the time of her death, then upon their attaining the age of twenty-one, or being married, the sum of 2,000*l.*; and until payment of the additional provision thus made for his daughters, he directed the trustees, on the death of his wife, to pay to each daughter out of the rents of the land and the interest of the 1,000*l.*, so much as, together with the interest of the 1,000*l.*, would produce 120*l.* per annum; and after the death of the wife, and payment of the additional portions, to assign over the residue to his son. The wife did not direct the additional provision to be raised during her life:—Held, that a daughter who attained twenty-one, but died in the lifetime of the wife, did not take a vested interest in the additional provision. Brabazon, In re, 13 Ir. Eq. R. 156.

Freehold Estate and Term for Years.]—A testator who was seised of a freehold estate, and was also possessed of a term for years with a toties quoties covenant for renewal, bequeathed to his daughter a legacy of 600*l.*, charged both upon the freehold estate and the term for years, and directed the same to be paid to her on her attaining the age of twenty-one years or day of marriage, whichever should first happen, with interest from the day of his death:—Held, that this legacy, so far as it was charged upon the term for years, was vested, and that, consequently, upon the death of the legatee intestate before she attained the age of twenty-one years, and without having been married, it became divisible in equal shares among her next of kin. Hudsons, In re, Dr. 6.

1. When Charged on Land.

In General.]—Whether portion charged on land be given with or without interest by deed or by will, if the person die before it becomes payable it shall sink into the estate. Boycot v. Cotton, 1 Atk. 555. S. P., Lowther v. Condon, 2 Atk. 131; Barnard. 327.

If I secure a portion to a child by deed, payable at twenty-one, out of land, and the child dies before twenty-one, the portion shall sink into the land and not go to the executor. So if I devise a portion to a child out of land, payable at twenty-one, and the child dies before twenty-one, the portion shall sink. Also the portion shall sink as well for the benefit of hæres factus as of the hæres natus. So though the money given to the child be not said to be for a portion, if it appear to be so in fact. If by will the portion be given out of a real and personal estate payable to the child at twenty-one, and the child dies before twenty-one, then so much as will arise out of the personal estate shall go to the executor or administrator, but what would arise out of the land must sink. Jennings v. Looks, 2 P. Wms. 276. S. P., Prowse v. Abingdon, 1 Atk. 485; Harvey v. Austin, 1 Atk. 379; Cas. t. Talb. 212, 217, n.

Legacies or portions charged on real estate, and payable at a future time, do not vest until the time appointed for payment. Upon the death of the legatee or portioner before the time appointed for payment, they lapse or sink into the inheritance. Remnant v. Hood, 2 De G. F. & J. 396; 30 L. J., Ch. 71; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1173; 3 L. T. 485. Affirming 27 Beav. 74. S. P., Phipps v. Musgrave (Lord), 3 Ves. 614; 2 R. R. 607.

If, however, the payment of the legacy or portion is postponed, not from any consideration personal to the legatee or portioner, but for the convenience of the estate, the legacy or portion will, notwithstanding, vest in the legatee or portioner before the time of payment. Ib. And see Ruby v. Foot, Beat. 581.

Time Fixed for Payment.]—Term of 1,000 years to secure daughters' portions payable at sixteen; proviso, if no daughter at the time of failure of issue male, the portion to sink. There is a daughter who attains to sixteen, and marries without consent, and no son by the marriage; but the daughter dies in the lifetime of the father and mother, and consequently while there might be a son; the portion sinks. Gordon v. Raynes, 3 P. Wms. 134.

Portion secured out of land, and the daughter dies before the portion becomes payable; it sinks into the land. So if a legacy be given out of land to J. S., payable at twenty-one, and J. S. dies before twenty-one; the legacy sinks. Secus, in both cases, where the legacy or portion is given out of a personal estate. Ib.

Term limited by a settlement to raise portions for younger children, payable at twenty-one or marriage; one of them dies under twenty-one, and unmarried: her portion shall not be raised for the benefit of the administratrix; otherwise, if the portion was to be raised out of a personal estate. Poulet v. Poulet, 1 Vern. 204. And see Brathwaite v. Brathwaite, 1 Vern. 334.

Power to father to raise portions for younger children, not exceeding 3,000*l.*; if no appointment, the estate charged with 3,000*l.*, for the sons at twenty-one, for the daughters at twenty-one or marriage. Nothing vested in the father's lifetime, and representative of one who attained twenty-one, and became elder, but died in father's life, not entitled to a share. Loder v. Loder, 2 Ves. sen. 531.

A term is created by marriage settlement, to raise 3,000*l.* for daughters' portions, within twelve months after death of the survivor of the husband and wife; there being one daughter, the father devises the trust lands to make good his wife's jointure, and to raise 5,000*l.* for his daughter's portion: the daughter shall not have two portions of 3,000*l.*; and she dying at the age of five years, and the portion to be raised out of land, it shall not be raised for her administrator, but the interest or maintenance the child was entitled to shall. Brewin v. Brewin, Pre. Ch. 195; 2 Vern. 439.

By marriage settlement a term is created for raising 400*l.* a-piece for younger children, to be paid them within a year after the father's death, and with interest from his death; one of the children dies after the father, but within a year after his death, the portion not being raised:—Held, that it should sink in the inheritance, and not be raised for the benefit of its representative. Tournay v. Tournay, Pre. Ch. 290.

No Time Fixed for Repayment.]—By marriage articles, A. agreed to settle lands to the use (inter alia) of trustees for a term of 500 years, to commence at the death of the settlor, upon trust to raise 6,000*l.* for the younger children of the marriage, to be paid and distributed amongst them in such manner and shares as the father should by deed or will appoint; and in default of appointment, share and share alike. No time was fixed for a payment. There were three daughters; one died in the lifetime of her parents, under age, intestate and unmarried. No appointment having been made:—Held, that no time being fixed for vesting, and the deceased daughter not having occasion for her portion, it sank for the benefit of the estate. Leslie v. Dungannon (Lord), Wall. Lyn. 263.

Portions provided by marriage settlement for younger children, to be paid at such time as the trustees shall think proper. One of the children dying at seventeen, before any appointment, his portion shall sink in the inheritance, but maintenance, and a sum paid in placing him out apprentice, to be allowed out of the trust estate. Warr v. Warr, Pre. Ch. 213.

Portion not to be Raised during Life of Settlor.]—By a marriage settlement in 1795, the father of the lady conveyed certain lands, of which he was seised in fee, to trustees for ninety-nine years, to raise 1,000*l.*, part of a sum of 4,800*l.* agreed to be secured by him, and pay same to the intended husband for his own use, and to permit him to receive the interest on 1,300*l.*, further part of the 4,800*l.*, for his life; and if the intended wife should survive him, to permit her to receive the interest during her life; and then to pay the 1,300*l.* to the husband, if he should be living, and, if dead, to his executors or administrators. If there should be any child or children of the marriage, the trustees were then directed to raise 2,500*l.*, the residue of 4,800*l.*, and pay same to the children, if more than one, as the husband should appoint; and, in default of appointment, to pay same to them in equal shares, if more than one, and if but one, the whole to such one at twenty-one, or marriage. It was declared, that the husband should receive the interest of the 2,500*l.* during his life, but that neither principal nor interest should be raised during the lifetime of the father; and, that if there should be no issue of the marriage, the 2,500*l.* should not be raised. There was only one child of the marriage, and he died a few days after his birth, in the lifetime of his father:—Held, upon the construction of the settlement, that the child, at the moment of its birth, took a vested interest in the 2,500*l.* on his birth, and that his personal representative was entitled to have it raised out of the estate. Reilly v. Fitzgerald, Dr. 122; 6 Ir. Eq. R. 335.

Some of the Portions becoming Payable.]—Where, under a settlement, a sum of money is to be raised, out of real estates, for the portions of younger children, and some of the portions have become payable, the court will raise the whole sum at once, although some of the children have not acquired vested interests. Gillibrand v. Goold, 5 Sim. 149; 3 L. J., Ch. 100.

2. Gifts to Children Contingent on Surviving their Parents.

a. In General.

In General—Death in Lifetime of Parents.]—Construction of an incorrect and ambiguous settlement, as vesting portions at twenty-one, against words importing a condition of surviving the parents: an intention, which, if clearly expressed, must prevail; but is not to be inferred, as not a rational construction of an ambiguous family settlement. Howgrave v. Cartier, 3 V. & B. 79; G. Cooper, 66; 13 R. R. 142. And see Jones v. Franco, 1 Russ. & M. 649, and Theed's Trusts, In re, 3 K. & J. 375; 26 L. J., Ch. 514.

The rule in Howgrave v. Cartier, supra, in favour of putting on a settlement or will making a provision for a family such a construction as will give the children indefeasible interests on their attaining twenty-one, is only a rule of construction to be applied in construing ambiguous words, and not a positive rule which will modify the effect of plain words. Hamlet, In re, Stephen v. Cunningham, 58 L. J., Ch. 242; 39 Ch. D. 426; 59 L. T. 745; 37 W. R. 245—C. A.

In construing a marriage settlement, it is the duty of the court to give effect to the plain meaning of the words, unless the instrument on the whole affords grounds for leaning in favour of a construction which will include all children. Jeyes v. Savage, 44 L. J., Ch. 706; L. R. 10 Ch. 555; 33 L. T. 139; 23 W. R. 764.

The rule in Woodcock v. Dorset (Duke), infra, is an artificial rule, and ought not to be extended. It is founded on an implied agreement that the children of a child dying in the lifetime of his parents should be provided for. Ib.

When such children were provided for according to the natural meaning of the settlement:—Held, that the rule was not applicable; that the word "leaving" must be construed according to its natural meaning, and that a son who attained twenty-one, and died without issue in the lifetime of his parents, had not acquired a vested interest. Ib.

In this case, a portion proceeding from a parent held vested in a deceased child, upon what was collected by the court, as the intention of the parties, against very strong expressions to the contrary. Woodcock v. Dorset (Duke), 3 Bro. C. C. 569; 3 V. & B. 82, n.

The presumption that a pre-nuptial settlement is intended to provide for children of the marriage at the time when they require a provision, is so strong that the court will not, unless absolutely compelled by the language of the instrument, adopt a construction of such a settlement which would exclude from its benefit a child who comes of age but does not survive both parents. Currie v. Larkins, 4 De G. J. & S. 245; 3 N. R. 621; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 349; 10 L. T. 47; 12 W. R. 515.

Interest in a partnership trade under articles to the widows of the partners for their respective lives, and after the decease of the widows to be equally divided among their respective children:—Held, not vested in children who died in the life of mother; on account of nature of the subject: the primary object being to constitute a partnership, and ascertain the succession; and a provision for the family being only a secondary object through that medium. Balmain v. Shore, 9 Ves. 500.

One, having a daughter thirty years old, settles his estate on himself and wife for their lives, remainder for 500 years, remainder over, and declares the trust of the term to raise after the death of him and his wife 850*l.* for his daughter, her executors and administrators. The daughter died in the lifetime of her father:—Held, her representatives were entitled. Smith v. Partridge, Amb. 266.

—— Children attaining Twenty-one.]—In determining the rights of children under a marriage settlement, the court, unless prevented by clear and distinct words, will hold that children who attained twenty-one, and died leaving their parents, took vested interests under the settlement. Bailie v. Jackson, 1 Sm. & G. 175; 1 W. R. 196.

The court will lay hold of minute circumstance in favour of such construction. Ib.

Trust, in case husband and wife should, at death of survivor, leave any child, &c., and such child, &c., attain twenty-one, to convey to such child, if but one, and if more than one who shall attain twenty-one to convey to such children who should attain twenty-one, according to appointment of father and mother surviving; in default of appointment, equally at twenty-one, with survivorship; and if both parents die without leaving any child, &c., remainder to the father:—Held, vested in children having attained twenty-one, who died in the life of one parent, with those who survived both. King v. Hake, 9 Ves. 438; 7 R. R. 266.

—— Twenty-one or Marriage.]—A portion was made payable to children at twenty-one, or marriage, whichever should first happen after the death of the parent; but if in his lifetime, then within three calendar months after his death; and it was afterwards provided, that if any child should die before his portion should become payable, his share should go to the surviving children: one child married, and died in the lifetime of the parent:—Held, that her portion did not go over, but belonged to her administrator. Wakefield v. De Burgh, 4 L. J., Ch. 215.

Portions in a settlement by a term after mother's death for defendants, to grow due and payable at twenty-one or marriage, &c. One daughter having, after twenty-one and marriage, died in life of mother, her portion shall go to her representatives, and not to her sister. Emperor v. Rolfe, 1 Ves. sen. 208.

Portions at twenty-one or marriage, when C. and his wife should die without issue male:—Held, a condition precedent, and not to be raised till both are dead; though one die, and the other remain tenant in tail after possibility of issue extinct. Champney v. Champney, 10 Mod. 314.

By a voluntary settlement personal property was assigned to trustees upon trust to pay the interest to T. during his life, and on his decease to pay the principal to his lawful issue, if then of age or married, share and share alike, if more than one, and if only one the whole to be paid to such only child, or in case such child or children should be an infant or infants on the death of the said T., then the principal was to be paid to him, her, or them as aforesaid on their attaining twenty-one if sons, or if daughters on their marriage, respectively. By his will the settlor bequeathed certain other funds to the same trustees upon similar trusts. T. died, leaving an infant daughter his sole surviving child:—Held, that the daughter would become absolutely entitled to the bonds in question, either on her attaining twenty-one or her marriage under that age. Lang v. Pugh, 1 Y. & C. C. C. 718; 6 Jur. 939.

A fund was assigned by a marriage settlement to trustees upon trust, after the death of A., to transfer it and all the interest, &c., to all and every the child or children of the marriage, or the issue of any such child or children who might happen to be then dead, leaving issue, or to any one or more of them, in such shares, &c., at such ages, &c., as A. by his will should appoint, and, in default of appointment, to pay the fund between them all, to sons at twenty-one, and to daughters at twenty-one or marriage, in case such ages or days should not take place till after the decease of A.; but in case such should happen in his lifetime, then such payment should be postponed until after his decease. A. by will appointed the fund to the children of the marriage share and share alike, on their attaining twenty-one or marriage with consent, and directed that the interest should be for their support and maintenance, given in trust to his wife until the boys entered professions or attained twenty-one, and the girls attained twenty-one or married with consent:—Held, first, that the portions were, by the settlement, vested in the children before the period of payment; secondly, that the provision in the will as to maintenance was of itself sufficient to vest the portions. The rules as to the vesting of portions and legacies are the same. Orme, In re, 1 Ir. Ch. R. 175.

—— Having Issue Male.] — Covenant in marriage articles, that in case the father should happen to die, having issue male, and one or more younger son or daughter, to raise portions; if but one then living 1,000*l.*, if two, 1,200*l.*, if three, 1,500*l.*, to be paid at their respective ages of twenty-one or marriage, in such proportions as the survivor of the father and mother should direct, in default of such direction, equally:—Held, that the share of a son who attained twenty-one was vested, though he died in the father's lifetime. Rooke v. Rooke, 2 Eden, 8.

—— No Issue Male — Daughters.] — On a marriage, lands are limited to the husband for life, remainder to the wife for life, remainder to the first and other sons of the marriage in tail male, remainder to S. in fee, provided if there be no issue male of the marriage, and there be one or more daughters living at the husband's death, then the trustees to stand seised, subject to the intent that such daughter or daughters should receive out of the rents 10,000*l.*, and 100*l.* per annum for maintenance, but no time limited for payment of the portion. The husband dies, leaving only one daughter, who lives to seventeen, but by her will disposes of the 10,000*l.*:—Decreed, this is a vested interest in the daughter, and well disposed of by her will. Rivers (Earl) v. Derby (Earl), 2 Vern. 72.

On marriage lands are settled on A. for life, remainder to the first, &c., sons of the marriage in tail male, remainder to trustees for 500 years, to raise 5,000*l.* portions for daughters, payable at eighteen or marriage; remainder to A. in fee. After the marriage A. settles other lands, and a term is created for raising the like sum of 5,000*l.* for daughters on failure of issue male, payable at sixteen or marriage. A. dies, leaving a daughter his heir-at-law, who attains eighteen, and dies unmarried. The trust of the term is not merged in the fee, but the portion shall go to the daughter's executors, and is disposable by her will; but there shall be but one 5,000*l.* raised. Thomas v. Kemeys, 2 Vern. 348; 2 Freem. 207; 1 Eq. Cas. Abr. 269, pl. 10.

On a settlement before marriage, the trust of a term was, that in case the husband should have no issue male, and there should be daughters, to raise, if two daughters, 25,000*l.*, to be paid at twenty-one or marriage, but not to be raised till after the death of their grandfather. The father died, leaving two daughters, and then the grandfather died: the husband of one daughter claimed 12,500*l.*, with interest from the time of the marriage:—Decreed, with interest, as a vested portion in the words of the settlement. But upon portions, or interest of them, to be raised out of reversionary terms, especially upon construction or implication, the court reluctantly interfered. Lyon v. Chandos (Duke), 3 Atk. 416.

Marriage settlement on husband and wife for life, and trust term if no issue male, or if all should die without issue male before twenty-one years, to raise portions for daughters, &c. A son attained twenty-one, but died in his father's lifetime without issue male. The portions not raisable. Worsley v. Granville (Earl), 2 Ves. sen. 331.

A term is limited to raise portions for daughters, if no sons; provided such daughters survive their father. A daughter dies in the life of her father. Her portion shall not be raised. Hickman v. Anderson, 2 Vern. 654.

Term raised to secure daughters' portions. Trust thereof declared, that if the husband should leave no heir male by the marriage, and should leave a daughter or daughters, then the trustees to raise portions payable to daughters at twenty-one or marriage; proviso, that if the husband should die without leaving a daughter living at his death, then the term to cease. There is no issue male by the marriage; but there is a daughter who attains twenty-one and marries. Mother dies, and daughter dies in the father's lifetime, leaving issue; her husband administers to her: he shall have no portion. Wingrave v. Palgrave, 1 P. Wms. 401.

On marriage a leasehold estate settled in trust for husband and wife for life: after decease of survivor then trustees to assign it with the rents and profits to the eldest son; for want of such issue of such son, to daughters. It goes to the only daughter at the mother's death, and not to representatives of a son who died without issue, in mother's lifetime. Exel v. Wallace, 2 Ves. sen. 318.

—— Death in Lifetime of both Parents.]— Upon the construction of a settlement it was held, that a daughter who died in the lifetime of both parents was not entitled to any portion, under the trusts of a term created for raising portions, notwithstanding she had previously attained eighteen and married. Whatford v. Moore, 3 Myl. & C. 270; 6 L. J., Ch. 378.

In a case of doubt, the court leans to that construction which will include a child attaining its age and dying before its parents, as the most convenient and most likely to have been the intention of the parties. Ib.

A term limited in remainder after the father's death, in trust for raising portions for daughters at eighteen, or marriage; portions may be raised during life of father. Corbett v. Maydwell, 2 Vern. 655; 3 Ch. Rep. 190; 1 Salk. 159; 1 Eq. Cas. Abr. 337, pl. 5.

A sum of money settled on marriage to the use of the husband for life, after his death to the wife for life, and if they should both die, leaving children, to such children, vests in all the children of the marriage, and not exclusively in the children surviving both parents, such being the clear intent of the parties, though contrary to the literal expressions in the settlement. Bradish v. Bradish, 2 Ball & B. 479; 12 R. R. 109.

—— Surviving Child.] — In a settlement of personalty, on the marriage of M. and W., it was declared that, "from and after the several deceases of M. and W., and the death of the survivor of them, in case there should be any child or children of M. and W. which should be then living, the trustees should pay the trust funds unto such child or children, and to be paid to such child or children at his, her, or their respective age or ages of twenty-one years." Personalty was settled in trust "for all and every the child or children of M. which should be living at the time of her decease, and to be paid to them at their respective ages of twenty-one years":—Held, on the construction of each settlement, that the only child who was living at the death of the survivor took the whole. Jeffery v. Jeffery, 17 Sim. 26; 13 Jur. 482.

Limitation in an article on marriage to A. for life, subject to annuities for the lives of B. and C. and a charge for a jointure for D., if she should survive A., and after the death of said B. and C., A. and D., then to the use of the issue, &c. The limitation to the issue is not to await the deaths of A., B., C. and D., but they are to take upon the death of A., subject to the charges for B., C. and D. Bushell v. Bushell, 1 Sch. & Lef. 95; 9 R. R. 21.

Gift to Children and Issue.]—By a marriage settlement, trustees were directed to pay the income of certain trust funds to the husband and wife for their lives, and after the death of the survivor to divide such funds between the children and issue of the marriage, to be transferred and paid unto sons at twenty-one, and to daughters at twenty-one or marriage. There were three children of the marriage. One of them attained twenty-one, and died in the lifetime of the tenants for life, leaving children and grandchildren; another attained twenty-one, and died in the lifetime of the tenants for life, without children; and the other attained twenty-one, survived the parents, and had children;—Held, that the trust funds vested in the children of the marriage as they attained twenty-one, and that the surviving child and the representatives of the deceased children were entitled to them. Gordon v. Hope, 3 De G. & Sm. 351; 18 L. J., Ch. 228; 13 Jur. 382.

Grant of personal estate by a deed to trustees for a niece after the death of the grantor, in whose life niece dies; it goes to representative of niece, not to executor of grantor. Peck v. Parrot, 1 Ves. sen. 236.

A direction to trustees, to pay a principal sum after the death of a father and mother to their issue equally, to sons at twenty-one and to daughters at twenty-one or marriage, is only a circumstance or qualification of the person receiving, and not intended to accelerate the payment, or vest it in the children; for the direction of the payment is the gift, and will not vest till the time of payment comes. Seamer v. Bingham, 3 Atk. 57.

Settlement of money on husband and wife, reciting, &c.; and in case the husband shall die, and the wife survive, he having no issue of her body, or such issue shall die in the lifetime of the wife, then the money to be paid and assigned to the wife. There was issue a daughter, who married, attaining twenty-one, and died in the lifetime of the mother, leaving two children, who survived their grandmother:—Held, the daughter acquired a vested interest transmissible to her representatives. Heurtley v. Mason, Amb. 621.

Election.]—A., by his marriage settlement, covenanted that he would, by his will, or otherwise, settle all the real and personal estates which he should die seised or possessed of, so that the same might be enjoyed by his wife, for life, in case she should survive him; and, after the death of the survivor, by all the children of the marriage, equally: some of the children of the marriage died in the lifetime of A. and his wife:—Held, that under this covenant, all the children became entitled to vested interests on their coming into existence; and that A. (who, as administrator to some of his deceased children, had become entitled to their shares of his personal estate) having, by his will, given both his real and personal estates to the same persons, some of whom exclusively claimed the real estates, under the covenant, a case of election arose. Naylor v. Wetherell, 4 Sim. 114; 9 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 125.

By settlement on marriage, reciting an intention to provide for the wife and children, certain tolls were granted for the remainder of the grantor's term, in trust to raise an annuity for the lives of the wife and her mother and the survivor: then reciting that the remainder of the term might expire in the life of the wife or her children, therefore to make a provision for her and her children by her then or any future husband, the trustees should be possessed of the said tolls for the remainder of the term, upon trust to raise, after the deaths of the grantor and the mother of the wife, 100*l.* annually, to be placed out in the purchase of freeholds or leaseholds, for two or three lives, as often as a competent sum should be raised for that purpose; and until convenient purchases should offer, to be invested in government securities upon trust, in case the wife should survive the term, to pay the rents and profits of such estates so to be purchased, or the interest to arise from the money so intended to be placed out, until such purchase should be made, to the wife for life; and after her decease, to apply the same towards the maintenance of such children of her as should be living at her death, till the youngest should be twenty-one, and then to be possessed of such estates or money to the use of such children, in such share and proportions, payable at twenty-one, as the survivor of the husband and wife should by will or deed appoint; in default thereof to the use of all such children, equally to be divided at their respective ages of twenty-one: but if she should die without leaving any children, or all should die under twenty-one, then to the use of the grantor, his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns; and after paying the annuities, to be possessed of all the surplus money arising from the tolls during the remainder of the term for the use of the grantor, his executors, &c. From the death of the grantor, who survived the wife's mother, the trustees received 100*l.* a year, and laid the same out in stock. The only son attained twenty-one in the life of his mother, and survived her. The court would not invest the fund in land: but held it, with the accumulations, from the death of the grantor, and the future payments, a vested interest in the son at twenty-one, and as personal estate belonging to his administrator. Swann v. Fonnereau, 3 Ves. 41.

Alienation—Clause of Forfeiture.]—Property was settled upon trust after death of settlor to apply the whole or part of income towards the maintenance and education of the six children of S. B. (by name), and to accumulate the residue of the income until the death of the survivor of O. B. and S. B., or until such time as the youngest of the six children, or the youngest of such of them as should be living, attained twenty-one; and then if O. B. and S. B. should then have died, or if not, immediately after the death of the survivor, to convey and assign the same to the children, or such of them as should be then living. There was no other gift to the children. The settlement contained a clause, that the share of any of the six children who alienated his share should be forfeited, and go over to the other children:—Held, that none of the children took a vested interest till after the happening of the last of the three events, namely, the attainment of twenty-one by the youngest, and the death of O. B. and S. B., and, therefore, that none of the children who died before the last of such events happened took a vested interest. Blake v. Barnett, 2 Dr. & Sm. 117; 31 L. J., Ch. 898; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 812; 6 L. T. 886; 10 W. R. 767.

Held, also, that the term "alienated" meant not only an actual alienation, but any act done for the purpose of alienating. Ib.

Trust for Children—General Words Restrained by Context.]—A fund was settled upon marriage, in case the husband should die in the lifetime of the wife and there should be issue of the marriage living at the death of the husband, for all and every the child and children of the marriage, and the issue of such child or children in case any of them should happen to be dead, leaving issue, in equal shares; the issue to be entitled only to the shares which their parents would have been entitled to if living:—Held, that, having regard to the context, the words "all and every the child and children" must be restricted to children who survived their father. Thorne's Trust, In re, 10 W. R. 338.

Under a trust for A. for life, "and after her death, to be divided equally between her younger children":—Held, first, that the children took vested interests at their births, and secondly, that the character of youngest child was to be determined at the period of vesting, and not that of distribution. Adams v. Roberts, 25 Beav. 658.

b. Effect of Word "Such."

Such Children.]—A sum was vested in trustees, upon trust declared by deed. The deed recited an intention to make some provision for A. and her children, and declared that the trustees should hold the fund for A. for life, and upon her death, or doing any act to incumber her interest, the trustees were to stand possessed, "if there should be one child of A. then living, the said stock to be an interest vested in such child at twenty-one, and to be paid accordingly, if such age should happen after the death of A., and if not, immediately on her death or making any charge." And if there should be two or more such children, then the stock to be transferred amongst such children, in equal shares, at the age of twenty-one, if A. should be dead; but if not, then immediately after her decease or having made such incumbrance. The deed contained clauses of survivorship in case of any child dying under twenty-one, as to "the share intended to be thereby provided for such child dying," and also clauses for maintenance, advancement, and accruer. There were several children; one attained twenty-one, and died in the life of A.:—Held, that her representatives did not participate in the fund. A petition of appeal from the decision was dismissed with costs by Lord Cottenham on the 8th July, 1848. Skipper v. King, 12 Beav. 29; 12 Jur. 209. Affirmed 12 Jur. 570.

By a marriage settlement, executed in 1784, certain hereditaments were vested in trustees, in trust for the husband and wife successively, for life; and on the death of the survivor to pay the rents in maintenance of "all and every the child or children until such child or children should attain twenty-one, and when and as such child or children respectively should attain twenty-one," upon trust to convey "unto such child or children" as the parents should appoint; and, in default, "to convey all the same premises unto and amongst such children equally"; and if but one such child, upon trust to convey to such only child, and his or her heirs for ever, with a gift over. By a deed executed in 1835 the surviving parent executed the appointment in favour of some only of the children:—Held, that the word "such" must be taken in the sense of "the said"; and that the power did not warrant an exclusive appointment in favour of some of the children:—Held, also, that the limitation in default of appointment gave a vested estate in fee to each child on his birth. Strutt v. Braithwaite, 5 De G. & Sm. 369; 21 L. J., Ch. 609; 16 Jur. 882.

In putting a construction on a marriage settlement, the court always endeavours not to make the interest of the children depend on their surviving their parents. Ib.

By a settlement personal estate was vested in trustees for the husband and wife successively for their lives, and after the death of the survivor, for the children, their shares to be paid as they should attain twenty-one, or if daughters at that age or marriage, with maintenance in the meantime. It was afterwards declared, that if there should be only one child living at the decease of the survivor of the husband and wife, or if there should be more than one such child, and all but one should die before twenty-one, then the fund should be paid to such only child on attaining such age if a son, or if a daughter at that age or marriage, with maintenance in the meantime; and if there should be no such child then living, upon trust for J. A. There was issue only one daughter of the marriage, and she attained twenty-one:—Held, after the death of her mother, that she took a contingent interest in the settled property during the life of her father. Lloyd v. Cocker, 19 Beav. 140; 24 L. J., Ch. 84; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 174.

The court would not rectify the settlement, as the trusts were complete. Ib.

c. Contingency running through the whole Class.

Child Attaining Twenty-One and Predeceasing Tenant for Life.]—In a marriage settlement, the father of the wife, after making a provision for her during life, covenants, that in case there shall be a child or children of the marriage living at her decease, he will pay 3,000*l.* to such child or children, on their attaining twenty-one, or, if they shall have attained that age in their mother's lifetime, at her death. In the directions that are afterwards given for the distribution of the sums in different events, among the children of the marriage, and their issue, no reference is made to the contingency of their surviving the mother; and though there is an express enumeration of the cases in which the money is not to be payable, the death of a child in the mother's lifetime, after having attained twenty-one, is not specified as one of those cases:—Held, that the interest, which a child who has attained twenty-one takes in these sums, remains contingent during the life of the mother; there not being enough in the subsequent clauses to control the plain words of the covenant. Fitzgerald v. Field, 1 Russ. 430; 4 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 170; 25 R. R. 97.

In the same settlement, the father covenants to pay upon the death of the husband 2,000*l.* to the eldest or only son of the marriage:—Held, that this covenant is controlled by subsequent clauses, so as not to give a vested interest upon the death of the father to an only son who was then under age. Ib.

By a settlement before marriage, whereby lands given to trustees for 500 years, in trust, that if the husband and wife should leave one or more daughter or daughters, younger son or sons, that should be living at the time of the decease of the survivor of them, the trustees should raise, &c., 2,000*l.* for the portion or portions of such daughter or daughters, younger son or sons, the same to be paid to such daughter, if but one, and no younger son, at eighteen or marriage; and to such younger son, if but one, and no daughter, at twenty-one, with allowance for maintenance in the meantime, &c.; and if there shall be more than one daughter or younger son, then to be paid to such daughter or daughters at eighteen or marriage; and to such younger son or sons at twenty-one years, &c.:—Held, that the settlement did not vest any interest in children who died before the decease of the surviving parent. Hotchkin v. Humfrey, 2 Madd. 65; 17 R. R. 188.

A fund was settled on trust for a wife for life; and in case she should leave any issue living at her death, for the husband for life; and after his death, upon trust to divide it amongst the children of the marriage "that should be then living on their respectively attaining twenty-one." And in case there should be no child, or of their all dying in the wife's life, to pay the fund to such person as the wife should by will appoint, and in default to the executors or administrators of the husband and wife, or the survivor of them; and in case the wife should survive her husband without leaving issue then living, to pay the fund to the wife. The wife died leaving children who had attained twenty-one, and the husband was still living:—Held, that the limitations to the children remained contingent until the death of their father. Woollaston's Settlement, In re, 27 Beav. 642.

By a settlement trustees were directed to hold trust funds upon trust to pay the income to H. for life, and after her death, "leaving a child or children," to transfer, pay, and make over the fund unto "all and every the child or children of H., and the issue of such of the children as might be then dead" (such issue to take the parent's share), equally between them if more than one, the shares of sons to be transferred and paid at the age of twenty-one, and the shares of daughters at that age or marriage. Five of the children of H. survived her, and attained twenty-one or married, and one son of hers attained twenty-one and died without issue in her lifetime:—Held, that although the trust only took effect in case some one child survived H., the contingency upon which the trust took effect was not to be imported into the constitution of the class who were to take under the trust, and that the son who attained twenty-one and died in the lifetime of the tenant for life without issue took, nevertheless, a vested interest in the fund. Orlebar's Settlement Trusts, In re, 44 L. J., Ch. 661; L. R. 20 Eq. 711.

Appointment — Child surviving Father but predeceasing Mother.]—When by a settlement portions are provided for the children of the marriage, not raisable until after the death of both parents, but with a power to the father to appoint among all the children; and the portions have actually become raisable, by reason of some of the children surviving both parents; a child, to whom the father appointed a share, who survives the father, but predeceases the mother, is entitled to the share appointed, unless the settlement, consistently throughout all its clauses, manifests an intention to the contrary. Goddard, In re, Ir. R. 5 Eq. 14.

d. Gift Over.

Settlement — Conflicting Clauses.] — When clauses in a settlement are conflicting, the rational presumption is, that a child attaining twenty-one takes a vested interest. Dixon v. Barkshire, 34 Beav. 531.

In a settlement, the limitation was to the children who should be living at the time of the decease of the father; this was controlled by the gift over:—Held, that a child who died in the life of her father, having attained twenty-one, was entitled to a share. Ib.

—— On Death of Children under Twenty-one or Unmarried.]—By a marriage settlement stock was vested in trustees upon trust, to pay the dividends to the husband during coverture, and to the wife during her life, in case she survived him; and from and after her decease, in case there should be any children of the marriage then living, then upon trust for such of the said children as should attain twenty-one or be married, with a direction, in case all or any of such children should then be under twenty-one and unmarried, to apply the dividends for their maintenance; and in case the wife should die without leaving any child or children at the time of her decease, or in case there should be one or more such child or children then living, yet all of them should die under twenty-one and unmarried, upon trust, if the husband should survive the wife and all such children, to pay the dividends to him during his life, and from and after the death of the survivor of the husband and wife, and from and after the death of the said children, in case there should be any, and all of them should die under age and unmarried, in trust for certain other persons. The wife survived the husband, and at her death there was no child of the marriage living; but a son, who died in her lifetime, had attained twenty-one, and married:—Held, that the stock vested in that son absolutely. Torres v. Franco, 1 Russ. & M. 649.

Money was settled upon trust, after the death of the survivor of the parents, to pay, apply, and dispose of the same unto all the sons and daughters, and the children of such as should be dead leaving issue (the children to take the share of their parents), with a gift over if there should be no child of the marriage, or being such, all sons, should die under twenty-one, and the daughters under twenty-one or marriage:—Held, that the shares vested in the children on their births, and that the representatives of those who died unmarried in their infancy, and in the life of the parents, took a share. Minor's Trusts, In re, 28 Beav. 50.

—— Voluntary Settlement by Person in Loco parentis.]—By a voluntary settlement a fund was limited (after certain life estates) "to all the children of G. B. who shall be living at his decease, equally, as tenants in common"; followed by a proviso, that "if more than one child of G. B., and any of them should die under twenty-one, or before marriage," his or her share was to go to the survivors or survivor, or others or other of the children; and at the close there was a limitation over of the corpus to other parties, "in case all the children of the said G. B. shall die, as to sons, without attaining twenty-one, and as to daughters, without attaining twenty-one or marrying." The consideration was stated in the settlement to be the natural love and affection of the settlor towards G. B., who was a son of the settlor:—Held, that the consideration of natural love and affection was not thereby prevented from extending to the children of G. B., who were the settlor's grandchildren. Swallow v. Binns, 1 K. & J. 417; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 843.

G. B. had six children who all survived the date of the voluntary settlement, and all attained twenty-one. Two died in the lifetime of G. B.:—Held, that they took vested transmissible interests, and that their personal representatives were entitled to their two-sixths of the fund, and not the four surviving children, who claimed under the clause of accruer. Ib.

—— Gift over before Portion Payable.]—By a marriage settlement a term for years is created to raise 5,000*l.* portion for daughters, payable at their age of twenty-one or marriage; proviso if any of the daughters attain the age of twenty-one or marry in the father's lifetime, then the portion to be paid within a year after the father's death. Also if any of the daughters die before her portion payable or before her age of twenty-one or marriage, her share to go to the survivor. There was issue a son and three daughters, the first of whom married and received her portion; the second attained twenty-one, married and died without issue, and her husband administered; the third daughter survived both her sisters. Resolved, the husband, as administrator of the second daughter, is entitled to her share of the 5,000*l.*, she having lived to twenty-one, so that the right vested in her, and the payment was only suspended till her father's death. Pitfield's case, 2 P. Wms. 513.

Portions to be paid or transferred at twenty-one or marriage; if in the life of parents entitled for their life, then such portions were not to be paid, &c., till the decease of such parents, with survivorship in case of death of any, before his, her, or their shares should be payable, &c.:—Held, vested at twenty-one or marriage, in life of parents. Schenck v. Legh, 9 Ves. 300; 7 R. R. 199.

Portions held vested in the case of parent and child by implication from the whole settlement, against express words; and a clause of survivorship upon the death of a child, before the portion "should become payable," was upon the authorities construed, "before it should be vested." Hope v. Clifden (Lord), 6 Ves. 499; 5 R. R. 364.

Where portions are provided for daughters by a settlement, the father cannot by his will, annex any condition to the payment of them, or devise them over, in case of the death of any of the daughters before their portions become payable. Aston v. Aston, 2 Vern. 452; 1 Ch. Rep. 164; Pre. Ch. 266.

By a marriage settlement a term was created for raising portions for daughters in case the father should die without issue male, such portions to be paid at twenty-one or marriage; but if the daughters should attain that age or be married in the lifetime of the father, then within six months after his decease. But if all the daughters died before their portions became payable, then the fund was not to be raised. There was issue of the marriage a daughter and only child; she attained twenty-one and married, and afterwards died in her father's lifetime. The father died without issue male:—Held, nevertheless, that the daughter's representatives were entitled to her portion. Fry v. Sherborne (Lord), 3 Sim. 243; 8 L. J. (O.S.), Ch. 25; 30 R. R. 156.

—— Power of Appointment not Exercised.]—Term to commence after the father's death, to raise portions for younger children, in such shares and proportions as he should appoint, for want of appointment, equally, to sons at twenty-one, to daughters at twenty-one or marriage, to be paid immediately after the decease of the father; with survivorship in case of the death of a child before its portion should become due and payable. The father died without making any appointment:—Held, the portions vested at twenty-one or marriage during his life. Cholmondeley v. Meyrick, 1 Eden, 77; cited 3 Bro. C. C. 253 n.

Term in trust, after the decease of father, in case he shall leave a younger child, &c., to raise portions; to be paid according to appointment, and in default, &c., at twenty-one or marriage; with a provision for advancement in the life of the father by his direction, and survivorship upon death of any child, before the portion shall be payable; and, if there shall be no such child, or all die before the portions become payable, not to be raised:—Held, vested in an only younger child; who, having attained twenty-one, died in the life of the father; no appointment having been made. Powis v. Burdett, 9 Ves. 428; 7 R. R. 259.

A. settles his estate on his sister B. for life, remainder to her second and other sons in tail, &c., and gives her a power, with the consent of C., her husband, and for C. surviving B., to charge it with a sum not exceeding 12,000*l.* for their children; and if they, or the survivor of them, do not appoint the provision, then 2,000*l.* each to be raised for younger sons, and 3,000*l.* each for daughters, at their ages of twenty-one, with interest at 5 per cent. for their maintenance, to commence from the time of the appointment; and if no appointment, then from the death of the survivor of B. and C.; and if any of the younger children die before their shares become payable, the same to go to the survivor. A. dies; C. dies, leaving four younger sons and two daughters, one of which died an infant soon after her father; then B. dies, without making any appointment: the whole 14,000*l.* shall be raised, and carry interest from the death of B. Rolt v. Rolt, Cas. t. Talb. 189.

—— Death before Annuities became Transferable.]—By settlement made previously to the marriage of A. and B., certain exchequer annuities were vested in trustees in trust for the husband for life, then to the wife for life, and after both their deaths for the children of the marriage equally, if more than one, and if but one for such only child, to be assigned over to such child or children respectively at their ages of twenty-one, happening after the death of the survivor of husband and wife; but if either of the children should attain twenty-one during the joint lives of the father and mother, or the life of the survivor, then his or her share was to be paid within three months after the death of such survivor; but if there should be no children of the marriage, or being such, all of them should die before their share should become transferable as aforesaid, then the annuities were to go to the survivor of the husband and wife. There was issue only a son, who attained twenty-one, but died in lifetime of his mother, who survived her husband:—Held, that the annuities became vested in the son on his attaining twenty-one years, and were transmissible by him, notwithstanding he died in his mother's lifetime. Jeffreys v. Reynous, 6 Bro. P. C. 398. Affirming 2 Eden, 368.

—— "Payable" meaning "Vested"—Issue.]—By a marriage settlement, stock was settled, subject to life interests in the husband and wife, in trust for their children in equal shares, to be paid or payable at twenty-one or marriage, the shares of those dying leaving issue before their shares had become payable, to go to their issue, and in case any died without issue before their shares had become payable, then such shares to go to the surviving children of the marriage. Two of the children attained twenty-one, and died in the lifetime of the surviving parent:—Held, that "payable" meant "vested," and that the shares of the two children so dying went to their representatives. Mocatta v. Lindo, 9 Sim. 56.

In a settlement of trust moneys in trust for certain persons for life, and after the decease of the survivor in trust for their children, being sons at twenty-one and being daughters at twenty-one or marriage, "the issue of any child whose parent should die before his or her share should become payable to be entitled to the share which his or her parent would have been entitled to if living":—Held, that having regard to the fact that daughters' shares vested at their marriage when they could not have any issue, "payable" must refer to the period of distribution, and could not mean "vested." Day v. Radcliffe, 3 Ch. D. 654; 24 W. R. 961.

—— "Due and Payable."]—By a marriage settlement stock was settled upon trust for the husband and wife successively for life, and after the death of the survivor of them on trust to assign the trust fund among their children, and the issue of such of them as should be then dead leaving issue, as the husband and wife should appoint, and in default of appointment amongst the children and the issue of any of them who should be then dead leaving issue (such issue to take only their parents' share), equally to be divided among them, to sons at twenty-one, and daughters at twenty-one or marriage; and until their respective shares should become "payable," on trust to pay the income towards their maintenance; and in case any child should die without issue before his share should become "due and payable," upon trust to pay and divide the share of such child among the survivors or survivor and the issue of any of the children then dead, leaving issue, equally, when and as their original share should become "due and payable"; and if at the death of the surviving tenant for life no such child or issue should be living, or in case any of such children and issue were then living, but all of them should die before their respective shares were "payable," then on trust over for other persons. The settlement also contained a provision enabling the trustees to pay the children's shares to them before the expiration of the respective times thereinbefore limited for the "payment" thereof:—Held, that the words "due and payable" must bear their natural meaning, so that the share of a son who attained twenty-one and died in the life of the surviving tenant for life passed under the accruer clause. Wilmott's Trusts, In re, 38 L. J., Ch. 275; L. R. 7 Eq. 532.

—— Gift over on Death before becoming Entitled.]—By a marriage settlement a fund was limited in trust after the death of the parents, to transfer, &c., to all the children equally, the shares of minors to be paid, transferred, &c., and assigned at their age of twenty-one years, with maintenance in the meantime; and there was a gift over if there should be no child, or "if they should all happen to die before they became entitled to their respective shares":—Held, that the shares of the children vested at their birth, and that the shares of two of them, who died in their infancy in the lifetime of their parents, passed to their personal representatives. Jopp v. Wood; Smith v. Jopp, 2 De G. J. & S. 323; 34 L. J., Ch. 625; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 833; 12 L. T. 689; 13 W. R. 954.

—— Entitled to and Actually Receive.]—By a marriage settlement funds were vested in trustees for the husband for life, and after his death for the wife for life, and after the death of the survivor, in case they should leave issue, who being a daughter or daughters should live to be married or attain twenty-one, or being a son or sons should live to attain twenty-one, upon trust to pay the funds equally amongst all such issue as and when they should attain the age of twenty-one or be married, and if there should be but one such child, upon trust to pay the same to such only child, provided that if any such issue should happen to die before he or she should become entitled to and actually receive his or her portion, leaving lawful issue surviving, such issue should be entitled to their parent's share equally:—Held, that the word "leaving" must be construed according to its natural meaning, and that the representatives of a son who attained twenty-one and died without issue in the lifetime of his parents were not entitled to share in the trust fund. Jeyes v. Savage, 44 L. J., Ch. 706; L. R. 10 Ch. 555; 33 L. T. 139; 23 W. R. 764.

—— Death before Share to which Person Entitled should have been Transferred.]—Stock was, by articles of agreement, vested in trustees for several parties, in different portions, for their absolute use and benefit; provided that no payment or transfer should be made to any of them until he or she should have completed his or her twenty-fifth year, unless he or she should be previously settled in life, with the sanction and approbation of the trustees, or of the major part of them; and in case any of them should marry or act otherwise in opposition to the wishes of the trustees, it should be optional with them to deprive the party so marrying or acting of all benefit or advantage under the articles, and the portion to which such person would be otherwise entitled should go to, and be equally distributed amongst the others; and provided that in case any of them should happen to die before the share to which he or she was entitled under the articles should have been transferred to him or her, the share of the person so dying should be distributed equally amongst the survivors, and that the trustees should apply the dividends of the fund for the maintenance and education of the parties in the several proportions to which they would be respectively entitled to the principal:—Held, that the original portions were vested, though not transferable until the respective parties attained twenty-one. Bradon v. Bradon, 16 Ir. Ch. R. 415.

Held, also, that shares accrued under the survivorship clause did not go over on the parties entitled to them dying under the age of twenty-five, but belonged to their next-of-kin. Ib.

Declaration of Trust—Maintenance during "Joint Lives"—Gift of Principal.]—The trusts of 2,000*l.* were declared to be the interest to be retained by the settlor during his life; and after his decease, to be applied to the maintenance of H. and her daughter. In a subsequent part of the instrument the trusts were, "after my decease I wish the interest of the above sum to be applied to their maintenance during their joint lives; and at the decease of her mother, if the child survives, and lives till she has attained the age of twenty-one years, then the principal sum I bequeath to her; (but in the event of both their deaths before the child shall have attained twenty-one years), then" the principal sum to be paid to the brothers and sisters of the settlor. The daughter lived to attain twenty-one, but died in the lifetime of her mother:—Held, that the mother was entitled to the interest of the 2,000*l.* during her life; and that the daughter, upon attaining twenty-one, acquired an absolute vested interest in the principal. Moor v. Abbott, 26 L. J., Ch. 787; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 551.

Decisions under Will.]—See WILL.

3. GIFT OF INTEREST FOR MAINTENANCE.

Effect on Vesting.]—Trust "to raise" 5,000*l.* portion, "and pay it" to such younger children as the father should appoint; for want of appointment to the younger children at twenty-one with interest for their maintenance, &c., in the meantime, &c., &c. The only younger child died two years old:—Held, not to be vested in him so as to be claimed by the father as his representative. Hubert v. Parsons, 2 Ves. sen. 261.

By marriage articles, it was agreed that 6,000*l.* should be vested in trustees in trust for all and every the child and children of the marriage (other than the one son for whom a portion of 30,000*l.* was provided), the said 6,000*l.* to be paid to such child or children, in such shares, at such times, and subject to such provisoes for maintenance and education until their shares should become payable, as the intended husband should, by deed or will, appoint; and in default of appointment, to be paid to such child or children, and to be equally divided among them; the shares of the sons to be paid at twenty-one; and of daughters at twenty-one or marriage; and in the meantime, until their portions should become payable, to apply the interest of their shares towards their maintenance and education; and in default of any issue save an only son, in trust for the intended husband, his executors, administrators, and assigns. There was issue of the marriage one son and two daughters, all of whom survived their parents. One of the daughters died under age and unmarried; the other attained her age of twenty-one:—Held, that the daughters took vested interests in the 6,000*l.* on being born; and that the share of the one who died under age vested in her personal representative. Hynes v. Redington, 1 Jo. & Lat. 589; 7 Ir. Eq. R. 405; Ll. & G. t. Plunk. 33.

There are cases where the court, though it would not raise the portion for a representative of an infant child, has allowed interest or maintenance whilst it lived. Edgeworth v. Edgeworth, Beat. 337.

—— Appointment to Infant of Portion, Payable with Interest from Death of Appointor.]—In a power to appoint to children, the word "reasonable" is applicable not only to the amount of the portion, but also to the time and occasion on which the child would want it. Therefore, an appointment of a portion to an infant, payable with interest from the death of the appointor, does not so vest the portion as to make it, on the death of the infant, transmissible to her representative; the appointment being under the implied condition that the child should attain that age at which the portion would be required for advancement in life. But the infant being entitled to a reasonable maintenance while it lived, her administrator decreed, under the head of general relief, entitled to a reasonable allowance for maintenance, though not specifically prayed by the bill. Ib. 328.

If such a construction can be given to an appointment as will secure the real object, the court will not disappoint provisions for children because the parent has in part misconceived his power. On instruments providing portions, the court has assumed a latitude of exposition which it does not on other instruments. Id. 334.

—— Assignment of Leaseholds on Trust to Apply Rents during Minority for Maintenance.]—A father assigned certain leasehold premises to a trustee, in trust for his son until he should attain the age of twenty-one years, and in the meantime to stand possessed thereof in trust, to collect and receive the rents and profits thereof, as and when the same should become payable, and thereupon to pay, apply, and dispose of the same for and towards the maintenance, education, clothing, and support of the said son during his minority; and, upon his attaining the age of twenty-one years, upon trust to assign the said premises, together with the lease and the accumulations of rents, unto the said son, his executors, &c., for the remainder of the term:—Held, that the son took a vested interest in the lease, and that, upon his death under twenty-one, it passed to his personal representative. Stephens or Stevens v. Frost, 2 Y. & C. C. C. 302; 6 L. J., Ex. Eq. 41

—— Gifts in Favour of Sons — Daughters Included.]—By a post-nuptial settlement reciting an intention to make further provision for the children of the marriage, certain sums of stock were vested in trustees in trust for the wife for life, and after her decease upon trust for all and every the child and children of the marriage who being a son or sons should attain the age of twenty-one years, equally to be divided between or among them and their respective executors and administrators; and if there should be but one such child, the whole to be in trust for such one or only child, his or her executors and administrators. There followed a clause directing that the trustees should, during the minority of each of the said children, pay to the father, to be by him applied or not as he should think fit, and after his decease should apply, the income of the presumptive share of every such child for or towards his or her maintenance and education until his or her share should become vested, or he or she should previously die:—Held, that daughters who attained twenty-one were entitled to share in the fund. Daniel's Settlement, In re, 45 L. J., Ch. 105; 1 Ch. D. 375; 34 L. T. 308; 24 W. R. 227.

Semble, daughters would not acquire a vested interest till they attained twenty-one. Ib.

And see ante, C. 2.

4. OTHER CASES.

Child Dying before he wanted Portion.]—Portions not to be raised for representative of child dying before he wanted it. Teynham (Lord) v. Webb, 2 Ves. sen. 209.

A power in a settlement to raise a portion for a younger child, at such time as the parent should direct; he directs it to be raised when she is fourteen, and she dying, files his bill for it as her administrator. The portion shall not be raised for the father. Hinchinbroke v. Seymour, 1 Bro. C. C. 395.

Payment Postponed.] — Under marriage articles, 2,000*l.*, part of 3,000*l.* vested in trustees, was to be paid to such son as should attain the age of twenty-one, when and at such time as he should have attained the age of twenty-three. The eldest son attained twenty-one, but died before twenty-three:—Held, that he became absolutely entitled to the money, and the time of payment only was postponed to the age of twenty-three. Combe v. Combe, 2 Atk. 185.

No Interest Vesting until Payment.]—Construction of a trust, by deed, of money to accumulate, until the grantor's grandchildren, then living, or to be born, respectively attain twenty-one; and on attaining, &c., to pay to each, as they should respectively attain such age, their respective shares; to be ascertained by the number in being as they respectively attain twenty-one without regard to such as might afterwards be born. No interest vested until payment; the measure of distribution is the number existing at each period: those, who had received, have no further claim upon the fund, increased by shares falling in; therefore, one dying under twenty-one, after all the others had either received their shares or died under twenty-one, that share is undisposed of by the deed; and passed by a bequest of "all effects whatsoever," following specific descriptions of property. Campbell v Prescott, 15 Ves. 500.

Younger Children — Appointment excluding One Child.]—By marriage settlement 1,500*l.* was provided for younger children, in such shares as the parents should appoint, in default of appointment to all the children after the death of the wife. The parents afterwards made an appointment, excluding one child; this deed vests the portions in the children born or to be born, except the one excluded. Mayhew v. Middleditch, 1 Bro. C. C. 162.

—— Satisfaction—Portion not Raisable.]—By a marriage settlement the real estate of the husband was limited to him for life, and at his death to trustees for a term of years, and subject thereto to the first and other sons of the marriage in tail male, remainder to the husband in fee. The trusts of the term were declared to be for raising portions for younger children of the marriage, "in case there should be one or more child or children of the marriage, besides an eldest or only son." There were two daughters only, and no son, issue of the marriage, and on the marriage of one of the daughters the father settled upon her and her husband, and her children, an annuity of greater value than her share of the portions under his own marriage settlement, and charged that annuity upon the estate which had been subject to that settlement. Upon the marriage of the second daughter he made a pecuniary provision for her, which was declared to be in satisfaction of her portion under the settlement; and by his will he devised the estate which had been settled to his two daughters, in the same manner as it would have come to them if he had died intestate:—Held, upon the construction of the settlement, that the portions were not raisable in the events that had happened, there being no son of the marriage. Walcott v. Bloomfield, 2 Con. & L. 577; 4 Dr. & War. 211; 6 Ir. Eq. R. 227. And see 2 Con. & L. 587, n; 4 Dr. & War. 225, n.

—— Divesting Clause.]—By a marriage settlement stock was settled, subject to the husband's and wife's life interests therein, upon trusts for the children and issue of the marriage (except an eldest son entitled to certain settled estates), as the husband and wife, or the survivor of them, should appoint, and in default of appointment, for the children (except as aforesaid) in equal shares, the shares of sons to be vested at twenty-one, of daughters at twenty-one or marriage; and it was provided that if the husband should die in his wife's lifetime, leaving an only child a son, such son should be entitled to the whole trust fund; but if the wife should survive the husband, and there should be only two children or only one child (except as aforesaid) who should attain twenty-one or marry, such two only children or one only child (except as aforesaid) should not be entitled to any part of the trust fund, but it should go to the husband absolutely as in that event such two children or one child (except as aforesaid) were otherwise provided for by a deed of even date creating a charge upon the settled real estates. There were two children of the marriage, a son who died an infant, and a daughter who married, and became, on her brother's death, entitled to the settled estates. The wife survived the husband. The deed, purporting to create a charge upon the settled estates, turned out to be invalid:—Held, upon the construction of the settlement, and without resting the decision upon the invalidity of the charge, that the daughter took an absolutely vested interest in the trust fund, and that it did not go to the husband's representative. Carter v. Ducie (Earl), 41 L. J., Ch. 153 ; 25 L. T. 656 ; 20 W. R. 228.

Semble, that if it had been otherwise, the invalidity of the charge would have been sufficient to displace the claim of the husband's representative. Ib.

1. GENERAL PRINCIPLES. KNOWLEDGE OF RIGHTS.

a. Laches.

General Rule.]—Principle of equity, that the demand of relief should be prompt. Colchester Corporation v. Lawten, 1 V. & B. 246; 12 R. R. 216

Principles on which the court acts in refusing applications, either original or by way of appeal, on the ground of laches. Effect of objection in excluding laches. G. W. Ry. v. Oxford, Worcester, & Wolverhampton Ry., 3 De G. M. & G. 341; 5 De G. & Sm. 437; 16 Jur. 443.

Mere laches in asserting a right to an interest executed are not sufficient to disentitle a party to relief in equity, but he may by standing by waive his right. Clarke v. Hart, 6 H. L. Cas. 633; 27 L. J., Ch. 615; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 447. And see Rule v. Jewel, infra, col. 1759.

Remedy at Law.]—Equity will not assist a plaintiff who has disabled himself by laches from proceeding, if his remedy had been at law. Congrieve v. Power, 1 Moll. 121.

Equity will not interfere in favour of a party who omits to avail himself of his legal remedy, in due time. Drewry v. Barnes, 3 Russ. 94; 5 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 47; 27 R. R. 20.

Legal or Equitable Right.]—Where a plaintiff comes to the court to enforce a legal right, his delay in taking proceedings is no defence, if it has not continued long enough to bar his legal right. The case is different where the plaintiff endeavours to enforce an equitable right. Maddever, In re, Three Towns Banking Co. v. Maddever, 53 L. J., Ch. 998; 27 Ch. D. 523.

Ignorance of Rights.]—A delay of thirteen years, during which the plaintiff did not object to the dealings with the assets, she not being apprised of her rights:—Held, not to bar the plaintiff's right to relief. O'Neill v. Hamill, Beat. 618.

A son remained in ignorance of his right to legitim for nearly three years after his father's death, and all parties acted as if legitim was not due:—Held, the son's claim to legitim was not barred by acquiescence. Kintore (Countess) v. Kintore (Earl), 11 App. Cas. 294—H. L. (Sc.)

—— Voluntary Promise.]—When a wrongful act has been completed without the knowledge of the party injured, his right of action is not barred by mere submission to the injury, or even by a voluntary promise not to seek redress; some conduct amounting to release or accord and satisfaction must be shown; although, on account of laches, relief may be refused under special circumstances. De Bussche v. Alt, 47 L. J., Ch. 381; 8 Ch. D. 286; 38 L. T. 370.

Trustees.]—Trustees charged with loss occasioned by their mere laches; costs follow of course. Caffrey v. Darby, 6 Ves. 488.

The doctrine that where there is an express trust lapse of time is not material:—Held, not to apply where there had been gross laches on the part of the cestui que trust. Bright v. Legerton, 2 De G. F. & J. 606; 30 L. J., Ch. 338; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 559; 3 L. T. 713; 9 W. R. 239.

Creditor and Debtor.]—Where creditor takes from debtor an assignment of debt due from third person as security for his own, and by his wilful default the debt becomes irrecoverable, he must bear the loss. Williams v. Price, 1 Sim. & S. 581; 2 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 105; 24 R. R. 238. And see Jones v. Thomas, infra, col. 1731.

Laches not to be imputed to creditors, under a devise for debts, as to an individual devisee, to limit the account of rents and profits; even against an infant heir. Kidney v. Coussmaker, 12 Ves. 136; 2 R. R. 118.

Agreement when first Impeached.]—Where a party rests satisfied with an agreement, and for some time treats it as fair, it is material to ascertain the time he first impeaches it. Morony v. O'Dea, 1 Ball & B. 118.

Fraud when a Defence.]—Lapse of time is a bar to all proceedings in equity for the purpose of undoing any transaction which is not tainted by fraud; meaning thereby an act involving grave moral guilt. Agriculturalists' Cattle Insurance

Co., In re, Smallcombe's case, L. R. 3 Eq. 769; 15 W. R. 501.

Fraud being established against a party it is for him, if he allege laches, to show when the other acquired knowledge, and prove that he knowingly forbore to assert his right. Lindsay Petroleum Co. v. Hurd, L. R. 5 P. C. 221; 22 W. R. 492.

Members of Family.]—Delay in instituting proceedings, where the parties are members of the same family, not so strictly regarded as where they are strangers. Laver v. Fielder, 9 Jur. (N.S.) 190; 7 L. T. 602; 11 W. R 245.

Practice—Bill.]—Laches in filing bill cannot be taken advantage of on arguing demurrer. It should be pleaded. Ros v. Willoughby, 10 Price, 2.

—— Injunction.]—Laches may be a defence to an application for an injunction. Att.-Gen. v. Sheffield Gas Consumers' Co., 3 De G. M. & G. 304; 22 L. J., Ch. 811; 17 Jur. 677; 1 W. R. 185.

—— Costs.]—When considerable delay has occurred in the prosecution of suit costs are not given though decree is reversed. Colclough v. Sterum, 3 Bligh, 181; 22 R. R. 1.

Notice to Treat.]—Notices by railway companies to take land cannot be treated higher than contracts; and after great delay, they will be considered as abandoned. Hedges v. Metropolitan Ry., 28 Beav. 109; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1275; 3 L. T. 643.

Personal Representative.]—No rule is better settled than that a personal representative is bound by the laches or neglect which affects the person through whom he claims. Hodgshon v. Bibby, 8 L. T. 266; 11 W. R. 529.

Delay in claiming payment of a trust fund, for 28 years held fatal. Ib.

Interest.]—Interest refused upon a stale demand. Merry v. Ryes, 1 Eden, 1.

Waste.]—In cases of waste, it is the business of the reversioners to apply to the court promptly. Barry v. Barry, 1 J. & W. 653.

Ship—Injunction.]—Injunction to restrain the sailing of a ship upon the application of a part owner, refused, where the ship was to sail next day, and it did not appear, by the affidavit that there were any circumstances to account for the plaintiff's delay. Christie v. Craig, 2 Mer. 137.

Effect of, where Party not Prejudiced.]—Directors of a company made payments of dividends that had not been earned from 1869 to 1878. In 1886 the company was wound up. In 1890 the liquidator brought an action against the representatives of some of the directors to recover the amounts improperly paid:—Held, that the claim must succeed, as there was nothing to show that the defence was prejudiced by the delay, and the creditors ought not to lose their rights on account of the liquidator's delay, since the defendants had not been prejudiced by it. Masonic Life Assurance Co. v. Sharpe, 61 L. J., Ch. 193; [1892] 1 Ch. 154; 65 L. T. 806; 40 W. R. 241—C. A.

b. Lapse of Time.

General Principles.]—Time is a bar in equity to stale demands, independently of the statute Harcourt v. White, 28 Beav. 303; 30 L. J., Ch. 681.

Length of time, where it does not operate as a statutory or a positive bar, operates simply as evidence of assent or of acquiescence. Life Association of Scotland v. Siddall, 7 Jur. (N.S.) 785; 4 L. T. 311—H. L.

Transactions of many years' standing not set aside, unless on a case well proved. Evans v. Brown, Wightw. 102.

Equity will not give relief after great length of time. A conveyance by a party out of possession shall not affect the rights of third persons, though it may operate as a contract to bind the party. Underwood v. Courtown (Lord), 2 Sch. & Lef. 41.

Length of time, or long acquiescence in a transaction may be a bar to relief in cases where the transaction, if impeached within a reasonable time would be set aside. Hickes v. Cooke, 4 Dow, 16.

Length of time a bar to an equitable title. Burke v. Crosbie, 1 Ball & B. 503.

Lapse of time, imputed as laches, may be excused by the obscurity of the transaction, whereby the plaintiff was disabled from obtaining full information of his rights. Murray v. Palmer, 2 Sch. & Lef. 487.

The court cannot attend to circumstances of distress or embarrassment as an excuse for laches, whereby the demand has become barred by length of time. Hovenden v. Annesley (Lord), 2 Sch. & Lef. 639.

When parties have acquiesced for a long period, such as twenty-three years, under an agreement, they will not be permitted to impeach it on grounds of alleged illegality. Westby v. Westby, 1 Con. & L. 537; 2 Dr. & War. 502; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 585.

A suit to set aside a transaction entered into openly twenty years previously, cannot be sustained. Barwell v. Barwell, 34 Beav. 371.

Effect of length of time elapsing between the transactions complained of and the institution of a suit for relief against them, where the fiduciary character on which the title to relief is founded has de facto ceased for a long period, evidence has been lost, and it has become impossible to restore the defendant to the same position as he would or might have been in if the suit had been promptly brought. Beaden v. King, 9 Hare, 532.

Bill for an account of the produce of captures by privateers dismissed on the ground of laches, the original bill having been filed in 1749: but the length of time cannot be pleaded in bar. Pearson v. Belcher, 4 Ves. 627.

A large demand established after a lapse of more than twenty years, against the estate of an accounting party, though no evidence could be given as to the particulars of the demand. Purrier v. Ranken, 7 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 141.

Long Possession.]—Presumption from length of time in favour of long possession of whatever is necessary to constitute a right. Chalmer v. Bradley, 1 J. & W. 63.

Suit dismissed after 100 years' possession. Kinston v. Pigot, Cary, 110.

Where party had been in possession fifty years, and that possession was proved just in equity, other party was prohibited, by injunction, from disputing his title in court of law. Tomley v. Clench, Cary, 23.

An estate subject to a mortgage in fee being in settlement, with an ultimate limitation to the right heirs of S., A., on expiration of the previous estate, enters, claiming to be entitled under that limitation; he and (after his death) his son continue in quiet possession, paying interest on mortgage for twenty years. The devisee of the person really entitled under the limitation is barred by length of time. Cholmondeley v. Clinton, 2 J. & W. 2, 192. Affirmed, 4 Bligh, 1.

——Of no Effect during Investigation of Title.]—Lapse of time shall not prejudice a person who has title, while seeking a discovery of that title from persons who have possessed themselves of the evidences of it. Bond v. Hopkins, 1 Sch. & Lef. 413.

Parties obtaining wrongful possession, and setting up a false title (under colour of instruments finally condemned), during the investigation of which they are protected in their possession by the court, shall not avail themselves of any length of possession pending the investigation, as a bar to the person who ultimately proves to have the right. Ib.

In Actions for Redemption of Mortgages.]—Length of time can only be a bar to bill to redeem mortgage where parties entitled to equity of redemption have been tenants in fee simple. Cowne v. Douglas, M'Cle. & Y. 321.

Decree of foreclosure was opened after sixteen years on account of equity of redemption being worth much more than was due on mortgage, and distress on part of mortgagor. Burgh v. Langton, 5 Bro. P. C. 213.

The rule established in equity as to the redemption of mortgages (by way of analogy to the statute of limitations), that after twenty years' possession a mortgage shall not be disturbed, is a very right and proper one, but after a possession of fifteen years only, length of time is no bar, and a redemption will be decreed. Anon., 3 Atk. 313.

Though there is no time limited for redemption of mortgages, yet where a man comes in as an old hand, it has been sometimes decreed that the possessor should account no further than for the profits made in his own time, to discourage the stirring of dormant titles; but the common doctrine in equity is, that mortgagees are not within the statute of limitations; yet that statute is sometimes mentioned as a proper direction to go by, for the court is tender of settling any set time, because a man can never be injured if he receives principal, interest and costs; but the owner of the land is injured if he parts with the possession under the full value; yet sometimes the court has allowed length of time to be pleaded in bar, where the mortgaged estate descended as a fee, without entry or claim from the mortgagor, and where the possessor would be entangled in a long account. Porter v. Emery, 1 Ch. Rep. 97. And see Saunders v. Hord, id. 184, in which case the statute of limitations was actually pleaded, and held good. See also Clapham v. Bowyer, 1 Ch. Rep. 206.

Where the estate had descended on the heir, who had sold it; and twenty years had elapsed from the time of the forfeiture: plea of these facts allowed. Pearson v. Pulley, 1 Ch. Ca. 102.

A. and B., his wife, by deed and fine, mortgaged her estate to C.; they then sold their equity of redemption to D. for 10*l.* and covenanted that the fine should be for strengthening the latter deed. D. entered and made many improvements; twenty-three years afterwards A. died, and nine years afterwards his wife, B. died. Then E. her heir, sold all his interest to F. for 81*l.*, who brought his bill to redeem, ten years after the death of B.; but the court would not allow it, more especially as the payment of the purchase-money by F. to E. was not clearly proved. Fleetwood v. Templeman, Barnard, 187.

After a possession of a mortgagee for twenty-five years, redemption decreed on defendant's submitting by answer to be redeemed. Proctor v. Oates, 2 Atk. 140.

If a mortgagee admits himself to have no other title, it shall bind him, and the court will let in the mortgagor to redeem, after twenty years: not so if by his answer he claims by a better title. Perry v. Marston, 2 Bro. C. C. 397.

On a bill to redeem mortgage fifty-five years after date, forty-seven years after mortgagee had got into possession, after five ejectments brought to defeat his estate by a title paramount, and after refusing, by four different answers, come to an account on foot of mortgage and redeem the lands, a redemption was decreed, and an account of rents, etc., directed. Palmer v. Jackson, 5 Bro. P. C. 281.

Plaintiff's grandfather, in 1689, mortgaged an estate to W., who mortgaged it to C. and his heirs for 200*l.* C., to secure the interest, leased the estate to plaintiff's father and his assigns for 5,000 years, at 12*l.* per annum for three years, and 10*l.* per annum for the remainder of the term; and if, at the end of three years the 200*l.* and interest was paid, then the premises to be reconveyed. Receipts were given sometimes for interest, and sometimes for a rent-charge, the last in 1730. The 200*l.* lent was charity money directed to be laid out in lands in fee, and the rents to be applied in clothing twenty-four needy housekeepers. In 1738 plaintiff gave notice to pay off the mortgage, but defendant insisted on an absolute purchase; and it was so decreed in favour of defendant; for where a mortgagee has been in perception of the rents and profits for a considerable time, equity will not decree a redemption, for that would be making him a bailiff to the mortgagor. Mellor v. Lees, 2 Atk. 494.

Semble, no lapse of time will bar the right to redeem where relief is sought against the improper and oppressive exercise of a power of sale by the mortgagee. Robertson v. Norris, 1 Giff. 421.

Where a mortgagee under an improper exercise of a power of sale contained in his deed himself became the purchaser of the mortgaged property, on a bill filed fifteen years afterwards, the court decreed redemption, and ordered the costs of the suit to the hearing to be paid by the mortgagee. Ib.

An equitable mortgagee, who has bought in the legal estate, is fifteen years in undisturbed possession of the rents and profits:—Held, that the lapse of time and presumed acquiescence are immaterial as against an insolvent, and that he has a right to redeem. Hayward v. Kersey, 14 L. T. 879; 14 W. R. 999.

After a decree of foreclosure against the mortgagor and some creditors, whose debts were charged on the estate, one of the creditors pays off the mortgage, and agrees with the rest that they should redeem it at a future day, otherwise he should hold the lands absolutely. This gives the other creditors a new redemption, and, accordingly, a redemption decreed, though after twenty years' possession, and great improvements made. Eaton v. Greaves, 1 Vern. 138.

A mortgaged estate getting into different hands redemption was refused as to part from length of time, and opened as to the other parts, accounts having been kept, and there being a devise of it as a mortgage. Lake v. Thomas, 3 Ves. 17.

I. S., in 1679, mortgaged his lands to A. for a small sum by an absolute conveyance, with a separate defeasance, that I. S. should redeem in his lifetime, and with his own money. I. S. was soon after forced abroad, where he died about twenty-seven years ago, and his heir knew nothing of the mortgage. In 1702 A. devised, that if the mortgage should be redeemed, the money should go so and so. Sixteen years after A.'s will, a bill was brought to redeem, to which length of time was objected. Per cur., the defeasance was a fraud in its creation, and no length of time will bar a fraud; but considering the case distinct from the fraud, the declaration in A.'s will is sufficient to let in a redemption. Redemption decreed. Ord v. Smith, Sel. Ca. Ch. 9.

If a mortgagor agrees that mortgagee shall enter and hold till he is satisfied, length of time is no objection to a redemption. Orde v. Heming, 1 Vern. 418.

A. and B. being seised in fee, in right of their wives, of two undivided fourth parts of an estate, subject to a mortgage term, joined, in 1784, with the owners of the other moiety, in conveying the estate, by lease and release, but without a fine, to a purchaser in fee, and the mortgage was paid off, and the term assigned to attend. The purchaser, and those claiming under him, had been in possession from the date of the conveyance. A.'s wife survived him, and died in 1825, leaving one of the plaintiffs her heir. B.'s wife died in 1818, leaving the other plaintiff her heir. B. died in 1826. In 1830 the plaintiffs brought an enjectment, but were non-suited by the defendants' setting up the term. In 1831 they filed a bill to redeem, which was dismissed, on account of the length of possession by the defendants and those under whom they claimed. Ashton v. Milne, 6 Sim. 369; 3 L. J., Ch. 52.

The heir of mortgagor files a bill to redeem an old mortgage made by demise for 999 years, under a rent at 20*s.* and redeemable at any time on paying 1,200*l.* at one entire payment. The defendant pleads his title as a purchaser for a valuable consideration under a marriage settlement, without notice of mortgage. The settlement was made by the original mortgagee, and there was quiet possession of seventy years; the plea was allowed. Dunsany v. Shaw, 5 Bro. P. C. 262.

Where mortgage-money is stipulated to be paid in one entire sum, the mortgagee, and those claiming under him, continued in possession for near 100 years, without foreclosing. A bill brought to redeem shall be dismissed with costs. Hartpole v. Walsh, 5 Bro. P. C. 267.

One, for 800*l.* consideration, grants a rent-charge of 48*l.* a-year in fee, upon condition that if the grantor during his life shall give notice and pay in the 800*l.* by instalments, viz. 100*l.* at the end of every six months, and shall do this during his own lifetime, the grant to be void; the mortgage was made about sixty years since, when the legal interest of money was eight per cent. Decreed, not redeemable. Floyer v. Lavington, 1 P. Wms. 268.

A. mortgages in 1639, and, in 1663, his heir brings a bill to redeem; he dying, the suit is revived by his co-heirs, who obtain a decree in 1672, but do not prosecute it, and B., having purchased the equity of redemption of them, he now brings a bill to have the benefit of the former decrees; bill dismissed by reason of the difficulty of the account and length of time. St. John v. Turner, 2 Vern. 418.

Through infancy may be an answer to the objection of the time in not coming to redeem a mortgage, yet where the time begins upon the ancestor, it shall run on against his infant heir, as in the case of a fine at common law. Ib.

Mortgagor admitted to redeem a mortgage made in 1642, after three descents on the defendant's part, and four on the plaintiff's part. Length of time answered by infancy and coverture, and an account made up by the mortgagee in 1686. Proctor v. Cowper, 2 Vern. 377; Pre. Ch. 116. And see Blewitt v. Thomas, 2 Ves. J. 669.

Demurrer, on the ground of length of time, to bill for a redemption of mortgage, is good. Hardy v. Reeves, 4 Ves. 479.

When less than Twenty Years cannot be Raised by Demurrer.] — The plaintiff was entitled under her father's will and an appointment by her mother, who was his executrix, and being in embarrassed cirumstances, and without professional advice, and ignorant of the amount of her claims, G., her solicitor, induced her in 1833 to convey to him all her rights, which he represented to be only one half that they amounted to, for a rent-charge on the lands so conveyed to him, the payment to be personally secured by him. The deed was drawn by G., and contained no clause of re-entry or covenant by him to pay, but a non-alienation clause was fraudulently, as alleged, inserted. G. ceased to pay in 1836, and the bill was filed in 1845 to set aside the deed and carry the trusts of the will into execution, and for an account of the testator's property, so far as to ascertain the plaintiff's rights, and, if necessary, of the personal estate of her mother. B., the executor of the mother, and the administrator de bonis non of the father, was made a party, but the trustee of the father's will was not:—Held, on a demurrer filed by G., that the length of time since the execution of the deed falling short of twenty years could not be set up by him on demurrer. O'Kelly v. Glenny, 9 Ir. Eq. R. 25.

Claims by Creditors against Executors and Administrators.]—Where a party has lain by a great length of time, and suffered estate to be distributed, he shall not have an account. Hercy v. Dinwoody, 4 Bro. C. C. 257. And see 2 Ves. J. 87.

Stated accounts by men of full age, after a great length of time, not to be set aside against an executor. Western v. Cartwright, Sel. Ca. Ch. 34.

In a creditor's suit, a claim was carried in before the master in respect of transactions which occurred as far back as the year 1793. The principal witness in support of the claim was sixty-three years of age, and the circumstances to which he deposed had taken place when he was between thirteen and sixteen years old; and, upon minute investigation of his evidence, it appeared to contain some variances and inconsistencies which were not explained:—Held, that considering the circumstances and the age of the witness, and the length of time since the event happened, the claim ought to be disallowed. Strother v. Dutton, 17 L. J., Ch. 87.

Claim by Mortgagee against Mortgagor's Residuary Legatees.]—In 1843 G. mortgaged to solicitors a freehold farm, furniture and stock, the mortgagor being permitted to use the furniture and stock, but not to sell without consent of the mortgagees. In 1859 G. died, having by his will bequeathed the furniture to his unmarried daughters, and devised the farm to A., B. and C. upon trust to allow his unmarried daughters to occupy it, they keeping down the mortgage interest, and having bequeathed his residuary personal estate to A., B. and C., whom he appointed executors upon trust for sale and division among his children. By a codicil the testator directed that his unmarried daughters should pay a rent of 600*l.* for the farm, and on their giving it up it should be let. With the knowledge of the mortgagees, two of the testator's daughters continued to carry on the farm as tenants to the trustees of the will, and for that purpose used the furniture, and took part of the farming stock at a valuation as against their shares of residue. In 1861 the executors, with the knowledge of the mortgagees, sold the remainder of the testator's residuary personal estate, consisting almost entirely of farming stock, and distributed the proceeds among the residuary legatees pursuant to the trust of the will, the two daughters who were tenants of the farm applying their shares in carrying it on. In 1863 one of these two daughters married, whereupon her husband took a lease from the trustees, and bought out the interest of the unmarried daughter in the stock and furniture. The interest on the mortgage was, by the direction of the trustees, paid to the mortgagees by the tenants of the farm out of the rent, the mortgagees giving receipts to the tenants only. In 1882, the interest having been unpaid from August, 1880, and the security being worthless, the legal personal representative of the surviving mortgagee sued G.'s executors for an alleged devastavit in having distributed G.'s residuary personal estate without providing for the mortgage debt (Blake v. Gale (22 Ch. D. 820)), when it was declared that the executors were not liable for a devastavit, but judgment was pronounced for a sale, and for administration of G.'s estate. Under that judgment the chief clerk certified that the security was unsalable, and allowed the payments by the executors to the residuary legatees, but the order on further consideration was made without prejudice to any proceedings the plaintiff might take against any other persons than the executors. Thereupon, in 1885, the plaintiff brought an action against the residuary legatees for payment of the mortgage debt out of G.'s assets received by them:—Held, that although the legal debt under the mortgage was still subsisting, and was in no way barred by statute, yet that the plaintiff's claim against the residuary legatees, being in the nature of an equitable demand, was barred by lapse of time and acquiescence. Blake v. Gale, 55 L. J., Ch. 559; 32 Ch. D. 571; 55 L. T. 234; 34 W. R. 555—C. A.

Legacies.]—Legacy presumed to be paid after a great length of time. Fotherby v. Hartridge, 2 Vern. 21.

Payment of a legacy presumed after about forty years without demand. Jones v. Turberville, 2 Ves. J. 11; 4 Bro. C. C. 115.

Thirty-nine years, under certain circumstances:—Held, to be insufficient to justify presumption of payment of legacies. Shields v. Rice, 3 Jur. 950.

Every fair presumption shall be made against a stale demand; and where at bar the title can be only made good by record, or by a patent which cannot be found, such instruments shall be presumed to have been lost. Pickering v. Stamford (Lord), 2 Ves. J. 581.

After thirty-five years a legacy would be barred on presumption of satisfaction. Id. 280.

Bill by next of kin for personal estate, secured by mortgage, given to a charity. The will was dated in 1754. No bill was filed till 1792, and the court then ordered a reference to enquire into circumstances. S. C., 4 Bro. C. C. 214.

A testator bequeathed to his widow a pecuniary legacy and a life annuity. She survived him twenty-eight years, and after her death her executrix filed a bill for their recovery. No explanation was given of the circumstances, and no proof of any intermediate payment. The bill was dismissed on the ground of great laches. Pattison v. Hawkesworth, 10 Beav. 375.

—— Where Charged on Land.]—Power to lend legacy on personal security to those taking real and personal estates upon which it was charged: no presumption that it was thus lent so as to exonerate the real estates, although more than thirty years had elapsed. Horner v. Sayner, C. P. Cooper, 168.

Legatees, whose legacies were charged on real estates, subject to prior charges, not affected by lapse of time so long as any of the prior charges subsisted. Faulkner v. Daniel, 3 Hare, 212.

Rent-Charge.]—No limitation, before 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, to a rent-charge at law or equity. But demand might be excluded by presumption from length of time and acquiescence. Stackhouse v. Barnston, 10 Ves. 467.

In the Case of Trusts.]—If there be no doubt of the origin and existence of a trust, this court will not allow lapse of time to enable those who are mere trustees to appropriate to themselves that which is the property of others; but, in questions of doubt whether any trust exists, and whether those in possession are not entitled to the property for their own benefit, the court will pay the utmost regard to the length of time during which there has been enjoyment inconsistent with the existence of the supposed trust. Att.-Gen. v. Fishmongers' Co. (Preston's Will), 5 Myl. & Cr. 16; 5 Jur. 693. Affirming 2 Beav. 588.

Between cestui que trust and trustee no lapse of time will preclude an account from the commencement of the trust; in a case in which the relation of trustee and cestui que trust continues, the transactions between them are not closed, and the delay of the claim is attributable to the trustee not having given to his cestui que trust that information to which he was entitled, and accounted with him in such manner as he ought. Wedderburn v. Wedderburn, 2 Keen, 722. Affirmed, 4 Myl. & Cr. 41; 8 L. J., Ch. 177; 3 Jur. 596.

Time is no bar in cases of direct trust; it may be otherwise if there has been a direct and independent dealing between the trustees and cestuis que trust after the relation has terminated. S. C., 2 Keen, 749.

Where a trust has been created by the acts of the parties themselves, time is no bar to a suit relating to any transaction that has taken place in connection with the trust property. Clanricarde (Marquis) v. Henning, 30 Beav. 175; 30 L. J., Ch. 865; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 1113; 5 L. T. 168; 9 W. R. 912.

A trustee and cestui que trust have no privilege against lapse of time, if the party from whom they claimed acquiesced, and omitted in his lifetime, for several years, to take any steps to set aside the sale of an estate, which was purchased from him by his solicitor. Ib.

G., being trustee of moneys for S. and his children, died in 1838, having devised his copyhold and freehold estates to trustees upon trust to sell and pay the proceeds of sale to his executors in aid of his personal estate, and after the payment of his debts he gave the residue of his personal estate, including such proceeds of sale, to his wife absolutely. The trustees allowed the widow to enter into possession of the copyholds, but sold the freeholds and applied the proceeds as directed by the will. In 1853 S. and two of his children filed a bill on behalf of themselves and all other creditors of G., for administration of his estate. They then learned that the widow was in possession of the copyholds, but they took no step to obtain possession of the rents, or to obtain a receiver. The estate being insufficient for the payment of his debts, three of the children of S. (who had died in the meantime) instituted a suit in 1866, to claim the rents received by the widow since the death of her husband, and praying for a declaration that the trustee of G.'s will was guilty of a breach of trust in allowing her to receive the rents:—Held, that the plaintiffs were barred from recovering by their own laches. Gwynne v. Gell, 20 L. T. 508.

A bill by a cestui que trust against the representatives of his trustees for an account of rents and profits arising from cottage property, after the lapse of upwards of twenty years from the sale of such property, was dismissed, with costs, on the ground of laches and acquiescence. Bright v. Legerton, 2 De G. F. & J. 606: 30 L. J., Ch. 338; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 559; 3 L. T. 713; 9 W. R. 239. Affirming 29 Beav. 60.

A court of equity will not allow a dormant claim to be set up when the means of resisting it, if unfounded, have perished, much less cast upon a defendant the burthen of proving such an affirmative as that forty years ago cottage rents were properly collected, when the witnesses who might have proved the fact are all dead. Ib.

A. died in 1822, having devised certain pieces of land, houses, and cottages, to trustees to apply the rents in payment of an annuity until a child of one of his (the testator's) two brothers reached twenty-one, then to be sold and invested for payment of the annuity and for the benefit of the children of his two brothers, such children being entitled to the surplus of the rents and profits. One brother died without issue, the other left two children, of whom A. was one. He attained twenty-one in January, 1839. The trustees sold the estates in July, 1839, and invested the proceeds in the funds. The trustees had all since died, the survivor having died in 1851. A. filed a bill in August, 1859, against the representatives of the deceased trustees, for an account of the rents and profits omitted to be received by the trustees from the death of the testator until the estates were sold:—Held, that the claim was barred. Ib.

Although the trust was an express trust in its creation, it was not a continuing trust so as to prevent lapse of time being a bar. Ib.

The court will not establish a trust in favour of a plaintiff where his own evidence in support of it is uncorroborated, or where a considerable length of time has elapsed between the creation of the trust and the assertion of the claim to establish it. Poole v. Foxwell, 11 L. T. 441.

A testator died in 1809; his grand-daughter came of age in 1829; she then executed a release and married in 1836; her father died in 1850, and in 1852 she instituted a suit to make his estate liable for the profits made by him (he not being a trustee) by the employment of part of the trust moneys made:—Held, under circumstances, that assuming her right, there was nothing to justify the delay in instituting the suit. Parker v. Bloxam, 20 Beav. 295.

The wrongful receipt and conversion of trust property place the receiver in the same situation as the trustee from whom he received it, and he is subject to the same liabilities as the trustee himself. In such a case relief is given on the ground of fraud, and not of constructive trust; lapse of time, therefore, is no bar to the suit. Rolfe v. Gregory, 34 L. J., Ch. 274; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 98; 12 L. T. 162; 13 W. R. 355.

A sum of 600*l.*, secured by a promissory note, was specifically bequeathed for the benefit of R., a married woman, for her life, with remainder for her children. The executor of the will, R.'s husband, delivered up the note to G., the debtor (who had full knowledge of the trust), in discharge of a private debt. Twenty years afterwards R. and her children instituted a suit against G. for the recovery of the money:—Held, that the right of R. to a life interest in the money was not barred by lapse of time. Ib.

A bill alleged a breach of trust by a deceased tenant for life under a settlement, in the application to the liquidation of a charge on the settled estates of the proceeds of part of such settled estates, while there was in his hands, as personal representative of the settlor, personal estate of such settlor primarily applicable to the liquidation of the charge:—Held, the alleged breach of trust having taken place at least thirty years back, that the plaintiff was not entitled to an account of the settlor's personal estate. Morris v. Morris, 28 L. J., Ch. 329; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 229; 7 W. R. 249—L.JJ.

Where a trustee admits that the trust-money has not been paid, but that it has remained for a length of time in his hands, quære, whether any length of time will operate as a bar to the lawful claimant in a court of equity. Cator v. Croydon Canal Co., 4 Y. & C. 405. Affirmed, 13 L. J., Ch. 89; 8 Jur. 277.

B., a trustee of a will, who was also tenant for life of the residue, omitted to invest it. Upon his death, in 1834, H., a widow, became absolutely entitled to the fund. H. resided with and was maintained by her son, who was B.'s executor, and she took no steps to obtain payment of the fund during her lifetime. She died in 1858. A bill, filed in 1863 by the representatives of H. against the representatives of the representative of B. to recover the fund, was dismissed with costs, on the ground of the lapse of time. Hodgson v. Bibby, 32 Beav. 221; 11 W. R. 559.

Trustee sells the lands to one who had no notice of the trust, and, after a fine and five years' non-claim, re-purchases the land. Decreed he should stand seised in trust, as before the sale. Bovey v. Smith, 1 Vern. 60; 2 Ch. Ca. 124.

Under a trust-deed dated in 1806, the trustee after the performance of certain trusts was to pay the surplus rents to the owner during his life. The owner died in 1816; the trustee died in 1818; and in 1828 a bill for an account was filed, by the representatives of the former, against the representatives of the latter. The answer was filed in the following year, but no further proceedings were taken until 1839, when the cause was set down:—Held, that no such laches existed as to bar the account, held also, that as regarded the lapse of time, the case was to be looked at in the same light now as at the filing of the bill. Dickenson v. Holland (Lord), 2 Beav. 310.

—— Charitable.]—Bequest to the corporation of R. on trust for the benefit of the poor of the town of R., with a proviso that, if the corporation of R. should, for one whole year, neglect to observe the directions of the will, the gift should be utterly void, and the property be transferred to the corporation of L. in trust for a hospital in the town of L. After the corporation of R. had acted in disregard of the directions of the will, with the knowledge of the corporation of L. and the hospital, for more than twenty years, a suit was instituted on behalf of the hospital, claiming the property under the proviso:—Held, that the delay of the plaintiffs in making their claim, furnished no ground of defence against it, either to the corporation of R. or to the attorney-general, as representing the general interests of the charity in that town. Christ's Hospital v. Grainger, 1 Mac. & G. 460; 1 Hall & Tw. 533; 19 L. J., Ch. 33; 14 Jur. 339. Affirming 6 Sim. 83.

Where the attorney-general sues in the court of chancery for the vindication of an endowed public charity, neither acquiescence nor lapse of time will be any bar to the proceeding. Cairncross v. Lorimer, 3 Macq. H. L. 827.

But there is no such principle or rule where the suit is instituted by private individuals in a matter affecting solely their own interests. On the contrary, in such a case acquiescence and lapse of time will be a bar. Ib.

—— Reconveyance of Legal Estate Presumed.]—Reconveyance of the legal estate presumed under obscure circumstances after a great lapse of time, though the possession originally not adverse, but under a trust; upon that presumption a specific performance decreed against a purchaser. Hillary v. Waller, 12 Ves. 239.

Application to set aside Sales or Leases.]—Application to impeach a sale to a trustee must be made within a reasonable time. Chalmer v. Bradley, 1 J. & W. 59.

A bill was filed in 1859 by legatees under a will against the representatives of a devisee in trust, impeaching a sale made by him in 1816 as being at an undervalue, and in reality a sale to the trustee himself. The court made a decree in the favour of the legatees:—Held, that though the claim of the legatees was not barred by lapse of time or acquiescence, yet as the evidence showed that the sale was made bonâ fide, and not at an undervalue, the bill must be dismissed. Baker v. Peck, 4 L. T. 3; 9 W. R. 472.

The tenant for life of an estate, who was also devisee in trust in remainder for the children of the testator, with a power of appointment by will amongst them, purchased and obtained from the objects of the power a release of their reversion at an undervalue, and devised the estate to her son in fee, charged with debts and legacies. The son took possession of the estate, and paid off the legacies and charges fourteen years and a half after the death of the tenant for life, and seventeen years after the purchase of the reversion. The assignee of one of the vendors, an object of the power, who had become insolvent, filed his bill to set aside the sale:—Held, that the lapse of time was a bar to the relief, and that the mere circumstance of the poverty of the cestui que trust was not sufficient to excuse the delay. Roberts v. Tunstall, 4 Hare, 257; 14 L. J., Ch. 184; 9 Jur. 292.

A testator gave to his daughter all his estates for her life, with remainders over, with power to grant mining leases for twenty-one years. In 1840 the daughter granted a lease for twenty-one years and died the same year. In 1846 the next tenant in tail attained twenty-one, and executed a disentailing deed. He then gave notice to the lessees to give up the lease, alleging that it was invalid, but took no further proceedings, and in 1852 he sold the estate to the plaintiff, who was his agent. In 1860 the plaintiff filed a bill against the lessees to have the lease declared void, on the ground of there being no power under the will, and that it was obtained by fraud:—Held, that he was disentitled to relief, on the ground of laches alone, no proceedings having been taken until fifteen years after the tenant in tail attained twenty-one. Ernest v. Vivian, 9 L. T. 785; 12 W. R. 295.

In Claims for Specific Performance.]—Bill for a specific performance of a covenant whereby the plaintiff was solely to have a pit in the defendant's ground for digging black stone; proved that the defendant had for above sixty years been in quiet possession of this pit for digging black stones. Bill dismissed. Scolefield v. Whitehead, 2 Vern. 127.

Where a tenant for life, with remainder to his issue as tenants in common in fee, conveyed the lands as if he had the fee therein, to a purchaser in 1794, and died in 1820, and the children filed a bill in 1837 against the purchaser, claiming under the articles, and praying a specific execution of them: Held, that there was not such acquiescence upon their parts as enabled the court, exercising its discretion under 3 and 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 27, to refuse them relief. Thompson v. Simpson, 1 Dr. & War. 459.

Whatever effect time might have in precluding relief against a bargain of a remote period, it affords no ground for a court of equity to enforce it, if shown to have been originally illegal. Molony v. L'Estrange, Beat. 414.

Tenant for Life in Receipt of Income.]—Where a tenant for life under a will has been in the receipt of the income of a fund for thirty-five years, the court will allow her to continue in such receipt, without directing a reference to inquire as to the existence of debts due from the testator's estate. Nounday v. Balls, 6 Jur. 550.

Action for Waste against prior Tenant for Life.]—An expectant tenant for life in remainder, who sees a tenant for life in possession, improperly cut timber, and takes no step to prevent it during his life, cannot, in a suit instituted nearly twenty years after the death of such prior tenant for life, charge his estate with the burden of making good the value of the timber so improperly cut by him; and upon the principle of preventing the assertion of stale demands, the lapse of time alone will form a bar, in equity, to such a suit, although the statute of limitations has no application. Harcourt v. White, 28 Beav. 303; 30 L. J., Ch. 681; 6 Jur. (N.S.), 1087; 8 W. R. 715.

A devise contained in the will of the prior tenant for life of his estates for the payment of debts, held not to prevent the lapse of time from operating as a bar, because, at his death, the amount due in respect of the timber improperly cut had not been ascertained, and therefore there was no debt in existence upon which the trust for payment of debts could operate. Ib.

In Claims for Dignities.]—Length of time is no bar to a claim to a dignity, though if a series of persons entitled to it do not assert their right, that may raise a presumption against the right, if not accounted for. Hastings Peerage, 8 Cl. & F. 144; West, 621. And see Kintore (Countess) v. Kintore (Earl), supra, col. 1716.

c. Waiver.

General Principles.]—Delay is not waiver, inaction is not waiver, though it may be evidence of waiver. Waiver is consent to dispense with the notice—Per Bowen, L.J. Selwyn v. Garfit, 57 L. J., Ch. 609; 38 Ch. D. 284; 59 L. T. 283; 36 W. R. 513.

What amounts to in general. See judgment of Fry, L.J., citing Willmott v. Barber (infra, col. 1731), in Russell v. Watts, 25 Ch. D. 559; 50 L. T. 673; 32 W. R. 626—C. A.

In order to constitute acquiescence, or a waiver, it must be shown that the party said or did something to give the court a jurisdiction it did not possess. Mere respectful acquiescence in, or submission to, the ruling of a court, will not amount to a waiver of a right to complain of an illegal decision. Beaudry v. Montreal (Mayor), 11 Moore, P. C. 399; 6 W. R. 346.

Mere laches in asserting a right to an interest executed is not sufficient in itself to disentitle a party to relief from a court of equity, but he may by standing by waive or abandon his right. Clarke v. Hart, 6 H. L. Cas. 633; 27 L. J., Ch. 615.; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 447.

Practice — Waiver by One Plaintiff.] — Acquiescence by one of several co-plaintiffs precludes the interference of the court upon an interlocutory application as much as upon decree; although some of the co-plaintiffs are infants. Marker v. Marker, 9 Hare, 15; 20 L. J., Ch. 246; 15 Jur. 663.

Parties cannot be said to aqcuiesce in the claims of others unless they are fully cognisant of their right to dispute them. Ib.

—— Waiver by One Defendant.]—When a plaintiff's case wholly fails, it cannot be aided by the gift or waiver of one defendant, as against his co-defendant. Hollingsworth v. Shakeshaft, 14 Beav. 492; 21 L. J., Ch. 722.

—— Demurrer.]—Acquiescence merely prevents the special protection by injunction, but on a demurrer it must be such as to disentitle the plaintiff to any relief whatever. Gordon v. Cheltenham Ry., 5 Beav. 229.

Knowledge of Rights—Onus Probandi.]—A. mortgaged leaseholds. On his death his executors took possession, received the rents, paid the interest on the mortgages, and applied the surplus for the benefit of the beneficiaries. The property proved insufficient to pay the mortgage debt:—Held, that the onus of proving acquiescence is on the person alleging it, and to show acquiescence he must show a standing by with a full knowledge of what was being done, and an acquiescence in the devastavit; and that this had not been proved. Marsden, In re, Bowden v. Layland, 54 L. J., Ch. 640; 26 Ch. D. 784; 51 L. T. 417; 33 W. R. 28.

Acquiescence in what has been done will not be a bar to relief when the person alleged to have acquiesced has acted, or abstained from acting, through being ignorant that he possessed rights. Beauchamp (Earl) v. Winn, L. R. 6 H. L. 223; 22 W. R. 193.

Waiver or acquiescence, like election, presupposes that the person is fully cognisant of his rights, and neglects to enforce them. Vyvyan v. Vyvyan, 30 Beav. 65.

Where acquiescence is relied on, it must be shown that the person acquiescing was aware of the matter in which he acquiesced, and of the effect of such acquiescence. Strange v. Fooks, 4 Giff. 408.

Acquiescence without full knowledge of the circumstances cannot be of any avail. Prideaux v. Lonsdale, 1 N. R. 565; 32 L. J., Ch. 317; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 488; 8 L. T. 109; 11 W. R. 531.

There can be no acquiescence in acts in which the party is ignorant that he has a right to dispute. Cholmondeley v. Clinton, 2 Mer. 362; 16 R. R. 167.

A party is not bound by acquiescence when ignorant of his rights. Chambers, Ex parte, 2 Mont. & Ayr. 476.

Acquiescence imports full knowledge, and a cestui que trust cannot be bound unless he has been fully informed of his rights, and of all the material facts. Life Association of Scotland v. Siddall, 7 Jur. (N.S.) 785; 4 L. T. 311.

A waiver must be an intentional act with knowledge. Darnley (Earl) v. L. C. & D. Ry., 36 L. J., Ch. 404; L. R. 2 H. L. 43; 16 L. T. 217; 15 W. R. 817.

A party by acquiescing may raise such difficulties as to prevent the court from interfering to remove temporary bars. To charge a party with acquiescence he must be affected with knowledge of the facts acquiesced in. Blennerhasset v. Day, 2 Ball & B. 137.

Where the facts constituting fraud are in the knowledge of the party, and he lies by for twenty-five years, he cannot get relief. Id. 118.

A party acquiescing and receiving money under a misapprehension of his rights, not bound by it as in case of a contract for a disputed title or the compromise of a litigated right. Id. 128.

—— Submission to Wrongful Act.]—Semble, that mere submission to a wrongful act completed without the knowledge of the person whose right is infringed, cannot bar his right of action; although it may afford a ground for refusing relief under some circumstances. De Bussche v. Alt, 47 L. J., Ch. 381; 8 Ch. D. 286; 38 L. T. 370.

—— Solicitor.]—Where there was no acquiescence with knowledge of rights, a lapse of ten years was held not to affect the rights of a client seeking to set aside a purchase by his solicitor. Austin v. Chambers, 6 Cl. & F. 1.

—— Presumptive Notice.]—Upon one of the sections of a railway, deposited with the clerk of the peace, there was a note that a particular road, therein delineated, was to be stopped up, and another was to be substituted for it:—Held, that the public were not thereby affected with notice, so as, upon the ground of acquiescence, to be precluded from obtaining an injunction on the company's proceeding to stop up the road. Att.-Gen. v. G. N. Ry., 4 De G. & Sm. 75; 15 Jur. 387.

—— By both Parties.]—Silence as to a legal right, when the facts are known to both parties, will not be an acquiescence in equity to bind the silent party. Crofts v. Middleton, 2 K. & J. 194; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 1133.

And see cases under next section.

Fraud.]—No act will amount to a confirmation of an impeachable transaction unless the party has become aware of the fraud, and that his act will have the effect of confirming it. Murray v. Palmer, 2 Sch. & Lef. 486. And see Blennerhasset v. Day, supra.

—— What Constitutes Fraud.]—The doctrine of acquiescence is founded upon conduct with a knowledge of one's legal rights. The acquiescence which will deprive a man of his legal rights must amount to fraud. To constitute fraud of this description—(1) the plaintiff must have made a mistake as to his legal rights; (2) he must have expended money or done some act on the faith of his mistaken belief; (3) the defendant, the possessor of the legal right, must know of the existence of his own right which is inconsistent with the right claimed by the plaintiff; (4) the defendant must know of the plaintiff's mistaken belief of his rights; (5) the defendant must have encouraged the plaintiff in the expenditure of money, or in the other acts which he has done, either directly or by abstaining from asserting his legal rights—Per Fry, J. Willmott v. Barber, 49 L. J., Ch. 793; 15 Ch. D. at p. 105; 43 L. T. 95; 28 W. R. 911.

—— Waiver of Security.]—Property, including a leasehold house, was mortgaged by A. to C., who was afterwards induced, by a representation from A. that a purchaser had been found for the house, to waive that portion of his security, and accept a part of the principal. The representation was untrue:—Held, that the waiver, which was made upon a fraudulent representation, did not affect the right of C. to insist upon his security for the balance of the principal as against A., and subsequent equitable incumbrancers under A. Jones v. Thomas, 11 W. R. 50.

Fraud cannot be condoned unless there is full knowledge of the facts and of the rights arising out of those facts, and the parties are at arm's length. Moxon v. Payne, 43 L. J., Ch. 240; L. R. 8 Ch. 881.

—— Contract.]—The right of a person dealing with a company to set aside a contract, founded on the latter's unintentional misrepresentation, may be waived or released, expressly or indirectly. Bank of Hindustan, China and Japan, In re, Campbell, Ex parte, 42 L. J., Ch. 771; L. R. 9 Ch. 1; 29 L. T. 519; 22 W. R. 113.

—— Ratification.]—The manager of a bank obtained an advance for himself on his personal credit. On liquidation of the bank, the accounts were debited with this advance as made to the bank, and the bank, in ignorance of the facts, acquiesced in this:—Held, that acquiescence must be founded on a full knowledge of the facts, and must be in relation to a transaction which may be valid in itself, and not illegal, and that there was no ratification by the bank. Banque Jacques-Cartier v. Banque D'Epargne de Montreal, 57 L. J., P. C. 42; 13 App. Cas. 111—P. C.

Bankruptcy.]—A bankrupt was refused his certificate on the ground of fraudulent concealment of property. Subsequently a consent order for annulling the bankruptcy was obtained. After this the assignees discovered that other property had been concealed by the bankrupt, and they presented a petition to discharge the annulling order, and filed a bill to restrain the bankrupt from getting in the concealed property. The petition was dismissed on the ground that the assignees having been aware of previous fraudulent concealment, could not be held to have consented to the order on the faith of the bankrupt having made a full disclosure of his property:—Held, that the proceedings in the cause ought to be stayed without costs. Elsey v. Adams, 2 De G. J. & S. 147; 3 N. R. 696; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 459; 10 L. T. 492; 12 W. R. 586.

—— Creditors.] — Creditors having, subsequently to the appointment, signed resolutions authorising the assignees to do certain acts which they could not have performed without such authority, are debarred from questioning the validity of the appointment upon grounds of which they were aware at the time of signature. Nash, Ex parte, Wyatt, In re, 1 Deac. & C. 445.

Voluntary Arrangement.]—In 1841 sisters voluntarily surrendered to their brother his promissory notes for money owing to them:—Held, that the transaction could not be set aside nineteen years after, when all the actors in it were dead. Mackintosh v. Stuart, 36 Beav. 21.

Shareholder.]—A shareholder who had acquiesced in the recommencement of the works afterwards sold his shares to a purchaser, who objected to the further prosecution of the works:—Held, that the purchaser was bound by the acquiescence of his vendor. Effooks v. L. & S. W. Ry., 1 Sm. & G. 142; 17 Jur. 365; 1 W. R. 175.

Lease.]—An intending lessee cannot throw any responsibility upon the solicitor of the lessor, by a simple appeal that "he was sure the solicitor would not let him do anything wrong." Haberdashers Co. v. Isaac, 3 Jur. (N.S.) 611.

Effect of, as Estoppel.]—Nobody ought to be estopped from averring the truth or asserting a just demand, unless by his acts, or words, or neglect his now averring the truth or asserting the demand would work some wrong to some other person, who has been induced to do something, or to abstain from doing something, by reason of what he has said or done, or omitted to say or do. Adamson, Ex parte, Collie, In re, 47 L. J., Bk. 106; 8 Ch. D. 817; 38 L. T. 920; 26 W. R. 892.

Statutory Rights by Person Benefited.]—Edward III., granted by charter to the citizens of London that no market within seven miles round about the city should be granted by the king or his heirs to any one. In 1682, by charter, Charles II. granted to the predecessors in title of the plaintiffs the right to hold a market in or about Spital Square on Thursdays and Saturdays:—Held, that the charter of Edward III. had the validity of a private act of parliament; that its intention was that no market should be granted for seven miles round the city; that there being evidence of user of the market at the least since 1723, the city must be taken to have waived their rights under the charter of Edward III. G. E. Ry. v. Goldsmid, 54 L. J., Ch. 162; 9 App. Cas. 927; 52 L. T. 270; 33 W. R. 81; 49 J. P. 260—H. L. (E.) d. Confirmation.

And see, infra, 4 c.

Knowledge of Law and Facts.]—In order to work confirmation, the party said to confirm must know the law as well as the fact. Cockerell v. Cholmeley, 1 Russ. & M. 418.

In order to make out a case of confirmation, it is necessary to prove, not only knowledge of facts, but of the rights flowing from them. Sandeman v. Mackenzie, 1 J. & H. 613; 30 L. J., Ch. 838; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 1231; 5 L. T. 175.

Confirmation must be by a person acquainted with his rights, and knowing that the transaction was impeachable. Dunbar v. Tredennick, 2 Ball & B. 317. S. P., Roche v. O'Brien, 1 Ball & B. 339.

Deed of confirmation must be free from fraud. Equity will not relieve a party apprised of his rights, confirming former acts. Ib.

No act will amount to a confirmation of an impeachable transaction, unless the party has, become aware of the fraud; and is also aware that his act will have the effect of confirming it. Murray v. Palmer, 2 Sch. & Lef. 486.

All acts to effect confirmation must be voluntary, and done with the intent to rectify that which the party knows he is entitled to disaffirm. Molony v. L'Estrange, 1 Beat. 413.

—— Undue Influence.]—There can be no confirmation of a fraudulent gift obtained through undue influence by a donee standing in a confidential relationship towards the donor unless there is full knowledge on the part of the latter of the facts and the rights arising out of them, and an absolute release from the undue influence. Moxon v. Payne, 43 L. J., Ch. 240.

A woman under the influence of her stepfather executed a bond as surety for an advance to him. On action brought on the bond, she executed a second bond as surety to secure the amount of the judgment and costs. She had no independent advice. Six years after on action brought on the second bond, she filed a bill to set them aside:—Held, that she was not barred by laches. Kempson v. Ashbee, 44 L. J., Ch. 195; L. R. 10 Ch. 15; 31 L. T. 525; 23 W. R. 38.

Sale by Tenant for Life.]—Where A. sold an estate, and conveyed it in fee simple, with the usual covenant for further assurance, and became bankrupt, and it was considered that he was tenant in tail only, it was ordered that the commissioner should execute a deed of confirmation to purchaser. Fripp, Ex parte, Phelps, In re, 1 De G. 293.

Tenant for life made a lease exceeding his power, with a covenant for quiet enjoyment, and he and the remainderman conveyed the estate in fee subject to the leases:—Held, that this did not amount to a confirmation of the lease by the remainderman. Brangan v. Gorges, 7 Ir. Eq. R. 283.

A deed executed by a tenant for life, and his son, an infant, tenant in quasi tail in remainder, was held to have been rendered a valid bar by subsequent dealings of the son with the property. Allen v. Allen, 1 Con. & L. 427; 2 Dr. & War. 307; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 472.

Settlement—Lease not Within Power.]—By settlement, A. was tenant for life, with remainder to J. for life, with remainder to the first and other sons of J. in tail male, with remainder to J. in fee; and A. and J. were empowered to make leases. By lease not according with the power, A. and J. demised part to G., and covenanted for quiet enjoyment. On the marriage of F., the eldest son of J., J. and F. joined in resettling the estates, which were limited in the usual course of family settlements; and J. and F. covenanted that the lands were free from encumbrances, "such leases as have been heretofore really and bonâ fide made only excepted." J. having died, F. obtained judgment for possession of the lands leased:—Held, that by the settlement, F. had confirmed the lease and an injunction was granted. Gray v. Knox, 5 Ir. Eq. R. 465.

—— Confirmation by Will.]—Where a settlement, incomplete as to part of the property comprised in it is subsequently confirmed by the will of the settlor, the confirmation perfects the settlement, as a testamentary instrument, so that the doctrines of ademption and lapse apply. Bizzey v. Flight, 45 L. J., Ch. 852; 3 Ch. D. 1269; 24 W. R. 957.

——Lunacy of Settlor.]—A testator having left his son 10,000*l.* by will, expressed an intention, verbally, of settling 10,000*l.* stock on the son's marriage, and became insane. The marriage took place, and the 10,000*l.* stock was settled accordingly. The testator then had a lucid interval, and on being told of the transaction did not disapprove thereof:—Held, that the testator confirmed the settlement by not expressing any disapprobation during this lucid interval.

Browne v. Browne, 11 L. J., Ch. 57; 5 Jur. 1053.

Party Confirming Deed.]—If a deed of confirmation is executed under a mistake, and the party confirming is dead, it is doubtful whether a court of equity would permit parties claiming under him to take advantage of the mistake. Cholmondeley v. Clinton, 4 Bligh, 1; 22 R. R. 83.

Agreement when Impeached.]—An agreement confirmed, not to be impeached without clear proof of imposition. Halhed v. Marke, 3 Swanst. 444.

Decree setting aside an agreement as having been signed by the plaintiff under pressure or duress, reversed, the court being of opinion that the plaintiff, with a knowledge of all the facts, had voluntarily acted under the agreement, to the prejudice of the defendant. Ormes v. Beadel, 2 De G. F. & J. 333; 30 L. J., Ch. 1; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1103; 3 L. T. 344; 9 W. R. 25.

Lease.]—That which can be avoided by entry may be made good by confirmation. Boyle v. Lysaght, 1 Ridgw. P. C. 395.

Agent—Purchase by.]—An agent employed by a young man to sell a reversionary legacy shall not be purchaser at an under-value, and nothing shall amount to a confirmation until the vendor be fully apprised that he might be relieved against the original transaction. Crowe v. Ballard, 2 Cox, 253; 1 Ves. J. 215; 3 Bro. C. C. 117; 1 R. R. 22.

An agent employed to sell an estate, secretly buys it himself in the name of a trustee. He cannot call for an execution of the trust until the transaction is confirmed by the vendor. Woodhouse v. Meredith, 1 J. & W. 204.

2. By what Persons.

a. Infant.

Infant Defendant.]—Infancy of defendant no excuse for plaintiff's delay. Jones v. Turberville, 2 Ves. J. 11; 4 Bro. C. C. 115.

Bankruptcy.]—A petition to annul an adjudication in bankruptcy on the ground of the infancy of the bankrupt, which was not presented until after the time limited by the 233rd section of the Bankrupt Act, 1849 (12 & 13 Vict. c. 106), dismissed as out of time. West, In re, 3 De G. M. & G. 198; 22 L. J., Bk. 71; 1 W. R. 421.

Encroachment.]—An encroachment of a watercourse was made in the infancy of the ancestor, who acquiesced for twenty-one years after he became of age. The court would not afterwards notice his complaint. Guernsey (Lord) v. Rodbridges, Gilb. Eq. Rep. 3.

Executory Agreement.]—An infant cannot excuse the non-assertion of his right under an executory agreement made with his ancestor where the immediate performance of his part is essential to the interest of the other party. Griffin v. Griffin, 1 Sch. & Lef. 352; 9 R. R. 51.

Lease—Acceptance of Rent.]—Where a building lease was granted during the minority of infants, with a covenant that they, when of age, should confirm it, and the infants accepted rent for ten years after coming of age, decreed, that the lease should be established. Smith v. Low, 1 Atk. 489.

Mortgage by Infant.]—Where a party takes a lease of infant's lands, and the infant on coming of age mortgages the property to the lessee by deed referring to the lease, this is a confirmation of the lease. Story v. Johnson, 3 Y. & C. 586.

Laying out Money.]—Expenditure on an estate claimed with plaintiff's knowledge, but chiefly in his minority, held no defence. Scott v. Scott, 11 Jr. Eq. R. 487.

b. Married Woman.

Improper Investment.]—Quære, whether a married woman entitled to the interest of a fund to her separate use, without restraint upon anticipation, can be bound by acquiescence in an improper investment of the fund. Davies v. Hodgson, 27 L. J., Ch. 449; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 252; 6 W. R. 355.

General Rule.]—The inattention or laches of a married woman cannot hurt her right. Blandford v. Marlborough, 2 Atk. 545.

Settlement.]—On the marriage of a female infant, property in reversion was settled to her separate use for life, remainder to her children. Part of the property fell into possession during the life of the first husband, and the other part during the life of a second. She married again, her third husband having notice of the settlement:—Held, that the wife not having repudiated the settlement upon her first discoverture, must be considered as having adopted it, it being for her benefit to do so, and that it was binding on the husband who had notice of it. Ashton v. McDougall, 5 Beav. 56; 11 L. J., Ch. 344; 6 Jur. 447.

Discoverture.]—A promise during coverture does not bind a wife; but if repeated after the husband's death, it is a confirmation. Smith v. French, 2 Atk. 245.

Where husband and wife assign for value a share of a fund in which the wife had a vested interest in remainder expectant on the death of a tenant for life, and the wife and the tenant for life outlive the husband, the wife is entitled to the whole of the fund against such assignee. Honner v. Morton, 3 Russ. 65; 27 R. R. 15. S. P., Watson v. Dennis, 3 Russ. 90.

If the wife, after her husband's death, executes an assignment, which recites former assignments by the husband, and purports to be made subject to them, she does not thereby confirm them. Ib.

The wife does not acquiesce in those assignments, by forbearing to impeach them till the death of the tenant for life. Ib.

E., a single woman, transferred stock into the joint names of herself and trustees; and executed an indenture, which declared that the trustees should hold the property in trust, to pay the dividends to E. for her life, for her sole and separate use, independent of any husband; and after her death, as E. should by will, notwithstanding coverture appoint, and, in default, in trust for E. E. married, and by deed, reciting the settlement, and executed by her husband and herself, she assigned the dividends of the stock in trust, for the payment of an annuity granted by her husband :—Held, that joining the husband in the deed of assignment was confirmatory of the deed of settlement, and consequently the assignment by the wife was valid. Maher v. Hobbs, 2 Y. & J. 317 ; 6 L. J., Ex. Eq. 12.

c. Company.

Permitting Expenditure.]—Where a company stands by and permits works to be executed where its premises are situated, the effect, for acquiescence, will be the same as in the case of an individual. Laird v. Birkenhead Ry., Johns. 500 ; 29 L. J., Ch. 218 ; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 140 ; 1 L. T. 159 ; 8 W. R. 58.

Where a company has stood by and seen works performed, it will be held to have assented to them, as much as if the company had been an individual. Hill v. South Staffordshire Ry., 11 Jur. (N.S.) 192 ; 12 L. T. 63—L.JJ.

Consent in Writing.] — A board having statutory power to consent in writing to a particular act is not bound by tacit acquiescence. Kerr v. Preston (Corporation), 46 L. J., Ch. 409 ; 6 Ch. D. 463 ; 25 W. R. 264. And see cases infra, col. 1746.

3. Notice and Duty to Inquire.

Lease for Lives.]—The assignee of a lease for lives, which contained a covenant for renewal upon the dropping of any life, provided application were made within six months, omitted to apply for a renewal within six months :—Held, that he might have known the facts if he had used reasonable diligence, and acted with ordinary prudence. Harries v. Bryant, 4 Russ. 89 ; 28 R. R. 15.

Contents of Deed.]—Where D. was entitled to possession of lands under a deed of gift in his possession, but allowed C. to remain in possession :—Held, that as D. had been guilty of laches in not finding out the mistake earlier, he was entitled to an account only for six years before the filing of the bill, and an additional period during which he was abroad. Denys v. Shuckburgh, 4 Y. & C. 42 ; 5 Jur. 21.

Next of Kin — Distribution of Estate.]—Though the distribution of an intestate's estate under a decree among the next of kin does not conclude the rights of persons who may have an equal title, yet the court will not assist other next of kin who, with full notice of the proceedings, neglected to prosecute their claims. Sawyer v. Birchmore, 1 Keen, 825 ; 2 Myl. & Cr. 611 ; 6 L. J., Ch. 277.

Notice that Claim will be Resisted.]—Effect of notice that a claim will be resisted, in excluding an objection to relief, on the ground of laches. Morison v. Moat, 9 Hare, 266 ; 20 L. J., Ch. 513 ; 15 Jur. 787.

Sale by Agent—Account.]—The plaintiff consigned a ship to G., for sale, fixing a minimum price of $90,000. G. employed the defendant with the plaintiff's knowledge, and he bought the ship himself for $90,000, and resold it for $160,000. Four years after the plaintiff filed a bill for an account of the profits :—Held, that there had been no such laches on the part of the plaintiff as to disentitle him to relief. De Bussche v. Alt, 47 L. J., Ch. 381 ; 8 Ch. D. 286 ; 38 L. T. 370.

Disclaimer of Landlord's Title.]—The act of a tenant disclaiming his landlord's title shall not affect his landlord's title, if he have no knowledge of such act. Hovenden v. Annesley (Lord), 2 Sch. & Lef. 624 ; 9 R. R. 119.

But if the landlord, having notice of such disclaimer, does not proceed for the forfeiture, the Statute of Limitations will run against him. Ib.

Voluntary Deed.]—A person seeking to set aside a voluntary deed, on the ground of undue parental influence, must not be guilty of unreasonable delay. Turner v. Collins, 41 L. J., Ch. 558 ; L. R. 7 Ch. 329 ; 25 L. T. 779 ; 20 W. R. 305.

T., entitled to certain funds, was persuaded by his father to settle such funds on trusts. Fourteen years after T. filed a bill to have the deed rectified :—Held, that though in its inception the transaction was voidable as having been brought about by undue influence, the plaintiff had by delay forfeited his right to set aside the deed except as to part which had never been explained to him. Ib.

Lease — Representation.] — Where intended lessors, in executing an agreement, acted upon a representation by the lessee as to what had taken place between their own solicitor and him, and their attention was directed whether this representation was correct ; but they took no step to question it for three years :—Held, that the delay was strongly confirmatory of the fairness of the transaction. Martin v. Pycroft, 2 De G. M. & G. 785 ; 22 L. J., Ch. 94 ; 16 Jur. 1125 ; 1 W. R. 27, 58.

—— Specific Performance.]—Specific performance of agreement to grant lease refused, plaintiff having delayed to file his bill for more than two years since notice from defendant of his intent not to perform contract. Heapy v. Hill, 2 Sim. & S. 29.

Contract to lease mines not completed in time, and defendant gave notice to rescind unless the plaintiff complied with certain requisitions within fourteen days, and later on he stated his intention of abiding by that notice. A bill was filed five months after. A demurrer allowed, the notice having put the parties at arm's length the plaintiff had been guilty of unreasonable delay in taking proceedings. Huxham v. Llewellyn, 28 L. T. 577 ; 21 W. R. 570.

Breach of Trust.]—Breach of trust by not making proper investment in 1837. Bill filed in 1849 by plaintiffs, who had notice of the state of the investment :—Held, that they were barred by laches and lapse of time. Browne v. Cross, 14 Beav. 105.

Charter-party.]—A shipowner on the 20th of March chartered his ship to A. for a voyage to Hong Kong. The freight was payable "on the delivery of a certificate to the charterers, signed by the consignees," of the delivery of the cargo. On the 24th March the shipowners assigned the freight to C., who gave no notice to A. until November. It turned out that on the 23rd of March A. had sub-chartered the ship to B., whose agent at Hong Kong had paid the freight to the agent there of the shipowner :—Held, that A. was liable to C. for the freight, and that C.'s laches in giving notice had not deprived him of his rights. Young v. Lindsay, 27 Beav. 405.

4. What Acts Amount to.

a. Laches or Delay.

Judgment not satisfied.]—Upon a bill filed by a creditor before the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, to enforce a judgment of twenty-eight years' standing, the plaintiff gave evidence of the insolvency of his debtor during the greater part of that period:—Held, that such evidence would not avail against the fact of his not having sooner attempted to enforce the judgment. Grenfell v. Girdlestone, 2 Y. & C. 662; 7 L. J., Ex. Eq. 42; 1 Jur. 940.

Mines—Breaking Boundaries.]—The boundaries between two coal mines were settled by agreement in 1862, and in 1864 a release was executed, by which all previous wrongful acts were condoned and released on both sides. In 1863 the defendants broke into the plaintiffs' mine, but the plaintiffs were not aware of this when they executed the release with the defendants:—Held, that the wrongful acts committed in 1863 were not condoned by the release of 1864, the plaintiffs having no reason to suspect that the settlement made in 1862 had been broken. Ecclesiastical Commissioners v. N. E. Ry., 4 Ch. D. 845; 36 L. T. 174.

Held, also, that there were no laches attributable to the plaintiffs for not having discovered the damage prior to 1870. Ib.

Nuisance.]—Plaintiff and defendant were neighbours from 1832 till 1851, when new works of the defendant's were put up, and the plaintiff brought an action for damages in 1854 and on arbitration obtained damages and costs. In the same year the defendants put up larger works. The plaintiff thereupon filed his bill:—Held, that the plaintiff had not been guilty of laches. Broadbent v. Imperial Gas Co., 2 Jur. (N.S.) 1132.

Arrears of Rent.]—Neglect to enforce payment of rent deprives a lessor from recovering more than six years' arrears of rent; but, as to accruing payments, the right is constantly renewed, and therefore the doctrine of laches would not apply. Archbold v. Scully, 9 H. L. Cas. 360; 7 Jur. (N.S.), 1169; 5 L. T. 160.

—— Tenant for Life.]—Held, that the merely lying by during a tenancy for life, by persons who could not until its termination have received the money, and who, possibly, might not become entitled to the estate, did not constitute laches. Kirwan v. Kennedy, Ir. R. 3 Eq. 472.

Lease—Specific Performance.]—A. assigns his interest in lands to B., in consideration that B. shall make a lease back to A. of a portion of the lands, and in consideration also of a loan of 200*l.* by B. to A. B. covenants to execute the lease subject to the repayment of 200*l.* for which B. has a judgment; no lease actually made; but A. remains in possession of his portion; B. lends further sums to A., and obtains judgments, and then conveys the lands, and assigns the judgments to C. C. issues writs of fi. fa. on the judgments, and procures a sale of A.'s equitable interest, and on ejectment brought, A. is turned out of possession; A. files his bill for relief and execution of a lease, but from embarrassment in his circumstances does not further prosecute the suit. More than twenty years later the house of lords decreed specific performance. Moore v. Blake, 4 Dow, 230.

Mere Assertion of Rights.]—A continual claim without any active steps in support of it will not keep alive a right which would otherwise be barred by laches. Lehmann v. McArthur, L. R. 3 Ch. 496; 18 L. T. 806; 16 W. R. 877.

Held, that the continual assertion by the plaintiffs of their rights, without taking any steps to enforce them, had no effect in removing the bar arising from lapse of time. Clegg v. Edmondson, 8 De G. M. & G. 787; 26 L. J., Ch. 673; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 299.

—— Trust.]—If a person who claims a trust fund, and has served the trustees with notice, does not exercise due diligence in asserting his right before the court, the court will authorise the trustees to disregard the notice. Lonergan v. Stourton, 9 L. T. 196; 11 W. R. 984.

Patent—Infringements.]—The owners of a patent for wheels, having discovered that several companies were violating their patent, brought an action against one of such companies, but did not give notice to the other companies. The action was not decided until after the patent had expired. Thereupon the plaintiffs filed a bill for an account of profits, and an injunction against another of the companies, complaining of acts done nine years before:—Held, that the delay was not excused by the pendency of the action, but was fatal. Smith v. L. & S. W. Ry., 1 Kay, 408; 23 L. J., Ch. 562; 2 Eq. R. 428; 2 W. R. 310.

Practice—Injunction.]—Laches may be a defence to an application for an injunction by way of information as well as upon a bill. Effect of a protest in negativing laches. Att.-Gen. v. Sheffield Gas Consumers, 3 De G. M. & G. 304; 22 L. J., Ch. 811; 17 Jur. 677; 1 W. R. 185.

Creditor having been restrained from proceeding at law on account of decree obtained, allowed to prosecute suit, where proceeding on decree delayed for some years. Powell v. Wallworth, 2 Madd. 183.

Creditor—Security.]—A creditor having it in his power to obtain warrants for payment of an American loyalist's debt out of his estate there, is bound, on being referred to that property by the defendant, to make it available, as far as he can; but where the creditor is not informed of that property, no laches can be imputed to him. Peter v. Irving, 3 Bro. C. C. 54.

Trust to pay Debts.]—A trust of real estate for payment of debts does not remove from a creditor the consequences arising from his negligence or acquiescence. Harcourt v. White, 28 Beav. 303; 30 L. J., Ch. 681; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1087; 8 W. R. 715.

Under-Lease — Renewal.]—An under-lessee, entitled to a renewal upon payment of the proportion of his fines and expenses ought, if he complains of the amount of such proportion, to apply without delay to a court of equity to assess the sum which he ought to pay, and if instead, after notice from his mesne landlord, he should delay the payment, the objection that the sum demanded was unreasonable will not excuse his laches. Chesterfield v. Mann, 9 Hare, 206.

Agent sued by Principal.]—The character of the defendant as agent deprives him of the benefit of an objection that might be competent to another person, as the neglect of the plaintiff in not bringing forward the demand at an earlier period. Beaumont v. Boultbee, 5 Ves. 485.

Contract—Rescission.]—When a plaintiff to a bill for specific performance has allowed five months to elapse after the defendant has rescinded the contract before filing his bill, it is not a sufficient explanation to state that the defendant's solicitor was suffering from mental aberration. Huxham v. Llewellyn, 28 L. T. 577; 21 W. R. 766.

Poverty of Plaintiff.]—The objection of length of time is not answered by proof of distress or fraud. Courts of equity have noticed poverty in a plaintiff, anterior to the commencement of the suit. But there is no case in which the court has said that that which would be a bar to a rich man shall not be a bar to a poor man. Byrne v. Frere, 2 Moll. 157.

The court cannot attend to circumstances of distress or embarrassment as an excuse for laches, whereby the demand has been barred by lapse of time. Hovenden v. Annesley (Lord), 2 Sch. & Lef. 639; 9 R. R. 119.

Payment of Money by Mistake.]—The plaintiff, by mistake, paid tithe rent-charge in respect of lands not in his occupation. The plaintiff did not discover the mistake until the two years, limited by 6 & 7, Will. 4, c. 71, had expired, and the defendants had lost their remedy against the lands actually chargeable:—Held, that there was no duty cast on the plaintiff which made his delay in discovering the mistake laches on his part; and that he was entitled to recover back the amount paid. Durrant v. Ecclesiastical Commissioners, 50 L. J., Q. B. 30; 6 Q. B. D. 234; 44 L. T. 348; 29 W. R. 443; 45 J. P. 270.

Effect of, where Party not Prejudiced.]—Directors of a company made payments of dividends that had not been earned to 1878. In 1886 the company was wound up. In 1890 the liquidator brought an action against directors to recover the amounts improperly paid:—Held, that the creditors ought not to lose their rights on account of the liquidator's delay, since the defendants had not been prejudiced by it. Masonic Life Assurance Co. v. Sharpe, 61 L. J., Ch. 193; [1892] 1 Ch. 154; 65 L. T. 806; 40 W. R. 241—C. A.

b. Acquiescence.

i. Permitting Expenditure.

What Evidence Necessary.]—The relief in respect of expenditure, under an erroneous opinion of title, or an expectation of a larger interest, or that the enjoyment would not be disturbed, with the knowledge or permission of the other party, requires a case of bad faith clearly made out. Dann v. Spurrier, 7 Ves. 231; 6 R. R. 119.

Where acquiescence is relied on, it must be shown that the person acquiescing was aware of the matter in which he acquiesced, and of the effect of such acquiescence. Strange v. Fooks, 4 Giff. 408.

—— Fraud.]—The acquiescence which will deprive a man of his legal rights must amount to fraud. The following are necessary elements:—(1) the plaintiff must have made a mistake as to his legal rights; (2) he must have expended money or done some act on the faith of his mistaken belief; (3) the possessor of the legal right must know of the existence of his own right which is inconsistent with the right claimed by the plaintiff; (4) the defendant must know of the plaintiff's mistaken belief of his rights; (5) the defendant must have encouraged the plaintiff in the expenditure of money, either directly or by abstaining from asserting his legal rights. Willmott v. Barber, 49 L. J., Ch. 792; 15 Ch. D. 105; 43 L. T. 95; 28 W. R. 911.

Rights of Stranger.]—If owner stands by and suffers a stranger to build on his land without notice of title, stranger shall have the land, but there must be no title or colour of title in the stranger to build. Att.-Gen. v. Balliol College, 9 Mod. 411. See also 1 Anstr. 185; Gilb. Eq. R. 85.

Where a man, conusant of his right, suffers another to build on his ground without setting up a right till afterwards, the court will oblige the owner to permit the person building to enjoy it quietly. East India Co. v. Vincent, 2 Atk. 83; and see Kenney v. Brown, 3 Ridgw. 518.

Knowledge of Title.]—The equitable rule as to the effect of a person's lying by and allowing another to spend money on his property, does not apply where the money is expended with knowledge of the real estate of the title. Rennie v. Young, 2 De G. & J. 136; 27 L. J., Ch. 753.

During Minority.]—Expenditure on an estate claimed with plaintiff's knowledge, but chiefly in his minority:—Held, no defence. Scott v. Scott, 11 Ir. Eq. R. 487.

Making Canal — Compensation.] — An act authorised the making of a canal through lands of A., and upon payment of the compensation the land was to vest in the company. No arrangement was made in respect of compensation with A. The canal was made "with the full consent and approbation of and in accordance with the wishes of A.," whose name was mentioned in the act:—Held, in equity, that A., having sanctioned the formation of the canal, was not entitled to retake possession, but only to a fair compensation:—Held, secondly, that persons who had bought A.'s property, with notice as to the canal, were bound by the same equity:—Held, thirdly, that this court might determine the amount of compensation. Beaufort (Duke) v. Patrick, 17 Beav. 60; 1 Eq. R. 41; 22 L. J., Ch. 489; 17 Jur. 682; 1 W. R. 280.

Family Agreement.]—Specific performance decreed of parol agreement as to land, made as a family compromise, where there had been possession and improvements, and acquiescence near nineteen years. Stockley v. Stockley, 1 V. & B. 23; 12 R. R. 184. See also Stapleton v. Stapleton, 1 Atk. 2.

Agent and Principal.]—Where an agent had permitted his principal to expend money on an estate, which the agent afterwards claimed as his own, and to which his real representative established a legal title by ejectment, the court granted an injunction to restrain an action brought by the agent's representative for mesne profits. Cawdor (Lord) v. Lewis, 1 Y. & C. 427.

Right of Way.]—A company had constructed its line so as to leave the passage for a private road two intervals of nine feet three inches each. The interval required by the Railway Clauses Act was twelve feet. The plaintiff's right of way was not disputed; but he had allowed the railway works to proceed, and the damage was of small amount:—Held, that the court would not grant an injunction to restrain the infringement on the legal right. Wintle v. Bristol and South Wales Union Ry., 6 L. T. 20; 10 W. R. 210.

Tunnel—Condition as to Building.]—A company sold land over a tunnel to B., subject to the condition that he was to erect no buildings nor make any excavations, &c., but according to a specification approved in writing by the principal engineer. B. sent in plans for the approval of the principal engineer. The resident engineer never submitted them to the principal, but told B. verbally that he might proceed. B. proceeded with the works till the principal engineer saw them, and he at once condemned them as unsafe for the tunnel:—Held, first, that the approval of the company's resident engineer was not binding on the company; and, secondly, that B. having been allowed to continue his works from August to the 26th October, was not an acquiescence on the part of the company. Att.-Gen. v. Briggs, 1 Jur. (N.S.) 1084.

Private Road.]—A company made excavations for diverting the water of a stream, and in their work obstructed a private road. The plaintiffs, owning a mill, alleged that the diversion of the water was illegal, and that the company were interfering with the road without performing the conditions imposed by the act:—Held, that the plaintiffs must be held to have had notice of the intended works; and had by an acquiescence for eighteen months precluded themselves from asking for an injunction. Illingworth v. Manchester and Leeds Ry., 2 Railw. Cas. 187.

Person holding Shares as Nominee.]—To a scire facias against a shareholder in a company, on a judgment obtained against the company, a plea that he became transferee of the shares he held, as nominee of certain persons for their benefit, and not for his own, upon the representation of the plaintiff and others that he should incur no liability in respect of them; that he never was to derive or did derive any benefit from the shares or the company; that the plaintiff knew the circumstances under which he became transferee of the shares, and stood by and permitted him to become such, and was unjustly and inequitably, and contrary to that representation, and in fraud thereof, seeking to charge and make him responsible as a shareholder, is bad. Bill v. Richards, 2 H. & N. 311; 26 L. J., Ex. 409; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 520; 5 W. R. 650.

Light and Air.]—The plaintiff, on 28th March, allowed the defendant, a neighbour, to commence erecting a building, the plaintiff being under a mistake as to the spot where the building would be. The building was begun on 8th April, and on the 24th a complaint was made, and on 5th May a bill filed for an injunction and damages:—Held, that although there had been sufficient acquiescence to justify the court in refusing an injunction, there had not been such acquiescence as to justify the dismissal of the bill. Johnson v. Wyatt, 2 De G. J. & S. 18; 33 L. J., Ch. 394; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1333; 12 W. R. 234.

Where Remedy at Law.]—To an action for obstructing the plaintiff's lights and depriving him of support to his buildings, an equitable plea, that the grievances complained of were occasioned by his pulling down a house and erecting another in its place, which he did with the acquiescence and consent of the plaintiff, and on the faith of such acquiescence and consent he incurred expenses. Replication, that the plaintiff acquiesced and consented on the faith of false representations of the defendant, i.e., that the grievances complained of would not result from his works:—Held, that the plea and the replication were respectively good. Davies v. Marshall, 10 C. B. (N.S.) 697; 31 L. J., C. P. 61; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 1247; 4 L. T. 581; 9 W. R. 866. See Smith v. Hayes, Ir. R. 1 C. L. 333.

The court will not entertain a suit where a party has had ample opportunity of trying his right at law, and no action had been brought. Swaine v. G. N. Ry., 3 N. R. 109; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1196; 9 L. T. 571.

Where a party had lain by and allowed expenditure to be incurred, and a trade, which might be a nuisance, to be established, and carried on for a considerable period:—Held, that he was precluded by acquiescence from obtaining relief in equity. Ib.

—— Nuisance.]—To have a work, erected at great expense, removed by this court as a nuisance, the person complaining should have given notice not to proceed, otherwise the court will leave the complainant to law. Jones v. Royal Canal Co., 2 Moll. 319. And see Anon., 2 Eq. Ca. Abr. 522, infra, col. 1770.

—— Draining.]—Injunction against draining, with prejudice to a canal, before establishing a right at law, refused, upon laches of two years' permitting expenditure. Birmingham Canal Co. v. Lloyd, 18 Ves. 515; 11 R. R. 245.

Canal—Permission to use Water.]—Agreement that as long as plaintiffs continued customers of the defendant, who owned a canal, they should be allowed to use the superfluous water for works, of which they were occupiers under an agreement for a lease with the defendant. The use of the water was not essential to the plaintiffs' works:—Held, that such an understanding did not form the foundation of an equitable right. Secus, if the plaintiffs, with the knowledge of the defendant, had incurred expense in establishing a manufacture for which the use of the water was necessary. Bankart v. Tennant, 39 L. J., Ch. 809; L. R. 10 Eq. 141; 23 L. T. 137; 18 W. R. 639.

An act for making a canal provided that "it should be lawful for owners of lands to take water from the canal for the sole purpose of condensing the steam used in working any engine, but for no other purpose." The defendants were the owners of two mills, and were allowed by the defendants to lay down pipes for water to be used for other purposes than that mentioned in the act. After a lapse of several years:—Held, that the defendants were precluded by the acquiescence from disputing the right of the owners of the mill to obtain water for those purposes. Rochdale Canal Co. v. King, 22 L. J., Ch. 604; 17 Jur. 1001; 1 W. R. 278.

Building by Tenant.]—Remainderman lying by, and suffering the tenant to lay out money without giving him notice of his intention to impeach his title, a ground of relief against the remainderman. Shannon v. Bradstreet, 1 Sch. & Lef. 73.

If a man stands by and allows another to erect a building on his ground, and he afterwards agrees as to the rent to be paid for it, he cannot dispute the right of the builder to use the land. Mold v. Wheatcroft, 27 Beav. 510; 29 L. J., Ch. 11; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 2; 1 L. T. 236.

Where a landlord stands by and sees a tenant lay out money on the faith of a promised lease, this may raise an equity analogous to that which is raised when one stands by and sees his neighbour spending money on his land. Semble. Nunn v. Fabian, 35 L. J., Ch. 140; L. R. 1 Ch. 35: 11 Jur. (N.S.) 861; 13 L. T. 343.

Where a tenant under a void lease makes great improvements, with the knowledge and approbation of the landlord, he is entitled in equity to a valid lease. Semble. Hardcastle v. Shafto, 1 Anstr. 185.

A. made a lease to the plaintiff, who afterwards took a new lease for years, which was invalid, and expended 2,800*l.* in rebuilding. Defendant, the eldest son of A., during these improvements, told his father he had no right to make such a lease, but he never told the plaintiff, and plaintiff wrote to him to desire he would keep one of the mills in repair:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to possession as the son, knowing the imperfection of his father's lease, suffered the plaintiff to rebuild. Hanning v. Ferrers, Gilb. Eq. R. 85.

If a stranger builds upon the land of A., supposing it to be his own, and A. remains wilfully passive, equity will not allow him to profit by the mistake; but if the stranger knows that the land upon which he is building belongs to A., then A. may assert his legal rights, and take the benefit of the expenditure. And a tenant building on his landlord's land, in the absence of such special circumstances, acquires no right against him at the expiration of the tenancy. Ramsden v. Dyson, L. R. 1 H. L. 129; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 506; 14 W. R. 926.

If a tenant at will builds on the land in the belief that he thereby acquires a title to claim a lease, and the landlord allows him to build, knowing that he is acting in that belief, semble, that equity will interfere to compel the grant of a lease. Ib.

And see Rennie v. Young, supra, col. 1742.

The owner of land agreed with a corporation to take a lease of certain waste lands, to construct thereon a terrace walk, and the corporation passed resolutions accepting the proposal and providing for the stumping out of boundaries by a committee. The owner objected to the boundaries proposed, but took possession of such land as he considered necessary, and constructed the terrace:—Held, that he was entitled to a lease, the corporation being bound by its acquiescence. Crook v. Seaford Corporation, L. R. 6 Ch. 551; 25 L. T. 1; 19 W. R. 938.

Consent to Underletting.]—A. made a lease of lands, with a condition against sub-letting without the consent of A., under his hand and seal. The lessee made an agreement for a lease of a part of the lands, with the consent of A., by letter, not under seal. B. purchased A.'s reversion, subject to the agreement. C., the lessee's administratrix, applied to B. for permission to make a lease to E. B. encouraged C. to make the lease, stood by while a large sum was expended by E. on the lands, and witnessed the execution of the lease. B. did not know that the consent of A. was not valid in law:—Held, that the court had power to relieve the tenant. Burke v. Prior, 15 Ir. Ch. R. 106.

Company.]—Where a company has stood by and seen works performed, it will be held to have assented to them, as much as if it had been an individual. Hill v. South Staffordshire Ry., 11 Jur. (N.S.) 192; 12 L. T. 63—L.JJ.

Whether a corporation of governors would be bound by the acquiescence of some, permitting expenditure, &c., quære. Macher v. Foundling Hospital, 1 V. & B. 188.

The plaintiff entered into negotiations with a railway company for the construction of a tunnel at his own expense, and the directors expressed their assent to the project. The plaintiff with the acquiescence of the company, and the approval of their engineer, executed the necessary works, and the communication was used by the plaintiff for two years and a half; but no formal agreement was ever executed:—Held, that the company was bound by acquiescence, notwithstanding the want of a formal contract; and that the plaintiff had acquired a right of user which the company had no power to terminate. Laird v. Birkenhead Ry., 1 Johns. 500; 29 L. J., Ch. 218; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 140; 1 L. T. 159; 8 W. R. 58.

Partnership.]—A partnership at will in a mine held under a lease was determined by the managing partners giving notice of dissolution to the others. Subsequently a new lease was granted to the managing partners, who thenceforth carried on the concern at their own risk. The partners who were excluded never assented to these proceedings, but continually insisted on their right to a share in the benefits of the new lease; they took no legal proceedings to enforce their rights for nine years:—Held, that the plaintiffs, having, with the full knowledge of their rights, allowed the managing partners to carry on a mining concern so long without taking any steps to assert those rights, could not be permitted to assert them now. Clegg v. Edmondson, 8 De G. M. & G. 787; 26 L. J., Ch. 673; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 299.

Held, also, that the continual assertion by the plaintiffs of their rights, without taking any steps to enforce them, had no effect in removing the bar arising from lapse of time. Ib.

ii. Permitting the Settlement or Disposition of Property.

Jointure.]—A., on marriage with M., settled a jointure on her, with the approbation of B., his father, who witnessed the deed. A. died. Afterwards B. discovered that A. was only tenant for life, with remainder to himself in fee, and he recovered at law. Per curiam, it is plain that the father thought the son had the fee, and that he knew of the settlement; considering the near relation of father and son, the widow shall not be compelled to resort to the son's covenant, and make good the jointure out of his personal estate. Teasdale v. Teasdale, Sel. Ca. Ch. 59.

Absolute Conveyance—Defeasance.]—A. made an absolute conveyance of lands to B. and his heirs, in consideration of 1,500*l.*, but on the next day B. executed a defeasance, declaring that, if A. or his heirs should within sixteen years pay B. the 1,500*l.*, the conveyance should be void. B. entered, and, three years afterwards, made a settlement upon his marriage to which A. was privy, but took no notice of the defeasance. After B.'s death, A. set up the defeasance:—Held, that the intent of the conveyance to enable B. to obtain a marriage settlement was fraudulent, and a perpetual injunction was awarded against A., to stop proceedings under the defeasance. Webber v. Farmer, 4 Bro. P. C. 170.

Settlement.]—A. in consideration of marriage, and of 500*l.* portion which he is to have with his wife by settlement, empowers his wife to dispose of 200*l.* by her will; they live together, the wife gives the 200*l.* by her will. The husband, not admitted to say he had not 500*l.* with his wife, but shall pay the money. North v. Ansell, 2 P. Wms. 618.

A. by marriage articles, in consideration of his wife conveying her lands to him, covenants to settle certain lands of his own in jointure. Neither the wife nor her trustees executed the articles. After marriage the husband settles his lands and recites the settlement to be in performance of the articles, but never requires her to convey her lands. The wife is a party to this settlement. This settlement is a waiver by the husband of the proposed conveyance by the wife. Lucy v. Moore, 4 Bro. P. C. 343.

—— Strict Settlement Impossible.—Bill for a strict settlement after long acquiescence by plaintiff's ancestors, and when impossible to bar the remainder, dismissed. Parker v. Phillips, 1 Ves. sen. 530.

—— By Court.]—A settlement made under the court ought to provide for the children; but where that has been omitted, and the order acquiesced in for a long time, it will not be supplied. Johnson v. Johnson, 1 J. & W. 479.

—— Construction—Mistake.] — A court of equity will not direct payment made under a mistaken construction of doubtful clause in a settlement to be refunded after many years of acquiescence by all parties, and after the death of one of the authors of the settlement. Clifton v. Cockburn, 3 Myl. & K. 76.

Feme Covert—Copyholds.]—Feme covert without husband's joining, but in his presence, surrenders her copyhold to use of her will or appointment, and devises it. Quære, whether good. Taylor v. Phillips, 1 Ves. sen. 229.

—— Assignment by Husband.]—The wife does not acquiesce in assignments by forbearing to impeach till the death of the tenant for life. Honner v. Morton, 3 Russ. 65; 27 R. R. 15. S. P., Watson v. Dennis, 3 Russ. 90.

Release by Legatee.]—A release and conveyance by a legatee and devisee to the trustee and executor held confirmed by acquiescence for six years before, and many intermediate acts of recognition. De Montmorency v. Devereux, West, 64; 7 Cl. & F. 188; 2 Dr. & Wal. 410.

Imbecility of Settlor.]—A. entitled to real estate by voluntary conveyance settled it in strict settlement. After the decease of the settlor, his heir-at-law, who was also tenant for life under the settlement, conveyed all his interest in the lands upon trusts. Quære, can he afterwards insist that the voluntary settlement was void because A. was in a state of mental imbecility when he executed it. Roddy v. Williams, 3 Jo. & Lat. 1.

Covenant not to supply Water in District.]—The B. company, possessing springs of water, covenanted, upon selling to the A. company a portion of those springs, that they would not supply any part of the district which the A. company was authorised to supply by Act of Parliament. The B. company afterwards supplied lessees of their own in the district with water:—Held, that a delay of twelve years in making the complaint did not amount to acquiescence. Hartlepool Gas and Water Co. v. West Hartlepool Harbour and Ry., 12 L. T. 366.

Reference.]—A. having a claim on property which he knew was the subject of a reference between C. and D., suffered the award to be made without bringing forward his claim:—Held, that he was bound by the award. Govett v. Richmond, 7 Sim. 1.

Tithes—Payment by Mistake.]—If tithes claimed by vicar are supposed to be payable to rector, and he makes no claim, but stands by and allows the vicar to take them, he is bound as between him and vicar by the effect of such laches. Manby v. Lodge, 9 Price, 231.

Executor dealing with Assets.] — If an executor, in pursuance of directions contained in the will, carries on the testator's business, and in so doing contracts debts, the fact that he has carried on the business in his own name, and that the testator's assets employed in it are ostensibly the executor's own property, will not entitle a judgment creditor of the executor to take in execution the testator's assets. Lapse of time and enjoyment of the assets in a manner inconsistent with the trusts of the will, coupled with the consent of the beneficiaries, may, however, raise an inference of a gift of the assets by them to the executor, and entitle his judgment creditor to take them in execution. Ray v. Ray (G. Cooper, 264) distinguished. Morgan, In re, Pillgrem v. Pillgrem, 50 L. J., Ch. 834; 18 Ch. D. 93; 45 L. T. 183.

Mortgage.]—A voluntary deed, by which a father purported to convey his property to his son absolutely, but which did not carry into effect the whole arrangement between them, was set aside at the instance of the father after the son's death. Hughes v. Scanor, 18 W. R. 1122.

A mortgage effected by the son upon the property, the father, though in possession, allowing the son to act as if absolute owner, upheld. Ib.

Contract — Concealment.] — A charter-party made one-half of the freight at a certain sum per ton payable by the merchant to the owner of the ship in monthly instalments. There was also a memorandum of agreement providing that the parties should be liable for the expenses and interested in the profits in equal moieties. The shipowner deposited the charter-party with his bankers as security for his account and the merchant paid the instalments as they became due. The shipowner became bankrupt:—Held, that the merchant having enabled the shipowner, by means of the charter-party, to hold himself out as entitled to the whole freight, and having neglected to undeceive the bankers as soon as he had found that they had taken a security upon such apparent title, he was precluded from afterwards asserting any equity inconsistent with that title. Mangles v. Dixon, 1 Mac. & G. 437; 1 Hall & Tw. 542; 19 L. J., Ch. 240.

Tenant by the Curtesy.]—A father being advised that his daughter was entitled in fee to parts of freehold estates, subject only to a question whether he was not entitled to the rents thereof for life, as tenant by the curtesy, instituted a suit, to which he was not a party, but in which he acted as next friend of his infant daughter, and obtained a decree, inconsistent with any title in himself as tenant by the curtesy, and the father, still acting as next friend in the suit, obtained an order approving of a deed containing a conveyance of the estates to the daughter in fee:—Held, that the proceedings and conduct of the plaintiff from the commencement of the suit were tantamount to a waiver, as against his daughter and her husband, of his right to curtesy out of the estates in question. Stone v. Godfrey, 5 De G. M. & G. 76; 2 Eq. 866; 23 L. J., Ch. 769; 18 Jur. 524.

Trustees—Transfer of Securities to Executors of Cestui que trust.—Sub mortgages made of leaseholds, the mortgagees, who were trustees, relying solely upon a valuation and report, which purported on the face of it to have been made at the request of the borrower, and which founded the supposed value of the houses upon a statement of prospective rents, none of the houses being let, nor were any deductions made for insurance or repairs. The sub-mortgages were transferred by the trustees to the executors of the deceased cestui que trust under the settlement. The evidence showed that the executors, when accepting the transfers, had no information of the circumstances under which the investments had originally been made:—Held that the executors, by accepting the transfers, must not be taken to have acquiesced in or adopted the securities. Smethurst v. Hastings, 55 L. J., Ch. 173; 30 Ch. D. 490; 52 L. T. 567; 33 W. R. 496.

c. Confirmation.

And see supra 1. d.

Advance by Father to Son.]—A father, having advanced a child in his infancy, upon his coming of age takes a bond from him to a greater amount than the sums advanced. The bond to be set aside altogether. Loose expressions in a letter from the son held not to be a confirmation. Carpenter v. Heriot, 1 Eden, 338.

Deed of Gift.]—In a suit to impeach a deed of gift to an agent, it was held that though it was voidable in its origin, yet the subsequent acts of the party impeaching it, assisted by his legal advisers, made it binding on him. De Montmorency v. Devereux, 7 Cl. & F. 188; West, 64; 2 Dr. & Wal. 410.

Power of Attorney.]—Where a merchant gave a power of attorney, and the attorney deposited deeds with an insurance company to secure 12,000*l.*, though the power of attorney was not sufficient, the merchant wrote to the company requesting the loan of 6,000*l.* "to be secured on his Essex property, which you now hold, in addition to the 12,000*l.* already advanced," and professing his readiness to execute the mortgage deed:—Held, that this was a confirmation of the security. Manning v. Bury, Tam. 147.

Sale of Legacy.]—A., having 500*l.* given him, in case he should survive the testator's wife, sells it for 100*l.* to be paid by 5*l.* per annum, but that if the testator's wife should die before A., the rest of the money to be paid within a year next. A. does survive the testator's wife, and knowing the legacy was due, confirms the bargain; he shall be bound thereby. Cole v. Gibbons, 3 P. Wms. 290.

Perpetual Annuity.]—A., by will, gave an annuity (which he directed W. to pay) to B. for life, with power to her to dispose of same by writing. B., by will, devised the same to her sons. W., by will, "ratified and confirmed the annuity so given to B., and by her bequeathed to her sons":—Held, that the annuity was a perpetual one, and not merely for the life of B. and her children. Burke v. Lambert, 2 Dr. & Wal. 608.

Lease—Intoxication.]—Lease set aside with costs, as obtained by the contrived and habitual intoxication of the lessor, immediately on coming of age, at a very inadequate rent; and acts of confirmation held not sufficient. Say v. Barwick, 1 V. & B. 195.

—— Acceptance of Rent.]—Devisees in trust, having the legal estate with a power of leasing in possession, until the cestuis que trustent attained twenty-one; leases not conformable to the power void in equity, and not confirmed by acceptance of rent. Bowes v. East London Waterworks Co., Jacob, 324; 23 R. R. 84.

A lease was made by A., the heir-at-law, who had no power of leasing:—Held, void, and not confirmed by A. accepting rent. Robson v. Flight, 34 L. J., Ch. 226; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 147; 11 L. T. 725; 13 W. R. 393.

Devise by Alien—Naturalisation.]—Alien devisee, in trust to sell, joins in conveyance, and afterwards obtains an act of naturalisation. This act does not operate to confirm the title of the purchaser under a conveyance made previously. Fish v. Klein, 2 Mer. 431.

Solicitor—Fraud.]—A., a solicitor, was entrusted by a client with money to be lent on mortgage. He appropriated the money to his own use, and afterwards being pressed by B. his client, obtained from another client, C., fraudulently, and without consideration, mortgages of equitable estates belonging to C. which he handed over to B. A. became bankrupt, and nearly three years afterwards C. discovered, for the first time, the nature of the transaction between A. and B.:—Held, that his claim had not been barred by acquiescence or confirmation whilst he was ignorant of the facts constituting his equity. Wall v. Cockerell, 1 N. R. 486; 8 L. T. 1; 11 W. R. 442.

5. Particular Cases.

a. Objections to Jurisdiction.

No Jurisdiction.]—No appearance or answer will give a jurisdiction to a limited court. Green v. Rutherforth, 1 Ves. sen. 471. Penn v. Baltimore, 1 Ves. sen. 446.

A total want of jurisdiction cannot be cured by the assent of parties. Jones v. Owen, 5 D. & L. 669; 18 L. J., Q. B. 8; 13 Jur. 261. S. P., Foster v. Underwood, 47 L. J., Ex. 30; 3 Ex. D. 3; 37 L. T. 389; 26 W. R. 94; Buse v. Roper, 41 L. T. 457; Wellesley v. Withers, 4 El. & Bl. 759; 3 C. L. R. 1187; 24 L. J., Q. B. 134; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 134.

Sheriff—3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42.]—Where in an action for damages the sum indorsed on the writ was 8*l.* 18*s.*, and the jury returned a verdict for 3*l.* 14*s.* 2*d.*:—Held, the sheriff had no jurisdiction under 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42 (Writ of Trial Act), s. 17, to try this cause, and that the objection was not too late, although an assent to try before the sheriff had been given by both parties. Lawrence v. Wilcock, 11 A. & E. 941; 3 P. & D. 536; 8 D. P. C. 681; 8 L. J., Q. B. 284.

Prohibition—Suit by the Crown.]—Prohibition lies not to an inferior court after the defendant has pleaded there, for by pleading the defendant submits to the jurisdiction. But at the suit of the king prohibition lies, though the defendant has pleaded. Anon., 1 Vern. 301.

Filing Cross Bill.]—Filing a cross bill prevents any objection to the jurisdiction. Burgess v. Wheate, 1 Eden, 190; 1 W. Bl. 121.

Ecclesiastical Court.]—If, in an ecclesiastical court, a party is cited as resident within the jurisdiction, and appears and pleads without objection, he cannot afterwards put that fact in issue. Chichester v. Donegal, 6 Madd. 275.

Filing Affidavit—Bankruptcy.]—Where there was a contest as to priority between the solicitor of a bankrupt and the equitable mortgagee by deposit of title deeds, on a petition by the solicitor:—Held, that there was no jurisdiction in bankruptcy, to determine the priority of lien; and that the mortgagee was not precluded from objecting to the jurisdiction by filing affidavits as to the merits. Allison, Ex parte, 1 Glyn & J. 210.

A creditor, resting upon a common law lien, without proving under the commission, previously to the Bankruptcy Court Act, appeared in opposition to a petition before the vice-chancellor, who ordered that the matter should be referred to the commissioners, to ascertain the rights of the several parties. The creditor attended the inquiry before the commissioners, but did not draw up the order of the vice-chancellor:—Held, that this did not bring him within the jurisdiction of the court:—Held, also, that filing an affidavit is not a waiver of any objection to the jurisdiction. Reid, Ex parte, Mills, In re, 1 Deac. & C. 250.

—— Cross Examination on.]—Objection by defendant to a summons to set aside a compromise. After this the plaintiff filed his affidavits; the defendant then filed his affidavits and cross-examined the plaintiff's witnesses:—Held, that the defendant had not waived the objection. Emeris v. Woodward, 59 L. J., Ch. 230; 43 Ch. D. 185; 61 L. T. 666; 38 W. R. 346. See also Moore v. Gamgee, 59 L. J., Q. B. 505; 25 Q. B. D. 244; 38 W. R. 669.

Foreign Contract.]—Company formed in England to work an American mine. P. came over to this country to superintend the English company, but B. remained throughout in America. A suit was instituted here to restrain P. from selling certain shares of the English company, for an account, and for other relief. P. did not object to the jurisdiction. An order was made in the suit to serve process upon B. in America, which was done:—Held, that as it did not appear that P. was B.'s agent, his not objecting to the jurisdiction did not operate as a waiver by B. of any objection which he (B.) might have to it. Davis v. Park, 42 L. J., Ch. 673; 28 L. T. 295; 21 W. R. 301.

Irregularity—Service of Motion—Attachment.]—There must be a personal service of a notice of motion for committal, and the appearance of the contemnor upon the hearing of the motion to commit in order to take an objection to an irregularity in the service of the notice of motion does not operate as a waiver of the irregularity, since the liberty of the subject is in question. Mander v. Falcke, 61 L. J., Ch. 3; [1891] 3 Ch. 488; 64 L. T. 791; 40 W. R. 31.

Mandamus not Injunction the proper Remedy.]—Bill filed in 1863 for an injunction to restrain a local board from polluting a brook. An answer put in and an interlocutory injunction granted. On the trial of the action in 1890, the objection was taken that the court had no jurisdiction; that the only remedy was by mandamus:—Held, that the defendants ought not to be allowed to raise that objection now; and that the case must be dealt with as if the defendants had waived any objection on this ground. Warwick and Birmingham Canal v. Burman, 63 L. T. 670.

Appeal—Grounds for.]—Before sessions were held appellants gave notice to the clerk of the justices that objection would be made "if any justices who were rated in Yarmouth heard the appeals." At the hearing this objection was made, and it was overruled:—Held, that the appellants were not precluded from contending, in support of the rule for a certiorari, that the chairman was disqualified by reason of his being himself a litigant; although this latter objection was not specifically mentioned in the notice, or made before the justices. Reg. v. Great Yarmouth JJ., 51 L. J., M. C. 39; 8 Q. B. D. 525; 30 W. R. 460.

b. Delay in Prosecuting Suit.

Neglect of Solicitor.]—In a cause which has been much delayed, the court will not, at the expense of further delay, relieve the plaintiff from the consequences of the gross neglect of his solicitor. Turner v. Turner, 1 Swanst. 156.

Rights at Commencement of Suit.]—Delay, however great, in the progress of a suit cannot deprive the plaintiff of rights which existed at the time of its commencement. Foster v. M'Mahon, 11 Ir. Eq. R. 287.

Interest.]—When a suit has been instituted for the purpose of raising a sum of money bearing interest, the court has no jurisdiction to withhold from the plaintiff the interest which accrued after filing the bill, on the ground of laches in the prosecution of the suit, however gross. Reilly v. Fitzgerald, 1 Dr. 122; 6 Ir. Eq. R. 335.

Where Possession Claimed.]—Where the court summarily interferes against the legal possession, it has a right to expect a plaintiff to proceed with the most complete and honest diligence to obtain a decree. Delay in his proceedings constitutes an objection to the proposed interference. Owen v. Homan, 4 H. L. Cas. 997; 17 Jur. 861.

Taxing Bill—Bankruptcy.]—A fiat was sued out on the 7th June by an attorney against his debtor, for his bill of costs, and the bankrupt was shortly afterwards discharged, having inserted the amount of the attorney's bill in his schedule. The bankrupt passes his last examination; and on the 4th December petitions for an order to tax the attorney's bill, with a view of superseding the fiat:—Held, that the bankrupt could not, after lying by so long, and after his previous admission of the debt, apply for such an order. Gingell, Ex parte, 2 Deac. & C. 546; 2 L. J., Bk. 22.

Issue to try Bankruptcy.]—After bankrupt has surrendered and acquiesced a year and a half since the taking out the commission, an issue at law will not be directed to try the bankruptcy. Mitt, Ex parte, 1 Atk. 102.

Administration—Trust.]—W., as administrator with the will annexed, was entitled to a mortgage of a colliery, W., C. W., and N. being entitled in equal shares to the mortgage money. W. was also receiver of the colliery and other estates held under the same title, in a suit in which the title of the mortgagor was disputed, and to which W. was a party. This suit was compromised in 1847. In February, 1853, W. entered into an agreement with Y. for the purchase from him of the colliery. In June, 1853, C. W. filed a bill to have it declared that W. had made the purchase of February, 1853, as trustee. In July, 1853, W. answered C. W.'s bill. In February, 1855, C. W. allowed his bill to be dismissed for want of prosecution. C. W., in 1857, filed a second bill, to have it established that the purchase of 1853 was made by W. as a trustee:—Held, that C. W. had, by his conduct, disentitled himself to the relief sought. Whalley v. Whalley, 2 De G. F. & J. 310.

Pleading.]—The waiver in the first instance of giving in an allegation on the common condidit:—Held, not to operate as a renunciation altogether of the right. Hitchings v. Wood, 2 Moore, 355.

Presumption after Judgment.]—After a judgment in ejectment for non-payment of rent, everything, after an acquiescence for seventeen years, will be presumed to have been regularly done. Blennerhassett v. Day, 2 Ball & B. 124.

c. Proceedings before Arbitrators.

Carrying out Award.]—If the terms of an agreement are to be ascertained by an award, being so ascertained it shall be specifically performed, unless there has been acquiescence. Blundell v. Brettarch, 17 Ves. 241.

Objection to Arbitrator.]—Objection to appointment of arbitrator waived by attending him. Harcourt v. Ramsbottom, 1 J. & W. 511.

—— Agent of one Party.]—A. having acted as agent for a purchaser of land, was afterwards appointed arbitrator on behalf of the purchaser, and the vendor appointed an arbitrator to act with him in settling the price to be paid:—Held, that the vendor had waived any objection to the purchaser's arbitrator. Elliot and South Devon Ry., In re, 2 De G. & Sm. 17; 12 Jur. 445.

—— Umpire.]—Y., the claimant's arbitrator, selected W. as umpire. The parties went before the umpire on 11th October. On 3rd November W. gave evidence on behalf of the respondents with respect to the value of other property in the neighbourhood, on claims against the respondents. The award was made on 22nd November, and on 20th December the claimant objected to W. as not being a disinterested person:—Held, that the claimant had sufficient knowledge of the position of W. before the award was made, and having given no notice he must be taken to have consented to W. acting as umpire. Clout and Metropolitan and District Ry., In re, 46 L. T. 141.

Setting aside Award.]—After a submission of all matters in difference, and an award made, a release given, and acquiescence of nine years, the award shall not be set aside upon a suggestion that the umpire had particular matters only under his consideration. Jones v. Bennett, 1 Bro. P. C. 528.

Owner Lying by.]—A. having a claim on property which he knew was subject to a reference between C. and D., suffered the award to be made without bringing forward his claim:—Held, that he was bound by the award. Govett v. Richmond, 7 Sim. 1.

One Party Absent.]—The parties to an arbitration met on the business, and one of the parties was present only part of the time. On the following day the party had an interview alone with the arbitrator on the business of the award. After this the arbitrator made his award. The court refused to set aside the award, holding that, on the evidence, the party absent at the interview must be taken to have acquiesced in it. Hamilton v. Bankin, 19 L. J., Ch. 307; 15 Jur. 70.

Umpire Communicating with Party.]—Pending a reference, the umpire held a communication with the agents of one of the parties; this fact being known to all the parties at the time, and the award having been made:—Held, that it was too late for either party to object on the ground of such communication. Mills v. Bowyers Society, 3 K. & J. 66.

Valuation—Acceptance "Under Protest."]—A plaintiff disputed an award of valuers, on the ground that it was made upon a wrong principle. On settlement he took the sum awarded, and signed a receipt, writing, "under protest," at the top. He waited nine months:—Held, that he was precluded by delay and what amounted to acquiescence from disputing the valuation. Parrot v. Shellard, 16 W. R. 928.

Award out of Time.]—Award enforced, although made after the prescribed time, where both parties, without objection, allowed the arbitrators to proceed after that time. Hawkesworth v. Brammall, 5 Myl. & Cr. 281.

Where an award was not made within the specified time, but one of the parties, not knowing that fact, takes it up and pays the charge for it, his doing so will not amount to a waiver of the condition as to time. Darnley (Earl) v. L. C. & D. Ry., 36 L. J., Ch. 404; L. R. 2 H. L. 43; 16 L. T. 217; 15 W. R. 817.

Submission to Arbitration.]—In a bankruptcy matter a submission to arbitration was made without the leave of the court:—Held, that a creditor having acted under the submission, was precluded from objecting to its informality, and was bound by the award. Wyld, Ex parte and In re, 30 L. J., Bk. 10; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 294; 3 L. T. 794; 9 W. R. 421—L.JJ.

Partners.]—An action against the managing partner of a colliery, for trespass and damages by the adjoining owner, was referred to arbitration. The co-partners had no knowledge of the action until after the reference had been agreed to. They attended the reference, and did not object. The arbitrator assessed the damages at 6,000*l.*:—Held, that the co-partners had acquiesced in the arbitration, and were bound by the award. Thomas v. Atherton, 48 L. J., Ch. 370; 10 Ch. D. 185; 40 L. T. 77.

Assignees of Bankrupt.]—If the assignees of a bankrupt attend meetings under a reference to which the bankrupt was a party, and make no objection, they will be bound by the award. Dod v. Herring, 1 Russ. & M. 153.

Arbitrators Exceeding their Authority—Protest.]—If a party to a reference objects that the arbitrators are considering a matter not referred to them, and protests against it, and the party, still under protest, continues to attend and cross-examines the witnesses, he does not thereby waive his objection, nor is he estopped from saying that the arbitrators have exceeded their authority. Davies v. Price, 34 L. J., Q. B. 8; 11 L. T. 205; 12 W. R. 1003—Ex. Ch. S. P., Ringland v. Lowndes, 17 C. B. (N.S.) 514; 33 L. J., C. P. 337; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 850; 12 W. R. 1010—Ex. Ch.

Specific Performance.]—On an award relating to patent matters the arbitrator directed that neither of the parties should grant any licence of or work any of the patents, save under a licence from the trustees to be appointed under the award, which required the parties to nominate trustees within fourteen days, and to signify their election to take licences within two calendar months from the date of the award. The submission was made a rule of a common law court. In a suit for a specific performance of the award:—Held, that although one party had nominated trustees and signified an election to take licences, there had not been such an acquiescence in the award as to justify the court in enforcing a specific performance of it against him on that ground. Nichells v. Hancock, 7 De G. M. & G. 300; 3 Eq. R. 689.

d. Matters of Contract and Agreement.

Negotiations to Vary.]—Treaty and negotiations for a variation of the terms of a contract will not amount to a waiver, unless the circumstances show that it was the intention of the parties that there should be an absolute abandonment and dissolution of the contract. Robinson v. Page, 3 Russ. 114; 27 R. R. 26.

When First Impeached.]—Where a party rests satisfied with an agreement, and for some time treats it as fair, it is most material to ascertain the time he first impeaches it; for although he may be entitled to relief, by delay he may lose it. Morony v. O'Dea, 1 Ball & B. 118.

After Action brought on the Contract.]—A. and B. entered into a contract, and, a dispute having arisen, B. commenced an action in respect of a portion of the contract. A. filed a bill for a specific performance:—Held that B. could not, after having commenced an action on the contract, set up in equity the defence of an alleged previous waiver of it. A valid contract cannot be waived unless both parties assent, at the same time, to the proposal to put an end to it. Whittaker v. Fox, 13 L. T. 588; 14 W. R. 192.

What Evidence Necessary.]—The waiver of a contract is itself a contract, and must be acquiesced in by both parties, and, when relied on against a tenant, must be established by clear and unequivocal evidence. Carolan v. Brabazon, 3 Jo. & Lat. 200.

Where A. wrote to C. stating that he would lease certain lands to C. for a stated term at a named rent and A. for some time received the rent named, but refused to execute a lease, A. was decreed to execute a lease on the terms mentioned and to pay costs. Ib.

A waiver of a stipulation in an agreement must, to be effectual, be made intentionally, and with knowledge of the circumstances. Darnley (Earl) v. L. C. & D. Ry., 36 L. J., Ch. 404; L. R. 2 H. L. 43; 16 L. T. 217; 15 W. R. 817.

Where a written agreement exists, and one of the parties sets up an arrangement of a different nature, alleging conduct on the other side amounting to a substitution of this arrangemeut for the written agreement, he must clearly show not merely his own understanding as to the new terms of agreement, but that the other party had the same understanding. Ib.

Foreign Contract.]—A. and B. were entitled to real estate in Chili. A., who was residing there, wrote to B. in this country, offering to purchase his interest in the property. B. replied in terms which would warrant A. in concluding that he had accepted the offer. Nothing further was done during the period of thirteen years:—Held, that B. was barred by lapse of time from disputing the existence of the contract. Cood v. Cood, 33 Beav. 314; 3 N. R. 275; 33 L. J., Ch. 273; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1335.

Parol Waiver.]—Though a parol waiver of a written contract amounting to a complete abandonment, and clearly proved, would bar a specific performance, or even parol variations so acted upon that the original agreement could no longer be enforced without injury to one party, variations verbally agreed upon are not sufficient to prevent the execution of a written agreement, the situation of the parties remaining the same. Price v. Dyer, 17 Ves. 356; 11 R. R. 102.

A written agreement can only be waived by written waiver, it seems; but strong proof of parol waiver would at least be required. Buckhouse v. Crossby, 2 Eq. Ca. Abr. 33. But see Inge v. Lippingwell, Dick. 469.

—— Agreement Relating to Land.]—Parol waiver of a date fixed by a written agreement to perform a contract relating to land:—Held, void, being in contravention of the Statute of Frauds. Stowell v. Robinson, 3 Bing. (N.C.) 928; 5 Scott, 196; 6 L. J., C. P. 326. And see Harvey v. Grabham, 5 A. & E. 61; 6 N. & M. 154; 5 L. J., K. B. 235.

Statutory Power to Consent in Writing.]—A board having statutory power to consent in writing to a particular act is not bound by tacit acquiescence. Kerr v. Preston Corporation, 46 L. J., Ch. 409; 6 Ch. D. 463; 25 W. R. 264.

Specific Performance — Possession.]—Vendor being in possession for fifty years, and purchaser having done acts inconsistent with his being the owner, specific performance of agreement to sell refused, as amounting to waiver. Rosse (Earl) v. Sterling, 4 Dow, 442.

If the plaintiff in a suit for specific performance has delayed to enforce the agreement, acquiescence in a breach of the agreement will not be imputed to the defendant by reason of a similar delay on his part in repudiating it, though accompanied by possession. Lamare v. Dixon, 43 L. J., Ch. 203; L. R. 6 H. L. 414; 22 W. R. 49.

The fixed rule of equity that specific performance of an agreement for a lease will not be granted after a long lapse of time will not be relaxed merely on account of possession and payment of rent during such time. Powis v. Dynevor (Lord), 35 L. T. 940.

—— Rescission.]—Notice to rescind a contract in September unless plaintiff complied with requisitions within fourteen days, and in October notice of intention to abide by that decision. Bill for specific performance filed next April. A demurrer allowed on the ground that, the notice having put the parties at arm's length, the plaintiff had been guilty of unreasonable delay. Huxham v. Llewellyn, 28 L. T. 577; 21 W. R. 570.

When a plaintiff to a bill for specific performance has allowed five months to elapse after the defendant has rescinded before filing his bill, it is not sufficient explanation to state that the defendant's solicitor was suffering from mental alienation. Ib.

Delay, after the parties were at arm's length, of three calendar months and thirteen days, in filing a bill for specific performance of a contract for the sale and purchase of a colliery:—Held, a bar to relief. Glasbrook v. Richardson, 23 W. R. 51.

Time of the Essence.]—If it is of the essence of the contract that an act should be completed by a fixed date, an extension of the time only substitutes the extended time for the original time. Barclay v. Messenger, 43 L. J., Ch. 449; 30 L. T. 351; 22 W. R. 522.

Agreement to Inclose.—The lord of the manor entered into an agreement with his copyhold tenants for inclosing part of a common and the tenants consented to the inclosure, and released their right of common in the ground; and the lord released each particular tenant from all quit-rent and other services. The inclosure was prevented from taking effect, and the tenants continued to enjoy their right of common, pay their quit-rents, and do suit and service as before:—Held, that this agreement was mutually waived. Lanesborough v. Ockshott, 1 Bro. P. C. 151.

Purchase Money—Interest.]—Effect of acquiescence by a railway company as to the payment of interest on purchase-money, pending the investigation of title. Hardwicke (Earl), Ex parte, 1 De G. M. & G. 297.

Share of Profits.]—Master of vessel agrees on behalf of owners that each of crew shall have a specific share of profits of voyage; before return of vessel owner sells a quarter of cargo. The custom of trade is for cooper to estimate quantity of oil; this was done, and plaintiff settled accordingly:—Held, that owners had no right to sell part of cargo; but the plaintiff having settled, could not then come for relief to equity. Cockle v. Whiting, Tam. 55.

Person Nominated for Neglected Contract.]—By agreement between the post office and persons supplying horses for the mails, the postmaster-general cannot exercise the power of nominating a new party to perform neglected duty, without notice to all the parties to the agreement, who have the option of performing the neglected duty themselves. On an action for an account:—Held, although no notice had been given by the postmaster-general, the defendant knew of the nomination of the plaintiff, and that his conduct was equivalent to a waiver of the option. Lovegrove v. Nelson, 3 Myl. & K. 1.

Exported Goods.]—Bill alleging fraud as to quantity and quality of goods sold not discovered till they were exported to America, and that they were in consequence sold at a loss, and that plaintiff, being threatened with action, paid the original price, under protest.—Demurrer allowed. Kemp v. Pryor, 7 Ves. 237.

Alternative Bond.]—A. agreed to lend B. 600*l.* navy stock; he sold the stock for 522*l.*, which was paid to B.; a bond was drawn to repay "the sum of 522*l.* (being the produce of 600*l.* navy 5 per cents., or such other sum as would replace the stock) with interest." B., on discharging the bond, refused to replace stock; A. received the money and gave up the bond:—Held, that, after having received the money, he could not come into equity for relief. Barnham v. Munn, Tam. 86.

Legacy.]—A. having 500*l.* given him in case he should survive the testator's wife, sells it for 100*l.*, to be paid by 5*l.* per annum; but if the testator's wife should die before A., and the legacy becomes due, the rest of the money to be paid within a year. A. does survive the testator's wife, and knows the legacy was to become due to him, and confirms the bargain; he shall be bound thereby. Cole v. Gibbons, 3 P. Wms. 290.

Sale by One of Two Owners.]—Discussion of the principles on which a binding assent to a contract is to be presumed from silence, acquiescence, or circumstances of conduct. Bigg v. Strong, 3 Sm. & G. 592. Affirmed 4 Jur. (N.S.) 983; 6 W. R. 536.

There being two proprietors of an estate, where one, without any express authority from the other, agrees to sell the whole, and without express authority, signs a contract for sale on behalf of both, and the other never expressly assents or signs the contract; but does not, within a reasonable time, disavow it or express absolute dissent, a presumption of his assent arises; and unless the presumption is rebutted, he will be held bound. So if he knowingly enjoys a benefit from the contract to which, but for the contract, he would not be entitled. Ib.

Administrator Buying Shares.]—A. was the administrator of an estate, to one-third of which C. and D. were entitled. A. wrote to B. and C., offering to pay each of them 1,000*l.*, his share. B. accepted the offer, and C. wrote to say that whatever B. determined "would meet with his approbation." A. and B. acted on the contract as complete, and C. never repudiated it. Seventeen years afterwards, C. insisted that there was no contract binding on him:—Held, that C. had acquiesced, and was bound by the contract. Cood v. Cood, 33 Beav. 314; 3 N. R. 275; 33 L. J., Ch. 273; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1335.

Contract Enforced though no Agreement under Seal.]—A corporation passed a resolution agreeing to let land to C., to be stumped out by a committee at his expense. The corporation did not stump out the land, and C. afterwards stumped out the land himself, took possession of it, erected a terrace, and paid rent:—Held, that he was entitled to a decree for specific performance, the corporation having acquiesced in all that he had done. Crook v. Seaford Corporation, L. R. 6 Ch. 551; 25 L. T. 1; 19 W. R. 938.

Partners — Shares.]—At a meeting of the partners in a cost-book mine, a call was made upon each of the six shares in the mine. Two of the partners did not pay this call, and were in arrear for other calls. At subsequent meetings the shares of these partners were declared to be forfeited. These two partners took no steps as to the mine for more than six years:—Held, that the plaintiffs could not, after lying by for more than six years, successfully assert their claim to be partners. Clarke v. Hart (supra, col. 1715) distinguished. Rule v. Jewell, 18 Ch. D. 660; 29 W. R. 755.

Company — Memorandum of Association — Special Resolutions—Ratification.]—The memorandum of association of a company stated that certain shares were to be preference as to dividend. The directors applied the profits in substantial accordance with the provisions in the articles of association till 1872, when the company passed special resolutions which altered the priorities and payments of the net revenue as between the preference and ordinary shareholders, and they were acted upon without any objection being raised till 1883, when the company passed a special resolution by which the original appropriation of the revenue was restored:—Held, that even if the resolutions of 1872 would be valid if ratified by every member of the company, there was no evidence on which the court ought to infer that every member had ratified such resolutions with full knowledge of what had been done. Ashbury v. Watson, 54 L. J., Ch. 985; 30 Ch. D. 376; 54 L. T. 27; 33 W. R. 882—C. A.

Vendor's Lien.]—Trustees of a charity conveyed land in Yorkshire to R. and W., part of the purchase-money remaining unpaid, and allowed R. and W. to register the conveyance, knowing that they wanted to do so in order to resell the land in lots:—Held, that the trustees had, by their conduct, precluded themselves from asserting their lien for unpaid purchase-money against bonâ fide sub-purchasers without actual notice. Kettlewell v. Watson, 53 L. J., Ch. 717; 26 Ch. D. 501; 51 L. T. 135; 32 W. R. 865—C. A.

Waiver of Condition in Contract of Sale.]—Dealings between a vendor and a purchaser, to amount to a waiver of a condition as to the time for completion, must be in reference to facts then known to the parties and in reference to which the negotiations were going on. Dyas v. Rooney, 25 L. R., Ir. 342.

e. Breaches of Covenant.

Repairs—Injunction.]—Remedy by injunction to restrain an action on breach of covenant to repair, there having been no waiver or abandonment on the part of the defendant. Hannam v. South London Waterworks Co., 2 Mer. 65.

No relief against covenant to repair in a given time, though no request by landlord; and though tenant was suffered to continue in possession merely without rent, &c., the quantum of damage is no criterion. Bracebridge v. Buckley, 2 Price, 200.

Licence to Assign.]—Covenant not to assign without licence once dispensed with, the condition is gone, but the principle questionable, and not to be extended, for instance, to a mere act where the licence is to be in writing. Macher v. Foundling Hospital, 1 V. & B. 191.

Proviso in a lease for re-entry upon assignment, without licence, ceases by assignment with licence, though to a particular individual. Brummell v. Macpherson, 14 Ves. 173.

Covenant to Renew.]—Lease by A. to B. with a proviso determining the lease, on non-performance of any of the covenants, and A. covenanted that at the end of the term, if it should not be sooner determined by B.'s acts, he would grant to B. a further term. B. continued in possession after the term had expired. A. then brought an ejectment against him for breaches of covenant during the term. Motion by B. for an injunction to restrain the action refused. Thompson v. Guyon, 5 Sim. 65.

Forfeiture.]—A letter written by the landlord's attorney after the eviction, offering to account with the tenant for rent received since the habere, a waiver of landlord's right to insist on the forfeiture. Sheridan v. Casserly, Beat. 249.

To permit a tenant to remain in possession and expend money in building, with the knowledge of the landlord, after an eviction, is a waiver of the forfeiture. Acceptance of rent with notice of forfeiture is a waiver thereof at law. Hume v. Kent, 1 Ball & B. 554, 561.

—— Acceptance of Rent.]—In an action of ejectment for breaches of covenants in leases, the defendant pleaded that after the bringing of the action the plaintiff, with the intention of waiving the breaches of covenant, accepted rent which accrued due after the bringing of the action :—Held, a good statement of defence. Evans v. Wyatt, 43 L. T. 176 ; 44 J. P. 767.

—— Term Void without Entry.]—A term for years, conditioned to be void upon non-performance of acts, becomes void without entry, and there can be no waiver. Freeman v. Boyle, 2 Ridgw. 79.

But where the condition is annexed to a freehold (in which case an entry is necessary) there may be a waiver after the breach and before entry ; for until an entry be made the entry is not complete. S. C., Vern. & S. 414.

—— Building Agreement.]—A building agreement between a landowner and a builder contained a stipulation that the landowner, upon the default of the builder in fulfilling his part of the agreement, might re-enter upon the land and expel the builder, and that on such re-entry all the materials then in the premises should become the property of the landowner "as and for liquidated damages." Semble, that if the ground of forfeiture was the omission to complete the buildings on the day appointed, and the landowner had after that day made advances for the purposes of the agreement, or had in any way treated the agreement as still subsisting, he would have waived the forfeiture. The interest of the builder in the materials being a defeasible one, the right of the landowner to seize is not defeated by the commission of an act of bankruptcy by the builder before the seizure. Newitt, Ex parte, Garrud, In re, 16 Ch. D. 522 ; 44 L. T. 5 ; 29 W. R. 344—C. A.

Covenant running with Land—Injunction to Pull down.]—On a purchase of lands adjoining a railway in 1867 the purchaser covenanted "for himself, his heirs, executors, administrators and assigns, that he would not erect or build any erections within ten feet of the roadway or viaduct of the plaintiffs, without their permission in writing first obtained." The purchaser sold to A., who had no express notice of the covenant. A. in 1869 built, infringing the covenant, and demised the lands, but the lessee had no notice of the covenant. The buildings were increased in height in 1881 by the assignee of the lease. The plaintiffs had no notice of either building till 1881 :—Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to an injunction to the defendants, requiring them to pull down the said erections. L. C. & D. Ry. v. Bull, 47 L. T. 413.

—— Covenant not to Use as Beer-house.]—A. was the purchaser of premises, part of an estate, all the purchasers of which (including A.) were under a covenant not to use the premises, or any part, as a beer-shop. A. built a shop at the back of his premises, and without the consent of the plaintiffs opened it as a beer-shop. He leased the beer-shop to B., who carried on the same business without the consent of the plaintiffs, who served B. with a notice to desist. It appeared that a purchaser of another house on the same estate had, also without consent on the part of the plaintiffs, opened a beer-shop :—Held, that the conduct of the plaintiffs did not amount to such a degree of acquiescence and waiver as to preclude them from the right of enforcing the covenant. Mitchell v. Steward, 35 L. J., Ch. 393 ; L. R. 1 Eq. 541 ; 14 L. T. 134 ; 14 W. R. 453.

The court will grant an injunction to restrain a breach of a covenant, although the covenantee has allowed the breach to go on for a few months, if such breach has been of a gradual and not conspicuous character. Ib.

Trivial Breach. — Acquiescence in a trivial breach of covenant does not preclude a plaintiff from relief in respect of a breach of an important character. Richards v. Revitt, 47 L. J., Ch. 472 ; 7 Ch. D. 224 ; 37 L. T. 632 ; 26 W. R. 166.

Acquiescence in the violation of a covenant to a certain extent :—Held, a sufficient objection to an interlocutory application for an injunction against a greater violation of it. Child v. Douglas, 5 De G. M. & G. 739 ; 1 Kay, 575 ; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 350 ; 2 W. R. 461, 701.

Acquiescence in a breach of covenant not attended with substantial damage will not bar the right to restrain a subsequent breach so attended. Western v. MacDermot, 36 L. J., Ch. 76 ; L. R. 2 Ch. 72 ; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 366 ; 15 L. T. 641 ; 15 W. R. 265.

Injunction to restrain the breach of a covenant, that buildings shall be erected upon a general plan, refused, the covenantee having acquiesced in a partial deviation from the plan, and not having made immediate application to the court. Roper v. Williams, Turn. & R. 18 ; 23 R. R. 169.

A landlord who relaxes, in favour of some of his tenants, a covenant entered into for the benefit of all, is not entitled to an injunction to restrain the other tenants from infringing that covenant. Ib.

The owner of an estate covered it with houses, and sold some subject to a covenant not to carry on any trade, business, or calling therein to the annoyance of any of the houses on the estate :—Held, that the carrying on of a girls' school was a breach of the covenant, and that the covenantee had not waived the benefit of the covenant, though he had permitted other houses held under the like covenant to be used as schools. Kemp v. Sober, 1 Sim. (N.S.) 517 ; 20 L. J., Ch. 602 ; 15 Jur. 458.

And see VENDOR AND PURCHASER (COVENANTS).

Composition with Creditors.] — A person entered into a composition with his creditors, agreeing to pay them 1,500*l.* by instalments of 500*l.* One of the terms of the deed was that the debtor should insure his life in 1,500*l.*, and, on failing to do so, that the deed should be void. The debtor, after paying 500*l.*, effected the insurance in 1,000*l.* One of the creditors who had signed the deed brought an action against the debtor. The court, on a bill filed by the debtor :—Held, that the creditor had waived his right to take advantage of the alleged breach of covenant. Watts v. Hyde, 17 L. J., Ch. 409 ; 12 Jur. 661.

Specialty Creditor.] — There is no rule in equity, any more than at law, that the mere non-suing by a specialty creditor for any period within the statutory limit is such negligence as deprives him of the right of requiring payment of the debt. S. covenanted with B. for immediate payment of a sum of money. S. died without having been called on to pay that sum, leaving property sufficient to meet it, but her executor, being empowered by the will so to do, left her estate, consisting of shares in a bank, unconverted:—Held, that the executors of B. were entitled, after a lapse of eighteen and a half years, to enforce that covenant against the estate of S. Baker, In re, Collins v. Rhodes, 51 L. J., Ch. 315; 20 Ch. D. 230; 45 L. T. 658; 30 W. R. 858—C. A.

Covenant to Settle.]—Where a mother, tenant for life, with remainder to her son in fee, who was under age, covenanted, on his marriage, that they would settle within two years an estate on the heirs male of the marriage, a great length of time having elapsed, and none of the parties having asserted their rights, the court refused specific performance. Howarth v. Deem, 1 Eden, 351.

f. Debtor and Creditor.

Suit by Creditor—Contribution.]—If, in a creditor's suit, plaintiff does not call for contribution, according to decree, before creditors are admitted to prove, he waives all claim to contribution. Shortly v. Selby, 5 Madd. 447.

Partnership.]—No rule fixing any period within which a creditor not making his demand on the surviving partners is held to have waived his equity against the estate of the deceased partner. Devaynes v. Noble, 1 Mer. 569; 15 R. R. 151.

Specialty Creditor.]—Specialty security not waived by a promissory note taken for the balance of the account of interest. Curtis v. Rush, 2 V. & B. 416. And see Baker, In re, supra.

Trust for Creditors—Delay in Prosecuting Suit.]—In 1799 D., being tenant for life of estates in Ireland, conveyed them to trustees for ninety-nine years, upon trust to pay him an annuity of 10,000*l.* a year, and to pay the surplus in payment of his debts. In 1802 a creditor filed a bill in England against the trustees and D., to carry the trusts of that deed into execution, and a decree was made against the trustees for an account, and a receiver appointed, but D., who was out of the jurisdiction, in Ireland, continued in possession of the rents. In 1807 he come to England, and a supplemental bill was filed against him; upon which an injunction was granted restraining him from receiving the rents, and afterwards the decree in the original cause pronounced as against him, and the injunction and receiver continued by the decree. But no proceedings were taken to give effect to this decree till 1836. D. continued in possession until 1819, when he granted, for valuable consideration, certain annuities chargable upon his annuity of 10,000*l.* In 1828 the creditors claiming under the original deed filed a bill in Ireland to obtain the benefit of the decree made in the English suit; and, in 1835, obtained a decree for payment, and an account, upon the footing of the original decree. After such decree of 1835, the assignees of the derivative annuities filed a bill in Ireland to enforce their claim under the annuities granted in 1819, to which bill they made the plaintiffs in the other suits defendants, who, by their answer, claimed a lien upon the 10,000*l.* to make good the surplus of the rents and charges which D. had received in contravention of the trust deed of 1799, and they filed a supplemental bill to establish that claim:—Held, that such creditors had forfeited by their laches whatever equity they had to have the 10,000*l.* applied in making good the surplus rents and profits received by D. Houlditch v. Wallace, 5 Cl. & F. 629; 1 Dr. & Wal. 490.

Acknowledgment of Indebtedness.]—Acknowledgment by conusor of judgment in reply to inquiry by intended assignee, that the sum secured by the judgment is justly due to the conusee, shuts out the equitable defence which the conusor may have had against the conusee, subject, however, to inquiry as to the bonâ fides of the transaction. Hickson v. Aylward, 3 Moll. 1.

Release of Debt by Executor.]—Where, from will, executor, who was residuary legatee, had power to release debtor of testator, and he waived the debt by writing, but did not formally release, executor of executor might, it seems, withhold annuity given in consideration of whole debt being paid. Hemming v. Gurrey, 2 Sim. & S. 311. See 25 R. R. 209.

Charge of Debts—Sale.]—Where bond creditors acquiesce in sale of lands, charged by will with their debts, and for sixteen years receive interest, they shall not disturb purchaser. Elliot v. Merriman, 2 Atk. 41; Barnard. 78.

Judgment Lien.]—Bringing debt upon a judgment is no waiver of lien created by that judgment. Erby v. Erby, 1 Salk. 80.

Debenture deposited on Trust.]—A debenture was deposited by an intestate with his bankers, one of whom received the dividends and placed them to the credit of the intestate's account. The intestate died in 1801, and a commission issued against the bankers in 1810, but the same partner continued to receive the dividends and pay them to the intestate's widow up to 1822, after which the assignees of the bankers claimed a lien on the debenture for a debt due from the intestate to the banking-house:—Held, that the assignees could not now support such claim; and that the debenture had been deposited as in the nature of a trust. Douglas, Ex parte, 3 Deac. & C. 310.

Mere Silence.]—The mere fact that a judgment creditor, who is entered in the statement of affairs as having no security, is present in silence at the first meeting of the creditors, not taking any part in the proceedings, will not raise an equity against him so as to prevent his levying an execution on his judgment, and thus acquiring a valid security for his debt. McLaren, Ex parte, McColla, In re, 50 L. J., Ch. 203; 16 Ch. D. 534; 44 L. T. 36; 29 W. R. 389—C. A.

Bond—Action on the Case.]—A party against whom a commission of bankruptcy had been maliciously obtained, and to whom, after superseding the commission, the lord chancellor had assigned the petitioning creditor's bond, having brought an action on the case against the petitioning creditor :—Held, that an action on the case is a waiver of a right of action on the bond. Holmes v. Wainwright, 1 Swanst. 20.

Action against Agent—Election.]—The creditors of A., having issued a fiat in bankruptcy against him, and having received notice, by means of the examination of the bankrupt, that A. was only the agent of B., proceeded to sign A.'s certificate :—Held, that this was not an election by the creditors to treat A. as their sole debtor. Taylor v. Sheppard, 1 Y. & C. 271.

Authority to Assignees to Act.]—Creditors having, subsequently to the appointment, signed resolutions authorising the assignees to act generally as assignees, are debarred from questioning the validity of the appointment upon grounds of which they were aware at the time of signature. Nash, Ex parte, Wyatt, In re, 1 Deac. & C. 445.

Solicitors to the Commission—Set-off.]—A. and B., partners, were solicitors to the commission. More than six years back they received sums of money on account of the estate, having a set-off in respect of their bill of costs, which bill they did not deliver to the assignee till within six years. Beyond the six years, A. and B. dissolved partnership, and the assignee continued to employ A. alone as the solicitor to the commission, and no attempt was made to charge B. with the moneys received till an official assignee was appointed :—Held, first, that, as between B. and the creditors, neither laches nor other conduct of the assignee would operate as a bar, A. and B. being solicitors to the commission. But, secondly, that as the assignee was able to recoup the estate, he could not call on B. to account. Gould, Ex parte, Robertson, In re, 4 Deac. & C. 547 ; 2 Mont. & Ayr. 48 ; 4 L. J., Bk. 7.

Army Agents—Partner retiring.] — In 1780 A. and B. were partners as army agents, receiving money from the government for the pay of certain regiments. A. retires, and B. and C. carry on the business as before, but without coming to any account with the crown. In 1783 B. and C. render accounts to the government for the several regiments during the period of the existence of the firm of A. and B., and of B. and C., which they do without any break, but these do not state any debtor and creditor account as between the respective firms and the crown, but show simply the sums issued in respect of each regiment, and how they have been applied. On the formation of the firm of B. and C., the old ledgers are used ; there was no agreement to take to the liabilities of A. and B., and everything is carried on in the same manner till 1783, when the 23 Geo. 3, c. 30, was passed. B. and C., in 1804, became bankrupts, and a balance of 150,000*l.* is found due to the crown ; and in 1820 it is found that 91,000*l.*, part of the 150,000*l.*, was due at the time of the retirement of A. Semble, under these circumstances, that B. and C. could not be presumed to have adopted the debt of A. and B., and that the government could not be presumed to have assented thereto, had such adoption existed ; and, consequently, that the government had no right to prove the entire sum of 150,000*l.* against B. and C.'s estate. Clayton's Case (1 Mer. 572 ; 15 R. R. 161) discussed. Sandham, Ex parte, 4 Deac. & C. 818.

Action Pending—Petition to Stay Certificate.] Creditor, by petitioning to stay certificate, makes his election to come in under the commission for every provable debt ; and therefore the bankrupt must be discharged from any action pending against him by creditor in respect of any such debt. Bostock, Ex parte, Wright, In re, 1 Deac. & C. 383.

Solicitors' Lien.]—Proof under a commission is equivalent to payment ; therefore, when solicitors had obtained an order to have their bill taxed, and to prove for the amount :—Held, that they had relinquished their lien upon the papers in their hands. Hornby, Ex parte, Buck, 351.

—— Executors.]—A. and B., a solicitor, were executors. B. deposited some deeds in the trust box, to secure money due to the testator's estate. The box remained in B.'s possession, and on his death the deeds were found to have been abstracted from it. The legal personal representative of B. then deposited certain specific deeds, selected by A., as a security for the debt : —Held, assuming that A. had a general lien on all B.'s deeds, he had waived it by taking the particular security. Mason v. Morley, 34 Beav. 471 ; 34 L. J., Ch. 422 ; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 459 ; 12 L. T. 414 ; 13 W. R. 669.

Annuity—Personal Security.]—The plaintiff having parted with title-deeds, on which she had a lien, to enable her debtor to raise a sum of money on annuity, the defendant, in writing, undertook to pay that annuity to the plaintiff, in case it should not be paid by the grantor ; the annuity fell into arrear, and the plaintiff paid it. On a bill for specific performance and adequate security :—Held, that the plaintiff having taken this personal security, a court of equity would not interfere. Brough v. Oddy, Tam. 215.

Director's Fees.]—Where a director was entitled to a remuneration for his attendance :—Held, that non-claim for a number of years amounted to a waiver of his rights and of his lien. Arigna Iron Mining Co., In re, 1 Eq. R. 269.

Composition Deed—Bill of Exchange.]—Held, that the provision in a composition agreement for the revivor of the original debt upon default being made in any of the conditions was not a penalty, but that on the dishonour of the third bill the creditor was remitted to his original right, and that he had not waived that right by suing the acceptor. Burden, Ex parte, Neil, In re, 16 Ch. D. 675 ; 44 L. T. 525 ; 29 W. R. 879. And see Watts v. Hyde, supra, col. 1762.

Bond—Interest Accepted when Overdue.]—At the time of executing a bond, the obligors procure a letter from the obligee, stating his intention not to call in the money within a specified period, if the interest be regularly paid. Payments of interest made one or even two days after they become due are no defeasance of the undertaking, if the grantor accepts them. Norton v. Wood, 1 Russ. & M. 178.

Mortgage—Date Fixed.]—If, in an agreement, it is one of the stipulations that a mortgage is to be given on a certain day, and it is not given till two days afterwards, and is then accepted by the creditor, such acceptance, though a waiver as to the mortgage, is not a waiver of the creditor's general rights on the contract. Thompson v. Hudson, 38 L. J., Ch. 431; L. R. 4 H. L. 1.

—— Waiver, by whom.]—After a mortgagor has assigned his interest in the property mortgaged, he cannot waive a notice as against the other persons interested. Selwyn v. Garfit, 57 L. J., Ch. 609; 38 Ch. D. 284; 59 L. T. 233; 36 W. R. 513.

—— Mortgagor and Mortgagee.]—A mortgagee takes a bond from the assignee of the devisee, for the arrears of interest then due, and gives a receipt; the bond is unpaid; the interest is still secured by the mortgage. Hardwick v. Mynd, 1 Anstr. 111; 3 R. R. 562.

—— Remedies of Mortgagee.]—A mortgagee, who has taken the body of his debtor in execution for the mortgage debt, is, nevertheless, entitled to the benefit of his mortgage security. Davis v. Battine, 2 Russ. & M. 76.

—— Sale.]—Although an equitable mortgagee may waive his privilege to bid, the assignees must still have the conduct of the sale. Smith, Ex parte, 2 Deac. & C. 60.

The petitioner obtained an order for a sale, at which 950*l.* was bid for the mortgaged premises, but they were bought in. The petitioner afterwards applied to the commissioners for another sale, but did not accept their order; and the assignees afterwards obtained another order, when the highest bidding was only 650*l.*:—Held, that the petitioner, by applying for a second sale, waived any claim against the assignees for the difference in the amount of the biddings at the first and second sales. Baldock, Ex parte, 2 Deac. & C. 60.

—— Agreement not to Call in.]—Agreement in writing not to call in a mortgage for two years, the mortgagor fulfilling his covenants. On one occasion within the two years interest was not paid on the day, and the mortgagee, after giving notice that he was no longer bound by the agreement, demanded and received payment of the interest and incidental costs:—Held, a waiver of the default. Langridge v. Payne, 2 J. & H. 423; 7 L. T. 23; 10 W. R. 726.

A mortgagee agreed with the mortgagor that if the interest was punctually paid the principal should remain for two years. Six months' interest became due and demanded, but not paid, and the mortgagee then demanded payment of principal and interest. Three days afterwards the mortgagor paid the six months' interest, which was received by the mortgagee:—Held, that the mortgagee had not waived his right to call in the principal. Keene v. Biscoe, 47 L. J., Ch. 644; 8 Ch. D. 201; 38 L. T. 286; 26 W. R. 552.

g. Testamentary Provisions.

Charge of Debts—Sale.]—Where bond creditors acquiesce in sale of lands charged by will with their debts, and for sixteen years receive interest, they shall not disturb purchaser. Elliot v. Merriman, 2 Atk. 41; Barnard. 78.

Heir—Devastavit.]—When the heir-at-law had for many years acquiesced and acted as a devisee in trust:—Held, to have lost his right to an issue devastavit vel non, and even an issue to try the question of parcel or not. Man v. Ricketts, 7 Beav. 93; 13 L. J., Ch. 194; 8 Jur. 159.

Devisee in Remainder—Conversion.]—Whether a devisee in remainder, the executor of the testator, could, after having acquiesced for thirty years in the tenant receiving the rents, insist that the property ought to have been immediately converted, quære. Pickering v. Pickering, 4 Myl. & Cr. 289; 8 L. J., Ch. 336; 3 Jur. 331.

Copyholds.]—Plaintiff, devisee of A., taking it for granted that certain copyhold premises did not pass by A.'s will, allowed defendant to enter and to hold for twenty years, plaintiff paying her rent as tenant. If plaintiff had come in in time, he would have been relieved, notwithstanding his acquiescence. Davie v. Beardsham, 1 Ch. Ca. 39.

Election.]—The plaintiff, with full notice, accepted benefits under A.'s will, which prohibited him from setting up any claim in the execution of the trusts of her father's will:—Held, that he could not maintain a suit against the executor of the father's will. Egg v. Devey, 10 Beav. 444; 16 L. J., Ch. 509; 11 Jur. 1023.

Freeman's Widow.]—Acquiescence material to determine property; as where a freeman's widow acquiesces under husband's will she is bound thereby. Pawlet v. Delavel, 2 Ves. sen. 668.

Purchase of Annuities—Postponement.]—Where testator directs annuities to be purchased for his wife within a given time, and the wife assents to postpone the purchase, and dies, her personal representatives will be entitled to the sum which would have purchased the annuity. Dawson v. Hearn, 1 Russ. & M. 606; Tam. 465; 8 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 153; and 9 Id. 249.

Legacies.]—Direction in will to sell and invest proceeds, in the first place as to 400*l.* for his wife for life, and then to C., and out of residue of proceeds to invest 400*l.* for R. for life, and then over with other trusts for other persons. The executor made no purchase, but paid interest on 400*l.* to each legatee and applied the assets to his own use, and afterwards became bankrupt:—Held, that by that dealing the two legatees had waived whatever priority the will might have given to them. Chadwin, Ex parte, 3 Swanst. 380; 19 R. R. 219.

Legacy at twenty-one, the interest for maintenance, not satisfied by a legacy, larger, but of a different nature, received under the will of the executor, there being no positive relinquishment, though no demand for ten years. Lee v. Brown, 4 Ves. 362; 4 R. R. 208.

A. was entitled to the income of a legacy for her life. By a change in the investment of testator's property a loss took place, and the solicitor of the executor informed A. that she might have a right against the residuary legatee to be paid the whole of the interest on her legacy, but advised her to submit to the loss, and proposed that it should be borne ratably between A. and the residuary legatees. A. continued to receive income on her legacy on that footing for fourteen years:—Held, that A. had precluded herself by acquiescence from all right to be paid the deficiency. Stafford v. Stafford, 1 De G. & J. 193; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 149.

Delay in following Assets—Claim against Residuary Legatees.]—The right of mortgagees of real estate whose security proves insufficient, to come against the residuary legatees of the mortgagor, amongst whom his personal estate has been distributed, is a purely equitable right, and the court will not enforce it if there are circumstances which would make it inequitable to do so. Blake v. Gale, 55 L. J., Ch. 559; 32 Ch. D. 571; 55 L. T. 234; 34 W. R. 555—C. A.

Mortgagees of a freehold farm were informed that the personal estate of testator was less than the mortgage, but they allowed the personal estate to be distributed among the testator's children, the farm being carried on by two of the children. The interest on the mortgage was paid for more than twenty years, when owing to agricultural depression, the security proved insufficient. The mortgagees then brought an action against the children to recover the shares of personalty which they had received:—Held, that the mortgagees having assented to the distribution of the personal estate among the residuary legatees, could not, after this lapse of time, claim it back. Ib.

—— Right to sue Executor for Devastavit.]—Mere laches in abstaining from calling upon the executors to realise for the purpose of paying his debt will not deprive a creditor of his right to sue the executors for devastavit, unless there has been such a course of conduct, that the executors have been thereby misled into parting with the assets. Birch, In re, Roe v. Birch, 54 L. J., Ch. 119; 27 Ch. D. 622; 51 L. T. 777; 33 W. R. 72.

Compromise.]—Bill against the devisee and personal representative, on the ground of an election by the testatrix to take under a will, dismissed, on the conduct of the plaintiff, who eighteen years ago had compromised a suit instituted by him upon the subject, in consequence of which the right to compel an election was not ascertained, and the party possessed under the will during her life, had disposed of her estate, real and personal, by will. Yate v. Moseley, 5 Ves. 480.

Effect on Family Arrangement.]—A. appointed his sons, J. and S., executors, and bequeathed his property to them on trust for his children as joint tenants. Ten years after his death questions arose as to the illegitimacy of three children, of whom J. was one. A deed was executed by all the adult children, by which it was agreed that all the children should share equally as tenants in common. Bill filed in 1872 by children who came of age in 1859 and 1861:—Held, that the arrangement come to between the members of the family to avoid litigation was a sufficient consideration as between the parties to it, and that the children were bound by acquiescence. Smith v. Mogford, 21 W. R. 472.

Bond for Debt due to Testator.]—M. was a beneficiary under a will, and J. the testamentary guardian. In 1810 a debtor of the testator executed a bond for his debt, and delivered it to the agent of the testator. J. died in 1870, and M. in 1871 filed a bill against J.'s representatives, alleging neglect in J. not realising the bond. M. knew of the bond in 1833:—Held, without reference to other objections, that the plaintiff had, by her acquiescence, disentitled herself to any relief. Sleeman v. Wilson, L. R. 13 Eq. 36; 25 L. T., 408; 20 W. R. 109.

Breach of Trust.]—Although as between the cestui que trust and a stranger the claim of the cestui que trust is barred by lapse of time operating against his trustee, lapse of time is no bar as between cestui que trust and trustee. Cross, In re, Harston v. Tenison, 51 L. J., Ch. 645; 20 Ch. D. 109; 45 L. T. 777; 30 W. R. 376—C. A.

Devisee of freehold land to B. Portions of the land were, at the date of the will, under contract for sale to a railway company. The company had taken possession before the will, but the conveyance was not completed until after the testator's death. On completion the trustee was advised by counsel to pay the devisee the purchase money, which he did accordingly, and informed the plaintiff of the result, but no settlement of accounts was come to between the plaintiff and the trustee, and the plaintiff had not executed any release to the trustee. On action brought five years after:—Held, that no case of acquiescence was made out against the plaintiff, and that he was entitled to recover from the trustee's estate the moneys received from the railway company, and the devisee was to recoup the trustee. Jackson, In re, Wilson v. Donald, 44 L. T. 467. And see cases, supra, col. 1724.

h. Tortious Acts.

Copyright.]—Injunction refused to restrain infringement of copyright, before trial where the conduct of the plaintiffs had been such as to induce the defendants to believe that the course taken by them would not be objected to by the plaintiffs. Saunders v. Smith, 3 Myl. & Cr. 711; 7 L. J., Ch. 227; 2 Jur. 536.

Fraud by Partner.]—As to fraudulent abstraction by one partner being converted into contract by subsequent acquiescence so as to debar right of proof against such partner's joint estate. See Turner, Ex parte, 4 Deac. & C. 169; 1 Mont. & Ayr. 337; and cases therein cited.

Several Co-plaintiffs.]—Acquiescence by one of several co-plaintiffs precludes the interference of the court upon an interlocutory application, as upon decree; and the rule is the same although some of the co-plaintiffs are infants. Marker v. Marker, 9 Hare, 15; 20 L. J., Ch. 246; 15 Jur. 663. And see Hollingsworth v. Shakeshaft, supra, col. 1730.

Nuisance.]—To have a work, erected at great expense, removed by this court as a nuisance, the person complaining should have given notice not to proceed, otherwise the court will leave the complaint to law. Jones v. Royal Canal Co., 2 Moll. 319.

Where party allows and acquiesces in erecting a nuisance, he shall be stayed in action at law. Anon., 2 Eq. Ca. Abr. 522.

Encroachment.]—An encroachment of a watercourse was made in the infancy of the ancestor, who acquiesced for twenty-one years after he became of age. The court would not afterwards notice his complaint. Guernsey (Lord) v. Rodbridges, Gilb. Eq. Rep. 3.

Using Water—Nominal Damages.]—The defendants who were authorised by act of parliament to draw water from a canal for condensing steam, used the water for other purposes, in consequence of which the plaintiff brought an action and obtained a verdict against them for nominal damages. The defendants continued to use the water as before, whereupon the bill was filed for an injunction to restrain them:—Held, that the plaintiffs had sufficiently established their title at law, and that but for their acquiescence they would have been entitled to the injunction, notwithstanding they had recovered only nominal damages. Rochdale Canal Co. v. King, 2 Sim. (N.S.) 78; 20 L. J., Ch. 675; 15 Jur. 962.

Assertion of Right.]—Turning cattle upon alluvium by the proprietor of land not separated from it by any boundary, although without interruption, is not an assertion of right so acquiesced in as to raise a presumption of title. Att.-Gen. v. Chambers, 4 De G. & J. 55; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 745; 7 W. R. 404.

Statute or Charter.]—A statute, or charter, may be waived by the party for whose benefit it was enacted, so as to render the acts of persons disregarding it legal. Goldsmid v. G. E. Ry., 53 L. J., Ch. 371; 25 Ch. D. 511; 49 L. T. 717; 32 W. R. 341.

Unlawful Exercise of Statutory Powers.]—To constitute acquiescence in the unlawful exercise of statutory powers, even where public works have been constructing during several years, there must be either actual knowledge by the parties injured of the fact that the works were not in accordance with the statute, or fraudulent abstention from acquiring such knowledge. Herron v. Rathmines Commissioners, 27 L. R., Ir. 179—C. A.

Onus probandi.]—Trustees placed money in the hands of their solicitors for investment, and the solicitors, by means of a fraud, induced A. to execute a mortgage of property to the trustees, handed to them the deeds, and appropriated the money to their own use. No part of the consideration-money was paid to A. The solicitors became bankrupt:—Held, that A. was entitled to have the deeds cancelled. The onus of proving acquiescence was on the mortgagees, and could not be discharged except by proving that the mortgagor was aware of the manner in which the mortgagees' money was deposited with the solicitors, and of the fact that no part of it had been applied for the use and benefit of the mortgagor. Wall v. Cockerell, 10 H. L. Cas. 229; 1 N. R. 486; 32 L. J., Ch. 276; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 447; 8 L. T. 4; 11 W. R. 442.

Claim for Compensation.]—Held, that a claim for compensation was no acquiescence, because plaintiff was then ignorant that they were doing an illegal act, and took proceedings as soon as he was aware of it. Pentney v. Lynn Paving Commissioners, 12 L. T. 818; 13 W. R. 983.

Mere Submission.]—Semble, that mere submission to a wrongful act which has been completed without the knowledge of the person whose right is infringed cannot, without conduct amounting to accord and satisfaction, or a release under seal, bar his right of action; although, under the name of laches, it may afford a ground for refusing relief under some circumstances. De Bussche v. Alt, 47 L. J., Ch. 381; 8 Ch. D. 286; 38 L. T. 370.

i. Voidable Deeds.

General Rule.]—Length of time, or long acquiescence in a transaction, may bar relief, in cases where the transaction, if impeached within a reasonable time, would be set aside. Hickes v. Cooke, 4 Dow, 16; 16 R. R. 1.

Annuity Assignment.]—A grantor discovering that his annuity was bad, and complaining of distress or circumvention after he had joined the grantee in an assignment of it, which he ratified and undertook to pay, has but a slender equity, and the assignee ought not to be assisted; account directed of the consideration paid by original grantee, with interest at 5 per cent., and of the payments of the annuity to the grantee, or any person claiming under him by assignment, which was ordered to be applied in discharge of the principal and interest. Bromley v. Holland, 7 Ves. 3; G. Cooper, 9; 6 R. R. 58.

Lease.]—Very clear and strong evidence is necessary to impeach a lease at a distance of time, on the ground of fraud originally practised in obtaining it. Chandos v. Brownlow, 2 Ridgw. P. C. 397.

Voluntary agreement endorsed on lease by one not a party to it, not binding. Dowling v. Mill, 1 Madd. 541.

—— Minority.]—Where a building lease was granted during the minority of infants, with a covenant that they, when of age, should confirm it, and the infants accepted rent for ten continued years after coming of age;—Decreed, that the lease should be established. Smith v. Low, 1 Atk. 489.

If a person of age grant a lease, having no title, and the lands afterwards descend to him the lease shall enure by way of estoppel; otherwise if he had been an infant. Ib.

—— Resettlement.]—Lease by tenant for life in exercise of a power, covenanting for quiet enjoyment. Subsequently recoveries suffered by tenants for life, and in tail and property resettled subject to existing lease. Semble, the mere lapse of time, and acquiescence from 1767 to 1848, would bar relief. Donegal (Marquis) v. Greg, 13 Ir. Eq. R. 12.

—— Copyhold for Lives.]—B. purchases of lord copyhold for lives, who makes lease of freehold of soil to A., reserving rent, and after levies a fine of manor to B., who accepts rent from A. Quære, is B.'s copyhold gone. Compton v. Brent, 1 Dyer, 30. pl. 207.

Payment to Receiver.]—A tenant at a bulk rent of lands, over a part of which a receiver was appointed, having for years made payments to receiver, and allowed him to allocate them partly to the credit of the cause, and partly to the person to whom the rent of the land not in the cause belonged:—Held, that he is bound by such acquiescence. Colthurst v. Colthurst, 7 Ir. Eq. R. 305.

Reversioner—Acceptance of Rent.]—Where tenant for life and remainderman joined in the lease for years to the steward, in which rights of disputed title were omitted, but in respect of which valuable allotments were afterwards made, and the reversioner afterwards accepted the rent for five years:—Held, that the lease could not after so long acquiescence be impeached for fraud; although the transaction might have been questioned recently after. Selsey v. Rhoades, 1 Bligh. (N.S.) 1; 30 R. R. 1.

There is no policy which prevents a steward from being a lessee of his employer, nor from receiving a beneficial lease; but steward must prove he gives full consideration, but where transaction was mixed with motives of bounty, he must show that employer was aware of every circumstance relating to transaction. S. C., 2 Sim. & S. 49; 25 R. R. 150.

Acceptance of Rent.]—See cases, supra, and col. 1750.

Lease for Lives.]—F., tenant for life, with a power of leasing for years, demises for lives to his attorney; M., his son, tenant in tail, four years afterwards, executes an agreement to confirm the demise, and renew for a further term of lives:—Held, that the case was too suspicious to come within the principle of specific performance, and the length of time did not imply acquiescence. Blakeney v. Baggott, 1 Dow (N.S.) 405; 3 Bligh (N.S.) 237.

Statutes by Remainderman.]—A., tenant for life, remainder to first, &c., son in tail, remainder to B. B. enters into statutes to C. for payment of ten for one upon the death of A. in case he died without issue male in the life of B. B., in the lifetime of A., declares the bargain fairly made, and that he would seek no relief against it. B. brings a bill against the executor of C., and he is relieved against the bargain on payment of principal and interest. Wiseman v. Beake, 2 Vern. 121.

Agreement by Owners.]—The several owners of lands in the parish of C. enter into an agreement that a particular common should be enjoyed as a cow pasture for ninety-nine years; and this is signed by the bailiff of one of the owners "so far as he had power." After an acquiescence of above thirty years, this owner shall be bound by the act of his servant. Tufton v. Wentworth, 1 Bro. P. C. 165.

Acquiescence by Shareholders.]—The commissioners of a canal make an agreement for letting the tolls, not warranted by the act, and prejudicial to the public; this agreement is acquiesced in for forty-seven years, without complaint of the shareholders, and the lessee remains in undisturbed possession; the court will not at the suit of the shareholders disturb his possession. Gray v. Chaplin, 2 Russ. 126; 3 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 47; 26 R. R. 22.

Voluntary Settlement.]—Voluntary settlement of property. After the decease of the settlor, his heir-at-law, who was also tenant for life under the settlement, upon his marriage, reciting the voluntary settlement, conveyed all his interest in the lands upon trust for his wife. Quære, can he afterwards insist that the voluntary settlement was void because the settlor was in a state of mental imbecility. Roddy v. Williams, 3 Jo. & Lat. 1.

Vendor Impeaching Sale.]—If a vendor who has a right, upon equitable grounds, to impeach the sale by subsequent deeds, adopts the sale, and acts upon it as binding, he cannot afterwards impeach the title of equitable mortgagees, who, subsequently, advanced their money without notice. Nagle v. Baylor, 3 Dr. & War. 60.

Settlement of Wife's Property.]—On the marriage of a female infant, her reversionary interest in choses in action were settled under the court for her separate use for life, with remainder to her children. She afterwards contracted two subsequent marriages, but no further settlement was executed:—Held, that the third husband, who had notice of the settlement, and had for some years acquiesced in it, was bound thereby. Ashton v. M'Dougall, 5 Beav. 56; 11 L. J., Ch. 344; 6 Jur. 447.

A feme covert was entitled to a reversionary interest in money vested in her husband and another as trustees. By deed made between the tenant for life and the trustees, the tenant for life, who alone executed the deed, declared that the trustees should hold the fund on trusts whereby the wife had a power of appointment. The wife died, having appointed the reversionary interest. The husband afterwards died, and the reversionary interest came into possession:—Held, that the husband ought to be deemed to have acquiesced in the arrangement, and accepted the trusts. Inman v. Whitley, 7 Beav. 337.

Deed of Gift.]—In a suit to impeach a deed of gift to an agent and trustee, it was held that, though it was voidable in its origin, yet that the subsequent deliberate acts of the party impeaching it, assisted by his legal advisers, made it valid. De Montmorency v. Devereux, 7 Cl. & F. 188; West, 64; 2 Dr. & Wal. 410.

Release.]—Where a release has been executed, and the parties have for a long space of time acquiesced in it, the mere proof of errors will not, in the absence of fraud, induce the court either to set it aside or to give leave to surcharge and falsify. Miller v. Craig, 6 Beav. 433.

Deed apportioning Rent.]—A deed, apportioning rent between A. and B., executed without any consideration by his agent, without authority, and in ignorance that the rent had been conclusively apportioned by a former deed, not enforced against A. But A., when apprised of his rights, obtaining from B. a settlement according to the former apportionment and for years after paying the whole rent, without demanding contribution, not entitled, after the death of B., to an account against his assets. A. entitled to contribution according to the former apportionment against C., the remainderman from the death of B., when he went into possession. Stratford v. Aldborough (Lord), 1 Beat. 228.

Recovery.]—A tenant in tail in remainder when just of age, joined his father, tenant for life, in a recovery, for the purpose of raising 3,000*l.* for the father, and resettling the estate the son taking back only an estate for life, with remainder to his sons, &c. Whatever equity he might have had against that settlement was lost by his marriage and acquiescence till after the death of his father. Brown v. Carter, 5 Ves. 862; 5 R. R. 191.

Assignment of Policy.]—A. by deed, for a nominal consideration, assigned a policy of assurance upon his own life to trustees for his children, of whom B. was one, and the entire interest in the policy became vested in B. and C. No notice of the deed was ever given to the assurance company. C. married D., and by deed, reciting that she was entitled to one moiety of the policy, the moiety was then put in settlement. A. afterwards, by deed, without consideration, professed to assign the residue of the policy to D. B. declined to execute the deed, but did not allege during the life of A. that he had any claim on the produce of the policy. D. gave to the company notice of the assignment, and paid premiums during A.'s life:—Held, that B. was precluded by his own conduct from enforcing his claim upon the produce of the policy. Justice v. Wynne, 10 Ir. Ch. R. 489.

j. Accounts.

When opened—Fraud.]—Account opened, and general account decreed against an agent who was also tenant to his principal, in respect of fraud; and laches in landlord under the circumstances not an objection. Beaumont v. Boultbee, 7 Ves. 599.

Accounts may be opened after an acquiescence of five years, if circumstances tending to show fraud are then discovered. Orphan Board (President) v. Van Reenen, 1 Knapp, 100.

—— Mines.]—The right to an account, even in the case of mines, may be lost by laches. Parrott v. Palmer, 3 Myl. & K. 632.

To what Time—Rent.]—Account of rents and profits confined to filing of the bill under laches by the cestui que trust in not asserting his right. Pettiward v. Prescott, 7 Ves. 541.

Interest.]—In a long unsettled partnership account rendered intricate by the neglect of a party, he shall have no interest on the balance when settled. Bodham v. Ryley, 2 Bro. C. C. 2.

Partnership.]—A. and B., partners, were solicitors to the commission. More than six years back they received various sums on account of the estate, having a set-off in respect of their bill of costs, which they did not deliver to the assignee till within six years. Beyond the six years A. and B. dissolved partnership; and the assignee, with knowledge of this fact, continued to employ A. alone as the solicitor to the commission, and no attempt was made to charge B. with the moneys received by A. and B. till an official assignee was appointed:—Held, first, that, as between B. and the creditors, neither laches, nor other conduct of the assignee, would operate as a bar. But, secondly, that as the assignee was able to recoup the estate, he could not, under such circumstances of conduct on his part, call on B. to account. Gould, Ex parte, Robertson, In re, 4 Deac. & C. 547; 2 Mont. & Ayr. 48; 4 L. J., Bk. 7.

Bill by assignees of a bankrupt, claiming a debt, which had been paid to his partner, as paid after notice of dissolution of the partnership, that partner retiring, and the bankrupt continuing, dismissed; the terms of the alleged arrangement not being made out. Duff v. East India Co., 15 Ves. 198.

B., a retiring partner, borrowed money, undertaking to pay out of his share of the partnership capital, and C., a remaining partner, undertook to pay the lenders (the plaintiffs) the amount of B.'s capital, and bound himself to give the plaintiffs a full and perfect lien thereon, such as they might think necessary to secure to them an exclusive title to the balance. No steps were taken till after the death of B. and C.:—Held, that there were no laches. Glyn v. Hood, 29 L. J., Ch. 204; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 153; 8 W. R. 248.

Stated Account.]—Where persons have mutual dealings, signing the accounts is not necessary to make it a stated one; but it is keeping it any length of time without making any objection which binds the person to whom it is sent, and prevents his entering into an open account afterwards. Willis v. Jernegan, 2 Atk. 252. But see 1 Ball & B. 428.

Trust—Possession without Title.]— Upon possession for many years, the origin not appearing, and no title, except as cestui que trust, under a term, the court would not presume any other title, and decreed the plaintiff to be let into possession on payment of the charge; but upon the laches, refused an account of the rents even from the filing of the bill. Acherley v. Roe, 5 Ves. 565.

—— Where Right Clear.]—The representatives of the cestui que trust held not barred from the right to an account of the laches of twelve years, when otherwise the right was clear. Dickinson v. Holland (Lord), 2 Beav. 310.

General Account.]—The court refused to open an account acquiesced in during twenty-two years, though it was of a general and summary nature, not containing the items, and though the personal representative of the party giving such account had, upon being first applied to, rendered accounts of matters included in such account; but the court decreed an account, limited to the subsequent receipts, which it was admitted had taken place. Scott v. Milne, 5 Beav. 215. Affirmed 12 L. J., Ch. 233; 7 Jur. 709.

Annuity.]—Account taken under decree in 1817, in a suit by the grantee of an annuity, charged upon lands against judgment creditors of the grantor, who were in possession by elegit of what was due to the grantee, and a receiver appointed over the lands. The grantee having died, his executors in 1848 filed a bill against the co-heiresses of the grantor for an account of what was due for arrears:—Held, that by reason of the acquiescence of the grantor for twenty-five years, and of the defendants for six years afterwards they were not entitled to an account de novo of what was due in 1817, but that they might surcharge and falsify. L'Estrange v. White, 1 Ch. Rep. 15.

After Action at Law.]—Demurrer to a bill for a general account and for an injunction allowed on the grounds that the statement in the bill did not furnish such a case of account between the parties as to entitle the plaintiff to interference of the court on the principles of equity, and if it had been a stronger case, the plaintiff, after having suffered the action to be tried at nisi prius, had come too late to ask the interference of the court. Cooper v. Hatton, 12 Price 502.

Semble, mere delay of a defendant at law coming to equity in matters of account forms no reason for refusing relief where the nature of the account is such as a court of law cannot deal with. S. E. R. v. Brogden, 3 Mac. & G. 8; 14 Jur. 795.

Remarks as to the difference between a court of equity originally assuming jurisdiction in a matter of account, and withdrawing a matter of account from a court of law. Ib.

WALES.

Public-houses—Sunday Closing.]—By s. 3. of the Sunday Closing (Wales) Act, 1881, "This Act shall commence and come into operation with respect to each division or place in Wales on the day next appointed for the holding of the general annual licensing meeting for that division or place" :—Held, that "the day next appointed" is the day which shall, after the passing of the act, be next appointed for the holding of the meeting. Richards v. Macbride, 51 L. J., M. C. 15; 8 Q. B. D. 119; 45 L. T. 677; 30 W. R. 120; 46 J. P. 247.

Endowed School.]— Wales is a district of England within the Endowed Schools Act, 1869; and if a college holds a fund in trust for exhibitioners to be selected from a particular district in England, and whose exhibitions are tenable at the university, such college must give the endowed schools commissioners any information they may require as to the fund. Meyricke Fund, In re, 41 L. J., Ch. 553; L. R. 7 Ch. 500; 26 L. T. 596; 20 W. R. 715.

Customs of.]—The 34 & 35 Hen. 8, c. 26, s. 101, did not interfere with the private rights claimed by the lords marchers of Wales, as lords of manors or owners of the land. Beaufort (Duke) v. Smith, 4 Ex. 450; 19 L. J., Ex. 97.

The custom of England for rectors and vicars to leave their vicarages in repair to their successors was transferred to Wales by 27 Hen. 8, c 26. Bunbury v. Hewson, 3 Ex. 558.

By the laws of Howel Dda, whosoever owneth land on the side of the shore, he owneth the breadth of his land on the shore, and he may make a weir upon it if he will; but if the sea cast anything on the land or on the shore, the king owneth it, for the sea is a packhorse of the king. Quære, whether this law is still in force by virtue of 12 Edw. 1 and 27 Hen. 8, c. 26, s. 31. Att.-Gen. v. Jones, 2 H. & C. 347; 33 L. J., Ex. 249; 6 L. T. 655.

Highways.]—See WAY.

Prince of Wales—Bond.]—The condition of a bond, after reciting the grant of an annuity by the Prince of Wales (afterwards Geo. 4) to C., an assignment of the same to the obligee with assent of the Prince, and an agreement that the obligor should give his bond as an additional security, was declared to be, that if the Prince or his treasurer, or any person for him, should pay the annuity quarterly to the obligee, the bond should be void :—Held, that upon failure of payment the obligee was entitled to sue the obligor, without having first presented a particular of his demand to the Prince's treasurer, pursuant to 35 Geo. 3, c. 125, s. 7. O'Kelly v. Sparkes, 10 East, 369.

1. In General.

Existence of.]—A state of war may exist de facto between two countries, although there has been no formal declaration of war by their governments; but there must be an actual commencement of hostilities. The Teutonia, 8 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 411; 41 L. J., Adm. 57; L. R. 4 P. C. 171; 26 L. T. 48; 20 W. R. 421.

If a foreign power takes prisoner an enemy, and thereby obtains possession of documents establishing his right to a debt due from another to him in his private capacity, the prisoner is entitled to relief; and the circumstance that the foreign power is also the debtor, will not alter the right; but if such documents are the property of the prisoner in his sovereign character, and are taken possession of by the conqueror in the exercise of his sovereign and political rights, the court cannot interfere. Coorg (Rajah) v. East India Co., 29 Beav. 300; 30 L. J., Ch. 226; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 350; 3 L. T. 646; 9 W. R. 247.

Declaration of.]—To ascertain the date of a declaration of war, the declaration from the ambassador of the court abroad, transmitted by him to the secretary of state's office, is evidence. Thelluson v. Cosling, 4 Esp. 266. (Usually proved by the production of a copy of a royal proclamation, announcing its existence, printed by the printers of the crown, under 8 & 9 Vict., c. 113, s. 3.)

—— Effect of.]—The effect of a declaration of war is to dissolve contracts of affreightment made before but which remain to be executed at the time. Esposito v. Bowden, 7 El. & Bl. 763; 27 L. J., Q. B. 17; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 1209; 5 W. R. 732—Ex. Ch.

A declaration of war by this country against a foreign power imports a prohibition of commercial intercourse with the subjects of that power

Burrick v. Buha, 2 C. B. (N.S.) 563; 26 L. J., C. P. 280; 5 W. R. 665.

A Prussian ship, carrying a cargo of nitrate of soda (contraband of war), arrived off Dunkirk, to which port she had been ordered by the consignees of cargo, and whilst lying there waiting for the tide, her master heard that war had broken out between France and Prussia, and he thereupon put back to the Downs, where he arrived on July 17th, to make inquiries, but hearing nothing more, and being stopped by his owner, he put into Dover on the 18th, and there getting intelligence, refused to proceed to Dunkirk. The ship was running under charter entitling her to be sent to a safe port. War was not actually declared till July 19th, but was imminent on July 16th:—Held, that the ship on July 16th was not bound to go to Dunkirk, as she would have been liable to penalties for trading with the enemies of her country and capture by French cruisers; that even if war did not actually exist till July 19th the master was justified in pausing for a reasonable time to make inquiries, and that under the circumstances he did not exceed that time by staying in Dover till after the declaration of war. The Teutonia, 8 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 411; 41 L. J., Adm. 57; L. R. 4 P. C. 171; 26 L. T. 48; 20 W. R. 421.

Whilst the ship was lying at Dover, the consignees demanded the delivery of cargo without any payment of freight. The master refused to deliver without payment:—Held, that he was entitled to freight. Ib.

Validity of Contracts.]—The shipping of a cargo from an enemy's port, even in a neutral vessel, is an act of dealing and trading with the queen's enemies, and is therefore illegal. Esposito v. Bowden, supra.

A neutral, while a war is imminent, or even after it has commenced, is at liberty to purchase either goods or ships (not being ships of war) from either belligerent, and the purchase is valid whether the subject of it is lying in a neutral or an enemy's port. Sorensen v. Reg., 11 Moore, P. C. 141.

The sale of a ship absolutely and bonâ fide by an enemy to a neutral imminente bello, or even flagrante bello, is not illegal. Ib.

Enemy or Neutral.]—The national character of a trader is to be decided, for the purposes of the trade, by the national character of the place in which it is carried on. If a war breaks out, a foreign merchant carrying on trade in a belligerent country has a reasonable time allowed him for transferring himself and his property to another country. If he does not avail himself of the opportunity, he is to be treated, for the purposes of trade, as a subject of the power under whose dominion he carries it on, and as an enemy of those with whom that power is at war. The Gerasimo, 11 Moore, P. C. 88; 5 W. R. 450.

A temporary occupation of a territory by an enemy's force does not, of itself, necessarily convert the territory so occupied into hostile territory, or its inhabitants into enemies. Ib.

Merchants, subjects of neutral states, resident in the territories of an ally, are, for the purposes of war, considered as domiciled in the territories of the ally, and prohibited from trade with a belligerent. The San Spiridione, 2 Jur. (N.S.) 1238; 5 W. R. 102.

Contraband.]—Account decreed where one party had freighted ship with contraband goods. Dover v. Opey, 2 Eq. Abr. 7.

A seller abroad of contraband goods is entitled to prove unless he be a participator in smuggling them. Cavaliere, Ex parte, 2 Glyn & J. 227.

A debt arising out of a contract to convey British goods to a market in an enemy's country cannot be proved under a commission of bankrupt after peace has been established between that country and Great Britain. Schmaling, Ex parte, Buck, 93.

A joint adventure between the subjects of a neutral power for running a blockade, established by one of two foreign belligerents against the ports of the other, with a cargo of arms and ammunition, is not an unlawful contract, but one from which the ordinary rights of property result. Chavasse, Ex parte, Grazebrook, In re, 4 De G. J. & S. 655; 34 L. J., Bk. 17; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 400; 12 L. T. 249; 13 W. R. 627.

International law subjects a neutral merchant who transports contraband of war to the risk of having his ship and cargo captured and condemned by the belligerent power for whose enemy the contraband is destined; but the commerce which was lawful for the neutral with either belligerent country before the war is not made by the war unlawful or capable of being prohibited by both or either of the belligerents. Ib.

A breach of blockade by neutrals is not an offence against the municipal law of this country, and therefore an agreement contemplating a breach of blockade is not illegal. The Helen, 35 L. J., Adm. 2; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 1025; 13 L. T. 305.

Defence of the Realm—Compensation.]—Where lands of a corporation had been taken by government for fortification purposes, under 43 Geo. 3, c. 55, and 45 Geo. 3, c. 95, and the compensation paid into court, to be disposed of under its order:—Held, that since the 5 & 6 Will 4, c. 76, s. 92, the court has no authority to direct it to be applied in discharge of corporation debts incurred since the statute; although the dividends must be so applied, yet the capital is to be preserved. The trusts of the latter act apply to personal as well as real estate. Hythe Corporation, Ex parte, 4 Y. & Coll. 55.

Where the purchase-money for land taken by the secretary of state for war under the Defence of the Realm Act, 5 & 6 Vict. c. 94, had, in 1860, been paid into court, and an application by petition was made for its investment in consols subsequently to the 23 & 24 Vict. c. 112, the court made the order, and directed the costs to be paid by the secretary of state, and that future applications in respect of money paid into court under the acts should be made at chambers. Maynard's Trusts, In re, 30 L. J., Ch. 344; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 232; 3 L. T. 773; 9 W. R. 330.

A pond which supplied a stream by which a flour-mill was worked, was purchased by the ordnance under the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 94. The water being diverted, the tenant for life of the mill claimed compensation, and before an award was made he erected a steam-engine and suitable buildings for the mill, expending thereon 1,300*l.* Compensation, amounting to 920*l.*, being awarded to him, the court permitted this sum to be paid to the tenant for life in respect of the permanent alterations he had made. Wellington (Duke), In re, 3 De G. F. & J. 13; 30 L. J., Ch. 187; 3 L. T. 525; 9 W. R. 173.

Under 23 & 24 Vict. c. 112, lands were taken absolutely by the secretary of state for war, and other lands were required to be kept free from buildings. The amount of compensation for both classes of land was agreed upon; and the parties claimed interest at 5*l.* per cent. on the amount paid as compensation for the lands required to be kept free from buildings from the date of the agreement to the time of payment:—Held, that the compensation paid for lands required to be kept clear of buildings was only a payment for damage, and did not carry interest. Suffolk (Earl) v. Lewis, 1 Hem. & M. 369; 32 L. J., Ch. 232; 8 L. T. 350; 11 W. R. 521.

Upon a petition to obtain out of court the purchase money for land taken under the Defence Act of 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 112), it is not necessary to serve the secretary of state, who paid it in. Morshead, Ex parte, 33 Beav. 254; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 61; 9 L. T. 597; 12 W. R. 236.

A fund paid into court for the purchase, under this act, of lands which were subject to contingent charges, was ordered to be paid out to the trustees, they having powers to sell the lands, and to give discharges for the purchase money without bringing the persons interested in the charges before the court. Ib.

A person whose land has been valued by a jury and sold under the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 94, is not entitled to the expenses and costs which he has necessarily incurred in bringing the matter to trial. Ordnance Officers and Lands, In re, 1 Ex. 441; 4 D. & L. 688; 17 L. J., Ex. 126.

Cp. cases sub tit. LANDS CLAUSES ACT.

2. FOREIGN ENLISTMENT.

a. Cases Decided under Act of 1870.

Despatch of Ship.]—The employment of an English steam-tug for the purpose of towing a prize to the captor's waters, is a despatching a ship from the United Kingdom for the purpose of being employed in the naval service of a foreign state, within s. 8 of the Foreign Enlistment Act, 1870. The Gauntlet, 41 L. J., Adm. 65; L. R. 4 P. C. 184; 26 L. T. 45; 20 W. R. 497.

By s. 8 of the Foreign Enlistment Act, 1870, if any person within her majesty's dominions, without her majesty's licence, despatches any ship with intent that the same shall be employed in the military or naval service of any foreign state at war with any friendly state, the ship in respect of which any such offence is committed and her equipment shall be forfeited to her majesty:—Held, that a vessel despatched to furnish and lay a submarine telegraph cable along the French coast between Cherbourg and Verdun was not despatched to be employed in the military service of France. The International, 40 L. J., Adm. 1; L. R. 3 Adm. 321; 23 L. T. 787.

Release of Ship.]—Application to release such a vessel granted, but without costs and damages. Ib.

When a cause is instituted against a ship in respect of which an offence against the Foreign Enlistment Act, 1870, is alleged to have been committed, the court may, with or without the consent of the crown, order the ship to be released on bail. The Gauntlet, L. R. 3 Adm. 319; 24 L. T. 597.

When such order is made, bail will be required for the full value of the ship and her equipment, but not for any further sum for costs. Ib.

—— Indemnity for Detention.]—In an application to the court of admiralty for indemnity by the crown in respect of the detention of vessels under s. 24, where the secretary of state has released the vessels without issuing his warrant stating reasonable and probable cause for the detention, the proper form of procedure is by motion upon affidavit. The Great Northern and The Midland, 25 L. T. 201.

The crown is entitled to time to answer the affidavits in support of the application, so as to raise any questions of law and fact. Ib.

Preparing or fitting out Naval or Military Expedition.]—The offences created by ss. 11 and 12 of the Foreign Enlistment Act, 1870, is complete if a person, without the licence of her majesty, in a place within her dominions where the act is in operation, prepares, or assists in, or aids, or abets in the preparation of a military or naval expedition, with the intention that it should proceed against the dominions of a friendly state, whether or no it should have in fact so proceeded. Reg. v. Jameson, 65 L. J., M. C. 218; 60 J. P. 662.

A person may commit the offence created by ss. 11 and 12, although not himself within her majesty's dominions, when he so engages, or assists, or aids, or abets, or counsels the preparation or fitting out of such expedition. Ib.

A person may commit the offence of taking employment in such an expedition, although he has not engaged, or assisted, or aided in the preparation of the expedition, and although he accepts employment in it outside the limits of her majesty's dominions. Ib.

An expedition to proceed against the dominions of a friendly state is one which intends either by actual force or show of force—(a) to interfere with the constituted government, laws, or administration of such a state; (b) to bring about by such means the reform of those laws or that administration; (c) to substitute for the protection of any class in such a state its own protection in the place of the protection of any existing law and its administrators; or (d) to join with others either within or without the dominions of such friendly state in overawing or coercing the government of such state to obtain any change in such law or administration. It is none the less such an expedition because it may not be aimed at the overthrow of such a government, or because its participators may be actuated by motives of philanthropy or humanity. Ib.

The offence of fitting out and preparing an expedition within the queen's dominions against a friendly state, under s. 11 of the Foreign Enlistment Act, 1870, is sufficiently constituted by the purchase of guns and ammunition in this country, and their shipment for the purpose of being put on board a ship in a foreign port, with a knowledge of the purchaser and shipper that they are to be used in a hostile demonstration against such state, though the shipper takes no part in any overt act of war, and the ship is not fully equipped for the expedition within any port belonging to the queen's dominions. Reg. v. Sandoval, 56 L. T. 526; 35 W. R. 500; 16 Cox, C. C. 206; 51 J. P. 709.

—— Indictment—Form—Matter of Inducement—Material Facts—General Averment.]—A count in an indictment stating that the defendants "within the limits of her majesty's dominions and after the coming into operation therein of the Foreign Enlistment Act, 1870, and without the licence of her majesty, were engaged in the preparation of a military expedition to proceed against the dominions of a friendly state," is a valid count, inasmuch as it contains a reasonable and intelligible statement that the defendants, in a place within her majesty's dominions in which the act was in operation, were engaged in the preparation of an expedition which would be an offence against the act. Reg. v. Jameson, 65 L. J., M. C. 218; [1896] 2 Q. B. 425; 75 L. T. 77; 18 Cox, C. C. 392; 60 J. P. 662.

It is not necessary in a count in an indictment under the Foreign Enlistment Act, 1870, which concludes with the allegation that the offence is against the form of the statute and against the peace of the queen, to state that the defendants are in fact, if they be so, subjects of the queen. Ib.

Proclamation—Where Necessary.]—It was intended by s. 3 of the Foreign Enlistment Act, 1870, that the necessity for proclamation of the act should apply to possessions existing as such at the date of the passing of the act. Reg. v. Jameson, 65 L. J., M. C. 218; 60 J. P. 662.

—— Declaration of War—Illegality—Right of Seamen to quit Ship and recover Wages for Entire Voyage.]—The defendants, who had agreed with the Japanese government, in consideration of a lump sum, to transport a ship of war, the property of the latter, from this country, where the ship had been built, to Japan, agreed with S. that he should enter their service as captain of the ship, and should remain in the capacity of captain during the voyage from this country to Japan. The plaintiff engaged with S. to serve as seaman on board the ship for the voyage. The ship started from this country upon her voyage flying the Japanese flag and pennant. Before the completion of the voyage the Japanese government declared war with China, and at Aden the proclamation of British neutrality under the Foreign Enlistment Act, 1870, was read by the British governor to the crew. The plaintiff thereupon refused to complete the voyage and left the ship. In an action (which it was agreed should be treated as an action against S.) by the plaintiff to recover the amount of his wages for the entire voyage:—Held, that, notwithstanding the terms of the agreement between S. and the defendants, there was evidence that S. was a servant of the Japanese government, and that, the voyage having been altered by the act of his principals from an ordinary voyage into a voyage of increased risk, the plaintiff was justified in refusing to continue to serve on board the ship, and was entitled to recover his wages for the entire voyage. O'Neill v. Armstrong, 65 L. J., Q. B. 7; [1895] 2 Q. B. 418; 14 R. 703; 73 L. T. 178; 8 Asp. M. C. 63—C. A. Affirming 43 W. R. 554.

b. Cases Decided under Act of 1819.

What Governments.]—Sect. 7 (repealed) of the Foreign Enlistment Act, 1819, provided that if any person shall, without the leave, &c., equip, furnish, or fit out, any ship or vessel with intent or in order that such ship or vessel shall be employed in the service of any foreign prince, or of any person or persons exercising or assuming to exercise any powers of government in or over any foreign state as a transport, &c., every such person shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and every such ship shall be forfeited. A ship was fitted out as a transport for the service of certain persons in the island of Cuba, who had revolted from Spain, and had assumed to exercise government, and were conducting hostilities against Spain. It did not appear who the persons were or over what part of Cuba they assumed to exercise government:—Held, that, inasmuch as the persons in whose service the ship was employed assumed to exercise government, there was a breach of the provisions of the act, and the ship was liable to forfeiture. The Salvador, 6 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 509; 39 L. J., Adm. 33; L. R. 3 P. C. 218; 23 L. T. 203; 18 W. R. 1054.

Building Ship.]—If a British shipbuilder builds a vessel of war in an English port, and arms and equips her for war bonâ fide on his own account as an article of merchandise, and not under or by virtue of any agreement, understanding or concert with a belligerent power, he may lawfully, if acting bonâ fide, send the ship so armed and equipped for sale as merchandise in a belligerent country, and will not in so doing violate the provisions or incur the penalties of the Foreign Enlistment Act, 1819 (repealed). Chavasse, Ex parte, Grazebrook, In re, 4 De G. J. & S. 655; 34 L. J., Bk. 17; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 400; 12 L. T. 249; 13 W. R. 627.

The building, in pursuance of a contract, with intention to sell and deliver to a belligerent power, the hull of a vessel suitable for war, but unarmed, and not equipped, furnished, or fitted out with anything which enables her to cruise or commit hostilities, or do any warlike act whatever, was not a violation of the Foreign Enlistment Act, 1819 (repealed). The Alexandra, 2 H. & C. 431; 33 L. J., Ex. 92; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 262; 11 L. T. 223; 12 W. R. 257. S. C., at nisi prius, 3 F. & F. 646.

Serving on board Ship.]—Serving on board a vessel used as a store-ship in aid of a belligerent ship, the fitting out of which to be so used is an offence within s. 7 (repealed), is a serving on board a vessel used or fitted out for a warlike purpose in the service or in aid of a foreign state within s. 2. Burton v. Pinkerton, 36 L. J., Ex. 137; L. R. 2 Ex. 340; 16 L. T. 419; 15 W. R. 1139.

In an action for taking a steam-vessel, the defendant pleaded that he was an admiral in the Portuguese navy, and that he took the vessel as a lawful prize, which was condemned by the supreme tribunal of marine, at Lisbon, and became forfeited to the queen of Portugal. In other pleas the trespass was justified under the authority of the queen of Portugal, jure belli. Replication, that the defendant being a natural-born subject of this kingdom, in contravention of the Foreign Enlistment Act, 1819 (repealed), accepted the commission of admiral, without the leave and licence of the king of England:—Held, that the pleas were a conclusive bar to the action, and that the replication afforded no answer to the pleas. Dobree v. Napier, 2 Hodges, 84; 2 Bing. (N.C.) 782; 3 Scott, 201; 5 L. J., C. P. 273.

On an indictment, that at Liverpool the defendants engaged and procured men to enlist as sailors in the service of a belligerent state, the evidence being that the men were engaged by the defendants at Liverpool to enter themselves as the crew of a vessel lying there for a voyage to China, and that afterwards, when the vessel was off the coast of France, the men were, in the presence of one of the defendants, enlisted in the belligerent service, the jury was directed, that if the defendants engaged the men with the intention that they should afterwards be enlisted abroad in the belligerent service, the indictment was sustained. Reg. v. Jones, 4 F. & F. 25.

On an indictment against a British subject, it appeared that he engaged men in this country to serve on board a vessel which he then took to Madeira, and there met and signalled a ship of the belligerent power, and went with it to anchor off an island which belonged to a foreign state, and there received on board the former vessel an officer of the belligerent power, to whom he handed over the command, and who in his presence used incitements to his men to induce them to enlist, all of them, however, refusing to do so except one or two, not proved to have been British subjects. The jury was directed to find whether, when the defendant originally engaged the men, he had the intention not only to take the vessel out to deliver her over to the belligerent commander, but also to enable him to incite and induce them to enlist, the question being reserved whether that would constitute an offence under the statute. Reg. v. Corbett, 4 F. & F. 555.

On an indictment for causing men to enlist or engage in the Confederate service as sailors, and also for counselling men here to enlist in such service abroad, and for assisting in the equipment of a vessel for such service, the evidence showing that an old gunboat, dismantled of all warlike equipments, was purchased at Sheerness, with a view to her being engaged in the Confederate service; that the defendant took an active part in repairing her, and fitting her for sea, and also in engaging men to go in her as firemen or stokers for a trial trip: that she went over to Calais, and that there the Confederate flag was hoisted, and a Confederate captain came on board, who attempted to enlist the men; and that, after this, the defendant was on board, and still used his endeavours to send men on board the vessel as stokers:—Held, that the material point was his knowledge of the ultimate destination of the vessel; that his acts after knowledge of it were evidence of his having had such knowledge before the acts of engagement in this country; that the acts abroad were evidence of the intention of the acts in this country; that the mere repairing of the vessel for a trial trip was not an equipping; and that the clause as to enlistment applied to the engagement of men in any capacity connected with the navigating of the vessel, as firemen, stokers, or engineers. Reg. v. Rumble, 4 F. & F. 175.

Capture—Running Blockade.]—Notwithstanding the Foreign Enlistment Act, 1819 (repealed), a British subject, who, in the service of a foreign state at peace with Great Britain, captures a British vessel, which is lawfully condemned as a prize for breaking blockade, is not liable to an action at the suit of the owner of the vessel. Dobree v. Napier, 2 Bing. (N.C.) 781; 3 Scott, 201; 2 Hodges, 81; 5 L. J., C. P. 273.

Indictment—Corporation.]—An incorporated company demurred to a bill, because the discovery thereby sought might subject it to criminal prosecution under the Foreign Enlistment Act, 1819 (to prevent the enlisting of his majesty's subjects for foreign service, and the fitting out, in his majesty's dominions, vessels for warlike purposes without his licence):—Held, that a corporation was not liable to be indicted under that act, and demurrer overruled. Two Sicilies (King) v. Willcox or Peninsular and Oriental Co., 1 Sim. (N.S.) 334; 19 L. J., Ch. 488; 14 Jur. 751.

Contracts—Validity.]—A bill will not be entertained for an account and payment of moneys due for expenses incurred in fitting out and supporting certain troops called the Irish Legion, in the service of the republic of Colombia. S. C., nom. Macnamara v. Devereux, C. P. Cooper, 489; 3 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 156.

3. Prize of War.

a. Rights as to.

Forfeiture of Goods.]—Goods which are contraband of war, in the course of transport from a neutral port to a neutral port, in a neutral ship, are not by the law of nations liable to seizure by the cruisers of a belligerent state, even though the shipper may know or intend that they shall ultimately reach a port belonging to the enemies of the captors. To render goods contraband of war liable to seizure, they must be taken in delicto, that is, in the actual prosecution of a voyage to an enemy's port. Hobbs v. Henning, 17 C. B. (N.S.) 791; 34 L. J., C. P. 117; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 222; 12 L. T. 205; 13 W. R. 431.

Forfeiture of Ship.]—Nor does the mere fact that the ship carries simulated papers per se operate as a forfeiture of either ship or goods, though it may afford evidence from which a prize-court may infer that the ship was or the goods were enemy's property, or that her destination was to a blockaded port or to an enemy's port with contraband of war. Ib.

—— Effect of Transfer or Sale.]—A ship, originally the property of a Russian, was by him given to his son, domiciled in Denmark, as a part of the son's share in the father's property. The transfer took place in 1853. It was argued, on behalf of the captors, that to allow a voluntary transfer without valuable consideration at the beginning or on the probability of a war, would open a way of safety to the whole mercantile navy of a belligerent. The Benedict, 4 W. R. 165.

An absolute bonâ fide sale or transfer of an enemy's ship to a subject of a neutral state made imminente bello, was held not to be illegal, the transfer having been effected and the ship having come fully into the possession of a purchaser at a port at which she stopped in the course of a voyage, before arriving at her ultimate destination. The rule of prize-courts, that the transfer of a ship in transitu is ineffectual, does not apply to such a case. The Baltica, 6 W. R. 308—P. C.

An absolute bonâ fide sale or transfer of a ship by an enemy to a subject of a neutral state, without fraud or collusion, made in contemplation of war, is not illegal, though a part only of the purchase-money is paid at the time, and the remainder is payable out of the ship's freight. The Ariel, 5 W. R. 427—P. C.

A. being sole possessor of a ship, gave a claim on behalf of B. The evidence showed that A. was the real owner, having, for purposes not fraudulent on the belligerent, made a colourable sale to B. Claim allowed to be amended and proved on further proof. The Panaghia Rhomba, infra.

—— Breach of Blockade.]—A neutral vessel, seized near the Gulf of Riga by one of her majesty's ships of war for an alleged breach of blockade, was condemned by sentence of the court of admiralty:—Held, on appeal, that a ship belonging to a neutral state cannot be condemned, unless the port for which she was sailing was legally in a state of blockade, and was known to be so by the master or owner; and, there having been great doubt about the existence of the blockade in question, and whether, if established, it was one that would be recognised by the British government, a restitution of the proceeds of the ship and freight must be advised, but without costs to the claimant. The Franciska, 4 W. R. 100—P. C.

A neutral vessel, on coming out of the port of Riga, was seized by one of her majesty's ships of war for an alleged breach of blockade:—Held, that the master of the ship having had full knowledge of the blockade when he left the port, the sentence of the court of admiralty, condemning the vessel, must be affirmed. The Johanna Maria, 4 W. R. 106—P. C.

Where the excuse for going into a blockaded port is the leaky state of the ship, captors allowed to give further proof as to condition of the vessel. The Panaghia Rhomba, 3 Jur. (N.S.) 23; 5 W. R. 104.

A voyage is not illegal by the circumstance that the ship's destination is a port which, according to the latest accounts, was under blockade, if it appear that no violation of it was intended. Dalgleish v. Hodson, 5 M. & P. 407; 7 Bing. 495; 9 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 138.

The purpose of a blockade was declared to be for preventing the import of provisions to the enemy in possession of a neutral's country. Semble, that the fact of a neutral ship bringing out a cargo of corn is not a breach of such blockade. The Gerasimo, 11 Moore, P. C. 88; 5 W. R. 450.

—— Neutral, not Sole Owner.]—A vessel with a neutral flag was seized on suspicion of being the property of the enemy. On her papers being examined, it was found that the claimant, who professed to be the subject of a neutral state, was not the sole owner, but that one of the subjects of the enemy's country had also an interest in the vessel:—Held, that the sentence of the court of admiralty, condemning the vessel, must be affirmed, and that the application on the part of the claimant to be allowed to produce further proof must be refused. The Nina, 4 W. R. 319—P. C.

Privateer.] — Privateer sailing and taking prize without letters of marque, the prize belongs to the king as a droit of the crown. Nicol v. Goodall, 10 Ves. 155.

English Ship Captured by Enemy—Sale to Englishman.]—If a British ship, captured by an enemy, is afterwards purchased by a subject of this realm, she is still the property of the person from whom she was captured. Woodward v. Larking, 3 Esp. 286.

How Property may Pass.]—The property in a prize of war may pass to the captors without the prize being taken into a port belonging to the country of the captors, or being condemned by a prize court. The Gauntlet, 40 L. J., Adm. 34; L. R. 3 Adm. 381; 25 L. T. 69. S. C., reversed, 41 L. J., Adm. 65; L. R. 4 P. C. 184; 26 L. T. 45; 20 W. R. 497. But not on this point.

Ship of War—What is.]—A prize of war (a merchantman), with a prize crew on board, is not a ship of war. Ib.

Foreign Enlistment Act.]—In an action for taking a steam-vessel, the defendant pleaded that he was an admiral in the Portuguese navy, and that he took the vessel as a lawful prize, which was condemned by the supreme tribunal of marine, at Lisbon, and became forfeited to the queen of Portugal. In other pleas the trespass was justified under the authority of the queen of Portugal, jure belli. Replication, that the defendant being a natural-born subject of this kingdom, in contravention of the Foreign Enlistment Act, 1819, accepted the commission of admiral, without the leave and licence of the king of England:—Held, that the pleas were a conclusive bar to the action, and that the replication afforded no answer to the pleas. Dobree v. Napier, 2 Hodges, 84; 2 Bing. (N.C.) 782; 3 Scott, 201; 5 L. J., C. P. 273.

Distribution.]—As to the general principles and adjudication and distribution of booty and prize of war, see Banda and Kirwee Booty case, 35 L. J., Adm. 17; L. R. 1 Adm. 109; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 819; 14 L. T. 293.

The admiral who is in command at the time when the prize is taken, is entitled to the flag-officer's share of prize. Pigot v. White, 1 H. Bl. 265, n.; 4 Dougl. 302.

Where, from a change in the command on a station, it becomes doubtful to which admiral the flag-officer's share of a prize taken by a ship detached for the purpose of cruising belongs, it is clear that it does not belong to the captain in command of such ship. Taylor v. Paulett (Lord), 1 H. Bl. 264, n.

A captain of marines who happens to be on board a man-of-war when she takes a prize, but does not belong to her complement, shares only as a passenger. Wemyss v. Linsyee, 1 Dougl. 324.

The captain of a ship actually on board at the time of the capture is entitled to prize-money though under arrest at the time, and though another officer had been sent on board to command the ship. Lumley v. Sutton, 8 Term Rep. 224.

If a prize is taken by two or more privateers, they are to share proportionally according to the number of men of which their respective crews consist. Roberts v. Hartley, 1 Dougl. 311.

An admiral who supersedes another admiral, and takes him under command, is entitled to one-eighth part of prizes captured after such command, but under orders issued by the admiral who has been superseded. Pigot v. White, 4 Dougl. 302.

A captain in the army sent with his company on board a man-of-war (by order of the admiral of the fleet with which they were sailing), and there acting as marines, is not entitled to share prize-money as captain of marines. Mackenzie v. Maylor, 4 Dougl. 3.

A prize was taken by a revenue cutter, during the suspension of the commander, by the mate, who acted as commander under an order from the commissioners of customs:—Held, that he was entitled to the commander's share under the king's warrant of distributions. Taylor v. Pile, 8 Taunt. 805.

If an admiral is appointed by the admiralty, and actually has given an order to a fleet, he is entitled to share in captures, though he was not within the station at the time they were made. Captures on the Jamaica Station, 1 Hag. Adm. 129.

Charter-party of affreightment between the owners of the ship M. and the commissioners of transports for and on behalf of his majesty; during its continuance in the transport service the ship makes a capture, which is condemned, and upon petition to the treasury, two-thirds of a moiety of the proceeds arising from the capture were ordered by warrant from the crown to be paid to the owners. These proceeds are entirely at the discretion of the crown; and upon motion for payment into court of a sum, admitted by the commissioners of transports to be due for freight under the charter-party, which motion was resisted on the ground that the commissioners were entitled to set off the amount of the proceeds received by the owners under the warrant, payment was ordered accordingly, without prejudice to the question of ownership. Thurgar v. Morley, 3 Mer. 20.

—— Apprentice.]—The prize-money, gained by an apprentice serving on board a letter of marque ship, does not belong to the master of the apprentice; the usage being proved to be that such money is the property of the apprentice. Carsan v. Watts, 3 Dougl. 350.

—— Jurisdiction—Account.]—A court of equity has jurisdiction upon a bill by officers of the army and the East India Company, on behalf of themselves and all others, &c., for an account of prize-money received beyond the due proportion, and for a distribution according to the king's grant and usage, considering the defendants as trustees; but upon the construction of the grant, as not creating a trust, a demurrer was allowed. Brown v. Harris, 13 Ves. 552; 9 R. R. 221.

Bill by one of the officers and crew of a privateer against the owner, for an account of captures according to the articles. Leave given to amend, by stating that the bill was on behalf of the plaintiff and all others; upon that amendment the account was decreed. Good v. Blewitt, 13 Ves. 397.

Two captains of ships of war enter into an agreement that all prizes taken by either of them, whether in the ships they then had, or in any other ship which they might thereafter command, should be equally divided between them. One of them changed his ship, which, meeting with an accident, was ordered to be laid up, and it was some time before he got another. The other captain continued cruising all the time, but objected to account for the prizes which he took during the interval of his partner's being unemployed:—Held, that he was accountable for all the prizes taken from the date of the agreement. Ogle v. Sansom, 1 Bro. P. C. 149.

Bill for an account and share of prize-money dismissed, the sum being certain, and the remedy at law against the prize agents. Ogle v. Haddock, 1 Ves. 161.

—— Assignment of Interest.]—No interest complete vested in prizes before condemnation; but upon condemnation it is considered the property of the captor from the time of the capture. The crown in prize grants puts what is strictly bounty upon the footing of right, considering the claim as transmissible to the legal representatives of the claimant, deceased before the grant, subject to his will, &c., as his other property. Stevens v. Bagwell, 15 Ves. 139; 10 R. R. 46.

Military prize, when captured, is capable of being effectually assigned by the captor, before any interest in it has been vested in him by a grant from the crown. A warrant of the crown, conveying military prize to trustees upon trust, to collect, recover, and receive the same, and directing the trustees, as soon as the case would permit, to prepare a scheme for the distribution thereof, conformably to certain principles therein stated, and to submit such schemes to the lords of the treasury, for the signification of the royal pleasure thereon, is not an absolute or final grant: it creates no vested interest in any particular individuals, as objects of the bounty; nor can persons claiming to be cestuis que trustent compel a distribution under it by a suit in equity against the trustees. Semble, the crown may at any time before distribution alter or revoke a grant of military prize. Alexander v. Wellington (Duke), 2 Russ. & M. 35; 9 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 36.

A captor of a prize may legally assign his share therein before condemnation. Morrough v. Comyns, 1 Wils. 211.

Assignment of sailor's share of prize money at great undervalue, set aside for fraud, but still to stand as security for what really advanced. The same equity as to an under-assignment. How v. Weldon, 2 Ves. 516.

Sale of a seaman's prize money, and subsequent agreement in confirmation, set aside. Taylour v. Rochfort, 2 Ves. 281.

—— Condemnation Reversed.]—The plaintiffs, together with others, being owners of one ship, and the defendant of another, a prize as taken, condemned and shared by agreement between them; afterwards the sentence of condemnation was reversed, and restitution awarded with costs, which were paid solely by the plaintiffs; an action cannot be brought by the plaintiffs alone for their share of the restitution money and costs, because it was either a partnership transaction, when the other parties ought to be joined, or not, when separate actions should be brought by each of the persons paying. Graham v. Robertson, 2 Term Rep. 282.

—— Grant to Secretary of State "in Trust."]—The crown, by royal warrant, "granted to the secretary of state for India in council for the time being" certain booty taken in war "in trust for the use of" certain persons, who had been adjudged entitled to it upon a reference to the court of admiralty, to be distributed among them, with a further provision that in case any doubts should arise in the course of the distribution the decision of the secretary of state should be final, unless the crown should otherwise order:—Held, (1) That the secretary of state for India in council could only sue or be sued as a corporation under 21 & 22 Vict. c. 106, s. 65, in proceedings which might have been taken by or against the late East India Company; (2) That the royal warrant constituted the secretary of state for India in council an agent of the crown for the purpose of the distribution of the fund under the control of the crown, but did not constitute him a trustee for the persons interested subject to the control of a court of equity. Alexander v. Wellington (Duke) (2 Russ. & My. 35) discussed. Brown v. Harris (13 Ves. 552; 9 R. R. 221) distinguished. Kinloch v. Secretary of State for India, 51 L. J., Ch. 885; 7 App. Cas. 619; 47 L. T. 133; 30 W. R. 845—H. L. (E.)

—— Parties who may bring the Suit.]—The actual captors, though they may institute the suit, are plaintiffs only in name, as the burthen of proof rests with those claiming a right to share in the booty. Banda and Kirwee Booty case, supra.

Prize Agent.]—Claims being made on a prize agent by several persons for the prize money due to a sailor, he was permitted, as a public officer, to pay the money into court for the benefit of that claimant who should prove his authority to receive it. Edwards v. Minett, 1 Taunt. 166.

Two warrants for bounties, each for a distinct capture made by the same two vessels jointly, were made out in the joint names of their respective agents, and the proceeds paid on their joint receipts; each agent took possession of a portion of bounties, but no regular severance or appropriation was made; one of the agents became a bankrupt with the proceeds of one warrant in his hands; the other agent is bound to distribute the proceeds of the other warrant between the two vessels. Vecua (Gomez), 2 Hag. Adm. 346.

A. and B. being joint prize agents, A. is imposed on by persons falsely pretending to be sailors, to whom he pays a sum of money, which he is subsequently compelled to pay again to the person really entitled. B. is not bound to contribute to the sum so paid. M'Ilreath v. Margetson, 4 Dougl. 278.

Limited responsibility of a foreign prize agent who acted a fair part, and did everything for the best under the circumstances of the case. The Trabacolos, 1 Hag. Adm. 294.

A prize agent makes certain advances to captors prior to a regular distribution of the proceeds, and becomes a bankrupt:—Held, that the sureties and their representatives are liable for his deficiencies in the first instance: inforcement of a monition to refund suspended. The Triton, 1 Hag. Adm. 290.

Proof of Title.]—If any doubt exists as to the character of a ship claimed to be the property of a neutral, being still enemy's property, the rule of the prize court is, that the claimant shall be put to strict proof of ownership, and any circumstance of fraud, or contrivance or attempt at imposition on the court, in making out his title, is fatal to the claimant; condemnation of the ship as enemy's property necessarily follows. Batten v. Reg., 11 Moore, P. C. 271.

Imprisonment consequent on taking Prize—No Action.]—No action at common law lies for false imprisonment, where the imprisonment was merely in consequence of taking a ship as prize, although the ship has been acquitted. La Caux v. Eden, 2 Dougl. 594.

Restitution.]—In the case of a vessel which has been seized as being the property of subjects of an enemy, but which was clearly shown to have become neutral property before the declaration of war, an order for restitution was advised by the judicial committee of the privy council to the claimants, to whom the property in the ship had been formally transferred, and who were thus invested with the character of owners, there being no other party who could set up a title against them. The Maria, 5 W. R. 825—P. C.

Joint Capture.]—In cases of joint capture "being in sight" means being seen by the prize as well as the captor, and the claim for joint capture may be pronounced for in the absence of evidence from the prize. The time of surrender is not the time of taking possession, but the striking of colours, or other plain sign of abandoning the intention of flight or resistance. The Brazil, 4 W. R. 375.

The principles of joint capture in prize cases, apply to vessels associated in the capture of ships engaged in the slave trade; therefore, when the actual capture was made by one of two vessels associated for such purpose, the other, which had joined in the chase and rendered subsequent assistance:—Held, entitled to share in the bounty for the slaves, and in the proceeds of the ship, stores, and cargo. The Aviso, 2 Hag. Adm. 31.

A vessel which had chased a slave ship into a situation from which she could not escape, and then (being herself forced by a leak to abandon the chase) informed the capturing vessel thereof:—Held, not entitled as a joint captor. The Orestes, 2 Hag. Adm. 38, n.

In joint captures, only the actual force present shares in the prize; therefore when a tender of one ship was joint captor with another ship, the prize was shared proportionally between the capturing ship and the tender. The Zepherina, 2 Hag. Adm. 317.

An abandonment of pursuit and a return to the former course of the ship, before the act of capture, defeats the claim of joint capture, notwithstanding some assistance may have been rendered at the early part of the chase. The Rattlesnake, 2 Dods. 32.

Where a prize, coming out of a blockaded harbour, was captured by one of the blockading squadron stationed off the mouth of the port; it was determined that the other vessels of the squadron, although stationed at some distance, were entitled to share in the prize. The Henrietta, 2 Dods. 96.

Where two vessels join for the purpose of effecting a capture, the continuance of the chase is sufficient to create the right of joint capture, whether the vessels are in sight of each other or not. The Etoile, 2 Dods 106.

A general claim of joint capture may be supported by a king's ship, on the ground of right only; but this general rule is liable to exceptions. The Melam, 2 Dods. 122.

One of his majesty's ships of war being in itinere, and barely seeing or hearing a firing on the land, is not entitled to take any share in the beneficial effects of an attack made by a force with which she had rendered no assistance, or had any communication. The Genoa and Savona, 2 Dods. 88.

That is clearly a conjunct expedition, which is directed by competent authority, combining together the actions of two different species of force for the attainment of some common specific purpose. Booty in the Peninsula, 1 Hag. Adm. 39.

Place of Capture.]—Captors' evidence is not in general admissible to prove the place of capture, where the ship's papers and depositions in preparatory are consistent and on the face of them satisfactory. The Aline and Fanny, 2 Jur. (N.S.) 143 ; 4 W. R. 321.

Liability of Captors.]—Where upon the ship's papers and depositions in preparatory no probable cause of seizure appears, captors condemned in costs and damages. Evidence in their behalf not admissible generally. The Fortuna, 2 Jur. (N.S.) 71 ; 4 W. R. 166.

Although a captor be only actuated by feelings of public duty, in destroying the property he has taken, yet he is responsible to the claimant, and must apply to his own government for indemnification. The Acteon, 2 Dods. 51, 52, 53.

Captors having a bonâ fide possession, and using due care, are not responsible for losses occasioned by mere misfortune. The John Beck, 2 Dods. 336.

A seizor is clearly entitled to be indemnified his expenses, when nothing vexatious can be objected against him. The Woodbridge, 1 Hag. Adm. 63.

Captors, though bonâ fide possessors, are liable for value of stores embezzled after capture and before the ship is taken possession of by custom house authorities. The Aline and Fanny, 3 Jur. (N.S.) 24 ; 5 W. R. 153.

b. Jurisdiction of English Courts.

None as to Booty till 3 & 4 Vict. c. 65.]—The court of admiralty had no jurisdiction with respect to booty until the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 65, the 22nd section of which, enacting that the court "shall proceed as in cases of prize of war," must be understood to mean, not that in all respects the distribution of booty should be assimilated to that of prize, but that the ordinary course of proceeding in prize should be adopted. Banda and Kirwee Booty case, 35 L. J., Adm. 17 ; L. R. 1 Adm. 109 ; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 819 ; 14 L. T. 293.

As to Capture—Exclusive.]—The jurisdiction over all matters of prize, and everything consequential to a capture, belongs exclusively to the court of admiralty. Lindo v. Rodney, 2 Dougl. 613, n.

The question of prize or no prize, or by whom taken, cannot be tried at common law, but must be decided by the judge of the court of admiralty; and the jurisdiction depends not upon the locality, nor upon the parties, but upon the nature of the question, which is such as cannot be tried by any rules of common law, but by the general law of nations, which is there administered by forms best adapted to the subject of its jurisdiction, and the interests of the parties. Mitchell v. Rodney, 2 Bro. P. C. 423.

The prize courts and courts of lords commissioners of appeals have the sole and exclusive jurisdiction over the question of prize or no prize, and who are the captors, notwithstanding any of the prize acts ; and if they pronounce a sentence of condemnation, adjudging also who are the captors, the courts of common law cannot examine the justice or propriety of it. Camden (Lord) v. Home, 6 Bro. P. C. 243 ; 2 H. Bl. 533 ; 4 Term Rep. 382.

Where a ship is bonâ fide seized as prize, the owner cannot sustain an action in a court of common law for the seizure, though she is released without any suit being instituted against her ; his remedy, if any, being in the court of admiralty. Faith v. Pearson, 2 Marsh. 133 ; 6 Taunt. 439 ; 4 Camp. 357 ; Holt, 113 ; 16 R. R. 649.

The court of chancery has admiralty jurisdiction. Letters of marque and reprisal may be repealed in chancery after a peace, though there is a clause in the letters patent that no treaty of peace shall prejudice them. Rex v. Carew, 1 Vern. 54 ; 3 Swanst. 669.

Where a privateer had taken a prize without having letters of marque, and the court of admiralty had sentenced her as a droit to the crown, the court of chancery refused, with costs, to restrain the parties from receiving, or the registrar of the admiralty from paying, the proceeds under a treasury warrant. Nicol v. Goodall, 10 Ves. 155.

Prohibition to enjoin judge of prize court from proceeding in a question of prize or no prize, refused. Lynch, Ex parte, 1 Madd. 15.

If an ally actually co-operates in effecting a capture, he cannot recover any proportion of the prizes in the common law courts of this country ; he must sue in the prize courts. Duckworth v. Tucker, 2 Taunt. 7.

—— After Termination of War.]—The court of admiralty has jurisdiction to entertain prize proceedings commenced after the cessation of war. Katharina, Cargo Ex, Lush. 142 ; 30 L. J., Adm. 21 ; 3 L. T. 597.

A British ship was taken by the Americans, and afterwards retaken by one of the British crew, brought into port, and condemned. A writ of prohibition to enjoin the judge of the prize court from proceeding after the termination of the war, at the suit of the American owners, to try the question of the recapture, was refused ; it being a case clearly within the jurisdiction of a court of prize, and such jurisdiction not being determined by the cessation of the hostilities. The Harmony, G. Cooper, 325.

c. Foreign Prize Courts.

Sentence—Effect of.]—The sentence of a court of admiralty, sitting under a commission from a belligerent power, in a neutral country, will not be recognised in our courts ; and that is to be considered a neutral country for this purpose, in which the forms of an independent neutral government are preserved, although the belligerent may have such a body of troops stationed there as in reality to possess the sovereign authority. Donaldson v. Thompson, 1 Camp. 429 ; 10 R. R. 717. And see Smith v. Surridge, 4 Esp. 25 ; 6 R. R. 837.

A sentence of a foreign court of prize is conclusive evidence upon every matter within the jurisdiction of such court upon which it has professed to decide. Bolton v. Gladstone, 5 East, 155 ; 1 Smith, 372 ; 2 Taunt. 85 ; 7 R. R. 674 ; 11 R. R. 532.

And if it can be discerned on the face of the sentence that the court condemned on the ground that the property was enemy's property, the sentence is conclusive evidence in the courts here that the property was not neutral. Ib.

A sentence of a foreign court of admiralty is only conclusive here as to the express ground of the sentence, but not as to any of the premises (noticed in the consideration part of the sentence) that led to the adjudication. Christie v. Secretan, 8 Term Rep. 192.

The sentence of a foreign court of admiralty is evidence only of what it positively and specifically affirms in the adjudicative part of it, not of what may be gathered from it by way of inference. Fisher v. Ogle, 1 Camp. 418.

The sentence of the foreign court of admiralty, condemning a vessel for attempting to violate a blockade, is not conclusive, unless the fact upon which the condemnation proceeded appears, on the face of the sentence, free from doubt and ambiguity; it cannot be collected by mere inference, nor can it be left to uncertainty, whether the vessel was condemned upon one ground, which would be a just ground of condemnation by the law of nations, or on another ground which would only amount to a breach of the municipal regulations of the condemning country. Dalgleish v. Hodgson, 5 M. & P. 407; 7 Bing. 495; 9 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 138.

A sentence of condemnation of a prize taken by a French privateer and carried into Spain by a French court sitting there (Spain being then a belligerent ally of France in the war against Great Britain) was valid: and such condemnation, proceeding on the ground of the property being enemy's and British, is conclusive in an action on a policy against the underwriter by the assured, who had insured it as Danish, which in fact it was, Denmark being then neutral. Oddy v. Bovill, 2 East, 473; 6 R. R. 482.

In an action on a policy of insurance on goods warranted American on board a ship from London to Virginia, a sentence of a foreign court, which, after reciting that "forasmuch as the true destination of the vessel was for the English islands, having been hired and loaded at London, and having on board eighty barrels of gunpower," declared the ship and cargo a good prize, is not conclusive evidence against the warranty of neutrality; because the special grounds assigned for the sentence do not necessarily lead to such a conclusion. Calvert v. Bovill, 7 Term Rep. 523; 4 R. R. 517.

The sentence of a prize court condemning a vessel is not conclusive as to any matter of fact which was the ground of condemnation, unless that matter of fact is clearly and certainly stated in the judgment as a ground of condemnation. Hobbs v. Henning, 17 C. B. (N.S.) 791; 34 L. J., C. P. 117; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 223; 12 L. T. 205; 13 W. R. 431.

Although the finding of a matter of fact in the judgment of a prize court may, when adduced in evidence, be conclusive evidence of the fact so found, it cannot be pleaded as an estoppel. Ib.

4. War Indemnity.

Who Entitled to.]—The foreign wife of a British subject is not entitled to compensation for the loss of her separate property under a treaty, providing such a compensation for British subjects, unless she has herself acquired a domicile in Great Britain at the time of her loss. A foreigner domiciled in Great Britain is, under such a treaty, entitled to claim compensation for his losses. Conway's case, 2 Knapp, 364.

The son of a British father who had entered into the service of France, and taken the oath of a Knight of the Order of St. Louis, is entitled to the character of a British subject, although he himself was born in France of a French mother, and had served in the French army. Wall's case, 3 Knapp, 13.

A person who possesses the characters both of a French subject under the municipal law of France, and of a British subject under the stat. 13 Geo. 3, c. 26, as the grandson of a natural-born British subject, although he himself and his father were born in a foreign country, is not entitled to claim compensation for the loss he has sustained from a confiscation of his property by the French government, under a treaty between Great Britain and France, giving compensation for such a loss to British subjects. Drummond's case, 2 Knapp, 295.

A corporation of Irishmen, existing in a foreign country, and under the control of a foreign government, must be considered as a foreign corporation, and is not therefore entitled to claim compensation for the loss of its property under a treaty, giving the right of doing so to British subjects. Semble, it makes no difference whether the purposes for which such a corporation existed were or were not contrary to the law of Ireland. Long v. Claims Commissioners, 2 Knapp, 51.

A corporation of British subjects in a foreign country, existing for objects in opposition to British law, and under the control of a foreign government, is not entitled to claim any compensation from the government of the country in which they existed, for the confiscation of their property, under a treaty giving that right to British subjects. The individual members of such a corporation are also equally incapacitated from making any claim, as British subjects, for the loss of their income, arising from the funds of such a corporation. Daniel v. Claims Commissioners, 2 Knapp, 23.

The French government having, in consequence of a decree confiscating the property of British subjects, seized the books and papers of a British mercantile house, amongst which were the obligations for certain rents the property of the house, but purchased in and standing in the name of a French subject, who was afterwards executed for high treason to France:—Held, that the partners of the house were entitled to compensation. Genesse's case, 2 Knapp, 345.

By the terms of French contract, rentes viagères, for two lives in succession, were after death of first life payable with all arrears to survivor. The representative of first life relieved against the loss of arrears occasioned by the revolution. Hachett v. Pattle, 6 Madd. 4.

A country re-conquered from an enemy reverts to the same state that it was in before its conquest. The British inhabitants of a part of the French dominions which was conquered by the Dutch and afterwards re-conquered by the French, ought therefore to have had, after its re-conquest, the same protection that they were entitled to under the treaty of commerce of 1786; and were awarded compensation in respect of losses, after the re-conquest, by sequestration of their property in contravention of that treaty by the French government. Gumbes's case, 2 Knapp, 369.

In Respect of what Matters.]—Under a treaty providing compensation for loss of movable and immovable property unduly confiscated:—Held, that no compensation was provided for confiscations of immovable property out of the territory of one of the contracting powers. Webster's case, 2 Knapp, 386.

The matrices des roles, or assessments to the land tax of the year 1791, the primary evidence required by the Convention No. 7, for the purpose of ascertaining the value of confiscated estates, not being forthcoming, it was held by the judicial committee, that the commissioners for liquidating the claims of British subjects in France were at liberty to adopt any other evidence which might appear to them most satisfactory in respect to the estate which was to be valued, such as the original purchase-money; the valuation of the parties themselves in any subsequent transactions; where there was a lease, the rack rent; the rent, allowing a certain number of years' purchase, or the sum for which the property had been sold at the time of the confiscation. Wall's case, 3 Knapp, 13.

A loss arising from a forced loan to a government, which is afterwards nominally repaid by it in a depreciated currency, is such a loss as entitles the lender to compensation from that government, under a treaty providing it for losses by illegal confiscation or sequestration. Johnston's case, 2 Knapp, 336.

In order to establish a claim for compensation for a loss, in consequence of a decree confiscating all debts belonging to British subjects, it must be shown that the confiscating government exercised some control over the debt in question. Bourdieu's case, 2 Knapp, 353.

The mere circumstance of a French debtor having, in consequence of a decree confiscating all debts to British subjects, made a declaration to the French government of his debt to a British creditor, is not sufficient to entitle that creditor to compensation for the loss of it, unless there is evidence of the French government having done some act respecting it. De Tastet's case, 2 Knapp, 358.

A loss arising from the depreciation of the currency, during the imprisonment of a British subject, does not entitle him to compensation under a treaty, providing it to British subjects for the value of their property, movable or immovable, illegally confiscated by the French government; as also for the total or partial loss of their debts, or other property illegally detained under sequestration since the year 1793. Salvin's case, 2 Knapp, 350.

A state having issued a decree confiscating all the debts due to the subjects of its enemy's country, held that the confiscation was complete of a debt which a subject of the confiscating state acknowledged, before the proper authorities, to be due from him to a subject of the enemy, although he was excused from actually paying it over to the state, and the decree of confiscation was consequently repealed. After the repeal of the decree of confiscation, the debtor paid into the national treasury of the confiscating state, in the name of his creditor, the amount of his debt, in the currency of the time; which, however, was very much depreciated since the date of his declaration of his debt under the decree of confiscation:—Held, that the confiscating state, having entered into a treaty to make compensation for all undue confiscations and sequestrations, were answerable for the debt in the currency at the time of the debtor's declaration, it not being a case between a debtor and creditor, but a reparation by a wrong-doer. Pilkington v. Claims' Commissioners, 2 Knapp, 7.

Whether Underwriters Entitled.]—The respondents effected with underwriters valued policies of insurance (including war risks) on a cargo, which was afterwards destroyed by the Alabama, a Confederate cruiser, and the underwriters paid to the respondents as on an actual total loss the valued amounts, which were less than the real value. The United States, out of a compensation fund created after the loss and distributed under an act of congress passed subsequently to the loss, paid to the respondents the difference between their real total loss and the sum received from the underwriters. Under the act of congress no claim was allowed for any loss for which the party injured should have received compensation from any insurer, but if such compensation should not have been equal to the loss actually suffered, allowance might be made for the difference; and no claim was allowed by or on behalf of any insurer either in his own right or in that of the party insured:—Held, that the underwriters were not entitled to recover the compensation from the respondents. Burnand v. Rodocanachi, 51 L. J., Q. B. 548; 7 App. Cas. 833; 47 L. T. 277; 31 W. R. 65—H. L. (E.)

Where satisfaction is made to shipowners under a royal proclamation, for a distribution of prizes, such of the underwriters as have paid are entitled to a restitution of the insurance money; but those who have compounded and renounced salvage are not; and the underwriters who are foreigners are entitled to the benefit of the proclamation equally with British subjects. Blauwpot v. Da Costa, 1 Eden, 130.

Surplus Funds—Remedy against.]—A., a British subject, claimed to be entitled to compensation for certain losses suffered by him through confiscation of his property in the first French Revolution. The governments of England and France entered into conventions respecting compensation to be afforded to British subjects. The English government received all the money agreed upon between the two governments as the amount of compensation, and undertook to satisfy all the claimants. An act of parliament was passed declaring how claims were to be preferred and liquidated. A. presented his claim to commissioners appointed under the act, and adopted the modes of proceeding provided by it; his claim was rejected. After payment of the claims, which were established to the satisfaction of the commissioners, a surplus remained, which, in accordance with one of the provisions of the act, was paid over to the lords of the treasury. A proceeded to make his claim afresh, under a petition of right:—Held, that he had no remedy except under the provisions of the statute. De Bode v. Reg., 3 H. L. Cas. 449.

Lien on.]—Under the conventions made with France in 1814, funds were set apart for compensation to be awarded to English subjects whose property had been confiscated during the French Revolution:—Held, that French mortgages on such property had no lien on the compensation so awarded to an English subject. St. Victor v. Devereux, 8 Jur. 946.

Title to.]—If a party claims before the commissioners appointed under the conventions for indemnifying British subjects for the confiscation of their property by the French revolutionary government, in a character which he really sustains, and an award is made to him in that character, this court has no jurisdiction to interfere at the suit of a party claiming to have a better title to the compensation. Lloyd v. Trimlestown (Lord), 4 Sim. 296.

Under the convention with France for indemnifying British subjects for the confiscation of their property by the French revolutionary government, and the act of the 59 Geo. 3, c. 31, compensation for an estate and the movable property on it was awarded by the commissioners to A. as executor and residuary legatee of B.; a bill was filed by one of the co-heiresses of the wife and children of B., all of whom had died in his lifetime, alleging that, by the then existing laws of France, the will of B. was inoperative, and that a moiety of the property did not belong to him, but to his wife, from whom it had descended to the children, and from them to the plaintiff and another person, co-heiress with her, and claiming for such co-heiress a moiety of the compensation. No claim had been duly made before the commissioners, in respect of the alleged title which the plaintiff sought to enforce; neither had there been any discussion before them as to that title; but the facts out of which it arose were disclosed or alluded to in the proceedings which led to the award:—Held, that under such circumstances, the court of chancery would not interfere to relieve the plaintiff. Hill v. Reardon, 2 Russ. 608. Affirming 2 Sim. & S. 431; 4 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 127.

Effect of Trust, &c.]—Where a person, in whose favour an adjudication, under these conventions, has been made by the commissioners of the privy council, is affected by a trust or by fraud, the court has jurisdiction to enforce the trust, or relieve against the fraud. Ib.

Semble. These conventions and treaties, and the act for carrying them into effect, do not exclude the jurisdiction of a court of equity to examine and enforce equities attaching upon the compensation in the hands of the person in whose favour the award of the commissioners has been made. Ib.

Notwithstanding a decision of the commissioners appointed by the stat. 59 Geo. 3, c. 31, and the commissioners for liquidating the claims of British subjects on the French government, or of the privy council on appeal, in favour of a claimant, his right may be disputed, and he may be declared a trustee of the sum awarded to him for other persons showing themselves to be entitled, semble. Injunction refused, the affidavits of the plaintiffs not being positive. S. C. Jac. 84.

No appeal from commissioners of British claims, &c., to chancery. Ib.

Duty to Resort first to Fund or Property Confiscated.]—The plaintiff was guarantee to the owner of an American ship, for a merchant who freighted her to Bordeaux; she was detained there by an embargo, and dismissed by the freighter. The French government having declared themselves bound to indemnify all neutral owners for the effects of the embargo, and the plaintiff (an English subject), not being able to take advantage of that order, the defendant must endeavour to get an indemnity in France, before he can sue the plaintiff. Cottin v. Blane, 2 Anstr. 544.

The loyalists' estates in America were, under the Forfeiture Acts, to be sold for the payment of debts. This is no ground for an injunction to restrain an action here on a bond. Kempe v. Antill, 2 Bro. C. C. 11.

The plaintiff's testator's property in America being confiscated, subject to his debts, a creditor there ought first to apply to make that property available for payment of his debts before he sues him personally here. Wright v. Nutt, 3 Bro. C. C. 326; 1 H. Bl. 136.

The property of an American loyalist, having been confiscated during the American War, subject to the claims of such of his creditors as were friendly to American independence, to be made within a limited time, and in fact, according to evidence, farther restrained to inhabitants of particular state, a bill to have bond delivered up, or to compel the creditor in the first instance to resort to the fund arising from the confiscation, was dismissed on the ground, that it did not appear that creditor had the clear means of making his demand effectual against that fund. The lord chancellor, also, expressing an opinion in favour of the right to sue personally, even in that case, against the authority of Wright v. Nutt, supra. Wright v. Simpson, 6 Ves. 714.

A creditor having it in his power to obtain warrants for payment of an American loyalist's debt out of his estate there, is bound, on being referred to that property by the defendant, to make it available as far as he can; but where the creditor is not informed of that property, no laches can be imputed to him; he therefore shall not be restrained by injunction from prosecuting his suit here; although the debtors shall have liberty to make use of the creditor's name to obtain the warrants, to make them available, as far as may be. Peters v. Erving, 3 Bro. C. C. 54.

Nature of.]—Where the London Dock Company having built warehouses in which wines were deposited, upon payment of such a rent as they and the owners agreed upon, accepted afterwards a certificate from the board of treasury, under 43 Geo. 3, c. 132, whereby it became lawful for the importers to lodge and secure the wines there without paying the duties for them in the first instance; and it did not appear that there was any other place in the port of London where the importers had a right to bond their wines:—Held, that such a monopoly and public interest attaching upon their property, they were bound by law to receive the goods into their warehouses for a reasonable hire and reward. Allnutt v. Inglis, 12 East, 527; 11 R. R. 482.

Wharfs must be assigned in open places only. London Wharf's case, 1 W. Bl. 581.

In justifying in a plea to an action for the use of a crane in a public wharf, it is sufficient to say, that "it is a public, open, and lawful wharf," without claiming the right by immemorial usage; for the public has a right to use the cranes erected on public quays. Bolt v. Stennett, 8 Term Rep. 606; 5 R. R. 486.

Market Overt.]—If the owner of goods sends them to a wharf in the borough of Southwark, where goods of the same sort are usually sold; and the wharfinger, without any authority, sells them to a bonâ fide purchaser, who duly pays for them; this is not a sale in market overt to change the property, and trover lies for the goods at the suit of the owner against the purchaser. Wilkinson v. King, 2 Camp. 335.

Landing Goods at Sufferance Wharfs.]—The acts relating to landing goods at a sufferance wharf were intended for the protection of the shipowner. Barber v. Meyerstein, 39 L. J., C. P. 187; L. R. 4 H. L. 317; 22 L. T. 808; 18 W. R. 1041.

Right of Access to River.]—The owner of land abutting on a tidal navigable river has, jure naturæ, a right of access to and from the stream wholly distinct from the right of navigation which he enjoys in common with the rest of the public. Lyon v. Fishmongers' Co., 46 L. J., Ch. 68; 1 App. Cas. 662; 35 L. T. 569; 25 W. R. 165—H. L. (E.)

There is no distinction between the position of a riparian owner of land abutting on a tidal and that of an owner of land abutting on a non-tidal stream, as far as regards right of access from the stream to his own land, and vice versâ. Ib.

Such right of access is a private right distinct from the right of navigating the stream, which is common to the riparian owner and the rest of the public, and it is not to be interfered with by a licence to embark, under s. 53 of the Thames Conservancy Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. cxlvii.), but is protected by s. 179 of that act. Ib.

A riparian owner has a right to moor a vessel of ordinary size alongside his wharf for the purpose of loading or unloading at reasonable times and for a reasonable time. Original Hartlepool Collieries Co. v. Gibb, 46 L. J., Ch. 311; 5 Ch. D. 713; 36 L. T. 433. See also Bell v. Quebec Corporation, 49 L. J., P. C. 1; 5 App. Cas. 84.

The court will restrain by injunction the owner of adjoining premises from interfering with the access of such vessel even though the vessel may overlap his own premises; though such would not be allowed to interfere with the proper right of access to the neighbouring premises if used as a wharf, nor to the free entrance to or exit from such premises, if used as a dock, by other vessels. Ib.

The plaintiffs were owners of a wharf 125 feet long on a navigable river, and of a collier boat 176 feet long, which stopped there at intervals of time for the purpose of unloading, and while there necessarily projected over part of the defendant's wharf, close to the entrance of a dock where he carried on the business of repairing ships, the wharf itself not being used. The defendant moored a raft or timber used in his business in front of his own wharf so as to interfere with the access of the collier to her berth:—Held, that the raft was an obstruction to the navigation; and that the collier had a right to come at reasonable times to, and to remain a reasonable time alongside of, the wharf of the plaintiffs, although she projected over the defendant's wharf while doing so. Ib.

Right to other Easements.]—A dock and an adjoining strip of land and a coal wharf were held in fee by the same person, and whenever a ship of any size was taken into the dock to be repaired her standing bowsprit projected over and across the adjoining strip of land. All the properties were put up for sale by auction under particulars of sale which stated that the dock was capable of holding two vessels of large size, and that at low water several vessels or a steamer of the largest class would safely lie on the ways for repairs; and wherein the strip of land was described as a freehold coal wharf, capable of being rendered worth a very large rental by a comparatively small outlay; but nothing was stated to show that the dock or its owners either had or were intended to have any right or privilege over the adjoining premises. The strip of land and coal wharf were sold and conveyed to the purchaser in fee absolutely and in the most unqualified manner, and under such purchaser the defendant claimed. Afterwards the dock was sold and conveyed to the purchaser thereof, under whom the plaintiff claimed:—Held, on a bill for an injunction to restrain the defendant from preventing or interfering with the plaintiff's full use and enjoyment of the dock as the same had theretofore been used by allowing the bowsprit of any vessel in the dock to overlie or overhang the strip of land and coal wharf: first, that there was no legal ground for holding that the owner of the dock retained or had, in respect of that tenement, any right or easement over the adjoining tenement of the strip of land and wharf after the sale and alienation of the latter. Suffield v. Brown, 4 De G. J. & S. 185; 3 N. R. 340; 33 L. J., Ch. 249; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 111; 9 L. T. 827; 12 W. R. 356.

Held, secondly, that the purchaser or grantee of the wharf was not to be considered as having been bound to know, at the time of his purchase, that the use of the dock would require that the bowsprits of large vessels received in it should project over the land he bought, or as having bought with notice of this necessary use of the dock, and the absolute sale and conveyance to him was not to be cut down and reduced accordingly. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that the easement claimed by the plaintiff was neither continuous, apparent, nor necessary. Ib.

The plaintiff was possessed of a wharf on the Thames, in front of which was a pile which had more than twenty years ago been driven into the bed of the river by the then occupiers of the wharf, and had remained there without interruption from the crown or the conservators of the river, and which was essential to the use and enjoyment of the wharf:—Held, the fact of the ownership not being disputed, that the court was justified in presuming that the pile had been placed there in virtue of an easement, with the consent of the owners of the soil, and that a sufficient possession remained in the plaintiff to entitle him to maintain an action against the defendant for negligently running against and destroying the pile. Lancaster v. Eve, 5 C. B. (N.S.) 717; 28 L. J., C. P. 235; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 683; 7 W. R. 260.

By an agreement between G. and C. it was agreed "that the dock between their wharves, on the eastern side of the line of separation, shall for ever remain open as it now stands; that is to say, that neither of them shall fill it up with wharves or other incumbrances, whereby the convenience of the same may be damaged to either party":—Held, that the effect of this agreement was to create an easement that the dock should remain open as it then stood for the convenience of either party to use it as a dock; and that if it was intended that one party should have a more limited right therein than the other, such limited easement should have been created by express words. Morton v. Snow, 29 L. T. 591.

Negligence.]—A. was possessed of a wharf, and had a mast projecting therefrom over the river. B. moored his vessel at the adjoining wharf, with her bowsprit overhanging the front of A.'s wharf, and on the falling of the tide, the bowsprit of B.'s vessel, coming in contact with A.'s mast, broke it:—Held, that B. was not responsible. Dalton v. Denton, 1 C. B. (N.S.) 672; 5 W. R. 203.

Rights in Respect of Goods Infringing Trade Marks.]—The plaintiffs, who were wharfingers, warehoused certain wines. They were afterwards informed that those wines bore a spurious trade mark; that an injunction had been or would forthwith be applied for by the party injured by such mark, to restrain the plaintiffs from selling the wines; and they were requested not to part with them. The holder of the dock warrants then applied to the plaintiffs to deliver the wines to him, but they refused to do so, whereupon he brought an action against the wharfingers to recover damage for the detention of the wines. Upon a bill filed, and motion made for an injunction to restrain such action:—Held, that the plaintiffs were justified in their conduct, and the injunction should be granted. Hunt v. Maniere, 11 L. T. 469; 13 W. R. 212.

In an action to restrain the infringement of a trade mark, a wharfinger, who had received goods bearing the pirated trade mark in the ordinary course of business without any knowledge of the fraud, was made a co-defendant, and in his statement of defence, disclaimed all interest in the matter in dispute, and submitted to act as the court should direct, on having his charges for warehouse rent and his costs of the action paid or provided for. At the trial of the action he contended at the bar that the plaintiff ought not to touch the goods for the purpose of removing the trade mark without first paying his charges:—Held, that the wharfinger was entitled to be paid his costs of the action by the plaintiff, and had a lien on the goods in his possession for his warehouse charges in priority of the lien (if any) which the plaintiff might have thereon for his costs. Moet v. Pickering, 47 L. J., Ch. 527; 8 Ch. D. 372; 38 L. T. 799; 26 W. R. 637—C. A.

Agency of.]—Semble, that a wharfinger holding goods in transitu cannot turn himself into an agent for the consignee, so as to put an end to the transitus without the express authority of the consignee. Barrow, Ex parte, Worsdell, In re, 46 L. J., Bk. 71; 6 Ch. D. 783; 36 L. T. 325; 25 W. R. 466.

Public Wharf.]—The absentee owner and manager of a public wharf in the island of Jamaica is liable in law, having reference to the provisions of the 7 Vict. c. 57, to be sued as a public wharfinger for the negligence of his agent in the conduct of such wharf. Lindo v. Barrett, 4 W. R. 316.

Shipowners and Wharfingers.] — As to effect of the Merchant Shipping Act (25 & 26 Vict. c. 63), s. 38, on the rights of shipowners and wharfingers. See Lowther v. Belfast Harbour Co., 13 Ir. Ch. R. 34; 17 Ir. Ch. R. 54.

Liability—Obstruction in Bed of River—Negligence.]—The appellants were the proprietors of a wharf, but, according to the finding of the house of lords, were neither owners nor lessees of the foreshore upon which their wharf abutted. Their foreman invited the respondents, owners of the vessel, to unload at a particular berth at their wharf, stating the draught of water which might be expected at a particular time, but adding, "Your pilot will tell you what to do." Some time before the top of the tide the vessel attempted to get in, though the pilot declined to incur the risk on his own account, and only expressed his willingness to do so if the captain would undertake responsibility for the consequences. There were mud deposits on the bed of the river, which formed, by the pressure of vessels successively moored to the wharf, ridges of accumulated mud. These ridges the wharfingers, by the tacit consent of the owners of the river bed, but not of right, were in the habit periodically of removing or levelling. The "Calliope," in her attempt to reach the berth, came upon one of these ridges, and her stern stuck fast in the mud, and damage was sustained to her hull for which her owners sought to make the appellants liable:—Held, that they were not so liable. The Moorcock (14 P. D. 64) distinguished. The Calliope, 60 L. J., P. 28; [1891] A. C. 11; 63 L. T. 781; 39 W. R. 641; 6 Asp. M. C. 585; 55 J. P. 357—H. L. (E.)

Persons navigating a river have a right to discharge their vessels at any convenient wharf, and when a vessel grounds and lies near a wharf for the purpose of discharging, that is a natural use of the river, and the ship's situation and the discharge are as much a matter of her concern as they are of the wharfinger's. It is erroneous, therefore, to hold the wharfinger, in such circumstances, responsible for the state of the bed of the river.—Per Lord Herschell. Ib.

The defendants, wharfingers, in consideration of charges for landing and storing the cargo, agreed to allow the plaintiff, a shipowner, to discharge his vessel at the defendants' jetty, which extended into the river Thames, where the vessel must necessarily ground at low water. The bed of the river adjoining the jetty was vested in the conservators. The defendants had no control over the bed of the river, and had taken no steps to ascertain whether it was or was not a safe place for a vessel to lie upon. The vessel, on grounding, sustained damage from the uneven condition of the bed of the river adjoining the jetty :—Held, that the defendants were liable; for the use of their premises by the plaintiff could not, under the circumstances, be had without the vessel grounding, and the defendants must, therefore, be deemed to have impliedly represented that they had taken reasonable care to ascertain that the bottom of the river adjoining the jetty was in such a condition as not to cause injury to the vessel. The Moorcock, 58 L. J., P. 73; 14 P. D. 64; 60 L. T. 654; 37 W. R. 439; 6 Asp. M. C. 373—C. A.

1. WHO MAY GIVE.

Infants.]—A warrant of attorney given by an infant is absolutely void. Saunderson v. Marr, 1 H. Bl. 75; 2 R. R. 723.

A cognovit given by a minor, authorising an attorney to appear for him and confess an action brought against him for a precise sum for necessaries provided for him by the plaintiff, with an undertaking "not to bring any writ of error, nor do any act to prevent the plaintiff from entering up judgment or suing out execution," is bad, on three grounds: first, because an infant cannot appoint nor appear by attorney, but only by guardian; secondly, because he cannot state an account; and, thirdly, because he cannot deprive himself of his right to bring a writ of error, or any right to which he is entitled. Olliver v. Woodroffe, 4 M. & W. 650; 7 D. P. C. 166; 1 H. & H. 474; 8 L. J., Ex. 105.

And where a joint warrant of attorney is given by two or more persons, one of whom is an infant, the court will order it to be vacated as against the latter, and to stand against the other parties. Ashlin v. Langton, 4 M. & Scott, 719; 3 L. J., C. P. 264. S. P., Motteux v. St. Aubin, 2 W. Bl. 1133.

To entitle a defendant to relief from a judgment signed on a warrant of attorney, given by him for the price of goods, on the ground of infancy, he at the time keeping a shop, and acting as if of age, he ought to make out a clear case; merely swearing that he is an infant of the age of twenty years, and giving an extract from a register of births, is not sufficient for the court to act upon. Weaver v. Stokes, 4 D. P. C. 724; 1 M. & W. 203; 1 Gale, 380; 1 Tyr. & G. 512.

Married Women.]—The court refused to set aside, upon a summary application, a judgment entered up on a warrant of attorney given by a feme covert. M'Lean v. Douglass, 3 Bos. & P. 128.

The separate estate of a married woman, which she is restrained from anticipating, cannot, either directly or indirectly, be made the subject of a security. Stanley v. Stanley, 47 L. J., Ch. 256; 7 Ch. D. 589; 37 L. T. 777; 26 W. R. 310.

A warrant to confess judgment given to the person entitled to a mortgage debt by a husband and wife is of no effect so far as regards the separate estate of the wife, and a charging order cannot be obtained upon funds in court constituting the separate estate after judgment recovered against the husband and wife upon the warrant. Ib.

Where a feme covert, sole trader, gave a bond and a warrant of attorney, to enter up judgment, on which the plaintiff afterwards took out execution, the court set the judgment aside, as entered up without authority. Read v. Jewson, 4 Term Rep. 362.

—— When Divorced.]—The court on motion set aside a judgment on a warrant of attorney given by a feme covert, although she had been divorced a mensâ et thoro. Quirthorne v. Blaquire, 6 M. & S. 73.

—— Before Marriage.]—The court allowed judgment to be entered up against husband and wife, on a warrant of attorney given by the latter dum sola. Hartford v. Mattingly, 2 Chit. 117. S. P., Anon., Lofft, 329; Perrier v. Henchey, 1 Alcock & Napier, 185.

Judgment may be entered up against a husband on a warrant of attorney given by his wife dum sola. Higginbottom v. Higginbottom, 8 D. P. C. 126; 1 W., W. & H. 407.

Where judgment is signed by mistake against a married woman alone, on a warrant of attorney given by her dum sola, a rule nisi only will be granted for vacating that judgment and signing another against the husband and wife. Pocock v. Fry, 8 D. P. C. 126; 1 W. W. & H. 408.

2. OPERATION OF.

When it may be Given.]—A cognovit may be given after process sued out, and before it is served. Kerbey v. Jenkins, 2 Tyrw. 499 ; 1 L. J., Ex. 152.

It is not necessary to declare previously to signing judgment. Morley v. Hall, 2 D. P. C. 494. S. P., Webb v. Aspinall, 7 Taunt. 701 ; 1 Moore, 428 ; 18 R. R. 631.

A cognovit given by a defendant who is in custody in execution on a judgment for debt and costs, in consideration of his discharge, is valid if a writ has been sued out to support it ; and it lies upon the party impeaching its validity to show that no writ has been sued out. Shanley or Shawdy v. Colwell, 6 M. & W. 543 ; 8 D. P. C. 373 ; 9 L. J., Ex. 176.

Judgment not Entered.]—The mere existence of a warrant of attorney, given under s. 87 of 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, to enter up judgment against an insolvent debtor, has not the same effect as if a judgment had been actually entered up. Hawker v. Hallewell, 23 L. J., Ch. 778 ; 18 Jur. 783 ; 2 W. R. 605.

Bankruptcy—Sale of Real Estate.]—Where the defendant, after a judgment obtained under a warrant of attorney, took the benefit of the Insolvent Act :— Held, that the judgment creditor was a necessary party to the conveyance of the insolvent's real estate, notwithstanding the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, which applies only to personal estate. Hotham v. Somerville, 9 Beav. 63 ; 14 L. J., Ch. 385 ; 9 Jur. 702.

As an Answer to Action for Money Secured on it.]—A warrant of attorney is an answer to an action for money secured by it only when judgment has been entered upon it. Davison v. Overend, 6 Car. & P. 222.

When Waived.]—A subsequent assignment of goods for the sum secured by a warrant of attorney is not a waiver of such warrant. Anon., 2 Chit. 423.

When given, coupled with Condition not to bring Action.]—Where, after the arrest, a party applied to a judge at chambers to be discharged out of custody ; and it being represented, that by his continuing in prison he would commit an act of bankruptcy, the judge, on the 4th of December, 1827, ordered him to be discharged out of custody as to the action, upon giving a fresh warrant of attorney, with a defeasance for payment of part on the 4th of January, and the remainder, with the interest, on the 4th of August, with liberty to issue execution for the first sum if not duly paid, and afterwards for the latter sum if default made in the payment ; and upon giving such warrant of attorney the judgment be set aside, and a mortgage to remain as security, the defendant undertaking not to bring any action for the imprisonment ; and the prisoner did not avail himself of the order :— Held, that this order embodied an absolute agreement of the parties, founded upon good consideration, that he should be forthwith discharged out of custody, and that he should bring no action for false imprisonment, and, therefore, that such an action was not maintainable. Wentworth v. Bullen, 9 B. & C. 840.

Merger.]—A promissory note was made by A. and B. payable to C., to secure advances from C. to A. After the note became due, it was agreed between C. and A., without the privity of B., that A. should execute a warrant of attorney to D., as a trustee for C., to secure the amount of the note, and a further advance made by C. to A. :—Held, that the note was not merged in the warrant of attorney. Bell v. Banks, 3 Man. & G. 258 ; 3 Scott (N.R.) 497.

When a Charge on Land.]—One borrows 70*l.* of A., and as a security gives him a warrant of attorney for a judgment in ejectment of three closes of land, upon a feigned demise for twenty years. This is a defective security, but a good agreement in equity to charge the land. Dale v. Smithwick, 2 Vern. 151.

Where one, who had joined in a bond as surety for another, afterwards gave a letter of attorney to the creditor, authorising him to take and keep possession of a rectory and glebe lands, and also of freehold lands, of which he was seised in fee, until the payment of the debt secured by the bond :—Held, that the letter of attorney operated as a charge, which did not determine, as to the freehold lands, by the death of the party giving it. Spooner v. Sandilands, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 390.

A warrant of attorney to confess judgment, though by such judgment the lands of the debtor may become charged, is not a charge upon land. Lane v. Horlock, 5 H. L. Cas. 580 ; 25 L. J., Ch. 253 ; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 289 ; 4 W. R. 408.

Giving—How far a Breach of Covenant "not to Incumber."]—A lease of an opera house contained covenants by the lessee, first, that he would not convert the same to any other use than for performing operas, but would use his utmost endeavours to improve the same for that use and purpose ; secondly, that he would not grant, let or charge the boxes for a longer period than one year or season, nor charge nor incumber the theatre, or the term thereof, by mortgaging or granting rent-charges, or any other incumbrance :—Held, that the latter part of covenant 2 was not broken by giving bonâ fide warrants of attorney, the defeasance of which disclosed that they were given with the intention that judgments should be entered thereon, and that such judgments should be registered, and should stand as securities for debts, upon default in payment of which by a day named execution should issue, although, by 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 13, on registration, such a judgment operates in all respects as a charge upon the lease, and also although this might be taken in execution under the judgment confessed. Croft v. Lumley, 6 H. L. Cas. 672 ; 27 L. J., Q. B. 321 ; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 903 ; 6 W. R. 523.

Aliter, if the intention of the parties was clear and manifest to evade the covenant, and charge the lease in a circuitous manner. Ib.

Trust during the life of H. "to pay and apply the interest and annual produce of trust property to him for his own benefit if he did not make any assignment or mortgage of, or charge upon, the same, or any part thereof, by any mode of anticipation, or do any act whereby such interest, if made payable to him without any restriction, would become payable to any other person or persons," with a gift over on the happening of any such event. H. having executed a warrant of attorney under which judgment was entered up against him :—Held, that this, being a proceeding in invitum, did not work a forfeiture of his life interest. Arison v. Holmes, 1 Johns. & H. 530; 30 L. J., Ch. 564; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 722; 4 L. T. 617; 9 W. R. 550.

3. Validity of.

When obtained by Fraud.]—The court has summary jurisdiction over a warrant of attorney alleged to be fraudulent, on the application of any person interested in impeaching it, although such person may not be a party to the warrant of attorney itself. Harrod v. Benton, 2 M. & Ry. 130; 8 B. & C. 217; 6 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 270.

A cognovit obtained by fraud will be set aside on motion. Anon., 1 Chit. 268.

A. being indebted for rent to her landlord, the latter proposed to C., her son-in-law, to take his promissory note as security. C. said he would give an answer in a week or ten days. The landlord then asked him whether A. owed him anything; he replied that she did not, or what she did owe he considered as a gift. Within the ten days A. executed a warrant of attorney to C., upon which judgment was entered up, execution issued, and C. took possession of the goods. The court, considering the representations and conduct of A. to have been intended to defraud the landlord, set aside the warrant of attorney at his instance. Martin v. Martin, 3 B. & Ad. 934; 1 L. J., K. B. 224.

An action will not lie by the party against whom a fi. fa. has issued on a subsisting judgment, to recover the sum levied under it, on the ground that such judgment was signed on a warrant of attorney which was obtained by fraud or duress. De Medina v. Grove, 10 Q. B. 152; 15 L. J., Q. B. 287; 10 Jur. 428.

Collusion.]—Where a statute enacts that in case any person in insolvent circumstances voluntarily or by collusion with a creditor gives a confession of judgment, cognovit actionem, or warrant of attorney to confess judgment, with intent to defraud or delay his creditors, or to give undue preference to a particular creditor, pressure by such creditor is no answer to a case which alleges collusion, "collusion" in such an enactment means agreement or acting in concert. Edison General Electric Co. v. Westminster and Vancouver Tramway Co., 66 L. J., P. C. 36; [1897] A. C. 193; 75 L. T. 438; 4 Manson, 244—P. C.

Given without Consideration.]—Where a party gives a warrant of attorney to another without consideration, in order that the latter may protect the goods of the former from execution, and judgment and execution are signed and issued against good faith, a court of law will not interfere. Dukes v. Saunders, 1 D. P. C. 522.

Where goods were vested in trustees for the benefit of infant children, the trustees refusing to act, upon which the grandmother, with whom the infant children were living, took part away and suffered a portion to remain in the possession of the stepfather on his giving a warrant of attorney, the court refused to set aside the warrant of attorney on the ground of want of consideration. Gay v. Hill, 2 B. C. Rep. 322; 5 D. & L. 422; 18 L. J., Q. B. 12; 13 Jur. 124.

Other Cases of Illegality.]—A warrant of attorney, given by an attorney to induce a party to stay proceedings against him on a rule for striking him off the roll, is illegal and void, and the court will direct it to be taken off the file and cancelled. Kirwan v. Goodman, 9 D. P. C. 330; 5 Jur. 293.

The court refused to set aside a warrant of attorney given to secure a debt, on the ground that it was obtained from the defendant by a threat of prosecution for felony, it not distinctly appearing that there was an agreement by the plaintiff, either express or necessarily implied, to abstain from prosecuting upon the security being given. Ward v. Lloyd, 6 Man. & G. 1066; 1 D. & L. 763; 7 Scott (N.R.) 499; 13 L. J., C. P. 5.

But where a charge of embezzlement was pending before a magistrate, who entertained doubts whether a partnership did not exist between the prosecutor and the accused party:—Held, that a warrant of attorney given to secure the payment of the moneys charged to be embezzled, the charge being afterwards withdrawn, was invalid, as at the time of giving it there was a charge of a criminal nature pending, which it was calculated to bring to an end. Critchley, Ex parte, 2 D. & L. 527; 1 B. C. Rep. 7; 15 L. J., Q. B. 124; 10 Jur. 112.

Filling in Date after Execution.]—Does not avoid the instrument. Keane v. Smallbone, 17 C. B. 179; 25 L. J., C. P. 72; 4 W. R. 11.

Must be Attested.]—It is absolutely essential that there should be an attesting witness. Kinnersley v. Mussen, 5 Taunt. 264; 14 R. R. 750. And see post, Attestation.

4. Form and Execution of.

a. Generally.

When Deed is Necessary.]—It seems that a warrant of attorney to release errors requires to be under seal. Brutton v. Burton, 1 Chit. 707.

A warrant of attorney need not be by deed. Kinnersley v. Mussen, 5 Taunt. 264; 14 R. R. 750.

Signing Judgment.]—A warrant of attorney to confess judgment generally of a term, is regular if the judgment is signed on a particular day of term. Todd v. Gompertz, 6 D. P. C. 296. See Cobbold v. Chilver, 1 D. (N.S.) 726; 11 L. J., C. P. 173.

Mistake in Name of Parties.]—A., as surety for B., executed a joint bond and warrant of attorney to secure an annuity to C. After the execution by A. and B. it was discovered that part of A.'s christian name had been omitted in the body of those instruments, and he re-executed them after such name had been inserted, without the knowledge of B. In an action brought against A., in K. B., on the bond, he pleaded a judgment recovered against him and B. The court of C. P. afterwards refused to set aside a joint judgment entered up on the warrant of attorney, on the application of A., as that instrument was not defeated by the insertion of his christian name, and as he had recognized the validity of the judgment in the action brought against him on the bond. Coke v. Brummell, 2 Moore, 495; 8 Taunt. 439.

A mistake in the defendant's name in a judgment upon a warrant of attorney is not amendable. Sale v. Compton, 1 Wils. 61; 2 Stra. 209

Evidence to Prove that Cognovit was Conditional.]—Parol evidence is inadmissible to prove that a cognovit, absolute in its terms, was given upon a condition that the defendant should have three months' time. Woodman v. Ford, 2 Jur. 11.

Need not be Read to Party giving it.]—It is not necessary that a warrant of attorney to confess a judgment should be read over to the party giving it. Taylor v. Parkinson, 2 H. Bl. 383.

Filling in, after Execution.]—Filling in the date of a warrant of attorney when it is left in blank after execution is not such an alteration as will avoid the instrument. Keane v. Smallbone, 17 C. B. 179; 25 L. J., C. P. 72; 4 W. R. 11.

To release Errors.]—A warrant of attorney in the ordinary form authorising the attorney to enter up judgment in the principal's name, and as his act and deed to execute a release of all errors, &c., does not authorise a release of errors in process of outlawry. Solomon v. Graham, 5 El. & Bl. 309; 24 L. J., Q. B. 332; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 1070.

b. Given in Ireland to confess Judgment in England.

Where judgment had been obtained in Ireland against a public officer, a warrant of attorney, under 6 Geo. 4, c. 42, s. 12, to confess a judgment in England for a less sum than that for which judgment was obtained in Ireland, is a nullity. Walker v. Goodyere, 7 El. & Bl. 960; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 1078; 5 W. R. 707.

By 11 & 12 Vict. c. 45, ss. 50 and 57, the official manager was brought within 6 Geo. 4, c. 42, s. 12, so that upon a judgment against him obtained in Ireland, a warrant of attorney to confess judgment in England might be given, in pursuance of 6 Geo. 4, c. 42, s. 12, which has the same effect as a judgment against the public officer. Ib.

c. By Joint and Several Parties.

Generally.]—Judgment cannot be entered up against two on a warrant of attorney, purporting to be an authority to confess judgment against three persons one of whom refused to execute. Harris v. Wade, 1 Chit. 322.

A warrant of attorney, under seal, executed by one person for himself and his partner, in the absence of the latter, but with his consent, is a sufficient authority for signing judgment against both. Bratton v. Burton, 1 Chit. 707.

Where a joint warrant of attorney was entered into by two persons, with an unconditional defeasance; and the plaintiff, by letter, stipulating that the money should be payable by instalments, pledged himself not to proceed against the parties unless he apprehended failure:—Held, that if he was apprehensive of the failure of one, he might enter up judgment against the other, before the first instalment became payable. Partridge v. Herbert, 1 Moore, 54; 7 Taunt. 307.

On a joint and several warrant of attorney, given by two, judgment was signed against one only; but, as the attorneys were authorised to enter up judgment against both, the court allowed it to be done. Stoveld v. Eade, 2 M. & Scott, 361.

A joint warrant of attorney, given to enter up judgment upon a joint and several bond, will not authorise the entering up judgment against the survivor only. Gee v. Lane, 15 East, 592; 13 R. R. 534.

What is Joint and Several.]—A warrant of attorney executed by two authorising attorneys to appear "for us and each of us," and to receive a declaration "for us and each of us," in an action, and after judgment entered up, "for us and in our name, and as our act and deed," to execute a release of errors, &c., is joint only, and not joint and several, and does not authorise a judgment against one of the parties executing it, but only against both. Dalrymple v. Fraser, 2 C. B. 698; 3 D. & L. 818; 15 L. J., C. P. 193.

One Party to Cognovit signing after the Others—Relation back.]—Where one of several parties to a cognovit signs after the others, his signing relates back to the time of their signing. Perry v. Turner, 1 D. P. C. 300; 2 C. & J. 89; 2 Tyr. 128; 1 L. J., Ex. 13.

d. In the Case of the Death of Parties.

As a Rule becomes a Nullity.]—A warrant of attorney is a personal authority, and dies with the person, and his executors cannot put it in force. Short v. Coglin, 1 Anst. 225.

Where a warrant of attorney authorises a person to enter up judgment against the defendant, and the defeasance states that the warrant of attorney is given to secure payment to that person, his heirs, &c., judgment cannot be entered up upon it by his executrix, as it only authorises the testator himself to enter up judgment. Henshall v. Matthew, 1 D. P. C. 217; 5 M. & P. 157; 7 Bing. 337; 9 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 117.

The court will not allow judgment to be entered up at the instance of an executor, where the testator only has been mentioned in the warrant, although it is stated in the defeasance that his executors and administrators might enter up judgment in the event of a certain sum not being paid. Foster v. Clagget, 6 D. P. C. 524.

Where a warrant of attorney gives to an individual, and his executors and administrators, power to enter up judgment, it cannot be objected that such individual was the registered officer of a banking company under 7 Geo. 4, c. 46, s. 9; and that, therefore, the debt not surviving to his personal representative, judgment could not be entered up by the latter. Edwards v. Holiday, 9 D. P. C. 1023; 5 Jur. 989.

To more than One—Judgment may be entered up by Survivors.]—A warrant of attorney to confess a judgment to two, may be entered up for the survivor. Futcher v. Smith, 2 W. Bl. 1301. S. P., Spong v. Tucker, 1 Y. & J. 206; Johnson v. Jenkins, 1 D. P. C. 367.

For a judgment on a warrant of attorney may be entered up at the suit of, but not against, a survivor. Raw v. Alderson, 1 Moore, 145; 7 Taunt. 453; 18 R. R. 535.

Where a warrant of attorney is executed to two persons, and one dies, the survivor may enter up judgment in his own name. Hind v. Kingston, 6 D. P. C. 523.

A warrant of attorney to confess a judgment to three, and one dies, the court will permit judgment to be entered up by the survivors.

Fendall v. May, 2 M. & S. 76; 14 R. R. 593. S. P., Harper v. Jackson, 1 H. & W. 214.

Where a warrant of attorney is given to three, for a joint debt due to them, though no mention is made, either in the warrant or defeasance, of survivors, judgment may be entered up at the suit of the survivors. Build v. Wightman, 1 D. P. C. 545.

e. Defeasance.

What is.]—The defeasance of a warrant of attorney is not a contract, but merely a description of the object of the security and of the means of enforcing payment. Cook v. Fowler, 43 L. J., Ch. 855; L. R. 7 H. L. 27.

Not correctly stated.]—Where judgment had been signed on a warrant of attorney, the defeasance of which did not contain the true terms of the agreement upon which it was to be void, and the judgment appeared to have been signed before certain bills of exchange, for which it was given as collateral security, had become due, the court referred it to the master to ascertain what was due to the plaintiff, and ordered that, upon payment of that sum and the costs of the proceedings, the bills of exchange should be delivered up to the defendant, and satisfaction should be entered on the judgment. Joel v. Dicker, 5 D. & L. 1; 2 B. C. Rep. 127; 16 L. J., Q. B. 359; 11 Jur. 589.

An understanding between the parties that a warrant of attorney is to operate to a greater extent than the terms of the defeasance imply, cannot be allowed to be of any avail. Bell v. Tidd, 6 Jur. 59.

It is not sufficient that the defeasance shows the amount of the sum secured by the judgment; it must also notice all collateral securities by which it is secured. Morell v. Dubost, 3 Taunt. 235; 12 R. R. 644.

A warrant of attorney to confess judgment is not void for omitting to state in the defeasance a collateral security for the same debt. Sansom v. Goode, 2 B. & Ald. 568; 1 Chit. 311.

When Indorsement of Necessary.]—If a warrant of attorney is given to confess judgment absolutely for a certain sum, although it is understood between the parties that it is given only to indemnify the plaintiff against his suretyship for a smaller sum, that is not such a defeasance as needs to be indorsed, and the plaintiff needs not to defer execution till the contingency happens. Barber v. Barber, 3 Taunt. 465.

More than a year having elapsed after judgment entered up on a warrant of attorney, the defendant agreed to waive the necessity of a scire facias:—Held, that such agreement was no part of the defeasance or condition, and did not render the warrant of attorney void as against his assignees for want of enrolment. Harmer v. Johnson, 3 D. & L. 38; 14 M. & W. 336; 14 L. J., Ex. 292.

Annexed on separate Paper.]—It is no objection that part of the defeasance is written on a separate sheet of paper annexed. Burdekin v. Potter, 1 D. (N.S.) 134.

Not Inserted — Negligence of Solicitor.]—Neglect of the attorney employed to prepare a warrant of attorney to insert the defeasance on the warrant, does not avoid the security against the innocent party; but the attorney is guilty of a breach of duty imposed on him by the court, and answerable for it on motion. Shaw v. Evans, 14 East, 576. S. P., Partridge v. Fraser, 7 Taunt. 307; 1 Moore, 54.

Implied Contract contained in — Right of Action on.]—An action will not lie upon the implied contract contained in the defeasance of a warrant of attorney. Sherborn v. Huntingtower (Lord), 13 C. B. (N.S.) 742; 11 W. R. 344.

An attempt to enforce a warrant of attorney nearly twenty years old by a motion to enter up judgment thereon having been defeated by the bankruptcy and certificate of the defendant, an action was afterwards brought upon the implied contract contained in the defeasance:—The court set aside the proceedings as being against good faith. Ib.

f. Attestation.

Validity.]—A defendant employed an attorney to prepare a bond and warrant for entering judgment thereon in favour of the plaintiff, who being present, employed the same attorney to enter judgment on the warrant, and the latter consented to do so; the attorney subsequently prepared the bond and warrant, and duly witnessed and attested the execution thereof by the defendant, for which he was paid by the latter; and afterwards entered judgment on the warrant for the plaintiff:—Held, that there was non-compliance with 35 & 36 Vict. c. 57, s. 23, and that the warrant and judgment entered thereon should be set aside. Walsh v. Nally, Ir. R. 11 C. L. 337.

Form of—Statement that Witness is Solicitor for Party giving.]—A cognovit attested by an attorney thus:—"Witnessed by J. B., one &c., attending for the said W. N., at his request, to, and did, inform him of the nature and effect of the above cognovit, before the execution thereof by him," is insufficient; the attestation not declaring him to be the attorney for the party, and that he subscribed his name as such. Potter v. Nicholson, 8 M. & W. 294; 9 D. P. C. 808; 10 L. J., Ex. 311.

An attorney, proposed by the plaintiff, prepared a warrant of attorney to confess judgment, explained its nature and effect to the defendant, and subscribed it as a witness, but omitted to state that he did so as "attorney for the defendant":—The court set aside the judgment which had been entered on the warrant. Lucey v. Murphy, Ir. R. 7 C. L. 494.

It is not requisite that the attorney of the defendant, in the attestation of a cognovit, should state himself to be an attorney, named by the defendant; it is sufficient, if he declares himself to be an attorney for the defendant; nor need the attorney be originally named by the defendant; it is sufficient, if the latter adopts the attorney named by the plaintiff. Olliver v. Woodroffe, 7 D. P. C. 166; 4 M. & W. 650; 8 L. J., Ex. 105.

A cognovit attested thus:—"Witnessed by me W. P., as the attorney of the said W. B., attending at the execution hereof at his request, and expressly named by him. W. P., attorney, Prescot, Lancashire," is insufficient, as not containing an express declaration that the attesting witness was the attorney for the party executing the instrument. Hibbert v. Barton, 10 M. & W. 678; 2 D. (N.S.) 434; 12 L. J., Ex. 70.

The attestation to a warrant of attorney or a cognovit must contain words which show with certainty that the subscribing attorney is the attorney of the person executing it, and that he attests or subscribes the execution as the attorney of such person. Elkington v. Holland, 9 M. & W. 659; 1 D. (N.S.) 643.

A warrant of attorney attested as follows:—"Signed, sealed and delivered by the above-named A. B. in the presence of me, the attorney expressly named by him, and acting at his request, and by whom the above written warrant of attorney was read over, and the nature and effect thereof explained to A. B. before the execution thereof by him," and subscribed merely with the name of the attorney, is not sufficient, for not containing an express declaration that the attesting witness subscribed his name as the attorney for the party executing the instrument. Everard or Edwards v. Poppleton, D. & M. 322; 5 Q. B. 181; 13 L. J., Q. B. 1; 7 Jur. 991.

In an attestation it is not necessary that the precise words of 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 9, should be followed; it is enough if it appears by necessary inference that the witness attended as the attorney for the party, at his request, and that he subscribed his name as such attorney. Lewis v. Kensington (Lord), 2 C. B. 463; 3 D. & L. 637; 15 L. J., C. P. 100.

A warrant of attorney attested in the following form:—"Signed in the presence of me, A. J. C., and I declare myself to be the attorney of the said R. G., expressly named by him, and attending at his request, and subscribe myself accordingly," is sufficient. Lindley v. Girdler, 1 D. & L. 699; 13 L. J., Q. B. 53; 8 Jur. 61. S. P., Knight v. Hasty, 12 L. J., Q. B. 293.

So the following attestation is sufficient:—"Duly executed by the above-named R. G., in the presence of me, the undersigned S. B., attorney on behalf of R. G., expressly named by him and attending at his request: and I hereby declare, that I subscribe my name as witness to the due execution hereof by R. G., and as his attorney; and that, previous to the execution thereof by R. G., I informed him of the nature and effect thereof. Signed, S. B.," &c. Phillips v. Gibbs, 16 M. & W. 208; 4 D. & L. 275; 16 L. J., Ex. 48; 10 Jur. 971. S. P., Holt v. Kershaw, 5 D. & L. 419.

A cognovit signed by W. T., and attested thus: "Witness, J. B., of &c., attorney at law." "Signed in the presence of me, the undersigned; and I hereby certify and declare, that I am the attorney of the said W. T., and that I attended at his request, to inform him of this cognovit, and that I have informed him of the nature and effect thereof; and I hereby subscribe my name as his attorney. R. R.," is sufficiently attested, and the words "signed in the presence," &c., must be taken to refer to the signature of W. T. Ledgard v. Thompson, 11 M. & W. 40; 2 D. (N.S.) 766; 12 L. J., Ex. 229; 7 Jur. 239.

An attestation in the following form:—"Signed, sealed and delivered by the said H.H." (the defendant), "in my presence; and I declare myself to be attorney for the said H. H., and that I subscribe my name as such attorney. (Signed) G. O., solicitor," is sufficient. Gay v. Hall, 5 D. & L. 422; 2 B. C. Rep. 322; 18 L. J., Q. B. 12; 13 Jur. 124.

Held, also, that it need not appear on the face of the attestation, in express words, that the attorney attesting the defendant's signature attended at the defendant's request, and that he was named by him. Ib.

An attestation as follows, "Signed, sealed and delivered in the presence of me H. C., who, at the request and in the presence of the said J. H. B., J. C. and J. H. P., have set and subscribed my name as the attorney on their behalf attesting the execution hereof, having first read over and explained to them, and each of them, the nature and contents thereof," is insufficient, inasmuch as it does not by necessary implication declare the witness to be attorney for the parties executing the warrant of attorney. Pocock v. Pickering, 18 Q. B. 789; 21 L. J., Q. B. 365; 16 Jur. 760.

After Alteration in the Instrument.]—A warrant of attorney to confess judgment for 1,000*l.* was executed by the defendant, and an attestation of the execution was subscribed by an attorney. An alteration was afterwards made, by consent, in the sum, by substituting 2,000*l.*; and the defendant retraced his signature with a dry pen, and re-delivered the instrument. The attorney, who was present, wrote his initials opposite to the alteration, and drew a dry pen over the attestation, and over each letter of his own signature:—Held, that it was not duly attested. Bailey v. Bellamy, 9 D. P. C. 507.

Double Attestation.]—A double attestation (the first being insufficient) does not invalidate a cognovit. Ledgard v. Thompson, 11 M. & W. 40; 2 D. (N.S.) 766; 12 L. J., Ex. 229.

When Instrument Executed Abroad.]—If a warrant of attorney executed abroad is intended to be enforced in this country, it must be attested by an attorney, according to the form prescribed by statute. Davis v. Trevanion, 2 D. & L. 743; 14 L. J., Q. B. 138; 9 Jur. 492.

Effect of Insufficient Attestation.]—Where a warrant of attorney is not attested in the manner required by 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 9, the objection can only be made by the party executing the instrument, or some person authorized by or claiming under him. Lewis v. Tankerville (Earl), 11 M. & W. 109; 2 D. (N.S.) 754; 12 L. J., Ex. 234. S. P., Hume v. Wellesley (Lord), 8 Q. B. 521.

The provision in 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 9, is for the benefit of the defendant only, and therefore a third party, who may be prejudiced by a judgment against his debtor, cannot object that no attorney attested the execution of the warrant of attorney on which such judgment is founded. Chipp v. Harris, 5 M. & W. 430; 9 L. J., Ex. 64.

—— Objections to, when to be Raised.]—In applying to set aside judgment and execution on a warrant of attorney, on the ground of an invalid or informal attestation, delay is immaterial, for the warrant is a nullity; and the application may be made by the assignees of a defendant. Cocks v. Edwards, 2 D. (N.S.) 55; 7 Jur. 199. See Hirst v. Hannan, 17 Q. B. 383.

After verdict for the plaintiff, the court refused to entertain an objection to the warrant of attorney, that it was not attested. Kemp v. Finden, 12 M. & W. 421; 13 L. J., Ex. 137; 8 Jur. 65.

By what Solicitor.]—In order to make a cognovit valid, its execution must be attested by an attorney attending on behalf of the defendant, other than the attorney acting for the plaintiff.

Mason v. Kiddle, 5 M. & W. 513; 8 D. P. C. 207; 9 L. J., Ex. 37. S. P., Rising v. Dolphin, 8 D. P. C. 309.

Where a warrant of attorney was attested, on behalf of the defendant, by an attorney, who, besides practising on his own account, was acting at the time as clerk to another attorney, and the latter was acting as attorney both for the plaintiff and defendant in the transaction:—Held, not a sufficient attestation within 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 9. Durrant v. Blurton, 9 D. P. C. 1015.

An attorney acting on behalf of the plaintiff cannot validly attest the execution of a warrant of attorney, although named by the defendant himself, who knows him to be the plaintiff's attorney. Cocks v. Edwards, 2 D. (N.S.) 55; 7 Jur. 199.

The country agent of the plaintiff's attorney is not a competent witness to the execution of a cognovit, though expressly named by the defendant. Mason v. Riddle, 8 D. P. C. 207.

Where an attorney who attested the execution of a warrant of attorney was London agent to the plaintiff's attorney (who mentioned the name and address in town), and acted as such in filing the instrument, and made charges against the country attorney, with which he was debited:—Held, that the attorney so attesting was in substance the plaintiff's attorney, and that he could not, therefore, stand in that independent situation which the statute requires. Pryor v. Swaine, 2 D. & L. 37; 13 L. J., Q. B. 214; 8 Jur. 423.

A warrant of attorney was attested by an attorney introduced by the plaintiff, and who had on one former occasion acted professionally for the plaintiff, and who afterwards acted as the plaintiff's attorney in entering up judgment and issuing execution upon the warrant of attorney. The court set it aside. Cooper v. Grant, 12 C. B. 154; 21 L. J., C. P. 197.

If three defendants go to a particular attorney, named by the plaintiff, and give him instructions to prepare a joint warrant of attorney from them to the plaintiff, and each freely recognises the attorney as acting for him, the warrant is good. Haigh v. Frost, 7 D. P. C. 743.

Where a defendant was about to give a cognovit, and was unacquainted with any attorney, and, at his request, the plaintiff's attorney sent his clerk for one, who came and acted in that capacity for the defendant, a request to that effect being written by the plaintiff's attorney in the margin of the cognovit, the court set aside that instrument. Barnes v. Pendrey, 7 D. P. C. 747.

When there was but one attorney present who had previously acted for the plaintiff, and who, on that occasion, made out his bill to the plaintiff, but delivered it to the defendant, and was paid by him:—Held, that he was not such an attorney, acting on behalf of defendant, as required by 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 9. Sanderson v. Westley, 8 D. P. C. 412; 6 M. & W. 98; 9 L. J., Ex. 204.

The defendant having agreed to give the plaintiff a warrant of attorney to secure his debt to him, the plaintiff employed P., an attorney, to prepare it. P. called with it on the defendant, and told him it must be signed in the presence of some professional man, and that he should procure Mr. S. to attest it; and the defendant accordingly went to procure S.'s attendance, but met him in the street, when P. told him they were coming to his, S.'s office, that he might witness the execution of a warrant of attorney by the defendant. The defendant then suggested that they had better go to P.'s office, which was nearer. They went there accordingly; P. placed the paper in S.'s hands, and S. then read over and explained the warrant of attorney to the defendant, and asked him whether he wished him to witness the execution of it as his attorney. The defendant replied that he did, and then signed it, and S. attested it. P. offered to pay S. for his attendance, but he said, as it would come out of the defendant's pocket, he should make no charge; for which the defendant expressed himself obliged:—Held, that S. was not expressly named by the defendant and attending on his behalf, as to satisfy the statute; and the warrant of attorney and judgment signed thereon were set aside. Gripper v. Bristow, 6 M. & W. 807; 8 D. P. C. 797; 9 L. J., Ex. 324.

A warrant of attorney to confess judgment as a security for advances was attested in due form by an attorney acting for the defendant, and as his attorney and at his request, but who also acted for the plaintiff in the transaction. The defendant was informed that the attorney had been consulted by the plaintiff. The warrant was executed on the 6th of March, 1847, and a fi. fa. shortly afterwards issued, but was not executed. The plaintiff, after the judgment was signed, gave fresh credit to the defendant in the way of his trade. On the 28th of June, 1850, a levy was made. None of these facts were concealed. The defendant was adjudged a bankrupt on the 29th of July, 1850. A rule to set aside the warrant of attorney and all subsequent proceedings was obtained in Trinity Term, 1851:—Held, that by 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 9, the attorney acting for the plaintiff could not act as attorney for the defendant, and that the objection being made must prevail. Hirst v. Hannan, 17 Q. B. 383.

Where a cognovit had been attested on behalf of the defendant by an attorney who accompanied the plaintiff's son to the defendant's residence, and who subsequently carried the instrument to the queen's bench office to be filed, and there subscribed his name upon the back of it, as the plaintiff's attorney's agent, the court set aside the instrument. Rice v. Linsted, 7 D. P. C. 153; 6 Scott, 895.

—— Uncertificated.]—A warrant of attorney is sufficiently attested by an uncertificated attorney. Holgate v. Slight, 2 L. M. & P. 662; 21 L. J., Q. B. 74.

Nomination and Attendance of Solicitor.]—A warrant of attorney is not vitiated by the fact that the name of the attorney who attests it on behalf of the defendant was first suggested by the plaintiff's attorney, if he was expressly adopted by the defendant as his attorney for that purpose. Taylor v. Nicholl, 6 M. & W. 91; 8 D. P. C. 242; 9 L. J., Ex. 78.

It is not necessary that the party executing a cognovit should first name the attorney to attest the execution thereof, nor is it necessary that such attorney should be the regular attorney of the party giving the cognovit: it is sufficient if he is merely employed for the occasion, provided the person giving the cognovit shall ultimately exercise a free discretion in the adoption of him. Pease v. Wells, 8 D. P. C. 626.

Where a defendant, who is about to execute a warrant of attorney, declines the attendance of his own usual attorney, but adopts freely an attorney suggested by the plaintiff's attorney, that is a sufficient nomination of an attorney by the defendant. Hale v. Dale, 8 D. P. C. 599.

To constitute an express naming of attorney, it is sufficient if the attorney is named by another party, and adopted by the defendant, who calls upon him to request him to attest the execution of the cognovit; and it is not necessary that he should be in the first instance named by the defendant. Olliver v. Woodroffe, 4 M. & W. 650; 7 D. P. C. 166; 8 L. J., Ex. 105.

It is not necessary that the defendant should actually nominate the attorney attesting a warrant of attorney on his behalf; it is sufficient if, of his own free will, he adopts an attorney suggested by the plaintiff. Joel v. Dicker, 5 D. & L. 1; 2 B. C. Rep. 127; 16 L. J., Q. B. 359; 11 Jur. 589.

A warrant of attorney, prepared by a law stationer, according to the instructions of the defendant himself, was attested by an attorney introduced to the defendant by the plaintiff. The defendant had written and signed an authority to the attorney to act as his attorney on the signing and executing the warrant. The attorney was named in the warrant as having authority to enter up judgment thereon, and had subsequently done so, and issued execution upon the judgment:—Held, that the attestation was good. Levinson v. Syer, 2 L. M. & P. 557; 21 L. J., Q. B. 16; 15 Jur. 1011.

Where a defendant who was about to execute a warrant of attorney, not having an attorney of his own, was introduced to one by the plaintiff's attorney, and repeated after the plaintiff's attorney these words, which occurred in the body of the warrant, "I have expressly named W. J. M., and requested him to attend on my behalf":—Held, in the absence of fraud, to be a sufficient nomination. Walton v. Chandler, 1 C. B. 307; 2 D. & L. 802; 14 L. J., C. P. 149; 9 Jur. 257.

Duty of Solicitor.]—If a defendant informs the attorney attending on his behalf that the warrant has been read over to him, and that he understands it, the attorney need not read it over and explain it to the defendant. Taylor v. Nicholl, 8 D. P. C. 242.

A cognovit need not be read over to the defendant before execution, if he is informed of its nature and effect. Olliver v. Woodroffe, 4 M. & W. 650; 7 D. P. C. 166; 8 L. J., Ex. 105.

Nor is it necessary that the attorney should be cognisant of the facts under which a warrant of attorney is given, or that he should consult with the defendant in private previously to signing; it is enough if the attorney is there, willing to give the defendant the advice if he asks it; and he cannot complain afterwards that his interests were not protected, if he withholds from the attorney the necessary information. Joel v. Dicker, 5 D. & L. 1; 2 B. C. Rep. 127; 16 L. J., Q. B. 359; 11 Jur. 589.

If an attorney, properly appointed by a defendant on his behalf, neglects his duty to his client (if without collusion with the plaintiff), it is no objection to the instrument; if, therefore (without collusion), he neglects to inform his client of the nature and effect of the warrant, that is not an objection available to the defendant. Haigh v. Frost, 7 D. P. C. 743.

5. Stamping.

When necessary.]—See Revenue.

Effect of not Stamping.]—A judgment signed on an unstamped warrant of attorney is not available against subsequent judgments, and will be set aside on the application of a judgment creditor. Semple v. Nicholson, 4 H. & N. 298; 28 L. J., Ex. 217.

The court will not permit a warrant of attorney to be taken off the file for the purpose of being stamped on payment of the penalty, until the judgment signed on it is first set aside. Ib.

No warrant of attorney will henceforth be permitted to be filed without being properly stamped. Ib.

Where a rule nisi was obtained to set aside the judgment and execution on a warrant of attorney, on the ground of a fraudulent preference, and where, at the time of obtaining the rule, the instrument was not properly stamped, but the defect had been remedied by affixing a proper stamp before showing cause, the court discharged the rule without costs. Bainbridge v. Wildman, 1 D. (N.S.) 774.

6. Filing.

Within Twenty-one Days—Calculation of.]—The twenty-one days are to be counted exclusively of the day of the execution of the warrant of attorney; and therefore a warrant executed on the 9th day of the month may be filed on the 30th. Williams v. Burgess, 9 D. P. C. 544; 4 P. & D. 443; 12 A. & E. 635; 10 L. J., Q. B. 10.

It was not necessary under 3 Geo. 4, c. 39, s. 3, to file a cognovit within twenty-one days, if judgment was signed within that period. Bushell v. Boord, 1 B. C. Rep. 260; 4 D. & L. 359; 16 L. J., Q. B. 57; 11 Jur. 268.

So in the case of a warrant of attorney, it was sufficient if judgment was signed within twenty-one days. Green v. Wood, 7 Q. B. 178; 14 L. J., Q. B. 217; 9 Jur. 756.

But under 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 136, a warrant of attorney to confess judgment thereon was void as against the assignees of a bankrupt, if the warrant of attorney had not been filed in the Queen's Bench within twenty-one days after the execution, with an affidavit of the time of execution, although judgment was signed within twenty-one days. Acraman v. Herniman, 16 Q. B. 999; 20 L. J., Q. B. 355; 15 Jur. 1008. See Parker v. Watson, 8 Ex. 404; 22 L. J., Ex. 167.

Affidavit of Execution.]—If a warrant of attorney is filed with an affidavit made by the attesting witness, which states that he "saw the warrant of attorney, bearing date the 25th April, 1827, duly signed, sealed, and delivered," but does not specify the day on which it was executed, the affidavit is not in conformity with the directions of the statute; and the warrant of attorney, and the judgment and execution thereon, are void as against the assignees of the defendant. Dillon v. Edwards, 2 M. & P. 550; 7 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 110.

Where a warrant of attorney is filed in twenty-one days after execution, with an affidavit made by the attesting witness, stating that the deponent "was present on the 4th of April, 1844, and saw the within-named W. H. R. sign, seal, and as his act deliver the warrant of attorney," it is sufficiently shown that the deponent saw the defendant execute the warrant on the day and year named. Robinson v. Robinson, 3 D. & L. 134; 14 L. J., Q. B. 303; 10 Jur. 356.

Omission to File.]—By an agreement between bankers, a customer and a surety, the surety guaranteed the balance due or to become due from the customer, subject to a limit and to a proviso empowering the surety at any time to determine by notice his liability as to subsequent dealings. The customer afterwards obtained a loan from the bank beyond the limit of the guarantee on a warrant of attorney, and simultaneously with it a second agreement was entered into between the bankers, the customer and surety, that the warrant of attorney should not prejudice or affect the former agreement, and that the bank would, at any time when requested by the surety, enter up judgment and issue execution. The bank omitted to file the warrant of attorney, and the customer became bankrupt:—Held, that by the omission to file the warrant of attorney the surety was discharged. Watson v. Allcock, 4 De G. M. & G. 242; 22 L. J., Ch. 858; 17 Jur. 568; 1 W. R. 399.

Where a cognovit not having been filed nor judgment signed or execution issued thereon within twenty-one days, pursuant to 3 Geo. 4, c. 39, and 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 60, the cognovit and the judgment and execution thereon were void as against assignees; and the latter were consequently entitled to recover the whole of the proceeds of the levy, deducting only the sum paid for taxes. Biffin v. Yorke, 5 Man. & G. 428; 6 Scott (N.R.) 222; 12 L. J., C. P. 162. S. P., Bittleston v. Cooper, 14 M. & W. 399.

Where an indenture, by virtue of which the judgment was entered up, was, in legal effect, a cognovit, or if not, was a contrivance to defeat the provisions of 3 Geo. 4, c. 39, and not having been filed with the proper officer within twenty-one days after its execution, and judgment not having been entered up within that period, as required by the statute, the court, upon application by the assignees of the obligor, who had become bankrupt, ordered the execution to be withdrawn. Hurst v. Jennings, 5 B. & C. 650; 8 D. & R. 424.

Copies.]—Where a copy of a warrant of attorney has been filed, such copy is good evidence, without proof of collation of the contents with the warrant of attorney, at least against the party filing it, and all claiming under him. Sylvester v. Anthony, 3 M. & Scott, 191; 9 Bing. 746; 2 L. J., C. P. 103.

7. Amount Secured.

a. Instalments.

Default in Payment of.]—Where defendants gave a warrant of attorney to secure a sum certain to be paid half-yearly by instalments, with interest on specified days, and that the plaintiff should be at liberty to enter up judgment thereon immediately, but no execution to be issued till default made in payment of the said sum, with interest, by the instalments and in the manner thereinbefore mentioned:—Held, that the plaintiff might issue execution for the whole on default in payment of the first instalment. Leveridge v. Forty, 1 M. & S. 706.

Under a cognovit, by which it is agreed that no judgment is to be signed or execution issued, unless default made in payment of a certain sum, with costs, by instalments, the plaintiff may sign judgment and issue execution for the whole sum, if default is made in one instalment. Rose v. Tomlinson, 3 D. P. C. 49.

Where in a cognovit it was provided that judgment should not be entered up until default should be made in the due payment of the debt, which it was subsequently declared should be paid by instalments, together with costs, to be taxed by the master as between attorney and client:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to enter up judgment on default being made in the payment of one of the instalments, although he had not taxed his costs, but that the taxation must take place before issuing execution. Barrett v. Partington, 7 D. P. C. 447; 5 Bing. (N.C.) 487; 7 Scott, 595; 2 Arn. 30.

b. Conditions as to.

Performance of—What is.]—A. gave a cognovit for 37*l.*, payable by monthly instalments; but if default was made in payment of any instalment, judgment was to be entered up for the whole sum, or so much as remained due; and B. agreed that A. should attend at the office of C. on the seventh day after "any notice," so that if any instalments were not paid, A. might be taken on a ca. sa. The first instalment was not paid, and judgment was entered up for the whole sum, and a ca. sa. sued out. Notice was given to B. for A. to attend at C.'s office at a certain time. A. did so, but C. gave him a week's time:—Held, that this was a complete performance of B.'s agreement; and that, if after this another notice was given for A. to attend on another day, and A. did not attend, no action would lie against B. Turner v. Pyne, 6 Car. & P. 310; 3 N. & M. 354; 1 A. & E. 34; 3 L. J., K. B. 120.

A cognovit was given, with a condition that if the ultimate decision of certain chancery suits between the parties should be for the plaintiff, the defendant should pay him 500*l.* within one month after such decision, or else execution should issue. The vice-chancellor made his decree in those suits for the plaintiff, who, at the end of a month, issued execution, the 500*l.* being unpaid. The decree had not been passed by the registrar, though the minutes had been settled; and the defendant had lodged a caveat, intending, as he stated, to appeal to the lord chancellor:—Held, that the chancery suits had not been ultimately decided within the meaning of the condition, and that the execution, consequently, was irregular. Dummer v. Pitcher, 3 B. & Ad. 347.

Where in a cognovit it is stipulated that judgment shall not be entered up until after the final hearing of a chancery suit, and the final decree or order thereupon, when, in the event of the final decree or order being in favour of the plaintiff, the judgment and execution upon the cognovit are to operate in accordance with the decree or order, and the plaintiff is to be entitled to levy for the amount decreed, and no more; the plaintiff is not authorised to enter up judgment, pending an appeal to the lord chancellor, against a final decree at the Rolls dismissing the defendant's bill. Jones v. Reynolds, 3 N. & M. 465; 1 A. & E. 384.

A defeasance to a warrant of attorney, dated 5th June, 1824, stated that it was given to secure the payment of 420*l.* (with costs of judgment, if signed) on the 5th December, 1826, and that it was agreed that the plaintiff should enter up judgment thereon at his pleasure, and issue execution:—Held, that the plaintiff was restrained by this defeasance from suing out execution before the 5th December, 1826. Hiscocks v. Kemp, 5 N. & M. 113; 3 A. & E. 676; 1 H. & W. 384.

A defendant gave a warrant of attorney to the plaintiff to secure the payment of a debt by instalments. Shortly before the first instalment was due, the defendant told the plaintiff that he feared he could not meet it, and that unless time was given him, he would make over his effects for the benefit of his creditors. An agreement was then entered into between them, that the defendant should give his acceptance for a part, and pay the rest by instalments according to his ability, so as to discharge all before April 1, 1836, and that the plaintiff should not enter up judgment, unless the defendant should dispose of his business, or become bankrupt or insolvent. The defendant paid the acceptance when due. Afterwards, and before April 1, 1836, the defendant asked the plaintiff to make him a bankrupt, in order to relieve him from his difficulties, and said that he could not pay 20*s.* in the pound, and that his assets were 200*l.* and his debts 300*l.* :—Held, that the plaintiff might enter up judgment and take out execution, the defendant appearing to be insolvent in the sense contemplated in the agreement; and that the facts stated did not show that the plaintiff, at the time of the agreement, knew the defendant to be insolvent in that sense. Buddicombe v. Bond, 4 A. & E. 332; 1 H. & W. 612.

A defendant gave a cognovit, whereby it was stipulated that no judgment should be entered up thereon, unless default should be made in payment of the debt, with interest and costs, on the 9th November; and in case the defendant made default in payment as aforesaid, the plaintiff was to be at liberty to enter up judgment and proceed to execution, and take the whole of the debt and costs, together with the costs of such judgment and execution :—Held, that no default could be made until the plaintiff had furnished the defendant with a bill of the costs, and given her notice of taxation; and not having done so, the judgment signed on the 10th November was irregular, although the defendant had paid no part of either the debt or costs. Booth v. Parker, 3 M. & W. 54; 6 D. P. C. 87; 7 L. J., Ex. 5.

Necessity of Demand before Entering up Judgment.]—Where a defeasance on a warrant of attorney stated that it was given to secure the payment of a sum on demand, and that, in case default should be made, judgment was to be entered up, an actual demand must be made, and a proposal to settle amicably does not amount to such a demand. Nicholl v. Bromley, 5 Moore, 307; 2 Br. & B. 464.

When a defeasance requires anything to be done on demand before judgment can be entered up, there must be an actual demand upon a person capable of giving a substantial answer; therefore, a demand made upon an insane person is not sufficient to authorise the judgment to be entered. The only remedy is by an application to equity. Capper v. Dando, 2 A. & E. 458; 4 N. & M. 335; 1 H. & W. 11; 4 L. J., K. B. 97.

c. The Amount itself.

Not more than Penalty in Warrant.]—Judgment cannot be entered up for more than the penalty in the warrant of attorney. Nicholas v. Merrett, 1 W. P. C. 3; 9 D. P. C. 101.

Signing Judgment for more than is mentioned in Warrant.]—Signing judgment for a sum larger than that mentioned in the warrant, is only an irregularity, which may be waived by the laches of the defendant. Stopford v. Fitzgerald, 4 D. & L. 725; 16 L. J., Q. B. 310; 11 Jur. 454.

Ascertainment of.]—A warrant of attorney having been given by defendant for 800*l.* judgment was signed thereon, and execution levied for the full amount. The defendant having died, an application was made by his executor for a rule directing that the amount due on the warrant of attorney should be ascertained, and the overplus, if any, refunded by the plaintiff. The application was made on an affidavit of the applicant, that the defendant had told him shortly before his death that he was not indebted to the plaintiff in the amount claimed :—Held, that there was no ground for the application. Pettit v. Pettit, 2 C. L. R. 73.

Costs.]—A warrant of attorney empowered the plaintiff to sign judgment and issue execution for the amount of the debt, but omitted the words "together with costs of suit." A judgment was signed for the amount of the debt and costs :—Held, that such judgment was not authorised by the warrant and was irregular. Page v. South, 2 D. & L. 108; 13 L. J., Q. B. 291.

Where a plaintiff brought an action upon an annuity deed, and afterwards took a warrant of attorney for the sum due, with a provision, that, if within a certain time the annuity was not paid, he should be at liberty to take out execution for the sum specified, together with all costs incurred for or by reason of the non-payment of the annuity :—Held, that he was not at liberty to issue execution for the costs of the action. Delane v. Mott, 2 Chit. 423.

Interest.]—A judgment creditor is entitled to interest on his debt, where the warrant of attorney authorises the judgment to be entered up for double the amount actually due. Tunstall v. Trappes, 3 Sim. 299.

Where the warrant makes no mention of interest on the principal, but the defeasance does, the court will allow execution to be issued for the principal and interest. Shipton v. Shipton, 1 D. P. C. 518. See Atkinson v. Jones, 2 A. & E. 439.

Where a warrant of attorney had been given to secure a debt and interest, the sum for which judgment was to be confessed being for the amount of the debt only, the court granted a rule to enter up judgment for the debt, and so much for interest as the master should find to be due thereon. Chalk v. Walton, 5 Man. & G. 573; 6 Scott (N.R.) 693; 1 D. & L. 39.

A memorandum indorsed on a warrant of attorney stated that it had been given to secure the payment on the 2nd of June, 1864, of a sum of money, with interest thereon at the rate of 5*l.* per cent. per month; that judgment was forthwith to be entered up, and that if the debt and interest were not paid on the day aforesaid, execution was to issue. The debt was not paid at the time appointed, and judgment was not entered up :—Held, that after the day named for payment the debt carried interest at 4*l.* per cent. per annum only. Robinson v. Wood, 18 W. R. 32.

per cent., before the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 90, which abolished the usury laws, for which subsequent acceptances were given. A warrant of attorney to confess immediate judgment was given to secure the payment of these acceptances, which judgment was entered up the following day. H. was possessed of real estate of considerable value, but heavily encumbered. L. required to be furnished with the particulars of H.'s estate and its encumbrances before he would lend the money, which he investigated, but no reference was made to the estate in the warrant of attorney, or in any agreement between the parties:—Held, that the transaction was not void for usury, but was protected by the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 98, s. 7. Lane v. Horlock, 5 H. L. Cas. 580; 25 L. J., Ch. 253; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 289; 4 W. R. 408.

To whom Payment may be made.]—Where a cognovit is given for the payment of a sum generally, the defendant may pay either the plaintiff or his attorney. Anon., 1 D. P. C. 173.

Payment of an instalment to a clerk of the plaintiff's attorney after it has become due does not bind the plaintiff. Perry v. Turner, 2 C. & J. 189; 2 Tyr. 128; 1 D. P. C. 300; 1 L. J., Ex. 13.

d. Continuing Security.

What is.]—Where there was a running account between A. and B., and the former gave the latter a warrant of attorney, with a defeasance, stating it to be given as a security for 4,000*l.* and lawful interest thereon:—Held, that it was a continuing security, applicable to any balance which might at any time be due, and was not discharged by payments exceeding 4,000*l.* between the date of the warrant of attorney and the time of entering up judgment thereon. Woolley v. Jennings, 7 D. & R. 824; 5 B. & C. 165; 2 Car. & P. 144.

Where a trader contracted a debt, gave a warrant of attorney to secure its payment specifically, and the creditor sought to enforce that security against goods of the debtor, in respect of subsequent advances made by the creditor, the court, at the instance of the assignees, set aside the proceedings of the creditor. Bett v. Tidd, 9 D. P. C. 949; 6 Jur. 59.

A., a feme sole, being about to marry B., lent him 300*l.* upon his warrant of attorney, the warrant being given to her and C., who was to act as her trustee. The defeasance showed the loan to be in contemplation of marriage, and stipulated that B. was to be possessed of the money so long as C. should please, paying interest for the same to C.; and also, that upon the request of A., C. might require payment of the principal on giving a week's notice; judgment was to be forthwith entered up, and execution was to issue on default of payment after such notice. Judgment was accordingly entered up, and the marriage solemnized. After several years had elapsed, notice was given in pursuance of the warrant, and on default a fi. fa. issued, under which the goods of B. were taken and assigned by the sheriff. B. was then adjudged bankrupt, and a rule was obtained to set aside the execution, and for the delivery of the goods to his assignee, upon the grounds that the judgment should have been revived, and that it was discharged by the subsequent marriage of A. and B.:—Held, that the execution having been suspended by the consent of the parties, the judgment did not require reviving; and that, under the circumstances of the case, the warrant of attorney, being in the nature of a marriage settlement, remained a good security for the loan, and that the execution thereupon was valid. Dolling v. White, 1 B. C. C. 170; 22 L. J., Q. B. 327; 17 Jur. 505.

Evidence to show that Security is continuing.]—A defeasance to a warrant of attorney stated that it was for securing 1,300*l.*, with interest, on the 15th April, and authorised the plaintiff, in default of payment, to issue execution for the whole amount, with costs, interest, &c. At the time the warrant was given, the plaintiff was a creditor of the defendant for 514*l.*, and liable to a further sum of 237*l.* as surety. At the period of the issuing of execution, the amount of the debt was 1,110*l.* 14*s.*, a portion of which sum consisted of bills accepted by the plaintiff for the accommodation of the defendant after the warrant of attorney had been given. The sum actually levied was 1,085*l.*:—Held, that affidavits were admissible to show that the intention was, that the warrant of attorney should be a security not only for existing debts, but also for all future advances by the plaintiff, or payments to which he should become liable, not exceeding 1,300*l.* Robinson v. Robinson, 3 D. & L. 134; 14 L. J., Q. B. 303; 10 Jur. 356.

8. JUDGMENT.

a. Leave of Judge to Enter.

Application—When Necessary.]—Where the defeasance contains a provision that it shall not be necessary to apply to the court for judgment on the instrument after the lapse of a year and a day, it is not (as such a condition is valid) necessary to make an application for judgment on the warrant. Sherran v. Marshall, 1 D. & L. 689; 13 L. J., Q. B. 66; 8 Jur. 469.

A plaintiff may enter up judgment on a cognovit given before appearance, and upon which no step has been taken for more than a year, without first giving a term's (now a calendar month's) notice, or obtaining leave. Thompson v. Langridge, 1 Ex. 351; 5 D. & L. 213; 17 L. J., Ex. 4.

—— Where Made.] — Application must be made to a judge at chambers, and not to the court. Handley v. Roberts, 17 Jur. 460.

When Rule for Judgment will be Granted.]—A tenant from year to year having given a warrant of attorney authorising his landlord to determine the tenancy by a notice to quit, and in default of such notice being given to sign judgment in ejectment and issue execution, the court, upon affidavit of the service of the notice, and of the expiration of the tenancy, and that the tenant refused to quit the premises, granted a rule for judgment on the warrant of attorney. Doe d. Beaumont v. Beaumont, 2 D. (N.S.) 972; 7 Jur. 854.

Though judgment cannot be entered up on a warrant of attorney more than one year old without leave, yet none but the defendant himself can object to any irregularity in this respect. Jones v. Jones, 1 D. & R. 558.

The court refused to allow judgment to be entered up on an old warrant of attorney, it appearing by the plaintiff's affidavit that she was resident in an enemy's country. De Luneville v. Phillips, 2 Bos. & P. (N.R.) 97.

The court set aside a judgment on a warrant of attorney, entered up, even before the rule of H. T. 4 Will. 4, where the defendant was dead at the time of signing judgment, although in the defeasance it was stipulated that the plaintiff should, without leave of the court, be at liberty to enter up judgment, notwithstanding the defendant's death. Heath v. Brindley, 4 N. & M. 235; 2 A. & E. 365; 4 L. J., K. B. 68.

Where an instalment on a cognovit became due after the death of the defendant, the court refused to allow judgment to be entered up on the cognovit nunc pro tunc. Blackburn v. Goodrick, 9 D. P. C. 337.

It is no objection to entering up judgment, that the defendant, since the execution of it, has become insane. Piggott v. Killick, 4 D. P. C. 287; 1 H. & W. 518.

A debt having been secured by a policy of insurance effected on the life of one of the debtors, the debtors, by way of further security, executed a warrant of attorney to their creditor to enter up judgment for the debt, the defeasance of the warrant providing, that so long as the policy was kept on foot by the debtors, judgment should not be entered up, nor execution issued on the warrant. By indenture of even date with the warrant, and executed by the debtors, a similar stipulation was made as to execution on the warrant, with a further provision, that, on default by the debtors in payment of the premiums within a certain period after they should become due, the creditor might himself either keep the policy on foot, or effect a new policy in his own name, at the expense of the debtors. The debtors having failed to pay the premiums in due time, and the creditor not exercising his right to keep it on foot, the policy became forfeited. Four days afterwards the creditor, who was a director of the insurance company, paid up the premium and induced the office to renew the policy:—Held, that he was nevertheless entitled to enter up judgment, and issue execution on the warrant of attorney; and a bill by the debtors, seeking to restrain him from so doing, was dismissed. Winthrop v. Murray, 8 Hare, 214; 19 L. J., Ch. 547; 14 Jur. 302.

At what Time or of what Term.]—A warrant of attorney, dated 25th May, 1842, authorised certain attorneys to appear as "of Easter Term last past, Trinity Term now next, or any other subsequent term," "and then and there" to receive a declaration, and thereupon to confess the action, or to suffer judgment by nil dicit, or otherwise, &c. On the 27th of November, 1846, a judge's order was obtained for leave to sign judgment, and judgment was accordingly signed on the following day:—Held, that the judgment was regularly signed in pursuance of the authority by warrant of attorney, notwithstanding the Reg. Gen. H. T. 4 Will. 4, Part XI., r. 3, requiring all judgments to be "entered up of record, of the day and month, whether in term or vacation, when signed." Alcock v. Sutcliffe, 4 D. & L. 612; 1 B. C. Rep. 313; 16 L. J., Q. B. 129. S. P., Jarvis v. South, 13 M. & W. 152; 2 D. & L. 962; 13 L. J., Ex. 319; 8 Jur. 519.

In what Court.]—A warrant of attorney was directed to two attorneys of the queen's bench, and, after authorising an appearance to be entered for the defendants, the instrument omitted the words "in the said court:"—Held, that it sufficiently appeared, from the terms of the warrant, no other court being mentioned, that the proceedings were to be taken in the court of queen's bench. Harris or Harrison v. Peck, 2 D. & L. 106; 13 L. J., Q. B. 295; 8 Jur. 929.

Names of Parties.]—A judgment was entered up against Mr. H. under a warrant of attorney. In the judgment and warrant of attorney, he was named W. H., his proper name being W. B. H.:—Held, that the judgment was valid. Hotham v. Somerville, 9 Beav. 63; 9 Jur. 702.

Where a warrant of attorney is given to three trustees of a joint-stock bank, to secure a debt due to the bank, the judgment thereon is properly entered up in the name of the public officer under 7 Geo. 4, c. 46. Bell v. Fisk, 12 C. B. 493.

A warrant of attorney was given to A. B. and C. D., "public officers of the Yorkshire Banking Company," but not to them as public officers. The defeasance showed that the object of warrant of attorney was to secure to the plaintiffs, as public officers, money therein expressed to have been lent by them as public officers to the defendants, and such further sum as the company might advance. The affidavits showed the original debt to be unpaid, and a further sum to have been advanced by the company, but did not allege the debt to be still owing to the plaintiffs, one of them having ceased to be a public officer. The court permitted the company to enter up judgment in the names of A. B. and C. D., as individuals. Howard v. Batho, 5 D. & L. 396.

A cognovit having been given in an action brought by a public officer of a banking company, under 7 Geo. 4, c. 46, by which it was provided, that, upon default in payment of a sum of money, the plaintiff should be at liberty to enter up judgment and issue execution:—Held, to be sufficient to authorise signing judgment in the name of another public officer, upon a suggestion being entered of the removal of the original plaintiff. Webb v. Taylor, 1 D. & L. 676; 13 L. J., Q. B. 24; 8 Jur. 39.

Husband and Wife.]—A judgment on a warrant of attorney given to a wife dum sola, cannot be entered up after her marriage, without leave, though less than a year old. On application for such leave, the court requires an affidavit proving not only the marriage, but the due execution of the warrant of attorney, and the non-payment of the debt. Metcalfe v. Booty, 6 D. & R. 46; 3 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 140.

It is necessary to obtain leave to enter up judgment against husband and wife, on a warrant of attorney executed by the wife dum sola. Staples v. Purser, 2 D. P. C. 764; 3 M. & Scott, 800.

And judgment entered up against husband and wife, upon a warrant given by wife while sole, without leave, was set aside, but not with costs. Marder v. Lee, 3 Burr. 1496.

b. Affidavit.

Title.]—Upon a motion to enter up judgment upon an old warrant of attorney, the affidavit is properly entitled in the cause in which the judgment is entered. Bell v. Fisk, 12 C. B. 493. S. P., Sowerby v. Woodruff, 1 B. & Ald. 567.

If given when no suit is pending, it need not be entitled in any cause. Davis v. Stanbury, 3 D. P. C. 440.

An affidavit entitled "in the king's bench," but not in any cause, is sufficient. Gregory, Ex parte, 8 B. & C. 409.

Where a warrant of attorney was given to three persons, one of whom died, judgment was allowed to be entered up on an affidavit entitled with the names of the survivors, but not naming them survivors. Lambert v. Lambert, 5 Jur. 54.

Swearing.]—It is no objection to an affidavit sworn in Scotland, that it was taken before a justice of the peace, and not before a lord of session. Watson v. Williamson, 1 D. P. C. 607.

Must show that Defendant is Alive.]—It is necessary to show that the defendant was "alive," and not merely "seen," within a reasonable time before the application. Chell v. Oldfield, 4 D. P. C. 629.

There must be a positive affidavit that the defendant is alive, or has been seen alive within a reasonable period; mere inference is not sufficient, even though it appears that the defendant keeps out of the way. Croft v. Egmont, 8 D. P. C. 95.

—— What is Sufficient Proof.]—It is sufficient proof of the party being alive, to show that a cheque of his had been paid dated thirteen days before the application. Jacobs v. Griffith, 5 D. P. C. 577.

It is insufficient to swear that the deponent believes the defendant to be alive, from information which he has received, unless he also swears that he believes the information to be true. Reeder v. Whip, 5 D. P. C. 576.

It is not sufficient to show by the hearsay statement of a deponent that the defendant was alive within a reasonable time previously to the application. Key v. Mountague, 1 D. (N.S.) 853.

It is not sufficient "to swear that the defendant is now living, the deponent having seen him on the 16th instant"; for the affidavit should state that he saw him alive on the 16th instant. Watson v. Matthews, 2 D. (N.S.) 670; 12 L. J., Q. B. 139; 7 Jur. 627.

But an affidavit stating that the deponent believed the defendants to be alive, having seen and conversed with two of them, and "been in company" with the third on a recent day, is sufficient. Howard v. Batho, 5 D. & L. 396. S. P., Powell v. Howard, 6 Scott, 826; 8 L. J., C. P. 16.

Where a defendant was seen alive on the 24th of March, and a motion to enter up judgment was made on the 15th of April, the court granted the application. O'Neill v. Coghlan, 2 D. & L. 5; 13 L. J., Q. B. 204; 8 Jur. 361.

—— Several Parties.]—Where a warrant of attorney is joint, and not joint and several, and it is sought to enter up judgment against one of the parties giving the warrant, the affidavit must show that both are alive, and not merely the one against whom it is sought to enter up judgment. Lot v. Anderson, 1 D. (N.S.) 305.

—— Waiver.]—A party may by the terms of the warrant of attorney waive the necessity of an affidavit being made of his having been recently seen alive, in order to obtain leave to enter up judgment after a year and a day have elapsed. Tripp or Chipp v. Stanley, 5 D. & L. 262; 17 L. J., Q. B. 19; 11 Jur. 1062.

Defendant Abroad.]—Where a defendant is resident in the West Indies, judgment may be signed against him on a warrant of attorney, if seen alive four months before. Fursey v. Pilkington, 2 D. P. C. 452.

The court allowed judgment to be signed on an old warrant of attorney, the application being made on the 5th of November, although the defendant had not been seen alive since two or three days before the 1st of March previously, and then in New South Wales. Johnson v. Fry, 5 D. P. C. 215; 2 H. & W. 293.

On an affidavit stating that the last time the plaintiff had been able to obtain any intelligence of the defendant was eight months back, when he was at Newfoundland, but about to leave that island for America, and that his son and mother, who lived in this country, had declined to give any information respecting him, and that there was no other person to whom the plaintiff could apply, the court allowed judgment to be entered up against him. Pemberton v. Browning, 9 Moore, 389; 2 Bing. 204.

The court will not allow judgment to be signed against a defendant who is abroad, and has not been seen for three weeks, unless it is sworn that "it is believed that he is still alive." Richardson v. Scholefield, 2 D. (N.S.) 36; 6 Jur. 646.

An affidavit that the deponent has seen the defendant alive within three months, and that he is now residing in Paris, is insufficient, unless it also states that his residence there is unknown. Tripp or Chipp v. Stanley, 5 D. & L. 262; 17 L. J., Q. B. 19; 11 Jur. 1062.

Defendant Transported.]—A joint warrant of attorney having been given by two, and one of them having been transported for life, the court permitted judgment to be entered up against both, on an affidavit stating the conviction and a certificate from the home office certifying the transportation, and that no return of the convict's death had been made, and that by the practice of that office no return was made of a convict continuing alive, it being also sworn that the other person was still living. Dalrymple v. Fraser, 3 D. & L. 611.

Must show Debt Unpaid.]—An affidavit in support of a rule nisi, for entering up judgment on a warrant of attorney more than twenty years old, must show affirmatively either that the debt still remains unsatisfied, or some other facts rebutting the presumption of payment. Hulke v. Pickering, 4 D. & R. 5; 2 B. & C. 555.

An affidavit that the money is still due is necessary, unless its absence is accounted for, although the defendant has agreed that judgment shall be entered up. Barton v. Turner, 8 D. P. C. 122.

—— What Sufficient Proof.]—Where a warrant of attorney is given as a security to a person giving a guarantee, it is not necessary to swear that any sum is owing upon it, if it is sworn that the guarantee is still in force. Pickering v. Carnell, 8 D. P. C. 300.

An affidavit by the plaintiff's attorney, that the debt is unpaid, is sufficient, where the attorney swears that he has been employed in managing the money, and receiving and paying over the interest. Ashman v. Bowdler, 2 C. & M. 212; 4 Tyr. 84; 3 L. J., Ex. 23.

It is sufficient to prove that the money is still due to produce an affidavit by the plaintiff's attorney's clerk that it is so due, he having received different payments on account of the warrant of attorney, and having lately seen the defendant, when he promised to pay a further instalment upon it. Middleton v. Stockdale, 1 D. (N.S.) 776.

Where the attorney negotiating the loan for which the warrant of attorney was given, still continuing the attorney of the plaintiff, deposed "that the defendant was indebted to the plaintiff in 150*l*., for money lent by the deponent on account of the plaintiff to the defendant, and that the defendant had not paid to the deponent or to the plaintiff, or, to the best of his knowledge and belief, to any person on behalf of the plaintiff, any portion of the money," and positively swore that there yet remained due and owing 150*l*., the court allowed judgment to be entered up without any affidavit from the plaintiff. Hill v. Enow or Enoe, 13 L. J., Q. B. 65; 7 Jur. 1038.

Discharge by Bankruptcy—Consideration.]—On an application for leave to enter up judgment on a warrant of attorney more than ten years old, it is for the plaintiff to satisfy the court that there was good consideration. And if the defendant shows a bar, primâ facie valid, as a certificate of discharge by bankruptcy, it is for the plaintiff to show sufficient ground for believing it can be avoided or defeated. Sherborn v. Huntingtower (Lord), 11 W. R. 145.

Where the plaintiff himself made an affidavit of the consideration, or that he had not had notice of the bankruptcy, and his attorney only made an affidavit of mere hearsay, as to gaming, which the defendant denied, the court refused leave to enter up judgment. Ib.

Proof of Execution of Instrument.]—On motion to enter up judgment, the subscribing witness, if any, must make affidavit at the execution. It is not sufficient for him to sign the affidavit in the character of the commissioner before whom it was sworn. Field v. Bearcroft, 2 C. & J. 217; 1 D. P. C. 308; 2 Tyr. 283; 1 L. J., Ex. 81.

Where a warrant of attorney refers to the plaintiff, "his executors and administrators," but the affidavit of execution makes no mention of "executors or administrators," the court will not allow judgment to be entered up. Baldwin v. Thompson, 2 D. P. C. 591.

—— When Sufficient.]—An affidavit by the plaintiff that the defendant was indebted to him on an old warrant of attorney, and that he had not paid the sum secured by it, that he saw the defendant execute it, and that the attesting witness was also present, but was now residing in France, and that the defendant was alive, is sufficient. Taylor v. Leighton, 3 M. & Scott, 423; 2 D. P. C. 746.

—— Only Copy Filed.]—A copy of an old warrant of attorney having been filed instead of the original, and search for the instrument itself proving ineffectual, the court, upon an affidavit of the due execution of the instrument by the attesting witness since dead, granted a rule for judgment. Doe d. Beaumont v. Beaumont, 2 D. (N.S.) 972; 7 Jur. 854.

On motion to set aside a judgment on the ground that the original warrant of attorney on which the judgment was founded had not been filed, in compliance with the rule of court, but a copy only:—Held, that it was incumbent on those who sought to set aside a judgment (which was of old standing) to show clearly that the omission to file the original warrant was the fault of the plaintiff or his attorney; and that, as it was consistent with the circumstances of the particular case, that the original had been tendered to the officer of the court, and that the copy, instead of the original, had been filed through his inadvertence, the application was refused. James v. Heward, 3 Q. B. 948; 3 G. & D. 264; 12 L. J., Q. B. 58; 7 Jur. 14.

—— By Office Copies.]—In order to obtain judgment on warrant of attorney, which has been filed pursuant to 3 Geo. 4, c. 39, ss. 1, 2, it is sufficient to prove the execution by an office copy of the affidavit of execution. Bland v. Wilson, 1 D. (N.S.) 260. S. P., Webb v. Webb, 4 D. P. C. 599.

—— Affidavit verifying Handwriting of Attesting Witness.]—Judgment cannot be entered up without an affidavit of an attesting witness, or an affidavit verifying his handwriting. Jones v. Knight, 1 Chit. 743.

And the acknowledgment of the defendant does not obviate the objection; but where the attesting witness is out of the jurisdiction of the court, an affidavit verifying his handwriting would be sufficient. Appleton v. Bond, 1 Chit. 744.

It is not a sufficient excuse for not producing an affidavit of the attesting witness, that an application to a person, acquainted with the witness's address, has been unsuccessful in obtaining it, although the handwriting of the defendant and of the witness to the warrant of attorney is verified. Cope v. Lee, 9 D. P. C. 102; 1 W. P. C. 37.

Where the attesting witness could not be found, judgment was allowed to be entered up on an affidavit that the defendant had acknowledged his liability, and admitted the handwriting of the witness, being informed of the purpose for which such admission was required. Reid v. Forge or Ford, 4 Scott (N.R.) 330; 1 D. (N.S.) 187; 3 Man. & G. 546.

Where the attesting witness had been transported seven years previously to an application to sign judgment, and no information respecting him could be obtained, the court allowed judgment to be signed on producing an affidavit of his handwriting, as well as of that of the defendant. Edwards v. Penhey or Penny, 2 D. (N.S.) 425; 7 Jur. 200.

—— When Proof will be Dispensed With.]—The affidavit of the attesting witness cannot be dispensed with merely on the ground of his illness. Owen v. Holles, 4 D. P. C. 572.

If the attesting witness cannot be found, his absence must be accounted for by affidavit, before the court will admit secondary evidence. Waring v. Bowles, 4 Taunt. 132.

If A. agrees to acknowledge an old warrant of attorney given by him, so as to enable B. to enter up judgment thereon, judgment may be entered up under a judge's order, without an affidavit of the subscribing witness. Laing v. Kaine, 2 Bos. & P. 85.

The court refused to enter up judgment where the attesting witness, an attorney of the court, refused from malice to make the necessary affidavit. Mills v. Donoughoo, 1 H. & W. 184.

c. Signing.

Production of Warrant.]—In order to sign judgment, it is indispensably necessary that the warrant itself should be produced. Jacobs v. Neville, 8 D. P. C. 125; 1 W., W. & H. 408.

But if a person who has given a warrant of attorney afterwards obtains possession of it, and refuses to give it up, judgment may be entered up on the copy of it which was filed under the statute. Worthington v. Worthington, 5 Jur. 320.

Appearance.]—The defendant gave a cognovit authorising the plaintiff's attorney to appear for him if necessary. The plaintiff's attorney signed judgment, and then entered an appearance nunc pro tunc. Judgment was set aside for irregularity. Watson v. Dore, 5 D. P. C. 584; 2 M. & W. 386.

It is no objection to a judgment on a warrant of attorney, that no appearance has been entered. Burcham v. Tucker, 8 Scott, 469.

Suggestion of Breaches Unnecessary.]—No suggestion of breaches under 8 & 9 Will. 3, c. 11, is necessary on a judgment by warrant of attorney. Kinnersley v. Mussen, 5 Taunt. 264; 14 R. R. 750. S. P., Shaw v. Worcester (Marquis), 4 M. & P. 21; 6 Bing. 385; 8 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 98.

And even though a bond also is given. Austerbury v. Morgan, 2 Taunt. 195.

Nor upon a warrant of attorney conditioned for payment by instalments. Cox v. Rudbard, 3 Taunt. 74.

9. Execution.

Issuing.]—The defeasance to a warrant of attorney contained an agreement, that no execution or executions should be issued upon the judgment entered up thereon until default in payment of an annuity; but that, in case of default, it should be lawful for the grantee, his executors, administrators or assigns, to sue out execution or executions thereon,—not saying from time to time. The defeasance also contained a proviso for entering satisfaction after the death of the grantor, and full payment of the annuity up to the day of his death:—Held, that the grantee was not restrained by this defeasance from issuing successive executions for arrears. Cuthbert v. Dobbin, 1 C. B. 278.

Where a warrant of attorney was given, bearing date on the face of it the 24th February, 1847, but was not in fact executed till the 20th March following, and the defeasance stated that it was given to secure the repayment of 285*l.* "on the 20th day of March next," judgment having been signed, and execution issued on the 30th March, 1847:—Held, that execution issued too soon; that the warrant of attorney must be taken to speak from the time of the execution, and not the date apparent on the face of it, in accordance with the rule laid down in Clayton's case (5 Co. Rep. 1), and therefore would not become due till the 20th March, 1848. Browne v. Burton, 5 D. & L. 289; 17 L. J., Q. B. 49; 12 Jur. 97.

Setting aside.]—An execution for more than the sum really due, but not for more than the sum authorised by the warrant of attorney, will only be set aside pro tanto for the excess. Browne v. Burton, 5 D. & L. 289; 2 B. C. Rep. 220; 12 Jur. 97.

Injunction to Restrain.]—An injunction to restrain a vendor from taking out execution on a warrant of attorney to confess judgment for the amount of the purchase money continued till the hearing. Drake v. Plaistowe, Romilly's Notes of Cases, 145.

10. Setting Aside.

In what Cases Application can be made.]—A defendant may apply to set aside a warrant of attorney, and the judgment thereon, on the ground of a non-compliances with the requisitions of the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 9, although he has become bankrupt since the execution of the warrant. Taylor v. Nicholl, 6 M. & W. 91; 8 D. P. C. 412; 9 L. J., Ex. 78.

Where judgment has been entered up, and execution issued on a warrant of attorney, but a fiat in bankruptcy has issued against the defendant, and is still in operation, he is not therefore disqualified by want of interest from moving to set aside the execution on the ground of bad faith, though the debt, warrant and judgment are unimpeached. Pinches v. Harvey, 1 Q. B. 868; 1 G. & D. 236; 10 L. J., Q. B. 316.

A executed at Brussels, in 1843, a warrant of attorney to confess judgment, and judgment was entered on it. In 1846, a rule was obtained to set the warrant and judgment aside. There was nothing to show that A. authorised the application, except that the affidavit in support of the rule was made by a party who styled himself clerk to L., attorney for the defendant:—Held, that it ought to have appeared more expressly that the application was made on behalf of A.; and the court discharged the rule, but without costs. Hume v. Wellesley (Lord), 8 Q. B. 521.

Where a judgment had been irregularly signed, the court would not grant a rule absolute in the first instance, to set it aside and sign a new judgment. Bennett v. Simons, 13 L. J., Q. B. 308. See Coulson v. Clutterbuck, 2 D. (N.S.) 391.

Where a defendant applied to set aside a warrant of attorney, judgment and execution, on the ground of usury, but the rule was discharged upon an objection that the applicant did not produce a verified copy of the instrument:—Held, that it was incompetent for him to come a second time, with a like motion upon the same materials, with the addition only of an affidavit verifying the warrant of attorney. Levi v. Coyle, 2 D. (N.S.) 932.

An application may be made at the instance of the defendant's assignees, where a warrant of attorney has not been attested according to the requirements of the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 9; as the warrant is a nullity, and delay is immaterial in applying to set aside a judgment and execution signed and issued thereon. Cocks v. Edwards, 2 D. (N.S.) 55; 7 Jur. 199. See Hirst v. Hannan, 17 Q. B. 383.

Upon motion by assignees to set aside a warrant of attorney given by the bankrupt, the court will not enter upon the question whether the same was given by way of fraudulent preference. Browne v. Burton, 5 D. & L. 289; 2 B. C. Rep. 220; 17 L. J., Q. B. 49.

A warrant of attorney, as security for 560*l.* and interest, was executed by C., and by K. and F. as his sureties. Upon default in payment of interest, judgment was entered up and execution issued against K. for the principal and interest, which, with the costs, were paid by him; and he afterwards, in an action against F., recovered one-half of the sums so paid. Subsequently F. obtained a rule to show cause why the warrant of attorney and subsequent proceedings should not be set aside on the ground that his signature was not duly attested. The court discharged the rule, on the ground that the objection should have been taken in the action for contribution. Price v. Carter, 14 L. J., Q. B. 140; 9 Jur. 637.

A woman, before her marriage in 1837, lent her future husband a sum, the repayment of which he secured to her by a warrant of attorney to confess judgment to her and S. The defeasance provided that the husband should hold the money as long as the wife pleased, paying her interest; but that S. might, upon her request, demand payment on one week's notice. Judgment was to be entered up forthwith, and execution to issue, on failure to pay after notice. Judgment was accordingly entered up, but was not afterwards revived. A demand was made in 1853, and execution issued: a few days after the sheriff's levy the husband was declared a bankrupt. The court refused on motion of the assignees to set aside the judgment, although it was insisted that the judgment was discharged or suspended by the marriage, and that, even if it was not, the execution was irregular, because the judgment had not been revived. Dolling v. White, 1 B. C. C. 170; 22 L. J., Q. B. 327; 17 Jur. 505.

When Condition attached to.]—The application for setting aside a warrant of attorney and the judgment and execution thereon, for want of the provisions of the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 9, having been complied with, is in debito justitiæ, and the court has therefore no power to impose on the defendant, as a condition for setting it aside, that he should bring no action. Adlam v. Noble, 9 D. P. C. 322.

Staying Proceedings in Action against Sheriff.]—The court will not, on an application to set aside a warrant of attorney, and the judgment and execution thereon, direct a stay of proceedings in an action against the sheriff for an alleged false return to the execution sought to be set aside. Cassell v. Glengall (Lord), 5 D. P. C. 269; 2 H. & W. 313.

Affidavits supporting Application.]—An affidavit to support a rule to set aside a warrant of attorney, intitled as in a cause, with the words "plaintiff" and "defendant" added to the names of the parties, is good. Thompson v. Vaux, W. W. & D. 386.

In an application for the delivering up of a warrant of attorney, the affidavit may be intitled in a cause. Thompson v. Vaux, 5 D. P. C. 691.

A. WASTE.

1. GENERAL PRINCIPLES.

Who may be Restrained—At whose Suit.]—The court will restrain waste in an underlessee at the suit of the ground landlord. So against a first tenant for life, at the suit of the remainderman, notwithstanding an intermediate life estate; so, against a mortgagee (not applying the produce of timber in sinking the principal and interest), at the suit of the mortgagor; so, against a mortgagor committing waste to the prejudice of the mortgagee. Farrant v. Lovel, 3 Atk. 723.

—— Lessee for Lives, Renewable.]—A lessee for lives, renewable for ever, will, unless under special circumstances, be restrained from committing waste. The cases on this subject reviewed. Coppinger v. Gubbins, 3 Jo. & Lat. 397; 9 Ir. Eq. R. 304.

—— Purchaser — Partner.]—The court will restrain a purchaser from doing acts of waste and destruction, and will restrain a partner from doing an intentional serious injury to the partnership property. Marshall v. Watson, 25 Beav. 501.

Permanent Injury.] — The court will not interfere by injunction to prevent the cutting of hedges with a saw instead of with a hatchet or knife, and will not go into a consideration of the different modes of operation; all that it will look to being that no permanent injury to the inheritance is done. Dunn v. Bryan, Ir. R. 7 Eq. 143.

Inquiry to Inheritance.]—A court of equity will not grant an injunction to prevent waste unless there is some real and substantial injury to the inheritance. Doherty v. Allman, 3 App. Cas. 709; 39 L. T., 129; 26 W. R. 513—H. L. (Ir.)

Improvement of Property.]—The court will not refuse to restrain waste, by which the estate is not necessarily and permanently improved, on the mere ground that the party has done other acts which will benefit the estate; therefore, an injunction to restrain cutting turf will not be refused on the ground that the tenant has converted the cut-out bog into arable land. Coppinger v. Gubbins, 3 Jo. & Lat. 397; 9 Ir. Eq. R. 304.

Quære, whether the court will restrain acts of meliorating waste. Ib.

Waste will be restrained in chancery, although the act done may lead to the improvement of the land, if it immediately occasions any damage to the inheritance. Ib.

Action by Reversioner.]—To enable a reversioner to bring an action in the nature of waste, there must be an injury of a permanent nature. Baxter v. Taylor, 1 N. & M. 13; 4 B. & Ad. 72; 2 L. J., K. B. 65.

Down Land.] — The court of chancery will award a perpetual injunction to restrain waste, by ploughing, burning, breaking, or sowing of down land. Worsley v. Stuart, 4 Bro. P. C. 377.

Writ of Estrepement.]—Quære, what is the present extent and effect of the writ of estrepement. Haigh v. Jagger, 2 Coll. C. C. 231.

Limitation of Remedy.] — When after legal waste has been committed time has run so as to bar the legal remedy in respect thereof, the remedy in equity is also barred. Higginbotham v. Hawkins, 41 L. J., Ch. 828; L. R. 7 Ch. 676; 27 L. T. 328; 20 W. R. 955.

Jurisdiction.] — Where a lessee, bound by covenant not to commit waste, has committed acts of waste, for which damages merely nominal would be given, the court of chancery will not entertain a suit against him, founded on those acts of waste, where it appears that he does not contemplate committing any further waste, nor assert a right to commit it. Doran v. Carroll, 11 Ir. Ch. R. 379.

Practice—Discovery—Demurrer—Forfeiture.] —Where a tenant had cut down timber, and a bill was brought against him for a discovery, he demurred for that, as being waste, his answer would subject him to a forfeiture; demurrer allowed. Att.-Gen. v. Vincent, Bunb. 192.

2. WHAT IS.

Necessary Cutting.]— Cutting timber where necessary for the growth of underwood, not waste. Burgess v. Lamb, 16 Ves. 179.

Oak Coppice.]—All cutting of timber is not waste. In many places oak coppice is felled regularly every sixteen or eighteen years, leaving poles which are as regularly cut every second fall, i.e. every thirty-two or thirty-six years. Bagot v. Bagot, 32 Beav. 509; 2 N. R. 297; 33 L. J., Ch. 116; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1022; 9 L. T. 217; 12 W. R. 35.

Young Trees.] — Cutting young trees under twenty years' growth, though of the kinds which may be timber by common law or by local custom, is not necessarily waste, but will be so if they are cut unseasonably, or in such a manner as to injure the reproductive power of the stools. In all cases it is a very important consideration that they have or have not been previously or usually cut. Dunn v. Bryan, Ir. R. 7 Eq. 143.

Decayed Timber.]— Cutting down decayed timber may be as much waste as cutting down any other. Perrot v. Perrot, 3 Atk. 95.

Willows.]—A tenant for years is not guilty of waste in cutting down willow trees for sale, which sprung up again from the stools, unless they serve to protect the house, or to support the bank of a stream. Phillipps v. Smith, 14 M. & W. 589; 15 L. J., Ex. 201.

Converting into Burial Ground.]—To convert land into a cemetery is waste. Cregan v. Cullen, 16 Ir. Ch. R. 339. See also Hunt v. Browne, Sau. & Sc. 179.

Turning Meadow into Buildings.]—Held, not in nature of waste to turn meadow into buildings unless clearly injurious. Att.-Gen. v. Foundling Hospital (Governors), 2 Ves. J. 42; 4 Bro. C. C. 165.

Erecting New Building.]—The erection of a new building which increases the value of the property is not waste, unless it destroys the identity of the property, or impairs the evidence of title. Jones v. Chappel, 44 L. J., Ch. 658; L. R. 20 Eq. 539.

Reasonable User of Tenant.]—Semble, that an injury to or the destruction of demised premises, resulting from the use of them by the tenant in a reasonable and proper manner, having regard to the class of tenement to which they belong, is not waste. Saner v. Bilton, 47 L. J., Ch. 267; 7 Ch. D. 815; 38 L. T. 281; 26 W. R. 394.

Removing Dove-cote—Or Fixtures.]— Waste is committed by destruction of dove-cote, but not by removing presses, &c., unless fixed. Kimpton v. Eve, 2 V. & B. 349.

Leaving Land Uncultivated.]—It is not waste at common law, either wilful or permissive, to leave the land uncultivated. Hutton v. Warren, 1 M. & W. 472.

Planting Potatoes.]—Quære, whether planting grass land with potatoes is waste. Deane v. Caffray, 1 Hog. 23.

Rabbit Warren.]— To break up a rabbit warren, unless a warren by charter or prescription, is not waste at common law. Lurting v. Conn, 1 Ir. Ch. Rep. 273.

Old Meadows.]—Ploughing up an old meadow and converting it to arable is waste, and the tenant cannot give evidence, under the general issue of no waste done, that the meadow was ploughed according to the custom of the country, and to ameliorate; as the reason for altering the character of the land must be pleaded by way of justification. Simmons v. Norton, 5 M. & P. 645; 7 Bing. 640; 9 L. J. (o.s.) C. P. 185.

It cannot be decided, as a general proposition, without any exception, that the conversion of ancient meadow into arable is to be treated as waste. St. Albans (Duke) v. Shipwith or Skipworth, 8 Beav. 354; 14 L. J., Ch. 247; 9 Jur. 265.

Ploughing Up Land.]—It is not waste to plough up land held under lease, if the land was not ancient meadow or pasture at the date of the lease. Morris v. Morris, 1 Hog. 238.

In fee-simple estates a continuance in pasture for twenty years during the life of the donor impresses on land the character of ancient meadow. Ib.

Ploughing up Garden Produce.]—It is waste for an out-going tenant to plough up strawberry beds in full bearing, although when he entered he paid for them on a valuation to the person who occupied the premises before him; and although it may have been usual for strawberry beds to be appraised and paid for as between out-going and in-coming tenants. Wetherell v. Howells, 1 Camp. 227.

3. Tenant for Life.

a. Voluntary Waste.

Generally.]—A court of equity will not interfere, unless it is shown that there is danger from the mode in which a tenant for life in possession is dealing with the property. Dutt v. Dossee, 6 Moore, Ind. App. 433.

Collusion.]—By its inherent jurisdiction to restrain fraud, the court of chancery will, although the party may have a legal remedy, interfere to prevent waste being committed by a tenant for life in collusion with the owner of the first estate of inheritance, or by a person who unites both these characters in himself: and as such a suit may be instituted by trustees to preserve contingent remainders during the life of a tenant for life in remainder, so may it be instituted by the tenant for life in remainder himself. Birch-Wolfe v. Birch, 39 L. J., Ch. 345; L. R. 9 Eq. 683; 23 L. T. 216; 18 W. R. 594.

On the same principle, where waste has been committed by a tenant for life at a time when he was also owner of the first estate of inheritance, and when there was no one capable of bringing an action, a bill to make his estate accountable may, after his death, be brought by a tenant for life in possession. Ib.

But, before giving relief in a suit so instituted, the court must be satisfied that the acts of the deceased tenant for life were such as amounted to collusion between the two characters which he united in himself. Ib.

Taking Turf—Improvement.]— A tenant for life of farming lands let parts at low rentals, with liberty for the tenants to get turf, but under the obligation to level and prepare the surface for agricultural purposes. Large quantities of the turf, to the value of over 1,000*l.*, were taken away, but the value of the land was thereby increased for agricultural purposes:—Held, that the tenant for life was not liable to any proceedings for waste. Harris v. Ekins, 26 L. T. 827; 20 W. R. 999.

Keeping Property in Hand.]—The mere fact of a tenant for life keeping on hand for about three months part of the corpus for the alleged purpose of an eligible investment does not amount to waste, nor is in derogation of the rights of those entitled in reversion. Dutt v. Dossee, 6 Moore, Ind. App. 433.

Mines and Trees.]—One seised in fee conveys the lands and all trees and mines to trustees in fee, to the use of A. for life, remainders over; A. cannot open the mines or cut down the trees. Whitfield v. Bewitt, 2 P. Wms. 242.

Trees Wrongfully Cut.]— A tenant for life, cutting trees (not timber) wrongfully, is liable to action of waste. Honywood v. Honywood, 43 L. J., Ch. 652; L. R. 18 Eq. 306; 30 L. T. 671; 22 W. R. 749.

Statute of Gloucester.]— Quære, does the statute of Gloucester extend to tenancies for life, created by subsequent statutes? Cockburn v. Hussey, Wall. Lyn. 234.

Re-opening Mines.]—Semble, tenant for life may be entitled to recommence working abandoned or dormant mines which were not worked by the settlor. Bagot v. Bagot, 32 Beav. 509; 2 N. R. 297; 33 L. J., Ch. 116; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1022; 9 L. T. 217; 12 W. R. 35.

Lien of Remainderman as against Mortgagee.]—O. being equitable tenant for life, mortgaged his life estate as a security to certain creditors, and afterwards committed waste by felling and selling large quantities of timber:—Held, that, as against the mortgagees and incumbrancers upon the life estate, the remaindermen had an equity to have the injury done to the inheritance made good, and had for that purpose a lien upon the rents and profits in the hands of the trustees of the settlement accrued during the life of O. Briggs v. Oxford (Earl), 1 Jur. (N.S.) 817; 3 W. R. 588; 4 W. R. 38.

Mesne Remainder.] — A., tenant for life; remainder to B. for life, remainder over. A., though dispunishable of waste at law by reason of the mesne remainder for life, yet shall be enjoined from committing waste in a court of equity. But tenant for life, without impeachment of waste, shall not be enjoined from committing waste. Tracy v. Tracy, 1 Vern. 23.

b. Equitable Waste.

i. In General.

Generally.]—Doctrine of equitable waste considered. Baker v. Sebright, 49 L. J., Ch. 65; 13 Ch. D. 179; 41 L. T. 614; 28 W. R. 177.

What.]—Equitable waste is that which a prudent man would not do in the management of his own property. Turner v. Wright, Johns. 740. Affirmed, 2 De G. F. & J. 234; 29 L. J., Ch. 598; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 809; 8 W. R. 675.

Equitable waste by tenant for life is a breach of his trust, and his assets, after his death, are answerable for the same. Ormond (Marquis) v. Kynnersley, 5 Madd. 369; 21 R. R. 313.

Equitable waste has not been extended beyond trees planted or growing for ornament, as in avenues or vistas, or timber merely ornamental, viz. an extensive wood. Burges v. Lamb, 16 Ves. 174.

See also Potts v. Potts, 3 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 176.

Principle of Doctrine as to.]—The court, by applying the doctrine of equitable waste controls and restrains the excessive use of the legal power incident to an estate unimpeachable of waste, but with reference only to the presumed will and intention of the party by whom the power was created. Marker v. Marker, 9 Hare, 1; 20 L. J., Ch. 246; 15 Jur. 663.

Doctrine as to, when Applicable.]—The doctrine of equitable waste applies equally to all cases of estates limited to go in a course of succession, whether that object is effected by creating life interests or estates in fee with executory devises over. Turner v. Wright, Johns. 740. Affirmed, 2 De G. F. & J. 234; 29 L. J., Ch. 598; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 809; 8 W. R. 675.

Injunction Against.]—The court will not maintain an injunction against equitable waste, unless it be proved that equitable waste either has been committed or is threatened. Potts v. Potts, 3 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 176.

Where equitable waste of one kind only has been done or threatened, the injunction is not to be extended to equitable waste of other kinds. Semble, usual injunction in cases of equitable waste not extended to trees which protect the premises from the effect of the sea. Coffin v. Coffin, Jacob, 70; 23 R. R. 1.

In equitable as in legal waste, if one act of waste be established, the court will restrain equitable waste generally. S. C., 6 Madd. 17; 23 R. R. 1.

Instigating Trustees to Commit.]—A bill filed against trustees and the tenant to prevent equitable waste was dismissed with costs as against the tenant, it not being shown that he had committed or intended to commit any waste, though some had been committed by the trustees at his request. Campbell v. Allgood, 17 Beav. 623.

Claim for Compensation.]—Upon a claim to compensation for equitable waste, the court does not consider whether the act complained of was or was not a sound exercise of discretion with reference to the state of the property and to the interests of the family to which it belongs, for a tenant for life has no right to alter the nature of property belonging to another person. Leeds (Duke) v. Amherst (Earl), 2 Ph. 117; 10 Jur. 956. Affirming 14 Sim. 357; 15 L. J., Ch. 351.

ii. Without Impeachment of Waste.

Meaning of.]—The words "without impeachment of waste" will not permit a tenant for life to unlead a house and pull down the tiles. Vane v. Barnard (Lord), 1 Term Rep. 56, n.

The words "without impeachment of waste" do not give a power inconsistent with an estate tail, or at least will not defeat it. Bagshaw v. Spencer, 2 Atk. 576.

Enlargement of Power.]—Power of tenant for life under general words "without impeachment for waste," not enlarged by implication from more extensive powers given to trustees for special purposes, after her death. Downshire v. Sandys (Lady), 6 Ves. 107.

Reasonable Exercise of Right.]—The court will restrain tenants for life without impeachment of waste, to a reasonable exercise of the right. Aston v. Aston, 2 Ves. 264.

Injunction, Ground for.]—Injunction refused to restrain the father, who was tenant for life without impeachment of waste, from removing a deal floor he had placed, and young oaks he had planted, breaking up meadow land, &c. To ground such an injunction, there must be waste and spoliation, and no delay in applying for it. Peirs v. Peirs, 1 Ves. 521.

Where a bill, by the person next in remainder, charged that the tenant for life, who was dispunishable of waste, and who had power to make leases not dispunishable of waste, had demised a part of the lands to a third person, and that such person, in collusion with the tenant for life, was committing waste, by turning up, tilling, and burning the land; and the defendant admitted the turning up, &c. but stated it was land which the tenant for life had reclaimed and laid down in grass thirty years before, the court refused to grant a motion for an injunction. Semble, that such pasture is not ancient meadow. Davies v. Davies, 2 Ir. Eq. R. 414.

A., on marriage of his son, settles a messuage on himself for life, sans waste, remainder to his son. The father, though his estate be sans waste, cannot pull down the house, nor commit any voluntary waste therein; if he does the court will grant an injunction to stay waste, and compel the father to put the messuage in as good repair as before the waste committed. Vane v. Barnard (Lord), 2 Vern. 738; Pre. Ch. 454; Gilb. Eq. Rep. 127; 1 Salk. 161.

Creation of Right—Revocation.]—A testator, by a codicil to his will, devised lands to trustees during the life of his daughter, without impeachment of waste, for her separate use, with restraint on anticipation. He subsequently conveyed the same and also other lands by a deed, which did not notice the codicil, to a different trustee, for the life of the daughter, but not making the trustee unimpeachable for waste, also for the separate use of the daughter, and with restraint on anticipation:—Held, that the daughter's life estate given by the codicil was revoked, with all its incidents, by the deed, and that she was impeachable of waste. Lowndes v. Norton, 33 L. J., Ch. 583; 11 L. T. 290—L.JJ.

Effect of "Strict Settlement."]—When an executory trust for the settlement of freehold estates in strict settlement directs, either expressly or by reference to the trusts of other property, that certain persons shall take life estates, the use of the words "in strict settlement" does not make the tenants for life dispunishable for waste. Stanley v. Colthurst, 39 L. J., Ch., 650; L. R. 10 Eq. 259; 23 L. T. 761; 18 W. R. 969.

iii. Mansion-house.

Injunction.]—Injunction granted to prevent tenant for life dispunishable for waste from pulling down a castle. Vane v. Barnard (Lord), 1 Salk. 161; 2 Vern. 738; Pre. Ch. 454; Gilb. Eq. Rep. 127.

A., on marriage of his son, settles a messuage on himself for life sans waste, remainder to his son; the father, though his estate for life be sans waste, cannot pull down the house nor commit any voluntary waste therein; if he does, the court will grant an injunction to stay waste, and compel the father to put the messuage in as good repair as before the waste committed. Ib.

Account.]—Account against the representative of tenant for life, without impeachment of waste, of dilapidations permitted by him, in and about the mansion-house, refused. Lansdowne v. Lansdowne, 1 J. & W. 522; 1 Madd. 116; 15 R. R. 225; 21 R. R. 227. See Att.-Gen. v. Marlborough (Duke), 3 Madd. 498; 18 R. R. 273.

A tenant for life without impeachment of waste pulled down a mansion-house, the abandonment of which had, in consequence of coal mines being thereunder, and also of the close proximity of copper works, been contemplated by the settlor (his father), and he used the materials thereof, so far as they were available for the purpose, in building, at his own expense, a new and suitable mansion-house on another part of the settled estates, where the settlor had himself, some years before the date of the settlement, made preparations for the same purpose. The settlement contained powers of sale and exchange, and of granting building leases extending over the whole of the settled estates. Upon a bill by a remainderman against the personal representative of the tenant for life, for the purpose of making the estate of the latter liable for equitable waste in having pulled down the mansion-house:—Held, that, under the circumstances of the case, the estate of the tenant for life was not chargeable with equitable waste. Morris v. Morris, 3 De G. & J. 323; 28 L. J., Ch. 329; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 229; 7 W. R. 249.

Semble, that, if any part of the materials of the old mansion-house had been sold, the estate of the tenant for life would have been liable to account. Ib.

Held, also, that, the answer and evidence setting up a primâ facie case to show that the whole of the personal estate of M. had been exhausted in the payment of his debts, the plaintiffs were not, after such a long lapse of time, entitled to the account prayed, without first meeting the primâ facie case set up by the answer. S. C., 4 Jur. (N.S.) 964.

Receiver as Security for Re-building.]—A testator devised his estates to A. for life without impeachment for waste, "except voluntary waste in pulling down houses, and not re-building the same, or others of equal or greater value." A. pulled down the mansion-house, with the intention of forthwith building a better on the site, and was proceeding with all reasonable despatch to carry such intention into effect:—Held, that the person entitled to the next vested remainder was not entitled to have a receiver of the rents appointed in order to secure the re-building of the mansion. Micklethwait v. Micklethwait, 1 De G. & J. 504; 26 L. J., Ch. 721; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 1279; 5 W. R. 861.

iv. Ornamental Timber.

What is.]—A tree or trees may be highly ornamental, and yet not be entitled to the protection of the court as being planted or left standing for ornament. Halliwell v. Phillips, 4 Jur. (N.S.) 607; 6 W. R. 408.

Saplings are not within the doctrine. Ib.

Hedge-row trees, or any trees, however ornamental, if planted also for profit, are not within the doctrine. Ib.

Trees not planted or left standing exclusively for ornament are not necessarily excluded from the rule which protects ornamental timber. Bedoyère v. Greville-Nugent, 25 L. R. Ir. 143.

A testator left his mansion-house on the B. estate, went to reside on another estate, at the distance of about eight miles, pulled down the B. mansion-house, cut down some of the ornamental timber about it, turned the estate into a cover for game, and altogether acted so as to show that he had no intention that the mansion-house should be re-built:—Held, that the rest of what had originally been ornamental timber on the B. estate was not, as between the parties claiming under the will, protected as ornamental, but might be cut by a tenant for life, whose estate was without impeachment of waste. Micklethwait v. Micklethwait, 1 De G. & J. 504; 26 L. J., Ch. 721; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 1279; 5 W. R. 861.

The testator, when he did the above acts, was only tenant for life in possession, with an ultimate reversion to himself in fee expectant on the failure or determination of a subsequent estate for life, and raising estates tail, which did not fall and determine till after his death:—Held, that, as between the parties claiming under his will, the case stood on the same footing as if he had been entitled in fee simple in possession. Ib.

Proper Course of Husbandry.]—A tenant for life without impeachment of waste will not be allowed to cut trees planted or left standing by any former owner, for the ornament or shelter of, or for the interception of any view from, the mansion-house, unless such trees have been ordinarily cut, or impede the growth of other ornamental timber. Ford v. Tynte, 2 De G. J. & S. 227; 3 N. R. 676; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 429; 10 L. T. 209; 12 W. R. 613.

The report of an expert, to whom a reference has been made by the court, is not final and conclusive. Ib.

A tenant for life sans waste will not be interfered with in the exercise of his legal powers, unless he is proceeding to use those legal powers in a manner inequitable towards those in remainder; and, therefore, he may fell and sell trees planted for ornament, if done in a proper course of husbandry. Halliwell v. Phillips, 4 Jur. (N.S.) 607; 6 W. R. 408.

A tenant for life without impeachment of waste has not a right to cut ornamental trees, though they are mature (from a mercantile point of view), nor even though they are largely decayed; and there is no legal limit to this doctrine, arising from the state or condition of the particular trees which it is proposed to cut; but if those trees are injuring others, also ornamental, which it is more desirable to preserve, the court will not, in that case, interfere with the tenant for life who cuts merely to save from destruction trees of greater value and importance. Bedoyère v. Greville-Nugent, 25 L. R. Ir. 143.

Tenant for life, with liberty to cut timber at seasonable times, is not to cut trees planted for ornament or shelter to the mansion-house. Chamberlayne v. Dummer, 3 Bro. C. C. 549; Dick. 600. And see S. C., 1 Bro. C. C. 166.

Injunction.]—Injunction to stay tenant for life from committing waste by cutting trees growing for ornament. O'Brien v. O'Brien, Amb. 107; 1 Bro. C. C. 168 n.

Ornamental timber protected, though the mansion-house had been pulled down, and the bill did not complain of that act. Morris v. Morris, 15 Sim. 505; 16 L. J., Ch. 201; 11 Jur. 196.

A mansion-house, park, and pleasure grounds, with certain villas on the estates, were limited in strict settlement; and the trustees were empowered to grant building leases of the settled estates, and, at the request of the tenant for life, to pull down the mansion-house, sell the materials, and apply the proceeds in paying off incumbrances on the estates. The house was accordingly pulled down, but the tenant for life, unimpeachable of waste, was afterwards restrained from felling the ornamental timber in the park and grounds. Wellesley v. Wellesley, 6 Sim. 497.

Injunction against waste granted in favour of tenant for life, particularly as to ornamental timber, not so much upon his interest as his enjoyment. Davies v. Lee, 6 Ves. 784.

Injunction against cutting ornamental timber, upon the principle of equitable waste, extended to trees planted for the purpose of excluding objects from view. Wheldale v. Wheldale, 16 Ves. 375.

Injunction against cutting ornamental timber, confined to timber standing for ornament, or shelter; the court refusing to extend it by inserting the words "contribute to ornament." Williams v. M'Namara, 8 Ves. 70.

Without Impeachment of Waste.]—Injunction against tenant not impeachable, &c., for cutting down ornamental trees, &c. Packington v. Packington, Dick. 101.

Injunction granted to restrain tenant, not impeachable for waste, from cutting clumps of trees for ornament, two miles from house. Downshire (Marquis) v. Sandys (Lord), 6 Ves. 107.

The court, at the instance of a remainderman, restrained by injunction a tenant for life, without impeachment of waste, from cutting ornamental timber growing within a demesne, at a considerable distance from the mansion-house, some of the trees being visible from it and others not. Bedoyère v. Greville-Nugent, 25 L. R. Ir. 143.

Injunction granted to restrain tenant for life, without impeachment, from cutting timber and other trees, planted, &c., for ornament, &c., and from cutting, except in husband-like manner. Tamworth (Lord) v. Ferrers (Lord), 6 Ves. 419.

The court will restrain a tenant for life, without impeachment of waste, from cutting down trees in lines or avenues or ridings in a park, as they are for ornament; and whether trees grow naturally, or were planted, if they serve for ornament or shelter, it is the same thing. Packington's case, 3 Atk. 215.

Tenant for life, without impeachment, restrained from cutting timber, planted or left standing for ornament; and whether ornamental or fanciful; the protection extending beyond the mansion-house to rides through a wood at a considerable distance; but not to the whole wood, to prevent cutting other parts for repairs and sale. Wombwell v. Belasyse, cited, 6 Ves. 110 note (a).

Proceeds, Right to.]—Where tenant for life unimpeachable of waste, cuts and sells timber planted for ornament or shelter, the proceeds of that timber belong to the person having then the first vested estate of inheritance; and parties having intervening estates for life have no right to an account of the proceeds of the timber so cut, or to have such proceeds invested upon the same trusts with the lands. Ormond v. Kynnersley, 15 Beav. 10, n.; 7 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 150; 8 Id. 67.

An equitable tenant for life, unimpeachable for waste, is entitled to the proceeds of ornamental timber cut by him, where the timber so cut is such as the court would itself direct to be cut for the preservation and improvement of the remaining ornamental timber; but it does not follow that the court will not, at the instance of the remainderman, grant an injunction restraining the tenant for life from cutting any ornamental timber which it has become necessary and proper to cut, and direct that the cutting be done under its supervision. Baker v. Sebright, 49 L. J., Ch. 65; 13 Ch. D. 179; 41 L. T. 614; 28 W. R. 177.

—— Assignees of Bankrupt.]—The assignees of a bankrupt tenant for life have no right to cut ornamental timber any more than the tenant for life himself, and, if they do, the money proceeding from the sale will go to the first person entitled to the inheritance, and the assignees will be deprived of the income even during the life of the tenant for life. Lushington v. Boldero, 15 Beav. 1; 21 L. J., Ch. 49; 16 Jur. 140.

—— Right, when Determined.]—An estate was devised to A. for life without impeachment of waste, with remainder to his issue in tail; with remainder to B. for life without impeachment, &c.; with remainder to his issue in tail. A. had no issue, and, his assignees having committed equitable waste, it was held that the right to the produce could not be determined until the death of A., as he might have issue, who possibly would be entitled to an interest in such produce. Lushington v. Boldero, 13 Beav. 418.

Trust for Preservation, whether Enforceable.]—The case of a trust or restriction created for the preservation of ornamental timber is not like a trust for the purposes of benevolence (as to which the objects are unlimited, and no standard can be found); but, semble, is a trust or restriction which the court will endeavour to execute or enforce. Marker v. Marker, 9 Hare, 1; 20 L. J., Ch. 246; 15 Jur. 663.

There are cases in which the court may execute a trust for the application of money to purposes of taste or ornament, and in doing so may, in the absence of any prescribed standard, or if the standard be more or less indefinite, act upon the opinions of persons who are consulted by others in such matters, as it acts in other cases upon the opinions of persons of science. Semble. Ib.

The court may more readily act in enforcing a restriction on the exercise of the legal power in a matter of taste or ornament, where the restriction is connected with a trust, than in the common law case of equitable waste in the absence of any such trust. Semble. Marker v. Marker, 9 Hare, 1, 18; 20 L. J., Ch. 246; 15 Jur. 663.

Evidence of.]—Where an owner of an estate, with residence, purchases adjoining lands with ornamental woods, the court will not, from that fact alone, infer that he intended to be left standing for ornament all such trees as he did not in his lifetime cut down; there must be some act of dedication, e.g. planting an avenue, cutting a vista, erecting obelisks, &c. Halliwell v. Phillips, 4 Jur. (N.S.) 607; 6 W. R. 408.

Whether timber is intended for ornament, &c., by devisor of tenant for life, is to be proved from his conduct concerning it. Lushington v. Boldero, 6 Madd. 149; 22 R. R. 261.

Ornamental timber, though decayed and injurious to other trees, is not to be cut unless essential to objects of such devisor. Ib.

In the preservation of ornamental timber, the protection of the court is confined to timber planted and left standing for shelter or ornament; and the question, whether the protection should be extended to particular timber, is one of fact, and the determination must depend upon the evidence which can be collected to establish the fact. Marker v. Marker, 9 Hare, 1; 20 L. J., Ch. 246; 15 Jur. 663.

Measure of Right to Cut.]—What a prudent owner would do in the proper course of management is no measure of what a tenant for life without impeachment of waste may do as to cutting timber planted or left standing for ornament. Ford v. Tynte, 2 De G. J. & S. 127; 3 N. R. 676; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 429; 10 L. T. 209; 12 W. R. 613.

Damages.]—Although a reversioner is entitled as of right to have the tenant for life restrained from felling ornamental timber, yet, if he wait until after the felling of the timber, he will only be entitled to recover damages where actual damage to the reversion is proved. Bubb v. Yelverton, Hastings, Ex parte, 40 L. J., Ch. 38; L. R. 10 Eq. 465; 18 W. R. 1127, 1146.

Inquiry, Form of.]—Form of inquiry as to ornamental timber. Baker v. Sebright, 49 L. J., Ch. 65; 13 Ch. D. 179; 41 L. T. 614; 28 W. R. 177. S. P., Ford v. Tynte, supra.

The plaintiff was tenant in tail in remainder, and the defendant tenant pur autre vie of an estate settled in 1855. At the date of the settlement there was no mansion-house on the estate, but one was acquired in 1859 by exchange under a power in the settlement. The defendant felled certain trees in the vicinity of the mansion-house, marked others for cutting, and advertised a sale of timber; the plaintiff applied for an injunction:—Held, that there must be an inquiry in the form adopted in Marker v. Marker (9 Hare, 1), as to what trees could be cut without impairing the beauty of the place, or the shelter given to the mansion-house, as at the acquisition thereof in 1859; an undertaking by the plaintiff in damages, and an injunction as prayed, but conditional on the plaintiff giving such undertaking. Ashby v. Hincks, 58 L. T. 557.

4. Permissive Waste.

See Estate for Life.

When Action Lies.]—An action does not lie for permissive waste. Gibson v. Wells, 1 Bos. & P. (N.R.) 290; 2 Smith, 677; 8 R. R. 801.

—— Tenant for Life.]—An action for permissive waste will not lie against a tenant for life. Barnes v. Dowling, 44 L. T. 809; 45 J. P. 635, 767.

Courts of equity have no means of interfering in cases of permissive waste by a tenant for life of real estate. Powys v. Blagrave, 4 De G. M. & G. 448; 2 Eq. Rep. 1204; 24 L. J., Ch. 142; 2 W. R. 700. Affirming 1 K. & J. 495; 18 Jur. 462.

A house was devised to X. for life, subject to a condition to keep it in repair, with remainder to A. for life, with remainders over, the estates being all legal:—Held, that A. had no remedy in equity against X. for breach of the condition. Kinnersley v. Williamson, 39 L. J., Ch. 788; 23 L. T. 39; 18 W. R. 1016.

A devise of premises for life provided that the tenant for life should keep the premises in repair. The tenant for life entered upon and enjoyed the premises during her lifetime, but left them at her death out of repair. The remainderman in fee brought an action against the executor of the tenant for life in respect of the non-repair of the premises within the period of limitation prescribed by 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, s. 2, which gives a right of action against the executor of a person deceased in respect of wrongs committed by the testator to another in respect of his property:—Held, that an action of tort in respect of the permissive waste by non-repair of the premises would have lain at common law against the tenant for life in her lifetime, and consequently lay under the above-mentioned statute against her executor after her death. Woodhouse v. Walker, 49 L. J., Q. B. 609; 5 Q. B. D. 404; 42 L. T. 770; 28 W. R. 765; 44 J. P. 666.

—— Tenant by Lease.]—An action for permissive waste will not lie against a tenant by lease, who has not covenanted to repair. Herne v. Benbow, 4 Taunt. 764.

—— Tenant for Years.]—A tenant for years is liable for permissive waste. Davies v. Davies, 57 L. J., Ch. 1093; 38 Ch. D. 499; 58 L. T. 514; 36 W. R. 399.

—— Tenant from Year to Year.]—An action for permissive waste will not lie against a tenant from year to year. Martin v. Gilham, 7 A. & E. 540; 2 N. & P. 568; 7 L. J., Q. B. 11.

—— Tenant at Will.]—A tenant at will is not liable to an action for permissive waste. Harnett v. Maitland, 16 M. & W. 257; 4 D. & L. 545; 16 L. J., Ex. 134.

Implication of Trust against.]—A trust to keep premises in repair by a tenant for life will not be implied. Powys v. Blagrave, 4 De G. M. & G. 448; 2 Eq. R. 1204; 24 L. J., Ch. 142; 2 W. R. 700. Affirming 1 K. & J. 495; 18 Jur. 462.

B. TIMBER.

1. GENERALLY.

What is.]—A tree must attain a growth of twenty years before it can be deemed timber. Dunn v. Bryan, Ir. R. 7 Eq. 143.

Tenant for life, with liberty to cut timber at seasonable times, is not to cut sapling trees not fit to be cut or felled for timber. Chamberlayne v. Dummer, 3 Bro. C. C. 549; Dick. 600. S. P., v. Dummer, 3 Bro. C. C. 549; Dick. 600. S. P., O'Brien v. O'Brien, Amb. 107; 1 Bro. C. C. 168, n. And see S. C., 1 Bro. C. C. 166.

A tenant for life, without impeachment of waste, in order to preserve the timber, assigned for valuable consideration "all timber and timber-like trees then growing and being, and which should thereafter grow and be, upon the estate":—Held, that this included both ordinary timber and that which, by the custom of the country, was considered timber and the thinnings, and the right of determining what were proper thinnings belonged to the grantees. Gordon v. Woodford, 27 Beav. 603; 29 L. J., Ch. 222; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 59; 1 L. T. 260.

D. provided, by a codicil to his will, that his wife, whom he had made a tenant for life, might cut timber for her own use and benefit, at seasonable times: what timber the tenant for life shall be restrained from cutting, quære. Chamberlayne v. Dummer, 3 Bro. C. C. 549; Dick. 600.

Chapter not being entitled to fell timber on the deanery lands, except for the purpose of repairs, a lease granted by them of certain "woods, groves, hedgerows, and springs," was construed not to include the right of felling timber; and a bill by the lessee for an account of timber felled during the lease by the lessors was dismissed with costs. Herring v. St. Paul's (Dean), 3 Swanst. 492; 2 Wils. Ch. 1; 19 R. R. 259.

In a purchase, where timber is agreed to be valued, the custom of the country makes those trees timber which in their nature are not so; as birch, beech, etc. Pollard trees, if the bodies are sound, to be valued as timber; walnut trees, where of considerable value, to be estimated as timber. Where trees are of value, and the parties cannot agree in the valuation of them as timber, the court will send it to be tried, whether, by the custom of the country, any and which of these are timber trees. Chandos (Duke) v. Talbot, 2 P. Wms. 606.

Where beech is admitted to be timber by the custom of the country, the general rule of law applicable to timber trees in general attaches upon it, so as to give it the properties and privileges of timber at twenty years' growth. Aubrey v. Fisher, 10 East, 446.

When Ratable.]—Beech trees, though looked upon as timber by the custom of that part of the country where they grow, are ratable as salable underwood, within 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 1, if they are cut and trained so as to produce, no matter at what interval, a succession of stems and shoots. Fitzhardinge (Lord) v. Pritchett, 8 B. & S. 216; 36 L. J., M. C. 49; L. R. 2 Q. B. 135; 15 L. T. 502; 15 W. R. 640.

See also RATES AND RATING.

Waste in Felling.]—See the cases of waste in felling timber. Skelton v. Skelton, 2 Swanst. 170; Abrahall v. Bubb, Id. 172.

Restraining Cutting.]—Court will restrain cutting underwood of insufficient growth. Brydges v. Stephens, 6 Madd. 279; 23 R. R. 217.

Injunction against cutting young saplings, wavers, and fruit trees. Kaye v. Banks, Dick. 431.

Owner's Right to Cut Timber on Land let for Shooting.]—A landowner who has demised for a term of years the right of shooting over his lands, is not thereby prevented from cutting timber as he thinks fit in the ordinary management of his land, although injurious to the shooting. Gearns v. Baker, 44 L. J., Ch. 334; L. R. 10 Ch. 355; 33 L. T. 86; 23 W. R. 543.

Cutting under Agreement with Owner's Predecessor.] — An owner of real estate can maintain an action against a person for, and prevent him from, entering on his land and cutting down his timber under an alleged verbal contract said to have been made with that person and the testator, although part of such timber may have been cut, carried away, and paid for in the lifetime of the testator. Wakley v. Froggatt, 2 H. & C. 669; 33 L. J., Ex. 5; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1248; 9 L. T. 340; 12 W. R. 86.

Interest of Infants in.]—Where A. is tenant for life, remainder to his children, and B. has an interest in the growing timber, which, in the usual course of management, will come to be felled during the continuance of A.'s estate, the infants can have no interest in, and cannot be made parties to, an agreement between A. and B. for the purchase of B.'s interest in the growing timber. Even if the master has reported that they have an interest, all the proceedings will be rescinded for irregularity, as having been a surprise on the court. Anon., 1 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 33.

2. Other Trees.

On Adjoining Premises.]—If a tree grows near the confines of the land of two parties, so that the roots extend into the soil of each, the property in the tree belongs to the owner of that land in which the tree was first sown or planted. Holder v. Coates, M. & M. 112; 31 R. R. 724. And see Waterman v. Soper, 1 Ld. Raym. 737; Masters v. Pollie, 2 Roll. Rep. 141; Anon., 2 Roll. Rep. 255.

Overhanging Highway.]—Suffering trees and underwood to grow over and across a highway so as to obstruct the free passage is not a wilful obstruction of the free passage within the meaning of 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 72. Walker v. Horner, 45 L. J., M. C. 34: 1 Q. B. D. 4; 33 L. T. 601; 24 W. R. 95. See also Way.

If a man knowingly plants in his own land and suffers to grow over the land of his neighbour a noxious tree, by which his neighbour's cattle are injured, an action will lie against him at the suit of such neighbour. Crowhurst v. Amersham Burial Board, 48 L. J., Ex. 109; 4 Ex. D. 5; 39 L. T. 355; 27 W. R. 95.

Poisonous Trees and Clippings.]—A declaration alleging that the defendant was possessed of yew trees, the clippings off which he knew to be poisonous, and that it was his duty to prevent the clippings from being placed on land not occupied by him, and that he took so little care of the clippings that they were placed upon land not occupied by him, whereby the horses of the plaintiff were poisoned, discloses no facts from which a duty can be inferred on the part of the defendant to take care of the clippings. Wilson v. Newberry, 41 L. J., Q. B. 31; L. R. 7 Q. B. 31; 25 L. T. 695; 20 W. R. 111.

3. Tenant for Life.

a. In General.

Right to Cut.]—Tenant for life impeachable of waste can only cut such timber as will be for the benefit of succession. Hussey v. Hussey, 5 Madd. 44; 21 R. R. 275.

A tenant for life impeachable for waste is entitled to the thinnings of plantations if properly made, and to the crops of all coppices cut in due rotation. Bateman v. Hotchkin, 31 Beav. 486; 32 L. J., Ch. 6.

A tenant for life may cut oak coppice in due course for his own benefit, when the custom of the country so permits, and may also take the profits which arise from the periodical thinnings of woods. Bagot v. Bagot, Legge v. Legge, 32 Beav. 509; 2 N. R. 297; 33 L. J., Ch. 116; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1022; 9 L. T. 217; 12 W. R. 35.

As between tenant for life and remainderman, the thinnings of fir-trees under twenty years of age belong to the tenant for life. Pidgeley v. Rawling, 2 Coll. C. C. 275.

Although a tenant for life subject to impeachment for waste cannot cut timber at all (except periodically on a timber estate), or, as a general rule, trees which would become timber if they were of the age of twenty years or upwards, yet he may cut down timber like trees under twenty years of age for the necessary purpose of preserving or allowing the growth of other trees, and is entitled to the proceeds of such cuttings. Honywood v. Honywood, 43 L. J., Ch. 652; L. R. 18 Eq. 306; 30 L. T. 671; 22 W. R. 749.

Tenant for Lives, Renewable.] — Lord Ch. Manners would not restrain a tenant for lives, with covenant for perpetual renewal, from cutting timber, though it did not appear when planted. Conolly v. Ely (Lord), 2 Moll. 515. S. P., Percy v. Shanly, Id.

Demise of bog for a term of years renewable for ever gives the right to cut and use the soil. Montgomery v. Cunninghame, 2 Moll. 536. But, secus, if for sale. Bouchier v. O'Grady, Id.

—— With Rent in Arrear.]—Lessee for lives renewable for ever will be enjoined from committing waste by cutting timber, if he allows a large arrear of rent to become due. White v. Nowlan, Hog. 21. S. P., Pim v. Davies, Hog. 11.

Coming into Possession.]—Tenant for life has no property in the underwood till his estate comes into possession. Pigot v. Bullock, 1 Ves. J. 479; 3 Bro. C. C. 589; 2 R. R. 148.

Selling Timber.]—A tenant for life, liable to waste, having sold timber, cannot prevent the purchaser from cutting it. Walworth v. Turner, 3 Ves. 3.

Tenant for life entitled to timber for repairs cannot sell the same to reimburse herself expenses incurred in repairs. Gower v. Eyre, G. Cooper, 156.

Reimbursement for Wrongful Restraint.]—As to security for reimbursement of tenant for life, for loss sustained by being wrongfully restrained from cutting timber, &c. Wombwell v. Belasyse, cited, 6 Ves. 110.

Inclosure Acts.]—In case of lands exchanged under inclosing acts, tenants for life, impeachable for waste, cannot cut timber for inclosures, but must raise the money for the enclosure by mortgage, under the powers of the act. Lee v. Alston, 1 Bro. C. C. 194.

As between Husband and Wife.]—Husband of female tenant for life, with condition not to commit waste:—Held (in opposition to Ormond (Marquis) v. Kynnersley, 5 Madd. 369; 21 R. R. 313) liable for timber cut, and not the wife or her estate. Kingham v. Lee, 15 Sim. 396; 16 L. J., Ch. 49; 11 Jur. 4.

Allowance of income pending a suit to a married woman, who, having a life interest to her separate use, had with her husband cut timber. Stacey v. Southey, 1 Drew. 400.

Pending Appeal.]—Devise to A. and her heirs for ever, in the fullest confidence that after her decease she will devise the property to my family, being restrained to an estate for life by decree at the rolls, the devisee was enjoined from cutting timber pending an appeal. Wright v. Atkyns, 1 V. & B. 313; 13 R. R. 199. See also 19 Ves. 299; 17 Ves. 255; G. Cooper, 111; Turn. & R. 143.

Consent of Trustees — Reference.] — Power contained in a will, for the devisees for life, when in possession, to cut down timber, as four trustees, or the survivors or survivor of them, should assign, allow of, or direct; all the four trustees being dead:—Held, that the court would execute the trust by referring it to a master to see what timber was fit to be cut down from time to time. Hewett v. Hewett, 2 Eden, 332; Amb. 508.

b. Without Impeachment of Waste.

Right to Cut.]—Right of tenant for life, without impeachment of waste, to cut timber generally in a husbandman-like manner, independently of the effect upon the beauty of the place, except equitable waste. Burges v. Lamb, 16 Ves. 185; 10 R. R. 150.

A tenant for life without impeachment of waste, not restrained from felling trees fit for the purpose of timber, though young and not such as would be felled in a course of husbandman-like management of the estate. Smythe v. Smythe, 2 Swanst. 251; 1 Wils. Ch. 426; 19 R. R. 72.

Right of a tenant entitled to a life interest, in a term of years, unimpeachable of waste, to fell timber for his own benefit. Bridges v. Stephens, 2 Swanst. 150.

Land Devised for Sale.]—Devise of land to be sold, and other lands to be purchased in another county; A. to be tenant for life (sans waste) of the lands to be purchased, and the rents and profits of the lands to be sold to the same use; A. cannot cut down timber on the lands to be sold, since he thereby would have the benefit of double waste. Plymouth v. Archer, 1 Bro. C. C. 159. S. P., Burges v. Lamb, 16 Ves. 180; 10 R. R. 150.

As between Representative and Creditor.]—Tenant for life, sans waste, is restrained by injunction from selling timber; afterwards his creditors obtain an order for a sale, and receiver is appointed for the money arising from the sale; but the tenant for life dies before the timber is felled. Quære, whether his representatives are entitled to the benefit of the timber. Partridge v. Pawlett, Ridgw. t. Hardwicke, 254.

Construction.]—R. N., by his will, devised to F. N., and his assigns, for life, all his real estates in W., without impeachment of waste, except the timber growing in the park, avenues, demesne lands, and woods adjoining to the capital messuage, called Arbury, remainder in trust for C. N. N. for life, remainder to his first and other sons in tail male:—Held, that the restriction as to cutting timber was confined to the premises specified in the exception clause. Newdigate v. Newdigate, 8 Bligh (N.S.) 734; 2 Cl. & F. 601. Reversing 1 Sim. 131; 5 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 52; 1 Jur. 636; 27 R. R. 180.

Infant—Inquiry, Form of.]—Upon a bill filed by an infant devisee for life, without impeachment of waste (except as to ornamental timber), praying the establishment of the will, the administration of the trusts, and maintenance, an inquiry was directed as to timber in the form adopted in Tooker v. Annesley (5 Sim. 235), excluding ornamental timber. Consett v. Bell, 1 Y. & C. C. C. 569; 11 L. J., Ch. 401; 6 Jur. 869.

Strict Settlement — Effect.] — Residue bequeathed in trust to be laid out in real estates, to be settled to the same uses as estates devised to the trustees for life successively, without impeachment of waste, with various limitations, in strict settlement, all the estates for life being without impeachment of waste, and the ultimate remainder in fee; the trustees laid out part of the fund in an estate, with a considerable quantity of timber upon it; taking that to be a sound exercise of discretion, the first tenant for life cannot cut the whole. Burges v. Lamb, 16 Ves. 174; 10 R. R. 150.

Exemption from Liability for Waste, subject to Discretion of Trustees.]—Exemption from liability to waste, annexed to a life estate, is a special power in the tenant for life to appropriate part of the inheritance:—Held, under the terms of a deed of settlement in this case, that it was made subordinate to a discretionary power of cutting timber conferred on the trustees. Kekewich v. Marker, 3 Mac. & G. 311; 15 Jur. 687.

Devise—Effect.]—A devise of the rents and profits of an estate to the husband for life, without impeachment of waste, shall not only be considered as annual profits, but will empower him to cut timber. Partridge v. Pawlett, 1 Atk. 467.

Settlement — Construction.] — By marriage settlement, an estate belonging to the husband was settled upon him for life, "without impeachment of or for any manner of waste, save and except spoil or destruction, or voluntary or permissive waste, or suffering houses or buildings to go to decay, and in not repairing the same," with remainders over:—Held, that such a construction must, if possible, be put upon the exception as not to destroy the effect of the whole clause, and that the tenant for life was entitled to cut all such timber and wood, not planted or standing for ornament, as an owner of the estate in fee simple, having regard to his interest and the permanent advantage of the estate, might properly cut in a due course of management. Vincent v. Spicer, 22 Beav. 380; 25 L. J., Ch. 589; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 654; 4 W. R. 667.

c. Windfalls.

Generally.]—Windfalls of timber and other casualties, to whom the property belongs. Tenants for life. Remaindermen, &c. Aston v. Aston, 1 Ves. Sen. 396.

What Include.]—Branches of trees cut down for the king's use do not pass by a grant to a ranger of a forest of all wood blown or thrown down by the wind, and all dead wood, and the boughs and branches of trees and wood in the forest cut off or thrown down. Att.-Gen. v. Stawell (Lord), 2 Anst. 592.

To whose Benefit.]—The tenant for life may gain a benefit indirectly by no act of his own, as in the case of timber thrown down by storm, etc. Lushington v. Boldero, 6 Madd. 149; 22 R. R. 261.

Where timber is blown down, a tenant for life impeachable for waste is absolutely entitled to such parts as he would be entitled to cut himself, as thinnings, etc., and also to the interest by the investment of the produce of the rest. Bateman v. Hotchkin, 31 Beav. 486; 32 L. J., Ch. 6.

To whom Belong.]—The first owner of the inheritance in esse shall have timber blown down; for the trees must become the property of somebody. Garth v. Cotton, 3 Atk. 755.

Where timber is blown down the property in it belongs to the owner of the first estate of inheritance. Honywood v. Honywood, 43 L. J., Ch. 652; L. R. 18 Eq. 306; 30 L. T. 671; 22 W. R. 749.

Proceeds of.]—Notwithstanding the popular notion to the contrary, the proceeds of windfalls of timber must be invested and dealt with as part of the corpus of the settled estate. Bagot v. Bagot, Legge v. Legge, 32 Beav. 509; 2 N. R. 297; 33 L. J., Ch. 116; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1022; 9 L. T. 217; 12 W. R. 35.

—— Capital or Income.]—A large part of the income of a settled estate was derived from the thinnings and cuttings of larch plantations, and, during a tenancy for life, high winds blew down a very large proportion of the larches, and it became necessary for the good cultivation of the estate to remove almost the whole of those which remained. It was estimated that it would take forty years for the plantations to yield the same income as before:—Held, that the tenant for life was not entitled to receive the proceeds of sale either of the trees not blown down but which had to be removed, or of the trees which were actually blown down, but that the whole of the proceeds of sale must be invested as capital. But held, that the tenant for life was entitled to receive out of the income arising from the invested fund and the plantations a fixed annual sum, equal to the average income which would have been derived from the plantations if no gales had occurred—such sum, if necessary, to be made up out of capital; the trustees to be at liberty to have recourse to the investments or the income of the plantations for the purpose of fresh planting. Harrison's Trusts, In re, Harrison v. Harrison, 54 L. J., Ch. 617; 28 Ch. D. 220; 52 L. T. 204; 33 W. R. 240—C. A.

As between Executor and Devisee.]—A testator devised estates upon which there were plantations of larch trees. At the time of his death a great number of the larch trees had been more or less blown down by extraordinary gales. It was held by Pearson, J., that, as between the devisees and the executors of the testator, the trees which had been blown down to such an extent that they could not grow as trees usually grow were severed and belonged to the executors, and that the trees which were merely lifted but would have to be cut for the proper cultivation of the plantations belonged to the devisees:—Held, that, having regard to the maxim "quicquid plantatur solo, solo cedit," the principle applicable was that if a tree was attached to the soil it was real estate, and, if severed, personalty; that the life and manner of growth of any particular tree was no test of its attachment to the soil, and that the degree of attachment or severance was a question of fact in the case of each particular tree. Ainslie, In re, Swinburne v. Ainslie, 55 L. J., Ch. 615; 30 Ch. D. 485; 53 L. T. 645; 33 W. R. 910; 50 J. P. 180—C.A.

d. Proceeds when Cut.

See also A. 3, b. iv. ante, col. 1846, and next sub-head, post, col. 1860.

Right to.]—Where timber, ripe for cutting, is cut by a tenant for life, impeachable for waste, he is entitled to the income of the fund produced by the sale thereof, and the first person taking an estate unimpeachable for waste will, on coming into possession, be entitled to the capital. Gent v. Harrison, Johns. 517; 29 L. J., Ch. 68; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1285; 1 L. T. 128; 8 W. R. 57.

An equitable tenant for life impeachable for waste cut timber not otherwise than in due course of management. The proceeds had been brought into court and the income ordered to be paid to her. On her death her son, being the next tenant for life dispunishable for waste, petitioned for payment to him of the timber money in court:—Held, that he was entitled to the money, as he would have been entitled to the trees which produced it. Lowndes v. Norton, 46 L. J., Ch. 613; 6 Ch. D. 139; 25 W. R. 826.

On a case submitted to the court by trustees, as to certain questions arising between the equitable tenant for life and the remainderman in the management of the estate:—Held, that the produce of the sale of underwood and of timber cut periodically, in the regular course of thinning, was to be treated as income, and that of timber not cut in the regular course, but to improve the growth of the remaining trees, as capital. Cowley (Earl) v. Wellesley, 35 Beav. 635; L. R. 1 Eq. 656; 14 L. T. 425; 14 W. R. 528.

The proceeds of timber cut and minerals won, with a proper regard to the benefit of an estate, by a tenant for life impeachable of waste, will, by the rules of the court of equity, be invested and dealt with as part of the corpus of the estate, the tenant for life, though impeachable of waste, receiving the income. Bagot v. Bagot, Legge v. Legge, 32 Beav. 509; 2 N. R. 297; 33 L. J., Ch. 116; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1022; 9 L. T. 217; 12 W. R. 35.

The proceeds of timber and minerals improperly cut and won at a time when there is no person in esse unimpeachable for waste must be similarly dealt with, except that the tenant for life, improperly acting, cannot receive the income. Ib.

The proceeds of timber and minerals improperly cut and won by a tenant for life impeachable of waste, at the time when there is in existence a remainderman entitled indefeasibly to the first estate, unimpeachable of waste, belong absolutely to such remainderman. Ib.

When a tenant for life impeachable for waste improperly, knowingly, and wilfully commits waste, he cannot derive any benefit from the timber cut. Ib.

Principle as to.]—The doctrine and principle of the interference of a court of equity, in the case of a tenant for life cutting timber, is that no man shall obtain a benefit by his own wrong, and a tenant for life would do so if he were allowed the interest of the fund produced by the sale of the timber. Lushington v. Boldero, 15 Beav. 1; 21 L. J., Ch. 49; 16 Jur. 140.

A tenant for life committing waste by cutting timber, can gain no advantage from his wrongful act, but the produce is invested and accumulated for the benefit of the first estate of inheritance. Bateman v. Hotchkin, 31 Beav. 486; 32 L. J., Ch. 6.

There are many cases in which the tenant for life cannot derive any benefit from timber improperly cut by him, knowingly and wilfully. Bagot v. Bagot, 32 Beav. 509; 2 N. R. 297; 33 L. J., Ch. 116; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1022; 9 L. T. 217; 12 W. R. 35.

Property in Timber Cut.]—Where timber is cut down the property in it belongs to the owner of the first estate of inheritance. Honywood v. Honywood, 43 L. J., Ch. 652; L. R. 18 Eq. 306; 30 L. T. 671; 22 W. R. 749.

—— Right of Tenant in Tail.]—A., tenant for life, remainder to first, &c., sons in tail, remainder to B. for life, remainder to first, &c., sons in tail, remainder to C. in tail. A. cut down timber; A. and B. having no son born, C. is entitled to timber. Rolt v. Somerville (Lord), 2 Eq. Abr. 759. Both in law and equity. Whitfield v. Bewitt, 2 P. Wms. 240.

Account.]—Tenant for life, punishable for waste, with power, under an inclosing act, to mortgage for the expense of the inclosure, felled timber and applied the produce instead; decreed, to account to owner of next estate of inheritance. Lee v. Alston, 1 Ves. J. 78; 3 Bro. C. C. 37.

Devise—Payment of Debts.]—A. devises lands encumbered with debts to B. for life, remainder to C. in fee; B. cuts down timber from the estate; B. decreed to pay two-fifths of the debts, and C. the remaining three-fifths, and B. to account for the timber which he had cut, and this to be taken as part of the three-fifths, which the remainderman was to pay. James v. Hales, 2 Vern. 267; Pre. Ch. 44.

Settlement.]—A. tenant for life; remainder to his sons successively in tail male; remainder to B. for life, and to her sons in the same manner, the trustees to preserve contingent remainders. A., being also seised of the reversion in fee, cut and sold before the birth of a tenant in tail; afterwards, B. had a son, who died soon after his birth, and another son who survived A.; the produce of the timber was decreed to be laid out in the funds during the life of A., and upon his death, without having had a son, was decreed to be laid out in land, to be settled to the uses of the estate upon which the timber was cut. Powlett v. Bolton (Duchess), 3 Ves. 374; 4 R. R. 21; and Williams v. Bolton, 1 Cox, 72; 4 R. R. 21.

—— Strict.] — Devise of real estates to A. and B., and their heirs, to the use of them, and their heirs, in trust to permit C. to receive the rents and profits for life, and after her decease to stand seised of the same premises, in trust for the second son of D., and the heirs male of his body; remainder in trust for the third, fourth, and other sons of D. in tail male; remainder in trust for E. for life, without impeachment of waste; remainder to trustees to preserve, &c.; remainder to the first and other sons of E. in tail male, &c.; proviso, that, in case there should not be a second son born, the said trustees should pay the rents and profits of the said estates to such person as was next in remainder, and should be entitled to receive the same in case no son should be born. C. having cut timber, this was sold under an order of the court, and the produce paid into the bank. At C.'s death, D. had no son, and E. was dead, leaving F., his eldest son. The produce of the timber belongs to F. absolutely, and shall not abide the event of D.'s having a son. Dare v. Hopkins, 2 Cox, 110.

Cutting during Life of Late Tenant.]—The proceeds of timber, cut down during the life of a late tenant for life impeachable of waste, ordered to be paid to the tenant for life in possession, being unimpeachable of waste. Phillips v. Barlow, 14 Sim. 263; 14 L. J., Ch. 35.

—— Base Fee.]—No action lies by a reversioner and owner of the inheritance to recover the value of timber cut by a deceased tenant for life, after a fine levied by her, whereby she acquired a base fee, and before the avoidance of such fine and base fee by the entry of the reversioner for that purpose, such entry not revesting the reversioner's old estate by relation during the continuance of the base fee thus created, so as to entitle him to the timber and other mesne profits taken during that interval. Hughes v. Thomas, 13 East, 474.

—— Back Interest.]—Under no circumstances can a tenant for life, unimpeachable for waste, be entitled, on coming into possession, to back interest on the produce of timber, whether properly or improperly cut by a previous tenant for life impeachable for waste. Gent v. Harrison, Johns. 517; 29 L. J., Ch. 68; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1285; 1 L. T. 128; 8 W. R. 57.

Trees not Timber.]—A tenant for life is entitled at law to the proceeds of trees (not timber) cut by him, whether rightfully or wrongfully. Honywood v. Honywood, 43 L. J., Ch. 652; L. R. 18 Eq. 306; 30 L. T. 671; 22 W. R. 749.

Timber not Ripe.]—Where timber, cut by a tenant for life impeachable for waste, is not ripe for cutting, semble the produce belongs immediately to the first person having an estate of inheritance, passing over all the intermediate life estates, whether impeachable for waste or not. Gent v. Harrison, supra.

Power to Sell.]—A tenant for life, without impeachment for waste, with power to sell, if he sells, is not entitled to the produce of the timber on the estate. Doran v. Wiltshire, 3 Swanst 699; 19 R. R. 287.

Settlement—Sale under Power.]—Settlement of estates on trustees and their heirs, during the joint lives of W. H. and his wife, without impeachment of waste, upon trust, out of the rents and profits, to pay all expenses and outgoings, and to raise and pay a sum by way of pin-money to the wife, and subject thereto to pay the clear residue of the rents, &c., to W. H., during the lives of himself and his wife; remainder to W. A. for life, without impeachment of waste; remainder over; with power for the trustees to sell and lay out the produce in the purchase of other lands to the same uses; the land being sold under the power, W. H. was held entitled to the produce of timber cut down by him previously to the sale, but not to the value of timber then standing. Wolf v. Hill, 2 Swanst. 149.

Sale with Consent.]—Estates were devised to A. in fee in trust to settle them on B. for life, remainder to C. for life, without impeachment of waste, remainder to C.'s first and other sons in tail. After the testator's death A., with the consent of B. and C., cut and sold some timber on the estates, which was going to decay, and invested the proceeds in consols. Afterwards, in a suit by C. against A. and B. and C.'s eldest son, the stock was transferred into court. The court ordered the dividends to be paid to B. for life, and, afterwards B. having died, the capital to be transferred to C. Waldo v. Waldo, 12 Sim. 107; 10 L. J., Ch. 312.

As between Heir and Executor.]—A. was tenant for life without impeachment of waste, with remainder to her issue in tail, with remainder to B. for life, with remainder to his issue in tail, with remainder to B. in fee. The court directed some timber to be cut in the life of A., and the produce to be invested. Both A. and B. died without issue:—Held, as between the heir and executor of B., that the timber money was realty, and belonged to the heir. Field v. Brown, 27 Beav. 90.

Construction.]—On construction of settlement:—Held, that timber growing upon an estate during the life of the defendant was to be applicable, not to his own purposes, but to relieve the inheritance from incumbrances. Briggs v. Oxford (Earl), 1 De G. M. & G. 363; 21 L. J., Ch. 829; 16 Jur. 558. Affirming 5 De G. & Sm. 156.

—— Of Will—Local Usage.]—A tenant for life under a will of an estate containing extensive beech woods annually cut a large quantity of the beech (together with a small quantity of oak, elm, and ash) growing in the woods, and appropriated the proceeds. By the custom of the county beech was timber. The tenant for life had no express power to cut timber except for repairs. The annual cuttings were in accordance with a modern local usage, by virtue of which beech and other timber trees when growing in beech woods were periodically cut in the ordinary course of management for the preservation of the woods, and in order to secure a perpetual succession of timber, and the timber so cut was treated as part of the annual profits:—Held (Kay, L.J., dissenting), that the testator must be taken to have framed his will with reference to such local usage, and consequently that the annual cuttings were not waste as between the tenant for life and remaindermen, and the tenant for life was entitled to the proceeds. Dashwood v. Magniac, 60 L. J., Ch. 809; [1891] 3 Ch. 306; 65 L. T. 811—C. A.

—— "Rents and Profits."]—Where an equitable tenant for life, unimpeachable of waste, was entitled to estates, subject to a trust for payment by the trustees out of the rents and profits, but not by sale or mortgage of such estates, of certain mortgages on the estates; and timber had been cut on the estates by the direction of the court:—Held, that the term "rents and profits" meant annual rents and profits, and that the tenant for life in possession, though not in possession of the rents and profits of the estate, was entitled to all other rights incident to his estate, and, therefore, that he was entitled to the proceeds of the timber which had been cut. Lovat (Lord) v. Leeds (Duchess), 2 Dr. & Sm. 75; 10 W. R. 398.

Jurisdiction.]—Whether the produce of timber, not ripe for cutting, cut by a tenant for life impeachable for waste, belongs immediately to the first person having an estate of inheritance, passing over all the intermediate life estates, whether impeachable for waste or not, or to the first tenant for life, unimpeachable for waste, the cutting being a tort, the remedy is by action, and not in this court. Gent v. Harrison, Johns. 517; 29 L. J., Ch. 68; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1285; 1 L. T. 128; 8 W. R. 57.

4. Cut by Order of Court.

Proceeds of, to Whom Belong.]—Tenant for life subject to impeachment for waste is entitled to the interest of money produced by the sale of timber cut by order of the court. Tooker v. Annesley, 5 Sim. 235.

When the court orders timber to be cut for any reason, the proper course is for the proceeds to be invested, and the income given to the successive owners of the estate until there is an absolute estate of inheritance, the owner of which is entitled to the principal; and the same rule applies to cases of equitable waste. Honywood v. Honywood, 43 L. J., Ch. 652; L. R. 18 Eq. 306; 30 L. T. 671; 22 W. R. 749.

The proceeds of timber cut and sold by order of the court during the life of a late tenant for life, who was impeachable of waste, ordered to be paid to the tenant for life in possession, who was unimpeachable of waste. Phillips v. Barlow, 14 Sim. 263; 14 L. J., Ch. 35.

Tenant for life without impeachment of waste, further than wilful waste, is entitled to the interest of money produced by the sale of decaying timber cut by order of court. As to any further claim, a question at law, quære. The capital laid out in real estate to be settled to the same uses. Wickham v. Wickham, 19 Ves. 419; G. Cooper, 288.

Infant—Proceeds of Timber, Personal Estate.]—By order of the court, timber was cut upon the estate of an infant, who was equitable tenant in fee-simple, with an executory devise over in the event of his dying under twenty-one, and without issue, which event happened:—Held, that the produce of the timber formed part of the personal estate of the infant. Dyer v. Dyer, 34 Beav. 540; 6 N. R. 79; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 721; 12 L. T. 442; 13 W. R. 732.

Lunatic—Produce of Timber, whether Real or Personal Estate.]—Lord Chancellor thought that, notwithstanding the words of the stat. 17 Edw. 2, s. 1, cc. 9, 10, the court has authority to order timber decaying on the estate of a lunatic to be cut, but did not absolutely decide the point, or whether the produce should be considered as real or personal estate, directing the point to be argued on a bill filed. Bromfield, Ex parte, 3 Bro. C. C. 510; 1 Ves. J. 453; 2 R. R. 126.

Order, when made.]—A term for years is limited for payment of debts, remainder to A. for his life, sans waste, remainder to his first, &c., son in tail. A. being in want, the court gave him leave to cut timber for his support, not exceeding the value of 500*l.* Aspinwall v. Leigh, 2 Vern. 218.

Where there is tenant for life impeachable for waste, with remainder over, court will authorise cutting of timber only where interest of succession requires it. Hussey v. Hussey, 5 Madd. 44; 21 R. R. 275.

—— Reference—Application of Proceeds.]—An estate was limited to one for life, with a clause of forfeiture and a gift over, on his cutting timber. There was on the estate timber which required felling. The court, on a bill filed for that purpose by the tenant for life, authorised the same to be cut down, and directed a reference to the master for that purpose. The money arising from the timber in such cases is settled on trusts similar to those on which the estate stands limited. Peters v. Blake, 6 L. J., Ch. 157. S. P., Lygon v. Beauchamp (Earl), id., 158.

C. TENANT IN TAIL.

Right to Cut Timber.]—Tenant in tail in possession may fell all timber fit. Hussey v. Hussey, 5 Madd. 44; 21 R. R. 275.

Right to Proceeds.]—Several persons were entitled successively to life estates in real property, limited in strict settlement. They became bankrupt, and their assignees cut down timber left for ornament and shelter. Upon a bill filed on behalf of H. L., the then first tenant in tail in esse, who was an infant, the assignees were ordered to bring the money into court. This, with the accumulations, amounted to 26,133*l.* 2*s.* 10*d.* Two of the tenants for life died without issue. H. L. attained twenty-one, and, being still the first tenant in tail, and entitled to the first estate of inheritance, he presented a petition for payment to him of the fund and the accumulations, which were ordered to be transferred to him. Lushington v. Boldero, 15 Beav. 1; 21 L. J., Ch. 49; 16 Jur. 140.

Satisfaction to.]—G., tenant for ninety-nine years, if he so long live, sans waste (except voluntary), remainder to trustees to preserve, &c., remainder to his first, &c., sons in tail male, remainder to A. in fee. G., before a son born, and A. agreed to cut down timber on the estate, and to divide the produce between them; A. agreeing not to take advantage of the waste. They cut timber of the value of 2,000*l.* G.'s son, on attaining twenty-one, suffered a recovery to the use of himself and his heirs:—Held, that G.'s son shall have satisfaction for so much of the value of his inheritance as A. had received under the agreement, with interest at 4 per cent. from the filing of the bill. Garth v. Cotton, 3 Atk. 751; 1 Ves. 524, 546.

Barring Entail.]—Restriction against cutting down timber:—Held, determined by barring entail. Colson's Trusts, In re, 1 Kay, 133; 23 L. J., Ch. 155; 2 Eq. R. 257; 2 W. R. 111.

Bond against Waste.]—One settles lands upon his daughter in tail, and takes a bond from her not to commit waste; bond not binding in equity. Jervis v. Bruton, 2 Vern. 251.

Equitable Waste.]—Tenant in tail, restrained by statute from barring issue and those in remainder, is not, for that reason, within the principle of equitable waste. Att.-Gen. v. Marlborough (Duke), 3 Madd. 498; 18 R. R. 273.

Trover.]—Trover cannot be maintained by a tenant in tail expectant on the determination of an estate for life, without impeachment of waste, for timber which grew upon and was severed from the estate. Pyne v. Dor, 1 Term Rep. 55.

After Possibility of Issue Extinct.]—Tenant in tail, after possibility of issue extinct, being dispunishable for waste by the law, has, equally with tenant for life without impeachment of waste by settlement, an interest and property in the timber. Williams v. Williams, 15 Ves. 427.

Tenant in tail, after possibility of issue extinct, having been once tenant in tail in possession with the other donee, and therefore dispunishable for waste, may not only commit waste, but also convert to her own use the property wasted; therefore, not to be restrained in equity, except for malicious waste. Id., 430.

Construction—Liability for Waste.]—A. devised all his lands, &c., to his wife; and, if it should happen that she should have no son nor daughter by him begotten upon her body, and for want of such issue, then the said premises to return to his brother B., if he should be then living, and to his heirs for ever, paying to his brother 150*l.* within a year after the wife's death: decreed, to be an estate tail in the wife, and not an estate for life only; that by "no son nor daughter" must be understood "no issue;" and that she ought not to be restrained from committing waste. Wyld v. Lewis, 1 Atk. 432.

Infant.]—Where there is infant tenant in tail in possession, court will authorise cutting of all timber fit to be felled. Hussey v. Hussey, 5 Madd. 44; 21 R. R. 275.

—— Right to Proceeds.]—Bill, by tenant in tail in reversion, to have timber cut; ordered, and that the money be laid out in the funds, and the claim discussed when tenant in tail of age. Mildmay v. Mildmay, 4 Bro. C. C. 76.

—— Proceeds when Cut—Interest of Infant.]—A. tenant for life, remainder to B. in tail as to one moiety, remainder to C. an infant in tail as to the other moiety, remainder over. There is timber on the premises greatly decaying. B., the remainderman, brings a bill praying that the decaying timber might be cut down, sold, and the money divided betwixt him and the infant, and the tenant for life insists on his right to have part of the money; tenant for life must have sufficient left for repairs, &c., and an allowance for all damage done to him on the ground, but to have no allowance for the timber, which, when severed by accident or by a trespasser, belongs to the first owner of the inheritance. Decaying timber, if for ornament or safety, not to be cut down; also, where an infant is interested in the inheritance, no timber can be cut down but by the approbation of the master; and the infant's moiety of the money is to be put out for his benefit. Berwick v. Whitfield, 3 P. Wms. 267.

—— Proceeds of Cutting, Real or Personal Estate.]—Where guardian of an infant tenant in tail cuts down timber, the money for it shall be personal estate of the infant; but, if the infant has the fee, it shall be considered as real estate. Tullit v. Tullit, Amb. 370; Dick. 322.

—— Inquiry.]—Devise in strict settlement, with a clause of forfeiture by cutting any trees. Upon a bill by the infant remainderman in tail, an inquiry was directed, whether any trees, in the park, not ornamental or affording shelter to the mansion-house, are proper to be felled; and whether it would be for the benefit of all parties interested that they should be felled and sold, and the money laid out in other estates to be settled to the same uses. Delapole v. Delapole, 17 Ves. 150.

Reference—Principles of, and Form.]—Reference granted on bill by tenant in tail, whether it be for the benefit of the plaintiff and the other parties to cut timber during the continuance of the estate of a tenant for life of the lands, impeachable of waste. Form of such reference. Principles upon which such references granted. Tollemache v. Tollemache, 1 Hare, 456; 6 Jur. 364.

D. TENANT IN FEE WITH EXECUTORY DEVISE OVER.

Liability for Waste.]—A devisee in fee, subject to an executory devisee over in the event of his not leaving issue living at his death:—Held, dispunishable for legal, but not for equitable, waste. Turner v. Wright, 2 De G. F. & J. 234; 29 L. J., Ch. 598; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 809; 8 W. R. 675. Affirming Johns. 740.

A tenant in fee, with an executory devise over, is entitled to cut timber, but not to commit equitable, waste, but a provision against cutting timber may be annexed to his estate. Blake v. Peters, 1 De G. J. & S. 345; 1 N. R. 503; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 836; 32 L. J., Ch. 200; 9 L. T. 247; 11 W. R. 409.

The estate of the tenant in fee, under such circumstances, may be liable for the waste committed, though the instrument creating the estate declared that such waste should forfeit the estate. Ib.

Tenant in fee with executory devise over:—Held, under no obligation to repair, and not liable for permissive waste. S. C., 31 L. J., Ch. 884; 10 W. R. 826.

—— Cutting Timber.]—Where there is an executory devise over, even of a legal estate, this court will not permit timber to be cut, more especially in the case of a trust estate. Stansfield v. Habergham, 10 Ves. 273; 7 R. R. 409.

Heir, who is entitled by way of resulting trust until the determination of an event upon which the future contingent estates were to arise, was restrained from cutting timber. Ib.

Infant—Proceeds of Timber, Personalty.]—A was tenant in fee-simple of an estate, subject to an executory devise over in the event of his death under twenty-one without issue. During the minority of A., timber which was deteriorating was cut with the sanction of the court. A. died under twenty-one without issue:—Held, that the produce of the timber passed as personalty to his legal personal representative. Dyer v. Dyer, 34 Beav. 540; 6 N. R. 79; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 721; 12 L. T. 442; 13 W. R. 732.

E. TENANT IN COMMON.

Generally.]—Injunction between tenants in common against destruction; not against pure equitable waste. Hole v. Thomas, 7 Ves. 589; 6 R. R. 195.

Injunction against waste between tenants in common, on the ground that one was occupying tenant to the rest; otherwise not, except as to destruction. Twort v. Twort, 16 Ves. 128; 10 R. R. 141.

The court will, as between tenants in common, only interfere to restrain waste in cases of destructive spoliation or waste. Arthur v. Lamb, 2 Dr. & Sm. 428; 12 L. T. 338.

A tenant in common cannot be restrained by injunction, upon the application of his co-tenants, from cutting down and selling trees and timber, where it appears that he is managing the estate according to the proper course of husbandry, and destructive waste cannot be proved. Ib.

One tenant in common cannot maintain an action in the nature of waste against another tenant in common (in possession of the whole, having a demise of the moiety from the first), for cutting down trees of a proper age and growth for being cut. Martin v. Knowllys, 8 Term Rep. 145.

Although the court has jurisdiction, after a decree in a partition suit, to grant an injunction restraining a tenant in common in possession from committing destructive waste, it will not interfere to restrain a tenant in common in possession merely from farming contrary to the custom of the country, as between landlord and tenant (that relation not existing between him and the other tenants in common). Bailey v. Hobson, 39 L. J., Ch. 270; L. R. 5 Ch. 180; 22 L. T. 594; 18 W. R. 124.

The court will restrain one tenant in common from the wilful destruction of the common property; but, where a railroad company had obtained a lease from five out of six tenants in common, and had, contrary to the wishes of the remaining tenant in common, constructed a railroad on the property, which at law had been held to be an ouster, the court refused to interfere by injunction to prevent the dissenting tenant in common removing the rails, &c., though the rent agreed to be paid by the company was three times the former rent. Durham and Sunderland Ry. v. Wawn, 3 Beav. 119; 4 Jur. 764.

Insolvency of one Tenant.]—Injunction to stay waste refused, where the plaintiff and the defendant in possession were tenants in common, but granted on affidavit of defendant's insolvency. Smallman v. Onions, 3 Bro. C. C. 621.

F. COPYHOLDS.

Generally.]—No action of waste lies by the lord against a copyholder. Dench v. Bampton, 4 Ves. 706.

Lord of a manor is entitled to injunction and account in respect of waste by a copyholder. Richards v. Noble, 3 Mer. 673.

Copyhold tenant subject to waste unless by act of God. Rook v. Worth, 1 Ves. 462.

Irremediable Mischief.]—Injunction against trespass upon irremediable mischief, in nature of waste, on a bill by the lord of a manor and his lessees against taking stones, having a peculiar value, found at the bottom of the sea within the limits of the manor. Cowper (Earl) v. Baker, 17 Ves. 128.

Lessee of Copyholder.]—Lessee of copyholder punishable for waste, though copyholder is not. Dalton v. Gill, Cary, 63.

Forfeiture.]—A copyholder licensing his lessee to commit waste, on condition of his doing a subsequent act to diminish the damage thereby occasioned, cannot eject him for a forfeiture incurred by his committing the waste without performing the subsequent act. Doe d. Wood v. Morris, 2 Taunt. 52.

—— Minority.]—Forfeiture of copyholder for waste during minority. Litton's Case, 3 Swanst. 493; Cary, 6.

Acts of Defendant's Testator.]—Lord of a manor may bring a bill for an account of ore dug or timber cut by defendant's testator; otherwise of ploughing up meadows or ancient pasture, or such torts as die with the person. Winchester v. Knight, 1 P. Wms. 406.

Right to Cut Timber—Forfeiture.]—Plaintiff sold defendant a copyhold estate of 16*l.* per annum value (on which was timber of 150*l.*) for 630*l.*, and covenanted to surrender on or before Michaelmas then next. Defendant paid 10*l.* earnest, entered on the premises, cut down timber, stocked the land, and acted as owner. On a bill for specific performance of covenants, plaintiff proved he gave notice that he would surrender next court day, which does not appear to have been before Michaelmas, and attended accordingly. On defendant's part, it was proved that he was disordered in his senses. Though there be proof of the timber's value, yet, as no custom is alleged of the tenant's having power to cut it down, it must be according to the common law by which the tenant has no power over it, and therefore a plain imposition. Lord Chancellor was of opinion that it was a great overvalue, and that his cutting down timber was a proof of his folly, because a direct forfeiture. As it is, it is a matter merely at law; if the surrender had been made, an action would have lain at law. Bill dismissed. Edwards v. Heather, Sel. Ch. Ca. 3.

G. JOINTRESS.

Generally.]—Injunction to stay waste granted against jointress. Cooke v. Whaley, 1 Eq. Abr. 400.

Jointure under Value.]—Where it was covenanted that jointure should be of certain value, which it was not, court refused the injunction against waste. Carew v. Carew, 1 Eq. Abr. 400.

Improvement by Waste.]—The under-tenant of a jointress commits waste sparsim; but had improved the yearly value, and offers to take a lease at the improved rent, and to pay for the timber cut. Quære, whether the court will relieve as to the waste. Ligo v. Smith, 2 Vern. 263.

11 Hen. 7.]—Motion to stay a jointress tenant in tail after possibility, &c., from committing waste:—Held, that she, being a jointress within 11 Hen. 7, ought to be restrained from wilful waste, and the injunction was granted; for by the statute she is restrained from aliening. Cook v. Winford, 1 Eq. Abr. 221, pl. 2.

Possibility of Issue Extinct.]—Settlement, on marriage, of lands of husband to the use of husband for life, without impeachment of waste; remainder to trustees, to preserve contingent remainders; remainder to wife for life for her jointure, and in bar of dower; remainder to first and other sons of the marriage in tail male; remainder to the daughters in the same manner; remainder to the heirs of the body of husband and wife. The husband being dead without issue, as to the right of the widow to cut timber, and which would be a consequence to the property in it when severed, as tenant in tail after possibility of issue extinct, either in possession by the effect of merger, if the estates can unite, or, if not, in remainder, quære. Williams v. Williams, 15 Ves. 419. See 11 R. R. 357, n.

Consent to Cutting Timber.]—Jointress giving leave to the next of kin in remainder for life without impeachment, &c., to cut timber, the remainderman in tail having acquiesced and encouraged his doing so, the latter was restrained by perpetual injunction from bringing action of waste against the jointress. Aston v. Aston, 1 Ves. 396.

H. TRUSTEES.

Generally.]—Devise of real estate to M. for life, and direction "that the timber or wood which should be on his real estates should from time to time be used for repairing the houses thereupon, or otherwise for the benefit and advantage of his estate, or that the same should be sold, and the money arising therefrom should be applied," &c.:—Held, devise to M. carried the underwood, and that trustees leaving sufficient timber for repairs might cut all fit timber, except ornamental. Butler v. Borton, 5 Madd. 40; 21 R. R. 272.

Consent of.]—Where a testator devises the legal estate to trustees, and gives to a tenant for life an equitable estate only, with remainders over, such tenant for life ought not to cut timber without the consent of the trustees. Denton v. Denton, 7 Beav. 388; 8 Jur. 388.

——Reference.]—Power contained in a will for the devisees for life, when in possession, to cut down timber as four trustees, or the survivors or survivor of them, should direct, &c.; all the four trustees being dead:—Held, that the court would execute the trust by referring it to a master to see what timber was fit to be cut down from time to time. Hewett v. Hewett, 2 Eden, 332; Amb. 508.

Right to Restrain Tenant for Life.]—Trustees to preserve, &c., may bring title to stay waste by tenant for life. Perrot v. Perrot, 3 Atk. 95.

A trustee to whom real property is devised in trust to one for life cannot interfere with the possession of the equitable tenant for life, because he neglects to keep the property in repair; but if the tenant for life should be committing active waste the trustee may interfere, at least if the parties are entitled in remainder are under disability. Powys v. Blagrave, 4 De G. M. & G. 448; 2 Eq. R. 1204; 24 L. J., Ch. 142; 2 W. R. 700. Affirming 1 K. & J. 495; 18 Jur. 462.

Rights as to Ornamental Timber.]—Trustees in whom an estate is vested ought not to cut down ornamental trees alleged to be prejudicial, without first applying to the parties beneficially interested for their assent, or to the court for its authority, and the onus of showing that the trees are prejudicial lies on the trustees. Campbell v. Allgood, 17 Beav. 623.

Trustee in Possession—Wrongful Cutting of Timber—Valuation.]—A., seised in fee of land, demised the premises to trustees, B., C. and D., for five hundred years, in trust to pay debts, &c., for a charity. B., one of the trustees, being in possession, and as a receiver appointed by the court, cuts down 1,000*l.* worth of timber, D., one of the other trustees, consenting; B., the trustee for the charity, or as a receiver, ought not to take advantage of his having possession, without which he could not cut down the timber; yet the timber must be valued according to what it would be worth at the end of the term of five hundred years. Bays v. Bird, 2 P. Wms. 397.

Duration of Trust.]—Testator devised his real estates to trustees in fee, in trust for T. M. for life, with remainder in trust for all the children of T. M., as tenants in common in tail, with remainders over, and ultimately in trust for his own right heirs: and he bequeathed his personal estate to the trustees, in trust for Mary B. for life, with remainder in trust for all her children who should attain twenty-one, with remainder in trust for T. M. and his children in like manner; and he directed that the timber or wood which should be upon his real estates should be from time to time made use of for repairing the houses thereon, or otherwise for the benefit and advantage of his estates; or that the same should be sold, and the proceeds applied in the manner in which his personal estate was thereinbefore directed to be applied: —Held, that the direction or trust respecting the timber and wood on the estates was not perpetual, but ceased on the inheritance vesting in possession in adult persons. Silvester v. Bradley, 13 Sim. 75; 11 L. J., Ch. 365.

Settlement and Will—Power to Cut Timber, in whom Vested.]—By a settlement, real estates were limited to the use of A. for life, with remainder to the use of M. and N. to preserve contingent remainders, remainder to the use of the plaintiff for life, with divers remainders over; and it was declared that it should be lawful for M. and N., at the request and by the direction of the plaintiff or other the tenant for life for the time being, to cut timber upon the estates. A. by will devised real estates to S. and P., their heirs and assigns, to the same or the like uses, upon and for the same or the like trusts, intents, and purposes, and with, under, and subject to the same or the like powers, as the estates comprised in the settlement were subject to:—Held, that the power of cutting timber on the devised estates was vested in the trustees of the settlement, and not in the trustees of the will. Taylor v. Miles, 28 Beav. 411; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1063; 3 L. T. 115.

Trust or Power.]—Direction to trustees to cut trees in aid of testator's real and personal estate: —Held, not a trust, but a mere power, upon the whole of the will. Gower v. Eyre, G. Cooper, 156.

Discretionary Power.]—A testator, by his will, devised all his real estates to trustees for ninety-nine years, without impeachment of waste, and, subject thereto, to the use of his son for life, without impeachment of waste, with remainder to the use of his granddaughter for life, without impeachment of waste, with remainder to her first and other sons in tail, &c. The trustees of the term were, in the event of his personal estate being deficient, to raise money to pay debts and legacies. The will contained an express provision against cutting down any timber on the estates except for necessary repairs, until the granddaughter should attain twenty-one, at which time the trustees were empowered to cut such timber "as they shall think fit," and to sell and pay the proceeds to the granddaughter. The son entered into possession, and died before the granddaughter attained twenty-one. She then became tenant for life. Some time afterwards, and after she attained her majority, the trustees sold the term by auction in order to pay debts. It was stated in one of the conditions of sale that the estate was sold subject to any rights under the provisions in the will:—Held, that the will created no obligatory trust in favour of the granddaughter, but that power to the trustees to cut, &c., was merely discretionary. Watlington v. Waldron, 4 De G. M. & G. 259; 23 L. J., Ch. 713; 18 Jur. 317; 2 W. R. 120.

—— Interference with.]—Upon the equitable construction of the trusts of a term:—Held, that the trustees had a discretionary power to enter on the estates, and cut fit and proper timber, and apply the proceeds in discharge of the sums directed to be raised; and that the court would protect them in the exercise of that power, there being an absence of all mala fides, or of any wanton or unreasonable exercise of their discretion. Kekewich v. Marker, 3 Mac. & G. 311; 21 L. J., Ch. 182; 15 Jur. 687.

An injunction was in this case granted at the suit of the trustees, restraining the tenant for life in possession from cutting the timber on the estates, on the ground that his doing so would interfere with the discretionary power vested in the trustees. Ib.

Jurisdiction.] — Bill filed by trustees for declaration of true construction of settlement, and for injunction restraining equitable tenant for life from preventing the trustees from receiving proceeds of sale of timber felled with his consent, and also from felling timber; and demurrer put into bill:—Held, that, as the interference with the sale was by a cestui que trust and not by a mere stranger, the proceeding was properly the subject of equitable jurisdiction. Briggs v. Oxford (Earl), 5 De G. & Sm. 156; 16 Jur. 53. S. C., 1 De G. M. & G. 363; 21 L. J., Ch. 829; 16 Jur. 558.

I. MERE POSSESSOR OR TRESPASSER.

Possessor.] — Injunction against tenant in possession, not party, to stay waste. Att.-Gen. v. Ancaster (Duke), Dick. 68.

—— Waste by Servant.]—An injunction will be granted, before answer, to stay waste by a person having no interest in the thing wasted, but merely acting as a servant. Orrery (Lord) v. Newton, Ridgw. 252.

—— Title of Plaintiff.]—The court will, at the instance of a person merely alleging a legal title to realty, grant an injunction to restrain persons in possession of an estate from committing malicious and destructive waste. Talbot (Earl) v. Scott, 4 K. & J. 96; 27 L. J., Ch. 273; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 1172; 6 W. R. 269.

Such a case must be clearly made out, and a more general allegation that the tenant has cut down a considerable quantity of timber, some of which was of an ornamental character, and other portions of which were unripe for cutting, is insufficient. Ib.

The authorities as to the jurisdiction of the court to interfere at the instance of parties claiming real property under a legal title, by appointing receiver of the rents and profits, and by injunction to restrain waste, examined. Ib.

They establish these propositions: 1st. In the absence of fraud, and where there is no privity between the parties, the court will not interfere, at the instance of a person so claiming, to grant a receiver against parties in possession. 2ndly. Nor will it interfere at the like instance, to restrain waste, except malicious or destructive waste; e.g. by pulling down the capital messuage, stripping the estate of its timber, or other like acts, which no owner would do, or which would destroy the property before they could be arrested at law. 3rdly. But flagrant acts of this exceptional character would, at the present day, be restrained, and that before judgment at law; and notwithstanding plaintiff was out of possession, and his title denied on oath by the defendant. Ib.

—— Taking Timber.]—Injunction to restrain defendant in possession from stripping an estate of timber, granted upon a motion by a plaintiff claiming under a title at law. Beale v. Cripps, 4 K. & J. 472.

—— Threat to Commit Waste.]—To the bill of a plaintiff, alleging that, under a settlement thereby stated, he was entitled to an estate, of which the defendant was in possession, and had been so for nineteen years, that the plaintiff had not discovered his title until a very recent period, and that he had since brought an ejectment against the defendant to recover the premises, which action stood for trial at the next assizes, and praying an injunction to restrain the defendant from cutting down and selling ornamental and other timber of great value, and thereby occasioning irreparable injury to the estate, which the bill charged that the defendant threatened and intended to do; a demurrer, for want of equity, was allowed. Davenport v. Davenport, 7 Hare, 217; 18 L. J., Ch. 163; 13 Jur. 227.

Trespasser.]—Injunction against a mere trespasser committing waste, not granted. Mogg v. Mogg, Dick. 670.

The tendency of the authorities upon the subject of injury to real property is to break down the old distinction that existed between waste and trespass. Lowndes v. Bettle, 4 N. R. 609; 33 L. J., Ch. 451; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 226; 10 L. T. 55; 12 W. R. 399.

Where a defendant is in possession of an estate, and a plaintiff claiming possession of it seeks to restrain him from cutting down trees and digging sods, and other suchlike acts, the court will not interfere unless the acts complained of amount to such flagrant instances of spoliation as to justify the court in departing from the general rule. Ib.

Where a plaintiff is in possession and the person doing the acts complained of is an utter stranger, not claiming under colour of right, then the tendency of the court is not to grant an injunction, unless there are special circumstances, but to leave the plaintiff to his remedy at law; though, if the acts tend to the destruction of the inheritance, the court will grant an injunction. Ib.

But, where a plaintiff in possession seeks to restrain one who claims by an adverse title, the tendency of the court will be to grant an injunction; at least when the acts committed do or may tend to the destruction of the estate Ib.

Where a person, not being in possession of an estate, claimed it as heir-at-law, and entered upon it, cut down trees, and cut sods, and threatened to repeat his conduct in order to establish his alleged title as against the possessor, who by himself and his ancestors had been in possession of the estate for upwards of eighty years:—Held, upon bill filed by the possessor against the claimant, that, as the acts of the defendant might be injurious to the inheritance, he must be restrained by injunction from committing them. Ib.

The jurisdiction against waste by injunction and account, applied to trespass by exceeding a limited right to enter and take stone from a quarry, being a destruction of the inheritance as in the case of timber, coal, &c., and the distinction between waste and trespass therefore disregarded. Thomas v. Oakley, 18 Ves. 184; 11 R. R. 181.

Injunction to restrain a party claiming by an adverse legal title from committing acts or trespass, alleged to be productive of irreparable waste, refused, under the special circumstances of the case. Haigh v. Jagger, 2 Coll. C. C. 231.

—— Jurisdiction.]—Semble, that, although a man be in full and complete possession of an estate, by a title adverse to another who claims it against him, and there be no privity between the parties, and the party in possession swear that his own title is just and valid, or that the title of his adversary is unjust and invalid, that state of things does not prevent a court of equity from interfering (before judgment at law or decrees in equity) to restrain the party in possession from committing waste upon the inheritance. Ib.

—— Cutting Timber.]—In 1859 H. brought ejectment against S. to recover a piece of woodland. S. set up adverse possession for more than twenty years, and the action was discontinued. H. shortly afterwards took up his residence in a house close to the wood, and frequently walked in the wood, turned cattle into it, and cut the brambles there. In 1873 he cut down a tree in the wood, and threatened to cut more, upon which S. filed his bill for an injunction:—Held, that, after H. had, by bringing ejectment, admitted S. to be in possession of the wood, the acts done by H. must be looked upon only as acts of trespass not putting him into possession, and that S., being in possession, was entitled to an interlocutory injunction to restrain him from cutting timber. Stanford v. Hurlstone, L. R. 9 Ch. 116; 30 L. T. 140; 22 W. R. 422.

—— Possession under Purchase.]—Injunction against cutting timber in the case of trespass, viz. by a person having got possession under articles to purchase. Crockford v. Alexander, 15 Ves. 138; 10 R. R. 44.

—— Collusion with Tenant.]—Injunction against trespasser cutting timber by collusion with tenant, without prejudice to case of a mere trespasser. Courthorpe v. Mapplesden, 10 Ves. 290.

J. ACCOUNT.

Right to.]—The right to an account in equity of the proceeds of timber wrongfully felled in commission of waste is only incident to the right to an injunction. Higginbotham v. Hawkins, 41 L. J., Ch. 828; L. R. 7 Ch. 676; 27 L. T. 328; 20 W. R. 955.

Admission that any timber has been wrongfully cut gives right to account. S. C., Lee v. Alston, 1 Ves. J. 82.

Tenant for life cannot have an account of what was underwood cut wrongfully by a preceding tenant. Pigot v. Bullock, 1 Ves. J. 479; 3 Bro. C. C. 589; 2 R. R. 148.

Where tenant for life, unimpeachable of waste, cuts and sells timber planted for ornament or shelter, the proceeds of that timber belong to the person having then the first vested estate of inheritance; and parties having intervening estates for life have no right to an account of the proceeds of the timber so cut, or to have such proceeds invested upon the same trusts with the lands. Ormond v. Kynnersley, Butler v. Kynnersley, 15 Beav. 10, n.; 7 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 150; 8 id. 67.

A tenant for life, without impeachment of waste, of estates felled and converted to his own use timber growing thereon. The tenant in tail in remainder filed a bill to restrain the cutting of the timber, and for an account of the timber already felled. The tenant for life refused to account on the ground that he was entitled to the timber in right of his interest in the estate:—Held, that the tenant for life must set forth the accounts. Newry (Viscount) v. Kilmorey (Earl), 24 L. T. 15; 19 W. R. 271.

Case in which an account of timber felled during the life of tenant for life, &c., refused on account of the power given to trustees being void, &c. Ferrand v. Wilson, 4 Hare, 344; 15 L. J., Ch. 41; 9 Jur. 860.

Against Tenant for Lives, Renewable.]—Lord Chancellor Manners would not restrain a tenant for lives, with covenant for perpetual renewal, from cutting timber, though it did not appear when planted:—Ordered, that the defendant do keep an account of the produce, and let plaintiffs proceed at law. Conolly v. Ely (Lord), 2 Moll. 515.

For Timber Cut for raising Portions.]—Tenant for life shall not account for value of timber cut down in order that it might be applied towards raising portions. Saville v. Saville, 2 Atk. 463.

Payment of Debts.]—A. devises lands incumbered with debts to B. for life, remainder to C. in fee; B. cuts down timber from the estate; B. decreed to pay two-fifths of the debts and C. the remaining three-fifths, and B. to account for the timber which he had cut, and this to be taken as part of the three-fifths which the remainderman was to pay. James v. Hales, 2 Vern. 267; Pre. Ch. 44.

Liability of Estate of Deceased.]—Equitable waste by tenant for life is a breach of trust, and his assets after his death are answerable. Ormond (Marquis) v. Kynnersley, 5 Madd. 369; 21 R. R. 313.

Where a wrong has been committed, the wrongdoer must suffer from the impossibility of accurately ascertaining the amount of damage. Leeds (Duke) v. Amherst (Earl), 20 Beav. 239.

—— Executors.]—Therefore, where an account of the equitable waste committed by a tenant for life was directed to be taken against his executors, which it was found impossible to take accurately, and the master had arbitrarily charged the executors, his report was supported. Ib.

Account against the representative of tenant for life, without impeachment of waste, of dilapidations permitted by him in and about the mansion-house:—Refused. Lansdowne v. Lansdowne, 1 J. & W. 522; 21 R. R. 227. And see S. C. on demurrer, 1 Madd. 116; 15 R. R. 225.

A bill by a landlord for an account of waste, in cutting timber, by a tenant in his lifetime, lies against the tenant's executors. But where the waste had been committed for fifty years during the tenant's life, and the bill was not filed till a few years after his death, the account was refused as to all the waste in his lifetime, but granted with an injunction as to waste by the executors. Fishmongers' Co. v. Beresford, Beat. 607.

Practice—Right to Issue or Supplemental Suit.]—A plaintiff, having made a case by his bill for an inquiry and account as to equitable waste, and having had the opportunity of supporting that case by evidence, which he omitted to do, was not entitled to an issue as to that equity, nor to raise the question anew in a supplemental or other suit, although the bill as to that equity had not been dismissed by the decree. Newdigate v. Newdigate, 8 Bligh (N.S.) 734; 2 Cl. & F. 601.

Against Lessee — Title of Lessor — Timber Acts.]—The Irish Society in 1618 granted lands to the Fishmongers' Company, reserving the timber. By deed of 1741, the society declared they would not claim trees thereafter planted, but that the company might cut them, so as they should be first applied in the improvement of the estate. In 1747 the company demised to a lessee, excepting the trees, with liberty to themselves to cut them for the improvement of their estates, according to their interest, but not for sale. He cut for sale:—Held, that neither the nature of their title nor the timber Acts were any objection to a suit by the company for an account and injunction. Fishmongers' Co. v. Irish Society, Beat. 607.

When barred by Lapse of Time.]—See LIMITATIONS, STATUTE OF.

K. INJUNCTION, PROCEEDINGS BY.

1. IN GENERAL.

Generally.]—Injunction to stay waste. Pratt v. Brett, 2 Madd. 62.

Injunction against waste by tenant. Kimpton v. Eve, 2 V. & B. 349.

Interpleader.]—Analogy between bill of interpleader and to restrain waste. Martinius v. Helmuth, cited in Stevenson v. Anderson, 2 V. & B. 212, n.

Interlocutory.] — Injunction to stay waste only granted on interlocutory application. Kettle v. Corbin, Dick. 314.

Ex parte.]—Although an injunction ex parte will not be granted to stay waste, yet an interim order will be given, with leave to discharge it, where the object of the application is to preserve property during litigation. Anwyl v. Owens, 22 L. J., Ch. 995; 1 W. R. 205, 207.

Certainty.]—An injunction to stay waste will not be granted where it is doubtful whether the acts complained of are waste; the plaintiff must first try the question of waste or no waste, at law. Lyon v. Wilkinson, 1 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 155.

Triviality—Delay.]—Injunction to stay waste refused, the acts of waste committed being trivial, and the plaintiff's proceedings having been dilatory. Barry v. Barry, 1 J. & W. 651.

Intent to Commit Waste.]—A small degree of waste manifesting an intent to do more is sufficient for the court to act upon. Id. 653.

Delay.]—In cases of waste, it is the business of the reversioner to apply to the court promptly. Ib.

Appearance.]—Injunction against waste not prevented by appearance the day before the motion. Allard v. Jones, 15 Ves. 605.

Notice.]—Defendant having appeared, motion for injunction, in matter of waste not immediate, without notice, refused. Collard v. Cooper, 6 Madd. 190.

—— Before Bill.]—Subpœna will issue, and leave to serve notice of motion for an injunction will be given, before bill filed in cases of bills for injunctions to stay waste. Fosbrook v. Woodcock, 12 Jur. 956.

Discovery.]—In a bill to stay waste, a plaintiff is not entitled to a discovery unless he waives the double penalty. Boteler v. Allington, 3 Atk. 457.

Demurrer.] — Where a bill is filed to stay waste, and a demurrer is put in, the court will hear the demurrer immediately. Const v. Harris, Turn. & R. 514; 24 R. R. 108.

Hearing.]—Suits for an injunction to restrain waste should not be brought to a hearing, where no account is sought, or the account is waived, if an injunction has been obtained, and the right to continue it is not disputed. Dunsany v. Dunne, 15 Ir. Ch. R. 278.

Denial of Waste.]—Defendant denying he had committed waste since filing of bill, no inducement to refuse injunction. Att.-Gen. v. Burrows, Dick. 128.

Conditional.]—Where irreparable waste has been committed, and is about being repeated, the court will, without a positive affidavit of the facts, grant a conditional order for an injunction, and restrain the party in the meantime if there be danger that the waste will be committed before such affidavit can be procured. Beere v. Head, 7 Ir. Eq. R. 60.

Continuing.]—In case of an injunction to stay waste, the court will, on the answer coming in, use its discretion whether it is to be continued till the hearing or not; and, in such cases, affidavits may be read. Potter v. Chapman, Amb. 99; Dick. 146.

Dissolving.]—If a defendant, by his answer, admits that he has committed waste before the filing of the bill, though he swears he has committed none since, yet the court will not dissolve the injunction. Anon., 3 Atk. 485.

Staying Judgment.]—Injunction to stay judgment wrongfully obtained in action of waste. Cavendish v. Cavendish, Cary, 76.

Previous Waste.]—Injunction must be prayed against previous waste. Anon., Lofft, 151.

Where Debt Unpaid.]—Although bill may be dismissed, so far as it seeks to set aside a lease made to the defendant which permitted waste, and which is a good lease as against the lessor, yet it is within the province of the court, while a sum due to the plaintiffs remains unpaid, to prevent any waste which may tend to injure their security. Turkington v. Kearman, Ll. & G. temp. Sugd. 35.

In Favour of Unborn Child.]—The court will grant an injunction to stay waste in favour of an infant in ventre sa mère. Wallis v. Hodson, 2 Atk. 117.

At Suit of Creditor.]—The court will not grant an injunction to stay waste at the instance of a judgment creditor in a suit by him against the heir and administrator of the debtor. Leake v. Beckett, 1 Y. & J. 339.

By Person Indemnified.]—The court will not interfere to restrain the waste of a sub-tenant at the instance of his immediate landlord, if it appear that the latter has obtained an indemnity against the claims of the head landlord. Keogh v. Collins, Hay & J. 805.

During Relation of Landlord and Tenant.]—Where the relation of landlord and tenant existed between the parties, the court has sometimes interfered by injunction to restrain waste, though the locus in quo being the property of the landlord was not any part of the demised premises; but, where such relation does not exist, the court will not interfere. Therefore, when waste on the demised premises was commenced during the tenancy, and continued after the tenancy had determined by persons claiming under the late tenant, the court, after the determination of the tenancy, refused to grant injunction. Wrixon v. Condran, 1 Ir. Eq. R. 380.

Lunacy.]—Injunction to restrain waste issued without bill filed, in a lunacy matter, on application of the receiver. Chinnerys, In re, 6 Ir. Eq. R. 469; 1 Jo. & Lat. 90.

Against Lessee, Renewable.]—Injunction in the nature of a writ of estrepement of waste does not lie against a tenant holding under a lease containing a covenant for perpetual renewal. Calvert v. Gason, 2 Sch. & Lef. 561.

Against Purchaser.]—Injunction may be obtained upon motion to restrain purchaser under decree, not a party to cause, who has not paid purchase-money, from committing waste on property purchased. Casamajor v. Strode, 1 Sim. & S. 381.

Against Tenant not Party.]—Injunction to stay tenant in possession, not a party, from committing waste. Att.-Gen. v. Ancaster (Duke), Dick. 68.

Remainderman not Joined.]—Injunction to stay waste in cutting trees granted on bill by party who was only tenant for life, and had no right to trees, and though party entitled to inheritance was not joined. Dayrell v. Champness, 1 Eq. Abr. 400.

Removal of Timber.]—Order made to prevent removal of timber wrongfully cut. Anon., 1 Ves. J. 93.

Proviso against Mowing.]—On a devise of a park to tenants for life, with successive remainders in tail, containing a proviso against mowing it, but no devise over in case of breach of the restriction:—Held, to be one which the court would enforce by injunction. Blagrave v. Blagrave, 1 De G. & Sm. 252.

Proceedings by Receiver.]—If waste has been committed, and the case is pressing, the receiver may file a bill for an injunction without waiting for an order for the purpose; but, if time will permit, he should first apply for a reference to inquire what proceedings he ought to take. Nangle v. Fingall (Lord), 1 Hog. 142.

A bill filed by a receiver for an injunction against committing waste should contain a prayer for relief, if the defendant is solvent. Cooke v. Cooke, 1 Hog. 182.

—— Without Bill.]—The court will, upon motion by the receiver, grant a conditional order to restrain tenants under the court from committing waste without a bill being filed for the purpose. Cronin v. M'Carthy, Fl. & K. 49.

—— Public Works.]—The court will not grant an injunction upon the application of a receiver, to restrain a contractor under the 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 116, s. 162 (Grand Jury Act), from quarrying stones, for the purposes of public works, on the lands, over which the receiver is appointed. O'Kelly v. Gregg, Jon. & C. 76.

Reference.]—Where injunction to stay waste has been granted on petition, a reference was made to inquire what timber might be cut with advantage, &c. Att.-Gen. v. Marlborough (Duke), 5 Madd. 280; 18 R. R. 273.

Parties—Security.]—Where a tenant for life, without impeachment of waste, had sold a quantity of timber trees, which the court afterwards restrained him from felling, on the supposition that it would be equitable waste, the court held that the purchasers of the timber were not necessary parties to the injunction suit, but required the plaintiff to give security to the defendant, not only for the value of all the trees which the defendant should be prevented from cutting by the injunction, but also for any loss or damage the defendant might incur or sustain by reason of his being prevented from completing the sale. Marker v. Marker, 9 Hare, 1; 20 L. J., Ch. 246; 15 Jur. 663.

2. WHERE TITLE DOUBTFUL OR DISPUTED.

Generally.]—Injunction against waste not granted without positive evidence of title. Davies v. Lee, 6 Ves. 784.

Injunction for waste denied, plaintiff's right being doubtful. Field v. Jackson, Dick. 599.

Where the title to land is in dispute, the court of exchequer will not grant an injunction to restrain an act of trespass, but only to prevent an irreparable injury. The court therefore refused an injunction to restrain the owner in fee of a piece of land claimed by the crown, but denied by the owner to be part of a royal forest, from cutting down holly trees and underwood therein in the manner in which they had been ordinarily cut down for twenty years previously. Att.-Gen. v. Hallett, 16 M. & W. 569; 16 L. J., Ex. 131.

A possessory bill was filed to restrain the defendant from cutting turf for sale, on the allegation that he was tenant to the plaintiff of land adjoining the bog, with a limited permission to cut turf for use in the bog, which plaintiff claimed as his own. On the affidavits showing cause the tenantry of the land was admitted, and it appeared that the predecessors had long claimed the disputed right over the bog, the plaintiff's title to which was vaguely stated. In 1807 an injunction had been obtained in a similar suit, restraining the tenant from cutting turf at all:—Held, that an injunction could not be obtained in this suit, as, if the tenant was a mere trespasser, it was not sustainable to establish a disputed right, there being no triennial possession, and the allegation of a limited permission could not be strengthened by the order of 1807, which set up a different claim. Congleton v. Mitchell, 12 Ir. Eq. R. 34.

Want of Equity.]—The plaintiff claimed, under a settlement, an estate in the possession of the defendant for nineteen years, stating that he had only discovered his title very recently, and had brought an ejectment, and asking an injunction to restrain the defendant from cutting down ornamental timber; a demurrer, for want of equity, allowed. Davenport v. Davenport, 7 Hare, 217.

Writ of Estrepement.]—The court will not entertain a motion for an injunction, in the nature of a writ of estrepement, to restrain waste, except where the title is clear. Lowe v. Lucey, 1 Ir. Eq. R. 93.

Between Devisee and Heir.] — Injunction against cutting timber refused where the title was disputed as between the devisee and heir-at-law. Smith v. Collyer, 8 Ves. 89.

Injunction against felling timber for devisee against heir-at-law in possession, admitting the waste, but disputing the will, refused. Beatty v. Beatty, 2 Moll. 541.

Injunction against cutting timber, granted, although the will was not established and the title disputed as between the devisee and heir-at-law. Fingal (Earl) v. Blake. 2 Moll. 50.

Injunction to stay waste at the suit of the devisee in trust against heir-at-law in possession, who disputed the will, refused, and order affirmed on appeal by Lord Chancellor Manners, considering the law of the court as settled in cases between heir-at-law and devisee, not to grant an injunction against defendant, who impeaches plaintiff's title. The order reversed on re-hearing by Lord Chancellor Hart. S. C., id. 542.

Defendant claiming Adversely.]—Injunction to stay waste not granted against defendant in possession claiming by an adverse title. Pillsworth v. Hopton, 6 Ves. 51.

Defendant Improperly in Possession.]—Injunction granted to stay waste against defendant, who insists on his own title, but admits he received possession from plaintiff's tenant without plaintiff's knowledge, in breach of tenant's duty. Norway v. Rowe, 19 Ves. 154; 12 R. R. 157.

Defendant Liable to be Dispossessed.]—The court will not interfere, by way of injunction, to stay waste where the defendant may be turned immediately out of possession. Mortimer v. Cottrell, 2 Cox, 205.

Defendant having Deficient Interest.]—Where the plaintiff in the cause had obtained an order for a receiver, and was proceeding to cut timber upon the estates before the receiver had been appointed, the court refused to grant an injunction upon the application of the defendant, it appearing that the latter who was the agent of the owner of the estates (also a defendant) had no interest in such estates and no authority from his principal to make the application. Hunter v. Nocknlds, 15 L. J., Ch. 320; 10 Jur. 771.

3. AFFIDAVIT IN SUPPORT.

Setting out Title.]—In an order to obtain an injunction to stay waste, the affidavit must set out a particular title. Whitelegg v. Whitelegg, 1 Bro. C. C. 57.

Certainty.]—Where an affidavit was made in order to obtain an injunction to restrain waste, the court thought the affidavit certain enough by reason of the reference it had to the bill. Bradly v. Stratchy, Barnard. 399.

Extent.]—In the case of waste it is not sufficient to swear to information of the intention. The affidavit must go either to an act or threat of waste. Hunnay v. M'Entire, 11 Ves. 54.

Ex parte.]—Ex parte application for special injunction to stay waste should be promptly after knowtedge of such waste; and affidavit in support should state when party came first to the knowledge of such waste. Culvert v. Grey, before vice-chancellor 22nd February, 1850.

Admissibility.]—A plaintiff in a bill for an injunction to stay waste cannot read a supplemental affidavit in support of a conditional order for the injunction. The proceedings under such a bill are peculiar to Ireland. Joley v. Stockley, 1 Hog. 247.

Cutting Turf.] — To obtain an injunction against a tenant to stay waste in cutting turf, the affidavit must state that the turf was cut for the purpose of sale, the tenant being entitled to fire bote. De Salis v. Crossan, 1 Ball & B. 188.

Breaking up Meadow.]—Affidavit verifying bill for an injunction to restrain waste by breaking up ancient meadow should state deponent's knowledge of the land for a considerable period (semble, twenty years), and that it had not been in tillage during that time. Leave given to file affidavit to that effect. Creagh v. Carmichael, 7 Ir. Eq. R. 334.

4. COSTS.

Right to.]—If a suit for an injunction to restrain waste is forced to a hearing by the conduct of the respondent, the petitioner, if successful, will be entitled to his costs of suit. Dunsany v. Dunne, 15 Ir. Ch. R. 278.

Costs of proceedings for an injunction in the nature of a writ of estrepement, and which does not pray an account or answer, are seldom if ever given to the landlord. Chatterton v. White, 1 Ir. Eq. R. 200.

A. NAVIGABLE RIVERS.

1. Rights and Incidents.

a. Generally.

Navigable River, what is.]—A river or a creek into which the tide flows is not therefore necessarily a public navigation. Rex v. Montague, 6 D. & R. 616 ; 4 B. & C. 589 ; 4 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 21 ; 28 R. R. 420.

The flux and reflux of the tides is primâ facie evidence of a navigable river. Miles v. Rose, 1 Marsh. 313 ; 5 Taunt. 705 ; 15 R. R. 623. S. P., Murphy v. Ryan, Ir. R. 2 C. L. 143 ; 16 W. R. 678.

But not absolutely inconsistent with an exclusive right. Ib.

On a question whether a creek is a public navigable river or not, instances of persons going up it for the purpose of cutting reeds, and on parties of pleasure, without the consent of the person claiming exclusive property in the creek, are evidence sufficient for the jury to presume it to be a public river. Ib.

—— When Affected by High Tides.]—An information was laid against the appellant for unlawfully fishing in a river wherein the respondents had a private right of fishery. It was proved that the river was navigable, and that at the place where the appellant fished the water was not salt, and that in ordinary tides it was unaffected by any tidal influence, but that upon the occasion of very high tides the rising of the salt water in the lower part of the river dammed back the fresh water, and caused it upon those occasions to rise and fall with the flow and ebb of the tide. The appellant contended that the river being navigable and tidal at the place in question, there was a presumption that the public had a right to fish there, and that the jurisdiction of the justices was therefore ousted by a reasonable claim of right :—Held, that the river at the place in question could not be considered as tidal within the meaning of the rule of law which gives the public a right to fish in navigable tidal rivers, and therefore there was no claim of title set up sufficient to oust the justices' jurisdiction. Reece v. Miller, 51 L. J., M. C. 64 ; 8 Q. B. D. 626.

Nature of.]—A navigable river is a public highway navigable by all her majesty's subjects in a reasonable manner and for a reasonable purpose. Original Hartlepool Collieries Co. v. Gibb, 46 L. J., Ch. 311 ; 5 Ch. D. 713 ; 36 L. T. 433.

A navigable river is a public highway, and all persons have a right to come there in ships, and to unload, moor, and stay there as long as they please ; but if they abuse that right, so as to work a private injury (as to interrupt the enjoyment of a private fishery), they are liable to an action. Anon., 1 Camp. 517, n.

Extinction of.]—A public right of navigation on a river or creek may be extinguished either by legal means, as an act of parliament, a writ of ad quod damnum, or an order of commissioners of rivers, or by natural causes, as the retreat of the sea, or a deposit of silt and mud. Rex v. Montague, supra.

Where a public road obstructing a creek which is unnavigable, has existed beyond living memory, the law will presume that the public right of navigation has been destroyed by some one of the means above mentioned. Ib.

Riparian Proprietors.]—The owner of the land abutting on a tidal navigable river has, jure naturæ, a right of access to and from the stream wholly distinct from the right of navigation which he enjoys in common with the rest of the public. Lyon v. Fishmongers' Co., 46 L. J., Ch. 68; 1 App. Cas. 662; 35 L. T. 569; 25 W. R. 165—H. L. (E.)

There is no distinction between the position of a riparian owner of land abutting on a tidal and that of an owner of land abutting on a non-tidal stream, as far as regards right of access from the stream to his own land, and vice versâ. Ib.

Such right of access is a private right distinct from the right of navigating the stream, which is common to the riparian owner and the rest of the public, and it is not to be interfered with by a licence to embank, under s. 53 of the Thames Conservancy Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. cxlvii.), but is protected by s. 179 of that act. Ib.

There is no distinction in principle between riparian rights on the banks of navigable or tidal, and on those of non-navigable rivers. In the former case, however, there must be no interference with the public right of navigation; and in order to give rise to riparian rights the land must be in actual daily contact with the stream, laterally or vertically. Lyon v. Fishmongers' Co. (1 App. Cas. 662) followed and held to be applicable to every country in which the same general law of riparian rights prevails, unless excluded by some positive rule or binding authority of the lex loci. North Shore Ry. v. Pion, 59 L. J., P. C. 25; 14 App. Cas. 612; 61 L. T. 525—P. C.

In a public navigable river, twenty years' possession of the water at a given level is not conclusive as to the right. Vooght v. Winch, 2 B. & Ald. 662; 21 R. R. 446.

The rights of a riparian proprietor against adjoining or opposite riparian proprietors are not greater in respect of a tidal than in respect of a non-tidal river. Att.-Gen. v. Lonsdale (Earl), 38 L. J., Ch. 335; L. R. 7 Eq. 377; 20 L. T. 64; 17 W. R. 219.

The right to the soil of a navigable river is not by presumption of law in the owners of the adjoining lands. Rex v. Smith, 2 Dougl. 411.

A party claimed a right to use a navigation, in respect of his occupation of a close abutting on the stream. This close formed a part of the King's Head Inn, until five years before the action was brought, when it was detached, and all the acts of the user of the navigation, which were proved, were exercised by the occupiers of the King's Head Inn, before the property was divided:—Held, that there was no evidence to support the right to a verdict, as on such evidence a grant could only be presumed to the occupiers of the inn. Bowen v. Hill, 2 Scott, 535; 2 Bing. (N.C.) 339; 1 Hodges, 334; 5 L. J., C. P. 77.

An owner of land at the side of a public navigable river has no right to erect on the bed of the river, for the benefit of his own trade, any structure, whether any actual obstruction to the navigation of the river will or will not be thereby occasioned; and any benefit to his own trade is too remote to be held for the advantage of the public generally, and so to justify the erection. Att.-Gen. v. Terry, L. R. 9 Ch. 423; 30 L. T. 215; 29 W. R. 395.

A riparian proprietor may have a private right of access to a navigable river distinct from his right as a member of the general public. Att-Gen. v. Thames Conservators, 1 N. R. 121; 1 Hem. & M. 1; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 1203; 8 L. T. 9; 11 W. R. 163.

—— Incidental Rights—Dredging Foreshore.]—The Clyde Navigation Trustees, being empowered by ss. 76 and 84 of 21 & 22 Vict. c. 149, to dredge the bed of the River Clyde to a depth of seventeen feet, cannot be interdicted from dredging ground which has been declared the property of the riparian owner, subject to any right which the public may have over it, and subject also to any rights conferred on the trustees by their acts of parliament:—So held, affirming the decision of the court below, but without prejudice to the question of their liability to subsequent compensation for damage. Blantyre (Lord) v. Clyde Navigation Trustees, 6 App. Cas. 273—H. L. (Sc.)

—— Sale of Water by—Preferable Right of Purchaser.]—A vendor by deed sold a piece of land on the banks of a navigable river, "together with a quantity of water-power equivalent to fifty horse-power, to be taken from the water-power and dam of the said vendors on the North River, and now in use to run their manufacture," &c., with a "promise of warranty against all trouble and hindrances generally whatsoever," except during such times as the dam across the river should be out of order, and should be required for the purpose of putting it into repair. It was further agreed that the purchaser should have the right to require another fifty horse-power upon stated terms, which right he subsequently exercised:—Held, that under the deed the purchasers had a right to take water from the reservoir to the extent of 100 horse-power in priority to the vendor or any purchaser from him subsequently to the deed of sale, and that the vendor or his assignees could not deprive the purchasers of the right by claiming a right to the water as members of the public:—Held, also, that the fact that a river is navigable cannot prevent a riparian owner from acquiring an interest in its water-power, which he can sell along with and as appurtenant to a parcel of his land. Hamelin v. Bannerman, 64 L. J., P. C. 66; [1895] A. C. 237; 11 R. 368; 72 L. T. 128; 43 W. R. 639; 60 J. P. 22—P. C.

—— Liability to Fence Land.]—By the Glasgow Police Act, 1886, s. 384, the master of works may by notice "require any proprietor or occupier of a land or heritage" within the city "to fence the same, or repair any chimney-stalk or flue, or chimney-head or can, or any rhone, sign-board, or other things connected with or appertaining to any building thereon, which appears to be dangerous":—Held, affirming the decision of the court below, that the statute gave no power to the master of works in Glasgow to compel a riparian proprietor to fence his land off from a tidal and navigable river, although a right-of-way gained by the public along the river bank, and fenced on the land side, was alleged to be insecure and dangerous, on account of the proximity of the river. Lang v. Kerr, 3 App. Cas. 529—H. L. (Sc.)

Rights of Owner of Fishery.]—The owner of a several fishery in a public navigable river is, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, presumed to be the owner of the bed of the river. Hindson v. Ashby, 65 L. J., Ch. 515; [1896] 2 Ch. 1; 74 L. T. 327; 45 W. R. 252; 60 J. P. 484—C. A.

Effect of Accretions.]—The mutual rights of the owner of the bed of a river by virtue of a several fishery and the riparian proprietors are not affected by accretions to the bed or by the lowering of the level of the water, so long as the accretions or the soil from which the river has receded still remain part of the bed of the river. Whether, as between the owner of the bed of the river and a riparian proprietor, the doctrine of accretion applies where the line of demarcation between the land of the riparian proprietor and the river is in existence and clearly defined, quære. Ib.

Rights of Crown.]—There is no authority to show that the crown is of common right entitled to land covered by water, where the water is not running water forming a river, but still water forming a lake. Bristow v. Cormican, 3 App. Cas. 641—H. L.

A navigable river is a public highway for vessels, at all times and states of the tide, and the right to pass and repass is not destroyed or abridged by the circumstance that, at particular states of the tide, a vessel cannot pass along without grounding, and thereby injuring oyster-beds therein. Colchester Corporation v. Brooke, 7 Q. B. 339; 15 L. J., Q. B. 59; 9 Jur. 1090.

The rights of the crown are subject to this public right of passage, and the crown, therefore, cannot, irrespectively of any ownership in the adjoining lands, make a grant inconsistent with it. Ib.

The right of the public to navigate a public river is paramount to any right of property in the crown, which never had the power to grant a weir, so as to obstruct the public navigation; and if a weir, which was legally granted in such a river, caused obstruction at any subsequent time, it became a nuisance. Williams v. Wilcox, 3 N. & P. 606; 8 A. & E. 314; 1 W. W. & H. 477; 7 L. J., Q. B. 229.

The bed of all navigable rivers where the tide flows and reflows, and of all estuaries or arms of the sea, is vested in the crown, but subject to the right of navigation which belongs by law to the subjects of the realm, and of which the right to anchor forms a part; and every grant made by the crown of the bed or soil of an estuary or a navigable river must be subject to such public right of navigation. Gann v. Free Fishers of Whitstable Co., 11 H. L. Cas. 192; 5 N. R. 432; 35 L. J., C. P. 29; 12 L. T. 150; 13 W. R. 589.

The ownership of the soil of navigable rivers and estuaries which is vested in the crown, is, and always has been. No grant of the bed of a river or estuary could, even before Magna Charta, have been made by the crown, except subject to the public right of navigation. A claim to levy toll, by virtue of the ownership of the soil of an estuary, from ships casting anchor on such soil, where no special consideration is offered in return for such toll, is bad, and cannot be supported by any length of enjoyment. Ib.

Rights of Conservators.]—An act, authorising persons to repair and cleanse a navigable river, does not authorise them make a passage to a new wharf on such river. Partheriche v. Mason, 2 Chit. 658.

Rights of Trustees.]—Semble, that the trustees of a river which has been made navigable by act of parliament, are not to be considered as occupiers of the soil of that river, unless it has been specially vested in them by that act. Rex v. Trustees of the River Weaver, 7 B. & C. 70; 5 L. J. (o.s.) M. C. 102.

Stealing Oysters.—In support of an indictment for stealing oysters in a tidal river, it is sufficient to prove ownership by oral evidence, as, that the prosecutor and his father, for forty-five years since 1815, had exercised the exclusive right of oyster fishing in the locus in quo; and that in 1846 an action had been brought to try the right, and a verdict been given in favour of the prosecutor. Reg. v. Downing, 23 L. T. 398; 11 Cox, C. C. 580.

"Vessels usually Navigating thereon."]—Under the Trent Navigation Act of 1858, it is provided that the commissioners thereunder shall maintain the navigation of the river so as to enable vessels usually navigating thereon to carry a burthen of forty tons at the least, and shall maintain the hauling-paths and ways by the side of the river for hauling, towing or drawing by men or with horses, vessels using the navigation:—Held, that, although previous to the passing of the act steam tugs were not in use upon the river, yet that the term "vessels" includes steamers, and the use of them upon the Trent is lawful. Martin v. Leavers, 46 J. P. 807.

b. The Thames.

Conservators—Election of.]—Corporate bodies entitled to vote at elections for Thames conservators cannot, under s. 22 of the Thames Conservancy Act, 1894, give proxies to electors other than their own officers or shareholders. The return of the persons elected, made by the returning officer under s. 23 of the Thames Conservancy Act, 1894, is final and conclusive, and cannot be questioned by quo warranto, as such returning officer acts judicially in the matter. Section 25 of the same act cures such an error or irregularity as the receiving and counting of invalid proxies. Reg. v. Samuel, 64 L. J., Q. B. 515; [1895] 1 Q. B. 815; 15 R. 380; 72 L. T. 572; 7 Asp. M. C. 595; 59 J. P. 375.

Wharfs.]—There is a custom on the Thames which authorises barges to be moored at low water for one tide at the piles in front of the wharfs; but in places where there are no piles, the custom does not extend to mooring at the wharf, unless through distress. Wyatt v. Thompson, 1 Esp. 252.

The corporation of London, being conservators of the river Thames, and owners of the soil between high and low water mark, cannot authorise a lessee to erect a wharf thereon, which produces inconvenience to the public in the use of the river for the purposes of navigation. Rex v. Grosvenor (Lord), 2 Stark. 511; 20 R. R. 732. And see Rex v. Hollis, 2 Stark. 536.

Erection of Piers or Works.]—The Thames Conservancy Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. cxlvii.), authorises the conservators of the Thames to grant to the owner of any land fronting the river a licence to make any pier or other work immediately in front of his land, and into the body of the river, upon payment of such reasonable consideration as directed by the act, and subject to such conditions as the conservators shall think fit to impose, and by a saving clause none of the powers of the act are to abridge any right, claim or privilege to which any owner of lands on the banks of the river is entitled:—Held, that the conservators had power under the act to license the erection of a platform interfering with the navigation of the river. Kearns v. Cordwainers' Co., 6 C. B. (N.S.) 388; 28 L. J., C. P. 285; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1216.

Under the same act, the conservators of the Thames were empowered to erect piers at any convenient place, of such form and construction as they should deem advantageous to the public, and causing the least obstruction to the navigation. The plans were to be first approved by the admiralty:—Held, that a court of equity had no jurisdiction to interfere by injunction at the suit of the attorney-general, on the ground of the alleged inconvenience of proposed piers; or, at most, that it could only interfere where it was shown that the piers would be entirely useless. Att.-Gen. v. Thames Conservators, 1 Hem. & M. 1; 1 N. R. 121; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 1203; 8 L. T. 9; 11 W. R. 163.

The statute directed that, whenever the conservators should remove or obstruct the free use and enjoyment of any public stairs or landing-places marked by the watermen's company, they should erect equally convenient stairs or landing-places in substitution for them:—Held, that the substitution of new stairs or landing-places was not a condition precedent to the removal or disturbance, and that where the conservators had prepared plans for piers which would interfere with such old stairs without showing any adequate provision in substitution for them, a court of equity would not assume that the duty would be neglected, and would not interfere at the suit of the attorney-general to restrain the works until proper substitutes should be provided for the old stairs. Ib.

The conservators having a right to obstruct the stairs in the first place, the remedy, if afterwards they do not erect others equally convenient, is by mandamus. Ib.

The court, distinguishing the right of access to a public right of way itself, will restrain the conservators from depriving any person having a right of access to the river from his own land, of such access. Ib.

But if such access is merely hindered by the impediment which the conservators' works cause to all persons navigating the river, the court will not interfere, although the land-owners may suffer substantial damage thereby. Ib.

The city of London by licence granted a company permission to form a floating pier on the Thames, such pier to remain during pleasure, and to take tolls on all passengers landed at the pier. Under the powers conferred upon them by the Thames Embankment Act, 1862, the board of works took the floating pier from the company, and agreed to pay them a certain sum and to construct a new landing-stage in lieu of the old pier, and to appropriate it in perpetuity to the benefit of the company. The Thames Embankment Act, 1868, purported to give validity to this agreement. On a bill by the conservators of the Thames (in whom all the estate of the city of London in the bed, soil, and shores of the river had become vested by the Thames Conservancy Act, 1857) to restrain the company from continuing in possession of the landing-stage constructed in lieu of the old pier:—Held, that the company was entitled to the use of the pier only on sufferance, and at the pleasure of the conservators of the Thames; that the board of works had no power to convert the licence at pleasure into an irrevocable licence; and that the act which purported to give a validity to the agreement between the company and the board of works did not affect the rights of the conservators of the Thames. Thames Conservators v. S. E. Ry., 24 L. T. 246.

Held, also, that their proper remedy was by bill in equity, and not by ejectment. Ib.

Where the metropolitan board of works carried a pipe connected with a sewer some distance into the Thames, and protected the mouth of it by driving piles into the bed of the river, which piles damaged a vessel:—Held, that as the board had not obtained the approval of the board of admiralty of the works as required by 21 & 22 Vict. c. 104, s. 27, they were liable in an action for obstructing the free navigation of the river, and that although the act gave them power to erect works on the soil or bed of the river Thames, yet nevertheless it was a condition precedent to the erection of such works that they should obtain the approval of the board of admiralty, and that the approval of the conservators of the Thames was not sufficient. Brownlow v. Metropolitan Board of Works, 13 C. B. (N.S.) 768; 31 L. J., C. P. 140; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 891; 6 L. T. 187; 10 W. R. 384. Affirmed 16 C. B. (N.S.) 546; 33 L. J., C. P. 233; 12 W. R. 871—Ex. Ch.

Compensation for Taking Wharf or Pier.]—A wharf owner, who has not any special easement or privilege over the bed or soil of the river, but only the common right of passage to his property, has neither an easement over nor a right in land, within the enlarged definition given to that word by s. 4 of the Thames Embankment Act of 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 93). Macey v. Metropolitan Board of Works, 3 N. R. 669; 33 L. J., Ch. 377; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 333; 10 L. T. 66; 12 W. R. 619.

A person so situated, therefore, whose land is not taken, but whose right of passage is injuriously affected by the works authorised by the 25 & 26 Vict. c. 93, has no right to compensation before those works are proceeded with; but, having regard to the provisions of that act, and of the various acts incorporated therewith, his right to compensation arises when his damage is completed, and his remedy is under s. 68 of the Lands Clauses Act, or by arbitration alone. Ib.

Where damage is occasioned to a party whose premises are not entered upon, but are injuriously affected by the exercise of the powers given by the 25 & 26 Vict. c. 93, and for which damage compensation is required to be made, the payment, ascertaining, or depositing of the amount of compensation is not a condition precedent to the commencement of the works which occasion the damage. Ib.

The Temple pier, erected under a licence from the conservators of the Thames, determinable by seven days' notice, was purchased and managed by a company. The metropolitan board of works, under the provisions of the Thames Embankment Act of 1862 (which incorporates the Lands Clauses Act of 1845, with the additional provision that the word "lands" shall include easements and interests in land, and which gives express power to alter and divert piers), altered and diverted the pier temporarily, to enable them to prosecute the embankment works, yet not so as to interrupt the use thereof; and proposed eventually to build, as nearly as might be at the same spot, a new pier in the place of the old one. The conservators refused to grant any licence to the company with respect to the proposed new pier:—Held, that the metropolitan board were not taking or permanently using any land or easement belonging to the company, and consequently were not bound to comply with the terms of s. 84 of the Lands Clauses Act before dealing with the pier in the manner mentioned. Temple Pier Co. v. Metropolitan Board of Works, 34 L. J., Ch. 262; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 337; 12 L. T. 369; 13 W. R. 535.

Rights of Riparian Proprietors.]—By the Thames Conservancy Act (20 & 21 Vict. c. cxlvii.), s. 53, the conservators appointed under that act have a power to grant a licence to a riparian proprietor to make an embankment in front of his own land abutting on the river; but though such licence might be the owner's justification so far as the public right of navigation was concerned, it would not authorise a licensee, being a riparian owner, to embank in front of his own land so as injuriously to affect the land of another riparian owner. Lyon v. Fishmongers' Co., 46 L. J., Ch. 68; 1 App. Cas. 662; 35 L. T. 569; 25 W. R. 165.

The power granted to the conservators under 20 & 21 Vict. c. cxlvii. s. 53, is qualified and restricted by the provisions of s. 179. Ib.

The owners of lands adjoining the banks of the river have no right to complain of works erected under the powers of the Thames Conservancy Act, 1857, if such erection does not deprive them of access to their land by the river side, but only interferes with the right which they have in common with the rest of the public to the unrestricted navigation of the river. Kearns v. Cordwainers' Co., supra, col. 1885.

Water Bailiffs.]—As to the right of the conservators of the Thames to appoint, see Turnidge v. Shaw, 3 El. & El. 588; 30 L. J., M. C. 113; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 755; 3 L. T. 147; 9 W. R. 381.

Watermen and Lightermen—Employment of.]—Under 22 & 23 Vict. c. cxxxiii. s. 54, a penalty is imposed upon any person not being a freeman, licensed in pursuance of the act, or an apprentice to a freeman or to the widow of a freeman, who shall at any time act as a waterman or lighterman, or ply or navigate any wherry, passenger boat, lighter vessel, or other craft upon the river Thames, from or to any place or places within the limits of the act, for hire or gain. The limits of the act are defined to be from Teddington Lock to Lower Hope Point:—Held, that a person not being a licensed freeman, or an apprentice to a freeman or the widow of a freeman, who navigates a barge for hire, within the limits of the act, is liable to the penalty, although such barge has started upon its voyage from a place outside the limits, and might, under 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. lxxv., have been navigated as a western barge by such a person without incurring any penalty. Doick v. Phelps, 30 L. J., M. C. 2; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1371; 3 L. T. 296; 9 W. R. 70.

A by-law imposed a penalty upon any freeman who should "set at work to row or in any manner navigate any lighter, barge, boat, or other craft upon the river Thames, within the limit of the act, any other person not being a freeman of the company." A freeman who had employed a non-freeman for hire to assist in working a barge within the limits was convicted of an offence against the by-law:—Held, that the by-law was good, as it applied only to the employment of persons for the ordinary rowing and navigation of barges or other craft, and was consistent with the provisions and directions of the act, and therefore the conviction was valid. Edmonds v. Watermen's Co., 3 C. L. R. 902; 24 L. J., M. C. 124; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 727; 3 W. R. 408.

The 22 & 23 Vict. c. cxxxiii. s. 54, does not apply to a person (not being a freeman) conveying for his own purposes his servants or workpeople, and not making any charge for such conveyance. Tadhunter v. Buckley, 7 L. T. 273.

A by-law, made under ss. 57 and 106 of the Watermen's Act, 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. lxxv., was made applicable to "every freeman of the company using and working for hire any wherry, boat, &c., for carrying passengers within the limits of the act":—Held, that this did not apply to a freeman working a boat on a private ferry as the servant of the lessee of the ferry. Reg. v. Giles, 5 W. R. 575.

Quære, whether under the act by-laws may be made affecting private ferries. Ib.

—— Refusing to Admit Member.]—The watermen and apprentices, being freemen of the Watermen's Company, and plying at any stairs, and having formed themselves into a turnway club, under the by-laws of the company, have no power to make regulations except such as are consistent with the act and by-laws, and therefore they have no power to refuse to accept as a member one who, having complied with the act and by-laws, and having tendered the requisite sum to the steward of the club, refuses to belong to an old-established burial club to which the watermen and apprentices plying at such stairs belong. Reg. v. Atkins, 4 W. R. 83.

—— Compliance with Rules—Liability for Injuries.]—Where a barge owner employed a freeman and an apprentice of a freeman to navigate a barge from the Pool to Lambeth and back, and owing to their misconduct the barge injured another barge:—Held, that the owner was liable, and that he was not protected by the Watermen's Act restraining him in the selection of his servants. Martin v. Temperley, 4 Q. B. 298; 3 G. & D. 497; 12 L. J., Q. B. 129; 7 Jur. 150.

—— Regulation of Traffic.]—The 22 & 23 Vict. c. cxxxiii., "An act for the better regulation of the barge owners and others connected with the navigation of the River Thames between Teddington Lock and Lower Hope Point," by s. lxvi. enacts that no barge or other like craft for the carrying of goods shall be "worked or navigated" within the limits of the act, unless there be "in charge of such craft" a lighterman licensed or apprentice qualified as therein mentioned. Six barges fastened together in pairs were towed by a steam-tug on the river within the limits of the act. Four men were in charge, but no one was on board either of the last two barges:—Held, that the two barges were "worked or navigated" in contravention of the act, which required a qualified person to be on board each barge to manage it in case of separation or accident. Elmore v. Hunter, 47 L. J., M. C. 8; 3 C. P. D. 116; 38 L. T. 179.

The Isle of Dogs Ferry Society was the owner of an ancient ferry, called Potter's Ferry, which was described in their title deeds as between the Isle of Dogs and Greenwich. Down to 1850, the use of the ferry appeared to have been exercised between an ancient landing-place in the Isle of Dogs and Garden Stairs opposite, and occasionally one or two other landing-places at Greenwich. Since 1850, a dock and wharf and public roads were constructed by C., in the Isle of Dogs, about 800 yards lower down the river than the ancient landing-place. The society leased their right of ferry to D., who employed M., a freeman, to carry passengers for hire from C.'s dock and wharf to a point opposite at Greenwich, and not having a licence, as required by 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. lxxv. s. 38, he was convicted in a penalty under its provisions:—Held, first, that s. 99 was not limited by s. 101, and extended to except boats plying in the exercise of a right of ferry from the operation of the act; but, secondly, that the right did not extend to the landing-place at C.'s dock and wharf, and therefore that s. 99 did not apply, and M. was properly convicted. Reg. v. Matthews, 5 El. & Bl. 546; 25 L. J., M. C. 7; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 1204; 4 W. R. 22.

The Watermen's Act, 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. lxxv. s. 57, gave authority to the mayor and aldermen of the city of London, to make by-laws "for the government and regulation of the freemen of the Watermen's Company, and their widows and apprentices, and boats, the vessels and other craft to be worked within the limits of the act":—Held, that, under these words of the act, the lord mayor and aldermen were authorised to make general regulations affecting the speed of steam-vessels navigating within certain limits. Tisdell v. Combe, 3 N. & P. 29; 7 A. & E. 788; 1 W., W. & H. 5; 7 L. J., M. C. 48; 2 Jur. 32.

Under the Thames Conservancy and Watermen's Acts, and by-laws thereunder, if a barge under weigh exceeds 50 tons, there must be two qualified licensed watermen on board, and one is not sufficient though assisted by another unqualified man. Perkins v. Gingell, 50 J. P. 277.

A steam-tug of eighty-seven tons burden employed in moving another vessel was not a "wherry, lighter, or other craft," under 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. lxxv. s. 37, and a person navigating her for this purpose, not being a freeman, did not thereby incur a penalty. Reed v. Ingham, 3 El. & Bl. 889; 2 C. L. R. 1495; 23 L. J., M. C. 156; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 61; 2 W. R. 520.

A. was employed by the Great Western Railway Company, at a weekly salary, in navigating the company's barges upon the Thames, and at the time of the alleged offence he had the command of the company's barge, laden with the goods in the possession and care of the company as common carriers, and which were in the course of being forwarded for delivery to the owners and consignees. The goods had been laden on board the barge at a private basin of the Grand Junction Canal, adjoining one of the company's stations, and without the limits of the 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. lxxv. The barge was towed along the canal to the river, and steered by A. upon the river and within the limits of the act, to a private wharf of the company west of London bridge. The barge was flat-bottomed, and of the same build as barges known as western barges, and before it was purchased by the company it was known as a western barge, and was worked and navigated upon the river from Reading and places west of Reading to the same wharf:—Held, that the barge was not, at the time of the offence, a western barge within s. 101. Tibble v. Beadon, 24 L. J., M. C. 104. S. C., nom. Reg. v. Tibble, 4 El. & Bl. 888; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 725; 3 W. R. 377.

Purpresture in—Injunction.]—On an information of the attorney-general, at the relation of an individual, and a bill by the relator, the lord chancellor granted an injunction ex parte, on affidavits, to restrain a purpresture in the river Thames, and it appearing that there had been no previous writ of ad quod damnum, and that an indictment in the king's bench was pending against the defendants for the same act, the lord chancellor refused to dissolve the injunction before the trial of the indictment, notwithstanding there were some affidavits on the part of defendants, stating that the act complained of was beneficial to the navigation; it was also held, that it was immaterial to whom the soil belonged, it not being competent either to the crown or to a subject, to use it for any purpose amounting to a nuisance. Att.-Gen. v. Johnson, 2 Wils. Ch. 87; 18 R. R. 156.

2. TOWING-PATHS.

Public Rights in.]—The public are not entitled at common law to tow on the banks of ancient navigable rivers. Ball v. Herbert, 3 Term Rep. 253; 1 R. R. 695.

But a right to a track path on either side of the river Tees (alternately) for towing, without paying any acknowledgment, was found upon a trial at bar. Pierce v. Fauconberge (Lord), 1 Burr. 292.

A right of way along the bank, of the nature of a towing-path, is not a necessary incident to an inland navigation—per Blackburn (Lord). Lee Conservators v. Button, 51 L. J., Ch. 17; 6 App. Cas. 685; 45 L. T. 385; 30 W. R. 233; 46 J. P. 164—H. L.

A towing path is not necessarily confined to the mere beaten track, but may include so much of the bank as may ordinarily be used by horses when towing barges. Winch v. Thames Conservators, infra.

Exemption from an Inclosure Act.]—If an act for inclosing and allotting the common and waste lands of a parish through which a navigable river flows, empowers commissioners to set out such public and private roads and ways as they shall think necessary, and directs that all roads and ways not so set out shall be deemed part of the lands to be allotted; an ancient towing-path upon the banks of the river, though not set out by the commissioners, still subsists, for it is not within their jurisdiction. Simpson v. Scales, 2 Bos. & P. 496; 5 R. R. 685.

Ownership—Compensation for Obstruction.]—By acts relating to a river navigation, commissioners were authorised to make such cuts as they should deem necessary for the navigation, provided that no cut should divert or stop up the present channel of the river, or alter the course of the stream. If any person should think himself injured by any work made by the commissioners, and should make complaint to the commissioners, they were to hear, and report to a subsequent general meeting, at which the commissioners were to make such order, determination and judgment thereon, as to them should seem just, and give such satisfaction as they should think reasonable. And if the party complaining should be dissatisfied with such order, he might appeal to the quarter sessions, who should make adjudication thereon, and award such costs to either party as they should think reasonable, which order and determination should be final and conclusive, to all intents and purposes whatever. A mandamus recited that B. was seised in fee of an ancient towing-path, on a part of the river, and to the exclusive right of towing barges at that part, taking reasonable tolls for such towing by his horses; that the commissioners made a cut, by which the barges were enabled to avoid that part of the river, dispense with the use of the horses, and withhold the tolls; that the commissioners had, by the cut, injured the old channel of the river, and made the navigation of the part aforesaid less easy and convenient, and diverted the navigation of the river from B.'s towing-path, and rendered the towing-path and his exclusive right wholly unprofitable; that B. had complained to the commissioners, and demanded compensation adequate to the injury he had sustained; that the commissioners, at a subsequent general meeting, made an order, determination and judgment, that they could not accede to B.'s application; that B. being dissatisfied with such order, appealed to the quarter sessions, who ordered the commissioners to pay B. 1,000*l.* in full compensation for the injury sustained by him, and 200*l.* costs, which they refused to pay, and the writ commanded them to pay. Return: That the commissioners, believing B. had no claim to compensation, did not hear evidence on the complaint, or the amount of the alleged loss, and notified to B. that they refused to accede to his application; that B., treating this refusal as an order, appealed; that on the appeal the commissioners objected that the refusal was not an order, but the quarter sessions overruled the objection; that the cut enabled navigators to avoid a dangerous bend of the river; that B. was no further entitled to the path than as owner of the land; that they had not obstructed his towing-path, nor placed any obstacle to the navigation against the towing-path; that parties might, as they sometimes did, still navigate by the old channel:—Held, first, that the refusal of the commissioners was an order, determination and judgment, from which an appeal lay to the sessions; secondly, that the sessions had jurisdiction to award compensation to B., both for the damage suffered by his towing-path being obstructed, and for the obstruction of the old navigation; thirdly, that the order of sessions was final and conclusive, and must be held to have been made on both complaints, inasmuch as the return (assuming it to negative the obstruction of the navigation) did not deny that the sessions had found such obstruction. Rex v. Thames and Isis Navigation, 5 A. & E. 804; 6 L. J., K. B. 17.

—— Evidence of—Onus probandi.]—Provisions in different acts of parliament appointed conservators of a river navigation and gave them full powers to do what was necessary for carrying the object of the acts into effect, including powers to purchase land and levy tolls. The conservators executed the powers of the acts so far as related to the improvement of the river navigation and the making of towing-paths, and they levied tolls. There was no evidence that they had actually purchased any of the land that lay along the course of the navigation, and had been used to form the towing-paths:—Held, that, as the acts might be carried into effect without purchasing, the burden of proof lay on the conservators to show that they had purchased; and since they had failed to show it, though they were entitled to an injunction to prevent any owner of adjoining land from so using the towing-paths as to obstruct in any way their free use for the purposes of the navigation, they were not entitled to be treated as owners of the soil of the towing-paths. Lee Conservators v. Button, 51 L. J., Ch. 17; 6 App. Cas. 685; 45 L. T. 385; 30 W. R. 233; 46 J. P. 164—H. L.

Liability for Damage caused by Non-Repair.]—A corporation constituted for the purpose of the upper navigation of the river Thames by the Thames Navigation Act, 1866 (29 & 30 Vict. c. 89), and under the powers of that act, and of the previous statutes relating to the navigation which had become vested in them, had constructed bridges and other works, and had acquired the right to use the whole of the towing-paths along the river, and to take toll for the same. In the exercise of such right the corporation took an aggregate toll in one sum for the use of the entire navigation and towing-paths, which included the works it had constructed, as well as the natural soil which had been worn into the track of a towing-path. Part of such natural towing-path got into a dangerous state by the action of the water, and in consequence thereof the horses of the plaintiff, whilst using it in towing a barge, for which the proper toll had been paid to the corporation, fell into the river and were drowned:—Held, that as the corporation took one toll for the use of the entire towing-path, parts of which were artificial, it mattered not that the place where the accident happened was not artificial, but that it was its duty to take reasonable care that the whole of the towing-path was in such a state as not to expose those using it to undue danger, and that for a neglect of such duty the corporation was responsible to the owner of the horses, although they were a public body receiving their powers for public purposes. Winch v. Thames Conservators, 43 L. J., C. P. 167; L. R. 9 C. P. 378; 31 L. T. 128; 22 W. R. 879—Ex. Ch.

Where it appeared that for making the towing-path of a canal the ownership of the soil was not necessary for the purpose :—Held, that a mere easement and not the soil had been acquired by the company. Badger v. South Yorkshire Railway and River Dun Co., 1 El. & El. 347 ; 28 L. J., Q. B. 118 ; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 459 ; 7 W. R. 130—Ex. Ch.

3. Obstruction or Injury.

a. What amounts to.

Weirs.]—A weir appurtenant to a fishery, obstructing the whole or part of a navigable river, is legal if granted by the crown before the reign of Edw. 1. Williams v. Wilcox. 8 A. & E. 314 ; 3 N. & P. 606 ; 1 W. W. & H. 477 ; 7 L. J., Q. B. 229.

If the weir when so first granted obstructs the navigation on only a part of the river, it does not become illegal by the stream changing its bed, so that the weir obstructs the only navigable passage remaining. Ib.

Where the crown had no right to obstruct the whole passage of a navigable river, it had no right to erect a weir obstructing a part, except subject to the right of the public ; and therefore in such a case the weir would become illegal upon the rest of the river being so choked that there could be no passage elsewhere. Ib.

The 12 Edw. 4, c. 7, relates to navigable rivers only, and though weirs in navigable rivers are illegal unless they existed before the time of Edw. 1, such an easement may be acquired in private waters by grant from other riparian owners, or by enjoyment, or by any means by which such rights may be constituted. Rolle v. Whyte, 8 B. & S. 116 ; 37 L. J., Q. B. 105 ; L. R. 3 Q. B. 286 ; 17 L. T. 560 ; 16 W. R. 593.

Loading Staiths.]—When on the trial of an indictment for a nuisance in a river, by erecting staiths for loading ships with coal, the judge left the following points to the jury :—whether they were erected in a reasonable part of the river ; whether reasonable space was left for navigation ; whether loading the vessels by means of them was a public benefit ; whether they extended farther than was required, and whether the public benefit produced was greater than the public injury sustained : and he pointed out to the jury, among other benefits, that by means of the staiths the coals were supplied at a cheaper rate, and in better condition than they otherwise could be :—Held, to be a proper direction. Rex v. Russell, 6 B. & C. 566 ; 9 D. & R. 566 ; 5 L. J. (O.S.) M. C. 80 ; 30 R. R. 432. See also cases, ante, col. 1885.

Wharfs and Jetties.]—A wharf-owner drove piles into the bed of a river, extending the wharf so as to occupy three feet out of a breadth of about sixty feet available for navigation :—Held, that this was such an obstruction as would be restrained at the suit of a corporation empowered by act of parliament to remove obstructions. Att.-Gen. v. Terry, L. R. 9 Ch. 423 ; 30 L. T. 215 ; 22 W. R. 395.

The plaintiff and defendant were opposite riparian proprietors on the banks of a navigable tidal river :—Held, that the defendant could not, for the protection of his own soil or otherwise, construct a jetty projecting into the bed of the river, whereby the tidal water was thrown with greater violence upon the plaintiff's shore, and the public navigation of the river was or might be impeded ; and that a suit by information and bill in equity to restrain the erection of such a jetty was properly instituted. Att.-Gen. v. Lonsdale (Earl), 38 L. J., Ch. 335 ; L. R. 7 Eq. 377 ; 20 L. T. 64 ; 17 W. R. 219.

Held, also, that the fact of the river traffic having been almost entirely superseded by local causes did not affect the right of the public to have the navigation conserved. Ib.

Action for navigating a vessel in the Thames in so negligent and unskilful a manner that she struck against and damaged a wharf and jetty. A plea that the wharf and jetty were constructed within the flow of the tide, and below low-water mark, and obstructed part of the bed and course of the river which was a public navigable river and highway for all the queen's subjects, with vessels, to navigate over and along at all times, at their free will ; and that the wharf and jetty had been constructed, and wrongfully obstructed the liege subjects from navigating in, over or along the part of the bed and course of the river with vessels, to the common nuisance of the liege subjects ; and that they could not navigate in, over or along the part of the bed and course of the river, unless the wharf and jetty were damaged : that the plaintiff had notice of the premises, and wilfully continued the nuisance : that the defendant "had occasion to pass with the vessel over that part of the bed and course of the river, and in so passing did the damage mentioned, and that he navigated the vessel with all the skill and care which would have been due and proper had not that part of the bed and course of the river been obstructed, and that he did no unnecessary damage :"—Held, after verdict for the defendant, that the plea was proved, though the nuisance did not reach low-water mark, and there was no evidence that the plaintiff constructed the nuisance, and the defendant did not disprove negligence ; but that the plea was bad for not alleging either a necessity to navigate the vessel over that part of the river where the nuisance was, or that the defendant's right course was over that part of the river, and that it would have been inconvenient and difficult to have taken any other course by which the nuisance might have been avoided. Dimes v. Petley, 15 Q. B. 276 ; 19 L. J., Q. B. 449 ; 14 Jur. 1132.

The crown granted a water lot in the Ottawa River, which became vested in the respondent, who constructed a floating wharf and boathouse on it, and occupied it for twenty years. The appellants, the owners of saw-mills on the banks of the river, allowed the refuse from their mills to collect in front of the wharf and boathouse, so as to create an obstruction and a nuisance :—Held, that the respondent was entitled to construct the wharf and boathouse, and to maintain an action for the injuries complained of. Booth v. Ratté, 59 L. J., P. C. 41 ; 15 App. Cas. 188 ; 62 L. T. 198 ; 38 W. R. 737—P. C.

One who erects or keeps erected on the shore of a navigable river between high and low water-mark a work for the more convenient use of his wharf adjoining, which work, either from its original defective construction, or from want of repair, presents a dangerous (hidden) obstruction to the navigation, is responsible for an injury thereby occasioned to a barge coming to the wharf, without any default on the part of the persons in charge of it. White v. Phillips, 15 C. B. (N.S.) 245 ; 33 L. J., C. P. 33 ; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 425 ; 9 L. T. 388 ; 12 W. R. 85.

—— Vessels moored to.]—In a public navigable river a decked barge or a dummy is firmly moored alongside a quay, so as to be a private nuisance to persons having a right to land from the river on the quay; if it is so fixed as not to be readily abatable, any such person may pass over such dummy in order to get to the quay, there being no other route available, where his so passing over it is not more injurious to the owners of it than the removal would be; and especially if to have removed it would have caused such person injurious delay in his affairs and business. Eastern Counties Ry. v. Dorling, 5 C. B. (N.S.) 821; 28 L. J., C. P. 202; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 869.

But he is not entitled so to use the barge as a means of passage, except in such states of the tide as, but for the barge, would have enabled him to land directly on the quay, and when the barge is therefore an obstruction and a nuisance to his right of way. Ib.

A. was possessed of a wharf, and had a mast projecting therefrom over the river. B. moored his vessel at the adjoining wharf, with her bowsprit overhanging the front of A.'s wharf, and, on the falling of the tide, the bowsprit of B.'s vessel coming in contact with A.'s mast, broke it:—Held, that B. was not responsible. Dalton v. Denton, 1 C. B. (N.S.) 672; 5 W. R. 203.

A riparian owner has a right to moor a vessel of ordinary size alongside his wharf for the purpose of loading or unloading, at reasonable times and for a reasonable time. Original Hartlepool Collieries Co. v. Gibb, 46 L. J., Ch. 311; 5 Ch. D. 713; 36 L. T. 433.

The court will restrain by injunction the owner of adjoining premises from interfering with the access of such vessel, even though the vessel may overlap his own premises; though such vessel would not be allowed to interfere with the proper right of access to the neighbouring premises if used as a wharf, nor to the free entrance to or exit from such premises, if used as a dock, by other vessels. Ib.

The plaintiffs were owners of a wharf 125 feet long on a navigable river, and of a collier boat 176 feet long, which stopped there at intervals of time for the purpose of unloading, and while there necessarily projected over part of the defendant's wharf, close to the entrance of a dock where he carried on the business of repairing ships, the wharf itself not being used. The defendant moored a raft of timber used in his business in front of his own wharf, so as to interfere with the access of the collier to her berth:—Held, that the raft was an obstruction to the navigation; and that the collier had a right to come at reasonable times to, and remain a reasonable time alongside of, the wharf of the plaintiffs, although she projected over the defendant's wharf while doing so. Ib.

The W. navigation trustees having power to make by-laws for the ordering and good government of the navigation of the river W., made a by-law that the person having charge of a vessel shall not lie up or moor the same so as to prevent other vessels passing. S.'s vessel was moored on one side, the I. was moored on the other side, and each said it was the other's turn to remove for a third vessel to pass, but neither moved:—Held, that S. was rightly convicted under the by-law, and it was no answer to set up a custom about each obstructing vessel having to remove alternately, and that he had removed the time previous. Stubbs v. Hilditch, 51 J. P. 758.

Landing-Stage—Anchor.]—By a local act a local board of health was authorised to construct in conformity with certain deposited plans, "and upon the lands delineated upon the plans," a pier or landing-stage, "together with such other works and conveniences in connexion therewith" as it should from time to time think fit. Before the landing-stage was commenced plans of the proposed works were to be deposited at the admiralty for approval. The local act was to be executed subject to the powers and provisions of the Public Health Act, 1848, s. 139 of which requires notice of action "for anything done or intended to be done" under the provisions. The local board deposited plans (different in extension from the plans under the act) which received the approval of the conservators of the river, representing the admiralty, and constructed the landing-stage in conformity therewith. The landing-stage was a floating one, and was moored by anchors lying in the bed of the river. The position of the anchors was indicated by a buoy, which, being carried down by the tide, became concealed from view. One of the anchors becoming displaced, stove in and swamped a vessel which was lawfully navigating the river:—Held, first, that the anchor, although placed where it was for the benefit of the public, was an obstruction which the local board could not have created without statutory authority, and was a nuisance to the river. Jolliffe v. Wallasey Local Board, 43 L. J., C. P. 41; L. R. 9 C. P. 62; 29 L. T. 582.

Held, secondly, that the local board was guilty of negligence in its management of the buoy, but that inasmuch as the plans had received the approval of the admiralty, such approval was tantamount to the sanction of the act, so as to entitle the board to the statutory notice of action. Ib.

Railway Embankments.]—A declaration stated that there was a public navigable river, called the Ouse, the waters of which of right flowed along the east and west sides of a certain island, without any obstruction to the navigation thereof; that the plaintiff was possessed of barges navigating it, and along the river to the east of the island; yet the defendants wrongfully and injuriously put earth into the bed of the river to the east of the island, and filled up the ancient channel, and penned up the water, and prevented it from flowing in its usual channel, whereby the plaintiff was prevented from navigating his barges in the ancient course. Plea, that the defendants were a railway company incorporated by an act embodying the Land and Railway Clauses Act, 1845. That by the special act it was enacted, that, subject to the provisions of that act and of the incorporated acts, it should be lawful for the defendant to make and maintain the railway in the line and on the land delineated and described in the plans and books of reference. That the part of the bed of the river was in the line and among lands so delineated and described, whereupon the defendants, for the purpose of constructing the railway under the powers in the acts, entered on the part of the bed of the river, and made part of the railway thereon, and committed the grievances, the same being necessary for the making the railway. On the trial, the allegations in the plea were proved as laid; but the defendants gave no evidence of the preliminary steps having been taken, which would have been necessary under the acts if they had sought to have the ownership of the locus in quo vested in them as purchasers under the acts:—Held, first, that as the declaration did not claim for the plaintiff any interest in the soil, but merely a public right of way, the question of ownership was irrelevant, and it was not necessary for the defendants either to allege or prove that such preliminary steps had been taken. Abraham v. G. N. Ry., 16 Q. B., 586; 20 L. J., Q. B. 322; 15 Jur. 855.

Held, secondly, that the first clause of s. 16 of the Railway Clauses Act (as to works to be executed by the company) empowers companies to execute such works in navigable rivers, and is not, by the second clause of that section, restricted to works in rivers not navigable. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that although the proviso at the end of s. 16 requires that, in the exercise of the powers, the company "shall do as little damage as can be," the plea, which did not allege that the company had done as little damage as could be, was not bad for that omission. Ib.

Effect of Non-User.]—The defendants having erected on their own premises a permanent obstruction to a navigable drain leading from a river through their premises to the plaintiffs' close:—Held, that an action lay by the plaintiffs notwithstanding the portion of the drain, which passed through their close, had for sixteen years been completely choked up with mud. Bown v. Hill, 1 Bing. (N.C.) 549; 2 Scott, 535; 1 Hodges, 334; 5 L. J., C. P. 77.

User—In Derogation of Grant.]—A. being the owner of land adjoining a navigable lake, the bed of which was the soil and freehold of the plaintiff, granted to the defendants a right of way, and made a pier, part of which was upon his own land, and part upon the bed of the lake. He then leased the pier and the land belonging to him to a steam-boat company, who used the pier for the purpose of landing and embarking passengers. If the pier had not been built on the bed of the lake, they might have brought their steam-boats sufficiently near to be able to land their passengers by means of a temporary stage reaching from their boats to the land so leased to them, and upon which part of the pier was built. The public had a right to navigate the lake, and the plaintiff had not removed the pier, although it had been erected without his consent and against his will:—Held, that he could not maintain an action against the defendants for using the pier as above stated, inasmuch as while he allowed it to remain, it was an obstruction to their right to navigate the lake, and to land and embark their passengers at that place. Marshall v. Ulleswater Steam Navigation Co., 41 L. J., Q. B. 41; L. R. 7 Q. B. 166; 25 L. T. 793; 20 W. R. 144.

Tendency to obstruct Navigation—Refuse cast on Shore.]—It is an offence, under s. 11 of 54 Geo. 3, c. 159, to cast rubbish or filth, such as chemical refuse, on shore in a place where it is liable to be washed into a navigable river or the sea, although there is no evidence of a tendency to injure or obstruct navigation. A company is a "person" under the act. United Alkali Co. v. Simpson, 63 L. J., M. C. 141; [1894] 2 Q. B. 116; 10 R. 235; 71 L. T. 258; 42 W. R. 509; 58 J. P. 607.

Chain placed across River by Owner of Bed—Right of Boating.]—An action was brought to restrain the defendant from interfering with posts and chains which the plaintiff, the owner of the bed of the river under a title derived from the crown, had placed in the river Mole to stop the water-way. There was a counter-claim by the defendant, who was not a riparian owner, for an injunction to restrain any hindrance to the passage of his boats. He based his claim on a public right of highway over part of the river, not on a right of recreation by custom. The evidence showed that the reach in question was not tidal; that it could not be approached by boats from below; that its depth was artificial, and depended on mill dams; that it had never been used for purposes of commerce, or as a way from one public place to another; that there was no public access to it at one end, and it was doubtful whether there was any public access to it for boats at any points; that no one except the mill-owners had done anything towards maintaining it as a water-way; that there had been a considerable amount of boating on the reach by riparian owners and by others in boats brought from a distance, chiefly for fishing, but that no right to fish was claimed; and that persons boating had hardly ever been interfered with:—Held, that the user had been permissive, and not of right, and that the defendant must be restrained from removing the obstruction. Bourke v. Davis, 44 Ch. D. 110; 62 L. T. 34; 38 W. R. 167.

Liability of Conservators—For not removing Obstruction.]—The defendants were an unpaid body of trustees created by statute conservators of the Lee, an ancient and navigable river, and were "authorised and empowered from time to time at their discretion to cleanse, scour, deepen, enlarge, or straighten the channel or course of the said river, and also to set out, open, make and maintain" certain new cuts, or canals thereinafter specified, to communicate with the river and to be used for the navigation, "and also to remove all obstructions and impediments whatsoever to the said navigation." The defendants were also by statute empowered to levy rates or tolls for the use of certain locks and artificial cuts, but were expressly forbidden to receive any tolls in respect of such part of the navigation as was between Bow Creek and Old Ford Lock, which part of the navigation was an ancient highway, and was by statute declared to be for ever free from toll. The plaintiff's barge, while navigating a part of the river between Bow Creek and Old Ford Lock, struck upon one of several submerged piles and was injured. The plaintiffs having brought an action for damages, the jury found that the piles were dangerous; that the defendants ought to have been aware of the danger, and had neglected their duty:—Held, that the action could not be maintained, since the defendants were unpaid trustees appointed for public purposes in aid of the common law right of navigating an ancient highway, and the duty of removing obstructions imposed by the statute was discretionary and not compulsory. Forbes v. Lee Conservancy Board, 4 Ex. D. 116; 48 L. J., Ex. 402; 27 W. R. 688.

Where damage was caused to a ship by striking on a mud bank which the defendants, who were empowered to take toll for the navigation, had neglected to remove:—Held, that they were liable, though the tolls were not applied to the use of the company. Mersey Docks v. Gibbs, 11 H. L. Cas. 686; 35 L. J., Ex. 225; L. R. 1 H. L. 93; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 571; 14 L. T. 677; 14 W. R. 872.

By a local act, persons were incorporated for the purpose of improving the navigation of a river; and they were empowered to take tolls in respect of the transit or conveyance of goods thereon:—Held, that in the absence of any express enactment on the subject in the act, the duties of the company were confined to matters relating to the navigation, and that they were not liable for the sewerage of the river, as to clear away weeds, which, though injurious to the adjoining lands, were no detriment to the navigation. Parrett Navigation Co. v. Robins, 3 Railw. Cas. 383; 10 M. & W. 593; 12 L. J., Ex. 81.

—— Abstraction of Water.]—A local act empowered certain persons to make the river Kennet navigable, and to dig and cut through the banks of the river, and to erect in the river, and upon the lands adjoining, weirs, pens, dams, &c., and to do all matters and things necessary for making and maintaining or improving the navigation, the undertakers first giving satisfaction to the owners of such lands, weirs, &c., as should be digged, cut or removed, or otherwise made use of, as the commissioners named for the purpose should direct, in case the undertakers should not beforehand have agreed with the proprietors of such lands and hereditaments concerning the same. Commissioners were appointed to mediate between the undertakers and the owners of lands and hereditaments intended to be made use of, and to settle satisfaction for such portion of the lands as should be cut, digged, or made use of; and a provision was made for filling up vacancies in the body of the commissioners. If any person should sustain damage in his mills, by the owners of the navigation taking away or diverting the water, or any similar injury, the commissioners should, by a jury empanelled as therein directed, assess such damage and award compensation to the party injured. The proprietors of the navigation obstructed the water flowing to a mill by the erection of a dam under the powers of the act. All the commissioners under the act had died, and there were no commissioners in existence by whom compensation could be assessed:—Held, by Wightman, J., Erle, J., and Crompton, J., that the powers of the proprietors to raise weirs for the necessary purposes of the navigation did not cease by reason of the right of the mill-owner to recover compensation for consequential damages through the commissioners being lost; and, by Lord Campbell, C. J., that the power to raise the weir and cut off the water flowing to the mill, could only be exercised during the continuance of the body of commissioners, and that upon their extinction the extraordinary powers of the proprietors ceased. Kennet and Avon Canal Navigation v. Witherington, 18 Q. B. 531; 21 L. J., Q. B. 419.

An act for making a navigable communication for ships between the city of Norwich and the sea empowered a company to erect a lock or a sluice, with proper stop gates, to prevent the waters of a "broad" and certain navigable rivers from flowing into a lake, and to make an entrance cut from that lake to the sea. S. 3 provided, that nothing in the act should enable the company to divert or abstract any of the waters of the broad or rivers, except only for the purpose of supplying certain intended cuts with water, and of locking ships from or into the lake. The entrance was constructed, and the level of the water in the lake was kept lower than the level of the broad and the rivers. The lock also was made with proper gates. By several acts the lock and works become vested in the N. railway; it was provided that "the E. railway should have, as between themselves and the other company (but subject to apportionment of gross receipts as therein mentioned), the exclusive possession, use, enjoyment and receipt of all the property, rights, &c., of the works in the same manner as the N. railway have become entitled to the same, by virtue of the respective acts and otherwise; that the E. company should at all times repair and keep up the works with the appurtenances"; and that the powers of the N. company should be exercised by the E. company. By 17 & 18 Vict. c. ccxx., s. 2, the agreement was confirmed, and by s. 11, the E. company was to use, work, regulate and manage the five undertakings (in the act mentioned) as if they were one undertaking. By s. 12, the powers granted to the companies, by virtue of the recited acts, or any of them, with respect to their respective railways, works and undertakings, were to be exercised and enjoyed by the E. company, under the same regulations and restrictions as were by the recited acts relating to that company, imposed on that company. After the making of the agreement, the E. company entered into possession of the lock and works, and the N. company was not in possession. At the time of making the agreement, the lock had been allowed to become out of repair, and such want of repair continued after the lock and works came into the possession of the E. company, and during all that time large quantities of water escaped from the broad and rivers into the lake:—Held, first, that such water was diverted or abstracted contrary to the prohibition in the first-mentioned act. Preston v. Norfolk Ry., 2 H. & N. 735.

Held, secondly, that the N. company was not responsible for the diversion or abstraction of the waters subsequent to the making of the agreement, and the passing of 17 & 18 Vict. c. ccxx., while the lock and works were in the possession of the E. company. Ib.

—— Escape of Water.]—By a local act of 1859, s. 7, the corporation of York was authorised to abandon the navigation of the river Foss, which they had previously purchased, to alter the channel, and to remove locks or works connected with the navigation; but before removing any locks the corporation was to make due provisions for the escape or disposal of the water held up by such locks or theretofore accustomed to flow along or into the channel of the navigation, so as to prevent the same from overflowing or otherwise damaging the adjacent lands. By s. 19, the corporation at their own expense was to make, and for the period of five years maintain, such arches, drains and passages as should in consequence of any alteration of the navigation be necessary and sufficient to convey the water from the lands adjoining the navigation into the river. The corporation abandoned the navigation and made alterations, the effect of which was that, if the channel remained in the state it then was, due provision was made for the escape of the water. They, however, took no measures to prevent the navigation from becoming silted up and choked with weeds, and in consequence the land adjoining the river about a mile above the alterations was flooded during an extraordinary rainfall, and the grass was damaged:—Held, that the corporation was not responsible for this damage. Hodgson v. York Corporation, 28 L. T. 836.

The owner of a farm between which and a tidal river were lands that had been reclaimed by conservancy commissioners from the river, sued such commissioners for damage caused to his farm by the river overflowing a sea-wall between the reclaimed lands and the river, and flowing over the reclaimed lands on to his farm:—Held, that as the commissioners were by their acts under the obligation to maintain and repair the sea-wall, they were liable not only for damage caused to the reclaimed lands, but to lands beyond such lands, by reason of the sea-wall being insufficient in height to prevent an overflow of the river, and further that the plaintiff was not deprived of his right of action by the fact of the water having flowed from the reclaimed lands on to his farm in consequence of his landlords having made a cutting through an embankment in order to obtain access to the reclaimed lands. Bramlett v. Tees Conservancy Commissioners, 49 J. P. 214.

Abstraction by Persons not Riparian Owners.]—By a statute a company was incorporated and empowered to do all things necessary to make the river Medway navigable; and the river or streams so to be made navigable, and all lands, tenements, and hereditaments to be by them made use of for the benefit of the navigation, were thereby vested in the company:—Held, that the statute conferred on the company such an interest in the whole of the water of the river and streams, for the purposes of the navigation, as to entitle them to sue persons abstracting part thereof, such persons not being riparian proprietors, and applying it to purposes more extensively than the rights of riparian proprietors cover; and that the company might sue independently of any question of actual damage to the navigation by reason of such abstraction. Medway Navigation Co. v. Romney (Earl), 9 C. B. (N.S.) 575; 30 L. J., C. P. 236; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 846; 4 L. T. 87; 9 W. R. 482.

Right to Soil of River—Trespass.]—By 16 & 17 Car. 2, c. 12, certain persons were authorised to make navigable the river Itchin and certain other rivers, and to cut, dig and make new channels, and to deepen or widen the river, channels, &c., and to do all that might be fit for navigation, and to build locks, &c., upon any of the lands adjoining the rivers, and to make towing-paths; and it was expressly provided that the undertakers should not make any trench, river or watercourse, or use the locks, upon the land of any person, until a full agreement with and satisfaction to the owners of the land had been made by the commissioners appointed by the act, or by the persons authorised to make the navigation, nor until satisfaction should be paid to the owners of the lands, according to the determination of the commissioners, or by agreement, by the undertakers of the navigation. By a subsequent clause, the commissioners were to determine what satisfaction any person should have in respect of any prejudice, loss or damage sustained for such proportion of his lands next adjoining to the navigation as should be made use of for the purposes of the act, in case the undertakers of the navigation should not have agreed beforehand, and satisfy the party so damnified. But the act contained no clause giving the undertakers any power to purchase lands, nor did it recognise in them any right of soil in the beds or banks of the rivers intended to be made navigable. Where a river mentioned in the act, was made navigable by certain undertakers in 1702, and their successors exercised for a long series of years various acts of ownership and enjoyment of the banks, by cutting bushes, &c., and granted a lease of hatches and sluices, made in one of the banks, to an occupier of land adjoining thereto, for the purpose of irrigation, and there was no proof of any agreement between the undertakers and the original proprietors of the land for the purchase of the soil of the bank:—Held, that by virtue of the provisions of this act, the proprietors of the navigation did not necessarily acquire such an interest in the soil in a bank adjoining to, and formed out of the earth excavated from a new channel made for the first time under the act, as would enable them to maintain trespass; and that such an agreement could not be presumed from these acts of ownership and enjoyment, when opposed to similar acts exercised by the occupier of the adjoining land, and that the act afforded strong evidence against such presumption. Hollis v. Goldfinch, 2 D. & R. 316; 1 B. & C. 205; 1 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 91; 25 R. R. 357.

Preventing Obstruction.]—By a public act passed in the reign of Henry 8, the corporation of the city of Exeter was empowered to remove obstructions to the navigation of the river Exe, paying compensation to the owners of the soil, where the obstructions were situated:—Held, first, that this act did not confer the conservancy of the river on the corporation. Exeter Corporation v. Devon (Earl), L. R. 10 Eq. 232; 23 L. T. 382; 18 W. R. 879.

Held, secondly, that it did not entitle the corporation to file a bill in equity to restrain the erection of a pier in the river. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that it did not confer any right or privilege on the corporation within the General Pier and Harbour Act, 1861, s. 14, so as to prevent the erection of a pier in the river without their consent being obtained. Ib.

Sunk Vessels—Liability of Owner.]—The owner of a vessel sunk in a navigable river is bound to place a buoy over the wreck, and it is not enough to station a watchman near the spot to point out the danger. Harmond v. Pearson, 1 Camp. 515.

Where a vessel is sunk by accident, and without any default in the owner or his servant, in a navigable river, and remains there under water, no duty is ordinarily cast upon the owner to use any precaution by placing a buoy or otherwise to prevent other vessels from striking against it. Brown v. Mallett, 5 C. B. 599; 17 L. J., C. P. 227; 12 Jur. 204.

Where a vessel is sunk by unavoidable accident in a public navigable river, whether in the usual track of navigation or not, it is the duty of the owner, so long as he continues to have the possession and control of the vessel, to take due precaution to prevent injury to other vessels by their striking against it, and this obligation may be transferred with the transfer of the possession and control to another person, and on the abandonment of the possession and control the obligation ceases. White v. Crisp, 10 Ex. 312; 2 C. L. R. 1215; 23 L. J., Ex. 317; 2 W. R. 624.

An indictment does not lie against the owner of a vessel, sunk by accident or misfortune in a navigable river, for not removing it. Rex v. Watts, 2 Esp. 675; 5 R. R. 766.

Oysters—Persons Damaging in Navigation.]—If property (as oysters) is placed in the channel of a public navigable river, so as to create a public nuisance, a person navigating is not justified in damaging such property, by running his vessel against, if he has room to pass without so doing; for an individual cannot abate a nuisance if he is not otherwise injured by it than as one of the public. Colchester Corporation v. Brooke, 7 Q. B. 339; 15 L. J., Q. B. 59; 9 Jur. 1090.

b. Actions for.

Pleading.]—Where a plaintiff declared that he was navigating his barges laden with goods along a public navigable creek, and that the defendant wrongfully moored a barge across, and kept the same so moored thence hitherto, and thereby obstructed the public navigable creek, and prevented the plaintiff from navigating his barges so laden; per quod he was obliged to convey his goods a great distance over land, and was put to trouble and expense in the carriage of his goods over land:—Held, that this was such a special damage for which an action upon the case would lie. Rose v. Miles, 4 M. & S. 101; 16 R. R. 405.

A count stating that the plaintiff was possessed of a messuage abutting on a public navigable river, and by reason thereof was accustomed, and of right entitled, to have free use and navigation of the river, for the purpose of passing in boats and conveying goods to the messuage, and convenient access to the messuage from the river, but that the defendant fixed barges, planks and logs of wood, in that part of the river near the messuage, and kept and continued the same, and thereby hindered the plaintiff from having the free use of the river, and passing in boats and conveying goods to and from the messuage, and he was thereby put to expense in endeavouring to remove the obstructions, and was obliged to convey the goods in a longer and more inconvenient route, is good, as sufficiently showing a particular injury to the individual. Dobson v. Blackmore, 9 Q. B. 991; 16 L. J., Q. B. 233; 11 Jur. 556. S. P., Rose v. Groves, 5 Man. & G. 613; 6 Scott (N.R.) 645; 1 D. & L. 61; 12 L. J., C. P. 251; 7 Jur. 951.

—— Allegation of Duty in Defendants.]—A declaration stating that the defendants were possessed of a mooring anchor, which was kept by them fixed in a known part of a navigable river, covered by ordinary tides; that the anchor had become removed into and remained in another part of the river covered by ordinary tides not indicated; whereof the defendants had notice; and although they had the means and power of refixing and securing the anchor and indicating it, they neglected to do so; whereby the plaintiff's vessel, whilst sailing in a part of the river ordinarily used by ships, ran foul of and struck against the anchor, and was thereby damaged, is bad, for not showing that the defendants were privy to the removal of the anchor, or that it was their duty to refix it and indicate it. Hancock v. York, Newcastle and Berwick Ry., 10 C. B. 348.

A declaration alleged that the defendant was possessed of a wharf for loading and unloading vessels on the banks of the river Thames, near to which wharf there was certain wood work, placed by the defendant at the bottom of the river, over which wood work, at certain states of the tide, a ship would float, but at others would not; that the plaintiff was possessed of a ship, which was, by sufferance and permission of the defendant, at and alongside the wharf, for reward in that behalf to the defendant; and that the defendant had the management and control of the wharf, and the mooring and stationing of ships at and near the same, while such ships were at the wharf for the purpose of using the same. Breach, that the defendant so unskilfully and negligently moored and stationed the plaintiff's ship in that part of the river, over the wood work, that it was greatly injured:—Held, that the declaration sufficiently alleged a duty, on the part of the defendant, to moor and station the plaintiff's ship safely, and that the breach was well stated. Curling v. Wood, 16 M. & W. 628; 17 L. J., Ex. 301; 12 Jur. 1055—Ex. Ch.

c. Indictments for.

Persons Liable — Diversion of Water for Private Protection.]—On indictment for nuisance to a canal established by act of parliament, it appeared that the canal was carried across a river and the adjoining valley by means of an aqueduct and embankment, in which were several arches and culverts: that a brook fell into the river above its point of intersection with the canal; and that in times of flood the water which was then penned back into the brook overflowed its banks, and was carried by the natural level of the country to the arches, and through them to the river, doing however much mischief to the lands over which it passed: that except for the nuisance after mentioned, the aqueduct would be sufficiently wide for the passage of the river at all times, but those of high flood, notwithstanding the improved drainage of the country which had increased the body of water: that the occupiers of lands adjoining the river and brook had, for the protection of their lands, subsequently to the making of the canal, aqueduct, and embankment, erected or heightened artificial banks called fenders on their properties, so as to prevent the flood water from escaping as above mentioned; and that the water had consequently in time of flood come down in so large a body against the aqueduct and canal banks as to endanger them and obstruct the navigation; that the fenders were not unnecessarily high, and that if they were reduced many hundred acres of land would again be exposed to inundation:—Held, that the occupiers were not justified in altering for their own benefit the course in which the flood water had been accustomed to run, and consequently they were indictable. Rex v. Trafford, 1 B. & Ad. 874. See S. C., 1 M. & Scott, 401; 2 C. & J. 265; 8 Bing. 204; 9 L. J. (O.S.) M. C. 66—Ex. Ch.

—— Erection of Buildings or Works.]—The erection of any building in a port or a navigable river, which of itself is such a hindrance to the navigation as to amount to a nuisance, is an indictable misdemeanour, although such building is productive of collateral benefit, sufficient, in the opinion of the jury, to counterbalance the injury done to the navigation. Rex v. Ward, 6 N. & M. 38; 4 A. & E. 384; 1 H. & W. 703; 5 L. J., K. B. 221.

The defendants, who were the owners of the soil adjoining a harbour, were indicted for a nuisance in erecting planks in it; a special verdict was found, but it did not distinctly appear by the verdict whether the erection was in the harbour or not. The verdict found, that by the defendant's works, the harbour was in some extreme cases rendered less secure. Assuming the erection to have been in the harbour:—Held, that consequences so slight, resulting from the acts of the defendants, did not amount to a nuisance. Rex v. Tindall, 1 N. & P. 719; 6 A. & E. 143; 6 L. J., M. C. 97.

On an indictment for a nuisance, it was proved that the wharf (the nuisance complained of) was erected over a part of the river, between high and low water-mark, where boats were used before to pass. And, for the defendant, it was shown that the wharf was a convenience to the public, inasmuch as boats of heavy burden could come to unlade at the wharf, which, before the building of the wharf, anchored in the middle of the river; and that the channel of the river was by this convenience kept clear:—Held, that the question for the jury was, whether the wharf occasioned any hindrance to the navigation of the river by vessels of any description, and not whether the erection of the wharf had caused a benefit to the navigation in general. Reg. v. Randall, Car. & M. 496.

By a statute reciting that the river Witham was formerly navigable for lighters, boats, &c., from Lincoln to the sea, and that, by sand and silt brought in by the tide, the outfall had been greatly obstructed, and was in a great measure stopped up, whereby trade and commerce had decayed, powers were given to commissioners for the purpose of restoring the navigation; and they were authorised, in order for the carrying on and effecting the navigation, to make a new cut through lands adjoining the river (not vested in the commissioners), and the navigation so made was to be open to all subjects of the realm paying tolls. The commissioners were also empowered, under certain regulations, to build bridges. The cut was made, and a more direct channel thereby created, through which the waters of the Witham passed to the sea. A company in whom the powers of the commissioners afterwards became vested by statute, built a bridge not according to the regulations, and occupying to some extent the bed of the new cut. On an indictment against them for a nuisance to the river as a public highway, the jury found specially that the company was guilty of building the bridge, but that it did not obstruct the navigation:—Held, first, that the cut was a public navigable river, the obstruction of which was an indictable offence. Reg. v. Betts, 16 Q. B. 1022; 19 L. J., Q. B. 531; 4 Cox, C. C. 211.

Held, secondly, that building a bridge partly in the bed of a navigable river is not necessarily a nuisance; that the question, whether in fact it is so or not in a particular instance, is for a jury; and that the verdict negativing actual obstruction was in effect an acquittal. Ib.

The judge, on a trial of an indictment for obstructing the navigation of the Menai Straits by erecting a wall, asked the jury whether they thought the erection proved "a material nuisance," in which case they were to find a verdict of guilty; but told them that if they thought the nuisance was so slight, rare, and uncertain, that the defendant ought not to be made criminally liable for it, they were to acquit him; and on the jury saying that they considered the erection, "although a nuisance, was not sufficiently so as to render the defendant criminally liable," he directed an acquittal:—Held, per Coleridge and Crompton, JJ., and semble, per Lord Campbell, C. J., that the charge was to be understood as meaning, not that a party may legally commit a small nuisance, but that an obstruction might be so insignificant as not to constitute a nuisance: and that the jury must be understood as finding that the obstruction in question was so insignificant, and that therefore there was not a misdirection warranting a new trial. Reg. v. Russell, 3 El. & Bl. 942; 23 L. J., M. C. 173; 18 Jur. 1022; 2 W. R. 555.

—— Acts of Workmen.]—The workmen of a colliery owner, in working the colliery, stacked the refuse in such a manner that it fell into a navigable river, and caused an obstruction therein. The owner was indicted for a nuisance in causing such obstruction:—Held, that not having personally superintended the works, and having given express orders to the workmen that the refuse should be deposited in a particular place where it would not do any harm, and should not be thrown into the river, did not relieve him from liability upon the indictment. Reg. v. Stephens, 7 B. & S. 710; 35 L. J., Q. B. 251; L. R. 1 Q. B. 702; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 961; 14 L. T. 593; 14 W. R. 859.

—— Accidental Sinking of Vessel.]—An indictment does not lie against the owner of a vessel, sunk by accident or misfortune in a navigable river, for not removing it. Rex v. Watts, 2 Esp. 675; 5 R. R. 766.

B. CANAL AND NAVIGATION COMPANIES.

1. Regulation of Companies.

a. Shares.

Nature of Property.]—Shares in canal companies are pure personalty. Edwards v. Hall, 6 De G. M. & G. 74; 25 L. J., Ch. 82; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 1189; 4 W. R. 111—L. C.

A canal was made under the authority of an act; the lands for that purpose were purchased and vested in a corporation, but the shares therein were to be deemed personal estate, and transmissible as such, and were to be conveyed by bargain and sale:—Held, that the shares did not bear the character of realty, so as to make a bequest of them specific. Robinson v. Addison, 2 Beav. 515.

Where a company is formed by act of parliament for the purchase of lands to make a canal, and the act declares that the shares "shall be deemed personal estate, and shall be transmissible as such":—Held, that though the profits arose out of the land, the shares were personal property, passing as such to the assignees, on the bankruptcy of a proprietor. Where an act prescribes certain forms in the transfer of such shares:—Held, unless they are strictly complied with, the shares remain in the order and disposition of the bankrupt proprietor; the ordinary mode of transfer not constituting an equitable mortgage. And, though the act only expressly relates to transfers between third parties, yet it impliedly relates to where the company are the transferees. Lancaster Canal Co., Ex parte, Dilworth, In re, Mont. 116; 1 Deac. & C. 411.

The shares in the navigation of the river Avon, under the statute 10 Ann, are real estate, and subject to dower. Buckeridge v. Ingram, 2 Ves. J. 652. See also Howse v. Chapman, 4 Ves. 542; 4 R. R. 292.

Liability of Company in respect of.]—A mandamus will lie against a company of proprietors of a canal navigation and their clerk to compel them to make an entry of the probate of a deceased proprietor, and to register the name and place of abode of his executrix as the proprietor of one share in the profits of the navigation, belonging to the deceased at the time of his death. Horne, Ex parte, 7 B. & C. 632; S. C., nom. Rex v. Worcester Canal Co., 1 M. & Ry. 529; 6 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 173.

By a navigation act it was enacted, that on a certain day the first general meeting of the proprietors should be held, at which the company should execute a deed under their common seal for each distinct share, "which deed should respectively vest a certain share in each proprietor"; the plaintiff declared in an action against the defendant, for not completing a contract for the purchase of some shares, averring, that on a day prior to the first general meeting, he was lawfully entitled to so many shares:—Held, that this was a material averment, and the ground of a nonsuit, as it could not be proved; though there was another clause in the act, by which certain persons by name (of whom the plaintiff was one) were made a corporation for the purposes of the act; and the money to be subscribed was to be divided into so many equal shares, "which were thereby vested in the person so subscribing," &c. Latham v. Barber, 6 Term Rep. 67.

Right of Shareholder to set aside Agreement Inconsistent with Act.]—All the holders of shares in a canal have a common interest in the due execution of the act which regulates it; and one shareholder may file a bill on behalf of himself and the other shareholders, to set aside an agreement inconsistent with the act, even though many of the shareholders think it for their advantage to adhere to the agreement. Gray v. Chaplin, 2 Sim. & S. 267; 3 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 161.

An agreement, not warranted by the act, will not be rendered valid by the consent and concurrence of even all the shareholders, if it tends to deprive the public of any advantage which the public otherwise might or would have enjoyed under the provisions of the act. Ib.

See further COMPANY and CHARITY.

b. Accounts.

Authority to Execute Necessary Works—Passing of Accounts by Sessions.]—By an act for making and maintaining a canal, power was given to the canal company to make all such works as they should think necessary and proper for effecting, completing, maintaining, improving, and using the canal, and other works; and the company was required to lay before the sessions an account of the sums expended in making and completing the canal, up to the time of its completion; and after that an annual account of the rates collected, and of the charges and expenses of supporting, maintaining, and using the navigation and its works; and the sessions were authorised, in case it appeared to them that the clear profits exceeded the percentage limited by the act on the sums mentioned in the first account to have been expended by the company (i.e., in making and completing the canal and its works), to reduce the canal rates:—Held, that the sessions, even after the period fixed for the completion of the canal, and after the first account delivered of the capital expended in the undertaking, and on which the dividends were to be calculated, were not authorised to reject charges and expenses, stated in the annual accounts of disbursements, for new works, such as a reservoir and a steam-engine, which the company deemed necessary, and proved to have been erected for the support and improvement of the original line of canal, and for the better supplying it with water in dry seasons. Rex v. Glamorganshire Canal Co., 12 East, 157.

By an act, a company of proprietors was authorised to make the canal, and to do all other acts which they might think necessary and convenient for the making, improving, and using the canal; and the profit of the company on the money expended in making and completing the navigation was not to exceed 8*l.* per cent. per annum; and in order to ascertain the clear amount of the profits of the navigation, the company was required to keep an account of the money laid out in making the canal, and of all charges incurred before the canal was completed, and also to make out an annual account, balanced to the 29th of September, of the rates and of the charges attending the supporting, maintaining, and using the said navigation; and these accounts were to be laid before the justices at quarter sessions, and they were to reduce the rates whenever the clear profits of the navigation exceeded 8*l.* per cent. upon the money laid out:—Held, that the company was authorised to widen and deepen the canal, after it had been once completed (that being beneficial to the public), and that the charge of such widening and deepening was a charge attending the using of the canal. Rex v. Glamorganshire JJ., 7 B. & C. 722.

Right to Adjourn Consideration.]—By an act for making the river Tone navigable, conservators were appointed, and it was enacted that the accounts of the conservators should be made up to the 24th of June yearly, and the accounts so made up, and vouchers for the same, should be brought before the Bishop of Bath and Wells, or any five of the justices without the bishop, between the first day of August and the then next general sessions of the peace to be held for the county of Somerset, at a place appointed by the bishop, or by any five of the justices without the bishop, then and there to be examined, stated, and corrected; and the accounts, whether or not the same should have been examined and corrected by the bishop and justices, were to be brought before the bishop and justices, or any five of the justices in the absence of the bishop, at the opening of the court at the next quarter sessions to be held after the first day of August yearly; and the bishop and justices at the sessions, or any five of the justices in the absence of the bishop, were required to examine, state, and allow the accounts of the conservators, and that allowance was to be final and conclusive :—Held, that the bishop and justices were bound to examine, state, and allow the accounts, at the first sessions, and had no authority to adjourn the examination to a subsequent session. Bridgewater Canal Co. v. Bluet, 10 B. & C. 393.

2. PURCHASE OF LANDS.

Conveyance—Inrolment of.]—Where a company was authorised by an act to purchase lands necessary for the navigation, and was required to inrol the conveyances of such purchased lands with the clerk of the peace, copies whereof were to be good evidence in all courts, the court, after a lapse of sixty-five years from the time of the purchase of certain lands, during which no application had been made to the company to inrol the conveyances, refused to grant a mandamus to that effect on the refusal of the company to do so. Reg. v. Leeds and Liverpool Canal Co., 3 P. & D. 174; 11 A. & E. 316.

—— Necessity of Writing.]—Under an act, proprietors of lands were authorised to contract for, sell, and convey their lands to a canal company; such "contracts, agreements, sales, exchanges, conveyances and assurances," were to be valid to all intents and purposes; were to be inrolled with the clerk of the peace, and copies thereof to be evidence; and, upon payment of the sum agreed on for the purchase of lands, such lands were to be vested in the canal company:—Held, that a conveyance of land under this act must be in writing. Doe d. Robins v. Warwick Canal Co., 2 Bing. (N.C.) 483; 2 Scott, 717.

Where an act enacted, in one clause, that after any land should have been set and ascertained for making the canal, it should be lawful for all persons seised or possessed of or interested in such lands, to contract for, sell and convey them to the company, and that all such contracts, sales, and assurances should be valid and effectual in law, and all such contracts, &c., should be made at the expense of the company and inrolled with the clerk of the peace, and copies signed by the clerk of the peace should be evidence; and a subsequent clause enacted, that upon payment of such sums of money as should be contracted or agreed for between the parties, or determined and adjusted by the commissioners, or assessed by a jury, in manner thereinbefore mentioned, the lands should be vested in the company:—Held, that, by reference to the former clause, the contract, in order to vest the lands in the company, must be in writing, and that, therefore, proof of payment by the company, for particular lands identified in evidence, was not sufficient proof of title in the company. Harborough (Earl) v. Shardlow, 7 M. & W. 87; 2 Railw. Cas. 253; 10 L. J., Ex. 245.

—— Presumption of Agreement—Acquiescence.]—A canal company having power to purchase lands for gross sums or for annual rent charges, to be determined by commissioners in cases of disability, took possession of the lands of an infant, on an agreement with his tenant, and after an award by the commissioners of the gross sum or annual rent charge which ought to be paid, but which award was invalid, no one being party to it who had power to bind the infant's interest, the awarded gross sum was paid by the company to the steward, on an agreement for its return if the land was not conveyed to the company on the infant attaining his majority. No conveyance was executed and the purchase-money was returned, but the company continued in the use of the land for their canal, paying to the landowner for forty years after he attained his majority a rent of nearly the amount awarded by the commissioners. The company also, with his knowledge, purchased the interests of leaseholders in the land:—Held, first, that an agreement could not be presumed to have been entered into or ratified by the landowner for a sale of the fee in consideration of a rent charge. Somersetshire Coal Canal Co. v. Harcourt, 2 De G. & J. 596; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 671; 6 W. R. 670.

Held, secondly, that an ejectment brought by the landowner and the intended erection of a bridge by him, ought to be restrained by injunction on the ground of acquiescence, the company undertaking to put in force their parliamentary powers (which had not expired), to acquire the land. Ib.

—— Rights Incidental to Conveyance—Exclusive Letting of Boats.]—A company was empowered by an act to make a canal, and to purchase lands for the purpose of the navigation, and upon payment of the purchase money the fee simple of the lands was to be vested in the company for the use of the navigation, but to or for no other use or purpose whatsoever. By a subsequent act the company was empowered to make a reservoir, for the purpose of supplying the canal with water, and to purchase land for that purpose, and all the powers of the first act were extended to making the reservoir. The acts contained various clauses reserving rights of fishery to the owners of the lands through which the canal and reservoir were made, and enabling them to use pleasure boats thereon without paying toll, but prohibiting the passage of any boats carrying passengers or goods for hire, except upon payment of toll. The canal and reservoir, and all the rights of the canal company, were subsequently vested in a railway company by act of parliament, in the same manner and to the same extent as the canal company could have held or used the same, and all the powers of the canal acts were extended to the railway company. The canal company purchased from the plaintiff's ancestor land, upon which the company made the reservoir, and took a conveyance of it in fee to a trustee for the company. Two questions being raised, first, whether the railway company could lawfully let out boats for hire upon the reservoir; and secondly, whether they could lawfully use the reservoir for any other purposes than for supplying the canal with water:—Held, by Lord Campbell, C.J., that, under these statutes, there was not a universal prohibition against the railway company using the reservoir for any other purpose, except that of feeding the canal, but that all uses of it, whether by pleasure boats or otherwise, other than for the purposes of navigation, whereby the grantor of the land, or his heirs or assigns, were prejudiced, was unlawful, but that the plaintiff, not being a shareholder, could not rely upon the improper applications of the corporate funds to this purpose. Per Coleridge, J., and Wightman, J., that the railway company could not lawfully let out pleasure boats for hire upon the reservoir, or use it for any other purposes of profit, except those contemplated by the statutes under which they were incorporated, as the land was vested in them for the use of the navigation, and for no other use or purpose, and also because such use of the reservoir would derogate from the rights of adjacent landowners; and lastly, because it involved a disposal of the corporate funds to a purpose foreign to the object of their incorporation, and might be prejudicial to the shareholders. Per Erle, J., that the canal company and the railway company acquired, by the conveyance of the land to them, all the incidents to an estate in fee simple not expressly prohibited by their acts, with the specified duty superadded of using it for the purpose of the navigation, and of not using it for any purpose inconsistent with that object, and that therefore they might lawfully use the reservoir with pleasure boats, or in any other manner which did not impede the performance of the statutory duty. Bostock v. North Staffordshire Ry., 3 C. L. R. 1027; 4 El. & Bl. 798; 24 L. J., Q. B. 225; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 921. See S. C. in equity, 25 L. J., Ch. 325; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 248; 4 W. R. 336.

—— Towing Path—Dedication to Public.]—Land acquired by a company under an act of parliament for the purposes of their undertaking as specified by such act may be dedicated by them as a public highway, if such use by the public be not incompatible with the objects prescribed by the act. Therefore, where land was acquired and used by a canal company under their statutes for the purposes of a towing path, and it appeared that the use of it as a public footpath was not inconsistent with its use as a towing path by the company:—Held, that the company could dedicate the land as a public footpath subject to its use by them as a towing path. Rex v. Leake (5 B. & Ad. 469) approved and followed. Grand Junction Canal Co. v. Petty, 57 L. J., Q. B. 572; 21 Q. B. D. 273; 59 L. T. 767; 36 W. R. 795; 52 J. P. 692—C. A.

Time for—When Limited.]—An act of the 51 Geo. 3, for making the Bridgewater and Taunton canal, after reciting that the making of that canal would be very prejudicial to the tolls authorised to be levied and collected from the Tone navigation, authorised and required the canal company within three calendar months to contract and agree with the conservators of the river Tone navigation and other persons, proprietors of shares or parts of shares, or otherwise interested therein, for the absolute purchase of their several and respective estates, rights and interests in and to the same; and also to contract and agree with the overseers of the poor for the time being of the town of Taunton, and the several parishes of Taunton St. Mary Magdalen and Taunton St. James, for the absolute purchase of certain respective estates, rights and interests of the town and parishes, under and by virtue of the therein-recited acts. This act was repealed by the 5 Geo. 4:—Held, by Bayley and Littledale, JJ., that the words "within three calendar months" applied to both branches of the clause, and that the canal company, therefore, was bound to have contracted within that period with the overseers of the parishes of Taunton; and not having done so, they could not afterwards compel them to sell their interest; and by Parke, J., that, whether the right to purchase that interest was limited to three months or not, at all events it was gone when the 51 Geo. 3 was repealed. Tone Conservators v. Ash, 10 B. & C. 349; 8 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 226.

—— When not Fixed.]—If an act is obtained by a company, authorising them to make a canal, and for that purpose to take certain lands specified in the act, on giving compensation to the owners in the manner pointed out, but the act contains no limitation of time within which those powers are to be exercised, the company is entitled to commence those works, and avail themselves of the provisions of the act after any lapse of time, however great; and the owner, if dissatisfied, cannot restrain, and has no remedy against them in a court of law. Thicknesse v. Lancaster Canal Co., 4 M. & W. 472; 8 L. J., Ex. 49; 3 Jur. 11.

Vesting of Title.]—In 1779, P. demised land, of which he was seised, to M. & Co., for term of sixty-five years. In 1794, an act was obtained by the Swansea Canal Company, for the purpose of making a canal through part of the land in question; and it was enacted that upon payment or tender of certain sums of money, adjusted by commissioners or assessed by a jury, for the purchase of any such lands, it should be lawful for the company to enter upon such lands, or before such payment or tender, by leave of the owners or occupiers; and that, thereupon, such land should be vested in the company for the purposes of the act. In 1797, and during the continuance of the lease, B. entered into an arrangement with M. & C., the lessees, by which a canal made by the latter was extended through part of the same land, and formed a continuation of the Swansea canal. No payment or satisfaction was made or agreed to be made to the owners of the lands, but everything was done by B. with the consent and in accordance with the wishes of such owners and proprietors. Upon the termination of the lease of 1779, the assignees of the reversion brought ejectment against the assignee of B., who continued in possession of the canal made upon the land demised:—Held, that the mere consent of the owner of the property to the construction of the canal did not bring the case within the act; and that the assignees were entitled to the possession of the land. Doe d. Patrick v. Beaufort (Duke), 6 Ex. 498.

—— To Ownership in the Soil.]—A. was empowered by acts to make a canal, and he was authorised to supply the canal from brooks within five hundred yards thereof, to dig and trench the adjacent land, and remove earth, trees and other obstructions thereon, for making, using, and maintaining the canal, towing-paths, trenches and watercourses, with similar powers as to roads and other conveniences connected with the canal; to enclose and appropriate such parts of the land as should be proper for wharfs or quays; to set up posts, ditches and fences in places necessary for separating the towing-paths from the adjacent lands; to lay earth and other materials requisite for the works, and do all things necessary for the making, maintaining and convenient use of the canal. It was provided that nothing should authorise A. to use the lands for any other purpose than that of the navigation. Provisions were made for the purchase and sale of such lands as should be wanted for assessing the price and the damages to be paid by A. for the use of or injury to the lands; and if he should be in possession of any lands for a certain space of time without using them for the canal, he was to re-convey his right and interest therein; and it was provided that the works and things made in forming a certain part of the canal should become the property of A.:—Held, that no right to the soil of the lands adjoining to the canal, and applied to the purposes thereof under the powers of the act (not being those comprehended under the last-mentioned proviso), passed to A. where there had been no actual purchase. Doe d. Reg. v. York (Archbishop), 14 Q. B. 81; 19 L. J., Q. B. 242.

Where it appeared that for the purpose of making and maintaining the towing path of a canal, the ownership of the soil was not necessary:—Held, that a mere easement and not the soil had been acquired by the company. Badger v. South Yorkshire Railway and River Don Co., 1 El. & El. 347; 28 L. J., Q. B. 118; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 459; 7 W. R. 130—Ex. Ch.

—— Proof of Ownership.]—Provisions in different acts of parliament appointed conservators of a river navigation with full powers to do what was necessary for carrying the object of the acts into effect, including powers to purchase lands and levy tolls. The conservators executed the powers of the acts so far as related to the improvement of the river navigation and the making of towing-paths, and they levied tolls. There was no evidence that they had actually purchased any of the land which lay along the course of navigation and had been used to form the towing paths:—Held, that as the acts might be carried into effect without purchasing, the burden of proof lay on the conservator to show that they had purchased, and since they had failed to show it they were not entitled to be treated as owners of the soil of the towing-paths. Lee Conservators v. Button, 51 L. J., Ch. 17; 6 App. Cas. 685; 45 L. T. 385; 30 W. R. 233; 46 J. P. 164—H. L.

Compensation—Proceedings to Compel.]—The court will not grant a mandamus to compel a canal company, pursuant to the provisions of an act, to proceed to an assessment of the value of land, taken by them for the purposes of their canal; and also of the recompense to be made for the damages thereby sustained; if the parties interested in the land do not make their application to the court within a reasonable time after the land was taken by the company; especially, if the parties have another remedy by ejectment. Rex v. Stainforth and Keadby Canal Co., 1 M. & S. 32; 14 R. R. 389.

In order to induce the court to issue a mandamus to a canal company, to make compensation to a claimant, a clear refusal on the part of the company must be shown; mere delay in attending to the claim is not sufficient. Reg. v. Wilts and Berks Canal Co., 8 D. P. C. 623; 4 Jur. 848. See Reg. v. Thames and Isis Navigation, 8 A. & E. 201.

—— Persons Entitled.]—Under a clause in an act giving compensation for the value of lands, tenements, and hereditaments, or for damage done thereto, the tithe-owner is not entitled to compensation for the injury done to him by the conversion of titheable land taken for the purpose of the navigation, and covered with water. Rex v. Nene Outfall Commissioners, 4 M. & Ry. 647; 9 B. & C. 875; 8 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 1.

—— Amount Recoverable.]—By 9 Geo. 4, c. 98, the undertakers of the Aire and Calder Navigation were empowered to make a navigable canal from certain points mentioned in the act, and also to construct a railroad from such canal to a certain highway, and for such purpose to enter upon any lands, making satisfaction as thereinafter mentioned; and it was provided, that, in case of any disputes between the undertakers and the parties interested in the lands taken, used, damaged, or affected by execution of any of the powers of the act, a jury should assess the amount to be paid for the purchase of such lands, and also what amount should be paid by way of recompense, either for the damages which should before that time have been sustained, or for the future recurring damages which should have been occasioned, and the cause of which should have been only in part obviated or repaired by the undertakers, and which could be no further obviated, repaired, or remedied by them. Other clauses provided that the company should agree for, or cause to be valued and paid for, the lands, which they were empowered to purchase, within five years after the passing of the act; that they should not deviate above 100 yards from the parliamentary line, and that they should complete all their works within fifteen years. A dispute having arisen as to the value of a piece of land, in which the contemplated railroad crossed the line of an existing railroad, a jury was summoned, who assessed the value and damages as follows:—Value of the land, 6*l.*; present damages, 0; future damages, 2,800*l.* At this time the undertakers had contracted or paid for all the lands required for their works, but had not executed the works between the termini laid down in the parliamentary map, and had deviated above 100 yards from the parliamentary line, and made a cut through land of their own:—Held, first, that that part of the verdict which assessed the future damages was void; for that, in order to enable the jury to make an assessment of future damages, the cause of injury must already exist in some work of the undertakers already done; and, secondly, that, unless the undertakers had finally abandoned the intention of making the cut in the parliamentary line, they had a right, at any time within fifteen years, to take possession of the land in question, on the payment or tender of the 6*l.* assessed as its value, and that they had a right to go on simultaneously with the making both of the cut and the railroad. Lee v. Milner, 2 M. & W. 824; M. & H. 275; 6 L. J., Ex. 205.

3. Right of Support.

See cases, sub. Mines and Minerals (under Canals, &c.), ante, vol. ix. cols. 1238 et seq.

Implied — Subjacent Minerals — Compensation.]—Ordinarily, where land is granted by private grant for the construction of specific works, the grant, in the absence of a contrary intention appearing on the face of it, carries by implication the right of reasonable and necessary support for the works to be constructed. The same principle applies to titles and rights created by act of parliament, and, where an express statutory right is given to make and maintain a thing necessarily requiring support, the right to necessary support is, in the absence of a context pointing to the contrary, implied to accompany the right to make and maintain the thing requiring support; and, in cases where a mode of compensation is provided for the owners of the lands furnishing such support, the reasons for implying that such right of support is intended by the act are overwhelming. L. & N. W. Ry. v. Evans, 62 L. J., Ch. 1; [1893] 1 Ch. 16; 2 R. 120; 67 L. T. 630; 41 W. R. 149—C. A.

Mines — Compensation for not Working.]—By a section of an act empowering a company to make a canal, it was provided that nothing therein contained should affect the right of any owners of lands to the mines and minerals under the lands to be made use of for the canal, and that it should be lawful for such owners to work such mines and minerals, not thereby injuring, prejudicing, or obstructing the canal. By another section it was provided that if the owners should in pursuing such mines work near or under the canal so as in the opinion of the canal company to endanger or damage the same, or in the opinion of the owners of the mines to endanger or damage the further working thereof, it should be lawful for the canal company to treat and agree with the owners for all such minerals as might be near or under the canal as should be thought proper to be left for the security of the canal or mines; and in case they should disagree then it should be lawful for certain commissioners at the request of the canal company or of such owners to summon a jury to assess what satisfaction such owners ought to receive from the canal company; and upon payment of such satisfaction such owners should be perpetually restrained from working such mines within the limits for which satisfaction should by the jury be declared to extend. Owners of a coal mine under and near the canal having given the canal company notice that they were going to work the coal, the company declined to purchase or pay compensation for leaving the coal, and the owners then worked the coal and thereby damaged the canal. The working was in the usual mode, without negligence and without doing unnecessary damage save in not leaving sufficient support:—Held, that the owners of the mine had a right under the act to initiate proceedings and to receive satisfaction for such minerals as should be thought proper to be left for the security of the canal or the mine, but were liable in damages for working the mine to the injury of the canal. Dudley Canal Co. v. Grazebrook (1 B. & Ad. 59) distinguished. Cromford Canal Co. v. Cutts (5 Railw. Cas. 442) approved. Knowles v. Lancashire and Yorkshire Ry., 59 L. J., Q. B. 39; 14 App. Cas. 248; 61 L. T. 91; 54 J. P. 103—H. L. (E.)

Where a private act of parliament, authorising the construction of a canal, empowers the canal company to give notice to mine-owners by the side of the canal to discontinue working adjacent minerals if the continued working is likely to damage the canal, and empowers the mine-owners to discontinue working if they consider that damage to the mines will probably result from further working, and in each case provides compensation for the coal unworked—but there is no statutory prohibition against working—the mine owners are not entitled to discontinue working and claim compensation on the ground that some injury may be caused to the canal by such working. Cromford Canal Co. v. Cutts (5 Railw. Cas. 442) and Knowles v. Lancashire and Yorkshire Ry. (14 App. Cas. 248), discussed and distinguished:—Semble, that if the private act imposed a prohibition upon working the mines to the danger of the canal, the canal company could not waive it. Chamber Colliery Co. v. Rochdale Canal Co., 64 L. J., Q. B. 645; [1895] A. C. 564; 11 R. 264; 73 L. T. 258—H. L. (E.)

Right of Company to prevent working within given distance—"Mines and Minerals"—Stone quarried from surface downwards.]—A canal company was empowered by act of parliament to prevent the owners of land adjoining the canal from working the mines and minerals within ten yards of it, but was required to give compensation for stopping any such workings:—Held, first, that stone used for mending roads, and worked by quarrying from the surface, was within the description of mines and minerals, Midland Ry. v. Checkley, 36 L. J., Ch. 380; L. R. 4 Eq. 19; 16 L. T. 260; 15 W. R. 671.

Held, secondly, that the company might prohibit the working of mines beyond the ten yards if in its opinion the working would endanger the canal, but that it must compensate the owner for stopping mines beyond the ten yards. Ib.

4. CONSTRUCTION OF WORKS.

Liability for Injuries—Time Limited for Construction.]—By a canal act, a company was restricted from any alterations of their canal after the expiration of two years. By the same act, a proprietor of a mill near the lower part of the canal was entitled to all the surplus water of it:—Held, that the erection of a steam-engine after the two years, to pump water into the upper part of the canal, by which the carrying power of the canal was increased, and the surplus water diminished by the enlarged trade, was an injury to the mill-owner, for which he was entitled to damages. Blakemore v. Glamorgan Canal Co., 2 C., M. & R. 133; 1 Gale, 78; 5 Tyr. 603; 4 L. J., Ex. 146. S. C., 1 Cl. & F. 263; 5 Bligh (N.S.) 547.

A clause in a second act relating to the same canal declared that the works thereby authorised should be completed within two years from the time of its passing, and that the money to be raised by it should not be applied to defray the expenses of any of the works not made within that time:—Held, that this clause not only limited the application of the money to the works completed within that time, but that no works should be carried on adversely to the interests of individuals, after the expiration of two years. Ib.

Remedy of Party Aggrieved.]—Where a particular jurisdiction is appointed under a canal act to determine all questions that may arise respecting things to be done in pursuance and in execution of the act, if the projectors of the canal exceed their powers, or do any act not strictly within the terms of the statute, by which any individual finds himself aggrieved, he is not confined to the particular jurisdiction, but the wrong is to be remedied in the ordinary manner. Shand v. Henderson, 2 Dow, 519; 14 R. R. 202. And see Rex v. Croker, Cowp. 26.

Deviating from Line.]—Though the court will not restrain an action of trespass against a company by a party, through whose estate a canal is cutting, for deviating from the line, because he has laid by and rested upon his legal rights, yet, if he files a bill to restrain their deviating, and then moves to commit them, the court will not do so without a trial by jury in a disputed case, and directing an issue at law. Agar v. Regent's Canal Co., G. Coop. 77 ; 14 R. R. 217.

Funds Insufficient—Power to Cut through Land—Rights of Landowner.]—Persons authorised by act of parliament to cut a canal and required to appropriate certain sums for the construction and maintenance of works to protect a harbour in which a canal was intended to terminate, not restrained from cutting through their own lands at a distance from the harbour, in the event of a present insufficiency of funds for the completion of the undertaking, pending an application to parliament for further powers to levy money. King's Lynn Corporation v. Pemberton, 1 Swanst. 244 ; 18 R. R. 62.

Persons authorised by act of parliament to cut a canal, if their funds are insufficient for the completion of the undertaking, may, on the prompt application of the owner of lands through which they are cutting, be restrained from proceeding. Ib.

Duty to Construct Bridge—Adjoining Owners.]—A canal company under their act of parliament were to make such bridges over their canals as two or more justices should "from time to time judge necessary, and appoint for the use of the owners or occupiers of the lands adjoining the canal." The respondent was an adjoining owner and obtained an order from the justices adjudging necessary and appointing one bridge to be constructed :—Held, that the canal company were bound to erect such a bridge. Birmingham Canal v. Hickman, 56 J. P. 598—C. A.

5. Lease and Mortgage of Canals.

Lease—Transfer of Right.]—The 8 & 9 Vict. c. 42, enabled canal companies to become carriers on canals, to lease their canals, and to take leases of others. Subsequently a railway company obtained an act enabling them to purchase the X. canal, and to exercise all its "rights, powers, and privileges" :—Held, that after the purchase, the railway company had authority to take a lease of canal Y., under the first act, this being a "right, power, and privilege" possessed by canal X., and which passed, on its sale, to the railway company. Rogers v. Oxford, Worcester, and Wolverhampton Ry., 25 Beav. 322. Affirmed, 2 De G. & J. 662.

—— Settlement of Disputes.]—Equity cannot compel a resort to commissioners appointed under an act of parliament to settle disputes between parties arising from a navigation ; a lease for years having expired, and the landlord proceeding to recover possession. Stanhope v. Pilkington, G. Coop. 193.

Pledge of Undertaking.]—By a canal act, the company was empowered to borrow and take up money upon the credit of the undertaking and the rates or duties made payable by the act, and by writing under their common seal to mortgage or assign over the undertaking and the rates or duties to the person advancing the money, as a security for the money so borrowed ; and a form of mortgage was given, whereby the company engaged to pay the interest half-yearly :—Held, that the property of the company and the rates or duties alone, were pledged for the payment of the moneys advanced ; and that the company was not liable to be sued for arrears of interest. Pontet v. Basingstoke Canal Co., 4 Scott, 182 ; 3 Bing. (N.C.) 433 ; 6 L. J., C. P. 177.

6. Liability to Repair.

Applicable to what Works.]—An incorporated company was authorised by act of parliament to make a navigable canal, the construction of which would interfere with an ancient drain. By one section of the statute the company was required to make a drain on each side of the canal, and parallel therewith, in lieu of part of the ancient drain which would be destroyed. By another section the company was required to make such arches, tunnels, culverts, drains or other passages, over, under, by the side of, or into the canal, and the trenches, streams and watercourses communicating therewith, and the towing-paths on the sides thereof, of such depth, breadth and dimensions as should be sufficient to convey the water clear from the lands adjoining or lying near the canal, without obstructing or impeding the same ; and to support, maintain, cleanse and keep in repair all such arches, tunnels, culverts, drains, and other passages :—Held, that the drains made in pursuance of the former section, in lieu of the ancient drain, were to be cleansed by the company, as well as those made in pursuance of the latter section ; and that a summary remedy given by the latter section, in case of non-repair by the company, was applicable to a default in cleansing the drains made in lieu of the ancient drains. Priestley v. Foulds, 2 Scott (N.R.) 265 ; 2 Man. & G. 175 ; 2 Railw. Cas. 422.

Lease of Canal—Neglect of Company to give Notice to Lessee.]—Where an act authorised navigation commissioners to lease the works, and the act put the duty of repairing upon the lessees, and in case they did not repair, authorised and required the commissioners to give them notice to repair, and, in case they neglected to finish the repairs in such period as the commissioners pointed out, authorised them to take possession of the tolls, and cause the repairs to be done themselves, an action does not lie against the commissioners, for that the commissioners had neglected to give the notice, whereby a lock in the line of the navigation fell in, and the plaintiff's barge was delayed in the canal, so as to cause him to lose the use of it ; the alleged injury not being the natural, necessary, and proximate result of the not giving notice. Walker v. Goe, 4 H. & N. 350 ; 28 L. J., Ex. 184 ; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 737 ; 7 W. R. 289—Ex. Ch.

Duty of Company, how Enforced.]—An order specifically to repair the banks of a canal, to stop gates, refused ; but, by injunction restraining defendant from impeding plaintiff from navigating, &c., by continuing to keep bank, &c., out of repair, &c., the effect of such former order was given. Lane v. Newdigate, 10 Ves. 192 ; 7 R. R. 381.

Non-Repair of Bridge—Personal Injury.]—

Plaintiff's husband, a bargeman in charge of a boat navigating the B. canal, for which boat toll was duly paid to defendants as trustees of the canal, moored his boat at one of the mooring places on the canal banks just below a bridge across a basin there communicating with a dock of defendants, called the P. dock. He then went into the town, and on returning thence from a public-house about two in the night, in crossing the bridge to get back to his boat to bed, he fell through a hole in the floor of the bridge into the basin and was drowned. The plaintiff, as his widow, brought an action under Lord Campbell's Act against the defendants, as trustees of the canal, and at the trial it appeared that the land, on which the bridge, basin or dock in question were constructed, was not originally part of the B. trust property, but was purchased by the late Duke of B. after the passing of the act under which the main line of the canal was made, and ever since the bridge, basin and dock had been built, eighty years before action, they had been used for the purposes of the trust like the rest of the trust property. The judge left three questions to the jury: (1) whether it was the duty of the defendants to keep the bridge and the accesses to the canal in repair; (2) whether the bridge was out of repair; (3) whether the deceased contributed to the accident by being drunk, and a verdict was found for the plaintiff for 400*l.* damages, leave being reserved to defendants to move on the question whether it made any difference in the liability of defendants, that the locus in quo was not part of the original B. system; and a rule having been obtained to enter a nonsuit on the point reserved, or for a new trial on the ground of misdirection:—Held, that there was no misdirection. The defendants, for hire and reward, permitting bargemen to moor their barges at certain mooring places on the canal, were bound to keep the whole of the premises, and all the ways to the canal over which the bargemen passed to and from their boats, in good repair; and that it was immaterial whether the way in question was or was not the nearest way; or that the locus in quo originally formed no part of the B. trust, it having been for many years past converted to and used for the purposes of the trust in the same way as the rest of the trust property. Shoebottom v. Egerton, 18 L. T. 364.

—— Declaration.]—The declaration alleged that defendants were possessed of a close and a navigable canal, which all the queen's subjects were entitled to navigate for reward to the defendants, and of divers basins and mooring places connected with the said canal and used for boats navigating the same and of a bridge across one of the said basins communicating with and leading to the said mooring places, which said bridge was among other things, for the use of, and was used by, boatmen navigating the said canal for reward, &c., or using the basins of the defendants or going towards or coming from the said mooring places. It then alleged a duty upon the defendants to keep the bridge in a safe condition for persons passing over it to and from the mooring places and a breach of that duty by knowingly and negligently suffering the bridge to be out of repair and in a dangerous condition for persons lawfully passing over it as aforesaid; and that J. S. was a boatman navigating the said canal, for reward to the defendants, in and upon a certain boat moored at one of the mooring places, and was lawfully passing over the bridge and using the same in manner and for the purposes aforesaid, without notice of its dangerous condition, and thereupon by and through the wrongful and negligent conduct of the defendants in keeping the said bridge, &c., as aforesaid, the said J. S. fell into the said basin of the defendants and thereby lost his life, &c.:—Held, on demurrer, that the declaration was good. The defendants invited persons navigating the canal to go over the bridge in the same way and sense that a shopkeeper invites the public to enter his shop, and they were bound therefore to keep the bridge in a safe condition, and to take care that there was no pitfall, trap or other dangerous thing in the way. S. C., 18 L. T. 889.

The declaration stated that the defendants were possessed of land intersected by a canal and cuttings and of bridges across the canal and cuttings communicating with and leading to certain docks of the defendants; which land and bridges were used with the consent of defendants by persons going to and coming from the docks; that they wrongfully and improperly kept the land, canal cuttings and bridges, and suffered them to be in so improper a state as to render them unsafe for persons lawfully passing along and over the said land and bridges towards the said docks, and that one G., lawfully passing over and using the bridges, through the wrongful, negligent and improper conduct of the defendants, fell into one of the cuttings and was drowned:—Held, that the declaration disclosed no actionable breach of duty on the part of the defendants. Gautret v. Egerton, 36 L. J., C. P. 191; L. R. 2 C. P. 371; 16 L. T. 17; 15 W. R. 638.

Action against Adjoining Owner for Excavations.]—By an act a canal company was bound to repair the banks of the canal; in an action brought by the company against the owner of adjoining land, for digging clay-pits upon his own land, and causing the bank to give way, there was some evidence to shew that the bank was not in good repair; but the judge directed the jury to find for the company, if they thought that the falling in of the bank was caused by the defendant having dug clay-pits:—Held, that the company was not entitled to recover, unless, at the time when the bank gave way, it was in good repair; and that question not having been submitted to the jury, a new trial was granted. Staffordshire Canal Co. v. Hallen, 6 B. & C. 317; 9 D. & R. 266; 5 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 154; 30 R. R. 333.

7. Liability to Fence.

Neglect of—Bridge over Canal.] — When a canal company is empowered to intersect highways and to construct bridges to connect the intercepted portions, and the canal and bridges are vested in it, and it is enabled to take tolls from boats passing the bridges, and the company erects swing-bridges, which the boatmen are entitled to open for the purpose of passing, and which when opened leave the edge of the canal unprotected, and there is not sufficient light or other means of preventing accidents, and the consequence is that while the bridge is lawfully opened at night-time, a person falls into the canal, without any fault on his part, the company will be liable to an action. Manley v. St. Helens Canal and Railway Co., 2 H. & N. 840; 27 L. J., Ex. 159; 6 W. R. 297.

A swing-bridge over a canal crossing a public highway when turned back for the passage of a barge along the canal, left a gap on the side of the road, without any fence towards the water. A., being upon the bridge whilst it was in this state, and the spot being dark, incautiously stepped back and fell into the water and was drowned. In an action by his widow and administratrix against the canal company, the jury was told that if they thought there had been negligence on the part of the company, and no want of proper care and caution on the part of the deceased, the plaintiff was entitled to a verdict; but that if they thought that the deceased had by his own negligence contributed to the accident, they must find for the company:—Held, a proper direction, and that upon the facts the jury was warranted in finding for the company, although of opinion that the bridge was not secured as it should have been. Witherley v. Regent's Canal Co., 12 C. B. (N.S.) 2; 3 F. & F. 61; 6 L. T. 255.

Proximity of Public Path.]—A company was possessed of a canal and the land between it and a sluice; an ancient public footpath passed through the land close to the sluice; there was a towing-path nine feet wide, by the side of the canal, and an intervening space of twelve feet of grass between the towing-path and the footpath. By the permission of the company, the intervening space had been recently used for carting, and ruts having been caused, the whole space between the sluice and the canal had been covered with cinders, and thus all distinction between the path and the rest of the land was obliterated. A person using the path at night missed his way, and fell into the canal and was drowned:—Held, that the canal was not so near the footpath as to be adjoining to it, so as to throw upon the company the duty of fencing off the canal, and that the other facts did not render the company liable for the accident. Binks v. South Yorkshire Railway and River Dun Co., 3 B. & S. 244; 32 L. J., Q. B. 26; 7 L. T. 350; 11 W. R. 56.

8. Liability for Overflow of Water.

Unusual Rainfall—Bursting of Banks.]—A company undertaking for their own profit to maintain a channel for carrying off water, and neglecting to do so effectually, is responsible for damage done to the adjoining land by reason of the banks giving way after an unusual rainfall, although other persons who were bound to keep the outlet of the channel of certain dimensions had failed to perform that duty, and had thereby occasioned an increase of water in the channel, without which its banks would not have given way. Harrison v. G. N. Ry., 3 H. & C. 231; 33 L. J., Ex. 266; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 992; 10 L. T. 621; 12 W. R. 1081. See also Hodgson v. York Corporation, 28 L. T. 836, ante, col. 1901.

A right of action against a canal company for negligently keeping their sluices, by reason whereof the canal overflowed, is not ousted by provisions in the canal act for compensation to parties affected by the works and, especially by the overflowing of the water over the sluices, those provisions relating to the due and proper management of the works, not to their negligent management. Cockburn v. Erewash Canal Co., 11 W. R. 34.

—— No Injury due to Negligence.]—Where a mine was flooded by water from a canal owing to an extraordinary rainfall, and it was found that no extra injury could be attributed to the precautionary measures adopted by the canal company to prevent the catastrophe:—Held, that it was a case of injuria absque damno, and afforded no ground of action, and that the compensation clauses did not apply to such a case. Thomas v. Birmingham Canal Co., 49 L. J., Q. B. 851; 43 L. T. 435; 45 J. P. 21. See next case.

Right of Action or Compensation.]—Under a navigation act persons who sustained damage by reason of the navigation were entitled to compensation. The trustees of the navigation had, under their control, a lock, a weir and clows, through which, when raised, the water of the river could be let off. During a flood, after a heavy rain, they kept down the clows, and by so penning back the water, caused the premises of the prosecutor to be overflooded and damaged:—Held, upon motion to enter a verdict for the trustees non obstante veredicto upon a mandamus, that the prosecutor was entitled to judgment; that the mandamus was sufficient, though it did not aver that his premises would not have been flooded under similar circumstances before the river was altered by the works of the trustees; that the proximate cause of the damage, the penning back the water, being done on account of the navigation, the trustees were as much liable under the acts as if they had committed a breach of duty, and that it was no excuse that it had been done skilfully, and that, unless it had been done, other works of theirs lower down, and the lands of others, would have been damaged. Reg. v. Delamere (Lord), 13 W. R. 757—Ex. Ch. See Dunn v. Birmingham Canal Navigation, infra.

Right to Impede Flow of Water.]—The owners of a canal being threatened by an overflow of flood water from a neighbouring river, and fearing damage to their premises situated on the banks of the canal, placed across it, at a point above their premises, planks reaching from the bottom of the canal to the coping stone, which was some inches higher than the surface of the canal water. The flood water afterwards broke into the canal at a point above the barricade of planks, and opposite to the plaintiff's premises, which were also situated on the banks of the canal above the premises of the owners of the canal, and, being penned back by the planks, the water rose in the canal until it flooded the plaintiff's premises. In an action to recover damages for the injury so caused:—Held, that the owners of the canal were not liable, on the ground that the water which did the mischief was not brought there by them, and that there is no duty on the owners of a canal analogous to that on the owners of a natural watercourse, not to impede the flow of water down it. Nield v. L. & N. W. Ry., 44 L. J., Ex. 15; L. R. 10 Ex. 4; 23 W. R. 60.

Discharge of Water.]—A company was by statute authorised to make a canal, and required to maintain it in good order for navigation by the public; preparatory to making some necessary repairs and improvements, they turned off the water into a drain (designed for that purpose), from whence it ought to flow, as on a previous occasion it actually did, into a public sewer, which was under the exclusive care and control of the corporation of Dublin; but, owing to an unforeseen obstruction in the sewer, the water was stopped and flooded the plaintiff's premises; and although the company became aware of the flooding—though not of the immediately efficient cause—it did not appear that they had taken, or could have taken, any steps to prevent or stop the discharge of water from the canal into the drain:—Held, first, that the company, while acting in exercise of their statutory powers, could not, in the absence of negligence on their part, be made responsible for the injury done. Boughton v. Midland Great Western Ry., Ir. R. 7 C. L. 169.

The jury having found that the flooding of the plaintiff's premises was caused by the obstruction in the corporation sewer:—Held, secondly, that there was no evidence of negligence by the company which ought to have been submitted to the jury. Ib.

Flooding of Mines—Working by Owner.]—A canal company was authorised to be made under the provisions of several acts of parliament. They had also, by a provision of the same statutes, the option of purchasing adjoining coal mines on receiving notice from the owner that he was about to work them. An adjoining coal owner, having given the statutory notice, and the company having refused to purchase, proceeded, as he had a right to do, to work his mines in the usual and proper manner, and thereby water from the canal flowed in and drowned his mine. The company was guilty of no actual carelessness in the management of the canal, unless it was carelessness to allow the water to remain in it while the mines were being worked:—Held, in an action by the adjoining coal owner against the company for negligent management of the canal, whereby damage resulted to his mine, that the action was not maintainable, inasmuch as the injury complained of resulted from the legitimate exercise by the company of statutory powers. Dunn v. Birmingham Canal Navigation, 42 L. J., Q. B. 34; L. R. 8 Q. B. 42; 27 L. T. 683; 21 W. R. 266—Ex. Ch.

Held, also, that the owner was entitled to compensation under the acts. Ib.

Obstruction by Weeds—No Liability to Remove.]—By a local navigation act, a corporation was appointed the undertakers for improving and maintaining the navigation of a river, with power to do all things it should think convenient and necessary for making, improving, and using the navigation, and to receive tolls from persons conveying merchandise on such river:—Held, that the corporation, not having the ownership of the soil of the river or any right to interfere with the river otherwise than for the purpose of navigation, was not liable for any injury to adjacent land from an overflowing of the river owing to not cutting the weeds therein, and to an accumulation of silt caused by staunches properly and not negligently erected for the navigation, if the weeds and silt so accumulated did not interfere with the navigation. Cracknell v. Thetford Corporation, 38 L. J., C. P. 353; L. R. 4 C. P. 629.

Negligent Construction of Sluices.] — But where, by a drainage act, the commissioners were to construct a cut, with proper walls, gates and sluices, to keep out the waters of a tidal river, and also a culvert under the cut to carry off the drainage from the lands on the east to the west of the cut, and to keep the same at all times open, and in consequence of the negligent construction of the gates and sluices, the waters of the river flowed into the cut, and bursting its western bank, flooded the adjoining lands, and the owners of lands on the east side of the cut close to the lower end of the culvert, which prevented the waters overflowing their lands to any considerable extent; but the occupiers of the lands on the west side, believing that the stoppage of the culvert would be injurious to their lands, reopened it, and so let the waters through on to the plaintiff's land to a much greater extent:—Held, that the commissioners were responsible for the entire damage thus caused to the land. Collins v. Middle Level Commissioners, 38 L. J., C. P. 236; L. R. 4 C. P. 279; 20 L. T. 442; 17 W. R. 929.

Altering Size of Tunnels.]—Prior to 1866 a stream was conveyed by a canal company under and across its canal through two wooden tunnels, for which, in 1866, the company substituted metal tunnels of less capacity; in consequence of which, after heavy rains, the streams, in 1873, flooded the plaintiff's lands adjacent to the canal:—Held, that the substitution of the smaller for the larger tunnels was in its inception an innocent act, without either injuria or damnum, and only became tortious upon the subsequent flooding, and that the statute of limitasions began to run from the time of the flooding in 1873. Devery v. Grand Canal Co., Ir. R. 8 C. L. 511. Affirmed Ir. R. 9 C. L. 194.

Evidence of Negligence.]—In an action for injury caused by the leaking of water from a reservoir belonging to a canal, it was pleaded that the damage was caused by the leaking of water through the banks of the reservoir and not in any manner whatsoever by reason of the execution of the powers of the act, but by the default of the plaintiffs themselves in sinking shafts and pits in their own land, and so causing large quantities of water which naturally lay in the underground soil in which the pits and shafts were sunk, and which formed the banks and support of the reservoir, to leak out, and flow into the shafts and pits:—Held, that the plea was bad. Barber v. Nottingham Canal Co., 15 C. B. (N.S.) 726; 33 L. J., C. P. 193; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 260; 9 L. T. 829; 12 W. R. 376.

—— Act of Servants.]—Where a work of a public character (as a canal) has been constructed under the authority of an act of parliament, a right of action for an injury not occasioned wilfully, nor by any act necessarily causing it, but arising from the user of the work (as, for instance, through the overflow of the water of the canal), must be founded on negligence, and negligence is the essence of the action; and although the jury has given a verdict for the plaintff, and it has been proved that the proximate cause of the injury was an act of the company's servants (as raising a floodgate), yet if it is doubtful whether that act necessarily must have caused the injury, and the jury also finds that there was no negligence, the verdict will be entered for the company. Whitehouse v. Birmingham Canal Co., 27 L. J., Ex. 25.

Liability for Damage by Percolation.]—See Evans v. Manchester, Sheffield and Lincolnshire Ry., post, col. 2037.

9. Liability for Obstructing and Fouling Water.

Removal of a Sunken Vessel.]—An act constituted a company for the purpose of making and maintaining a navigable canal, which all persons were to be allowed to use, on payment of certain tolls. The act also provided, in case of obstruction by any sunken vessel, the owners of which should not weigh it up without loss of time, that it should be lawful for the company to do so, and to keep the same till payment made of the expenses for so doing:—Held, that the act did not make it compulsory upon the company, after notice, so to weigh up a sunken vessel; but that, as the company had made the canal for their profit, and opened it to the public upon payment of tolls, a duty was imposed on them, at common law, to take reasonable care to prevent danger to the navigation; and that, therefore, they were liable for their neither weighing up nor giving notice of a sunken vessel, which damaged a boat navigating their canal. Lancaster Canal Co. v. Parnaby, 3 P. & D. 162; 11 A. & E. 223; 1 Railw. Cas. 696; 9 L. J., Ex. 338—Ex. Ch. S. P., Mersey Docks v. Gibbs, 11 H. L. Cas. 686; 35 L. J., Ex. 225; L. R. 1 H. L. 93; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 571; 14 L. T. 677; 14 W. R. 872.

Such a common-law duty need not be expressly alleged in the declaration; it was sufficient to allege facts from which the duty can be necessarily implied. Ib.

Injunction to restrain Party enjoined against Obstructing from bringing Actions.]—An injunction granted, restraining the stopping of vessels and the hindering the navigation of a canal, having been made perpetual at the hearing, a further injunction was granted on motion to restrain the defendant from bringing actions against the canal company. Grand Junction Canal Co. v. Dimes, 17 Sim. 38; 18 L. J., Ch. 419; 13 Jur. 779.

Fouling of Water.]—When a canal company pumped foul water into their canal, so as to make the canal a nuisance, it was no defence that the foulness was caused by other persons. Att.-Gen. v. Bradford Navigation Co., 35 L. J., Ch. 619; L. R. 2 Eq. 71; 14 L. T. 248; 14 W. R. 579.

A canal company was empowered by an act to take the water of certain brooks and use it for the purposes of their canal; the water in one of the brooks at the time the act passed was pure, but it afterwards became polluted by drains before it reached the canal, and it was then penned back in the canal and became a public nuisance:—Held, that the company was liable to be indicted for the nuisance, as there was nothing in the act compelling them to take the water, or authorising them to use it so as to create a nuisance. Reg. v. Bradford Navigation Co., 6 B. & S. 631; 34 L. J., Q. B. 191; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 769; 13 W. R. 892.

A declaration alleged that the plaintiff was possessed of steam-engines and boilers, and used, had and enjoyed the benefit and advantage of the waters of a branch canal to supply the same, and which waters ought to have flowed and been without the fouling or pollution thereafter mentioned; yet the defendant wrongfully discharged into the water of the canal foul materials, and thereby rendered the waters foul, whereby the plaintiff's engines and boilers were injured. The defendant pleaded not guilty, and that the waters of the canal ought to have flowed and been without the fouling mentioned. An arbitrator to whom the cause was referred found that the plaintiff, by permission of a canal company, made a cut from the canal to his own premises, by which water got to those premises, and with which water he fed the boilers of his engines. The defendant without any right or permission from the company, fouled the water in the canal, whereby the water, as it came into the plaintiff's premises, was fouled, and by the use of it the plaintiff's boilers were injured. Judgment having been given for the plaintiff:—Held, in the exchequer chamber, by Williams, J., Crowder, J., and Willes, J., that the verdict upon the issue joined on the second plea ought to be found for the plaintiff; by Wightman, J., Erle, J., and Crompton, J., that the verdict on that issue ought to be found for the defendant. Laing v. Whaley, 3 H. & N. 675, 901; 27 L. J., Ex. 422; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 930; 6 W. R. 750.

Held, also, by Erle, J., Crowder, J., Crompton, J., and Willes, J., that the declaration was good after verdict; by Wightman, J., and Williams, J., that the judgment ought to be arrested. Ib.

10. Tolls.

a. Taking and Amount.

Effect of Receipt—Claim for Salary.]—A navigation act directed that the salary of the clerk to the commissioners should be paid by the proprietors of the tolls. A person, seised in fee of a part of the navigation and tolls, granted annuities, and conveyed her part of the tolls to a trustee to secure the annuities, and to permit her to hold the conveyed premises and the profits to her own use till default in payment of such annuities. By a subsequent deed she conveyed the premises in fee to Y., together with other property, in trust to sell as in the deed was directed, and to receive the proceeds of such sale, and the tolls and profits of the navigation, and out of the several receipts and profits to defray the costs and expenses necessary for carrying the trusts into effect; to pay up, and if possible discharge the annuities; to pay off certain creditors, and to hold the surplus, if any, for her benefit. The trustee under the last-mentioned deed entered into receipt of the tolls, appointed a collector, and represented himself to the commissioners as a mortgagee of the tolls, and as having a control over them, and over the repairs of the navigation, but refused to pay the salary of the clerk. The annuities were still subsisting. The clerk sued the trustee for non-payment of his salary:—Held, that it lay upon the trustee, having conducted himself as above stated, to shew that he was not a proprietor within the meaning of the act. Tibbits v. Yorke, 5 B. & Ad. 605; 3 L. J., K. B. 38.

Held, also, on reference to the several deeds, that he was such proprietor, although he only held the tolls in trust to pay creditors and discharge incumbrances, and although there was a legal estate outstanding in a trustee to secure the annuities. Ib.

Regulation of, by Statute—Construction.]—Where a canal is made pursuant to an act, the right of the proprietors to toll is derived entirely from the act; and it is to be considered as if there was a bargain between them and the public, the terms of which are expressed in the statute; and the rule of construction is, that any ambiguity in the terms of the contract must operate against the company of adventurers, and in favour of the public. The proprietors, therefore, can claim nothing which is not clearly given to them by the act. Stourbridge Canal Co. v. Wheeley, 2 B. & Ad. 793. S. P., Barrett v. Stockton and Darlington Ry., 2 Scott (N.R.) 337; 2 Man. & G. 134.

A canal was formed upon two levels, which were connected by a chain of locks. Upon the upper level, there was no lock whatever. By the act for making the canal, all persons were at liberty to navigate thereupon with boats, upon payment of such rates and dues as should be demanded by the company, not exceeding the rates therein mentioned; and, by another clause, the company was authorised to take certain rates and dues for every ton of iron and other goods navigated on any part of the canal, and which should pass through any one or more of the locks; and power was given to the owners of adjoining lands to use pleasure-boats on the canal, without paying dues, so as the same did not pass through any lock, and were not used for carrying goods:—Held, that this act gave no right to demand toll for boats navigating the upper level of the canal, in which there were no locks. Ib.

A local act imposed the following duties on articles: "For every ton of coals, cinder, lime and limestone, gravel and manure, the sum of 4*d.*; and for every ton of butter or other goods, wares, merchandize, and commodities, the sum of 9*d.*:"—Held, that stone sleepers of a certain size and shape, intended for a railway, were only liable to the duty of 4*d.* a ton. Fisher v. Lee, 1 Arn. & H. 11; 4 P. & D. 447; 12 A. & E. 622; 10 L. J., Q. B. 1.

An act gave a toll of 1*d.* per ton on "stone, pebbles, sand, clay, manure, limestone," and of 3*d.* per ton on "other goods, wares, and merchandise" not before mentioned:—Held, that coprolites, which are fossil substances generally supposed to be the dung of animals, and which produce, when mixed with acid, sixty per cent. of phosphate of lime and forty per cent. refuse, and are then used as manure, were not stone or manure within the act, but came within the class of goods, wares and merchandize. Dant v. Moore, 9 L. T. 381.

Where a canal act directed, "that no boat navigating thereon, which should not be capable of carrying a greater burden than twenty tons, or which should not have a loading of twenty tons on board, should be allowed to pass through any of the locks, unless the owner or navigator of such boat should pay tonnage equal to a boat of twenty tons;" and it did not appear that in any part of the act a boat per se was made liable to any toll, but that all the provisions as to tolls applied exclusively to goods conveyed on the canal:—Held, that the clause in question was confined to boats carrying some loading, and did not attach upon an empty boat passing through the locks. Leeds and Liverpool Canal Co. v. Hustler, 2 D. & R. 556; 1 B. & C. 424.

A canal act gave a higher tonnage for light goods than for heavy goods. If a jury finds that certain goods were heavy goods when the act passed, ten years' subsequent consent of the company to consider the same species as light goods will not entitle the canal company to demand for these the toll on light goods. Staffordand and Worcester Canal Co. v. Trent and Mersey Canal Co., 6 Taunt. 151.

By an act, a toll of one shilling per ton was imposed on all coal, &c. (in addition to the ordinary toll) navigated on any part of the canal from a particular specified place, or from any place within two miles thereof:—Held, that this only applied to voyages commencing within the specified limits, and that no such additional toll was payable for coal loaded at a place more than two miles from the spot specified, although conveyed upon a part of the canal within two miles of that spot. Brittain v. Cromford Canal Co., 3 B. & Ald. 139.

A company was empowered by act to take for tonnage upon all coals and other commodities whatsoever, conveyed upon the canal, duties not exceeding 2½*d.* per ton, on entering or passing out of the canal; and also not exceeding 1½*d.* a mile for every ton of coal, except all dung, soil, marl, ashes, and other manure (other than lime, which was to pay half tolls), and except stone and other materials for mending roads, which was to pass toll free. By another section, no boat should pass through any of the locks, unless such boat should pay a duty equal to what would be paid by a vessel loaded with a burden of thirty tons, or unless it should be returning, after having passed on the canal, with a greater burden than thirty tons:—Held, that a boat laden with thirty-eight tons of manure, which had entered the canal and passed along it without paying toll, was not liable to pay any toll on returning through the lock empty, after discharging her cargo. Grantham Canal Navigation v. Hall, 3 Railw. Cas. 710; 13 M. & W. 114; 13 L. J., Ex. 283. Affirmed 14 M. & W. 880; 15 L. J., Ex. 63—Ex. Ch.

Under a canal act, imposing a toll "on coals, lime, timber, bricks, stone, and all other goods, wares or merchandize whatsoever," gravel and materials for the repair of turnpike roads are liable to toll. Coulton v. Ambler, 3 Railw. Cas. 724, n.; 13 M. & W. 403; 14 L. J., Ex. 10.

By a canal act a company was empowered to make a canal, to be called the Union Canal, from L. to N., with a cut from G. to M. It being found impracticable to carry the work to N., another act was passed, enabling them to vary the line of the cut from G. to M., which was done accordingly. A third act was afterwards passed, for joining the Union Canal to the Grand Junction Canal, by means of a canal from G., to be called the Grand Union Canal, which was also done. By the first act the company was authorised to receive for coal navigated upon the Union Canal and cut a mileage tonnage of 2½*d.*, so as not to exceed a certain sum (5*s.*). By the third act, it was enacted, that they should not be entitled to receive more than 2*s.* 6*d.* per ton for coal navigated on the Union Canal, and thence on the Grand Union Canal, for a certain specified distance (to H.); and 2*s.* 1*d.* if carried beyond that distance. A mandamus issued, reciting that M. was aggrieved by the tonnage taken by the company on coal being higher from L. to M. by G., than if it were carried after passing G., upon the Grand Union Canal; and commanding the company to establish a uniform rate of tolls along the whole of their line, or to take tonnage on coal from L. to M. only in proportion to that carried from L. to G., and afterwards upon the Grand Union Canal, so long as they took less than 2*s.* 6*d.* and 2*s.* 1*d.* on coal carried from L. to G. and afterwards upon the Grand Union Canal. The return to the mandamus denied the receipt of unequal tolls:—Held, that the first act having authorised a mileage toll, and the last act prohibiting in certain cases more than a certain amount of gross toll, the power of making a uniform rate of toll was expressly taken away from the company; and that the first act having imposed such mileage toll on coal on the whole of the Union Canal and cut, and having only exempted it from such toll if it passed along the Grand Union Canal, the original toll still prevailed from L. to M. on the Union Canal. Reg. v. Leicester and Northampton Union Canal Co., 3 Railw. Cas. 730—Ex. Ch.

By 33 Geo. 3, c. lxxx., the Grand Junction Canal Company was empowered to take tolls for the passage of manure between Bramston and Brentford, and persons occupying lands through which the canal passed might carry manure without payment. By 34 Geo. 3, c. xxiv., for making a cut to Buckingham, the powers and authorities mentioned in the former act were to be exercised by the company and by the owners of lands on the new cut, as if re-enacted, and the like exemptions were to be allowed. By 35 Geo. 3, c. xliii., reciting the first-mentioned act, the company was empowered to make a cut to Paddington, and the several powers, authorities, matters and things in the recited act contained, except the rates, were to be used and exercised by the company, and applied for making the cut, and for ascertaining tolls, and in all respects as if re-enacted, and as if the cut had been part of the works authorised to be made by the first act. By 35 Geo. 3, c. lxxxv., for making a cut from Watford to St. Albans, reciting the before-mentioned acts, the powers granted thereby were to be exercised by the company and by the owners of lands as if re-enacted, and the like exemptions were allowed:—Held, first, that on the construction of the 35 Geo. 3, c. xliii., persons occupying lands on the Paddington cut could not carry manure on the canal free from toll. Tame v. Grand Junction Canal Co., 11 Ex. 786; 25 L. J., Ex. 222.

Held, secondly, that the provisions of the several public local acts with respect to tolls on different cuts, parts of the same canal, might be compared in order to ascertain the meaning of a clause in the Paddington act, alleged to create exemptions from toll upon the Paddington cut. Ib.

By an act a canal company was authorised to execute certain works for the purpose of making the River Tamar navigable for the distance of thirty miles, and in consideration of the great charge and expense which the company must incur and suffer in making and maintaining the works thereby authorised to be made and maintained, it should and might be lawful to and for the company from time to time, and at all times thereafter, to ask, demand, take, and recover the several rates therein mentioned for the tonnage and wharfage of all minerals, &c., which should be carried upon the navigation, canal, and collateral cut, or any of them. The company only completed the navigation to the extent of about three miles:—Held, nevertheless, that the company was entitled to recover rates in respect of the conveyance of goods along the navigation so completed by the company. Tamar Navigation Co. v. Wagstaff, 4 B. & S. 288; 32 L. J., Q. B. 295; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1324; 11 W. R. 951.

The Monmouthshire Canal Act provided that, upon auxiliary railroads made by private individuals under the authority of the act, the tolls should not exceed the rate charged by the canal company, which, for the articles of limestone and ironstone, was restricted to 2½*d.* a ton per mile; and it also empowered the canal company, by agreement with the landowners, itself to construct auxiliary railroads, on which tolls not exceeding 5*d.* per ton per mile might be charged. Certain landowners and owners of ironworks, and among others the lessees of the Beaufort works, formed a joint company, and, under the powers given by the act, constructed a railroad connecting a lime quarry, called the Trevil Quarry, with the several ironworks and with the railroads of the canal company. In the partnership deed of the railroad company, the lessees of the Beaufort works covenanted for themselves, their heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, so long as the covenantors, their executors, administrators, or assigns should occupy the Beaufort works, to procure all the limestone used in the said works from the Trevil Quarry, and to convey all such limestone, and also all the ironstone, from the mines to the said works along the Trevil railroad, and to pay a toll of 5*d.* a ton per mile for the same:—Held, that the covenant securing a toll of 5*d.* a ton per mile to the shareholders of the railroad was a fraud upon the canal company and the legislature, and therefore ought not to be specifically enforced by injunction. Keppell v. Bailey, 2 Myl. & K. 517; Coop. t. Brough. 278.

b. Reducing and Varying.

According to Statute—Construction.]—An act provided that the Monmouthshire Canal Company should not receive any higher rates of tonnage than should, for the time being, be taken by the Brecknock Canal Company; and the latter, by a resolution of a general meeting, and under their common seal, reduced their tolls:—Held, that the Monmouthshire Canal Company could not question collaterally the validity of such resolution, but was bound by it. Monmouth Canal Co. v. Kendall, 4 B. & Ald. 453.

Where a canal company was empowered to take such rates as should be fixed at a general assembly of the proprietors, not exceeding 1*d.* per ton per mile upon coal; and they were also empowered to reduce the rates at a general assembly held on certain notice; but no reduction was to be made without the consent of the major part in value of the proprietors; a contract made by individuals with the company, but not at such general meeting, whereby, in consideration that those individuals would make a navigable cut to convey water from their collieries, through land not within the statutable line of the canal, into the canal, and convey the same to the company, the latter should permit them to carry their coals through the cut and along the canal for 1*s.* per ton, the company paying back 6*d.* per ton, is illegal and void; 1st., as a speculation by which the company might gain more or less than the legislature intended they should take, under similar circumstances, from the public in general; 2ndly, as extending in effect the power of the company to purchase land beyond the limits assigned by the act; 3rdly, as enabling them to raise more capital than they were entitled by the act to do, by means of paying for land or works by a total or partial sale of their tolls; which tolls are made a security for the money subscribed or taken upon mortgage; 4thly, because the tolls could, in no instance, be reduced but at a general assembly, and this, in fact, operated as a reduction of the tolls pro tanto. Lees v. Manchester Canal Navigation, 11 East, 645; 11 R. R. 297.

By an act for making and keeping a river navigable, it was enacted that certain persons therein mentioned should be conservators, and that, for reimbursing them what should be laid out for the purposes of the act with 6*l.* per cent. interest until they had been paid the principal and interest of what they had disbursed or should thereafter disburse, every vessel navigating the river should pay to the conservators certain tolls, namely, a sum not exceeding 4*d.* for every weigh of coals; and that, in default of payment of such sums, it should be lawful to detain the vessel, and that, after the conservators should be fully reimbursed, certain less tolls, that is, the sum of 1*d.* for every weigh of coals should be paid, and no more. By a subsequent act, reciting that it was necessary to erect a lock on a certain part of the river, it was enacted, "that from and after the building of the lock, an additional toll shall be collected and paid to the conservators at the lock, viz. the sum of 1*s.* over and above the sum of 4*d.* for every weigh of coals granted by the former statute"; and the same remedy was given for non-payment: —Held, that as the two acts were in pari materiâ, the clause giving the additional toll, in the second act, was to be construed with reference to that giving toll in the first act; and that, so construing it, the true meaning was, that, until the conservators were fully reimbursed, they were not at liberty to take a less toll than that specified in the last-mentioned statute. Rex v. Tone Conservators, 1 B. & Ad. 561.

Where rates and duties were imposed on coals landed within a certain district, to be paid to commissioners therein named, and the commissioners were empowered to sue in the name of their clerk for the time being for "any penalty or sum of money due or payable by virtue of the act": —Held, that an action might be brought in the name of the clerk for arrears of rates and duties; although, by another clause, a power was given of detaining and selling the vessel and goods in case of neglect or refusal to pay the rates and duties. The act directed that any surplus of rates remaining in the hands of the commissioners should be annually invested in the funds until it should amount to 3000*l.*, and that after that sum should be invested they should reduce the rates, so as they should not, together with the dividends of the 3,000*l.*, exceed the charges annually expended in carrying the act into execution: —Held, that the commissioners had impliedly a power, after so reducing the rates, also to raise them again in case of necessity. Goody v. Penny, 9 M. & W. 687; 11 L. J., Ex. 289.

Held, also, that after the passing of the Weights and Measures Act, 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 63, the commissioners had power to levy the rates by the ton (they having been previously levied by the chaldron), without first applying to the sessions for an inquisition under s. 14. Ib.

By an act, a company was entitled to demand a fixed sum for goods carried upon any part of the canal, which rates should be equal throughout the whole length of the intended canal. By 8 & 9 Vict. c. 28, subsequently passed, proprietors of canals were empowered from time to time to alter or vary the tolls granted to them, either upon the whole, or for any particular portion or portions of such canals, according to local circumstances, or the quantity of traffic or otherwise, as they should think fit, with a proviso that such tolls were to be charged equally to all persons, and after the same rate, whether per mile or per ton per mile, in respect of all boats of the like description passing along or using the same portion of the canal, and all goods of the like description conveyed or propelled in a like boat, passing along or using the same portion of the canal, under the like circumstances: —Held, that it was competent to the company to take a proportionally less toll per ton per mile for goods carried a given distance (five miles) along any part of the canal, than for goods carried less than that distance. Strick v. Swansea Canal Co., 16 C. B. (N.S.) 245; 10 L. T. 460; 12 W. R. 711.

Held, also, that it was competent to the company to agree to carry at a lower rate for a particular individual, in consideration of a large guaranteed minimum toll, in order to enable the company to enter into a successful competition with a rival line of railway. Ib.

c. Distraining for.

Seizure of Goods—Right to Sell.]—A canal act gave a company tolls for all goods carried along the canal, which tolls, if not paid upon demand, they were empowered to recover by action; or they might seize the goods or other things in respect whereof such rates ought to have been paid, and the boat or other vessel laden therewith, and detain the same until payment of such rates, and all arrears due from the owner of the boats; and if such goods were not redeemed within seven days after the taking thereof, the same were to be appraised and sold as in case of a distress: —Held, that this clause did not empower the company to sell the boats. Fraser v. Swansea Canal Co., 3 N. & M. 391; 1 A. & E. 354; 3 L. J., K. B. 153.

Held, also, that their right to seize was confined to the limits of the canal; and that, therefore, they were not authorised to seize goods after they had been landed. Ib.

Liability to Seizure—Trams.]—A canal company was authorised to demand and sue for certain tolls upon the carriage of goods, and to distrain any carriage or goods in respect of which any such tolls ought to be paid, and to detain the same until payment made of such tolls, and of all arrears of the same then due from the owner of such carriage or goods; and in case such distress should not be redeemed within five days, to appraise and sell the same, as in a case of a distress for rent; they were not expressly authorised to levy any toll upon carriages: —Held, that trams could not be distrained for arrears of tolls due from the owners for goods carried in them, if they were not carrying goods of such owners at the time of the distress. Jenkins v. Cooke, 1 A. & E. 372.

Wrongful Distress—Limitation of Time for Actions.]—The statute enacted that any action, brought for anything done in pursuance of the act, or in execution of the powers and authorities granted by it, should be brought within six calendar months next after the fact committed:—Held, first, that such a distress was a thing done in pursuance of the act. Ib.

—— Goods in the Hands of Third Persons.]—Held, secondly, that where an owner of teams let them to a third person, and during such letting they were illegally distrained for arrears due from the person hiring, while not carrying such person's goods, and afterwards sold, such owner might sue, within six months from the time of sale, on a count complaining of injury done to his reversionary interest by the seizure and sale. Ib.

d. Extinguishment.

Transfer to another Authority.]—To an action on a bond, the condition of which bound the corporation of London to pay an annuity out of tolls collected on the Thames, a plea that the Thames Conservancy Act had transferred all control of the tolls to a corporation called the conservators of the river Thames, is a good plea, as the performance of the condition had become impossible by the act of law. Brown v. London Corporation, 13 C. B. (N.S.) 828; 31 L. J., C. P. 280; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 1103; 10 W. R. 522—Ex. Ch.

11. Rights and Privileges of Taking and Using Water.

a. Rights of Company.

Under Particular Statute — Construction.]—By 8 Geo. 3, c. 38, a canal company was established, without power to the proprietors to appropriate to themselves water raised from mines along the line of the canal. By 23 Geo. 3, c. 92, another canal was made, giving to the company power to take gratuitously the water raised from mines within a certain distance of that canal, "provided the produce of such mines was carried along some part of the canal." By 24 Geo. 3, c. 4, both canals were incorporated, but the provisions as to each, contained in 8 Geo. 3, and 23 Geo. 3, were to be kept distinct and separate. The proprietor of a mine in the line of the first canal raised coal, one-third of which was afterwards carried along part of the second canal:—Held, that the company's privilege of taking mineral water did not attach to his mine on the first canal, by reason of the partial conveyance of the produce along the second. Finch v. Birmingham Canal Co., 8 D. & R. 680; 5 B. & C. 821; 5 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 17.

Where a statute directed that a mill owner should be entitled to receive the surplus water by a weir above a certain lock, which the company was bound to keep water-tight:—Held, that it was to be inferred that the company should not have the right of passing any water through the lock, though necessary to the lower part of the canal, except that which passed when barges were lowered through the lock. Blakemore v. Glamorgan Canal Co., 2 C. M. & K. 133; 1 Gale, 78; 5 Tyr. 603; 4 L. J., Ex. 146. S. C., 1 Cl. & F. 283; 5 Bligh (N.S.) 547.

Where a canal act gave to the proprietors of the navigation a power of making a canal and using the water of a river for supplying it, but provided at the same time, for securing to the owners of certain works the use of the surplus waters of the river:—Held, that the making of the canal ascertained and fixed the rights of the parties, and the canal proprietors had no right afterwards to enlarge the canal, and draw a larger quantity of water from the river so as to affect injuriously the works in question. A declaration charging it to have been the duty of the canal proprietors to abstain from thus enlarging their canal, and alleging a breach of that duty, sets forth a sufficient cause of action against them. Glamorganshire Canal Co. v. Blakemore, 1 Cl. & F. 262.

A clause in a canal act declared that the works thereby authorised should be completed within two years from the time of its passing, and that the money to be raised by it should not be applied to defray the expenses of any of the works not made within the time:—Held, that this clause not only limited the application of the money to works completed within that time, but that no works should be carried on adversely to the interest of individuals, after the expiration of the two years. A declaration framed on such a clause, and alleging for breach that works were so adversely carried on after the expiration of the two years, was held to contain a sufficient legal statement of a cause of action. Ib.

—— To Surface Water.]—Semble, that owners of a canal, who have a right, under their act, to supply the canal with water from all brooks, streams, and water-courses within 1,000 yards of the canal, are not entitled to the mere surface water of a road which ran along an open gutter into the canal, so as to prevent a local board of health from making such a system of drainage as was essential to the district, and which merely allowed such surface water to flow through gratings into the sewer. Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire Ry. v. Worksop Local Board, 23 Beav. 198; 26 L. J., Ch. 345; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 304; 5 W. R. 279.

An injunction granted to restrain a board of health from opening communications between the side sewers, which drained the neighbouring houses, and the main sewer, so long as the main sewer ran into and polluted a canal, without first obtaining the consent of the company. Ib.

—— Pumping Water from Different Levels.]—A canal had three levels, of which A. was the highest, B. the middle, and C. the lowest level. The canal proprietors (though without authority under their act to do so) erected engines between the C. level and the plaintiff's mill forge, and pumped back the water which, after serving the purposes of navigation in levels A. and B., had flowed into level C. Afterward a new act, repealing former acts, and re-enacting their provisions with alterations and additions, was passed. The 15th section gave the proprietors authority to maintain engines for supplying the canal with water, and to have reservoirs and feeders supplied from all brooks, streams, &c., from which they were lawfully supplied before the passing of the act, and "from time to time to raise the water of the canals from one level to another, or to any reservoirs, and for any of the purposes aforesaid to use such engines as they should should judge proper, making full satisfaction for all damages sustained by the owners of any mills, forges, brooks, streams, &c., taken, used, removed, diverted, or injured." By s. 80, the proprietors were forbidden to take for the use of the canal any water out of the river above the plaintiff's forge, and they were directed to maintain flood-weirs, so that all waste water running into level C., not required for that canal, should flow into the river above the plaintiff's forge. The proprietors pumped up as before the water out of the level C. back into the level A., in consequence of which, except on extraordinary occasions, no water escaped over the weirs into the river:—Held, that they were entitled to do so, and that such pumping back of the water from one level of the canal to the other did not give the plaintiff a right to compensation. Ellwell v. Birmingham Canal Navigation, 3 H. L. Cas. 112.

Under an Agreement—Opening of Sluices—Compensation.]—By an agreement, a canal company was authorised to open the sluices of a lock at other times than when boats or barges navigating the canal were passing, or about to pass, through the lock, and to take water for maintaining the navigation of the canal below the lock, paying to the plaintiff a weekly rent for each occasion when water was so taken. To this there was a proviso, that the company might, once a year, let out the water for the purpose of cleansing and repairing the canal, and refil it for seventy-two successive hours without paying rent. A boat having sunk in the lock, the water was let out of the pond below the lock, the boat emptied, and then the water was let into the lock and pond again:—Held, that this was not a taking of the water at a time other than when a boat was passing through, and consequently, that the plaintiff was not entitled to claim rent. Llewellyn v. Swansea Canal Co., 2 H. & N. 509; 27 L. J., Ex. 85; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 1005; 5 W. R. 763—Ex. Ch.

On another occasion, the company emptied the pond below the lock, with a view of repairing another lock below, and on the repairs being done, they opened the sluices of the lock in question, and let the water down to refil the pond:—Held, that there was a taking of the water for the purposes of maintaining the navigation, and that the plaintiff was entitled to his rent. Ib.

Claim by Prescription—When User Illegal.]—The S. and W. Canal communicated at its highest level with the B. canal at lowest level. Owing to the unscientific construction of the locks on the B. canal, during a period of upwards of seventy years there had flowed into the S. and W. canal from the B. canal, with every barge that passed up or down the latter into or out of the former, a much larger volume of water than need have passed or escaped if the system of locks had been more ingeniously contrived. The proprietors of the B. canal proposed to improve the machinery on their canal, so as to put a stop to this unnecessary waste or flow of water. The proprietors of the S. and W. canal sought to restrain them, on the ground that they had acquired a prescriptive right by user, during a much longer period than forty years, to that amount of water which they had enjoyed during such period. They also claimed the right by parliamentary contract and by special agreement:—Held, that the true construction of the acts of parliament cited failed to establish the claim under the parliamentary contract, and that no special agreement was proved. Staffordshire and Worcester Canal Co. v. Birmingham Canal Co., 35 L. J., Ch. 757; L. R. 1 H. L. 254.

Held, also, that had any such agreement or grant been at any time made by the company, it would have been ultra vires and unlawful. Ib.

Held, also, that as no grant could at any time have been lawfully made, no prescriptive right by user could be claimed or be deemed absolute or indefeasible under the Prescription Act, 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71, s. 2. Ib.

Held, also, that the doctrine as to use of water in natural or artificial streams does not apply to water passing through locks in a canal, such water being accumulated under the authority of the legislature, to be used in a particular manner for the benefit of the public. Ib.

—— User for other than Canal Purposes.]—A company incorporated for making and maintaining a canal, and having powers under their act to take water for the purpose of supplying the canal, cannot by user acquire, under 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71, s. 2, a prescriptive right to take the water for any other purpose. National Manure Co. v. Donald, 4 H. & N. 8; 28 L. J., Ex. 185; 7 W. R 185.

By an act a company was incorporated for making a canal, and empowered to supply the canal with water from certain rivers. In 1824, the company made a cut, and erected on it a waterwheel, for pumping water into the canal. The company occasionally used the waterwheel to drive a bone crushing mill. In 1853, an act, passed for converting the canal into a railway, after repealing the first-mentioned act re-incorporated the company, for the purpose of making the railway. By that act it was enacted that easements, &c., vested in the canal company should, after the passing of the act, be vested in the company thereby incorporated, for their absolute benefit; that all titles by possession "acquired by the canal company should be as good in favour of the company thereby incorporated as the same were good, immediately before the passing of that act, in favour of the canal company"; and that in case any of the works used for the purposes of the canal should, in consequence of the stopping up of the canal, be no longer required for the purposes of the act, the works which should be no longer required might be sold by the company in the manner provided by the Lands Clauses Act with respect to the sale of superfluous lands. The canal having been stopped up, and converted into a railway:—Held, that on the conversion of the canal into a railway, the right of the company to the flow of water into the cut for driving the wheel ceased, and that the railway company could not convey to a purchaser any right to such flow. Ib.

Cesser of Easement.]—An easement to take water to fill a canal ceases when the canal no longer exists. Ib.

Under Parliamentary Powers.]—When a corporation acquires riparian lands under parliamentary powers, all riparian rights, whether ordinary or prescriptive, already subsisting in respect of those lands, attach to such corporation; and if the special objects of its incorporation include purposes requiring the use of the water, the supply of water to which the corporation is entitled will be measured by the extent of user necessary for the purposes of the act, if such user would be more extensive than that to which the corporation would be entitled as the successor of the former riparian owner. Swindon Waterworks Co. v. Wilts and Berks Canal Co., 45 L. J., Ch. 638; L. R. 7 H. L. 697; 33 L. T. 513; 24 W. R. 284.

A canal company incorporated by act of parliament claimed to be entitled to the flow of water in a certain stream for the purposes of navigation under the act, as the purchasers under the act of a tenement upon which was an ancient mill. A waterworks company without parliamentary powers, acquired lands higher up the stream than the canal company, and diverted the water of the stream and stored it in a reservoir for the purpose of selling it to the town of Swindon, claiming to do so as a matter of right:—Held, first, that the canal company was entitled to the flow of water to the extent claimed under both heads. Ib.

Held, secondly, the user claimed by the waterworks company not being a user connected with the servient tenement, was inconsistent with the right of the canal company. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that such user being claimed as of right might be restrained by injunction without proof of substantial damage already sustained or imminent therefrom. Ib.

b. Rights of Other Persons.

User for Other than Specified Purpose—User for Twenty Years.]—A company was established by statute for making and maintaining a navigable canal; and by a section reciting that the erection of steam engines near to the navigation might promote its interests, it was made lawful for the owners of lands within twenty yards of the canal to draw off water sufficient to supply such engines, for the sole purpose of condensing the steam used for working them, such water to be returned into the canal (allowing for inevitable waste), so that no obstruction should arise to the navigation. The company sued R. for that he being possessed of land within twenty yards of the canal, and of a mill and steam-engine on such land, drew water from the canal more than sufficient for the sole purpose of condensing, and used the same for other purposes than of condensing, whereby the company lost and was deprived of the water. Plea, that the defendant was tenant of land, and was the occupier of a mill erected on the land and abutting on the canal, and of a steam engine in the mill, and that he and all occupiers of the land, mill and engine had for twenty years used as of right the easement of drawing from time to time from the canal such quantities of water as were necessary for other purposes than that of condensing, to wit, for the purposes of supplying the boilers of the engine with water, of generating steam to work the engine, of heating the mill, of cleansing the boilers, and of supplying water to a cistern on the roof of an engine-house on the land; and that the defendant, in exercise of his right, drew off the water for the purposes aforesaid. A mill of the defendant, called the Old Mill, with a steam engine, abutting on the canal, had existed more than twenty years; within twenty years a new mill with another engine had been erected adjoining to and communicating with the Old Mill, water passing from one to the other, and the machinery of one being worked by power from the other; and the water of the canal had been used in both mills (in the old during more than twenty years) for the purposes mentioned in the plea, except that of supplying a cistern on the roof of the engine house, there being no cistern in that place. The jury found that the buildings constituted one mill, and that the user proved had been as of right, and a verdict was taken for the company. On a motion to enter a verdict for the defendant:—Held, that the justification in respect of "a certain mill" was supported by the proof of the defendant having occupied and used the water for the Old Mill during twenty years, and that if the company meant to rely upon the more modern user in the new mill, they should have new assigned; and that the failure of proof as to the cistern did not entitle the company to an entire verdict on the issue joined, but that the verdict might be entered distributively, with nominal damages for the user not justified in proof. Rochdale Canal Co., v. Radcliffe, 18 Q. B. 287; 21 L. J., Q. B. 297.

—— When Grant Ultra vires.]—The company moved for judgment non obstante veredicto, on the same issue, and relied upon the act of parliament and others establishing and regulating their canal, which gave the public a right, for the purpose of navigation, to use the canal and adjoining wharfs and ways, paying certain rates, empowered the company to raise money on the security of such rates, and obliged them to convey all their waste water into the Duke of Bridgewater's canal:—Held, that the company could not, consistently with these enactments, have granted the water for other purposes than that permitted by the statute, and that an actual grant, if proved, for the purposes mentioned in the plea, would have been illegal, and no justification; and, therefore, that the grant for such purposes implied from twenty years' user was no legal defence to the action. Ib.

—— When Wrongful—Right of Action.]—An act empowered a company to purchase lands for making and maintaining a navigable canal, and contained provisions with respect to the conveyance of land, and its vesting in the company on payment of the price assessed by compensation. It was also provided, that manufacturers within a certain distance of the canal might, after notice to the proprietors of the canal, lay down pipes to supply their steam engines with water for the sole purpose of condensing the steam used for working such engines; and that if any dispute should arise with any person desirous of taking water for the above purpose, or should be in the use of taking the same, such disputes should be finally determined by commissioners. A declaration by the company stated that the canal had been made and maintained by them in pursuance of the act; that the defendant having steam engines within the prescribed distance of the canal, had, after notice to the company, laid down pipes communicating with the canal, and that the defendant had used the water drawn off by such pipes for other purposes than condensing the steam of his engines. It was objected that the declaration did not show any conveyance or ownership of the canal or water; nor did it show any invasion of a private right, or damage to such a right, inasmuch as the act complained of, if wrongful, was clearly prohibited by statute, so that a repetition of the act could never be used as evidence that it was rightful; also, that the remedy was by indictment as for a violation of a statutory provision; and further that the complaint was a dispute over which the commissioners under the act had exclusive jurisdiction:—Held, that the declaration was good; that it must be taken that the company was in possession of the canal, and that, without averment of special damage, the wrongful act appeared to be a damage to the company's right; that the disputes over which the commissioners had jurisdiction were disputes with persons either about to use, or in the actual use of the canal water for a rightful purpose, as to the mode of taking such water, and that the provision for reference to the commissioners did not apply to a mere wrongful act. Rochdale Canal Co. v. King, 14 Q. B. 122; 15 Jur. 896—Ex. Ch.

—— Acquiescence.]—By a canal act, the owners of steam-engines on the banks were empowered to lay pipes and take water from the canal for the purpose of condensing steam. In 1830 K. built a steam-engine, and laid pipes to the canal, with the cognisance of the canal company, and used the water for the purpose of raising as well as condensing steam, till the year 1847, when disputes arose, and an action was brought by the company, who recovered 1*s.* damages. K. continued to take the water, and the company filed their bill, praying that he might be restrained. K., by his answer, alleged and produced evidence that the company were aware, when the mill was built, that the water would be used for raising steam:—Held, that the smallness of the damage would not prevent the court from interfering, and that the court would not compel the company to bring other actions, but that there was so much evidence of acquiescence that the court would not interfere on motion. S. C., 2 Sim. (N.S.) 78; 20 L. J. Ch. 675; 15 Jur. 962.

The court at the hearing, although the company's right had been established at law, held that it was bound by their acquiescence, and refused a perpetual injunction to restrain K. from taking water for the purpose of "generating" steam. S. C., 16 Beav. 630; 22 L. J., Ch. 604; 17 Jur. 1001; 1 W. R. 278.

An injunction was, however, granted as to another mill, acquiescence and encouragement on the part of the company not having been established. Ib.

Contract with Company—Violation of.]—A contract was entered into between a canal company and the plaintiffs, the owners of paper mills, as to the mode of enjoyment of the waters by which both were supplied. The company did acts in violation of the contract:—Held, that it was no answer, upon a bill for a perpetual injunction, to say, that the acts proposed would not be injurious, or even to prove that they were beneficial to plaintiffs; and the court, although no evidence was given of an actual damage done, made a decree for a perpetual injunction. Dickenson v. Grand Junction Canal Co., 15 Beav. 260.

Permission to use Superfluous Water.]—The defendant being the owner of a canal of which the plaintiffs were large customers, a mutual understanding was come to between the parties, that so long as the plaintiffs remained good customers of the canal, they should be allowed to use the superfluous water of the canal for the purposes of copper works, of which they were occupiers under an agreement for a lease with the defendant. The use of the water of the canal, though convenient and economical, was not absolutely essential to the plaintiff's works:—Held, that such an understanding did not form the foundation of an equitable right. Secus, if the plaintiffs, with the knowledge of the defendant, had incurred expense in establishing a manufacture for which the use of the water was absolutely necessary. Bankart v. Tennant, 39 L. J., Ch. 809; L. R. 10 Eq. 141; 23 L. T. 137; 18 W. R. 639.

12. Other Rights.

User by Steamers.]—There is a public right of user of a canal with boats propelled by steam power, if they do not injure the canal beyond what is occasioned by traction by horses. Case v. Midland Ry., 27 Beav. 247; 28 L. J., Ch. 727; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1017.

In a suit instituted by a carrier to establish the right of user of a canal with steam power, the court ordered the cause to stand over, and in the meanwhile experiments to be made, under the supervision of an engineer to be appointed by the court, with the view to ascertain the damage to the canal occasioned by the use of steam power. Ib.

Perpetual injunction granted to restrain a canal company from preventing a railway company using steam power on the canal; the railway company undertaking not to exceed a speed of three miles an hour. Ib.

Letting of Boats.]—A canal company cannot grant the exclusive right to let boats for hire over their water, so as to give the grantee a right to sue a third party for the infringement of his right. Hill v. Tupper, 2 H. & C. 121; 32 L. J., Ex. 217; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 725; 8 L. T. 792; 11 W. R. 784.

Wharfs.]—A canal act empowered the lord of any manor, and the owner of any lands through which the canal should be made, to erect and use any wharfs, quays, landing-places, or warehouses in or upon their lands adjoining or near to the canal, and to land any goods or other things upon such wharf, or upon the banks lying between the same and the canal, and also to make convenient places for boats to lie and turn in, so that the making or using the same did not obstruct or prejudice the navigation of the canal or any towing-paths or sides thereof:—Held, that an owner of land adjoining the towing-paths had a right to erect a wharf on his own soil, and to land goods on the towing-path, and convey them across it to his own wharf. Monmouthshire Canal Co. v. Hill, 4 H. & N. 421; 28 L. J., Ex. 283.

Access.]—A railway company had become owner of a canal by purchase, and it was bound, by several statutes, to keep it open and navigable. The plaintiff was the owner of a mill abutting upon a sort of bay in the canal, which he alleged formed part of the canal itself; this fact was denied by the defendant, who built a wall across the bay, so as to make the canal of the same width there as in other parts. The plaintiff filed his bill for an injunction to make the defendant undo what had been done, and to prevent it from doing more:—Held, that the court could not make the defendant undo anything done, but that the plaintiff was entitled to an injunction to restrain the company from proceeding to do more, on the plaintiff undertaking to bring an action at law to try the disputed right. Bradbury v. Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire Ry., 15 Jur. 1167.

—— Road over other Person's Land.]—The power given by a canal act, enabling the proprietor of a mineral district to make roads and railways over lands of other persons from his mines to the canal, does not restrict him to the shortest practicable route, but enables him to adopt any more circuitous route which in the bonâ fide exercise of his judgment he may find expedient, provided the point at which he joins the canal is within four miles of the boundary of his estate. Richards v. Richards, 1 Johnson, 255.

Saving time by avoiding a lock is a sufficient reason for preferring a more circuitous route for this purpose. Ib.

A canal act empowered the proprietors of mines and their lessees to make railways or roads across the lands of other persons, intervening between the mines and the canal, to convey their minerals to the canal. In 1843 an agreement was entered into between the lessees of coal mines and the owners of intervening lands to make a tram-road across them, subject to an annual rent of 5*l.* 5*s.* The lessees afterwards abandoned the tramroad, and without any consent, except that of a tenant, made a railroad across the lands in a different direction from the tramroad. They also erected an engine-house, for which they subsequently agreed with the mortgagee in possession to pay an additional rent of 1*l.* 15*s.* The defendant subsequently became owner of the lands, and gave notice to the lessees that he should require an annual payment of 35*l.*; and the lessees refusing to pay that sum, he gave them notice to cease the use of the railway, and subsequently he took up the rails. Upon a bill filed by the lessees:—Held, that the defendant was bound by the agreement and acts of his predecessors; that the abandonment of the tramroad for a railway had not affected the rights of the parties; that the defendant was not justified in taking up the rails; and that the plaintiffs were entitled to restore them, the defendant being answerable in damages for the loss sustained by the plaintiffs. Mold v. Wheatcroft, 27 Beav. 510; 29 L. J., Ch. 11; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 2; 1 L. T. 226.

Railways Crossing.]—A company was empowered to do all works necessary and convenient for constructing a railway, and among others to cross canals and make embankments in the line; and in particular to cross a canal of which the defendants were the proprietors, and to make the embankment over a valley near the same place. Subsequent clauses in the act restricted the company from doing anything which should obstruct the navigation of the canal, or any part thereof, and specified the height and dimensions of any bridge to be made and maintained for carrying the railway over the canal. The company, for the purpose of transporting earth from the higher lands on the south to the lower land on the north side of the canal for constructing an embankment, erected a temporary bridge over the canal, supported partly on piles driven into the bed of the canal:—Held, that the clause empowering the railway company to cross canals in the progress of their works was not restricted by the subsequent clauses which applied to permanent bridges. London and Birmingham Ry. v. Grand Junction Canal Co. 1 Railw. Cas. 224.

Although a railway company are not to act capriciously in regard to carrying out the powers of an act of parliament, the act constitutes them the judges of the most convenient mode of conducting the works. Ib.

On the construction of the Manchester and Leeds Railway Act, a general power authorising the construction of bridges and other works, either temporary or permanent, for the purpose of the act, and according to its provisions and restrictions, was held not to be restricted by preceding sections which authorised the erection of a certain number of bridges and forbade the making any other bridges, save as were thereinbefore provided for, or in any manner to obstruct the navigation save as thereinbefore mentioned. The company, having power to build a temporary bridge for certain purposes, were held entitled to use it for other purposes, provided they did not thereby occasion a greater obstruction to the navigation than they otherwise would have done, or continue using it for that purpose after the permanent bridge was finished, and dissolved an injunction against their erection of a temporary bridge. Priestley v. Manchester and Leeds Ry., 4 Y. & Coll. 62; 2 Railw. Cas. 134.

An estate was intersected by a canal under the powers of its act, and an accommodation bridge was built by the company, over which a private road, leading across the property to a high road, was carried. Coal pits were opened upon the estate, which, when the canal was made, had been used as a farm. For some time the coals were carried down to the canal by a tramway which did not cross the bridge. The coal-owners subsequently carried the tramway across the bridge (excavating the soil on the roadway on the bridge and approaches), in order to carry their coal to a line of railway on the other side of the property. An action for trespass having been commenced, and a writ of injunction applied for by the canal company, the coal-owners submitted in the action to judgment for 1*l.* damages and costs, and gave an undertaking not to repeat the trespass complained of. The coal-owners having, a few months afterwards, again laid down the tramway, but without breaking the soil on the bridge:—Held, that the undertaking given by the defendants formed a good ground for the interference of the court, without going into the question of their right to make the tramway. Neath Canal Co. v. Ynisarwed Resolven Colliery Co., L. R. 10 Ch. 450.

Licence to take Ice—Derogation from Grant.]—A canal company, in consideration of the lessee's expenditure on certain ice-houses on the banks of the canal, granted a lease thereof, with licence to take ice from a part of the canal:—Held, that the licence was not exclusive, but that it was a grant of sufficient ice to enable the lessee to fill the ice-houses; and that, so long as the lessee was able and willing to take this quantity of ice, the lessors could not derogate from their grant by subsequent licences which would interfere with it. Newby v. Harrison, 1 John. & H. 393. Affirmed, 4 L. T. 424; 9 W. R. 849.

Right to Open Locks — Prescription — Presumption of Lost Grant.]—It is not a valid objection to a claim of a lawful easement that it may possibly benefit persons other than the owner of the dominant tenement. Simpson v. Godmanchester Corporation, 66 L. J., Ch. 770; [1897] A. C. 696; 77 L. T. 409—H. L. (E.)

For a period beyond living memory the respondent corporation had exercised an uninterrupted right to open three river locks belonging to the appellant and his predecessors, in times of flood, for the protection of lands occupied by the corporation or their tenants. By a deed of 1689, a predecessor of the appellant who owned one moiety only of the navigation rights purported to grant to the corporation the right to open the locks in question in times of flood:—Held, that apart from the deed of 1689, the corporation were entitled by prescription or presumption of lost grant to the right claimed as an easement, and that such easement would be presumed to have been granted in respect of the lands of the corporation affected by the exercise of the right. Ib.

Fenders against Floods.]—On indictment for nuisance to a canal established by act of parliament, it appeared that the canal was carried across a river and the adjoining valley by means of an aqueduct or embankment, in which were several arches and culverts; that a brook fell into the river above its point of intersection with the canal, and that in times of flood the water which was then penned back into the brook overflowed its banks, and was carried by the natural level of the country to the arches, and through them to the river, doing however much mischief to the land over which it passed; that except for the nuisance after mentioned, the aqueduct was sufficiently wide for the passage of the river at all times but those of high flood; that the occupiers of land adjoining the river and brook had, for protection of their land, subsequently to the making of the canal aqueduct and embankment, erected or heightened artificial banks called fenders on their properties to prevent the flood-water from escaping as above mentioned, and that the flood-water had come down in time of flood in such force against the aqueduct and canal banks as to endanger them and obstruct the navigation; that the fenders were not unnecessarily high, and that if they were reduced many hundreds of acres would again be exposed to inundation:—Held, that the occupiers were not justified in altering for their own benefit the course in which the flood-water had been accustomed to run, and consequently they were indictable. Rex v. Trafford, 1 B. & Ad. 874; 9 L. J. (O.S.) M. C. 66. S. C., 1 M. & Scott, 401; 2 C. & J. 265; 8 Bing. 204; 1 L. J., Ex. 90.

Rights of Fishery.]—A canal act provided that the lord of every manor through which the canal and reservoirs thereto belonging should be made, should be entitled to the right of fishery in so much of the canal and reservoirs as should be made in, over or through the common waste lands within his manor, and that the owners of any other lands through which the canal should be made should also have the like right of fishery of and in so much of the canal as should be made in, over or through their lands wherein they had the right of fishery before the act:—Held, that the right reserved to the lord of the manor was confined to common or waste lands where the lord was owner of the soil, and therefore did not extent to open lammas lands, the soil of which was in various owners, the occupiers intercommoning for a certain part of the year. Grand Union Canal Co. v. Ashby, 6 H. & N. 394; 30 L. J., Ex. 203; 3 L. T. 673.

C. STREAMS, NON-NAVIGABLE RIVERS AND WATERCOURSES.

1. RIGHTS AND INCIDENTS OF.

a. Generally.

Natural Right to Flowing Water.]—Running water is originally publici juris, and an individual can only acquire a right to it by applying so much of it as he requires for a beneficial purpose, leaving the rest to others, who, if they acquire a right to it by subsequent appropriation, cannot lawfully be disturbed in the enjoyment of it. Williams v. Morland, 4 D. & R. 583; 2 B. & C. 910; 2 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 191; 26 R. R. 579.

Flowing water is publici juris in this sense only, that all may reasonably use it who have a right of access to it, and that none can have any property in the water itself, except in the particular portion which he may choose to abstract from the stream and take into his possession, and that during the time of his possession only. Embrey v. Owen, 6 Ex. 353; 20 L. J., Ex. 212; 15 Jur. 633.

The right to have a stream of water flow in its natural state, without diminution or alteration, is an incident to the property in the land through which it passes; but this is not an absolute and exclusive right to the flow of all the water, but only subject to the right of other riparian proprietors to the reasonable enjoyment of it; and consequently it is only for an unreasonable and unauthorised use of this common benefit that any action will lie. Ib.

The right to have a stream of water which flows above ground running in its natural course, is not by a presumed grant from long acquiescence on the part of the riparian proprietors, above and below, but is ex jure naturæ, and an incident of property; and an action lies for infringement of this right. Dickinson v. Grand Junction Canal Co., 7 Ex. 282; 21 L. J., Ex. 241; 16 Jur. 200.

Such a right in no way depends upon prescription or the presumed grant of his neighbour, nor from the presumed acquiescence of the proprietors above and below, as stated by Tindal, C.J., and Maule, J., in Acton v. Blundell (12 M. & W. 324; 13 L. J., Ex. 289) and Smith v. Kenrick (7 C. B. 515). Ib.

A right to the use of flowing water does not necessarily depend upon the ownership of the soil covered by such water. Lord v. Sydney Commissioners, 12 Moore, P. C. 473; 3 L. T. 1; 7 W. R. 267.

The right to the enjoyment of a natural stream of water on the surface ex jure naturæ belongs to the proprietor of the adjoining land as a natural incident to the right to the soil itself. He has the right to have it come to him in its natural state, in flow, quantity, and quality, and to go from him without obstruction, upon the same principle that he is entitled to the support of his neighbour's soil for his own in its natural state. Chasemore v. Richards, infra. And see Ennor v. Barwell, infra.

—— Water Percolating through the Soil.]—The principles which apply to the right to water flowing in a certain and defined course, whether in an open and a visible stream or in a subterranean channel, are inapplicable to water percolating through underground strata, having no certain course or defined limit, but oozing through the soil wherever the rain penetrates. Chasemore v. Richards, 7 H. L. Cas. 349 ; 29 L. J., Ex. 81 ; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 873 ; 7 W. R. 685.

—— Water from Natural Springs.]—In land there was a pond, formed in the gravel bed, and which had existed from time immemorial, and in which the water rose naturally from several springs at its bottom, and thence overflowed the western edge, and formed a rivulet, which ran through and supplied other ornamental ponds, being used for cattle, and supplying the gardens of the house. In 1855 the commissioners of sewers, in order to drain a populous district thereabouts, commenced the construction of a sewer in the parish near to these premises, under the centre of the public highway, through the bed of gravel, which bed ran also through the owner's land. This cutting nowhere approached nearer to the owner's property than seventeen yards. The sewer was properly made for attaining its object. The immediate effect, however, was to drain the springs in the bed of gravel, and to prevent them from finding their way into the pond, so that the rivulet ceased to be supplied with water, and in its turn to supply the other ponds on the estate. By 11 & 12 Vict. c. 112, s. 50, where any work by the commissioners done, or required to be done, in pursuance of the provisions of this act, shall interfere with or prejudicially affect any ancient mill, or any right connected therewith, or other right to the use of the water, full compensation shall be made to all persons sustaining damage thereby in manner herein provided :—Held, that the owner of the land was not at common law entitled to compensation from the commissioners in respect of the abstraction of water. Reg. v. Metropolitan Board of Works, 3 B. & S. 710 ; 32 L. J., Q. B. 105 ; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1008 ; 8 L. T. 238 ; 11 W. R. 492.

Claim by a plaintiff to use water which flowed from his land to the land of the defendant, and was there collected in a reservoir, whence it reflowed into the plaintiff's land. And a claim also by the plaintiff to the overflow into his land of a pond which flowed through the defendant's land into that of the plaintiff. The claims being supported by evidence of twenty years' use :—Held, that these were not maintainable. Ennor v. Barwell, 2 Giff. 410 ; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1233. See S. C., on appeal, 1 De G. F. & J. 529 ; 4 L. T. 597.

But held, that the plaintiff was entitled to water flowing from surface springs on the defendant's lands, and which naturally flowed, but not through perfectly-defined channels, into the plaintiff's lands, and was entitled to an injunction to restrain the defendant from diverting it. Ib.

In order to ascertain the geological formation of the land, the plaintiff was not allowed to cut down an embankment or to remove the soil ; but, on giving notice, he was allowed to enter and inspect it for the purpose of ascertaining the natural flow of the water. Ib.

Water, as it issues from a well or a spring, is not to be considered as produce of the soil, so as to make the right to take it in alieno solo for domestic purposes a profit à prendre. Such right is an easement only, and may be claimed by custom. Race v. Ward, 4 El. & Bl. 702 ; 3 C. L. R. 744 ; 24 L. J., Q. B. 153 ; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 704 ; 3 W. R. 240.

—— Surface Water.]—A landowner has a right to appropriate surface water which flows over his land in no definite channel, although the water is thereby prevented from reaching a watercourse which it previously supplied. Broadbent v. Ramsbotham, 11 Ex. 602 ; 25 L. J., Ex. 115 ; 4 W. R. 290. See Ennor v. Barwell, supra.

Water which squanders itself over an indefinite surface is not a proper subject-matter for the acquisition of a right by user. Briscoe v. Drought, 11 Ir. C. L. R. 250—Ex. Ch.

Rights of Fishing.] — See FISH AND FISHERY.

b. Ordinary Streams and Rivers.

i. Definition.

Though the word "stream" in its more usual application does imply water running between defined banks, it is not confined to that meaning —its essence being that it is water in motion as distinguished from stagnant water. Per Lord Halsbury. McNab v. Robertson, 66 L. J., P. C. 27 ; [1897] A. C. 129 ; 75 L. T. 666 ; 61 J. P. 468—H. L. (Sc.).

ii. Property in Soil.

Riparian Owners—Rights of.]—In an ordinary case, primâ facie, proprietors on each side of a river are respectively entitled to the soil, usque ad medium filum aquæ. Wishart v. Wyllie, 1 Macq. H. L. 389.

The soil of the alveus is not the common property of the respective owners on the opposite sides of a river ; the shore of each belongs to him in severalty, and extends usque ad medium filum aquæ ; but neither is entitled to use it in such a manner as to interfere with the natural flow of the stream. Bickett v. Morris, L. R. 1 H. L. (Sc.) 47 ; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 803 ; 14 L. T. 835.

Where two parishes are separated by a river the medium filum is the presumptive boundary between them. Rex v. Landulph, 1 M. & Rob. 393.

King James I., being seised of the lands of R., and other lands adjacent to Lough E. (which is a large, navigable, enclosed water in which the tide does not flow or reflow), and of the whole soil and bed of the lake, did by letters patent, grant the said lands and also certain islands, named, in Lough E., and also all other islands therein being parcel of the said lands or any of them, and also a free fishery in the lake or waters of Lough E., and all waters, watercourses, fisheries, fishings, &c., lying and being in or within the same :—Held, that the soil of Lough E., covered with water adjacent to the lands did not pass to the grantee to the middle thread of the lake. Johnston v. Bloomfield, Ir. R. 8 C. L. 68.

A river was, in general, the boundary of the counties of M. on the west, and E. on the east. It was proved that before 1808 the river had changed its course to the east. Evidence being given that the land left bare on the west side of the river was treated as part of the county of E., the jury found that the land was in the county of E. ; and the court refused to grant a new trial, on the ground that the judge had not directed the jury, that if the change of the course of the river had been gradual, the land left on the west side of the river would belong to the county of M. Ford v. Lacey, 7 H. & N. 151; 30 L. J., Ex. 351; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 684.

Observations upon the rights which can be acquired in a stream by a riparian owner. Kensit v. G. E. Ry., 54 L. J., Ch. 19; 27 Ch. D. 122; 51 L. T. 862; 32 W. R. 885—C. A.

And see further Cases, post, cols. 1966, 1967.

——Accretions.]—Accretions from the gradual change of the course of a non-navigable river, where there are no fixed boundaries, will become the property of the owner of the adjoining land. Ford v. Lacy, supra.

Where a non-tidal river gradually changes its bed, and thereby adds land to or takes it away from one side, the rule that the riparian owner on that side enjoys the gain or has to bear the loss applies not only where two different persons own the opposite banks, but also where the river bed belongs to a separate owner and not to the riparian owners. The question whether any particular land is part of the bed of a non-tidal river at any particular spot or time is one of fact, to be determined not by any hard and fast rule, but having regard to all material circumstances, including past and present fluctuations of the river, and the nature, growth, and user of the land. Hindson v. Ashby, 65 L. J., Ch. 91; [1896] 1 Ch. 78; 73 L. T. 468; 44 W. R. 184; 60 J. P. 40.

The accustomed course of a natural stream which a riparian owner is entitled to have preserved is the natural and apparently permanent course existing when the right is asserted or called in question. Where, by long-continued natural accretion of gravel, the bed of a river, and consequently the flow of water, have become permanently altered, it is not within the rights of a riparian owner, by removing the accretion, to restore the flow of water to its former state as to velocity and direction. Withers v. Purchase, 60 L. T. 819.

—— Alluvial Lands.]—Alluvial lands which are gradually gained from a river belong, by way of accretion, to the lands of the adjoining proprietor. Mussumat Imam Bandi v. Hurgovind Ghose, 4 Moore, Ind. App. 403.

An order giving possession of lands made by Foujdarry (police magistrate's) court, upon a charge of a breach of the peace coming before the magistrate, is not a determination respecting the rights to such lands. Ib.

Lands having been submerged by a change of the course of the river Ganges, after several years, reappeared. Upon a disputed question of right to such lands by two adjoining proprietors, each claiming the lands to be part of his mouza, the Sudder court held the plaintiff's claim to be barred, first, by the Bengal regulations of limitation from lapse of time; and, secondly, that the lands were alluvial, and attached to the mouza of the defendant. Such decree, upon appeal, reversed, the judicial committee holding, first, that the question of limitation not having been put in issue by the pleadings, could not be allowed to operate upon the case; and, secondly, that the court had mistaken the question in supposing it one of alluvion, the point at issue being one of boundary only, and that the plaintiff had made out his title to possession. Ib.

—— Right of Altering Stream—Building upon Alveus.]—Riparian proprietors have a common interest in the water of a running stream, and a separate property in the alveus or channel thereof usque ad medium filum fluminis. Bickett v. Morris, L. R. 1 H. L. (Sc.) 47; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 803; 14 L. T. 835.

But no proprietor may so use his property in the alveus as to affect the interest of ex adverso proprietors in the stream; and in order to entitle a riparian proprietor to relief against building upon the alveus, it is not necessary for him to prove that damage to him has been or is likely to be caused thereby. Ib.

Semble, a riparian proprietor may build a bulwark on his bank ripæ muniendæ causâ, but he must so build as to cause no actual injury to the opposite proprietor; in this case, however, mere apprehension of danger would not be sufficient ground for relief. Ib.

The bed of a flowing stream is the property of each riparian owner to the middle of the stream, and each is entitled to make use of it so long as he does not injure his neighbour or interfere with the flow of the water, and an encroachment on the alveus of a running stream may be complained of without the necessity of proving that damage has been sustained or is likely to be sustained. Edleston v. Crossley, 18 L. T. 15.

But where upon a balance of testimony it appears that the quantity of water sent on to the plaintiff's works will not, in all probability, be substantially diminished in quantity or quality, by the means adopted by the defendants with that object, the court will not proceed mandatory by injunction, but leave the plaintiffs to their remedy at law, if any. Ib.

Where the defendants, who are riparian proprietors—with the object of forming a water company, and selling the water of a slender stream, first, to other riparian proprietors, and then, if any remained over, to anyone who chose to buy it—erected a weir in alveo, which had a sensibly injurious effect upon the flow to and past the plaintiff's premises, and could not be used for the purpose for which it was erected without a continuance of such injury:—Held, that the erection of the weir was illegal, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to a perpetual injunction restraining the defendants, their servants, &c., from continuing the erection of the structure complained of, and from obstructing the rights of the plaintiffs to the flow of the water, according to its usual course and volume, to and past their lands. Belfast Rope Works Co. v. Boyd, 21 L. R. Ir. 560—C. A.

An erection in alveo fluminis is not per se illegal, because the defendant erecting it cannot prove the impossibility, as well as the absence, of injury to the plaintiffs. The reasonable uses which a riparian proprietor may lawfully make of the water passing his land include turning its natural gravitation into water power, by weirs or other like contrivances erected in alveo fluminis, although their effect if not carefully and reasonably used, might be to cause sensible injury to lower proprietors. Ib.

Plaintiff and defendant, owners of adjoining premises, were entitled to water from the river G., and to have the waste water carried away by separate channels. Improvements were made by commissioners having statutory powers, in the course of which a tail-race was formed from the plaintiff's premises by clearing the natural bed of the river which formed the channel by which the waste water from these premises had been formerly discharged, and three waste sluices were made for keeping the river at a proper level, and prevented the plaintiff's and other premises from being flooded. Defendant made a pier projecting into the channel through which water was discharged from the waste sluices into the tail-race, which it was alleged would throw back the water on the sluices and across the tail-race to the injury of plaintiff. Defendant also stated his intention of erecting buildings over part of the tail-race, which would prevent access to one of the waste sluices leading from defendant's premises to the tail-race, but to which plaintiff alleged that it would be essential for him to have access in time of flood:—Held, first, that on the authority of Bickett v. Morris (L. R. 1 H. L. (Sc.) 47), plaintiff was entitled, irrespectively of proof of actual damage, to an injunction restraining defendant from continuing an obstruction in alveo fluminis, the principle of that case not being confined to the case of opposite riparian owners. Secondly, that in absence of evidence to show that the culverts could not bear the weight of the proposed buildings, plaintiff could not restrain their erection merely on the ground that he would be precluded from access to the sluice. Palmer v. Persse, Ir. R. 11 Eq. 616.

Right to Raise Bank.]—A riparian owner has the right to raise the banks of the river from time to time, as it becomes necessary, so as to confine the flood water within the banks and prevent it from overflowing his lands, so long as he does not contravene the maxim sic utere tuo ut alienum non lædas. Ridge v. Midland Ry., 55 J. P. 55.

iii. Use of Water.

Rights of Riparian Owners.]—Every owner of land on the banks of a river has primâ facie an equal right to use the water, and cannot acquire a right to throw the water back on the proprietor above, or to divert it from the proprietor below, without a grant, or twenty years' enjoyment, which is evidence of a grant. Wright v. Howard, 1 Sim. & S. 190; 1 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 94; 24 R. R. 169.

The owner of land, through which a river runs, cannot, by enlarging a channel of certain dimensions, through which the water had been used to flow before the appropriation of it by another, divert more of it to the prejudice of any other landowner lower down the river, who had at any time before such enlargement appropriated to himself the surplus water which did not escape by the former channel. Bealey v. Shaw, 6 East, 208; 2 Smith, 321; 8 R. R. 466.

The right to appropriate a stream of water, in exclusion of any owners of the banks of the stream, cannot be acquired in a less period than twenty years. Mason v. Hill, 2 N. & M. 747; 5 B. & Ad. 1; 2 L. J., K. B. 118.

If water has been accustomed to flow along a channel from time immemorial, and it has been appropriated, the first owner of the adjoining lands on both sides who appropriates it, without doing any injury to any one, either above or below him, acquires such a right by his appropriation, that though he might have enjoyed it for twenty years, he may maintain an action against any owner of the lands above him who wrongfully diverts the water from its ancient channel. Frankum v. Falmouth (Earl), 6 Car. & P. 529; 2 Ad. & E. 452; 4 L. J., K. B. 26, 90.

The owner of the banks of a stream has a right to the advantages of that stream, flowing in its natural course, and is entitled to use it for any purpose not inconsistent with similar enjoyment in the owners above and below. Mason v. Hill, 2 N. & M. 747; 5 B. & Ad. 1; 2 L. J., K. B. 118.

No proprietor of the banks of a stream has a right to diminish the quantity, or injure the quality of the water, to the detriment of other similar possessors of other parts of the banks. Ib.

Every riparian proprietor has a right to the reasonable use of the water flowing past his land, namely, for his domestic purposes, and for his cattle, and this without regard to the effect which such use may have, in case of a deficiency, upon proprietors lower down the stream. He has also the right to the use of the water for any other purpose, provided he does not thereby interfere with the rights of other proprietors, either above or below him. Miner v. Gilmour, 12 Moore, P. C. 131; 3 L. T. 98; 7 W. R. 328.

Subject to this condition, a riparian proprietor may dam up the stream for the purpose of a mill, or divert the water for the purpose of irrigation; but he has no right to interrupt the regular flow of the stream, if he thereby interferes with the lawful use of the water by other proprietors, and inflicts upon them a sensible injury. Ib.

Every proprietor of lands on the banks of a natural stream has a right to use the water, provided he so uses it as not to work any material injury to the rights of the proprietors above or below him on the stream, and may begin to exercise that right whenever he will. Sampson v. Hoddinott, 1 C. B. (N.S.) 590; 26 L. J., C. P. 148; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 243; 5 W. R. 230.

The right of the riparian proprietor is limited to natural streams, and does not attach in the case of artificial cuts or drains. Ib.

The ordinary right of the riparian proprietor is to take so much water as he requires for domestic or similar purposes:—Held, that the fact that the railway company did not require water for such purposes did not entitle them to take it for other purposes, such as supplying their locomotives. Att.-Gen. v. G. E. Ry., 23 L. T. 344. Affirmed, L. R. 6 Ch. 572; 19 W. R. 788.

Semble, the interest of a riparian proprietor in the stream extends not only to the prevention of a diversion or diminution thereof, but to the prevention of any such interference with its course as might possibly be attended with damage at a future period in another proprietor. The general rule is, that even though immediate danger cannot be described, or actual loss predicated, an obstruction to the current of a stream constitutes an injury of which the courts will take notice as an encroachment which adjacent proprietors have a right to have removed. Bickett v. Morris, L. R. 1 H. L. (Sc.) 47; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 803; 14 L. T. 835.

Mere apprehension, without some show of injury, will not ground a complaint; but it is not necessary to obtain or to be guided by scientific opinions. Ib.

Rights of the seigneur, in Lower Canada, to the water of an unnavigable river flowing through his fief, does not entitle one of his co-seigneurs to divert the waters for his exclusive use which had been accustomed for eleven years to supply the mills of another of his co-seigneurs. St. Louis v. St. Louis, 3 Moore, P. C. 398.

Acquisition of Special Rights.]—By usage he may acquire a right to use the water in a manner not justified by his natural rights; but such acquired right has no operation against the natural rights of a landowner higher up the stream, unless the user by which it was acquired affects the use that he himself has made of the stream, or his power to use it, so as to raise the presumption of a grant, and so render the tenement above a servient tenement. Sampson v. Hoddinott, supra. Affirmed, without argument, by consent, 3 C. B. (N.S.) 596.

Where A. being the owner of land through which a stream runs down to the land of B., grants by deed to B. that the stream shall be in the control of B. and his assigns, and shall flow in a free and uninterrupted course through a channel described on the deed, and afterwards A. and B. assign respectively their land to Y. and Z., Y., if he divert the water from such channel, though he does not thereby deprive Z. of the use of any water, is liable to an action at the suit of Z. In such action it is sufficient for Z. to declare that by reason of his possession of the land he is entitled to have the use and benefit of the water flowing in a certain direction along the channel, and that the defendant diverted the water therefrom. It is not necessary to refer to the grant. Northam v. Hurley, 1 El. & Bl. 665; 22 L. J., Q. B. 183; 17 Jur. 672.

Supplying House at a Distance.]—A riparian proprietor has a right, by means of waterwheels and machinery erected by him for that purpose, to pump up water from a natural stream flowing past his land to a reservoir, and to convey it thence by pipes to his dwelling house, upon another estate at a distance from the stream, and he may there apply such water to his domestic and other necessary purposes of utility; provided he takes only a reasonable quantity, with reference to the size of the stream, and the rights of his neighbour; but he has no right to take more water by means of the wheels and machinery than he would have a right to take otherwise. Norbury (Lord) v. Kitchin, 9 Jur. (N.S.) 132; 7 L. T. 685. S. C., at nisi prius, 3 F. & F. 292.

Supply of Engines.] — A railway company whose line crossed a stream in the immediate neighbourhood of one of their stations, took water for supplying their engines and for the general purposes of the station. On bill filed by a millowner lower down the stream, it appeared that the abstraction of water did no damage in wet weather, and never shortened the working of the mill for more than a few minutes a day:—Held, that the company, as riparian owners, were entitled to take a reasonable quantity of water for their purposes, and that in this case the quantity taken was reasonable. Sandwich (Earl) v. G. N. Ry., 10 Ch. D. 707; 27 W. R. 616.

Where a public body is, under an act of parliament, entrusted with powers and duties for a public purpose, the court will give credit to them as being the best judges of what they want for that purpose. Att.-Gen. v. G. E. Ry., L. R. 6 Ch. 572; 19 W. R. 788.

A railway company was restrained from taking a large quantity of water for the use of their station from a river under the control of conservators, credit being given to the evidence on their part that taking such water would impede the navigation, against the evidence on the part of the company that taking such water would produce no appreciable effect. Ib.

Irrigation.]—Whether a riparian proprietor may use the water for the purpose of irrigation, if he again returns it into the river, with no other diminution than that caused by the absorption and evaporation attendant on the irrigation, depends on the circumstances of each particular case. Embrey v. Owen, 6 Ex. 353; 20 L. J., Ex. 212; 15 Jur. 633.

Abstraction by Non-Riparian with consent of Riparian Owner—Variation of User.]—The owner of land not abutting on a river with the licence of a riparian owner took water from the river, and after using it for cooling certain apparatus returned it to the river unpolluted and undiminished:—Held, that a lower riparian owner could not obtain an injunction against the landowner so taking the water, or against the riparian owner through whose land it was taken. Kensit v. G. E. Ry., 54 L. J., Ch. 19; 27 Ch. D. 122; 51 L. T. 862; 32 W. R. 885—C. A.

Observations on the rights which can be acquired by a riparian owner in an artificial stream. Ib.

Grant to Non-Riparian Landowner.]—A riparian proprietor derives his rights in respect of the water from possession of land abutting on the stream, and if by a deed which conveys only land abutting on the stream, he affects to grant water rights, the grants though valid can create no rights for an interruption of which the grantee can sue a third party in his own name. Stockport Waterworks Co. v. Potter, 3 H. & C. 300; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1005; 10 L. T. 748.

A riparian owner cannot, except as against himself, confer on one who is not a riparian owner any right to use the water of the stream, and any user by a non-riparian proprietor, even under a grant from a riparian owner, is wrongful if it sensibly affects the flow of the water by the lands of other riparian proprietors. Stockport Waterworks Co. v. Potter (3 H. & C. 300) approved. Ormerod v. Todmorden Joint Stock Mill Co., 52 L. J., Q. B. 445; 11 Q. B. D. 155; 31 W. R. 759; 47 J. P. 532—C. A.

Rights under Special Act—Construction.]—By an act of parliament authorising the construction of a railway, it was provided that nothing in the act should authorise or empower the railway company "to obstruct the navigation of a river, or any part thereof, or to divert any of the waters therein or which now supply the river":—Held, that this clause applied only to the time of construction of the railway, and did not take away the rights of the company as riparian proprietors. Att.-Gen. v. G. E. Ry., 23 L. T. 344. Affirmed, L. R. 6 Ch. 572; 19 W. R. 788.

c. Watercourses.

General Principles.]—The right to the water of a river flowing in a natural channel through a man's land, and the right to water flowing to it through an artificial watercourse constructed on his neighbour's land, do not rest on the same principle. In the former case each successive riparian proprietor is primâ facie entitled to the unimpeded flow of the water in its natural course, and to its reasonable enjoyment as it passes through his land, as a natural incident to his ownership of it. In the latter any right to the flow of the water must rest on some grant or arrangement, either proved or presumed, from or with the owners of the lands from which the water is artificially brought, or on some other legal origin :—Held, in this case, that the plaintiff's legal right to the enjoyment of water overflowing from an artificial reservoir through an artificial watercourse on his neighbour's (the defendant's) land should be presumed from the circumstances under which the same were presumably created and actually enjoyed; subject to the defendant's right to the use of the water for the purpose of irrigating his lands by proper and requisite channels and other proper means. Rameshur Pershad Narain Singh v. Koonj Behari Pattuk, 4 App. Cas. 121—P. C.

A riparian proprietor is not entitled to the use of the water of an artificial cut or drain. Sampson v. Hoddinott, 1 C. B. (N.S.) 590; 26 L. J. C. P. 148; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 243; 5 W. R. 230.

Observations on the rights which can be acquired by a riparian owner in an artificial stream. Kensit v. G. E. Ry., 54 L. J., Ch. 19; 27 Ch. D. 122; 51 L. T. 862; 32 W. R. 885.

What Constitutes.]—Water passing from the opening of the lock of a canal does not constitute a watercourse within 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71, s. 2. Staffordshire Canal Co. v. Birmingham Canal Co., 35 L. J., Ch. 757; L. R. 1 H. L. 254.

To constitute a watercourse, in which rights may be acquired by user, the flow of water must possess that unity of character by which the flow on one person's land can be identified with that on his neighbour's land. Briscoe v. Drought, 11 Ir. C. L. R. 250—Ex. Ch.

A claim by an owner of a copper mine to sink pits on his own land, to fill such pits with iron, and to cover the same with water pumped from the mine, for the purpose of precipitating the copper contained in such water, and afterwards to let off the water impregnated with metallic substances into a watercourse upon the land of another, is a claim to a watercourse within 2 & 3 Will. 4 c. 71, s. 2. Wright v. Williams, 1 M. & W. 77; 1 Gale, 410; 1 Tyr. & G. 375; 5 L. J., Ex. 107.

—— Tributary Streams.]—S. was convicted upon an information laid under 14 Geo. 3 c. 96, which was one of several acts passed to improve the navigation of the rivers Aire and Calder. By s. 97, any person who wilfully throws any ballast, &c. into any part of these rivers, or of any watercourses thereunto belonging, is liable to a penalty. S. carried on the business of a tanner, and it was proved that on a certain day a quantity of rubbish was discharged by him into a beck, adjoining the premises, at a point about four miles from the river Aire, into which it flows at a place where that river is navigable :—Held, that the conviction was wrong, inasmuch as the words "watercourses thereunto belonging" did not include "tributary streams," unless they formed part of the navigation. Smith v. Barnham, 34 L. T. 774.

Semble, that the section points to a knowingly wilful act on the part of the doer, and, as S. merely exercised a supposed right, there was no wilful throwing in of rubbish at all within the meaning of the section. Ib.

Natural or Artificial—Rights in.]—A watercourse, though artificial, may have been originally made under such circumstances and have been so used as to give all the rights that the riparian proprietors would have had if it had been a natural stream; and, therefore, in an action by one riparian proprietor against another for the pollution and diversion of a watercourse, it is a misdirection to tell the jury, that, if the stream was artificial and made by the hand of man, the plaintiff would have no cause of action. Sutcliffe v. Booth, 32 L. J., Q. B. 136; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1037.

The plaintiff was the owner of a farm supplied with water by a small watercourse, originating in a natural spring on the plaintiff's land, flowing, first, through the plaintiff's land, next through the defendant's land, and then through the plaintiff's land to the plaintiff's house. For seventy years and upwards, prior to 1879, the plaintiff had almost exclusively enjoyed the watercourse. In 1879, however, the defendant, by means of a pipe, appropriated nearly all the water for the use of newly-built houses. The plaintiff claimed the exclusive use of the water, and alleged that the watercourse through the defendant's land was artificial, and constructed, at a time immemorial, for the sole benefit of the plaintiff and his predecessors :—Held, that as no one could tell when the artificial part (if any) of the watercourse was made, the watercourse must be deemed to be a natural stream; or, if in part artificial, to have been made so as to give all the rights of a riparian proprietor to the defendant and his predecessors in title. Sutcliffe v. Booth (32 L. J., Q. B. 136) considered and approved. Roberts v. Richards, 50 L. J., Ch. 297; 44 L. T. 271. See 51 L. J., Ch. 944—C. A.

d. Drains and Pipes.

Rights of Landowners.]—An owner of land has an unqualified right to drain it for agricultural purposes in order to get rid of mere surface water, the supply of the water being casual, and its flow following no regular or definite course; and a neighbouring proprietor cannot complain that he is thereby deprived of such water which otherwise would have come to his land. Rawstron v. Taylor, 11 Ex. 369; 25 L. J., Ex. 33.

—— Alteration after Twenty Years.]—The flow of water from a drain, made for the purposes of agricultural improvements, for twenty years, does not give a right to the neighbour, so as to preclude the proprietor from altering the level of his drain for the improvement of his land. Greatrex v. Hayward, 8 Ex. 291; 22 L. J., Ex. 137.

Right of Access to—Interference by Servient Owner.]—The owners of a house had had for many years a supply of water by pipes passing through the adjoining land under circumstances which in the view of the court created an easement. The owner of part of the adjoining land proceeded to build a house over part of the line of pipes :—Held, that the owners of the house had a right to go on the adjoining land and repair the pipes when necessary, and that by building the house their means of access to the pipes would be materially interfered with and rendered more expensive; and an injunction was granted to restrain the building of the house. Goodhart v. Hyett, 53 L. J., Ch. 219; 25 Ch. D. 182; 50 L. T. 95; 32 W. R. 165; 48 J. P. 293.

An agreement had been entered into by D. and the plaintiffs not to erect buildings so as to prevent reasonable access to a sewer under the management of the latter. The defendant holding under D. built a stable on his land so as to delay the plaintiffs' access to the sewer for an hour or so longer than theretofore:—Held, not to be a sufficient ground for a mandatory injunction to pull down the stable. Sandgate Local Board v. Leney, 25 Ch. D. 183, n.

e. Subterranean Water.

Flowing in Unknown and Undefined Channel.]—The principles which regulate the rights of owners of land in respect of water flowing in known and defined channels, whether upon or below the suface of the ground, do not apply to underground water which merely percolates through the strata in no known channels. Chasemore v. Richards, 7 H. L. Cas. 349; 29 L. J., Ex. 81; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 873; 7 W. R. 685.

Where, therefore, a landowner and a mill-owner, who had for above sixty years enjoyed the use of a stream which was chiefly supplied by such percolating underground water, lost the use of the stream after an adjoining owner had dug on his own ground an extensive well, for the purpose of supplying water to the inhabitants of the district, many of whom had no title as landowners to the use of the water:—Held, that the millowner had no right of action. Ib.

No action lies for interfering with the course of an underground stream unless its course is known. Dickinson v. Grand Junction Canal Co., 7 Ex. 282; 21 L. J., Ex. 241; 16 Jur. 200.

Although water flows subterraneously in a channel which was, and by excavation could have been ascertained to be defined, the principle of Chasemore v. Richards (7 H. L. Cas. 349) applies, if the channel is not actually known. Ewart v. Belfast Poor Law Guardians, 9 L. R. Ir. 172—C. A.

Subterranean waters can only be the subject of riparian rights when flowing in defined and known channels. "Defined" means a contracted and bounded channel, although the course of the stream may be undefined by human knowledge. "Known" means the knowledge, by reasonable inference, from existing and observed facts in the natural or pre-existing condition of the surface of the ground. "Known" in this rule of law, is not synonymous with "visible," nor is it restricted to knowledge derived from exposure of the channel by excavation. Black v. Ballymena Commissioners, 17 L. R. Ir. 459.

—— Whether a "Stream."]—Water percolating through the ground in no defined or visible channel is not a "stream." McNab v. Robertson, 66 L. J., P. C. 27; [1897] A. C. 129; 75 L. T. 666; 61 J. P. 468—H. L. (Sc.)

—— Construction of Company's Private Act.]—Where a statute provides that it shall be unlawful for a person other than a company authorised to supply water to a town "to divert, alter, or appropriate in any manner other than by law they may be legally entitled," water flowing from particular springs, and declares that, in the event of any person so doing, and failing to restore the springs on receiving notice from the company, he shall be liable to a fine of 5*l.* for each day until restoration is made; the object of the statute is to give protection to the supply of water acquired by the company, and not to prevent a neighbouring landowner from making a legitimate use of water running upon or percolating through his land before it reaches the company's supply, and becomes part of their undertaking. Chasemore v. Richards (7 H. L. Cas. 349) discussed. Bradford Corporation v. Pickles, 64 L. J., Ch. 759; [1895] A. C. 587; 11 R. 286; 73 L. T. 353; 44 W. R. 190; 60 J. P. 3—H. L. (E.)

Abstraction by Mining Operations.]—The owner of land through which water flows in a subterraneous course has no right or interest in it which will enable him to maintain an action against a landowner, who, in carrying on mining operations in his own land in the usual manner, drains away the water from the land of the first-mentioned owner and lays his well dry. Acton v. Blundell, 12 M. & W. 324; 13 L. J., Ex. 289.

Although a landowner will not in general be restrained from drawing off the subterranean waters in the adjoining land, yet he will be restrained if, in so doing, he draws off the water flowing in a defined surface channel through the adjoining land. Grand Junction Canal Co. v. Shugar, L. R. 6 Ch. 483; 24 L. T. 402; 19 W. R. 569.

The Grand Junction Canal was, near Tring, supplied with water from a mill-pond, which pond was supplied partly by water flowing above ground from a horse-pond, and partly by subterranean springs. The local board of health of Tring constructed a sewer, which, through defective construction as the canal company alleged, diminished both supplies of water to the mill-pond, and so injured the canal company, who filed a bill to restrain the local board:—Held, that there was no remedy for the abstraction of the underground water, but that there must be an injunction to restrain the interference with that flowing above ground. Ib.

Injunction against draining preparatory to opening a coal mine, with prejudice to a canal, before establishing the right at law, refused upon laches for two years, permitting expenditure. Birmingham Canal Co. v. Lloyd, 18 Ves. 515; 11 R. R. 245.

Right of Support.]—An owner of land has no right at common law to the support of the subterranean water. Popplewell v. Hodkinson, 38 L. J., Ex. 126; L. R. 4 Ex. 248; 20 L. T. 578; 17 W. R. 806—Ex. Ch.

f. Wells.

Right to Water from.]—Water as it issues from a well or spring is not to be considered as produce of the soil so as to make the right to take it in alieno solo for domestic purposes a profit à prendre. The right is an easement only, and may be claimed by custom. Race v. Ward, 4 El. & Bl. 702; 3 C. L. R. 744; 24 L. J., Q. B. 153; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 704; 3 W. R. 240.

Public Well.]—The Public Health (Scotland) Act, 1867, s. 89, sub-s. 4, provides that "the local authority may cause all existing public cisterns, pumps, wells, reservoirs, conduits, aqueducts, and works used for the gratuitous supply of water to the inhabitants to be continued, maintained, and plentifully supplied with water." A well situated on private ground, the water of which has been used for domestic purposes gratuitously by the inhabitants in the vicinity for the prescriptive period, is a public well within the meaning of this section; and the local authority can enter on the land and do all acts to the well for continuing and maintaining it, which the inhabitants might have done before. And this, notwithstanding that there may be a company with a vested right to supply the inhabitants with water. Situated in one corner of a private field in the parish of Denny is a well. From the well to the entrance of the field a footpath leads, and from this entrance to the public road going through the village of Denny there is a cart road. The inhabitants of Denny had for the prescriptive period used the water of the well for domestic purposes, and had had the well, inter alia, cradled with stones at their own expense. Up to 1877 Denny was a mere village, without any burghal territory. But in that year Denny, with the adjoining village of Dunipace, was constituted a police burgh under the provisions of 25 & 26 Vict. c. 101, and the police commissioners of the burgh then became the local authority under the Public Health (Scotland) Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 101). In 1878 the commissioners, in their character as local authority, and under the authority of sub-s. 4, s. 89, of the last-mentioned statute, caused the well to be covered in with an iron plate, and placed therein a handpump, with the avowed object of keeping the well free from pollution. The proprietor of the field, alleging the well to be his private property, raised a process of interdict and suspension against the local authority praying for removal of the cover and pump, &c.: —Held, that the well was a public well within the meaning of the statute, and that the local authority, as representing the inhabitants, had not done anything in excess of their powers. Smith v. Archibald, 5 App. Cas. 489 —H. L. (Sc.)

Where at the time of the passing of the Public Health (Ireland) Act, 1878 (the provisions of which as to public wells correspond to those in the Public Health Act, 1875), a well was an existing public well used for the gratuitous supply of water to the inhabitants of the district, it becomes, by s. 74 of the act (s. 64 of the English act), vested in the local authority. To show that the well was then a public well it need not be proved that the soil and freehold of the well itself was public property, for if the public had a servitude attached to the soil and freehold, by virtue of which they enjoyed the right of free access to the well to obtain water, it would be a public well within the meaning of the act. Smith v. Archibald (5 App. Cas. 489), applied. Dungarvan Guardians v. Mansfield, [1897] 1 Ir. R. 420.

A well situate on private property was freely used, without hindrance or interruption, as far back as living memory went, principally by the inhabitants of some neighbouring houses, but also by all persons who had occasion to resort to the well. A path existed during all that time affording access to the well from a public road:—Held, that a right in the public to enter and take water from the well could not be supported by prescription, that it was too wide to be the subject of a custom, and that it could only arise from a dedication to the public by the owners from time immemorial of the land on which the well existed. Ib.

A trough or cistern receiving the overflow from a spring at some distance had been used by the public gratuitously for watering cattle and for domestic purposes for a period of over fifty years. The defendant erected a gate to prevent the access of cattle to the trough, and let a pipe into the bottom of the trough leading into his own house, where it terminated in a stopcock, and by means of this pipe and stopcock he could draw off as much water as he pleased:—Held, that the trough or cistern was a public well or work used for the gratuitous supply of water to the inhabitants of the district of the local authority in which it was situate, and that it was vested in and was under the control of the local authority by force of s. 64 of the Public Health Act, 1875, and that the local authority might maintain an action in their own name in the county court against the defendant for damages for the interference caused by the insertion of the pipe in the bottom of the trough. Holmfirth Local Board v. Shore, 59 J. P. 344.

2. Acquisition of Rights.

a. By Prescription.

When Right may be Acquired.]—After twenty years' uninterrupted enjoyment of a spring of water, an absolute right to it is gained by the occupier of the close in which it issues above ground; and the owner of an adjoining close cannot lawfully cut a drain, whereby the supply of water to the spring is diminished. Balston v. Bensted, 1 Camp. 463.

A person who has used the water of a river, uninterruptedly, though for less than twenty years, gains a title to it by appropriation, and may maintain an action for obstructing it. Canham v. Fisk, 2 C. & J. 126; 2 Tyr. 155; 1 L. J., Ex. 61.

Claim by a plaintiff to use water which flowed from his land to the land of the defendant and was there collected in a reservoir whence it reflowed into the plaintiff's land; and a claim also by the plaintiff to the overflow into his land of a pond which flowed through the defendant's land into that of the plaintiff; the claims being supported by evidence of twenty years' use. Held, that these were not maintainable. Ennor v. Barwell, 1 De G. F. & J. 529; 4 L. T. 597; Affirming 2 Giff. 410; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1233.

Action for obstruction of a watercourse to which plaintiffs alleged themselves to be entitled by reason of their possession of a mill. An agreement for such a watercourse, made twenty-eight years before with those under whom plaintiffs claimed, being given in evidence by the defendants, it should nevertheless be left to the jury to presume whether a grant has not been executed. Dewhirst v. Wrigley, C. P. Cooper, 329.

User not Precarious.]—In the year 1820 the court of Landdrost granted leave to the ancestor in title of the respondent to divert the course of certain springs rising in crown lands from their natural course into one constructed to carry the water to the respondent's land, and such water was so carried and used up to the year 1855, when the respondent applied to the government to renew such leave. In the year 1881 the government granted the sole user of these springs to the appellants :—Held, that as the user was not in its inception precarious, the respondent had acquired a prescriptive title to the use of the water by such user for the third of a century, and that such title was not affected by the application in 1855 to renew the leave to use the water. French Hoek Commissioners v. Hugo, 54 L. J., P. C. 17; 10 App. Cas. 336; 54 L. T. 92; 34 W. R. 18—P. C.

Artificial Watercourses.]—The law of easements in respect of watercourses is generally the same, whether they are natural or artificial. Magor v. Chadwick, 3 P. & D. 367; 11 A. & E. 571; 9 L. J., Q. B. 159; 4 Jur. 482.

A party acquires by twenty years' enjoyment a right to the use of water flowing through his land in a defined artificial channel, which was originally made for the benefit of all the persons by or through whose land the water was by means of it caused to flow. Powell v. Butler, Ir. R. 5 C. L. 309.

A right to the flow of water along an artificial cut over the soil of another cannot be acquired under 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71, unless the circumstances under which the cut was made show that it was intended to be of a permanent character. Gaved v. Martyn, infra, col. 1961.

After a long enjoyment of a watercourse running to a house and garden through the ground of another, it shall be presumed the owner of the house has a right to the watercourse, unless the other party can show a special licence or an agreement to restrain it in point of time. Finch v. Resbridger, 2 Vern. 390.

When Temporary and Artificial.]—In 1705, certain adventurers undertook to continue and extend an underground drain, called Cromford Sough, for the purpose of unwatering a portion of the mineral field in the wapentake of Wirksworth. They secured their remuneration in the shape of ore raised from the mines laying near and benefited by the sough, in consequence of an agreement with the owners of the mines. The mouth of the sough was close to a stream called the Bonsall Brook, and discharged into it a constant flow of water. Below the junction of these waters, an ancient corn mill stood, which was worked by their united power. In 1738, the then proprietors of the sough, through whom the plaintiffs claimed a reversionary interest, granted it for 999 years to S., with covenants that he should open, and cleanse, and repair it. This lease contained a proviso that no forfeiture for not opening and cleansing the sough should accrue, provided a new sough was made, which should have the same effect of unwatering the mines. In 1771, the lord of the manor, being owner of the land through which the Cromford Sough was made, and of a piece of land between the mouth of the sough and Bonsall Brook, demised the same to A., the father of the plaintiffs, together with the stream issuing from the sough. This lease contained a proviso, that if by the bringing up of any other sough, or by any other unforeseen and unavoidable accident, the stream from the Cromford Sough should be taken away, or lessened, the lessee should have power to take down the mills, and rebuild them on another site. In 1772, A. erected extensive cotton mills on the land in question, and in 1789 purchased that land, and the fee simple in the mills, together with the manor of Cromford, including the land through which the sough was made. The plaintiffs were owners in fee of the Cromford manor and estates including the cotton mills. In the meantime, another company of adventurers had begun to construct another mining sough, called the Meer Brook Sough, on a much lower level, in the adjoining parish of Wirksworth. In 1813, the defendants representing this company, and being proprietors of mines to be drained by means of this sough, agreed with the proprietors of Cromford Sough, and the owners of the mines formerly drained by that sough, to unwater a further portion of the mineral field. Accordingly, they extended the Meer Brook Sough, the result of which was that the water which formerly ran through the Cromford Sough to the plaintiffs' mills was diverted into the Meer Brook Sough at a lower level :—Held, that although the plaintiffs, by a grant of the watercourse from the owner of the surface, or by twenty years' user, might acquire a right as against him, still that, this being an artificial and temporary watercourse, subsisting for the convenience of the mines, they did not acquire a right to it at common law, as against the owners of the mines. Arkwright v. Gell, 5 M. & W. 203; 2 H. & H. 17; 8 L. J., Ex. 201.

Held, also, that the plaintiffs did not acquire a right to the watercourse under 2 & 3 Will. 4. c. 71, s. 2, as there was no enjoyment without interruption, and of right, since the mine owners were incapable of interrupting the enjoyment, and had no interest to do so. Ib.

Riparian rights identical with those attaching to natural streams may be acquired by prescription in artificial watercourse of a permanent character. These rights depend upon the character of the watercourses and the purposes for which it was constructed. If the watercourse be of a permanent nature, and constructed for lasting purposes, and for the general benefit of those in its vicinity, and not merely with the temporary and private object of benefiting the property of those by whom it was constructed, riparian rights may be acquired in its waters just as in a natural stream. From the time beyond the memory of living men a stream appeared to have flowed in its present channel, which, so far as it was artificial, bore all the appearances of having been constructed for permanent use. There was no proof that there was any temporary purpose for which the watercourse could have been formed, or that there was any person who formed it for private use :—Held, that the watercourse, assuming it to be artificial, was one of that permanent nature that admitted of the existence of riparian rights in its waters of the same nature as those attaching to a natural stream, including the flow of the stream through the lands of a lower riparian proprietor in a pure, unpolluted state. Blackburne v. Somers, 5 L. R. Ir. 1.

Who may Acquire.]—One who by lease or by licence from the owner of the soil has the right of digging and working clay (or minerals) thereunder, has such an interest in the soil as will entitle him to claim under 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71, a right to the flow of water over the surface by a twenty years' user. Gaved v. Martyn, 19 C. B. (N.S.) 732; 34 L. J., C. P. 353; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 1017; 13 L. T. 74; 14 W. R. 62.

A mine had from before the time of living memory been worked by tin-bounders, according to the custom of Cornwall, which enables any person to mark out a piece of waste ground, the owner of which does not choose to work the mines under it, and work them without the consent of the owner, yielding to the owner a share of the proceeds. The bounders had from before the time of living memory used for the purpose of their works the waters of an artificial watercourse arising in the land of another person. The bounders abandoned the mine in 1856, since which the owners had been in possession. A bill by the owners to restrain the diversion of the watercourse by the owner of the land in which it rose was dismissed by the V.-C., on the ground that there was no privity of estate between the owner and the bounders, and that the owner, therefore, could not claim an easement by prescription on the ground of their enjoyment of it:—Held, on appeal, that an injunction ought to be granted, for that it ought to be presumed that a right to use the waters had been acquired by arrangement with the owner of the mine, as well as with the bounders. Ivimey v. Stocker, 35 L. J., Ch. 467; L. R. 1 Ch. 396; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 419; 14 L. T. 427; 14 W. R. 743.

Tenant cannot Acquire Right against Landlord.]—By deed in 1791 A. obtained a demise from B. of an underground goit or drain to be then constructed in B.'s land for the purpose of conducting water from A.'s mill so long as an annual rent of 2*l.* 2*s.* should be paid by A. to B. In 1836 the demise of 1791 was put an end to, and liberty was given to A., who was at that time yearly tenant from B. of the land through which the goit ran, to change the goit or drain of 1791, and to substitute a new cut for conducting pure and clean water at the like rent of 2*l.* 2*s.* The new cut was made and used for pure water, and the old goit (as the plaintiff alleged) continued to be used for foul water. In 1866 the land through which the goits ran was sold to C., and in 1867 A.'s yearly tenancy of the land was determined. In an action by A. in 1879 to restrain C. from interfering with his use of the old goit, to which he claimed title by prescription from alleged open and uninterrupted use and enjoyment thereof from 1836:—Held, that until 1867 A. could not acquire an easement in the land of which he was yearly tenant, distinct from the use and enjoyment of such land, as against B., his landlord, and accordingly that, assuming the open and uninterrupted user from 1836 to have been proved, he had failed to establish any title by prescription as against C. Outram v. Maude, 50 L. J., Ch. 783; 17 Ch. D. 391; 29 W. R. 818.

The defendants in 1834 demised to the plaintiffs the coal under the C. estate for fifty years, with powers to sink pits, make soughs, &c., erect engines, and make drains, &c., for supplying such engines with water, and also to do certain other acts on the surface for the better draining and working the demised mines and any other mines of which the plaintiffs might become lessees under the lands of any other persons. In 1836 the plaintiffs took a lease for thirty-five years of the O. colliery from a neighbouring landowner. In 1846 the plaintiffs made a drain about a mile long, chiefly on the C. estate, by which they diverted a small natural stream on the C. estate, and brought it down to the O. colliery, where they made reservoirs for the water at considerable expense. They did not ask leave to make the drain, but the defendants' agent saw the work going on and encouraged it. In 1872 the plaintiffs became owners in fee of the O. colliery. In 1884, when the lease from the defendants expired, the defendants stopped the drain and diverted the water. The plaintiffs, claiming a right by prescription to the water, commenced this action to restrain them from doing so. The vice-chancellor of the county palatine held that the watercourse was made under the powers of the lease, and that the right to the water expired at the end of the lease, and he dismissed the action:—Held, on appeal, that this dismissal was right, for that if the making this drain was not authorised by the lease (as to which the court gave no opinion) it was made and enjoyed, either under the belief of both parties that it was authorised by the lease, or under a comity between landlord and tenant, and that there was no enjoyment as of right so as to give the tenant a right to the water after the lease had expired. Chamber Colliery Co. v. Hopwood, 55 L. J., Ch. 859; 32 Ch. D. 549; 55 L. T. 449; 51 J. P. 164—C. A.

Evidence of Enjoyment.]—A. occupied clay works, and for the more convenient use of them, in 1830, under an agreement with B. (with the consent of B.'s landlord) made a leat, or an artificial cut, for the purpose of conducting water from a brook flowing over the land in B.'s occupation to his works. The plaintiff, in 1835, succeeded A. in the occupation of the clay works, and continued for upwards of twenty years, without interruption, the enjoyment of the leat:—Held, that, notwithstanding the plaintiff had no notice of the agreement between A. and B., there was evidence from which the jury might find that the plaintiff had not enjoyed the stream for twenty years as of right. Gaved v. Martyn, supra.

The enjoyment of water drawn from a brook along an artificial channel, and acts done by the owner of the dominant tenement upon the servient tenement, which without the existence of an easement would be tortious and actionable, may be evidence of a right in the owner of the dominant tenement to the use of the water. Beeston v. Weate, 5 El. & Bl. 986; 25 L. J., Q. B. 115; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 540; 4 W. R. 325.

Enjoyment as of Right.]—Before 1800, a canal company, under powers of an act of parliament, diverted for the purposes of the canal a considerable part of the water from a brook which flowed through the plaintiff's land, at a point above his land, the rest of the water continuing to flow in its natural channel. In 1847 an act was passed authorising a railway company to purchase the canal, to discontinue the use of it, and to fill it up, and sell such parts as were not used for the railway. Under these powers the use of the canal was discontinued in 1853; and, in 1864, the railway company made a cut by which they restored to the brook at a point above the land the water which had been diverted from it. In 1865 the railway company conveyed the part of the canal on which they had made the cut to a purchaser in fee. The bed of the stream, owing to the diminished scour of the water from 1800 to 1853, had been silted up, so as to be insufficient to carry off the water coming down in extraordinary floods. In 1866 such a flood occurred; the water overflowed the land and damaged the owner's crops; upon which he brought an action against the railway company:—Held, that, there being no obligation imposed upon the canal company to continue the diversion, the owner of the land had no right of action. By Blackburn and Hannen, JJ.: On the ground that, though the claim to have the water, which would otherwise have come down to his land, diverted over other land, was a claim to a watercourse within the Prescription Act (2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71), s. 2, yet the enjoyment was not as of right, and therefore, though for more than forty years, conferred no right on the plaintiff. And by Cockburn, C.J.: On the ground that the owner of the land, the owner of the servient tenement, could acquire, by the mere existence of the easement, no right as against the owner of the dominant tenement to the continuance of the diversion. Mason v. Shrewsbury and Hereford Ry., 40 L. J., Q. B. 293; L. R. 6 Q. B. 578; 25 L. T. 239; 20 W. R. 14. And see Chamber Colliery Co. v. Hopwood, supra.

—— Interruption.]—Action for disturbing a watercourse, which of right ought to flow into the plaintiff's close to irrigate it. On the trial it appeared that the watercourse was not ancient, but that the water had flowed in its present course for more than twenty years past the plaintiff's close. There was evidence that during that period the plaintiff, and those under whom he claimed, had been constantly in the habit of drawing off the water to irrigate his close, and that the owners of the watercourse resisted it. On one occasion, when the plaintiff's servant drew off the water, he was summoned before a justice for so doing, and the plaintiff's son, by his direction, attended and defended the servant, and paid a fine of one shilling. The conviction was under a local act from which there was a power of appeal. The plaintiff did not appeal. The conviction was tendered in evidence and rejected. In summing up the judge explained that the enjoyment to defeat an adverse right must be for twenty years without interruption, acquiesced in for a year. One of the jury asked what would be the effect in law of a state of perpetual warfare between the parties; which question the judge did not answer. The jury found that the watercourse had been enjoyed as of right for twenty years, and without interruption for a year, and was directed to find for the plaintiff:—Held, that interruptions, though not acquiesced in for a year, might show that the enjoyment never was of right, but contentious throughout, though, if once the enjoyment as of right had begun, no interruption for less than a year could defeat it, and consequently that the manner in which the question was left, and the verdict found, was not satisfactory. Eaton v. Swansea Waterworks Co., 17 Q. B. 267; 20 L. J., Q. B. 482; 15 Jur. 675.

Unity of Possession.]—Where the same person is owner of land bound to supply water, and also one of the persons for whose use it is supplied, if his title to the easement is not as extensive as his title to the land charged, there is no unity of possession so as to cause an extinguishment of the easement. Ivimey v. Stocker, 35 L. J., Ch. 467; L. R. 1 Ch. 396; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 419; 14 L. T. 427; 14 W. R. 743.

Semble, nothing of absolute necessity to a building, e.g. a gutter in alieno solo, to carry off water, is extinguished by unity of ownership. Pheysey v. Vicary, 16 M. & W. 484.

A prescriptive right to the use of water flowing through certain closes, for the purpose of supplying a water-mill, is not extinguished by unity of possession of the mill and such closes. Holland v. Deakin, 7 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 145.

—— Existence of Easement at Time of Severance of Property.]—S., whilst owner of certain adjoining premises, A. and B., laid down a four-inch pipe to carry surface water from A. to a main sewer running along a highway. This pipe ran into another pipe, which passed under B., and thence into the sewer. A socket joint was placed midway in the four-inch pipe, but this was not at the time connected with any other drain. In 1877, S. sold B. to the respondent, and some days afterwards the appellant purchased A. The conditions of sale in each case provided that the sale was subject to all existing easements. There was no express reservation of a right of drainage in the conveyance to the respondent. The appellant subsequently connected the soil pipe of a water-closet on A. with the socket joint in the four-inch pipe, and at the same time laid down a larger pipe in place of the latter. The respondent thereupon stopped the flow of all drainage from appellant's pipe into his own. In an action by the appellant for damages and an injunction:—Held, that the appellant was not entitled to send sewage through the pipe on respondent's premises, inasmuch as no easement of that nature existed at the time of the severance of the properties, and there was then no junction by means of which sewage could pass into the pipe, although S. might have contemplated using the socket joint to make a connection for this purpose. Watson v. Troughton, 48 L. T. 508; 47 J. P. 518—C. A.

In 1860, the owner of properties A. and B. made a drain from a tank on property B. to a lower tank on the same property, and laid pipes from the lower tank to cattle-sheds on property A., for the purpose of supplying them with water, and they were so supplied till 1863, when the owner sold property A. to the plaintiff, with all waters, watercourses, &c., to the same hereditaments and premises belonging or appertaining, or with the same or any part held, used, enjoyed, or reputed as part, or as appurtenant. The plaintiff had the use of the water after his conveyance, until a subsequent purchaser of property B. stopped it:—Held, that the watercourse was a continuous easement necessary for the use of property A., and would have passed by implication; that the plaintiff was entitled to the use of the water on the conveyance of that property without any words of grant; and that, supposing it only convenient and not necessary, the general words were sufficient to pass it. Watts v. Kelson, 40 L. J., Ch. 126; L. R. 6 Ch. 166; 24 L. T. 209; 19 W. R. 338.

—— Alteration of Dominant Tenement—Effect of.]—Held, also, that the right was to have the accustomed flow of water through the pipes, without regard to the purpose for which the plaintiff used it; and that the right, therefore, was not lost by his erecting cottages instead of cattle-sheds. Ib. See next case.

Stopping Excessive User — Suspension of Right.]—A. having a prescriptive right to a flow of water, led by means of a gutter laid in a mill-stream at a point where an ancient weir was erected, lengthened the gutter for the purpose of irrigating more land. The flow of water down C.'s mill-stream was diminished, and he in consequence pulled down the ancient weir, which prevented the water from flowing down A.'s gutter:—Held, that no suspension of his right to the enjoyment of the flow of water as it had formerly existed was caused by his having become a wrongdoer, and C. was not justified in stopping the excessive user by means which altogether prevented C.'s enjoyment of the water, but only in stopping it by the least injurious means in his power. Hill v. Cock, 26 L. T. 185.

Alteration of Stream.]—A right to a watercourse is not destroyed by the owner's altering the course of the stream; and the owner may establish his claim, notwithstanding an interruption within twenty years of his action brought to enforce the right. Hall v. Swift, 6 Scott, 167; 4 Bing. (N.C.) 381; 1 Arn. 157; 7 L. J., C. P. 209.

Right to Occasional Overflow.]—The fact that an embankment is occasionally out of repair during a term of years or too low when the water is high (e.g. in a flood), and so allows water to overflow into other land, gives the owner of that other land no prescriptive right to the overflow. Brymbo Water Co. v. Lester's Lime Co., 8 R. 329.

Right to Pollute Streams.]—See post, cols. 1984 et seq.

b. By Grant.

Conveyance of Land.]—Water flowing over a close primâ facie passes with it by a conveyance of the land. Canham v. Fisk, 2 C. & J. 126; 2 Tyr. 155; 1 L. J., Ex. 61.

The right to the use of flowing water in respect of lands below is not lost by the acceptance of the grant of land above, although such latter grant may expressly reserve to the grantor the right to divert the water generally. Lord v. Sydney Commissioners, 12 Moore, P. C. 473; 3 L. T. 1; 7 W. R. 267.

A deed of conveyance of land for building purposes contained a covenant by the grantee to build to secure the rent reserved:—Held, that the adjoining owner, who claimed under the same grantor, was nevertheless at liberty to drain his own land, although the result of his doing so was to cause a subsidence in the surface of the land of the first grantee. Popplewell v. Hodkinson, 38 L. J., Ex. 126; L. R. 4 Ex. 248; 20 L. T. 578; 17 W. R. 806—Ex. Ch.

Before 1834, a natural stream called the S. brook, flowed to and into farm A. S. was then owner of farms A. and B., and the defendant was owner of land adjoining the brook, and lying between it and farm B. In 1834, the whole of the water of the brook was, by agreement between S. and the defendant, diverted from the brook by a stone culvert, constructed through the defendant's land into and through farm B., and thence into and over other land of the defendant's to certain dye-works of his. So much of the water as was required for the use of farm B. was taken from the culvert on the farm by means of a pipe: the rest, the larger portion, flowing on, down the culvert, to the dye-works. Matters so continued down to September, 1866, when, S. being dead, the then owner of farms A. and B. conveyed farm B. to the defendant in fee, together with "all waters, watercourses, easements, and appurtenances belonging to or held, used, occupied, or enjoyed therewith." In March, 1857, the same person conveyed farm A. to the plaintiff in fee. Between September, 1856, and the time of the action, the culvert remained in the same state, and the water from it continued to be used by the defendant as before, both on farm B. and at the dye-works. The plaintiff having thereupon sued the defendant for a wrongful diversion of the water of the brook:—Held, that the conveyance of September, 1856, passed to the defendant the right to have the accustomed flow of the water down the culvert, through farm B. continued; that the right was not limited to the use of so much of the water as was wanted for farm B.; that, consequently, the flow of the water down the culvert from farm B. to the dye-works was no infringement of any right of the plaintiff, and that the action was not sustainable. Wardle v. Brocklehurst, 1 El. & El. 1058; 29 L. J., Q. B. 145; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 319; 1 L. T. 519; 8 W. R. 241—Ex. Ch.

—— River Bed.]—A purchaser of land on the banks of a river takes, by his conveyance, the right of ownership of a moiety of the bed of the river ad medium filum aquæ. Crossley v. Lightowler, L. R. 3 Eq. 279.

The more than ordinary breadth of a river does not prevent a conveyance of premises therein described as bounded thereby from operating to convey the portion of the bed and soil of the river abutting thereon, up to midstream. Dwyer v. Rich, Ir. R. 4 C. L. 424.

The presumption that, by a conveyance describing the land thereby conveyed as bounded by a river, it is intended that the bed of the river, usque ad medium filum, should pass, may be rebutted by proof of surrounding circumstances in relation to the property in question which negative the possibility of such having been the intention. The owners of a manor by conveyances made respectively in 1767 and 1846 granted to purchasers pieces of riparian land fronting a river, the bed of which formed parcel of the manor. It was proved that, prior to the earliest of the conveyances, a fishery in the river fronting the lands conveyed had for a very long time back been from time to time let to tenants by the lords of the manor as a separate tenement, distinct from the riparian closes; and that at the date of the conveyances in 1846 such fishery was actually under lease to tenants. The grantees under the before mentioned conveyances, and their successors in title, had, until the acts complained of in the action, never claimed or exercised any right of fishing over the bed of the river by virtue of any right of soil or otherwise, but the owners of the manor or the tenants of the fishery had always fished without interruption:—Held, that under the circumstances the conveyances ought not to be construed as passing any portion of the bed of the river to the grantees. Devonshire (Duke) v. Pattinson, 57 L. J., Q. B. 189; 20 Q. B. D. 263; 58 L. T. 392; 52 J. P. 276—C. A.

Though the presumption that a grant of land described as bounded by an inland river passes the adjoining half of the bed of the river may be rebutted by circumstances which show that the parties must have intended it not to pass, it will not be rebutted because subsequent circumstances, not contemplated at the time of the grant, show it to have been very disadvantageous to the grantor to have parted with the half bed, and if contemplated would probably have induced him to reserve it; nor is the presumption excluded by the fact that the grantor was owner of both banks of the river. Micklethwait v. Newlay Bridge Co., 33 Ch. D. 133; 55 L. T. 366; 51 J. P. 132—C. A.

M. being entitled to lands on both sides of a river, sold and conveyed to L. a piece of land the dimensions of which were minutely given in the conveyance, and which was therein stated to contain 7,752 square yards, and to be bounded on the north by the river, and to be delineated on the plan drawn on the deed, and thereon coloured pink. The dimensions and colouring extended only up to the southern edge of the river, and if half the bed had been included the area would have been 10,031 square yards instead of 7,752. The deed contained various reservations for the benefit of M., but contained nothing express to show whether the half of the bed was intended to pass or not. M. was at the time owner of a private bridge close by, from which he received tolls. Thirty years afterwards a bridge was projected to cross the river from L.'s land. The plaintiffs, who had succeeded to all M.'s property in the neighbourhood, brought their action to restrain the making of the new bridge. If the grant to L. passed half the bed, no part of the new bridge would be over land of the plaintiffs:—Held, that the presumption that the grant included half the bed was not rebutted, and that an injunction could not be granted on the ground that the erection of the bridge would be a trespass. Ib.

The general law of conveyancing—that where a riparian owner, who is also owner of the soil under the river ad medium filum, makes a grant of his land on the banks of the river, the soil ad medium filum passes by the grant—applies to land of any tenure, whether freehold, copyhold, or leasehold. Tilbury v. Silva, 45 Ch. D. 98; 62 L. T. 254.

A grant by the crown of land bounded by a stream may include by implication the soil of the stream, ad medium filum aquæ. Lord v. Sydney Commissioners, 12 Moore, P. C. 473; 3 L. T. 1; 7 W. R. 267.

Lease — "Stream."] — Water percolating through the ground in no defined or visible channel is not a stream. A lessor granted to his tenant "the right to the water in the said ponds and in the streams leading thereto." In land adjoining the demised premises a tiled drain was placed, which intercepted water which otherwise would have found its way into the ponds:—Held (Lord Halsbury dissenting), that the water thus intercepted was not water in a stream. NeNab v. Robertson, 66 L. J., P. C. 27; [1897] A. C. 129; 75 L. T. 666; 61 J. P. 468—H. L. (Sc.)

Though the word "stream" in its more usual application does imply water running between defined banks, it is not confined to that meaning—its essence being that it is water in motion as distinguished from stagnant water—By Lord Halsbury. Ib.

Channel unknown, though defined—Construction of Grant.]—T., who was lessee for lives renewable for ever of a parcel of ground, expressed in the original lease to be demised, "together with the free use of all springs and streams of water arising in or running through the demised premises, or any part thereof, for any bleach-green or other works which then were, or at any time thereafter should be, erected on the premises," made two sub-leases of portions of the premises to different persons, for lives renewable for ever, the first sub-lease being made in 1851, and describing the premises therein comprised as "that parcel of ground formerly used as a bleach-green, together with the free use of all waters running in or running through the demised premises or any part thereof, theretofore used for the purposes of linen manufacture on the said lands, as fully as T. was entitled thereto"; and the second being made in 1853, of the remaining portion of the lands "together with the free use of all water, if any, arising in or running through the demised premises, or any part thereof, as fully as T. was entitled thereto." The interest in both sub-leases, as well as the equity of redemption in the superior lease (which had been mortgaged), afterwards became vested in W., who was subsequently adjudicated a bankrupt, and the lands were sold by the court of bankruptcy. The plaintiff purchased the portion of the lands comprised in the sub-lease of 1851; and one C., under whom the defendant claimed, became the purchaser of the portion included in the sub-lease of 1853. Both portions of the land were put up for sale by auction on the same day, one of the conditions of sale providing that each would be sold "subject to existing easements"; but the court, having refused the plaintiff's first tender, he subsequently increased it, and was not actually declared the purchaser until a few days after the confirmation of the sale to C. By deed of the 15th March, 1876, made between the assignee of W. and certain other persons and the plaintiff, which recited (inter alia) the superior lease, the sub-lease of 1851, with the water rights thereby respectively granted, and the sub-lease of 1853, the grantors conveyed to the plaintiff the parcel of land formerly used as a bleach-green, together with the full use of all water rising in or running through the demised premises, or any part thereof, theretofore used for the purposes of linen manufacture, as fully as T. was entitled thereto under the recited superior lease or otherwise; and all other (if any) the premises comprised in the lease of 1850, "excepting thereout and out of this grant" the premises purchased by C. By deed of the 11th of April, 1876, made between the same grantors and C., and containing similar recitals to those in the conveyance to the plaintiff, the grantors conveyed to C. the lands comprised in the sub-lease of 1853. The testatum of this deed made no mention of water rights. The plaintiff's lands were at a lower level than the lands of C., and in the plaintiff's lands, a few feet from the fence dividing them from C.'s lands, a copious stream of pure water issued from the ground. This water was peculiarly suitable for bleaching purposes; and the plaintiff, who was a bleacher, deposed that he intended to use it for bleaching; and, at the time of action brought, it was used for domestic purposes in the dwelling-house on the plaintiff's grounds, and for the supply of a large mill thereon. The defendants, who were the local sanitary authority, entered into an agreement with C. to permit them to bore for water on his lands, and they made a cutting on them a few feet from the fence, and obtained a large supply of water, whereupon the stream on the plaintiff's land ceased to flow. The plaintiff having applied for an injunction to restrain the defendants from diverting and obstructing the water from his stream:—Held, on appeal, that the conveyance to the plaintiff did not grant him the right claimed, and that he would not have been entitled to it even if the conveyance to C. had contained an exception of all existing easements. Ewart v. Belfast Poor Law Guardians, 9 L. R. Ir. 172—C. A.

Rights of Purchaser from same Vendor.]—The purchase of the right to the use of a portion of the water of a river cannot prevent a subsequent purchaser from the same vendor of another portion from diverting the water by virtue of a right which existed prior to the first purchase. Miner v. Gilmour, 12 Moore, P. C. 131; 7 W. R. 328. And cases ante, col. 1964.

Covenant to Supply running with Land.]—In 1849 A. purchased from B. a plot of freehold land on which was a well, and covenanted for himself and his assigns to supply water to all houses erected, or to be erected, on B.'s adjoining lands, which had been laid out for building purposes, B. covenanting to insert in the conveyances to the purchasers of any of the houses covenants by them to take water from A. at a fixed price. A. subsequently conveyed to C., and B. conveyed two of the houses to the plaintiff:—Held, that A.'s covenant to supply water ran with the land purchased by him, but that, independently of that, C. had purchased with notice of the covenant, and was therefore bound to supply water to the plaintiff's houses. Cooke v. Chilcott, 3 Ch. D. 694; 34 L. T. 207.

Deed Operating as Grant.]—By a deed between A., owner of Greenacre, and B., owner of Blackacre, it was agreed that A. should have during the first ten days of every month, for the purpose of irrigation, all the water of a stream which flowed through Greenacre into Blackacre, and that at all other times the water should be under the control and at the disposal of B., his heirs and executors, and allowed to flow in a free and an uninterrupted course towards and into Blackacre, through a channel therein partially described, and that the owner of Greenacre should cleanse and repair the channel, with liberty to B., and his heirs, to do so on his default:—Held, that this deed operated as a grant to B. of an easement of the watercourse therein described at all times, except the first ten days of each month and that he thereby acquired a right in respect of that channel, and that an alteration of this channel was an injury to his right, in respect of which B. might maintain an action, although no actual damage had occurred. Northam v. Hurley, 1 El. & Bl. 655; 22 L. J., Q. B. 183; 17 Jur. 672.

For upwards of twenty years water had flowed through an old drain on the defendant's land, and along an ancient watercourse, and thence along a close of the defendant, called Gin Bank, and had thence contributed to supply the plaintiff's mills after their erection in 1845. In that year the defendant conveyed to the plaintiff the close Gin Bank, "together with all ways, watercourses, liberties, privileges, rights, members, and appurtenances to the same close belonging or appertaining," subject to the proviso, that it should be lawful for the defendant to use for any manufacturing, domestic, or agricultural purposes, any water flowing from or through the contiguous lands of the defendant unto and into the close Gin Bank, returning the surplus, or so much as remained after being used for the purposes aforesaid, into its usual channel at a certain point, so that the water should not be diverted from its then course, but be allowed to flow into the close Gin Bank. The defendant erected a lock-up tank upon his land, and caused the water which arose on his land, near to the close Gin Bank, and which had previously been accustomed to flow along the old drain and ancient watercourse into the close Gin Bank, to be conveyed from the tank to a lower part of his land to be used by his tenants. This water was used by them for the purposes mentioned in the proviso to the deed, but the surplus could not be returned to the close Gin Bank:—Held, that by the deed the defendant granted to the plaintiff the use of the water, subject only to the use by himself of it as specified in the proviso; and that, by locking it up, he had diverted it, and was liable to an action for a breach of his covenant by reason of such diversion. Rawstron v. Taylor, 11 Ex. 369; 25 L. J., Ex. 33.

Grant of Artificial Channel.]—A landowner granted to a company all the watercourses, dams and reservoirs upon lands of his, which watercourses, dams and reservoirs were laid down upon an annexed plan, which was to be taken as part of the deed, and were thereon coloured blue, and also the several streams and springs of water flowing into or feeding the watercourses, dams and reservoirs, with right for the company solely to take and use the water from the springs or streams of water, watercourses, dams and reservoirs, with powers to cleanse and repair, and with all such other powers as should be requisite for enabling the company to enjoy the premises thereby granted. The grantor was to be at liberty to use the waste or overflow water from the dams or reservoirs of the company, but was not to exercise this power if the company resolved that its exercise would be injurious to them. The property coloured blue on the plan consisted of an artificial watercourse, partly covered and partly open, the dimensions of various parts of which were specified on the plan, and in some cases it was noted on the plan that they might be enlarged to a certain extent. Several springs and streams feeding the watercourses were marked on the plan. The watercourse was large enough to carry off all the water which flowed into it except after heavy rain, but at one point of its course underground there was a contraction of the channel which after heavy rains backed up the water and caused a considerable overflow over a weir, of which overflow the grantor for many years had the benefit. The grantees having occasion for more water, proceeded to remove the obstruction, so as to allow the whole of the water which came into the watercourse during heavy rains to run down into their reservoir :—Held, that the grant was a grant of the artificial channel, of the definite springs and streams on the land, and of such other water as should find its way into and run down the channel as it stood, and not a grant of all the water on the land, and that the grantees had no right to alter the levels of or enlarge the channel so as to enable it to carry off all the water that ran into it in times of heavy rain. Taylor v. St. Helen's Corporation, 46 L. J., Ch. 857; 6 Ch. D. 264; 37 L. T. 253; 25 W. R. 885—C. A.

Contract for Sale — Parties not ad idem — Specific Performance.]—Where, on a sale of a mill, &c., it appeared clearly that the plaintiff believed that he was buying a right to the use of certain water, which the defendant believed he was not selling, a bill for specific performance of the contract of sale was dismissed; but under all the circumstances of the case, without costs. Butterworth v. Walker, 11 L. T. 436; 13 W. R. 168.

When Implied.]—S., owner in fee of two mills, in 1855 leased one to P., who used it as bleaching works, a drain, partly covered and partly open, carrying off the water used in the works into a stream from 300 to 400 yards distant, on which, a little lower down, the other mill was situate. This discharge of refuse took place about seven times a fortnight. In 1858, by arrangement between S., P., and the defendant, P. surrendered his lease, and S. granted a new lease to the defendant of the premises late in P.'s occupation; the defendant being described in the lease as a bleacher, and there being a clause in it that all buildings erected by the defendant for the purpose of bleaching should be the property of S. at the end of the term. In 1859 the plaintiff purchased the fee in both mills. The defendant carried on the business of a bleacher, and used his premises as P. had done, the premises, including the drain, remaining precisely as in P.'s time. The plaintiff occupied the other mill himself, and used it as a paper mill, and brought an action against the defendant for fouling the stream by discharging the refuse into it:—Held, that the lease might be explained by the state of the premises, and the mode in which they had been used at the time it was granted; and that by the lease, thus explained, there was an implied grant by S. to the defendant of the right to use the drain and stream in the manner he had done; and that consequently the plaintiff, who stood in S.'s place, could not maintain the action. Hall v. Lund, 1 H. & C. 676; 32 L. J., Ex. 113; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 205; 7 L. T. 692; 11 W. R. 271.

Lands, on which were certain dams and artificial watercourses leading therefrom, and which were held under leases containing reservations of all mills, mill-seats, dams, dam-seats, water, and watercourses, and all convenient ways to and from the same, were ordered to be sold in an administration suit. They were accordingly put up for sale by auction in four lots, the particulars and conditions of sale, which set out the reservations in detail, stating that each lot would be sold subject to all rights and easements legally existing. The sale by auction proved abortive. The plaintiff subsequently tendered for lot 4. His offer was accepted, and this lot was conveyed to him, "excepting and reserving all such matters and things as are excepted and reserved in and by the said recited indenture of lease," and also subject to all such rights and easements as then existed or affected the premises. After the acceptance of the plaintiff's offer, and before the conveyance to him, H. made a tender for lot 3, which was accepted; and this lot was by deed, subsequent to the plaintiff's conveyance, assigned to him, with similar exceptions, reservations, &c. H. assigned his interests to the defendants. Prior to, and at the time of, the plaintiff's proposal and conveyance, some of the artificial watercourses flowed from lot 3 to lot 4, and the water thereof was utilised for certain purposes on this lot. The lessor had never interfered or expressed any intention of interfering with the plaintiff's user or enjoyment of these watercourses. The defendants obstructed the water flowing therein:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to a declaration, as between him and the defendants, of a right to the usual and accustomed flow of water, and to an injunction to restrain the defendants from obstructing the same. Mere possession of rights, corporeal or incorporeal, is sufficient to maintain an action for disturbance of them against a wrongdoer. Pullan v. Roughfort Bleaching Co., 21 L. R., Ir. 73.

—— Easement—Drain.]—Where an owner of two or more adjoining houses sells one of them, the purchaser of such house is, without any express reservation or grant, entitled to the benefit of all drains from his house; and is, on the other hand, subject to all the drains necessary for the enjoyment of the adjoining house. Such necessity is to be considered with reference to the time of the conveyance, as matters then stood, without alteration, and without reference to whether any other outlet could be made for the drainage. Pyer v. Carter, 1 H. & N. 916; 26 L. J., Ex. 258; 5 W. R. 371. But see contra, Suffield v. Brown, 4 De G. J. & S. 185; 3 N. R. 340; 33 L. J., Ch. 249; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 111; 9 L. T. 627; 12 W. R. 356.

Two properties, which adjoined, were originally possessed by the same owner, in one of which was a cesspool and a drain to carry the water from the adjoining property, which was a tan-yard. The owner afterwards sold the property to different persons, and the conveyances contained no reference to the drain and cesspool:—Held, that there was an implied grant of the easement of the cesspool in the conveyance of the tan-yard. Ewart v. Cochrane, 4 Macq. H. L. 117; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 925; 5 L. T. 1; 10 W. R. 3.

Reservations—Extent of.]—In a lease of premises with their appurtenances the lessor reserved, out of the demise, "the free running of water and soil coming from any other buildings and lands contiguous to the premises, in and through the sewers and watercourses made or to be made within, through or under the premises":—Held, first, that the reservation extended to water and soil coming from contiguous lands and buildings, whether that water and soil in the first instance actually arose on or from such contiguous lands or buildings or not. Chadwick v. Marsden, 36 L. J., Ex. 177; L. R. 2 Ex. 285; 16 L. T. 666; 15 W. R. 964.

Held, secondly, that it did not extend beyond water in its natural condition, and such matters as are the product of the ordinary use of land for habitation, and that therefore it did not give to the occupier of certain tan-pits, who claimed under the lessor, a right of passage for the refuse of those pits. Ib.

Where an owner in fee of two adjoining houses, let to A. and B. as yearly tenants, allowed A.'s house to have a waterpipe running into the well of B.'s house, and at a subsequent sale of the houses by auction each tenant purchased his own house, such privilege of water supply does not pass as against B. under an ordinary reservation in the conditions of sale of "rights of way and water and other easements." Russell v. Harford, L. R. 2 Eq. 507; 15 L. T. 171; 14 W. R. 982.

The reservation in a grant of land by a colonial government that the land should be liable to have watercourses made over any part of it without compensation to any proprietor or lessee, includes, in the absence of any other source of supply, the right to divert water from a natural stream on the land into the watercourse so made. Remfry v. Surveyor-General of Natal, 65 L. J., P. C. 72; [1896] A. C. 558; 75 L. T. 58—P. C.

c. By Licence.

Grant by Parol.]—In an action for obstructing a drain, the plaintiff claimed right and title to the drain by virtue of a licence granted to his landlords, their heirs and assigns, to make the drain, and have the foul water pass from their scullery through the drain across the defendant's yard, into another yard appurtenant to the premises in the plaintiff's occupation:—Held, that the interest, as declared upon by the plaintiff, being in its nature freehold, and the licence to support it being merely by parol and not by deed, the action was not maintainable. Hewlins v. Shipham, 7 D. & R. 783; 5 B. & C. 221; 4 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 241; 31 R. R. 757.

Where one declared in an action for obstructing a watercourse, upon his possession of a mill with the appurtenances, and that by reason of such his possession he had a right to the use of the water running in a tunnel to the mill; such allegation is not supported by proof that the tunnel was made on the defendant's land, which he had agreed to let the plaintiff have for this purpose for a consideration, but of which no conveyance was made by him to the plaintiff; and he had since refused assent, because the plaintiff had not the water by reason of the possession of the mill, but by parol licence or contract, which could not pass the title to the land, and as the licence was revocable, and was in fact revoked. Fentiman v. Smith, 4 East, 107; 7 R. R. 533.

Permission was obtained from E. and other landowners, on behalf of a body of subscribers, to make a watercourse through their respective lands to supply the town of G. with water. The watercourse was made, but no grant was executed, and no sum arranged. It was alleged that the subscribers agreed to pay to E. 2*s.* 6*d.* a year, but this was denied. E. subsequently diverted the watercourse into the old channel; and, upon a bill filed by several of the subscribers:—Held, upon its being amended, and made on behalf of the plaintiffs, and others whose names and residences were unknown, being subscribers to the fund, that the plaintiffs were entitled to the use of the watercourse passing under the lands of E.; and an injunction was granted to restrain the defendant from preventing, obstructing, or interfering with the flow of water, or with the plaintiffs' use of the watercourse, and a reference was made to the master to settle a proper compensation. Devonshire (Duke) v. Elgin, 14 Beav. 530; 20 L. J., Ch. 495.

Revocation of.]—The plaintiff having been allowed to form a watercourse on L.'s land, L. subsequently leased part of the land to the defendant, who thereupon gave notice to the plaintiff to discontinue the watercourse over the land leased to him. The flow of water being wrongfully continued, and it being necessary to enter upon the land of L. to stop it, the defendant entered the land, and there dammed up the water, so that it was penned back and flooded the plaintiff's land:—Held, that the lease was a revocation of the licence, and that the fact that the defendant might have stopped the water at another point on L.'s land, so that less damage would have been done to the plaintiff, did not give him any cause of action, as the nuisance could not have been abated at the latter point without doing damage to the land of L. Roberts v. Rose, 4 H. & C. 103; 35 L. J., Ex. 62; L. R. 1 Ex. 82; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 78; 13 L. T. 471; 14 W. R. 225—Ex. Ch.

A general licence to take water at any place is revocable, except as to such places where it has been acted upon, and expenses have been incurred. Mason v. Hill, infra.

The plaintiff's father, by oral licence, permitted the defendant to lower the bank of a river, and make a weir above the plaintiff's mill, whereby less water than before flowed to his mill:—Held, that he could not sue the defendant for continuing the weir. Liggins v. Inge, 5 M. & P. 712; 7 Bing. 682; 9 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 202.

Effect of.]—A licence to take a quantity of water at any particular place will not authorise the taking away the same quantity of water at another place. Mason v. Hill, 2 N. & M. 747; 5 B. & Ad. 1; 2 L. J., K. B. 118.

Memorandum in Writing.]—In 1804, by a memorandum in writing, not under seal, a riparian proprietor agreed to allow the occupier of a mill erected on land abutting on a natural stream, to make a goit through the land of the former, the latter paying for the privilege an annual sum of 5*s.* The goit was made, and thence the water of the stream flowed through it to the mill which it worked, and then returned into the stream at a point below. The defendant abstracted the water above the point where the goit commenced, whereby the flow to the mill was diminished:—Held, that the owner of the mill was not a mere licensee, but acquired under the agreement a right in respect of which he could maintain an action against the defendant for abstracting the water. Nuttall v. Bracewell, 4 H. & C. 714; 36 L. J., Ex. 1; L. R. 2 Ex. 1; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 989; 15 L. T. 313.

Enforcing.]—A. and B. occupied adjoining premises under C., their landlord, and B.'s premises were supplied with water by means of a pipe from A.'s premises. A. and B.'s premises were put up for sale by auction in different lots, it being made a condition that the premises were to be sold subject to rights of water and other easements subsisting thereon. A. and B. purchased at the sale the premises severally occupied by them :—Held, that B.'s supply of water from A.'s premises was not an easement which could be enforced against a purchaser, it being simply a licence from the landlord for B. thus to obtain water during his tenancy. Russell v. Harford, L. R. 2 Eq. 507 ; 15 L. T. 171 ; 14 W. R. 982.

3. Duty of Keeping Clean.

To Prevent a Nuisance.]—A watercourse, whether called by the name of sewer or brook, cannot be allowed to remain in such a state as to be a nuisance to the neighbourhood, or to be covered over and turned into a sewer so as to take away from the occupiers of adjoining lands any rights they may have to use it as a watercourse. Att.-Gen. v. Hackney Board of Works, 44 L. J., Ch. 545 ; L. R. 20 Eq. 626 ; 33 L. T. 244.

Obligation of Incorporated Body.]—A local act incorporated certain persons for the purpose of securing a regular and proper supply of water to millowners whose works were situated on the banks of the river Bann. These persons had powers given them to collect the waters of several small streams into a reservoir, and, as often as necessary, to send down those waters to the Bann through the channel of a stream called Muddock. The 2nd clause directed them to "make, erect, construct, maintain, repair, and keep," by means of a reservoir, a due and adequate supply of water for the river Bann at all seasons of the year ; and to enter on the lands of the different streams named, to do what was necessary for the conveyance and due regulation of the supply of such waters, and "to make, erect, alter, maintain, repair, widen, deepen, scour, cleanse, and keep proper and sufficient conduits, aqueducts, channels and watercourses, drains, feeders, weirs, dams," &c. The 82nd clause gave similar directions, and ordered that the surplus water should be returned into the different streams from which it had been taken, and also made provisions for supplying with water the cattle depasturing in fields adjoining. The persons incorporated under the act erected the reservoir, collected the waters of the different streams, and sent them through the channel of the Muddock to supply the Bann, but, after a time, neglected to cleanse the channel of the Muddock, so that at times it overflowed its banks and did damage to the lands of the adjoining proprietors :—Held, that under the words of the act there was an obligation on the persons so incorporated to take care that the due execution of the works and operations intended by the act should not be injurious to the lands lying along the banks of the Muddock, and that the bed or channel of the Muddock must be cleansed and kept in a proper state for the flow and reflow of the water that had to pass through it. Geddis v. Bann Reservoir Co., 3 App. Cas. 430—H. L. (Ir.)

Under Inclosure Act—Authority to Occupiers.]—By an award, made by commissioners under an inclosure act, drains were set out, and it was directed that the owners or occupiers of the land over which such drains passed should make and cleanse and keep the same of sufficient width and depth to carry off the water intended to run down the same :—Held, that this did not authorise the plaintiff to make a sough or underdrain on his land, so as to cause an increased quantity of water to pass into one of the awarded drains. Sharpe v. Hancock, 8 Scott (N.R.) 46 ; 7 Man. & G. 354 ; 13 L. J., C. P. 138.

4. Infringement of Rights.

a. Diversion and Abstraction of Water.

Rights of Inhabitants—Spout in Highway.]—The inhabitant householders of a district were entitled by custom to a flow of water to a spout in a highway, and the use of such water, for domestic purposes, in their houses. A riparian proprietor, through whose land the water flowed on its way to the spout, on various occasions diverted the water so as sensibly and materially to diminish the flow, and various inhabitants of the district were on such occasions inconvenienced by failing to obtain water at the spout when they wanted it. Certain occupiers of a house in the district brought an action against a riparian proprietor for an infringement of their right, but the jury found that they had not personally sustained any actual inconvenience from the want of water :—Held, that the action was nevertheless maintainable, inasmuch as the acts of the defendant would, if continued, be evidence of a right in derogation of the rights of the occupiers as inhabitants of the district. Harrop v. Hirst, 38 L. J., Ex. 1 ; L. R. 4 Ex. 43 ; 19 L. T. 426 ; 17 W. R. 164.

Right of Action by Riparian Owner.]—The proprietor of lands contiguous to a stream may as soon as he is injured by the diversion of the water from its natural course, maintain an action against the party so diverting it ; and it is no answer to the action, that the defendant first appropriated the water to his own use, unless he has had twenty years' undisturbed enjoyment of it in the altered course. Mason v. Hill, 3 B. & Ad. 304 ; 1 L. J., K. B. 107. And see S. C., 2 N. & M. 747 ; 5 B. & Ad. 1 ; 2 L. J., K. B. 118.

Unreasonable Use of Water—What is.]—To an action by the plaintiff, the occupier of a water grist mill, against a riparian proprietor for diverting the stream, the defendant pleaded not guilty ; and that at certain periods of the year, when the water was more than sufficient for the use of the mill, the defendant diverted small and reasonable quantities of the water for the purpose of irrigating closes belonging to her on the bank of the stream ; which quantities of water, except that which was absorbed and used in the irrigation, were returned into the stream above the mill ; that the diversion was not continuous, but only intermittent ; that the quantity of water absorbed and lost was small and "inappreciable," and that the diversion caused no damage to the plaintiff's mill. At the trial, it was proved that the diversion was not continuous, and that it caused no diminution of the water cognisable to the senses. The judge, in directing the jury, left it to them, with respect to the issue on not guilty, to say whether there was any sensible diminution of the water by reason of the diversion ; and with respect to the other issue, he told them that he had a difficulty in affixing the legal meaning to the term "inappreciable," but suggested that it might mean a quantity so inconsiderable as to be incapable of value or price:—Held, that this was not, under all the circumstances, such an unreasonable use of the water as to be prohibited by law, and therefore that the issue on not guilty was rightly found for the defendant. Embrey v. Owen, 6 Ex. 353; 20 L. J., Ex. 212; 15 Jur. 633.

Semble, that the word "inappreciable" meant "incapable of being estimated or valued," and in that sense the plea was not proved. Ib.

Party Diverting Stream on his Own Land.]—The defendant diverted a stream as it passed through his premises, but restored it undiminished as to the quantity of water to its former channel before it reached the premises of the plaintiff; the defendant also employed the stream, while on his premises, in a way which rendered the water unfit for ordinary use, but he alleged that the water, by the time it reached the plaintiff's lands, was freed to the utmost possible extent from any noxious ingredients with which it had become impregnated, and it did not appear that any actual damage was sustained by the plaintiff. Under these circumstances, the lord chancellor dissolved an injunction which had been granted by the vice-chancellor restraining the defendant from diverting and using the water. Elmhirst v. Spencer, 2 Mac. & G. 45.

By a Corporation—Breach of Duty.]—A corporation was empowered by statute to erect a reservoir near a river, and on completion to divert the waters of the river, discharging down the river seventy-five cubic feet of water per second for twelve hours of every working day. The corporation began, but was prevented by the nature of the ground from completing the reservoir. They diverted the water, and discharged down the river more than its natural flow, but less than the quantity required by the statute:—Held, that riparian proprietors could recover at common law for any damage sustained by the diversion of the water, but could not recover for failure to comply with the statutory requirement. Waller v. Manchester Corporation, 6 H. & N. 667; 30 L. J., Ex. 293; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 635.

—— Draining Ornamental Pond.]—The Metropolitan board of works constructed a sewer on the high road, and the Lewisham district board made a branch sewer running into it. The combined effect of the two was to drain an ornamental pond and rivulet on the adjoining lands of the plaintiff. In a suit to obtain an injunction:—Held, first, that neither of the boards was, in respect to the diversion of the water, to be treated as clothed with the rights or obligations of adjoining landowners. Stainton v. Woolryeh, 23 Beav. 225; 26 L. J., Ch. 300; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 257; 5 W. R. 305.

Held, secondly, that they had not exceeded their statutory right, so as to be liable to be restrained by injunction. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that if either of the boards was producing injury to the plaintiff by the unskilful or improper construction of the sewer, the court would interfere to prevent it. Ib.

Held, fourthly, that such not being the case, the rights of the plaintiff were limited to a claim for compensation under the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 112, s. 50, and the 18 & 19 Vict. c. 120, s. 86. Ib.

By Landowner who has Permitted Watercourse to be Made on his Land.]—Permission was obtained from E. and other landowners, on behalf of a body of subscribers, to make a watercourse through their respective lands, to supply the town of G. with water. It was alleged that the subscribers agreed to pay to E. 2*s.* 6*d.* a year, but this was denied. E. subsequently diverted the watercourse into the old channel; and, upon a bill filed by several of the subscribers:—Held, upon its being amended, and made on behalf of the plaintiffs, and others whose names and residences were unknown, being subscribers to the fund, that the plaintiffs were entitled to the use of the watercourse passing under the lands of E.; and an injunction was granted to restrain the defendant from preventing, obstructing, or interfering with the flow of water, or with the plaintiff's use of the watercourse. Devonshire (Duke) v. Elgin, 14 Beav. 530; 20 L. J., Ch. 495.

From Artificial Watercourse, Permanent or Temporary.]—No action will lie for an injury by the diversion of an artificial watercourse, where from the nature of the case it is obvious that the enjoyment of it depends upon temporary circumstances, and is not of a permanent character, and where the interruption is by a person who stands in the nature of a grantor. Wood v. Waud, 3 Ex. 748; 18 L. J., Ex. 305; 13 Jur. 742.

Where water has flowed in an artificial and a covered watercourse for more than sixty years, from a colliery into an immemorial and a natural stream, upon whose banks the plaintiff's mills are situate, the plaintiff in such case has no right of action for diversion of the water of such artificial watercourse, against a party through whose land it passes, but who does not claim under or who is unauthorised by the colliery owners. The case, however, would be different if the water was polluted; and the abstraction of the water to the amount of 5 per cent., or its detention so as to occasion sensible inconvenience, will support an action for such injury. Ib.

A watercourse, though artificial, may have been originally made under such circumstances, and have been so used as to give all the rights that the riparian proprietors would have had if it had been a natural stream; and, therefore, in an action by one riparian proprietor against another for the pollution and diversion of a watercourse, it is a misdirection to tell the jury, that, if the stream was artificial and made by the hand of man, the plaintiff could have no cause of action. Sutcliffe v. Booth, 32 L. J., Q. B. 136; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1037.

Erection of a Dam—Liability for Act of Lessee.]—The defendants were owners of the soil of a stream which supplied water to two print-works. A., whilst the occupier of both works, erected a weir across the stream, and thereby diverted the water from one of the works. The plaintiff, becoming lessee of the last-mentioned works, and entitled to the water of the stream, removed the weir. A. afterwards, without any authority from the defendants, and against their will, replaced the weir:—Held, that they were not responsible for the act of A., or for the continuance of the nuisance.

Saxby v. Manchester, Sheffield and Lincolnshire Ry. 38 L. J., C. P. 153; L. R. 4 C. P. 198; 19 L. T. 640; 17 W. R. 293.

—— Pleadings.]—Where a declaration alleged that the defendant placed and raised a dam across the stream, and thereby diverted and turned the water, and prevented it from running along the usual course to the plaintiff's mill, and from supplying the same with water for the necessary working thereof, as the same of right ought and otherwise would have done:—Held, that such an allegation was supported by proof, that, in consequence of the dam, the water was prevented from being regularly supplied to the mill, although the stream was not diverted, as the dam was erected above the mill, and the water returned to its regular course long before it reached the mill, and there was no waste of water occasioned by the erection of the dam. Shears v. Wood, 7 Moore, 345; 1 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 3.

Irrigation of Field—Removal of Stakes.]—The plaintiff, who had a right to irrigate his meadow by placing a dam of loose stones across a small stream, and occasionally a board or fender, fastened the board by means of two stakes, which had never been done by his predecessors. The defendant, who had rights on the same stream, removed the stakes and the board also. A verdict having been given for the plaintiff in an action for such removal, the court refused to set it aside, holding that the defendant had no right to remove the board as well as the stakes, on the ground that the stakes gave the board a character of permanency incompatible with her own rights. Greenslade v. Halliday, 6 Bing. 379; 4 M. & P. 71; 8 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 124.

Injury to Watercourse.]—If one has anciently pits which are separated by a rivulet, he may cleanse them, but cannot change or enlarge them to the injury of the watercourse. Brown v. Best, 1 Wils. 174.

Preventing Repair of Bank—Cutting Channels.]—Where a mill-stream broke through the bank nearing of the defendant's ground, and the stream was escaping into a new channel, and irreparable injury was to be apprehended, the court made a conditional order before appearance, to restrain defendant from preventing plaintiff, &c., from repairing the bank for the purpose of bringing back the stream into its proper channel, and also to restrain the said defendant from preventing the plaintiff from entering on that part of the lands in the possession of the defendant which formed part of the bank of the stream to repair the breach, and also to restrain the defendant from cutting, &c., any channel for the water of the said stream on the lands in his possession, whereby the watercourse might be diverted from plaintiff's mill, unless cause within six days. M'Swiney v. Haynes, 1 Ir. Eq. R. 322.

Abstraction—By Digging a Well.]—Where water is taken from a river after it has formed part of its stream, not by the reasonable use of it by another riparian proprietor, but by the digging of a well, an action at common law will lie by a riparian proprietor for injury to his right, against the party d'gging the well; as it also may for the abstraction of water which never did form part of the river, but has been prevented from becoming so in its natural course by the excavation of the well; and this whether the water was part of an underground watercourse, or percolated through the strata. Dickinson v. Grand Junction Canal Co., 7 Ex. 282; 21 L. J., Ex. 241; 16 Jur. 200.

Such an action may however be maintained on an agreement not to diminish the supply of water of the river, or on the provisions of a special act of parliament to that effect. Ib.

In any of these cases the action is maintainable for injury to the right, though no actual loss may have been occasioned. Ib.

A local act authorised a company to enter upon lands within a manor, and to dig and search for any spring of water, and to convey the water from such springs into the town for the use of the inhabitants of the town and the shipping in the harbour. It provided that the company should not take the water from any spring, streams, or ponds, so as to deprive the occupiers of the lands of water for their own necessary uses, and for the cattle depasturing therein. The company had power to lay down pipes, and the inhabitants, with the consent of the company, might obtain the water by pipes, to communicate with the company's pipes, at certain charges, according to the bore of the pipes:—Held, that the defence that the defendant, within twenty years after the discovery of the spring by the plaintiffs, sunk a well and used the water in a manner and for purposes not prohibited by the act, was admissible under not guilty, and a plea denying the plaintiff's right. South Shields Waterworks Co. v. Cookson, 15 L. J., Ex. 315.

—— From a Well.]—Quære, whether the owner of an old well can prevent his neighbour from sinking a well in his own land, on the ground that thereby the supply of water to the old well will be drawn off, or diminished. Hammond v. Hall, 10 Sim. 551; 4 Jur. 694.

The owner of land through which water flows in a subterraneous course has no right or interest in it which will enable him to maintain an action against a landowner who, in carrying on mining operations in his own land, drains away the water from the land of the first-mentioned owner and lays his well dry. Acton v. Blundell, 12 M. & W. 324; 13 L. J., Ex. 289.

M. sold to B. a well on M.'s land, with the right to B. to draw water therefrom through pipes in M.'s lands, and covenanted for himself, his heirs, or assigns, not to distuib B.'s right. M. voluntarily sold to a railway company some land near, and, owing to their operations, the springs that supplied the well were intercepted, and the well became dry:—Held, that B. had not broken his covenant, for it only applied to the water that flowed from the well after reaching it and not before it reached it. Brain v. Marfell, 44 J. P. 56—C. A.

—— By Licensee of Landowner.]—The water from a spring flowed in a gully or a natural channel to a stream on which was a mill. The spring having been cut off at its source, and the water received into a tank as it rose from the earth, by the licence of the owner of the soil on which the spring rose:—Held, that an action lay by the mill-owner against the person so abstracting the water. Dudden v. Clutton Union, 1 H. & N. 627; 26 L. J., Ex. 146.

—— By Riparian Proprietor—Action by Conservators.]—By 13 Geo. 2, c. 36, s. 2, a corporation was empowered to do all things necessary to make the Medway navigable; and the river so to be made navigable, and all lands to be by them made use of for the benefit of the navigation, were thereby vested in the corporation, their successors, heirs and assigns, for ever:—Held, that the act conferred upon the corporation such an interest in all the water of the river for the purposes of the navigation as were interfered with by the abstraction of any part by the riparian proprietors, and that it was not necessary that there should be an actual damage to the navigation to entitle the corporation to sue for such abstraction. Medway Navigation Co. v. Romney (Earl), 9 C. B. (N.S.) 575; 30 L. J., C. P. 236; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 846; 4 L. T. 87; 9 W. R. 482.

Continuous and apparent Easement—Injunction.]—The plaintiff and defendant were owners of lands formerly belonging to the same person. A stream of water had for many years originated in a spinney on the defendant's land, and had flowed down in a defined channel to and through the plaintiff's land into a brook. The conveyance of the plaintiff's land expressly included all easements and watercourses "appertaining to" the land conveyed. An injunction was granted to restrain the defendant from diminishing the flow of water down the stream by abstracting water from the springs that fed the stream, on the ground either that there had been an implied grant to the plaintiff of a continuous and apparent easement, or that he had the right of an ordinary riparian owner to the flow of an ancient stream. Dudden v. Clutton Union (1 H. & N. 627) applies under the circumstances, and not Broadbent v. Ramsbotham (11 Ex. 602). Bunting v. Hicks, 7 R. 293; 70 L. T. 455—C. A.

Liability to Indictment for.]—Where an action would lie at the suit of an individual for a diversion of a watercourse, an indictment will lie where the act affects the public. Rex v. Trafford, 1 B. & Ad. 874. See S. C., 1 M. & Scott, 401; 8 Bing. 204; 2 C. & J. 265; 2 Tyr. 201; 1 L. J., Ex. 90.

Jurisdiction of Chancery.]—Turning watercourses from mills may be determined in chancery, but was referred to commissioners of sewers. Swain v. Rogers, Cary, 26.

b. Obstruction.

Rights of Riparian Owner—Erection of Mill-Dams.]—The owner of the banks of a non-navigable river may, without any illegality, build a mill-dam across the stream within his own property, and divert a mill-lade, without asking the leave of the proprietors above him, provided he does not obstruct the water from flowing as freely as it was wont, and without asking the leave of those proprietors below him, if he takes care to restore the water to its natural course before it enters their land. Orr Ewing v. Colquhoun, 2 App. Cas. 839—H. L. (Sc.)

—— Filling up Bed of River.]—By an act, if any person shall build, erect, or place any building or erection within fifteen feet of the centre of the bed of the stream of a river, he shall be summoned before justices, who may order the removal of the obstruction and impose a penalty on the offender. A flood washed away the bed of the river, and B., who had mills or works adjoining and was owner of the land on both sides of the stream, restored the bed to its original level by laying large stones side by side without cement or fastening:—Held, that this was not a building or erection, and therefore justices were right in declining to convict. Colbran v. Barnes, 11 C. B. (N.S.) 246.

—— Subsidence due to Working Minerals.]—The plaintiff was entitled, for the purposes of his mill, to a supply of water by means of a stream running through and over the lands of the defendant. The defendant, in working the minerals lying under the bed of the stream, had caused a subsidence of the bed to the extent of four feet for some distance. In order to maintain the original level of the stream, the defendant had constructed embankments on either side, and there was no actual diminution in the supply of water to the mill. Upon a bill for an injunction, the court refused to make a hostile decree against the defendant, but by reason of the subsidence which had taken place in the bed of the stream, he was required to give an undertaking not to work the minerals in such a way as to obstruct or interfere with the flow and passage of the water to the mill, staying further proceedings, giving no costs, but reserving liberty to the plaintiff to apply if occasion should require. Elwell v. Crowther, 8 Jur. (N.S.) 1004; 6 L. T. 596; 10 W. R. 815.

—— Making Mound.]—A proprietor of land on the bank of a river having commenced the building of a mound, which, according to the opinion and report of an engineer, would, if completed, in times of ordinary flood, throw the water of the river on the grounds of a proprietor on the opposite bank, so as to overflow and injure them, was restrained by perpetual interdict from the further erection of any bulwark or other work which might have the effect of diverting the stream of the river in time of flood from its accustomed course, and throwing the same upon the lands of the appellant. Menzies v. Breadalbane, 3 Bligh (N.S.) 414.

—— Preventing Flow of Water to Mill.]—Injunction to restrain defendant from preventing water flowing in regular quantities to a mill. Robinson v. Byron, 1 Bro. C. C. 588.

Injunction against the obstruction of the flow of water through a goit in defendant's lands to plaintiff's mill. Dewhurst v. Wrigley, C. P. Cooper, 319.

Where, pending proceedings at law to try the right to a watercourse, the defendants were proceeding to take the law into their own hands:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to file a bill for an injunction; but where the application for dissolving it, on the ground of the bill showing a legal title acquired by lapse of time, had been refused, the court said that it ought to make provision for having the question between the parties tried by law. Ib.

Bill stated plaintiff to be lessee of an ancient mill, and that defendant had erected floodgates and other works on the river, which obstructed plaintiff's mill, and prayed that defendant might be decreed to pull down these works, and be restrained from erecting new ones, such works having been erected above three years: such a bill will not lie until the right be established at law, and a demurrer for want of equity is good. Weller v. Smeaton, 1 Cox, 102; 1 Bro. C. C. 572.

Actual Damage not essential.]—In an action for wrongfully obstructing the flow of a river by increasing the height of a weir, whereby the plaintiff's land abutting on the river was flooded, if the effect of the acts complained of was to raise the water of the river as it flowed past the plaintiff's land above the height at which it ought of right to have flowed, such raising would be an actionable wrong, and would entitle the plaintiff to a finding in his favour with nominal damages, actual damage not being essential in order to maintain the action. Williams v. Morland (2 B. & C. 910; 26 R. R. 191) not followed. McGlone v. Smith, 22 L. R., Ir. 559.

A riparian owner has a right, irrespective of any actual damage sustained by him, to complain of an obstruction to a stream. Norbury (Earl) v. Kitchin, 15 L. T. 501.

—— Transfer on Sale—Evidence of Damage.]—A mill on the bank of a river had been supplied for more than twenty years by water flowing from a stream through an ancient divergent channel, and conducted thence through a reservoir and a tunnel constructed in his own land by a former proprietor of the mill, who was also the owner of both banks of the divergent channel. At the place where the reservoir was constructed the divergent stream had formerly, after filling and overflowing a cattle-trough, been allowed to waste itself over adjoining land, whence it found its way by percolation to the river, into which the stream itself also flowed:—Held, that an action was maintainable by the present owner of the mill, who had purchased it with all existing water rights, against a riparian proprietor above the point of divergence in the original stream, for obstructing the flow of water to the mill. Holker v. Porritt, 42 L. J., Ex. 85; L. R. 8 Ex. 107; 21 W. R. 414. Affirmed, 44 L. J., Ex. 52: L. R. 10 Ex. 59; 33 L. T. 125; 23 W. R. 400—Ex. Ch.

A natural stream divided itself at a point called E. into two branches; one branch ran down to the river Irwell; the other passed into a farm-yard, where it supplied a watering-trough, and the overflow from the trough was formerly diffused over the ground, and found its way ultimately into the Irwell. The second branch appeared to have been made by artificial means, but had existed from time immemorial. In 1847 the owner of the land on which the watering-trough stood, collected the overflow into a reservoir, and conducted it by a culvert to a mill situated on the banks of the Irwell. In 1865 he became owner of all the rest of the land through which the second branch flowed. In 1867 he sold the mill, with all water rights. In an action brought by the purchaser against a riparian owner on the stream above E. for obstructing the flow of the water:—Held, that he was entitled to maintain the action. Ib.

In a claim by the plaintiffs, as riparian proprietors, and as having prescriptive right to use of water, for injunction and damages:—Held, that there was evidence of actual damage, but that, even if there had been merely evidence of injury to the riparian and prescriptive rights of the plaintiffs, an injunction and not damages would still have been awarded. Pennington v. Brinsop Hall Coal Co., 46 L. J., Ch. 773; 5 Ch. D. 769; 37 L. T. 149; 25 W. R. 874.

—— Forcing Water back on a Mill.]—The occupier of a mill may maintain an action for forcing back water and injuring his mill, although he has not enjoyed it precisely in the same state for twenty years; and therefore it was holden to be no defence to such an action, that the occupier had, within a few years, erected in his mill a wheel of different dimensions, but requiring less water than the old one, although the declaration stated the plaintiff to be possessed of a mill, without alleging it to be an ancient mill. Saunders v. Newman, 1 B. & Ald. 258; 19 R. R. 312.

—— Right of Mill-Owner to Stem Water.]—Semble, that if a mill-head pens back the water upon the adjoining lands, and injures them, but in consequence of defective construction and want of repair in the wheels and waste gates, the mill-pond is, by the working of the mill at seasons wholly selected by the miller without the control of the landowner, so soon and so frequently exhausted, that the adjoining lands are frequently relieved from the stagnating water, and suffer but small damage; the miller is justified in repairing and improving the construction of his mill, and thereby penning back the water upon his neighbour's land on the same level for longer periods, although he thereby occasions him a greater damage. Alder v. Savill, 5 Taunt. 454; 15 R. R. 551.

If an ancient ditch has at one end anciently opened into a stream, and the owner of a mill on the stream has kept the opening at the end of the ditch closed for twenty years and more, without interruption, that would give the mill-owner such a right to keep it closed, that the owner of the land adjoining the ditch would not be justified in reopening the communication, although it might appear that the communication between the ditch and the stream was ancient. Drewett v. Sheard, 7 Car. & P. 465.

Of Surface Water.]—When a prescriptive right to discharge surface water across adjacent property by a specific channel has been acquired, the obstruction of the channel on the servient tenement, by the tenant of the latter, is an invasion of a legal right, for which an action is maintainable without proof of actual perceptible damage. Claxton v. Claxton, Ir. R. 7 C. L. 23.

Of Artificial Watercourse.]—A. immemorially had, for watering his lands, a channel through his own field, in a porous soil, through the banks of which channel, when filled, the water percolated, and thence passed through the contiguous soil of B., below the surface, without producing visible injury. B. built a new house in his land, below the level of his soil, in the current of the percolating water:—Held, that A. could not justify filling his channel, if the percolating water thereby injured the house of B. Cooper v. Barber, 3 Taunt. 99; 12 R. R. 604. See also Bowers v. Hill, 1 Bing. (N.C.) 549; 2 Scott, 535; 1 Hodges, 334; 4 L. J., C. P. 153.

c. Pollution.

Rights of Riparian Proprietor.]—A riparian proprietor has a right to the natural stream of water flowing through the land in its natural state, and if the water is polluted by a proprietor higher up the stream, so as to occasion damage in law, though not in fact, to the first-mentioned proprietor, it gives him a good cause of action against the upper proprietor, unless the latter has gained a right by long enjoyment or grant. Wood v. Waud, 3 Ex. 748; 18 L. J., Ex. 305; 13 Jur. 472.

Right to Pure Water.]—The abstraction of water from a natural stream openly and under a claim of right, for a period of twenty years, to a tenement not abutting on the stream, will create no easement to have pure water flow down the stream to the point of abstraction. Stockport Waterworks Co. v. Potter, 3 H. & C. 300; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1005; 10 L. T. 748.

W. occupied bleaching works on the O. B. under a lease. The improvement commissioners of Harrogate, who had adopted the Local Government Act, and thereby were constituted the local board of health for Harrogate, commenced a system of drainage for Harrogate in 1862, and the sewage flowing through the C. stream into the O. B. polluted its waters so that they could not be used for bleaching purposes. In 1868, W. filed his bill, praying for an injunction to restrain the commissioners from permitting the sewage to flow into the O. B. The suit was compromised, and by an agreement, dated the 1st of March, 1869, the commissioners agreed to pay him a certain sum for damages, and that they would not, after the 31st of that month, permit the sewage to flow through the drains under their control into the O. B. The commissioners adopted the irrigation system for the disposal of their sewage, which proved wholly inadequate. Sewage flowed down the C. stream into the O. B., and also the overflow from the irrigation farm. W. was obliged to take other bleaching work, as the waters of the O. B. were so polluted by the drainage that he could not use them. He therefore filed his bill against the commissioners, praying for an injunction in the terms of the agreement, and for an inquiry as to damages sustained by him. Relying on the performance of the agreement, W. took a new lease of the bleaching works:—Held, that he was entitled to an injunction and an inquiry as to damages as prayed. Wood v. High and Low Harrogate Improvement Commissioners, 22 W. R. 763.

In an action by mill-owners, riparian proprietors, to restrain the discharge of water containing acid into a stream, where the defendant asked that damages, in lieu of an injunction, might be given, an injunction was granted. Pennington v. Brinsop Hall Coal Co., 46 L. J., Ch. 773; 5 Ch. D. 769; 37 L. T. 149; 25 W. R. 874.

Every riparian proprietor is entitled to have the natural water of the stream transmitted to him, without sensible alteration in its character or quality. Any invasion of this right causing actual damage or calculated to found a claim which may ripen into an adverse right entitles the party injured to the intervention of the court. The respondents were riparian proprietors on one side of a stream, called the Doups Burn. They and their predecessors had for sixty years used the water of the burn for the purpose of distillation, when the appellants, without any prescriptive right so to do, poured into the stream a large body of water which they pumped up from their mines, which water, if it had been left to the law of gravitation, would have never reached the stream. The respondents did not complain of the increased volume of the stream, but that the foreign water was of a character and quality different from that of the natural stream, and that it prejudicially affected the water of the stream for distillery purposes:—Held, that the respondents were entitled to have the appellants interdicted from discharging the mine water into the stream. Young v. Bankier Distillery Co., [1893] A. C. 691; 69 L. T. 838; 58 J. P. 100—H. L. (Sc.)

The plaintiff, by permission of a canal company, made a communication from the canal to his own premises by which water got to those premises, with which water he fed the boilers of his engine. The defendant, without right or permission from the company, fouled the water in the canal, whereby the water as it came into plaintiff's premises was fouled, and by the use of it, plaintiff's boilers were injured:—Held, that plaintiff might maintain an action against defendant for thus fouling the water. Whaley v. Laing, 2 H. & N. 476.

—— Extent of Right.]—Where an owner of land complained that a bleaching manufactory rendered the water which passed through his grounds impure, it was held that he must prove that he sustained some substantial damage; it was not sufficient to show that the water did not come out of the defendant's grounds in as pure a state as when it entered. Where there were two streams, one passing through the defendants' grounds to their bleaching factory, the other, after it had received the water from the factory, passed through the plaintiff's land, an injunction which restrained the defendants from using both streams was, on that ground alone, untenable. Elmhirst v. Spencer, 2 Mac. & G. 45.

—— Water Purified as far as Possible.]—The defendant diverted a stream as it passed through his premises, but restored it undiminished as to the quantity of water to its former channel before it reached the premises of the plaintiff; the defendant also employed the stream, while on his premises, in a way which rendered the water unfit for ordinary use, but he alleged that the water, by the time it reached the plaintiff's lands, was freed to the utmost possible extent from any noxious ingredients with which it had become impregnated; and it did not appear that any actual damage was sustained by the plaintiff. Under these circumstances, the lord chancellor dissolved an injunction which had been granted by the vice-chancellor, restraining the defendant from diverting and using the water. Ib.

Of Underground Stream.]—A person is not entitled so to use his own land as thereby to pollute water that eventually mingles by means of natural underground passages, into which he has introduced it, with an open stream passing through his neighbour's land, to such a degree as to render the water of that stream unfit for a purpose for which his neighbour has acquired a prescriptive right to use it. Hodgkinson v. Ennor, 4 B. & S. 229; 32 L. J., Q. B. 231; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1152; 8 L. T. 451; 11 W. R. 775.

In Working of Mines.]—The rights of tin-bounders according to the customary law of Cornwall to the use of water within their tin bounds, for the purpose of streaming their tin, will not prevent the acquisition by another of a prescriptive right under 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71, to the enjoyment of the water by a twenty years' user; nor will this right be affected by an agreement with the tin-bounders for a money payment to abstain from fouling the water by streaming their tin therein. Gaved v. Martyn, 19 C. B. (N.S.) 732; 34 L. J., C. P. 353; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 1017; 13 L. T. 74; 14 W. R. 62. See Ivimey v. Stocker, 2 Dr. & Sm. 537; and on appeal, 2 Dr. & Sm. 537; 35 L. J., Ch. 467; L. R. 1 Ch. 396; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 419; 14 L. T. 427; 14 W. R. 743.

Of Wells.]—In an action for disturbing the plaintiff in the use of a well, by putting rubbish into it, he will be entitled to recover, if, by means of the rubbish, the water has been shallowed, and the well rendered less convenient for use; but if the effect only was to make the water temporarily muddy, that is too minute a damage to support the action. Taylor v. Bennett, 7 Car. & P. 329.

When a well is supplied with water which percolates through the earth, and does not flow through any defined channel, although the owner of the well is not entitled to the water until it actually enters his well, the occupier of adjoining property will be restrained from using a cesspool therein in such a manner as to pollute the water coming through his property and supplying the well. Womersley v. Church, 17 L. T. 190.

—— By Gas Company — Penalties.]—When noxious matter percolates through the soil from gasworks, so as to foul a well, such percolation will render the defendants liable under the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 90, which imposes a penalty of 200*l.* on any gas company, "who shall suffer any washings, &c., to be conveyed into any well." Millington v. Griffiths, 30 L. T. 65.

A well which, on account of its having become contaminated, has been disused by the owner for several years, and has been covered over, does not cease to be a well within the meaning of the act. Ib.

Non-user, and closing of his own well in consequence of its being polluted, even coupled with the acceptance by the plaintiff of the use of substituted wells of the defendants, is not such an abandonment of the former as to alter its character and make it no longer a well, nor can any licence to pollute be inferred from such a state of facts. Ib.

A local act for the establishment of a gas company, enacted that if the company should at any time cause or suffer to be conveyed or to flow into any stream or place for water any washing or thing produced by making gas, or should do any act to the water contained in such stream, &c., whereby it should be fouled or corrupted, the company should forfeit for every such offence 200*l.*, and an additional penalty of 20*l.* for every day such washing, &c., should be conveyed or should flow after the expiration of twenty-four hours from notice of the offence served on the company:—Held, that the former penalty was not confined to the case of water wilfully or knowingly fouled, but extended to the case of water in a well fouled by water escaping through fissures in a gas tank, occasioned by mining operations in the vicinity. Hipkins v. Birmingham and Staffordshire Gas-light Co., 5 H. & N. 74; 29 L. J., Ex. 169; 1 L. T. 303; 8 W. R. 182. Affirmed on appeal, 6 H. & N. 250; 30 L. J., Ex. 60; 7 Jur (N.S.) 213; 9 W. R. 168—Ex. Ch.

Injury to Vegetation.]—In the absence of any allegation of prescriptive right in the plaintiff, the court will not restrain the draining of gravel-pits into a stream, to the injury of watercress beds of the plaintiff's supplied by such stream. Weeks v. Heward, 10 W. R. 557.

Under Statutory Authority—Local Boards.]—By the Leeds Improvement Amendment Act, 1848, it was provided that the clauses of the Towns Improvement Clauses Act, 10 & 11 Vict. c. 34, as to making and maintaining public sewers and the drainage of houses, should be incorporated with and form part of the act "except so far as they or any of them are inconsistent with the provisions of this act, or are expressly varied or excepted by this act"; and by s. 6, the corporation of Leeds was authorised to construct one or more trunk or other sewer or sewers, sufficiently capacious to receive the foul and drainage water and filth of the town, and to convey the same into the river Aire:—Held, that the power to drain into the river was controlled by the Towns Improvement Clauses Act, s. 24, and also by s. 107, though that clause was not expressly incorporated in the local act; and that the corporation was not authorised by the local act to create a nuisance by draining into the river. Att.-Gen. v. Leeds Corporation, 39 L. J., Ch. 711; L. R. 5 Ch. 583; 19 W. R. 19. Affirming 22 L. T. 330.

Held, that though the river Aire was polluted before it received the drainage of Leeds, the landowners on the banks were entitled to restrain the further pollution. Ib.

Held, that though the sewer had been completed, and in operation sixteen years before proceedings were taken, the court would interfere at the suit of the landowners. Ib.

—— Nature and Extent of Liability.]—A sanitary authority in whom the sewers are vested have only a limited ownership in them; they are not in the same position as to responsibility for fouling a stream as a private individual, because they cannot stop the sewers on account of the damage to the inhabitants of the neighbourhood. And although, perhaps, the sanitary authority might obtain an injunction to restrain persons from using the sewers who had no right to do so, a landowner complaining of the nuisance cannot bring an action against them for not doing so; because an action cannot be maintained either at law or in equity to compel a person to bring an action for the purpose of restraining a nuisance which he cannot himself prevent. Where a sanitary authority have not themselves constructed sewers which are a nuisance, but only permitted them to be used as formerly by the inhabitants, they are not doing an act which can be restrained under the Public Health Acts or the Rivers Pollution Act, 1876. Att.-Gen. v. Dorking Union, 51 L. J., Ch. 585; 20 Ch. D. 595; 46 L. T. 573; 30 W. R. 579—C. A.

Right of Local Board to Drain into Metropolitan Sewers.]—The Metropolitan board of works took into their drainage system a natural brook, called the Stamford Brook. That brook was the natural means of drainage for the Acton district, which was outside the metropolitan area, and the inhabitants of that district, and the defendant board, on becoming the sanitary authority of the district, had used for that purpose that part of the brook which was in their district. By this means, as the Acton district increased, the sewers of the Metropolitan board, as they said, became overburdened with sewage coming from outside their area, and they requested the defendant board to send their sewage some other way. They, however, refused to do so, and claimed a right to drain into the Metropolitan board's sewers. These proceedings then were instituted by the Metropolitan board:—Held, that the defendant board, although they had a statutory duty to compel the drainage of their district, were in no different position as regards the plaintiff board than an ordinary riparian owner was as regards another riparian owner lower down on the same stream, and that, apart from the sewage of such persons as had acquired a prescriptive right to drain into the sewers of the plaintiff board, they could not be made to receive the sewage of the Acton district; and that an injunction must be granted to restrain the defendant board from draining into the plaintiff board's sewers in the future. As to existing drains, as to those which were made before the defendant board came into existence, they could not be interfered with; and as to those made since, under the circumstances of the case, they would not be interfered with. Att.-Gen. v. Acton Local Board, 52 L. J., Ch. 108; 22 Ch. D. 221; 47 L. T. 510; 31 W. R. 153.

Raising Temperature of Water used for Condensing.]—The defendants demised to plaintiff a plot of land, one-half of an adjoining brook, a cotton-mill, reservoir, and steam engine of 100 horse power on the plot of land, and the use of a weir below the mill, for the purpose of holding up the water of the brook from the weir to the level of the bed of the brook at a bridge above the mill, "and the free use and enjoyment of so much of the stream of water which usually flowed down the brook adjoining the plot of land, as should be necessary for effectually supplying with water and working the steam engine, or any other steam-engine of like power and capacity"; and covenanted not to construct any other weir or dam between the weir and bridge, and for quiet enjoyment of the premises, according to the tenor of the demise. Shortly afterwards, the defendants erected, a little below the bridge, but above the plaintiff's mill, a new cotton-mill and steam-engine, with a reservoir, which drew off water from the brook between the plaintiff's reservoir and the bridge, and they discharged the heated water which they had used for their new mill into the brook, whereby on one occasion they rased the temperature of the water which the plaintiff had to use for condensing his engine, from 57° to 68°. All the engineering witnesses agreed that every additional degree of heat above 41° renders water less fit for condensing purposes. It was also deposed, that on another occasion, in consequence of the increased temperature, the plaintiff's engine worked "nearly half a stroke per minute less" than the usual rate of twenty-eight strokes per minute. Upon motion for a decree, the court granted a perpetual injunction, restraining the defendants from discharging heated water, so as to increase the temperature of the water which the plaintiff used for condensing; being of opinion that the evidence, exclusive of that as to the actual diminution in the working of the engine, showed a material interference with the quality of the water to which the plaintiff was entitled under the demise, and that the question whether such interference was such as to give him a right to damages, was one which he was not obliged to try. Tipping v. Eckersley, 2 K. & J. 264.

But so much of the motion as sought to restrain the defendants from diverting the water for their new mill was directed to stand over, upon terms of the plaintiff bringing an action, the plaintiff having failed to show that he had ever yet been deprived by the defendants of the quantity of water necessary for effectually supplying and working his engine, although it appeared that he had great reason to fear that he would be so deprived. Ib.

Claim of Right by Prescription.]—There can be no prescriptive right to pollute a stream by the discharge of sewage in such a manner and to such an extent as to be injurious to public health. Even assuming that a prescriptive right to foul a stream with sewage can be acquired, such right must be restricted to the limits of it when the period of prescription commenced; and if the pollution be substantially increased, whether gradually or suddenly, the court will interfere by injunction to prevent the wrongful excess; and if it be possible to separate the illegal excess from the legal user, the wrongdoer must bear the consequences of any restriction necessary to prevent the excess, even if it unavoidably extends to a total prohibition of the user. Blackburne v. Somers, 5 L. R. Ir. 1.

Where a man has the right to the use of an ancient stream of water flowing through his land, and sewage is so precipitated into it as to pollute it, it is not competent to the persons causing the nuisance to claim as against him a prescriptive right to discharge the sewage into the stream. Goldsmid v. Tunbridge Wells Improvement Commissioners, 35 L. J., Ch. 382; L. R. 1 Ch. 349; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 208; 14 L. T. 154; 14 W. R. 512.

The owner of an ancient paper mill where the paper had been made from rags, introduced a new vegetable fibre, and carried on the works upon the same scale for making paper from this new material. For more than twenty years before this change the refuse arising from the paper manufacture had been discharged into a stream which ran past the plaintiff's house:—Held, that the easement to which he was entitled was to be presumed to be, not a right to foul the stream by discharging into it the washing produced by the working up of rags, but a right to discharge into it the washings produced by the manufacture of paper in the reasonable and proper course of such manufacture, using any proper materials for the purpose, but not increasing the pollution, and that the onus lay on the plaintiff to prove any increase of pollution. Baxendale v. M'Murray, L. R. 2 Ch. 790; 15 W. R. 32.

What conditions are required in order that a person establishing works on a running steam may, by long user of the water, acquire a right therein, although he has no proprietorship in the river or the water; and may, as against new comers, obtain a right to pollute such stream. Wood v. Sutcliffe, 2 Sim. (N.S.) 163; 21 L. J., Ch. 253; 16 Jur. 75.

A prescriptive right to take in a particular way and at a particular place pure water which is returned to the stream in an impure state infers no right to take the supply of pure water in any other way and at any other place. M'Intyre v. M'Gavin, [1893] A. C. 268; 1 R. 246; 57 J. P. 548—H. L. (Sc.)

—— Variation of User.]—From 1832 to 1877 the refuse of a fellmongery, and the washings of dyes used in a coloured rug manufactory, had been discharged into a watercourse, which was an arterial drainage work within the jurisdiction of drainage commissioners. In 1878 the fellmongery was abandoned, and the manufacture of leather boards substituted at the same factory. The pollution caused by the discharge of the refuse of the leather board manufactory was less in degree than that caused by the fellmongery. The drainage commissioners convicted the owners of the leather board factory under a section of a local act of polluting the stream, and this conviction was affirmed on appeal to the quarter sessions:—Held, that the conviction must be confirmed, for even if the factory-owners had a prescriptive right to foul the stream, it was as fellmongers, and not as leather board manufacturers; and that there was no authority for holding that the variation of the user, although it cast no increased, but even a less burden on the servient tenement, enabled the factory-owners to substitute a business of a totally different kind to that originally carried on by them, and at the same time claim to maintain their original prescriptive right to pollute the watercourse, even if such right did exist. Clarke v. Somersetshire Drainage Commissioners, 57 L. J., M. C. 96; 59 L. T. 670; 36 W. R. 890.

—— Evidence of.]—Action by the owner of a mill on the river Calder, which mill of right ought to be supplied with a flow of water from a millpool on the Calder, against an owner of works higher up the stream, for placing cinders and scoria at his works, so as to fall into the stream of the Calder, whence they were carried down into the plaintiff's millpool, and filled it up, to the obstruction of his right to water. Plea, that the occupiers of the defendant's works had, for more than twenty years, as of right placed cinders and scoria, the refuse of their works, on the banks of the stream, and in its channel, and that the cinders and scoria complained of were such refuse so placed:—Held, that the plea was bad, non obstante veredicto, as not showing that the defendant had during twenty years, as of right, caused the refuse to go into the pond; for till the occupiers of the mill sustained some damage from the defendant's user, no right as against them began to be acquired. Murgatroyd v. Robinson, 7 El. & Bl. 391; 26 L. J., Q. B. 233; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 615; 5 W. R. 375.

When a prescriptive right to foul a stream has been acquired, the fouling must not be considerably enlarged to the prejudice of other people. Crossley v. Lightowler, 36 L. J., Ch. 584; L. R. 2 Ch. 478; 16 L. T. 638; 15 W. R. 801.

The fact that the stream is fouled by others, is not a defence to a suit to restrain the fouling by one. Ib.

C. wishing to prevent the water of a river from being fouled by some dye-works, purchased from the owners of the dye-works a piece of land on the banks of the river, without communicating to them his object:—Held, that in the absence of any express reservation by the owners of the dye-works of the right of fouling, C. could maintain a suit in equity to restrain it. Ib.

Loss of Rights by Non-User.]—The mere suspension of the exercise of a prescriptive right is not sufficient to destroy the right, without some evidence of an intention to abandon it; but where dye-works had not been used for more than twenty years, and had been allowed to go to ruin:—Held, that any right of fouling a stream attached to them was lost. Ib.

Where, through an artificial watercourse made for the purpose of draining mines, the drainage water has flowed for twenty years in a pure state, in consequence of the working of the mines having been discontinued, over premises of a person who has used it for that period, the working of the mines cannot be resumed (unless there is a custom to warrant it), so as to foul the water and disturb the enjoyment. Magor v. Chadwick, 11 A. & E. 571; 3 P. & D. 367; 9 L. J., Q. B. 159; 4 Jur. 482.

5. PROCEEDINGS AND EVIDENCE.

Injunction—Before Undoubted Nuisance.]—Where a man has a right to the use of an ancient stream of water flowing through his land, and sewage matter is so precipitated into it as to pollute it, and to prevent his using it, he may apply to a court of equity for an injunction to restrain the pollution before it has become an undoubted nuisance. Goldsmid v. Tunbridge Wells Improvement Commissioners, L. R. 1 Eq. 161; 13 L. T. 332; 14 W. R. 92. Affirmed, 35 L. J., Ch. 382; L. R. 1 Ch. 349; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 208; 14 L. T. 154; 14 W. R. 562.

—— Conditions of Granting.]—What conditions are required in order to induce a court of equity to grant an injunction to restrain the infringement of a right, acquired by long user, to use the water of a stream for certain purposes. Wood v. Sutcliffe, 2 Sim. (N.S.) 163; 21 L. J., Ch. 253; 16 Jur. 75.

—— Continuing Nuisance.]—A., by diverting a watercourse, brought a nuisance upon B., who connived at it; yet the court granted an injunction, for every continuance is a fresh nuisance. Anon., 2 Eq. Abr. 522, pl. 3.

—— Form of.]—An order restraining persons from polluting a stream should restrain them from such a pollution as would be to the injury of the plaintiff. Lingwood v. Stowmarket Paper Making Co., 11 Jur. (N.S.) 993; 14 W. R. 78.

Venue.]—It is not necessary to give a local description to the nuisance in an action for diverting the water of a navigation, though the venue is local. Mersey and Irwell Navigation v. Douglas, 2 East, 497.

The plaintiff's cause of action arises so entirely for nuisance in the county where the injury is sustained, as to retain the venue there. Williams v. Land, 4 Taunt. 729.

If a trench cut in the county of N. causes the plaintiff's lands to be overflowed in the county of W., although a statute requires all actions to be brought and tried in the county where the cause of action arises, the action may be brought and tried in W. Sutton v. Clarke, 6 Taunt. 29; 1 Marsh. 429; 16 R. R. 563.

Declarations.]—If a plaintiff, in a count, claims the right to the use of a well as appurtenant to a certain dwelling-house; and, in a second count, complains that the defendant obstructed a watercourse, which the plaintiff claims as appurtenant to a certain other dwelling-house; the word "other" is here not matter of description, and therefore it is no ground of nonsuit that both the rights claimed were appurtenant to the same house. Taylor v. Bennett, 7 Car. & P. 329.

A count for diverting and turning a stream of water is not supported by proof of penning back and checking its course, whereby the water was made to overflow the plaintiff's meadow. Griffiths v. Marson, 6 Price, 1.

The wrongful act complained of was the digging and continuing the sewer, and thereby diverting the water from the pond. The evidence was, that the water was not diverted by digging the sewer, but previously, for the purpose of making the sewer; and since the sewer had been made, the water in the pond could not rise to its former height:—Held, that there was no variance between the declaration and the proof, so far as it related to the continuing of the sewer. Dukes v. Gostling, infra.

An allegation that the plaintiff was possessed of mines, lands and premises, and of right ought to have had and enjoyed, and still of right ought to have and enjoy, the water of a stream which had been used to flow alongside the lands and premises, is not supported by proof that the plaintiff was a lessee of mines under lands adjoining the stream, with a grant from the surface owner of the use of the water for colliery purposes. Insole v. James, 1 H. & N. 243; 4 W. R. 680.

Where the plaintiff brought an action for diverting a watercourse, stating that the locus in quo was in the possession of S., as his tenant:—Held, that the averment was satisfied by proof of a mortgage from S., the tenant for life, to the plaintiff, who was entitled to the reversion. Partridge v. Bere, 1 D. & R. 272; 24 R. R. 487.

Where the owner of land through which a stream flows has, within twenty years, built mills upon its bank, and applied the water of the stream to the working of them, he may recover upon an issue raised by a traverse of an allegation, that his right to the water was "by reason of the possession of the mills." Wood v. Waud, 3 Ex. 748; 18 L. J., Ex. 305; 13 Jur. 472.

Where a declaration was for obstructing a drain over which the plaintiff was alleged to have a right of user, and which he had used for general drainage, and the right proved only was to use the drain not for foul drainage, but for ordinary water, the plaintiff failed at the trial, and the court refused an amendment. Cawkwell v. Russell, 26 L. J., Ex. 34.

A declaration alleged that plaintiff was possessed of steam-engines and boilers, and used, had and enjoyed the benefit and advantage of the waters of a certain branch canal to supply the same, which waters ought to have flowed and been without the fouling or pollution thereafter mentioned; yet defendant wrongfully discharged into the canal foul materials and thereby rendered the waters foul, whereby the plaintiff's engines and boilers were injured. The defendant pleaded first, not guilty; secondly, that the waters of the canal ought to have flowed and been without the fouling mentioned. An arbitrator, to whom the cause was referred, found that plaintiff, by permission of a canal company, made a cut from the canal to his own premises, by which water got to those premises, with which water he fed the boilers of his engines. The defendant, without any right or permission from the company, fouled the water in the canal, whereby the water, as it came into the plaintiff's premises, was fouled, and by the use of it plaintiff's boilers were injured:—Held, in the exchequer chamber, by Wightman and Williams, JJ., that the declaration was bad and the judgment ought to be arrested; by Crowder and Willes, JJ., that the declaration was good. Laing v. Whaley, 3 H. & N. 675.

Pleas.]—Held, also, by Williams, Crowder and Willes, JJ., that the verdict upon the issue joined upon the second plea ought to be found for the plaintiff; by Wightman, Erle and Crompton, JJ., that it ought to be found for defendant. Ib.

A plaintiff declared that he was possessed of a mill: and by reason thereof was entitled to the use of a stream for the mill, and that the water ought to run and flow to the mill, and that the defendant wrongfully and injuriously diverted the same:—Held, that, under the plea of not guilty, the only matter in issue was the fact of the diversion, and that the right to the use of the stream, as claimed, was admitted. Frankum v. Falmouth (Earl), 4 N. & M. 330; 2 A. & E. 452; 1 H. & W. 1; 4 L. J., K. B. 26, 90.

In a declaration, the plaintiff stated, by way of inducement, that the defendant was possessed of a close used as a private road, and then the injury was stated to have been sustained by the defendant digging a sewer in the close used as a private road, and thereby withdrawing the water from a pond on the plaintiff's close. It was in evidence that, at the time of digging the sewer, the close was not used as a private road:—Held, that, under the plea of not guilty, the defendant admitted all matters of inducement; and semble, that the allegation of the user of the defendant's close was surplusage. Dukes v. Gostling, 1 Scott, 570; 1 Bing. (N.C.) 589; 1 Hodges, 120; 4 L. J., C. P. 211.

A declaration stated that the plaintiff was lawfully possessed of a mill, and by reason thereof ought to have and enjoy the benefit of the water of a watercourse which ran and flowed by means of a weir therein, erected a little above the mill, being kept at a certain height, unto the mill, for supplying it with water for the working thereof, and complained that the defendant wrongfully pulled down the weir, and placed and kept it at a lower height than it ought to have been. The defendant pleaded that he was the occupier of a close adjoining the watercourse, and that he and all others the occupiers for the time being of the close, for twenty years next before action, enjoyed as of right, and without interruption, the right of, from time to time, as occasion required, removing a part of the weir, and placing and keeping it at a lower height than the rest, to such an extent and for such a time as was necessary for diverting enough of the water to irrigate the close; that the irrigation being necessary for the close, wherefore the defendant removed the part of the weir, and placed and kept it at such lower height to such an extent and for such a time as and no more or longer than, was necessary for diverting the water for the irrigation of the close:—Held, that this plea was good; that it was not an argumentative traverse of the right alleged, inasmuch as it set up a right which, under 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71, was not complete until the commencement of the action, and, therefore, was not inconsistent with the plaintiff's right to have the weir at a greater height at the time of the act complained of. Ward v. Robins, 15 M. & W. 237.

To an action for polluting a stream, and impregnating it with noxious substances, whereby the plaintiff's cattle were unable to drink the water, the defendant pleaded an immemorial right to use the water of the stream for the purposes of his trade of a tanner, and returning it polluted to the stream when so used, and also prescriptive rights for twenty and forty years. At the trial, it appeared that the defendant and his father and grandfather had for a long series of years carried on the business of tanners at the place in question, using the water of the stream as they wanted it; but that, within the last twelve years, the tannery business had been considerably enlarged, and the business (and consequently the pollution of the stream) increased fourfold:—Held, that whether the pleas were to be understood as claiming an immemorial or a prescriptive right, not limited to the purposes of the tannery, or the more limited right to use the water for the purposes of the business as carried on more than twenty years ago, the verdict was not warranted by the evidence. Moore v. Webb, 1 C. B. (N.S.) 673.

A declaration alleged that the plaintiff was reversioner of a house, garden and premises, occupied by his tenant; that the defendant was possessed and in the occupation of a close near to the house; and that there was a watercourse in the close, and the defendant, by reason of his possession of the close, ought to have scoured and kept open the watercourse as often as was necessary, to prevent the water from being obstructed, and from running out of the watercourse, unto, into, and under the house. Breach, that the defendant, during the tenant's occupation, wrongfully permitted the watercourse to be obstructed for want of proper cleansing, insomuch that the water was penned back, and ran into and damaged the house, to the injury of the reversion. Plea, that a wall, parcel of the plaintiff's premises, was situate near to the watercourse and to the defendant's close; and by reason of the wall being, through the neglect of the tenant, ruinous, part of the wall near to the watercourse fell down, and by means thereof rubbish, part of the materials, fell into the watercourse, and the same was thereby choked up as alleged, and the water for a short time unavoidably was penned back, and ran out as in the declaration mentioned. Averment, that the defendant, in a short and reasonable time after he had notice that the watercourse was so choked up, and before action brought, cleansed out the same, so that the water flowed as it ought to do:—Held, that the alleged default of the tenant was no answer, the plea not showing that the owners and occupiers of the estate for the time being were bound to repair the wall which fell. Bell v. Twentyman, 1 Q. B. 766; 1 G. & D. 223; 10 L. J., Q. B. 278; 6 Jur. 336.

And the defendant could not excuse himself by averring that he repaired as soon as he had notice of the injury, for that he became liable at the time when the injury occurred. Ib.

So, if he had alleged that he repaired as soon as possible after the injury. Ib.

If a defendant in one plea claims to have water flow in a mill-stream to a ditch at all times, and in another plea claims the right only at the time of flashes, and the jury finds the right in his favour at all times, the judge will discharge the jury as to the claim at the time of flashes. Drewett v. Sheard, 7 Car. & P. 465.

Replication.]—To an action by a reversioner for widening a channel, the defendant pleaded that A. and all prior occupiers of a mill, whilst such occupiers, had, as of right, for twenty years employed a watercourse, and while such occupiers had for twenty years as of right scoured and amended the channel, when and so often as the same required scouring, as to the mill appertaining. Replication, traversing in the terms of the plea the enjoyment of the watercourse, and the scouring as of right, for twenty years:—Held, that the replication was not bad for duplicity, it being rightly a traverse of one whole quasi prescription alleged in the plea. Peter v. Daniel, 5 C. B. 568; 5 D. & L. 501; 17 L. J., C. P. 177; 12 Jur. 604.

Evidence.]—In an action for breaking the plaintiff's close and destroying a hatch, the defendant pleaded that the water of the stream ought to have flowed to his mill, and because the hatch prevented its so doing he pulled it down:—Held, that evidence might be given of what a former tenant said as to asking permission to have the water, as this was an act done, and might be proof of an exercise of a right by one side, and an acquiescence in it by the other. Wakeman v. West, 8 Car. & P. 105.

In an action for breaking flood gates, the defendant justified as lessee of a mill which he held of the bishop of W. For the defendant, old leases of the mill granted by the bishop of W. were produced from the bishop's registry and read in evidence; and it was proposed, on the part of the defendant, to put in an old map of the place in question, also brought from the bishop of W.'s registry. Held, that the map was not admissible in evidence. S. C., 7 Car. & P. 479.

In an action for diverting water from the mill of A., he obtained a verdict; A. and B., afterwards in possession of the mill, brought an action for a similar injury against the same defendants:—Held, that as A. and B. were in possession of the mill formerly in the possession of A., it must be presumed they were privy in estate with him, and that consequently the record was admissible in the second action. Blakemore v. Glamorgan Canal Co., 1 Gale, 78; 2 C., M. & R. 133; 5 Tyr. 603; 4 L. J., Ex. 146.

Where the plaintiff claimed the whole bed of a river, flowing between his land and the defendant's, the defendant contending that each was entitled ad medium filum aquæ:—Held, that evidence of acts of ownership exercised by the plaintiff upon the banks of the river, on the defendant's side, lower down the stream, and where it flowed between the plaintiff's land and a farm of C. adjoining the defendant's land; and also of repairs done by the plaintiff, to a fence which divided C.'s farm from the river, and was in continuation of a fence dividing the defendant's land from the river, was admissible for the plaintiff. Jones v. Williams, 2 M. & W. 326; M. & H. 51; 6 L. J., Ex. 107.

A defendant was owner of a close containing a well, the water of which had flowed immemorially into an old pond, situate in one of three closes belonging to the plaintiff. The defendant's predecessor of the land having, about 1812, changed the course of the water, whereby it ceased to flow into the old pond as before, the plaintiff made three new ponds, one in each of his three closes, and having conducted the water into them, ceased to use the old pond, which became filled with rubbish and overgrown with grass. In 1843 the defendant diverted the water from the three ponds, whereupon the plaintiff brought his action. The declaration stated, that, at the time of the grievance, three closes of land, and certain, to wit, three ponds filled with water, one pond thereof being in and upon each of the closes respectively, were in the possession and occupation of the plaintiff's tenant; and it then stated the diversion complained of:—Held, that the plaintiff, who had failed to prove a right to the overflow of water into the three ponds, was entitled to give evidence of the immemorial right to the overflow of water into the old pond. Hale v. Oldroyd, 14 M. & W. 789; 15 L. J., Ex. 4.

—— Record of Conviction.]—In an action for disturbing a watercourse, it was proved that the water had flowed in its present course for more than twenty years. The plaintiff had been in the habit of drawing off the water, but on one occasion he had been summoned and fined one shilling, from which he did not appeal:—Held, that the conviction was improperly rejected, as the conviction unappealed against was, under the circumstances, evidence of an acknowledgment by the plaintiff that the usage to draw off the water for irrigation was not as of right. Eaton v. Swansea Waterworks Co., 17 Q. B. 267; 20 L. J., Q. B. 482; 15 Jur. 675.

D. WATERWORKS COMPANIES.

1. General Powers.

Taking of Streams—Compensation.]—The 10 & 11 Vict. c. 17, places the taking of streams upon the same footing as the taking of lands under the Lands Clauses Act (8 & 9 Vict. c. 18); and a waterworks company was restrained from diverting a stream belonging to the plaintiff, without first paying compensation for the same, or making deposit and giving a bond in accordance with the provisions of the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 18. Ferrand v. Bradford Corporation, 21 Beav. 412; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 175.

Company proceeding in mode not Sanctioned by Act—Right of Party having no Interest to Injunction.]—Persons obtaining from the legislature power to interfere with the rights of property are bound strictly to adhere to the powers so conceded to them to do no more than the legislature has sanctioned, and to proceed only in the mode which the legislature has pointed out; but (except in a proceeding at the instance of the attorney-general) any one seeking the assistance of a court of equity, to restrain the violation of such a contract with the legislature, is bound to show that he has a private interest in the matter. Therefore where a waterworks act empowered a company to divert the water of a stream (without limit as to quantity), by means of an open channel filled with loose stones, and they were diverting it by means of a culvert:—Held, that another company, which was entitled to the water of a stream into which the diverted stream had flowed, was not entitled to an injunction to restrain a violation of the terms of the act as to the mode of diversion. Liverpool Corporation v. Chorley Waterworks Co., 2 De G. M. & G. 852.

Injunction to restrain Company from applying for New Act.]—An injunction to restrain the Grand Junction Waterworks Company from applying to parliament for an act authorising the company to procure its supply of water by means of an aqueduct from the river Colne, instead of the Thames, as authorised by the existing acts under which it was incorporated, was refused. Ware v. Grand Junction Water Co., 2 Russ. & M. 470.

A court of equity will not, at the instance of a shareholder, restrain a joint-stock company, incorporated by act of parliament, which prescribes its constitution and objects, from applying in its corporate capacity to parliament and from using its corporate seal and resources to obtain the sanction of the legislature to the remodelling of its constitution, or to a material alteration and extension of its object and powers. Ib.

—— Rights of Duke of Cornwall.]—By an act a company had power to take water from the river Chew on paying compensation for it; but it was enacted that it should not be lawful for the company to divert, or take, or in any manner interfere with water flowing or passing, or which, but for the powers of the act, might flow or pass into the river Chew, unless and until the water, after the rate of twelve cubic feet per second for twelve hours for each and every day, should be passing down the river from and out of reservoirs for the use of mills. By a subsequent act it was provided that nothing in that act or the present act should extend to authorise the company to purchase, take, use or interfere with any land, soil or water, or any rights in respect thereof, belonging to the Duke of Cornwall, without his written consent:—Held, that the company did not by the exercise of the powers conferred by the first act, acquire any right as against the Duke of Cornwall to the water of the Chew, without obtaining the authority of the Duke of Cornwall in the manner provided for by the last act. Att.-Gen. (Prince of Wales) v. Bristol Waterworks Co., 10 Ex. 884; 3 C. L. R. 726; 24 L. J., Ex. 205.

Taking of Lands—Waterworks Clauses Act.]—The meaning of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, s. 12, is, that subject to a company having authority to take lands and construct works, then, if the company has power and space and room enough in the land which they are authorised to take to afford them an area for additional works, they may be empowered to make the collateral and auxiliary works referred to in the section. Simpson v. South Staffordshire Waterworks Co., 4 De G. J. & S. 679; 34 L. J., Ch. 380; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 453; 13 W. R. 729.

—— Limitation to Plans.]—A waterworks company, before applying to parliament, deposited plans, showing that a certain field would be affected by a tunnel passing forty-five feet below the surface, and gave a notice to the owner accordingly. The company obtained its act, authorising it to construct its works according to the plans, and afterwards proposed to take the field, sink a well, and erect pumping machinery thereon:—Held, that the company could not, by the exercise of its compulsory powers, take any portion of the field, other than so much as was required for the tunnel. Ib.

Breaking up Roads for Works.]—Under s. 31 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), it is incumbent upon the undertakers intending to break up a road to communicate beforehand their proposed plan or method of executing the work to the road authority; and this in a sufficient manner to enable the road authority to judge whether what is proposed ought to be done without modification. If the plan is not approved of by the road authority, it rests with the undertakers to apply for the determination of two justices before proceeding to operations. Edgware Highway Board v. Colne Valley Water Co., 46 L. J., Ch. 889.

The "plan" referred to in s. 31 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, which enacts that no street shall be opened or broken up by a water company, except according to such "plan" as shall be approved of by the local road authority, means a plan showing whereabouts in the street, both as regards depth and lateral position, the water pipes are proposed to be laid. East Moulsey Local Board v. Lambeth Waterworks Co., 62 L. J., Ch. 82; [1892] 3 Ch. 289; 2 R. 88; 67 L. T. 493—C. A.

When a water company gives notice to the local authority of its intention to open and break up the street for the purpose of laying down water pipes, and submits such a plan as above mentioned to the local authority, if the latter do not propose anything themselves so as to create a "difference" which under the same section can be referred to the justices, and do not attend with their officer at the time fixed for the opening and breaking up of the street to superintend it, then the water company may perform the work without the superintendence of the local board or their officer. Edgware Highway Board v. Colne Valley Waterworks Co. (46 L. J., Ch. 889) discussed and approved. Ib.

—— Local Authority having Control of Streets generally and Power to Supply Water—Power to Break up Private Road without Owner's Consent.]—A private road is a "street" within the meaning of ss. 16 and 54 of the Public Health Act, 1875. The words "where the local authority have not the control of the streets," in s. 57 of the Public Health Act, 1875, are descriptive of and mean a local authority not having the control of the streets generally in its district—i.e., a local authority which is not the road authority. Hill v. Wallasey Local Board, 63 L. J., Ch. 1; [1894] 1 Ch. 133; 7 R. 51; 69 L. T. 641; 42 W. R. 81—C. A.

The defendants, who had the powers of an urban sanitary authority with respect to the W. district, and the control of the streets generally in that district, and also the power of supplying the inhabitants with water, proceeded, without the plaintiff's consent, to break up a private road belonging to the plaintiff, which was situate within their district, for the purpose of laying down water mains:—Held (A. L. Smith, L.J., dissenting), that s. 57 of the Public Health Act, 1875, incorporating s. 29 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, which forbids the laying down of any pipe in any private land without the consent of the owner, did not apply to the defendants, as they were a local authority having the control of the streets generally in their district; that under ss. 16 and 54 of the Public Health Act, 1875, the defendants, as the local authority, had the power to carry the water mains through the plaintiff's private road without his consent; and, consequently, that the plaintiff was not entitled to an injunction. Ib.

—— By Owner or Occupier—Liability for.]—By 10 & 11 Vict. c. 17, s. 52, the owner or occupier, defined in s. 48, is empowered to break up so much of the pavement of any street as is between the main of the waterworks company and his premises, to effect a communication therewith, and such communication is to be made under the superintendence of an officer of the company. Where an owner, acting under this power, opened a street to lay a service-pipe, and carelessly filled up the hole, and the connection with the main was, at the same time, effected by a waterworks company:—Held, that the owner, and not the company, was responsible for reinstating the street, and that the word "pavement" in s. 52 was not confined to a foot pavement. Glover v. East London Waterworks Co., 17 L. T. 475; 16 W. R. 310.

Placing Works on Surface — Stop-valves in Footway.]—Section 28 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, provides that the undertakers may open and break up the soil and pavement of streets within their district and lay down and place pipes, conduits, service pipes, and other works and engines, and do all other acts which they shall from time to time deem necessary for supplying water to the inhabitants of the district. Section 32 of the same act provides that, when the undertakers open or break up the road or pavement of any street they shall, with all convenient speed, complete the work for which the same shall be broken up and fill in the ground and reinstate and make good the road or pavement so opened or broken up:—Held, that the power given by s. 28 includes any works which the undertakers may deem necessary for the purpose of regulating the supply of water, and is not confined to the laying down of apparatus underground, but enables the undertakers to place such works on the surface of the street as may not be inconsistent with the substantial reinstatement of the road or pavement in its previous condition or create a nuisance; and therefore that a water company was authorised by the section to place in the pavement of a street covers or guard-boxes to protect stop-valves placed for the purpose of regulating the supply of water in the communication pipes, by which water was supplied to premises in the street, such covers or guard-boxes not creating a nuisance or being inconsistent with the substantial reinstatement of the pavement. East London Waterworks Co. v. St. Matthew, Bethnal Green, 55 L. J., Q. B. 571; 17 Q. B. D. 475; 54 L. T. 919; 35 W. R. 37; 50 J. P. 820—C. A. See also Preston Corporation v. Fullwood Local Board, 53 L. T. 718; 34 W. R. 196; 50 J. P. 228.

Laying down Pipes—Limits of Act.]—An act for supplying with water the town and port of C. and the neighbourhood, after reciting that the town of C. and the neighbourhood were insufficiently supplied with water, incorporated a company, and gave it the usual powers, and enacted that the limits of the act for the supply of water should comprise "the whole of the town and port of C., and the parishes and places within and adjoining to such town":—Held, that the word "port" was used in its popular sense, and did not extend to the district fixed by the commissioners of the treasury as the port of C. for the purposes of the customs duties. Cardiff Corporation v. Cardiff Waterworks Co., 5 Jur. (N.S.) 953; 7 W. R. 386.

The company was proceeding to lay down pipes, which they alleged were necessary for the supply of C., but which they admitted they intended to use for the purpose of carrying water beyond the limits of their powers. At the suit of the board of health of C., the court restrained the company from laying down pipes under the streets of C. for the purpose of supplying with water any parish or place not being part of the port of C., or any parish or place within or adjoining such town. Ib.

—— After Expiration of Period for Completion of Works — "Extension of Works."]—Semble, where under a special waterworks act, incorporating the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, a water company has, within the period fixed by the special act for the completion of the works, laid down a water-main in a road within the limits of the act according to deposited plans and sections, the company may, after the expiration of the period, lay down a second main, having regard to s. 28 of the general act, and particularly where the special act gives them power to "extend, enlarge, or alter any of their mains or pipes at any time, and from time to time as occasion may require, for the purpose of supplying the inhabitants within the limits of the act with water"; provided the company complies with the requirements of the special and general act, as to notice and otherwise, before breaking up the road for the purpose. East Moulsey Local Board v. Lambeth Waterworks Co., 62 L. J., Ch. 82; [1892] 3 Ch. 289; 2 R. 88; 67 L. T. 493—C. A.

—— Right to lay Pipes through Structure of Railway Bridge—Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847.]—Section 28 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, provides that persons authorised by the act to construct waterworks "may open and break up the soil and pavement of the several streets and bridges within the limits of the special act . . . and for the purposes aforesaid remove and use all earth and materials in and under such streets and bridges, and do all other acts which the undertakers shall from time to time deem necessary for supplying water to the inhabitants of the district included within the said limits." Section 29 provides that "nothing herein contained shall authorise or empower the undertakers to lay down or place any pipe, conduit, or other work in any land not dedicated to public use without the consent of the owners or occupiers thereof":—Held, that where a railway company had constructed an iron bridge to carry a public road over their line, the water authority of a town were not justified in interfering with the structure of the bridge by carrying their pipe through the iron girders which supported the bridge, as the structure could not in any sense be said to be land dedicated to the public use. Glasgow Corporation v. Glasgow and South-Western Ry., 64 L. J., P. C. 171; [1895] A. C. 376; 11 R. 226; 72 L. T. 809; 59 J. P. 788—H. L. (Sc.)

Construction of Works by Local Authority —Necessary Notices.]—The Public Health Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 63), s. 75, is not materially extended by the Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 52, and therefore a local authority, desiring to construct waterworks, and having, before the passing of the latter act, given the notices required by s. 75 of the former act, is not, in consequence of the passing of the latter act, required to give the notices under s. 52 of that act. Richmond Waterworks Co. and the Southwark and Vauxhall Waterworks Co. v. Richmond Vestry, 45 L. J., Ch. 441; 3 Ch. D. 82; 34 L. T. 480.

Where prior to the incorporation of a local water company, the local authority had substantial waterworks in existence, additions to or alterations of such works can be made by the local authority without giving the water company notice under s. 52 of the Public Health Act, 1875. The words "before commencing to construct waterworks" in s. 52, mean new waterworks in a fair and reasonable sense of the term, and do not apply to improvements of or additions to existing waterworks. Cleveland Water Co. v. Redcar Local Board, 64 L. J., Ch. 64; [1895] 1 Ch. 168; 13 R. 18; 43 W. R. 90; 59 J. P. 7.

Duty to fix proper Fire-plugs in Mains.]—Section 38 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, imposes no duty on the undertakers to provide a pipe of sufficient capacity to carry a proper fire-plug in a place where their existing pipe is sufficient for that purpose, although, in the opinion of the justices empowered by the section to settle the proper position of the fire-plugs in the district, it is, as a fact, essential that a fire-plug should be placed there. Reg. v. Wells Water Co., 55 L. T. 188; 51 J. P. 135.

Fire-plug fixed by Waterworks Company—Local Authority — "Request" — Constructive Request by User of Fire-plugs.] — Though s. 66 of the Public Health Act, 1875, makes it the duty of the urban authority to provide proper fire-plugs in their district, it does not impose upon them any statutory obligation to pay for fire-plugs erected by a waterworks company without a previous request from the urban authority; and a "request" by such authority, within the meaning of s. 38 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, cannot be implied from the fact that the urban authority have used fire-plugs erected within their district by a waterworks company, and that such plugs comply with the requirements of that section. Grand Junction Waterworks Co. v. Brentford Local Board, 63 L. J., Q. B. 717; [1894] 2 Q. B. 735; 9 R. 788; 71 L. T. 240; 59 J. P. 51—C. A.

Employment of Engineer.]—A company was incorporated for supplying a town with water. The act fixed the share capital of the company at 15,000*l.*, and defined the area from which the water was to be supplied. Some years after the works were completed the committee of management of the company, in consequence of complaints of the defective supply, resolved, with the sanction of the shareholders, to apply to parliament for power to make fresh works, so as to include a largely extended area, both in respect of the sources and the supply of water, with a large additional capital; and having power to enter into contracts on behalf of the company, employed an engineer to prepare the necessary parliamentary plans:—Held, that the employment of the engineer for the above purpose was not ultra vires, and (the contract being in other respects valid) that he was entitled to recover as for work and labour from the defendant, who had (by another statute) become liable to pay the debts and perform the agreements of the company. Bateman v. Ashton-under-Lyne Corporation, 3 H. & N. 323; 27 L. J., Ex. 458; 6 W. R. 829.

Right of New Company to Purchase from Old—Payment for Share Capital.]—By a deed executed in 1857, in pursuance of a preliminary agreement and an act of parliament confirming the same, certain waterworks and property were transferred by an old company to a new company, upon certain terms, under which the latter was to pay to the former a rent equal to interest upon the share capital of the former at five per cent., with a clause for reducing the rate of interest to 4½ per cent. in certain events. The deed contained a proviso that, if the transferee desirous of becoming absolute owner of the works "should on or before any 25th day of December, after having given to the old company six calendar months' previous notice of its desire to avail itself of the option thereby given, pay unto the old company" the amount of its share capital, the party making such payments should thereupon become entitled to the works freed from the rent thereby reserved. Notice to purchase was given in due course, but the money was not paid at the time specified in the notice:—Held, that the right to purchase had not been lost by the non-payment of the money. Ward v. Wolverhampton Waterworks Co., 41 L. J., Ch. 308; L. R. 13 Eq. 243; 25 L. T. 487; 20 W. R. 85.

Alleged Right to Supply Water—Infringement—Injunction.]—Plaintiff, through several mesne assignments, being in possession of a right, originally in the city of London, of supplying Southwark with water, prayed injunction to restrain defendant from encroaching on this right by raising engines, laying pipes, &c. Defendant demurred to bill, for that plaintiff ought first to have established his right at law; demurrer allowed. Whitchurch v. Hide, 2 Atk. 391.

Sale to Local Authority under Statutory Provision—"Mains, Pipes, and Fittings"—Principle of Valuation.]—Under a local act of parliament a water board was required to sell to a sanitary authority "all mains, pipes, and fittings" belonging to the board within the district of the sanitary authority at a price to be fixed by arbitration; and after such sale the board was to cease to supply water within the district:—Held that the price to be paid to the board by the sanitary authority was to be arrived at by a calculation of the value of the mains, pipes, and fittings regarded as plant in situ capable of earning a profit, and that the arbitrator was not entitled to take into consideration the loss of the revenue accruing to the board by reason of the supply of water to the district by means of those mains, pipes, and fittings. Stockton and Middlesbrough Water Board v. Kirkleatham Local Board, 63 L. J., Q. B. 56; [1893] A. C. 444; 1 R. 288; 69 L. T. 661; 57 J. P. 772—H. L. (E.)

Shares in Company—Nature of.]—Though shares in waterworks are a legal estate and a corporeal inheritance, yet no one proprietor can receive the profits himself, and as there is no other way to get at it, it is proper to come into this court for mesne profits. Townsend v. Ash, 3 Atk. 337.

2. LIABILITY.

a. Compensation.

For Abstraction or Diversion of Water—In what Cases.]—The abstraction by a waterworks company of water from a stream does not entitle a riparian proprietor below to require the company to treat under the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, s. 6, for the purchase of his interest in the stream, but entitles him only to compensation as for land injuriously affected. Bush v. Trowbridge Water Co., 44 L. J., Ch. 645; L. R. 10 Ch. 459; 33 L. T. 137; 23 W. R. 641.

—— Interests injuriously affected—Award—Apparent ambiguity.]—The appellant granted to D. certain mills on a stream forming the outlet to two lochs nearly surrounded by his property, with his "whole rights of water and water-power connected with the said mills"; "reserving" all his "rights in the lochs" and stream "except the rights therein connected with the mills." The storage capacity of the lochs had been increased by embankments made within the appellant's ground. The respondents, who were waterworks commissioners under a special act, acquired by agreement the rights of D. in the water, and under their compulsory powers took from the appellant a small piece of ground and a wayleave for a pipe, which they inserted in the stream and diverted the waters of the lochs to supply a town. Sect. 9 of the special act provided that a certain quantity of water sent down the stream daily should be held to be a sufficient compensation to the mill-owners and others. Sect. 10 reserved, inter alia, any rights the appellant had in Loch Humphrey. In a claim for compensation the arbitrator found the appellant entitled (1) to 50*l.* for the land and wayleave; and (2) "In the event of it being determined that the appellant had retained any right or interest in the waters of the lochs and the streams or any of them, and that he is now entitled to compensation in respect of such right or interest, I find 3,000*l.* to be the amount to be paid" in respect of the right or interest to be acquired from the appellant "in the aforesaid waters and the embankments" at the lochs, including in the said sum of 3,000*l.* the sum of 1,650*l.* as the estimated price or value of the embankments:—Held, that the award was valid, inasmuch as the arbitrator had valued only one thing, the enhanced value of the water in the lochs, and had not valued, as a separate subject, the embankments, but had properly included in the 3,000*l.*, as a factor of value, the incidental rights obtained by the respondents to have the embankments left standing. Blantyre (Lord) v. Babtie, 13 App. Cas. 631—H. L. (Sc.)

—— When no Action Lies.]—By 10 & 11 Vict. c. 17, s. 12, powers for the execution of certain works are given, and it is provided that the undertakers shall make full compensation to all parties interested for all damages sustained by them through the exercise of such powers. In the execution of works authorised by a local act, incorporating that section, A. intercepted water which would otherwise have percolated through the strata of earth into a well upon the premises of B., and drained off water which had accumulated in the well. Upon a complaint by B., before justices, in order to recover compensation for the damage she had sustained, A. was ordered to pay her a sum of money and costs:—Held, that this order was wrong; for that, inasmuch as no action would lie against A. in respect of either quantity of water, supposing no act authorising the execution of the works, had been passed, the claim for compensation could not be sustained. New River Co. v. Johnson, 2 El. & El. 435; 29 L. J., M. C. 93; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 374; 1 L. T. 295; 8 W. R. 179.

Purchasable Interest—What is.]—A corporation under its local waterworks act, with which were incorporated the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, and the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, was empowered to purchase, enter upon, take, use, divert and appropriate certain streams, one of which, arising at a distance, came down to and turned a mill, of which plaintiff was tenant for life. The corporation gave the owner notice of their intention to take and divert the whole of the stream, and actually diverted part. In pursuance of an agreement made between the parties, two valuers were appointed (in accordance with s. 9 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845), to assess the compensation to be paid in respect of the damage, both present and future, caused by the abstraction of the whole of the stream. The valuers disagreed, and a third valuer was appointed by justices, with the consent of both parties, who awarded "the sum of 939*l.* 5*s.* as the compensation money to be paid by the corporation for the permanent damage and injury which the owner or owners for the time being of the above-mentioned mill, lands, and premises, may have sustained, or shall or may sustain, by the abstraction of the whole of the stream." In an action on this award, claiming a mandamus to the corporation to pay the money into the bank:—Held, that the interest of the owner and his remainderman was a purchasable interest, within the meaning of the special act and the acts incorporated with it, and that it was competent to the corporation to pay for the whole stream at once, though they had only diverted part. Stone v. Yeovil Corporation, 46 L. J., C. P. 137; 2 C. P. D. 99; 36 L. T. 279; 25 W. R. 240—C. A.

Held, also, that the parties proceeded rightly under s. 9 of the Lands Clauses Act, and that that section applies not only to cases where lands in the occupation of a tenant for life are purchased and taken, but also to cases of compensation for permanent injury to such lands, the words "such lands" in that clause being equivalent to "lands so occupied." Ib.

Held, also, that the agreement between the parties amounted to a binding agreement, on the part of plaintiff to accept, and on the part of the corporation to pay, the sum assessed by the two valuers, or in case of disagreement, by the third valuer. Ib.

Damage by Severance of Minerals.]—When a corporation was under an act empowered to make a conduit for water through a field at some distance below the surface:—Held, that it was not necessary for it to make compensation for damage by severance of minerals where it was not required by the provisions of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, to purchase them. Huddersfield Corporation and Jacomb, In re, 43 L. J., Ch. 748; L. R. 17 Eq. 476; 30 L. T. 78. Affirmed, 44 L. J., Ch. 96; L. R. 10 Ch. 92; 31 L. T. 466; 23 W. R. 100.

Mines—Prospective Prevention of Working through Leakage.]—Under the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), compensation for the prospective prevention of the working of a mine by reason of leakage from a reservoir cannot be awarded at any time before the working has approached the limits mentioned in s. 22. Holliday v. Wakefield Corporation, 60 L. J., Q. B. 361; [1891] A. C. 81; 64 L. T. 1; 40 W. R. 129; 55 J. P. 325—H. L. (E.)

b. Injuries Due to Defective Works.

Action for Damages—When Allowed—Arbitration.]—A provisional committee of a waterworks company agreed with B., on his withdrawing his opposition to their bill in parliament, to purchase lands for their works at a fixed sum per acre, including damage for severance, and in addition to pay for any damage he should sustain from the water of the company being near his house or dwelling, and also to make good to him or his tenants all loss or damage which the erection of the intended works might cause to any property belonging to or in the occupation of him or them which the company might not purchase (except damage occasioned by severance), whether caused by the order or neglect of the company, the damage in all these cases to be assessed by arbitrators. The act was obtained, and it incorporated the lands clauses act; and the purchase money was paid, and the compensation money under the above heads was ascertained by the arbitrators and paid to B. He subsequently brought an action against the company, claiming damages for taking so little care of a reservoir that the water oozed out over his land, causing offensive smells and vapours, and rendering his buildings damp and unwholesome, and permanently injuring their value, and for obstructing a drain, and thereby penning back the sewage of his house, so that it could not flow away by means of the drain as it ought; and further, that by reason of making the reservoir and works authorised to be made by the act, a drain whereby his adjoining house and lands were drained, was interrupted and rendered useless, and the company neglected to substitute another drain according to their duty, whereby his house and lands were insufficiently drained; and also for cutting a channel across, and thereby, and also, by means of the reservoir and works, depriving him of the use of an agricultural road, forming a communication between his lands, and for not substituting another road in lieu of it; and also by the reservoir and works obstructing a public footpath, and depriving him of the use of it, and thereby causing him particular damage and inconvenience:—Held, first, that the action was maintainable, the damages claimed not being those directed by act of parliament to be settled by arbitration, or such as were contemplated by or within the scope of the previous agreement between the parties. Blagrave v. Bristol Waterworks Co., 1 H. & N. 369; 26 L. J., Ex. 57.

—— Notice of Injury.]—Held, secondly, that with respect to the right of action for the damage occasioned by the interruption of the drain and non-substitution of another, it was immaterial that the company had no notice that the interrupted drain was for the drainage of the house, or that he required another substituted drain; and so also with respect to the interruption and non-substitution of the occupation-road, that it was no answer that he had not required any way to be substituted. Ib.

—— Nature of Injury.]—Held, thirdly, that a claim against the company for wrongfully and maliciously raising the level of the water of a stream so as to prevent its flowing at its accustomed speed at the place where it arrived at B.'s lands, might be a loss or damage caused by the erection of the works, which by the agreement was to be assessed by arbitration. Ib.

—— Fraudulent Representation to Arbitrators.]—A count alleged that B. and the company referred to arbitration the amount of compensation to be paid for the damage which he should sustain by the construction of a reservoir near his house and lands, for which damage the company would have been bound to compensate him, and that the amount of compensation depended in part upon the height to which the reservoir would be constructed; and that the company wrongfully, maliciously and fraudulently caused it to be represented to the arbitrators that they intended to construct the reservoir to the height of thirty feet, whereas they either had not determined on the height, or intended to construct it to a greater height, and did afterwards so construct it, by reason of which representation the arbitrators awarded to B. much less compensation than they otherwise would have done:—Held, that the count disclosed no cause of action. Ib.

—— Remoteness of Damage.]—A waterworks company under its act laid down one of its mains along and under a turnpike road, made under an act which declared the soil to be in the owners of the adjoining land, subject only to the right to use and maintain the road. K. was owner of land on both sides, at a spot where the road was carried across a valley on an embankment, and wanting to connect his land on either side he employed C., at an agreed sum, to make a tunnel under the road. In doing the work it was discovered that there was a leak in the main of the company higher up the road, and on C. digging out the earth, the water from the leak flowed down upon the work and delayed it, so as to cause pecuniary damage to C., for which he brought an action against the company:—Held, that, assuming K. could have maintained an action against the company for injury to his property, the damage sustained by C. by reason of his contract with K. becoming less profitable, or a losing contract, in consequence of the injury to K.'s property, gave him no right of action against the company. Cattle v. Stockton Waterworks Co., 44 L. J., Q. B. 129; L. R. 10 Q. B. 453; 33 L. T. 475.

—— Indictable Nuisance.]—The tunnel was formed by digging through half the width of the road, forming the tunnel, and then completing the other half in the same way. Before commencing the work K. obtained the consent of the road surveyor and the trustee:—Held, assuming K. could, under the circumstances, have been indicted for the nuisance to the high road, the partial obstruction to the highway did not render the whole proceeding so illegal as to prevent C., who was engaged in it, from recovering damages for a wrong. Ib.

—— Stop-cock Box—Aperture uncovered—Nuisance.]—A water company laid a communication pipe from their main to the consumer's house with a stop-cock and box in the road; this box was left uncovered, by reason of which a passer-by was injured. Evidence was given at the time that the aperture was dangerous to passers-by, but the judge nonsuited the plaintiff on the ground that the property in the box was in the consumer, and that the consumer was bound to repair it:—Held, that there was evidence of negligence on the defendant's part, and that the nonsuit was wrong. Strute v. Southwark and Vauxhall Water Co., 53 J. P. 424.

—— Guard to Stop-cock in Service Pipe, Liability to Repair.]—Where a water company alone has a statutory power to break up streets and repair service-pipes and the apparatus connected therewith, a duty is cast on the company to keep in repair the apparatus in the street, and it is liable to a passer-by for injuries resulting from non-repair, even though the service-pipes and apparatus were laid by the company at the request and expense of the householder. Chapman v. Fylde Waterworks Co., 64 L. J., Q. B. 15; [1894] 2 Q. B. 599; 9 R. 582; 71 L. T. 539; 43 W. R. 1; 59 J. P. 5—C. A.

—— Fire-plug placed in Street—Duty to Keep in Repair.]—A fire-plug had been lawfully fixed in a highway by the defendants. Originally the top of the fire-plug had been level with the pavement of the highway, but in consequence of the ordinary wearing away of the highway the fire-plug projected half an inch above the level of the pavement. The fire-plug itself was in perfect repair. The plaintiff, whilst passing along the highway, fell over the fire-plug and was hurt:—Held, that, as the fire-plug was in good repair, and had been lawfully fixed in the highway, no action by the plaintiff would lie against the defendants. Kent v. Worthing Local Board (10 Q. B. D. 118) commented on. Moore v. Lambeth Waterworks Co., 55 L. J., Q. B. 304; 17 Q. B. D. 462; 55 L. T. 309; 34 W. R. 559; 50 J. P. 756—C. A.

c. Escape of Water.

When no Negligence.]—A water company having observed the direction of the act of parliament in laying down their pipes is not responsible for an escape of water from them not caused by their own negligence. Blyth v. Birmingham Waterworks Co., 11 Ex. 781; 25 L. J., Ex. 212; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 333.

The fact that their precautions proved insufficient against the effects of a winter of extreme coldness, such as no man could have foreseen, is not sufficient to render them liable for negligence. Ib.

A main belonging to a waterworks company burst, and the water flooded the plaintiffs' premises, causing considerable damage:—Held, that the company being authorised by act of parliament to lay the main, and having been guilty of no negligence, were not liable in damages to the plaintiffs. Green v. Chelsea Waterworks Co., 70 L. T. 547—C. A.

—— Damage to Lands by extraordinary Flood —Damnum fatale.]—By s. 43 of the Kirkcaldy and Dysart Waterworks Act, 1867, it was provided that the commissioners under the act, "should be bound to make good to the Countess of Rothes and her heirs, &c., all damage which may be occasioned to her or them, by reason of or in consequence of any bursting. or flow, or escape of water from any reservoir, or aqueduct, or pipe, or other work connected therewith" which may be constructed by the commissioners. The countess is proprietrix of lands situated below the site of one of the reservoirs, and during an extraordinary rainfall a great quantity of water was continuously discharged from the reservoir, through a waste weir into the watercourse of a burn, and did much damage to the countess's lands. She claimed compensation. There was no failure or insufficiency of the works and no negligence:—Held, reversing the decision of the court below (Lord Blackburn dissenting), that on the construction of the above clause the countess was entitled to compensation for damage by flood waters from the reservoir, no matter how caused. Rothes (Countess) v. Kirkcaldy Waterworks Commissioners, 7 App. Cas. 694—H. L. (Sc.)

Per Lord Watson: Statutory provisions, such as here, in a local and personal act must be regarded as a contract between the parties, whether made by their mutual agreement, or forced on them by the legislature. Ib.

Absence of Reasonable Care—Evidence of.]—Although a water company is not liable for the unforeseen results of an extraordinary frost, yet the company is bound to take reasonable care to provide against the consequences of ordinary frost. Steggles v. New River Co., 11 W. R. 234. Affirmed, 13 W. R. 413—Ex. Ch.

Where it was known that the effect of frost would be to cause the plugs in the water pipes to start, and thus to let the water out at the side, and some precautions might have been taken, if not to prevent this, at all events to prevent the water from escaping through the soil, and no such precautions having been taken, the plugs started in a frost of extraordinary severity, and the water, thus escaping. ran through the soil into a cellar:—Held, that there was some evidence of negligence on which a jury might hold the company liable. Ib.

Obligation to Cleanse Channel of River.]—A company was authorised by its special act to construct a reservoir, to divert into it the water of the River Muddock and of other streams, and from the reservoir to supply through the channel of the Muddock sufficient water to enable the mills on the river Bann to be worked at all seasons of the year; and these works it executed without negligence, and in the due exercise of its parliamentary powers. In consequence of these works, the channel of the Muddock passing near the plaintiff's land became choked, and, for want of cleansing, incapable of discharging the increased volume of water so sent through it, and the plaintiff's land was thereby flooded and injured:—Held, that there was an obligation on the company to cleanse the channel of the river. Geddis v. Bann Reservoir Co., 3 App. Cas. 430—H. L. (Ir.)

d. Pollution of Water.

Not within Statutory Powers—Liability for.]—A waterworks company was authorised by its private act to take and use the water of certain springs which supplied a river upon the banks of which certain mills were situate. The act provided that the company should not abstract more than a certain amount of water before it had constructed a compensation reservoir for storing the water during floods for the benefit of the mill-owners. The act gave the company compulsory powers for acquiring land, streams and springs for its undertaking, and powers to acquire by consent lands for constructing its compensation reservoir. The act contained a reservation of the rights of the owners and occupiers of any lands, mills or works, to the use of the waters of the stream, except so far as provided and declared by the act. The Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), was incorporated with this act. The company constructed a compensation reservoir, and a subsequent act of parliament which gave it further powers, including powers of emptying and cleansing the reservoir, recognised this reservoir as a sufficient compensation reservoir for the mill-owners, and directed it to be maintained. The owner of some dye works situate on the river below the reservoir filed a bill against the company, complaining that the effect of the reservoir was to make the water of the river more muddy than it was before its construction, and to render it unfit for the process of dyeing, and praying for an injunction to restrain the company from fouling the stream. These allegations being in the judgment of the court established:—Held, that the acts gave the company no power to foul the water; that the compensation clauses in the Waterworks Act, 1847, did not apply, inasmuch as the injury was such as the company was not authorised to commit; and that the owner of the dye works was entitled to an injunction. Clowes v. Staffordshire Potteries Waterworks Co., 42 L. J., Ch. 107; L. R. 8 Ch. 125; 27 L. T. 521; 21 W. R. 32.

—— Assessment of Damages.]—The plaintiff was owner of two dye works, which were situate upon the banks of a river, and had carried on flourishing businesses until the construction of a reservoir by the defendants higher up the river. The consequence of the construction of the reservoir was that a deposit of mud was formed at the bottom of it, which, escaping into the river, so fouled it that the water became unfit for use in the plaintiff's works, and the business consequently fell off, until the plaintiff was obliged to sell the works very much below their former value. The plaintiff brought an action, and the judge at the trial directed the jury to find a verdict for the plaintiff, and the jury awarded 400*l.* for damages and 1,000*l.* for the depreciation of the property. On motion for a new trial:—Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover anything for the depreciation of his property, and that the rule must be made absolute for a new trial, unless he would consent to reduce his damages to the 400*l.* lawfully recoverable. Tatton v. Staffordshire Potteries Waterworks Co., 44 J. P. 106.

3. RIGHTS AGAINST OTHER PERSONS.

User and Diversion of Water.]—A waterworks company purchased a mill on the upper part of a stream, and thereby became riparian owners. They collected the water from the stream into a reservoir and applied it for the purpose of supplying a neighbouring town with water. A canal company being the riparian owners lower down the stream, finding their flow of water affected, brought a suit for an injunction, and the waterworks company by their pleadings claimed the right to use the water in the manner complained of:—Held, that such user of the water by them was neither a user in connection with the tenement of the waterworks company, nor a reasonable user such as an upper riparian owner had a right to make, and that the canal company was entitled to an injunction to restrain such user of the water. Swindon Waterworks Co. v. Wilts and Berks Canal Navigation Co., 45 L. J., Ch. 638; L. R. 7 H. L. 697; 33 L. T. 513; 24 W. R. 284.

A canal company was established by acts of parliament which gave them the right of taking water from streams within the distance of 2,000 yards, for the purpose of making and maintaining their canal. They purchased a mill on the stream in question, and so became riparian owners. They afterwards ceased to use the mill:—Held, that by the purchase of the mill they acquired all the rights incident thereto, in the same way as such rights would have been acquired by a private individual, and not fettered or restricted within the limits of their statutory powers as a canal company. Ib.

A water company, who were authorised in 1869 by their act to make a reservoir with a dam across a stream, and to impound all the waters of that stream and of other streams then flowing into that stream above the dam, and so became owners of the reservoir through the site of which the stream originally flowed, have the right to stop any person from diverting the water, which at that time came down, or but for a stoppage would come down as part of that stream or its tributaries above the dam, and as to which the person diverting could have been restrained from continuing his diversion at the suit of a lower riparian owner, but not to stop any person using water above who had a right to do so at the time their act was passed. Brymbo Water Co. v. Lesters Lime Co., 8 R. 329.

A person who makes an artificial cutting, and so brings water to a stream which did not go there before, can prima facie cut it off if he chooses. Ib.

——Right to Percolating Water—Construction of Company's Act.]—Where a statute provides that it shall be unlawful for a person other than a company authorised to supply water to a town "to divert, alter, or appropriate in any manner other than by law they may be legally entitled," water flowing from particular springs, and declares that, in the event of any person so doing, and failing to restore the springs on receiving notice from the company, he shall be liable to a fine of 5*l.* for each day until restoration is made; the object of the statute is to give protection to the supply of water acquired by the company, and not to prevent a neighbouring landowner from making a legitimate use of water running upon or percolating through his land before it reaches the company's supply, and becomes part of their undertaking. Chasemore v. Richards (7 H. L. Cas. 349) discussed. Bradford Corporation v. Pickles, 64 L. J., Ch. 759; [1895] A. C. 587; 11 R. 286; 73 L. T. 353; 44 W. R. 190; 60 J. P. 3—H. L. (E.)

A local act authorised a company to enter upon lands within a manor, and to dig and search for any spring of water, and to convey the water from such springs into a town for the use of the inhabitants of the town and the shipping in the harbour. It provided that the company should not take the water from any spring, streams or ponds, so as to deprive the occupiers of the lands of water for their own necessary uses, and for the cattle depasturing therein. The company had power to lay down pipes, and the inhabitants, with the consent of the company, might obtain the water by pipes, to communicate with the company's pipes at certain charges, according to the bore of the pipes:—Held, that the owners or occupiers of lands within the manor were not prevented by the act from sinking wells in such lands, though the effect might be to draw off the water from the company's springs. South Shields Waterworks Co. v. Cookson, 15 L. J., Ex. 315.

—— Right to have Pure Water.]—The abstraction of water from a natural stream, openly and under a claim of right, for a period of twenty years, to a tenement not abutting on the stream, will create no easement to have pure water flow down the stream to the point of abstraction. Stockport Waterworks Co. v. Potter, 3 H. & C. 300; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1005; 10 L. T. 748.

Covenant not to Supply Water within Company's District—Breach.]—The B. company, possessing springs of water of their own, covenanted, upon selling to the A. company a portion of those springs, to take from the A. company the entire supply of water they might require for certain specified purposes, and that they would not supply any of the places (their own premises forming part of the district) which the A. company was authorised to supply by act of parliament. The B. company afterwards leased a portion of their premises, through which portion their own stream of water ran, thus supplying their lessees with water from this stream:—Held, that the B. company was precluded by the covenant from using their own supply of water for the purposes for which they had stipulated to take water from the A. company. Hartlepool Gas and Water Co. v. West Hartlepool Harbour and Railway Co., 12 L. T. 366.

Held, also, that it could not be decided, in the absence of the lessees of the B. company, whether the supply of water furnished to them by the B. company could be stopped, but the court directed an inquiry as to what damages the A. company had sustained and was sustaining, by reason of the B. company supplying their lessees with water. Ib.

A delay of twelve years in making the complaint did not amount to acquiescence, or to an abandonment of the plaintiff's rights. Ib.

Upon a contract by a water company in Scotland to supply a town with pure and wholesome water, at a certain rate of charge, in consideration of the privilege to do so exclusively, the company insisted that it was entitled to prevent the use of salt water coming from the sea, and for that purpose sought an interdict or injunction, which, however, was refused. The refusal was confirmed on appeal by the house of lords. Shaw's Water Co. v. Greenock Magistrates, 2 Macq. H. L. 151.

Right of Support—Right to Work Minerals—Damage.]—By an inclosure act, the common lands of a manor, the fee simple of which, with the mines and minerals thereunder, and power to work the same, had previously been vested in the lord of the manor, subject to certain rights of common of pasture, were enclosed and divided into allotments. The act provided that the lord of the manor should enjoy all mines and minerals as fully and freely as if the act had not passed, without paying damages or making satisfaction for so doing, and empowered him to make all convenient ways, and for the purpose to remove fences, trees, or other obstructions. The act further provided that the annual rental of 500 acres (out of about 20,000) should be set apart to provide for the compensation to which the allottees might thereafter be entitled, any deficiency to be made up by means of a rate levied on the allottees. Afterwards the plaintiffs, a waterworks company, incorporated under an act of parliament, which incorporated the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, and the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, purchased compulsorily from the representative of the allottee land forming part of one of such allotments, and constructed a reservoir thereon. The defendant, claiming title under the lord of the manor, gave notice to the plaintiffs of his intention to work the coal under such land within forty yards of the reservoir. The plaintiffs did not offer to purchase the minerals, and the defendant worked the coal according to the usual course and practice of mining, and thereby caused damage to the reservoir. The plaintiffs sued in respect of such damage:—Held, that the inclosure act did not empower the lord of the manor and his representatives to work the minerals in such a manner as to let down the surface:—Held (by Cave, J.), that the plaintiffs had purchased the whole of the allottee's interest, namely, the ownership of the surface together with the right of support, and the defendant had only the same right as he had had before the purchase by the plaintiffs, namely, the right to work the minerals, leaving sufficient to support the surface, and therefore the plaintiffs were entitled to recover:—Held (by A. L. Smith, J.), that, as at the date of the purchase by the plaintiffs the surface and the minerals were vested in different owners, and the plaintiffs had purchased compulsorily from the owner of the surface, and had given no notice to treat in respect of the minerals, all that they were entitled to was the ownership of the surface, without any right of support as against the defendant, and therefore they had no cause of action for damage caused by the working by the defendant of the minerals according to the usual course and practice of mining, and were not entitled to recover. Consett Waterworks Co. v. Ritson, 22 Q. B. D. 318; 60 L. T. 360; 53 J. P. 373. Reversed on another point, 22 Q. B. D. 702—C. A.

——Mines—Deposit of Plans.]—The deposit of plans of their underground works, pursuant to ss. 19 and 20 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, is a condition precedent to the right of a company incorporated under that act to recover for injuries caused to their pipes by the ordinary and usual workings of a subjacent mine. South Staffordshire Waterworks Co. v. Mason, 56 L. J., Q. B. 255; 57 L. T. 116.

——Reservation of Mines and other Minerals — Whether Clay is included in "other Minerals."] — Section 18 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), provides that "the undertakers shall not be entitled to any mines of coal, ironstone, slate, or other minerals under any land purchased by them." The appellants, by virtue of the act and a conveyance containing a reservation of the "whole coal and other minerals in the land in terms of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847," purchased from the respondent a parcel of land for the purpose of erecting waterworks. Under the land was a seam of valuable brick clay. The respondent worked this clay in the adjoining land, and having reached the appellants' boundary, claimed the right to work out the clay under the land purchased by the appellants:—Held (Lord Herschell dissenting), that common clay, forming the surface or subsoil of land, was not included in the reservation in the act, and that the appellants were entitled to an interdict restraining the respondent from working the clay under the land purchased by them. Glasgow (Lord Provost) v. Farie, 58 L. J., P. C. 33; 13 App. Cas. 657; 60 L. T. 274; 37 W. R. 627—H. L. (Sc.)

Injury to Pipes by Railway Company—Interest in Land.]—A railway company, under the powers of an act of parliament, took land in which were laid certain pipes belonging to a waterworks company. These pipes were not removed by either of the companies at the time the railway company took the land, but the ground in which they lay was overlaid by that company by additional soil to the depth of several feet. Subsequently, the railway company, in tunnelling through the ground, came upon the pipes and removed them, but did not hand them over to the waterworks company or pay them their value. On these facts they took proceedings under the lands clauses and the railways clauses acts for settling the amount of compensation to which they were entitled as for an injuriously affecting their interest in the land:—Held, that the facts stated gave them no interest in the land, and that they consequently could not maintain proceedings for compensation for injuriously affecting it. New River Co. v. Midland Ry., 36 L. T. 539; 25 W. R. 502—C. A.

4. Supply of Water.

a. General Powers and Duties.

Supply for a Township—Amount.]—A corporation obtained parliamentary power to collect all the water from the gathering grounds of a district, but was bound to supply to a particular township not less than 25,000 gallons, or more than 75,000 gallons of water per day, at the price of 6*d.* per 1,000 gallons, and the amount to be supplied between the maximum and minimum limits was to be at the option of the purchaser:—Held, that the township might enforce the supply of more than 25,000 gallons per day for the purpose of selling part of it at a profit to a neighbouring township. Halifax Corporation v. Soothill Upper Local Board, 30 L. T. 513. Affirmed, 31 L. T. 6.

In 1845 a company was formed for supplying water to a town, under an act which contained no provision for supplying water at high pressure. In 1850 the works of that company were authorised to be extended by an act which declared that the 10 & 11 Vict. c. 17, with respect to the construction of the waterworks, should be incorporated therewith. In 1855 a new company was formed for the better supplying with water the same town, the suburbs, and the parishes and places adjacent thereto, by an act, which enacted that the 10 & 11 Vict. c. 17, should, except as therein otherwise provided, be incorporated with and form part of that act; and that the water to be supplied from any pipe of the company need not be constantly laid on under pressure. In 1856 the two companies were amalgamated under an act which contained a general provision incorporating 10 & 11 Vict. c. 17, therewith:—Held, that the amalgamated company was not liable to the high-pressure obligation contained in 10 & 11 Vict. c. 17, ss. 35 and 42. Purnell v. Wolverhampton New Waterworks Co., 10 C. B. (N.S.) 576; 4 L. T. 513.

Water for Disposal of Sewage—"Waterworks"—Water for flushing Sewers.]—Works erected and maintained by a local authority to provide the water necessary to carry out a scheme for the disposal of sewage of its district are not "waterworks" within the meaning of s. 52, as defined by s. 4 of the Public Health Act, 1875; nor can the local authority be said to be "supplying" water within the meaning of those sections. West Surrey Water Co. v. Chertsey Union, 63 L. J., Ch. 806; [1894] 3 Ch. 513; 8 R. 696; 71 L. T. 368; 43 W. R. 6; 59 J. P. 167.

There is no provision in the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, which compels a local authority to take water to "cleanse sewers" from a water company within whose limits of supply the sewers are situate. Ib.

Supply for Domestic Purposes—Duty of Owner to supply Water.]—Section 62 of the Public Health Act, 1875, enables rural sanitary authorities to cause houses within their districts to be provided with a proper supply of water, where there is an available supply within a reasonable distance, and is not repealed in any way by s. 6 of the Public Health (Water) Act of 1878. The latter section enables such authorities to cause houses within their districts to be provided with a supply of water where there is not an available supply within a reasonable distance, and does not apply to cases which come within the former section. Colne Valley Water Co. v. Treharne, 50 L. T. 617; 48 J. P. 279.

—— Fixed Bath—Power to make Extra Charge.]—The defendants, a waterworks company, were required by their special act to supply water for domestic purposes to the inhabitants of the borough, at specified rates, it being also provided that a supply for domestic purposes should not include a supply for baths, washhouses, or public purposes, &c. The plaintiff erected in his house a fixed bath connected with the water service. The company demanded, in addition to the ordinary water rate, an extra charge for the supply to this bath, on the ground that a supply for such a purpose was not a supply for domestic purposes within the meaning of the act:—Held, that the company were not entitled to make such extra charge. Weaver v. Cardiff Corporation, 48 L. T. 906; 47 J. P. 599.

—— Use of Water to wash Carriage.]—Water for domestic use supplied under the provisions of a waterworks act, to the occupier of a house, may be used to give drink to a horse and to wash a horse and carriage kept by the occupier for his own use in a building near his dwelling-house and in the same curtilage. Busby v. Chesterfield Waterworks and Gas Light Co., El. Bl. & El. 176; 27 L. J., M. C. 174; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 757; 6 W. R. 515.

Insufficient Supply—Hot Weather—Unavoidable Cause.]—The I. company complained of the E. water company refusing a supply of water. The water company were excused under ss. 42 and 43 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, if prevented by frost, unusual drought, or other unavoidable cause or accident. The magistrate found that the cause was either drought or unavoidable:—Held, the water company came within the words of the exemption. Industrial Dwellings Co. v. East London Waterworks, 58 J. P. 430.

—— Liability for in Case of Fire.]—A Waterworks Act, 1853, s. 79, provided that the company should, at the request of an owner or occupier of any premises situate in or adjoining any street in which any main or service pipe of the company was or should be laid, and who required a supply of water, afford a supply of water. The plaintiff declared upon this section, and alleged that he was such an owner and occupier, and that he requested and required a supply of water; but notwithstanding the fulfilment of all conditions the company wrongfully, improperly, and negligently made default in affording to the plaintiff the supply, by reason whereof he was unable to extinguish a fire which destroyed his premises. The company pleaded that the main or service-pipe had a fire-plug properly fixed in it, and that the fire-plug was opened for the purpose of supplying water for extinguishing another fire, which was the cause of default. They also pleaded that they were prevented from affording the supply of water from unavoidable cause or accident:—Held, that the former of these two pleas was good, but that the latter was bad. Campbell v. East London Waterworks, 26 L. T. 475.

By the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, the undertakers are; (1) to fix and maintain fire-plugs; (2) to furnish to the town commissioners a sufficient supply of water for certain public purposes; (3) to keep their pipes to which fire-plugs are fixed at all times charged with water at a certain pressure, and to allow all persons at all times to use the same for extinguishing fire without compensation; and (4) to supply to every owner or occupier of any dwelling-house, having paid or tendered the water-rate, sufficient water for domestic purposes. By s. 43, a penalty of 10*l.* (recoverable summarily before two justices, who may award not more than half the penalty to the informer and are to give the remainder to the overseers of the parish) is imposed on the undertakers for the neglect of each of the above duties, and for the neglect of (2) and (4) they are further to forfeit to the commissioners or ratepayer a penalty of 40*s.* a day, for each day during which such neglect continues after notice in writing of non-supply. A person brought an action for damages against a waterworks company for not keeping their pipes charged as required by the act, whereby his premises situate within the limits of the company's act were burnt down:—Held, that the statute gave no right of action to the party. Atkinson v. Newcastle and Gateshead Water Co., 46 L. J., Ex. 775; 2 Ex. D. 441; 36 L. T. 761; 25 W. R. 794—C. A.

—— Penalties, by whom Recoverable.]—Upon the true construction of the Metropolis Water Act, 1871, it is for the metropolitan authority of the district, and not for an individual householder, to proceed for penalties under the act. A householder aggrieved by an insufficient water supply can only recover penalties under s. 43 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847. Kyffin v. East London Waterworks Co., 65 L. J., M. C. 60; [1896] 1 Q. B. 446; 74 L. T. 141; 44 W. R. 446; 18 Cox, C. C. 235; 60 J. P. 230.

Supply by Meter—"Consumer of Water."]—The words "any consumer of water" in s. 41 of the New River Company's Act, 1852 (15 & 16 Vict. c. cix.), mean, not any person merely desirous of being a consumer, but a person who is actually consuming water or who at least is entitled to demand a supply for his consumption and is taking the necessary steps to obtain it, and is therefore not entitled to require the company to supply by meter the water for domestic purposes as well as the water for other purposes. Cooke v. New River Co., 59 L. J., Ch. 333; 14 App. Cas. 698; 61 L. T. 816; 54 J. P. 260—H. L. (E.)

—— "Dwelling-house."]—Semble, that any house in which water is required for domestic purposes is a "dwelling-house" within the meaning of s. 35 of the act, though no person sleeps or takes meals there. S. C., 57 L. J., Ch. 383; 38 Ch. D. 56; 58 L. T. 830—C. A.

Cutting off—Temporary Stoppage to remedy Leakage—Notice to Vestry—Public Health (London) Act, 1891.]—A water company, which supplied a certain dwelling-house with water, turned off the water solely in order to prevent waste of water through a certain leak in the service pipe:—Held, that upon the facts a magistrate was justified in coming to the conclusion that there was no "cutting off" of the water supply within the meaning of s. 49 of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, and, therefore, there was no necessity for the water company to give notice under that section to the sanitary authority. Young v. Southwark and Vauxhall Water Co., 5 R. 432; 69 L. T. 144; 41 W. R. 622; 57 J. P. 806.

—— Failure to provide Stop-valve in Communication Pipe—Obligation of Consumer to Provide.]—By the Folkestone Waterworks Act, 1858, (21 Vict. c. x.), s. 14, persons supplied with water are directed to provide proper ball or stop-cocks or other necessary apparatus of improved construction for regulating the supply of water so that the water may be properly drawn off and effectually prevented from running to waste. By the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, ss. 48, 51, and 52, any owner or occupier of a house wishing to have water is empowered to put down a communication pipe between his premises and the company's main, to remove it, and to break up the streets for any such purpose. By the Folkestone Waterworks Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. xxv.), ss. 5 and 6, the company are directed to afford a constant, instead of, as before, an intermittent supply of water, and permission is given to the company to attach a stop-valve to the communication pipe outside of and at or near the point at which it enters the premises of the consumer:—Held, that there is no obligation upon the consumer to put down such stop-valve into his communication pipe, or to pay for it when put down by the company, and that the company were liable to a penalty for cutting off the water from the premises of a consumer who neglected to comply with a notice requiring him to put down such valve. Ward v. Folkestone Waterworks Co., 59 L. J., M. C. 65; 24 Q. B. D. 334; 62 L. T. 321; 38 W. R. 426; 54 J. P. 628.

—— Obligation to Provide Meter—Failure to Pay or Tender Rate in Advance.]—The special act of a water company provided for the supply of water to the inhabitants of the district for "family use" at certain rates calculated on the rental of the house supplied. The act contained further provisions for the supply of water for schools, manufactories, &c., &c., and for other purposes than family consumption, and for baths, &c., and for the purposes of any trade or business whatsoever, at certain rates per thousand gallons. The supply of water under these latter provisions having been held obligatory upon the company unless prevented by causes beyond their control:—Held, that there being no provision in the special act throwing upon the consumer the obligation of providing a meter to measure the water supplied for the purposes of a bath, no such obligation could be implied from s. 14 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1863, incorporated with the special act, which section provides that where the undertakers are authorised by the special act to supply water by measure they may let for hire to any consumer of water so supplied any meter or instrument for measuring the quantity of water supplied. Sheffield Waterworks Co. v. Carter, 51 L. J., M. C. 97; 8 Q. B. D. 632; 30 W. R. 889; 46 J. P. 548.

The occupier of a house within the district of the above-mentioned company had a bath connected by means of a pipe with the house cistern, to which water was conveyed from the company's mains for "family use." The company required him to put up a meter for the purpose of measuring the water used for the bath, but he refused to do so. He had paid to the company in advance the proper amount in respect of the water supply for "family use" for the quarter ending the 29th of September, but had not paid or tendered any sum in respect of the water supply to the bath during such period. The company in consequence of his refusal to put up a meter or disconnect the bath cut off the communication pipe from their main to his house upon the 20th of September. On the 29th of September, having cut off the pipe connecting the cistern with the bath, but not the waste or outlet pipe from the bath, he gave notice to the company of what he had done and paid to the company in advance the proper amount for the supply of water for "family use" during the ensuing quarter, but did not restore the communication pipe between the company's mains and his cistern. The company refused to restore the supply on the ground that he had not cut off the waste pipe from the bath, which he refused to do. The supply of water was not renewed till the 4th of November, when the company restored the communication pipe under protest:—Held, that the company were not entitled to insist on the consumer's providing a meter, but that they were not liable to a penalty under the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, s. 43. for not supplying water during the period between the 20th and the 29th of September, inasmuch as no payment or tender in respect of the water supply to the bath for such period had been made. But held, that the company were liable to a penalty in respect of the period subsequent to the 29th of September: that they had no right to refuse the supply of water after that date, and that they were not justified in cutting off the supply, and were, therefore, not entitled to require the consumer to renew the communication. Ib.

—— Non-payment of Rate.]—P.'s landlord had agreed to pay water-rate, and had duly paid it, when P. received notice to quit. P. refused to quit, and the landlord requested the C. waterworks company to cut off the water, which they did without any notice to P.:—Held, that the magistrate was wrong in holding that the company had acted in contravention of the statute 50 & 51 Vict. c. 21, s. 4. Chelsea Waterworks Co. v. Paulet, 52 J. P. 724.

—— Action by Tenant for.]—Where a dispute has arisen as to the amount of the water-rate payable by an occupier of premises to a water company (whose special act incorporated the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847), the determination of the annual value of the premises supplied, by two justices, under s. 68 of the act of 1847, is a condition precedent to the right of the occupier to sue the company for cutting off the water, and for the amount alleged to have been paid in excess. Whiting v. East London Waterworks Co., 1 Cab. & E. 331.

—— Injunction to Restrain.]—Where there is a dispute as to the annual value of a tenement for the purposes of water-rate, and the waterworks company threatens to discontinue the supply, the court has, by virtue of the powers conferred upon it by the Judicature Act, 1873, s. 25, sub-s. 3, jurisdiction to grant an injunction, notwithstanding that the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1853, provides (s. 68) for the determination of such disputes by two justices, and imposes (s. 43) upon the company fixed penalties for refusal to supply. Hayward v. East London Waterworks Co., 54 L. J., Ch. 523; 28 Ch. D. 138; 52 L. T. 175; 49 J. P. 452.

The court, however, in such a case, will decline to grant an injunction, except pending the proceedings before the justices for the settlement of the dispute, or upon an undertaking by the plaintiff to commence the proceedings within a short period. The discontinuation of a water supply by a London waterworks company is an injury sufficiently irreparable to support an injunction. Ib.

—— Cost of Providing or Hiring Meter.]—The Sheffield waterworks company was authorised to receive payment by measure and not by a rate for water supplied to fixed baths in private houses. There is no express provision in the principal or general acts as to how the water for such a purpose is to be measured, or whether the company or the consumer shall bear the cost of providing a meter for measuring the water, but by the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1863, s. 14, where the company supply water by measure, they may let to a consumer a meter for such remuneration in money as they may agree upon:—Held, that a consumer taking water from the company for a fixed bath in his private house was bound at his own expense to measure the water so used by some automatic and self-registering meter or other instrument, or in some other equally accurate way, and to record the amount from time to time taken. Sheffield Waterworks Co. v. Bingham, 52 L. J., Ch. 624; 25 Ch. D. 443; 48 L. T. 604.

Reinstating Supply of Water after being Cut off for Non-Payment of Rates.]—A tenant of premises supplied by a company with water having failed to pay the water-rate, the company, under the powers conferred upon them by s. 74 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), severed the communication with their main pipes. A subsequent tenant demanded a supply of water for the same premises, tendering to the company the current quarter's rate and the estimated expense of restoring the communication, but the company refused to supply the water until the arrears due from the former tenant were paid. A magistrate having convicted the company under s. 43 of the Waterworks Clauses Act for such refusal:—Held, that, although the company were not warranted in refusing to supply water to the incoming tenant until the arrears due to them as above stated were paid, they could not be made liable to the penalties imposed by s. 43 until he himself had restored the communication with their main pipes. Sheffield Waterworks Co. v. Wilkinson, 48 L. J., M. C. 145; 4 C. P. D. 410.

—— Jurisdiction to Compel.]—A company was established by act of parliament for supplying the inhabitants of several districts with water, at such terms as they should mutually agree upon; and a subsequent act provided that the company should only demand reasonable sums:—Held, that a court of equity had no jurisdiction, upon an offer to pay either a reasonable price or that which was originally agreed upon, to compel the company to continue a supply to any inhabitant beyond the term of his contract, or to restrain them from discontinuing such supply until the decision of the question by a trial at law. Weale v. West Middlesex Waterworks Co., 1 J. & W. 358. See Hoddesdon Gas and Coke Co. v. Haselwood (6 C. B. (N.S.) 239; 28 L. J., C. P. 268; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1013; 7 W. R. 415) as to the right at law in the analogous case of gas.

Duty to Supply Pure Water—Water Pure in Mains, but Contaminated in Consumer's Pipes.]—Undertakers for the supply of water to Huddersfield were bound on certain conditions to cause pipes to be laid down and water to be brought to every part of the town, and by s. 35 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), "to provide and keep in the pipes to be laid down by them a supply of pure and wholesome water, sufficient for the domestic use of all the inhabitants of the town who should be entitled to demand a supply and should be willing to pay water-rate for the same." By their special act the undertakers were empowered to make by-laws with regard to the consumers' pipes. The by-laws made under this power prescribed lead as the necessary material for every consumer's pipe, "not being of cast-iron." The undertakers in accordance with their usual practice at the consumer's request and cost laid down communication and service pipes of lead between their mains and the plaintiff's house. The effect of the by-laws and of s. 19 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 93), was that though the lead pipes might be the property of the plaintiff they were entirely under the control of the undertakers, and could not without their consent be interfered with by the plaintiff. Water was supplied by them to the plaintiff which was pure and wholesome in the mains but was of such quality that in its passage from the mains to the plaintiff's house it became contaminated by the lead and poisoned the plaintiff. The plaintiff having brought an action against the undertakers for damages for the injury to his health alleged a breach of the statutory obligation:—Held, that the obligation imposed by s. 35 was to supply water which was pure and wholesome in the mains and (Lord Selborne and Lord Watson dissenting) that having complied with that obligation the undertakers were not (negligence being out of the case) liable to the plaintiff in this action. But held, by Lord Selborne and Lord Watson, that the undertakers were liable, on the ground that the water contained some special and peculiar solvent of lead which made it poisonous after passing through the leaden pipes, although it would have been harmless if it could have been drunk direct from the mains. Milnes v. Huddersfield Corporation, 56 L. J., Q. B. 1; 11 App. Cas. 511; 55 L. T. 617; 34 W. R. 761; 50 J. P. 676—H. L. (E.)

Delegation of Powers—Company Able and Willing to Supply.]—A waterworks company is not, within the meaning of the Public Health Act, 1875, s. 52, able and willing "to supply water within the district of a local authority," unless it has both the necessary powers and the requisite supply of water. Richmond Waterworks Co. and Southwark and Vauxhall Waterworks Co. v. Richmond Vestry, 45 L. J., Ch. 441; 3 Ch. D. 82; 34 L. T. 480.

When company R. had the necessary powers but no water, and company S. had the requisite supply of water but no powers within the district, and company R. sold its plant to company S., and certain members of company S. bought all the shares in company R. with the intention of allowing company S. to exercise the powers of company R.:—Held, that the powers could not be so delegated, and that neither company was able and willing within the meaning of the act, and consequently that neither was entitled to notice under the Public Health Act, 1848, s. 75, or under the Public Health Act, 1875, s. 52. Ib.

b. Rights against Consumers.

Taking Water from Unoccupied House—Liability.]—The respondent, a child of fourteen years of age, was charged with unlawfully taking water from an unoccupied house at H., such water being alleged to belong to the appellant company. The information was laid under 10 & 11 Vict. c. 17, s. 59; but the stipendiary magistrate for S., before whom the case was brought, dismissed it on the ground that the alleged offence did not come within s. 59. The water company appealed:—Held, that the magistrate was right in dismissing the charge, for s. 59 of 10 & 11 Vict. c. 17, under which it was laid, provides no penalty for the taking of water from an unoccupied house. Piercy v. Pope, 45 L. T. 477; 30 W. R. 60; 46 J. P. 102.

Taking Water from a Fountain—Dedication to Public.]—A fountain having been erected on a highway by an individual for the benefit of a town, the local board of health, as the owners of the waterworks, gratuitously supplied the fountain with water for the use of cattle in the cattle market on market days, and for horses if yoked when passing to and fro:—Held, that the board might so limit their dedication of the use of the water, and that it did not amount to a dedication to the gratuitous use of the public. Hildreth v. Adamson, 8 C. B. (N.S.) 587; 30 L. J., M. C. 204; 2 L. T. 359; 8 W. R. 470.

A housekeeper, therefore, in the town, who takes water from such fountain, he not having agreed to be supplied with water by the board, is liable to the penalty fixed by 10 & 11 Vict. c. 17, s. 59, that act being incorporated with the Local Board of Health Act. Ib.

Tampering with Pipe—Liability of Owner.]—A., acting as owner of premises, made a contract with a water company to supply the premises with water to a certain height. In his absence, his men, to the injury of the company, fixed the pipe at a higher level. After it was done, A. knew of it; A. was not in fact the owner of the premises:—Held, that he was liable to an action brought by the company. West Middlesex Waterworks Co. v. Suwerkrop, 4 Car. & P. 87.

Construction of Agreement.]—An agreement whereby a mining company undertakes to obtain all the water required by them for their mining purposes from a water company, and from no other person or persons, does not authorise the mining company to obtain a gratuitous supply of water for these purposes from another source. But a proviso in the agreement that nothing in the agreement should prevent the mining company from using any water obtained from the mines or from their wells or reservoirs is not confined to mines the property of the company at the date of the agreement. Kimberley Waterworks Co. v. De Beers Consolidated Mines, 66 L. J., P. C. 108; [1897] A. C. 515; 77 L. T. 117—P. C.

c. Rates.

i. Amount, how Calculated.

"Annual Value."]—A water company by a special act of 1826 were compellable to supply water to certain dwelling-houses in the metropolis for domestic purposes at certain rates per cent. per annum, payable "according to the actual amount of the rent where the same can be ascertained, and where the same cannot be ascertained according to the actual amount or annual value upon which the assessment to the poor's-rate is computed in the parish or district where the house is situated." By a special act of 1852 the company were compellable to furnish the water "where the annual value of the dwelling-house or other place shall not exceed 200*l.* at a rate per cent. per annum on such value not exceeding 4*l.*; and where such annual value shall exceed 200*l.*, at a rate per cent. per annum on such value not exceeding 3*l.*" The occupier of one of the houses was lessee for a long term at a ground rent, and paid no rent except the ground rent:—Held, that whether the later act repealed the provisions of the former or not, the case must be dealt with under the later act; and that the words "annual value" in the late act meant "net annual value" as defined in the Parochial Assessments Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 96), s. 1:—Held, also, that "annual value" had the same meaning in the earlier as in the later act. Colvill v. Wood (2 C. B. 210) commented on. Dobbs v. Grand Junction Waterworks Co., 53 L. J., Q. B. 50; 9 App. Cas. 49; 49 L. T. 541; 32 W. R. 432; 48 J. P. 5—H. L. (E.)

—— Annual Rack-rent.]—By the terms of its special act a water company were to supply water at certain rates on the "annual rack-rent of the house . . . . if the same be let at rack-rent, and on the annual value if and while the same is not let at rack-rent." An owner and occupier contended that his house not being let at an annual rack-rent, the water-rates payable by him ought to be assessed according to the annual value; and that the annual value was the net annual value as distinguished from the gross value or gross estimated rental:—Held, that the words in the section "annual rack-rent" and "annual value" must be treated as equivalent; that the legislature never intended to lay down two scales of charges, one for tenants of houses and the other for owner occupants; and that an owner occupying his own house must pay water-rates upon the gross estimated rental as distinguished from the net annual value. Stevens v. Barnet Gas and Water Co., 57 L. J., M. C. 82; 36 W. R. 924.

—— "Rent"—Deduction of Rates from Rent.]—By its act, a waterworks company was bound to supply the houses within a certain district with water "at the following rate per annum, that is to say, where the rent of such dwelling-house" should not amount to 7*l.* per annum, at a rate not exceeding 6 per cent. per annum, on such rent, but not exceeding 7*s.* 2*d.* per annum; and so on in a graduated scale. The owner of numerous small houses was supplied with water, in respect of which he paid, either under statutory obligation or by voluntary agreement, the poor-rate, water-rate, and district-rate:—Held, that "rent" in the act was equivalent to "annual value"; and that, in estimating the rents on which the water-rate was payable, the owner was entitled to deduct the rates so paid by him. Sheffield Waterworks Co. v. Bennett, 42 L. J., Ex. 121; L. R. 8 Ex. 196; 28 L. T. 509; 21 W. R. 686—Ex. Ch.

By the Liverpool Corporation Waterworks Act, the rates at which water is to be supplied for domestic purposes, are to be assessed upon the annual value of the premises; and by an act which amended the former, if the owner of any dwelling-house, the yearly rent or value whereof shall not amount to 13*l.*, or which, whatever may be the annual value thereof, shall be let to weekly or monthly tenants, or in separate apartments, shall be desirous of paying a reduced water-rent by the year for the same, whether occupied or not, the council may compound with such owner for the payment of the water-rents payable by virtue of the acts in respect of such dwelling-house, at any sum not less than three-fourths of the annual water-rent for the same; and all such compositions shall be recoverable in like manner as the rents and charges authorised by the act are by law recoverable. By a composition paper, A., as the owner of dwelling-houses let to weekly tenants, agreed with the corporation to compound for the water-rates, and in a schedule thereto stated the "rental to be 4*s.* 6*d.* per week, and 3*s.* 6*d.* per week, respectively." The composition paper contained a stipulation, that, "if at any time it should be ascertained that the rental of such houses was not truly and correctly set forth in the schedule, the corporation might be at liberty to amend the same by inserting therein the true and correct amounts of such rental," and might recover against A. the additional water-rents due in respect thereof. The rents of the houses were, in point of fact, 6*d.* per week, respectively, more than the sums stated in the schedule, A. claiming to deduct that sum in respect of poor and other rates, which, by agreement with the tenants, were paid by him:—Held, that A. was not entitled to make such deduction, but that the corporation was entitled, under the agreement, to receive the composition upon the amount of rent paid by tenants. Rook v. Liverpool Corporation, 7 C. B. (N.S.) 240.

Held, also, that the production of the composition paper, and proof that no demand of water-rates had been made upon the tenants, was sufficient evidence that the composition had been made, without showing that any entry thereof had been made in the books of the council. Ib.

—— Houses lying Vacant—Owner Compounding for Rates—Repairs and Insurance.]—It was provided by a water act that the charge to be made for the supply of water for domestic use should be at a rate varying according to the "annual rent" of the premises supplied. The appellant was the owner of certain houses supplied with water by the respondents under the act. The houses were let at weekly rents, the appellant paying all rates charged thereon, and also for all repairs and insurances thereof. He was allowed, as an owner, under 32 and 33 Vict. c. 41, s. 4 (The Poor-Rate Assessment and Collection Act, 1869), a deduction of 30 per cent. from the full amount of the poor-rate which an occupier if rated would have paid. The respondents charged the appellant with water-rates calculated on the following basis: they multiplied the weekly rents by fifty-two and deducted from the amount so arrived at the actual sums paid by the appellant for rates, and then charged the water-rates upon the balance:—Held, that, in order to arrive at the "annual rent" upon which the water-rate was to be computed, an allowance should be made in respect of "voids," i.e., houses lying vacant from time to time; and that the actual amount of the poor-rates and other rates paid by the appellant was rightly deducted, but that the appellant was not entitled to deduct the full amount of the rates which an occupier if rated would have paid; nor the amount which he paid for repairs and insurances. Meaning of the terms "annual rent" and "annual value" discussed. Dobbs v. Grand Junction Waterworks Co. (in C. A.) followed. Smith v. Birmingham Corporation, 52 L. J., M. C. 81; 11 Q. B. D. 195; 49 L. T. 25; 31 W. R. 788; 47 J. P. 645.

—— Rateable Value.]—By the special act of a water company, which incorporated the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, save so far as the clauses or provisions thereof were expressly varied or excepted, the company were obliged to supply water to the occupiers of dwelling-houses for domestic purposes at a rate not exceeding 6*l.* per cent. per annum upon the "annual rack rent or value" of the premises supplied. It was further provided in a subsequent section of the act that the rate should be "payable according to the annual value at which the premises were from time to time assessed to the poor-rate if the same were so assessed, or if not, according to the net annual value of the premises." By the 68th section of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, the "water-rates, except as hereinafter and in the special act mentioned, shall be payable according to the annual value of the tenement supplied with water":—Held, that the water rate charged by the company must be calculated on the "rateable value," not on the "gross estimated rental" of the premises supplied with water. Warrington Waterworks Co. v. Longshaw, 51 L. J., Q. B. 498; 9 Q. B. D. 145; 46 L. T. 815; 31 W. R. 11; 46 J. P. 773.

Garden Attached to Dwelling House.]—Section 68 of the Bristol Waterworks Act, 1862, enacts that the company shall furnish to every occupier of a private dwelling-house within their limits a sufficient supply of water for the domestic use of such occupier, at certain annual rents or rates according to the "annual rack-rent or value of the premises so supplied"—(by s. 71) not to include, amongst other things, a supply of water "for watering gardens by means of a tap, tube, pipe, or other such like apparatus." And s. 32 of the Bristol Waterworks Amendment Act, 1865, enacts that, "if any dispute shall arise as to the amount of the annual rent or value of any dwelling-house or premises supplied with water by the company, such dispute shall be decided by two justices; provided that the amount of the annual rack-rent or value to be fixed by such justices shall not be less than the gross sum assessed to the poor-rate, or less than the rent actually paid for such dwelling-house or premises." A dwelling-house and garden in the occupation of the owner were assessed to the poor-rate as follows:—"Gross estimated rental, 240*l.*," "Rateable value, 204*l.*" It was proved that the value of the house without the garden would be 10 per cent. less; and that the owner contracted to pay and did pay 1*l.* 1s. annually for the watering by means of a pipe and tap in the garden which surrounded the dwelling-house and was occupied and assessed therewith:—Held, upon a case stated by the justices, that the words "gross sum assessed to the poor-rate" meant the "gross estimated rental," and not "rateable or net value;" and that the water-rent was chargeable upon the gross estimated rental of "the premises," including the pleasure garden occupied with the house, and not merely upon the dwelling house itself, the extra charge for the garden supply being for using a pipe and tap. Bristol Waterworks Co. v. Uren, 54 L. J., M. C. 97; 15 Q. B. D. 637; 52 L. T. 655; 49 J. P. 564.

In determining the annual value of a residential tenement under section 68 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, for the purposes of water supply to the dwelling-house for domestic purposes alone, it is not competent to justices to exclude a portion of the garden occupied and enjoyed with the dwelling-house, and thus curtail the area to be assessed for water-rate. The section contemplates the mere valuation of the existing tenement as the owner and occupier choose to enjoy it. Grand Junction Waterworks Co. v. Davies, 66 L. J., Q. B. 633; [1897] 2 Q. B. 209; 76 L. T. 833; 45 W. R. 687; 61 J. P. 484.

Premium for Lease—Public-House.]—By the special act of a water company it was provided that water should be supplied for domestic purposes by the company at a rate per cent. upon the annual value of the dwelling-house or other place supplied, that a supply of water for domestic purposes should not include a supply of water for, among other things, any trade or manufacture or business requiring an extra supply of water, and that the company might furnish water for other than domestic purposes on such terms as might be agreed on between the company and the consumer. The company supplied water for domestic purposes to a house occupied as a licensed public-house. The company contended that the annual value of the premises as a licensed public-house should be taken as the basis of the water-rate payable in respect of such supply, and that therefore the fact of the premises being licensed, and a premium which had been paid for the lease of the premises as a public-house ought to be taken into consideration in fixing the value. The occupier contended that such water-rate should be based upon the value of the premises for domestic purposes only:—Held, that the contention of the company was correct. West Middlesex Waterworks Co. v. Coleman, or Coleman v. West Middlesex Waterworks Co., 54 L. J., M. C. 70; 14 Q. B. D. 529; 52 L. T. 578; 33 W. R. 549; 49 J. P. 341.

Water for Public Purpose — Rate fixed by Agreement.]—By the New River Company's Act, 1852 (15 & 16 Vict. c. clx.), s. 35, the company must supply houses within their limits with sufficient water for domestic purposes at certain fixed rates. By s. 38, domestic purposes are not to include engines or railway purposes, or baths, cattle, or fountains, or flushing sewers or drains, or business requiring an extra supply of water. By s. 41, the company shall, at the request of any consumer of water for purposes other than the purposes for or in respect of which the rates or charges are thereinbefore provided or limited, or at their own instance, afford a supply of water by means of a meter, and charge for the same at certain limited rates, according to the quarterly consumption. By s. 37 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (incorporated in the act of 1852), the undertakers shall provide a sufficient supply of water for cleansing sewers and drains, for cleansing and watering streets, and for other public purposes at rates and upon conditions to be agreed to by the undertakers or to be settled by justices or by an inspector. The Metropolitan Board of Works demanded from the company a supply of water by meter, under s. 41, for watering the roads and gardens on the Victoria embankment, such supply being required only during one-third of the year and the driest weather:—Held, that the company was not bound to afford this supply at the limited rates fixed by s. 41; but that they were entitled to claim rates for such supply, to be fixed by agreement or settlement, under s. 37 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847. Metropolitan Board of Works v. New River Co. 37 L. T. 124.

—— Supply to a Workhouse—Ratability.]—By a special act incorporating the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, a waterworks company were bound at the request of the owner or occupier of any house to supply such person with water for domestic purposes at a minimum rate, to be increased if such house should be occupied by more than one family, and the act further provided that a supply of water for domestic purposes should not include a supply of water for baths, washhouses, or public purposes. The Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, deals with the supply of water for cleansing sewers and drains, cleansing and watering the streets, supplying any public pumps, baths, or washhouses, and imposes a penalty for neglect to supply water "for the public purposes aforesaid":—Held, that a workhouse was a house of which the guardians were owners, and the company were bound to supply them with water for domestic purposes, such supply not being a supply "for public purposes" within the meaning of the special act or of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, and that for the purposes of the special act the inmates of the workhouse were to be treated as one family, and the rate assessed accordingly. Liskeard Union v. Liskeard Waterworks, 7 Q. B. D. 505; 30 W. R. 292; 45 J. P. 780.

Minimum Charge.]—No dispute determinable by justices of the peace under s. 68 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, can arise as to the annual value of premises where a water company are making the minimum charge which they are entitled to make under their special act. Colne Valley Water Co. v. Treharne, 50 L. T. 617; 48 J. P. 279.

Occupation between Quarter-days — Liability for full Quarter's Rate.]—A water company is not authorised by the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, to charge a full quarter's rate for an occupation commencing between two quarter days, but only a rate proportionate to the period of occupation. East London Waterworks Co. v. Fonlkes, [1894] 1 Q. B. 819; 10 R. 243; 58 J. P. 384.

Power to make Special Charge—Fixed Baths—Domestic Uses.]—The Lambeth Waterworks Company is entitled, under its incorporating act of 1848, to make a special charge for the supply of water to fixed baths in private dwelling-houses. Walker v. Lambeth Waterworks Co., 63 L. J., Ch. 874; 8 R. 622; 71 L. T. 75; 58 J. P. 736.

ii. Persons Liable.

Owner—Unoccupied House not Exceeding the Value of Twenty Pounds.]—The respondents, relying on s. 58 of their private act (15 & 16 Vict. c. clviii.), which extended the provisions of s. 72 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, to houses not exceeding the annual value of 20*l.*, claimed water rates from the appellants as owners of certain houses under the annual value of 20*l.* each, for two quarters, during the whole of which time such houses were unoccupied:—Held, that an owner's liability for rates under s. 72 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, ceases on the quarterly day of payment next after the house has become unoccupied, and that as s. 58 of the respondents' private act merely extended the provisions of that section to houses not exceeding the annual value of 20*l.*, the respondents were not entitled to recover. British Empire Mutual Life Assurance Co. v. Southwark and Vauxhall Water Co., 59 L. T. 321; 36 W. R. 894; 52 J. P. 758.

—— Notice to obtain Proper Supply—Non-compliance.]—A local authority caused a supply of water to be brought in main water pipes along the street in which a house was situate, and gave notice to the owner of the house, under s. 62 of the Public Health Act, 1875, to obtain a proper supply and do all such works as might be necessary for that purpose. That notice was not complied with, and the local authority did not exercise the power given to them by that section of executing the works necessary to connect the house with the main. In an action by the water company for water-rates:—Held, that the defendant was liable, and that it was not a condition precedent to such liability that the works necessary to bring the water into the house should have been executed. Southend Waterworks Co. v. Howard, 53 L. J., Q. B. 354; 13 Q. B. D. 215; 32 W. R. 923; 48 J. P. 469.

Landlord or Tenant.]—In a lease of a shop and basement and of three rooms on the third floor of the same house, the lessor covenanted to pay "all rates and taxes chargeable in respect of the demised premises." Water was separately supplied by a water company to the shop and basement, and paid for by the tenant. In an action to recover from the lessor the amount so paid:—Held, that such a charge was "a rate" within the meaning of the covenant. Direct Spanish Telegraph Co. v. Shepherd, 53 L. J., Q. B. 420; 13 Q. B. D. 202; 51 L. T. 124; 32 W. R. 717; 48 J. P. 550.

In a lease of a warehouse in the city of London, the lessor covenanted to pay all rates, taxes, and impositions whatsoever, whether parliamentary, parochial, or imposed by the corporation of the city, or otherwise howsoever, which then were, or thereafter might be rated, charged, or assessed on the said premises or any part thereof, or on the yearly rent, or on the landlord, owner or tenants of the said premises in respect thereof. Water having been supplied to the premises under the provisions of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, the lessees paid the water-rates due in respect thereof and sought to recover the same from the lessor:—Held, that such water-rates were not rates or impositions imposed on or in respect of the premises within the meaning of the covenant, and that therefore the lessees could not recover. Badcock v. Hunt, 58 L. J., Q. B. 134; 22 Q. B. D. 145; 60 L. T. 314; 37 W. R. 205; 53 J. P. 340—C. A.

Purchaser of Freehold—Liability for Arrears.]—The effect of 50 & 51 Vict. c. 21, s. 4. is that a purchaser of the freehold of a dwelling-house is liable to a personal action at the suit of the waterworks company to recover arrears of water-rate which accrued due before the date of the purchase. East London Waterworks Co. v. Kellerman, [1892] 2 Q. B. 72; 67 L. T. 319; 56 J. P. 773.

iii. Recovery of.

Dispute as to Annual Value—Right to Sue—Necessity for Decision of Justices.]—The Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), s. 68, enacts that the water-rate shall be payable according to the annual value of the tenement supplied with water, and that, "if any dispute arise as to such value, the same shall be determined by two justices." This act incorporates the Railways Clauses Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 20), ss. 140 and 142 of which give the mode and procedure before the justices. By the New River Company's Act, 1852 (15 & 16 Vict. c. clx.), s. 46, which incorporates the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, it is enacted that "nothing in this act, or any act incorporated herewith contained shall prevent the company from recovering any sum of money not exceeding 50*l.* which shall be due to them for water rates or rents, or for damages, costs, or expenses, by action or proceeding in such manner as is by law provided for the recovery of debts not exceeding 50*l.*":—Held, that where a bonâ-fide dispute arises as to the annual value, the company must, before they can sue for the rate under s. 46 of the special act, obtain a decision of justices on that dispute under s. 68 of the general act. New River Co. v. Mather, 44 L. J., M. C. 105; L. R. 10 C. P. 442; 32 L. T. 658.

By a borough improvement act with regard to the supply of water, it was provided that, "The following acts and parts of acts (so far as they are applicable and not inconsistent with this act) shall be incorporated with this act (that is to say): The Waterworks Clauses Acts, 1847 and 1863 (except the provisions thereof with respect to the amount of profit to be received by the undertakers when the waterworks are carried on for their benefit)." The Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, s. 68, provides that the rates are to be paid according to the annual value, and if any dispute arise as to such value, the same shall be determined by two justices. The same act, in a series of sections (75 to 84), provides for the amount of profit to be received by the undertakers when the waterworks are carried on for their benefit:—Held, that s. 68 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, was not incorporated in the borough improvement act, and that the settlement by two justices of a dispute as to value was not a condition precedent to the plaintiff's right to bring an action for an overcharge. Slater v. Burnley Corporation, 59 L. T. 636; 36 W. R. 831; 53 J. P. 70.

—— Jurisdiction of Justices.]—Upon the hearing before justices of a summons to enforce payment of a water-rate made under a local act incorporating the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, the justices have power, under s. 68 of that act, to determine a dispute as to the annual value of the premises rated. It is not necessary to their jurisdiction before making an order for payment of the rate upon such summons that the dispute should have been previously determined in a separate proceeding before justices. New River Co. v. Mather (L. R. 10 C. P. 442) distinguished. Lea v. Abergavenny Improvement Commissioners, 55 L. J., M. C. 25; 16 Q. B. D. 18; 53 L. T. 728; 34 W. R. 105; 50 J. P. 165. See Colne Valley Water Co. v. Treharne, supra, col. 2027.

Proceedings before Justices—Complaint—Limit of Time.]—The proceedings before justices to recover water-rates under the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, constitute a "complaint" within the meaning of s. 1 of Jervis' Act, and the order made by justices is an "order for the payment of money" within the meaning of the same section; such proceedings, therefore, must, under s. 11 of Jervis' Act, be commenced within six months from the time the rates became due. East London Waterworks Co. v. Charles, 63 L. J., M. C. 209; [1894] 2 Q. B. 730; 10 R. 435; 71 L. T. 200; 42 W. R. 702; 58 J. P. 764.

—— Need for Formal Demand.]—In the absence of facts from which it can be inferred that a person liable to pay a water-rate was ignorant of the amount of such rate, proof of a formal demand is not a condition precedent to the right of the water company to apply to a magistrate for an order under s. 140 of the Railways Clauses Act, 1845, for payment of such rate. East London Waterworks v. Kyffin, 64 L. J., M. C. 32; [1895] 1 Q. B. 55; 15 R. 38; 71 L. T. 615; 59 J. P. 405.

Right of Distress—Power under Private Act—Subsequent Public Act.]—A private act passed in 46 Geo. 3, gave the West Middlesex Waterworks company power to levy a distress on default of payment by consumers of water of the water-rates mutually agreed upon in accordance with 46 Geo. 3, c. 119, s. 59. By an act passed four years later the company was empowered to charge a reasonable amount for the water, but there was no express enactment as to the mode of recovering that amount. Subsequently to the Waterworks Clauses Consolidation Act, 1847, another private act, 15 & 16 Vict. clix., was passed in part incorporating that act, but expressly stipulating that, "except as by this act is expressly provided, this act or anything therein contained shall not repeal, alter, interpret, or in any manner affect any of the provisions in force at the commencement of this act, of the recited acts, or any of them; and, except only so far as is requisite for the execution of this act, all those provisions, and all powers, privileges, exemptions, and immunities of or for the benefit of any person or corporation thereby respectively created, conferred, or saved shall be and continue as valid and effectual as if this act had not passed." The act of 46 Geo. 3 was therein recited. The company issued its warrant of distress on the plaintiff's premises, and he brought an action for illegal distress:—Held, that the power of the company to distrain was not taken away either inferentially by the Waterworks Clauses Consolidation Act, 1847, or expressly by the subsequent private act incorporating that act. Richards v. West Middlesex Waterworks Co., 54 L. J., Q. B. 551; 15 Q. B. D. 660; 33 W. R. 902; 49 J. P. 631.

—— Completion of Works.]—To an action for breaking and entering the plaintiff's mill and taking his goods, the defendants pleaded a justification under a local act of parliament; that they, as commissioners under the act, completed one of three reservoirs mentioned therein; that the mill was benefited by the supply of water therefrom; that a rate was made; and that the trespass was committed, and the goods were taken as a distress for nonpayment of the rate. The plaintiff replied that only one reservoir had been completed. The act enacted, "that no rate shall be levied or assessed, until the reservoirs shall be actually made and in use, and water supplied therefrom":—Held, that the completion of one reservoir entitled the commissioners to levy a rate on the class of persons mentioned in the act actually benefited by it; and, therefore, that the plea was good. Sidebottom v. Glossop Reservoir Commissioners, 1 Ex. 611—Ex. Ch.

Overcharge — Recovery Back — Compulsory Payment.]—The defendants, as sanitary authority for the borough of B., had demanded from the plaintiff and the plaintiff had paid, a water-rate of 8*l.* 15*s.* 4*d.*, such rate being calculated on the "gross rental" of the plaintiff's premises. The plaintiff, contending that such rate ought to have been assessed on the "rateable value" only, brought an action in the county court to recover the difference overpaid. The defendants had no power to distrain for the rates, but they had a power to stop the water supply for non-payment; they had not stopped the water supply, and had not threatened to do so. The county court judge held that the payment was not a voluntary one, and could be recovered back, on the ground that the defendants had a power to stop the water supply:—Held, that the payment was a voluntary one, and could not be recovered back. Slater v. Burnley Corporation, supra. S. P., another case of the same name, 53 J. P. 535.

E. INJURIES BY WATER.

Liability for Storage—General Principle.]—If a person brings on his own land any matter which, if it escapes, may prove injurious to his neighbour's property, such as a large body of water, he is liable to make compensation for any injury that may accrue from its escape out of his land; and it is no defence, if it escapes and causes damage to his neighbour, that the injury was caused without any default or negligence on his part. Rylands v. Fletcher, 37 L. J., Ex. 161; L. R. 3 H. L. 330; 19 L. T. 220. Affirming 12 Jur. (N.S.) 603; 14 W. R. 799—Ex. Ch.

A. was the lessee of mines. B. was the owner of a mill standing on land adjoining that under which the mines were worked. B. desired to construct a reservoir, and employed competent persons, an engineer and a contractor, to construct it. A. had worked his mines up to a spot where there were certain old passages of disused mines; these passages were connected with vertical shafts which communicated with the land above, and which had also been out of use for years, and were apparently filled with marl and the earth of the surrounding land. No care was taken by the engineer or the contractor to block up these shafts, and shortly after water had been introduced into the reservoir it broke through some of the shafts, flowed through the old passages and flooded A.'s mine:—Held, that he was entitled to recover damages from B. in respect of this injury. Ib.

—— Vis major.]—One who stores water on his own land, and uses all reasonable care to keep it safely there, is not liable for damage effected by an escape of the water, if the escape is caused by the act of God or vis major; e.g., by an extraordinary rainfall, which could not reasonably have been anticipated, although, if it had been anticipated, the effect might have been prevented. Nichols v. Marsland, 46 L. J., Ex. 174; 2 Ex. D. 1; 35 L. T. 725; 25 W. R. 173—C. A.

—— Tanks in India—Immemorial Rights.]—The principle that if a man brings and accumulates upon his land anything which, if it escapes may cause damage to his neighbour, he does so at his peril, is not applicable to the case of water stored in tanks in India, which have existed from time immemorial, and are preserved and repaired by the landowners by reason of their tenure, as essential to the welfare and existence of the people. Madras Ry. v. Carvetinagarum (Zemindar), 30 L. T. 770; 22 W. R. 865—P. C.

—— Damage caused by Public Authority in Lawful Exercise of Powers.]—The defendants, under the powers conferred upon them by the Metropolis Local Management Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 120), ss. 135, 136, constructed, and properly constructed, a sewer having its outfall at Deptford Creek, a little above the plaintiff's coal wharf, with water-gates, which it was the duty of the person in charge of them to open when the water within them became eight feet deep,—a depth which was reached only in heavy rainfalls. On the 29th of August, 1879, there was an exceptionally heavy rainfall, and it became necessary to open the water-gates to prevent a large district from being flooded. This having been done, and the rain increasing in violence, the rush of water from the sewer carried away a portion of the plaintiff's wharf, with a barge moored thereto and a quantity of coals deposited therein and thereon:—Held, that the injury complained of was occasioned by the opening of the water-gates, and not by the act of God, and therefore the defendants were primâ facie liable for the damage done, within the principle of Rylands v. Fletcher (L. R. 3 H. L. 330); but that, as they were a public body acting in the discharge of a public duty, and as that which happened was only the inevitable result of what parliament had authorised them to do, they were not liable. Dixon v. Metropolitan Board of Works, 50 L. J., Q. B. 772; 7 Q. B. D. 418; 45 L. T. 312; 30 W. R. 83; 46 J. P. 4.

—— Injury by Canal Company — Injuriâ absque damno.] — The plaintiffs, owners of collieries, sued the defendants, proprietors of a canal constructed under an act of parliament, for damage caused to their mines by water which overflowed from the canal into a brook, and thence into the mines. They also in the alternative claimed to be entitled to a mandamus for the summoning of a jury to assess compensation for the same injury, as being one caused by the works which the canal company were authorised to construct and maintain. It was found in the special case stated by an official referee, that on the occasion of an extraordinary rainfall the defendants opened a sluice and discharged from the canal into a brook more water than the latter was able to carry off, the consequence being that the brook overflowed into the plaintiffs' mines. It was found, further, that if the sluice had not been so opened the canal bank would shortly have burst; that the adjacent country and the plaintiffs' mines would have been inundated; that the course which the defendants adopted to avert such a catastrophe was a prudent one, and the only effectual one which could have been adopted in the emergency; that so far as the plaintiffs' mines were concerned the opening of the sluice caused them to be flooded some hours sooner than they would otherwise have been, but that no additional damage was caused thereby to the plaintiffs, the inundation being inevitable by reason of the excessive rainfall and consequent accumulation of water:—Held, upon these findings, that even assuming the defendants' act to have been a wrongful one, it was injuriâ absque damno, and, therefore, not a ground of action:—Held, secondly, that the compensation clauses of the acts of parliament did not apply to such a case. Thomas v. Birmingham Canal Co., 49 L. J., Q. B. 851; 43 L. T. 435; 45 J. P. 21.

—— Liability of Conservancy Commissioners—Damage to Lands adjoining Reclaimed Lands.]—See Bramlett v. Tees Conservancy Commissioners, supra, col. 1901.

—— Injury Due to Negligence of Third Person.]—A company undertaking for their own profit to maintain a channel for carrying off water, and neglecting to do so effectually, are responsible for damage done to the adjoining land by reason of the banks giving way after an unusual rainfall, although other persons who were bound to keep the outlet of the channel of certain dimensions had failed to perform their duty, and had thereby occasioned an increase of water in the channel, without which its banks would not have given way. Harrison v. G. N. Ry., 3 H. & C. 231; 33 L. J., Ex. 266; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 992; 10 L. T. 621; 12 W. R. 1081. See also cases, ante, cols. 1921, et seq.

Breach of Statutory Obligation—Height of Bank.]—A dock company, which was empowered by act of parliament to make and maintain a dock and works according to the levels defined on the deposited sections, constructed its dock communicating with the Thames by an artificial channel, the height of the retaining bank of which and of the dock was shown on the sections to be 4 ft. above Trinity high-water mark. The natural level of the land surrounding the dock was some 8 ft. below Trinity high-water mark, and the river was kept from overflowing it by means of a river wall 4 ft. 2 in. above Trinity high-water mark. The company allowed part of its retaining bank to be some inches below the height of 4 ft. above Trinity high-water mark. An extraordinarily high tide took place, the water rising to 4 ft. 5 in. above high-water mark, and the water in the dock overflowed the bank and damaged the property of an adjoining landowner. In an action for damages by the latter:—Held, that the company was liable to damages, because it had broken its statutory obligation to maintain its retaining bank at the height of 4 ft. above high-water mark; that independently of the act, the company was bound, as a riparian proprietor, to keep the bank up to the level of the rest of the river wall, and was liable to damages for negligence in not doing so; and that, although the extraordinarily high tide was an act of God, that fact did not free the company from its liability, though, if it could show that some of the damage which actually happened was exclusively attributable to a cause beyond its control, it would be entitled to a proper deduction in that respect. Nitro-Phosphate and Odam's Chemical Manure Co. v. London and St. Katharine's Docks Co., 9 Ch. D. 503; 39 L. T. 433; 27 W. R. 267—C. A.

Interfering with Bank—Threatened Inundation.]—Commissioners of sewers are entitled to restrain a railway company by injunction until the hearing, from interfering with a natural deposit of beach, forming a protection to the country from the inundations of a tidal navigable river, within the survey of the commissioners; and this notwithstanding a purchase by the company from the lord of the manor, under parliamentary powers, of the spot in question. Crossman v. Bristol and South Wales Union Ry., 1 Hem. & M. 351; 11 W. R. 981.

Semble, that "banks and walls, &c.," by tidal and navigable rivers, as well as by the sea coasts, are included in 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 22. Ib.

—— Liability of Adjoining Owner.]—The defendants possessed a reservoir with sluices connected with a main drain or watercourse, from which the reservoir was supplied, and with sluices by which the surplus water was returned into the drain at a lower level. The combined effect of the emptying of a reservoir belonging to a third person above the defendants' premises, and of an obstruction in the drain below them, was to force water through the sluices into the defendants' reservoir and so cause an overflow thence on to the plaintiff's land. In an action for damage caused thereby it was shown that the defendants had no control over the main drain, or the other reservoir, or knowledge of the circumstances which caused the overflow, and that the sluices were maintained so as to prevent overflow under ordinary circumstances:—Held, that the defendants were not liable. Box v. Jubb, 48 L. J., Ex. 417; 4 Ex. D. 76; 41 L. T. 97; 27 W. R. 415.

Injuries caused by Precautions against Flood.]—An extraordinary flood arising from natural causes is a common enemy, against which a man has a right to protect his own property, although the damage inflicted by the flood upon his neighbour be thereby increased, provided he does not interfere with the natural outlet of a natural stream. Nield v. L. & N. W. Ry., 44 L. J., Ex. 15; L. R. 10 Ex. 4; 23 W. R. 60.

Reasonable selfishness is permissible in a man who tries to protect himself from a common enemy, such as is a flood. Ib.

A railway company owned a canal near a river, which did not communicate with it. Owing to heavy rains the river overflowed its banks, and the manager of the canal, fearing that the water from the river might enter the canal, and, by causing it to overflow, injure the warehouses of the railway company, inserted planks in grooves made in the banks of the canal with the object of preventing the water of the river from entering the canal. The water, however, found its way into the canal, which, owing to the insertion of the planks, rose to a higher level than it would otherwise have done, and ultimately overflowed its banks, doing substantial damage to a mill situated on the bank of the canal, which would not have been done to it if the planks had not been made use of by the manager :—Held, that the railway company was not liable to the owner of the mill for the damage so caused, as they had only sought to protect themselves from a common enemy. Ib.

By reason of an unprecedented rainfall, a quantity of water was accumulated against one of the sides of the defendants' railway embankment, to such an extent as to endanger the embankment, when, in order to protect their embankment, the defendants cut trenches in it by which the water flowed through, and went ultimately on to the land of the plaintiff, which was on the opposite side of the embankment and at a lower level, and flooded and injured it to a greater extent than it would have done had the trenches not been cut. In an action for damages for such injury, the jury found that the cutting of the trenches was reasonably necessary for the pretection of the defendants' property, and that it was not done negligently :—Held. that though the defendants had not brought the water on their land, they had no right to protect their property by transferring the mischief from their own land to that of the plaintiff, and that they were therefore liable. Whalley v. Lancashire and Yorkshire Ry., 53 L. J., Q. B. 285 ; 13 Q. B. D. 131 ; 50 L. T. 472 ; 32 W. R. 711 ; 48 J. P. 500—C. A.

Flooding adjoining Mines—Working by Owner.]—A canal company was authorised to be formed under the provisions of several acts of parliament. They had also, by a provision of the same statutes, the option of purchasing adjoining coal mines on receiving notice from the owner that he was about to work them. An adjoining coalowner, having given the statutory notice, and the company having refused to purchase, proceeded, as he had a right to do, to work his mines in the usual and proper manner, and thereby water from the canal flowed in and drowned his mine. The company was guilty of no actual carelessness in the management of the canal, unless it was carelessness to allow the water to remain in it while the mines were being worked :—Held, in an action by the adjoining coalowner against the company for negligent management of the canal whereby damage resulted to his mine, that the action was not maintainable, inasmuch as the injury complained of resulted from the legitimate exercise by the company of statutory powers. Dunn v. Birmingham Canal Navigation, 42 L. J., Q. B. 34 ; L. R. 8 Q. B. 42 ; 27 L. T. 683 ; 21 W. R. 266—Ex. Ch.

Held, also, that the owner was entitled to compensation under the acts. Ib.

—— Injuries arising from Lawful Act.]—A mine-owner will not be liable to the owner of an adjacent mine for injury occasioned to such adjacent mine, where such injury proceeds from natural causes, in themselves beyond his control, though his own acts may have conduced to produce the injury, if his acts have only been those of the proper and ordinary working of his own mine, without default or negligence. Smith v. Musgrave, 47 L. J., Ex. 4 ; 2 App. Cas. 781 ; 37 L. T. 367 ; 26 W. R. 83—H. L. (E.)

But when for his own convenience he does something, e.g. diverts the course of the stream, he must take care that the new course provided for it shall be sufficient to prevent mischief from an overflow, so that even if that overflow should be directly and mainly occasioned by an act of nature, his own conduct in not so forming the new and diverted course for the stream of form and of sufficient capacity to carry off an accidental overflow of water, even of an exceptional kind, will be matter for consideration in determining the question of his liability. Ib.

A.'s mine was flooded by water which had, after an unusual rainfall, accumulated in an excavation made by B. on his land, and had escaped thence through his mine into A.'s, which was situated at a lower level :— Held, that, although B., in making the excavation, had no intention of collecting water therein, and although he had provided an outlet for such an amount of water as might be looked for in ordinary seasons, he was liable for the damage sustained by A. Ib.

A. and B. occupied adjoining collieries. A. predecessor of B., but with whom he had no privity, committed a trespass, and made holes, called "thyrlings," in a barrier (of coal belonging to A.) which separated the two collieries. B. in working his mine broke down a seam of coal of his own, and the consequence was that the water flowed from his mine into A.'s through the thyrlings :—Held, that there was no duty on B. to prevent the water from flowing from his mine into A.'s mine. Smith v. Kenrick, 7 C. B. 515 ; 18 L. J., C. P. 172 ; 13 Jur. 362.

Percolation.]—A man who places an artificial mound upon his property and thereby causes rain water, percolating naturally, to come on to the property of his neighbour, is liable to the latter in respect of damage so caused. Hurdman v. North-Eastern Ry., 47 L. J., C. P. 368 ; 3 C. P. D. 168 ; 38 L. T. 339 ; 26 W. R. 489.

A statement of claim alleged that the surface of the defendants' land had been artificially raised by earth placed thereon, and that in consequence rain water falling on their land made its way through their wall into the adjoining house of the plaintiff, and caused substantial damage :—Held, that the statement of claim disclosed a good cause of action. Ib.

A. allowed water to collect in the cellar of his house. The water percolated through the ground and injured the cellar of the adjoining house belonging to B. :—Held, that B. had a right of action against A. in respect of the injury so done. Ballard v. Tomlinson (26 Ch. D. 194) dissented from. Snow v. Whitehead, 53 L. J., Ch. 885 ; 27 Ch. D. 588 ; 51 L. T. 253 ; 33 W. R. 128.

—— Compensation—Company with Statutory Powers.]—A company with statutory powers suffered water to percolate from their canal into an adjoining mill and cause damage. Such percolation arose in the first instance from a subsidence of the land caused by the working of a mine-owner under both the canal and the mill, and could not have been foreseen or prevented by the company by any reasonable means at any reasonable cost :—Held, that the canal company were nevertheless guilty of negligence in not making good the damage when it occurred, and must pay compensation to be assessed as provided by the canal act, but that it was not a case for granting an injunction against the company to restrain the percolation of water. Evans v. Manchester, Sheffield and Lincolnshire Ry., 57 L. J., Ch. 153 ; 36 Ch. D. 626 ; 57 L. T. 194 ; 36 W. R. 328.

Water Undermining a Wall—Action by Successor in Title.]—The plaintiff, in 1822, had a remainder in fee in a wharf expectant on a tenancy for life of his father. The defendants, in that year, dug soil out of their dock, which was contiguous, and the water thereby undermined the wall of the wharf. In 1823, the plaintiff's father died ; and, in 1824, the action of the water on the wall had undermined it so far that it fell :—Held, that the plaintiff had a right of action against the defendants, although they had done no act since the death of the plaintiff's father, by which the plaintiff came into possession of the freehold of the wharf. Gillon v. Boddington, 1 Car. & P. 541 ; R. & M. 161.

Adjoining Premises—Arrangement for Common Benefit—Absence of Negligence.]—Where damage results to an occupier of land from water or other injurious matter collected on adjoining land, no action lies if the occupier of the land upon which the injurious matter is collected can show that the damage resulted (i.) from the act or default of some third party, or (ii.) without wilfulness or negligence on his part, whilst using his land in an ordinary and reasonable manner, or (iii.) without negligence on his part, the injured party consenting to what was done, or (iv.) from water or other injurious matter, which was stored for the common benefit of both parties. Where the rain water from the plaintiff's and defendant's adjoining roofs drained on to the roof of the defendant's area, and so down a pipe into the defendant's drain, this arrangement being with the assent and for the benefit of both parties, the defendant is not liable, in the absence of negligence on his part, for damage arising to the plaintiff's premises from an accumulation of water on the area roof owing to an obstruction in the pipe. Gill v. Edouin, 15 R. 113, n. ; 72 L. T. 579—C. A.

Escape of Water in Houses—Liability for.]—When the owner and occupier of a building lets the lower floor to a tenant, and remains himself in occupation of the upper floors and roof, he is under no liability to the tenant, to make compensation for damage done to this lower floor by an escape of water from the roof caused by an accident (such as a rat gnawing a hole in a water-pipe), which could not have been prevented by the exercise of reasonable care and vigilance. Carstairs v. Taylor, 40 L. J., Ex. 129 ; L. R. 6 Ex. 217 ; 19 W. R. 723.

A. occupied for business purposes the ground floor and B. the second floor of the same house, as tenants from year to year. There was a water-closet on B.'s premises to which he alone had access. After the respective premises had been closed on a Saturday evening, water percolated from the water-closet through the first floor to A.'s premises and caused damage to his stock in trade. The overflow of water was owing to the valve of the supply pipe to the pan having got out of order, and the waste pipe being choked with paper. The defects could not be detected without examination, and B. did not know of them and was guilty of no negligence :—Held, that there was no obligation on him to keep in the water at his peril ; and that he was not liable to A. for the damage. Ross v. Fedden, 41 L. J., Q. B. 270 ; L. R. 7 Q. B. 661 ; 26 L. T. 966.

The defendants owned a house above the plaintiff's shop. Owing to the lid of a cistern on the defendants' premises being so arranged that the ballcock would not act, and to the pipe of the sink being stopped up, the water overflowed and did damage to the plaintiff's shop. There was no satisfactory evidence to show how the cistern had been interfered with :—Held, that there was nothing to show that the defendants had been guilty of negligence ; that the principle of Fletcher v. Rylands (37 L. J., Ex. 161) did not apply, and therefore that there must be judgment for the defendants. Blake v. Land and House Property Corporation, 3 Times L. R. 667.

The plaintiffs and the defendant occupied adjoining houses, between which there was no party wall. The former sued the latter in the county court for damage to their premises by water flowing from the defendant's premises to theirs through a defect in the pipe which supplied him with water from the neighbouring waterworks. The county court judge found as a fact that defendant had not been guilty of negligence, entered a verdict for him, assessed damages at 10*l*., and gave plaintiffs leave to appeal :—Held, that he was right, the damage caused being damnum sine injuria. Sutton v. Card, W. N. [1886] 120. And see Snow v. Whitehead, supra.

—— Liability of Master for Act of Servant—Scope of Authority.]—The plaintiffs occupied premises beneath the offices of the defendants, who were solicitors. One of the defendants had a room of the offices, and in it was a lavatory for his own use exclusively, and his orders were that no clerk should come into his room after he had left. A clerk went into the room to wash his hands at the lavatory after his employer had left, turned the tap, and negligently left it so that water flowed from it into the plaintiffs' premises and damaged them. In an action for negligence :—Held, that the act of the clerk was not within the scope of his authority, or incident to the ordinary duties of his employment, and that there was no evidence of negligence for which the defendants were liable. Stevens v. Woodward, 50 L. J., Q. B. 231 ; 6 Q. B. D. 318 ; 44 L. T. 153 ; 29 W. R. 506 ; 45 J. P. 603. And see Ruddiman v. Smith, 60 L. T. 708 ; 37 W. R. 528 ; 53 J. P. 518.

Frozen Water—Washing of Van in a Street.]—B. washed a van of his on part of the street opposite his coach-house, and the water so used ran along the gutter of the street for about seventy feet down to the corner of another street, where, meeting an obstruction, it accumulated and extended over part of the roadway, instead of going into the sewer, and there being a frost at the time it became frozen over. The cleaning a van in the street was an offence under the Metropolitan Police Act (2 & 3 Vict. c. 47), s. 54, sub-s. 1, but B. was not shown to have known of the obstruction, and if he had cleaned the van in the coach-house the water would also have gone into the same gutter :—Held, that B. was not liable for damage caused to a horse by slipping whilst passing over the frozen water at the corner, as such damage was too remote, and was not the immediate and

Threatened Injury—Raising Level of Brook.]—A. sold a piece of land to B., and covenanted for quiet enjoyment. Afterwards, A. raised the level, by three inches, of a brook running past B.'s grounds, through his, A.'s property:—Held, that this was not a proper subject of complaint for the interference of a court of equity. Ingram v. Morecraft, 33 Beav. 49.

Aggravation of Servitude—Accumulation of Water.]—By s. 501 of the Civil Code of Quebec the proprietor of the higher land can do nothing to aggravate the servitude of the lower land. Where the plaintiffs, being entitled to a flow of water from their land, executed certain works which had the effect of accumulating the volume of water, and probably of increasing the depth of its channel:—Held, that to the extent of such accumulation and consequent increase of flow, they had aggravated the servitude of the lower land, and to that extent had no right to demand a free course for the water sent down by them. Having insisted on their right to the existing flow, and refused to allege and prove a case for relief pro tanto, their suit was dismissed with costs. Frechette v. La Compagnie Manufacturière de St. Hyacinthe, 53 L. J., P. C. 20; 9 App. Cas. 170; 50 L. T. 62—P. C.
